As to the second meaning of sacrifice, he said, "I am the bread which came down from heaven." It was not the body of Christ which came down from heaven. The body of Christ came from the womb of Mary, but the Christ perfections descended from heaven. The reality of Christ came down from heaven. The spirit of Christ came down from heaven, the body of Christ came not down from heaven. The body of Christ was but human. Is there any question as to that body having come from the womb of Mary? It is obvious that it came from the womb of Mary. But the reality of Christ, the spirit of Christ and the perfections of Christ, all came from heaven. Consequently, by saying he was the bread which came down from heaven, he meant that the perfections which he showed forth were divine perfections which came from heaven; that the blessings within him came down from heaven; that the light within him came down from heaven. "He who partakes of this bread will never die." What is this? It is, whosoever assimilates these divine perfections which are within me will never die. Whosoever has a share and partakes of these heavenly bounties within me will never die. If a man takes unto himself these divine lights, then he shall find everlasting life. Do you see how manifest the meaning is? How evident? For whosoever acquires divine perfections and seeks heavenly lights from the teachings of Christ will undoubtedly live eternally. This is one of the mysteries of the mystery of sacrifice.

In reality his holiness Abraham sacrificed himself, for his holiness Abraham conveyed to men heavenly teachings, conferred upon them heavenly food.

As to the third meaning of sacrifice, it is this: If you plant a seed in the ground, from that seed a tree will become manifest. That seed sacrifices itself to the tree that will come from it. The seed is outwardly lost, sacrificed, but the same seed which is sacrificed will be running through the tree, will be embodied in that tree, in the branches thereof, in the blossoms thereof and in the fruit. If the personality (I might say) of that seed, if the identical self of that seed had not been sacrificed to the tree which became manifest from it, there would have been no tree, no branches, no blossoms and no fruits forthcoming. His Holiness outwardly disappeared. His personality became hidden from the eyes, even as the personality of the seed disappeared, but the bounties, high qualities and perfections of Christ became manifest in the Christian community which Christ founded through sacrificing himself. When you look at the tree, you will see that the perfections of the seed, the blessings of the seed, the properties of the seed and the beauty of the seed are manifest in the branches, twigs, blossoms and fruit; consequently, the seed sacrificed itself to the tree. Had it not sacrificed itself to the tree, that tree would not have come into existence. Now his holiness Christ, like unto the seed, sacrificed himself for the tree of Christianity, and his perfections, his bounties, his favors, his light and grace became manifest in the tree of the Christian community for the coming of which he sacrificed himself.

As to the fourth meaning of sacrifice, it is this: that a reality shall sacrifice its own characteristics. It is this: that a man must seclude himself from the world of matter, from the world of nature, from the rules of nature and from the laws of nature, for the world of nature is the world of corruption. It is the world of evil morals; it is the world of darkness; it is the world of animalism; it is the world of ferocity; it is the world of bloodthirstiness; it is the world of rancor; it is the world of ambition; it is the world of greed; it is the world of struggle for existence; it is the world of self-worship; it is the world of being lost in self-desire and lust; it is the world of nature. Man must strip himself of all these imperfections. Man must sacrifice all these characteristics which are peculiar to the world of nature.

Then, on the other hand, man must acquire heavenly qualities. Man must partake of the divine attributes. Man must become the image and likeness of God. Man must seek the bounty of the eternal, become the manifestor of the love of God, the light of guidance, the blessed tree, and become the depository of the bounties of God. Thus man must sacrifice the qualities and attributes of the world of nature for the qualities and attributes of the world of God. For instance, consider the iron. See the qualities that it has. It is black. It is solid. It is cold. These are the characteristics of iron. When the same iron imbibes heat from the fire, then it sacrifices its attribute of solidity for the attribute of fluidity. It sacrifices its attribute of darkness for the attribute of light imbibed from the fire. It sacrifices its attribute of coldness to the quality of heat which characterizes the fire, so that in the iron there remains no humidity, no solidity, no darkness. It becomes illumined; it gains warmth and fluidity, which are the characteristics of the fire. The iron sacrificed its qualities to the qualities and attributes of the fire. Likewise man, when separating himself from the world of nature, sacrifices all the attributes and exigencies of the world of nature, and the perfections of the kingdom become manifest and evident, just as the qualities of the iron disappeared and the qualities of the fire appeared in their place.

Every man trained through the teachings of God and illumined through the light of guidance, who becomes a believer in God and his signs, and is enkindled with the fire of the love of God, sacrifices the imperfections of nature for the sake of the perfections of

The Green Acre Conference

Eliot, Maine

THE things which are particular says Abdul-Baha, are human;
those which are universal are divine. Judged by this test Green Acre was, this summer, a center for the light of the divine world. The program for its meetings was varied and universal.
The new science, sociology, art, education, the new study of comparative religions, the new vision of peace—all were represented as so many rays of the light of the new day.

Nearly everyone felt the spiritual atmosphere which enveloped the place.
One man told how he came to Green Acre with prejudice in his heart, but when he stepped off the car at the entrance to the Green Acre grounds he realized that he was on holy soil. He gazed at the Inn on the beautiful hill, he looked at the river, "the river of light." He was thrilled with joy and his prejudice melted away. He met the radiant people at the Inn. He caught their spirit. "At last," he said, "I have found my spiritual brothers and sisters.
After much wandering I have come home." "Why," said another visitor at the Inn, "I never saw so many happy people together, nor people who so loved each other." "It is," said a friend from the Orient, "the most heavenly place I ever visited." "I could not imagine a summer passing without visiting Green Acre," said another who had come for the first time.

Many awoke in the early morning at Green Acre conscious of a marvelous spirit brooding over the place and flooding it with light. They were so happy with joy at the nearness of the divine world that they could not sleep. They were energized by the bread from heaven. They felt all day long as though they were sustained by invisible arms.

But words fail to put in "matter moulded forms of speech" experiences which are so divine. No one can know Green Acre and its spirit until he goes there and with receptive heart drinks
"the pure water of life."

Two important events characterized the summer. One was the dedication of the new Fellowship House, a beautiful building, donated by the late Mrs. Helen Cole. On its broad veranda which overlooks the wide-spreading valley and river many glorious meetings were held. These meetings will grow more and more wonderful as each summer brings a new and divine outpouring of God's bestowals. But the very brightest event of the season was the return to Green Acre of its founder, Miss Sarah J. Farmer. She came back after her years of seclusion with a heart overflowing with thanksgiving to the God who was so good to her.

Every word about the success of Green Acre filled her with joy. She could not express enough gratitude to her Bahai brothers and sisters of the Green Acre Fellowship who had raised Green Acre to this pinnacle of spiritual unity and peace and radiance. She had lived to see her early dream realized, to see many nations and sects, races and religions joined together under the Green Acre flag, the flag of the peace that passeth understanding.

“The Treasure-Houses of God are filled with Bounties”

Address of Abdul-Baha at the home of Mrs. Krug,
New York City, December 3, 1912.

MRS. Krug is the cause of gathering you together here this afternoon. She has caused you to assemble here in the utmost of love. She has caused you to engage in the commemoration of God. It is my hope that this gathering will increase in number day by day, and that you will become daily more and more attracted, more spiritual and more illumined, that you will make extraordinary progress, that you will acquire from each other knowledge of the teachings of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH, so that you may know how to teach the truth to others, that your hearts may become so attracted that the instant a question is asked, you will be able to give the right answer and that the truth of the Holy Spirit may speak through your tongues. Be ye helpful in the providence and favor of the Blessed Perfection, for his favors change a drop into an ocean, cause a seed to become a tree and make an atom as glorious as the sun. His graces are great. The treasure-houses of God are filled with bounties. God, who showed favors unto others, will certainly show favor unto you. I supplicate to the Kingdom of Abha and seek extraordinary favors and confirmations in your behalf, in order that your tongues may become fluent, your hearts may be flooded with the rays of the Sun of Truth, even as a clear mirror, that your thoughts may expand, your comprehension become more intense and that you may progress on the plane of human perfections.

Until man himself acquire perfections, he will not be able to teach perfections to others. Unless man attain life himself, he cannot convey life to others. Unless he finds light for himself he cannot give light to others. We must, therefore, endeavor ourselves to attain to the perfections of the world of humanity, gain everlasting life, and seek the divine spirit, in order that we may thereby be enabled to confer life upon others, be enabled to breathe life into others.

You must, therefore, always supplicate before the Kingdom of Abha and seek eternal bounties from him. You must pray that your hearts may become filled with glorious lights, even as a purified mirror, then will the lights of the Sun of Truth shine thereupon. You must supplicate and pray to God every night and every day and seek his aid and assistance, saying:

O Lord! We are weak, strengthen us. O God! We are ignorant, make us knowing. O Lord! We are poor, make us wealthy. O God! We are dead, quicken us. O Lord! We are humiliation itself, glorify us in thy Kingdom. If thou assistest us, O Lord, we shall become scintillating stars! If thou dost not assist us, we shall become lower than the earth.

O Lord! Strengthen us. O God! Confer victory upon us. O God! Cause us to conquer self and desire. O Lord! Deliver us from the bondage of the world of materiality. O Lord! Quicken us through the breath of the Holy Spirit, in order that we may arise to serve thee, to engage in worshipping thee and to exert ourselves in thy Kingdom with the utmost of sincerity. O Lord! thou art powerful. O God! Thou art forgiving. O Lord! Thou art Compassionate.

The Mystery of Sacrifice

the divine. Consequently, every perfect person, every illumined person, every heavenly individual stands in the station of sacrifice. I therefore hope, through the aid and providence of God and through the bounties of the Kingdom of Abha, that from the imperfections of the world of nature you may be entirely separated and become purified from the selfish desires and receive life from the Kingdom of Abha and acquire heavenly virtues, and that the divine light may become manifest upon your faces, that the fragrances of holiness may reach your nostrils and the breath of the Holy Spirit may quicken you.

Words of Abdul-Baha. Extracts from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.

ABDUL-BAHA spoke to us about the lives of several Persian Bahais who have made all sacrifices and yet they think they have done nothing.

“Such souls are the jewels of existence,” he said.

Looking up at the star Venus, which was shining in the horizon like a blazing torch, Abdul-Baha said: “Do you see that brilliant star? I declare . . . that it is my fondest hope to see each one of the believers of God shining like unto this star. I wish for them this illumination; I desire for them this luminosity, so that they may rejoice the hearts and spiritualize the souls. But alas! How often they let the cloud of the ego darken the horizon and thus prevent the stars of their divine verities from shining.” Here he stopped and looked again earnestly at the brilliant orb, and said: “It shines clearest at the early dawn. So, at this dawn of the Sun of Reality the stars of our lives must glisten and gleam in the darkness of the world.”

Truly I say unto thee, every maid-servant who arises in this day in the mystery of sacrifice in the path of God will become one of the stars of guidance in the supreme horizon; all in the heaven and earth will be illumined by her face; the angels of the Supreme Concurrence will speak in her praise and she will be encompassed with the favors of the Kingdom of Abha.

As long as one has not taken a portion of the mystery of sacrifice, it is impossible for him to attain to the Kingdom of God. So long as you do not have the cup free from every sort of liquor is it possible for you to put good and pure water therein?

Sacrifice of life is of two kinds. To be killed for the Cause is not so difficult as to live for it in absolute obedience to the commands of God. To attain to the condition of Mirza Abul Fazl who cares for nothing in this world save to write something for the Cause that will be of benefit, or like Mirza Hyder Ali who cares not for money, clothes, or even food, but only to teach someone something about the Kingdom,—is real attainment to the plain of sacrifice! And without attaining this condition all effort is without any final result. One who cares for love, for husband, wife or children more than for the Cause of God has not attained.

When the Mirror is Free from Dust

Words of Abdul-Baha to nineteen Bahais at Hotel Victoria, Boston, July 25, 1912.

I AM very happy to greet you here today. This is the second time the breeze of God has wafted over Boston. I am expecting results from this visit. I hope my coming to Boston may not be fruitless. The result is to be this: That the individual may be released from self, also from desire, and may be freed from satanic suggestions. May the mirrors be freed from dust, that the Sun of Truth may be reflected therein. There are two kinds of susceptibilities in man—the natural emotions (these are like dust on the mirror) and the spiritual susceptibilities which are merciful characteristics, heavenly.

There is a power that cleans the dust from the mirror and transforms it into intense brilliancy and radiance, so that these susceptibilities chasten and utterly destroy the dust and the heavenly bestowals may purify the hearts.

What is the dust on that mirror? Love of the world, greed, envy and love of luxury, of comfort, of desire for the self, haughtiness, self-interest—all these are like unto dust. They cover the mirror so that the reality of the sun cannot reflect its rays. The natural emotions are blameworthy and are like rust and deprive the heart of the bounties of God. But sincerity, justice, humility, evanescence, love for the believers,—these will free the mirror from dust, will make it radiant so that it may receive the rays from the Sun of Truth.

It is my hope that you may consider this matter, that you may search your own imperfections and do not think of the imperfections of anyone else, and strive to be free from imperfections. The souls who are heedless are always trying to find faults in others. Take the hypocrite—what does he know about the faults of others? He must find them in himself. This is the meaning of the Seven Valleys. It is for human conduct. As long as man does not find his faults, he can never become perfect. It will be fruitful for man to find his own imperfections and change them into perfections. The Blessed Perfection says: "I wonder at the man who does not find his own imperfections."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened; that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Three Realities

Address by Abdul-Baha at "The White Lodge," Wimbledon, England, Friday evening, January 3, 1913.

HOW beautiful it is to organize such lovely gatherings that are not based upon the pursuit of the material principles of life! Such gatherings belong to the study and the investigation of spiritual facts. . . . The spiritual power has gathered us together. Our aim is to discover the realities of phenomena. When we ponder over the reality of the microcosm, we discover that in the microcosm, or the little man, there are deposited three realities. Man is endowed with an outward or physical reality. It belongs to the animal kingdom because it has sprung out of the material world. This side of life, or the first reality, is darkness and gloom because the world of matter is the world of darkness. This is the animalistic reality of man which he shares in common with all animals.

Man, however, enjoys a second or higher reality which is the intellectual reality that comprehends all phenomena, or is infinite as regards the phenomena. It is a governor, victorious over the world of matter. It discovers and unfolds the realities of sentient beings; it "explodes" the laws of nature, because from a physical standpoint it is superior, above and beyond the laws of nature.

When we ponder over the morphology of the human body we find that man, like any other animal, is subject to the laws of nature. All creation is the captive of nature; it cannot deviate one hair's breadth from the mandates of nature. For example, the fire is circumscribed and limited within the boundaries of the laws of nature and it cannot transcend any laws laid down by nature. This globe of ours is the captive of the postulates of nature; it cannot deviate one hair's breadth from the laws of nature. All the stellar bodies in this infinite universe, notwithstanding their colossal size, cannot deviate from the laws laid down for their coursings by nature; they are the prisoners of nature; they cannot go out of the circle or the circumference which is allowed for their journeyings. The great shoreless sea is the prisoner of nature. The vegetable kingdom in its entirety is a captive of nature. The animal kingdom is a captive of nature. All this will show you that these phenomena cannot go beyond the limits set by nature. Likewise man, as far as his first reality or his physical life is concerned, is also a prisoner of nature.

But the reasonable or intellectual reality with which man is endowed enables him to transcend the laws of physical nature. For example, according to the laws of nature man is a denizen of the earth; he must walk upon the earth, and, because he is born on this globe, he belongs to this earthly life. This is a regulation of nature. But man, through his intellectual power transcends this law of nature, discovers the science of aviation and flies in the air like a bird. He becomes like a fish and goes to the very depths of the seas. He builds a great fleet and sails over the seas. It is, therefore, an indubitable fact that man is able to transcend the laws of nature; this intellectual reality of man conquers nature. Through it man is enabled to make a fruitless tree fruitful. He transforms the wild woods into fruitful orchards. He changes the plains of thistles and thorns into lovely meadows and rose gardens. Then there is the electrical energy which breaks the very mountains. Man through the application of intellectual force takes this electrical energy and makes it a captive within the incandescent lamp. According to the postulate of nature his voice is a free activity. Man takes it and makes it a prisoner within a box—a phonograph. Man through this power is enabled again to communicate with the east and the west within a few minutes. Through this intellectual power while he is in Europe he is able to discover America. This is an extraordinary power! He may live all his life in the east and yet through this power may organize great affairs in the west. All these sciences that we enjoy were the hidden and recondite mysteries of nature but man was enabled to discover these mysteries and out of the plane of the unseen he brought them into the world of the seen. All the artistic accomplishments and undertakings which we have today were once the secrets of nature; man discovered them and brought them to the plane of visibility. In short, the exploration of the secrets of nature seem to be very numerous. Therefore the citation of these facts will demonstrate to you that man is superior to nature. He is, in fact, its governor, although his physical reality is a captive of nature. It is then self-evident that in man there exists an intellectual reality which is superior to his physical reality.

There is, however, a third reality in man, that is the spiritual reality. Through that medium come spiritual revelations. This is a celestial power which is infinite as regards the intellectual as well as the physical realms. This power is conferred upon man through the breath of the Holy Spirit. It is an eternal reality, an indestructible reality, a reality which belongs to the divine kingdom. This celestial reality, or the third reality, delivers man from the material world. It is the power which enables man to escape from the world of nature.

This is proven from scientific as well as spiritual evidence. When we ponder and look over phenomena we observe that all have their origin in a single element. This single atomic element travels and has its coursings through all grades of existence. I wish you to ponder over this carefully. This single element has been in the realm of the mineral kingdom. While staying in the mineral kingdom it has had its coursings and transformations through myriads of images and forms. Having completed its travellings through the mineral kingdom it has ascended to the vegetable kingdom and in this kingdom it has had again its travellings and transformations through myriads of images; sometimes it has been a grain, again it was in the form of a leaf, anon it was a flower or an animal, a tree, or a blossom! Then it attains to the stage of fruition and is a fruit. This single primordial element has had its transformations through these infinite forms and images. Again in the human kingdom it has its transferences and coursings through multitudes of forms. In short, this reality or this single primordial atom has had its numerous travellings through every stage of life and in every stage or form it was endowed with a special and peculiar virtue. Therefore the great and divine philosophers have had an epigram as follows: "All things are involved in all things." Every single phenomenon has enjoyed the favors of God, and in every form of these infinite electrons it has had its perfections or virtue. This, I hope, is evident and clear to you. This flower once upon a time was the soil; the animal eats it; it ascends to the animal kingdom. Man eats the body of the animal and there you have the ascension into the human kingdom, because all phenomena are the eaters and the eaten. This breath we respire is it not true that there are many thousands of infinitesimal microbes in it, each one of these microbes going into the constitution of our body? And this will show you that the lower forms of life can be transmuted into the higher realms of existence. Therefore, every primordial atom of these atoms, single and indivisibly, has had its courings throughout all sentient creations, going constantly into the make-up and aggregation of elements. Thus you have the conservation of energy and the infinitude of phenomena, the indestructibility of phenomena, changeless and immutable because life cannot become annihilated. The utmost is this; that the form, the outward image, throughout these changes and transformations is dissolved. The realities of all phenomena are immutable and unchangeable. Extinction or mortality is nothing but the transformation of pictures and images but the reality back of these images is eternal.

Every reality of the realities of life is one of the bounties of God. Some people believe that the divinity of God had a beginning. Therefore with this principle they have limited the downpour of the bounties of God. For example, they think that there was a time when man did not live, and that there will be a time in the future when the race of man will be destroyed, that there was a time when this globe did not exist. Such a theory circumscribes the power of God, for how can we understand the divinity of God but through the manifestation of his qualities? How can we understand the fire? Through its physical heat, through its flame. Were not heat and flame in this fire, naturally we could not say that the fire existed. The illumination of the lamp is through electrical energy and if we believe that there was a time in this world when this electrical energy was not in existence, then that is equal to the statement that there was no life at all. Or, take another example, the sun; let us say that there was a time when the sun was not endowed with rays and heat. That is equal to saying that there was no sun, because the very existence of the sun is demonstrated through its heat and rays. If there was a time when God did not manifest his qualities, then there was no God, because the attributes of God presuppose the creation of phenomena. For example, we say God is the creator. A creator must of necessity create. We say God is the provider. The provider must have someone to provide for. We say God is omniscient. Then omniscient knowledge is the consequence of omniscience. Therefore, as long as God has been God there has been creation, there have been the creatures. God has no beginning and his creation has no ending, for the bestowal of God is never failing. The effulgence of God cannot be suspended. The sovereignty of God cannot be interrupted. If we conceive a beginning for the universe of creation then we have conceived for the dominion and sovereignty of God a beginning which is a false theory. In reality his sovereignty is without beginning and without ending. Can we ever dream or conceive of a king without subjects, without an army, without a kingdom? Is it possible? No. A king is in need of a kingdom; he is in need of an army; a king is in need of wealth. Now as long as the kingdom of God, the sovereignty of God, is eternal, the creation of this universe throughout eternity is presupposed.

When we look at the reality of the subject we will see that the bounties of God are infinite, without beginning and —————"THIS IS THE TIME!"————

The Teaching Campaign—A Plan

ABDUL-BAHA has inaugurated a new epoch in the Cause and has given a work to the American Bahais which, at this time, is not possible elsewhere.

His new commands in the five stirring Tablets recently received, are creative, and they will establish a general unity which will be "the secret cause of the illumination of the hearts of humanity" (Western States Tablet).

The point of unity gained at the Bahai convention last April was only partial, in that only a few, comparatively, could take part. The same condition obtained at Green Acre, where a fortaste of the unity that is to come was experienced. Great as this was, the masses of Bahais were deprived. But now, the general point of unity established by Abdul-Baha through his Tablets can be recognized by all the friends, and a wonderful opportunity is given for a general response to his Call—spiritually and materially. And, through their sympathy for those who have not yet been illumined, and their desire that the light be carried to the dark places, they will learn what the service of sacrifice means, and the mites and dollars will flow into the teaching treasury.

The sum for the teaching-fund, now set aside by only a very few of the friends, will sometime become exhausted, and a reserve fund will be needed.

When all the believers send contributions for the expenses of the appointed teachers, the effort of responding to Abdul-Baha by sending them out with the glorious Message of glad tidings will be successful.

This fund should be entirely apart from all offerings that have been pledged to the Mashrak-el-Azkar fund. Surely, the latter will be greatly increased when the Cause is more widely spread.

Would it not be well to divide the responsibility of the care of the teachers fund in the following way?—

At each center where the original Tablets were addressed let a treasury-committee of three be chosen to receive and care for the contributions, and one treasurer be chosen in each assembly to receive and forward contributions to the treasury-committee of the center belonging to its section. For instance, the Northeastern assemblies to forward to the New York center; the Central assemblies to the Chicago center; the Southern assemblies to the Washington center; the Western assemblies to the San Francisco center, and the assemblies of Canada to the Montreal center, and Bahais in all outlying districts belonging to the different sections, sending offerings to their nearest assemblies (to be forwarded to the centers); or, if they prefer, they may send direct to the three treasurers at their center. (Having three treasurers at each center divides the responsibility so that, in the absence of one, the others can act. It is assumed that the Bahai to whom the Tablet was addressed, in each of the five centers, respectively will inaugurate the plan.)

A correspondence between all the believers, called forth by this simple plan, will strengthen the Bahai bond.

If these plans are adopted the STAR OF THE WEST will publish the names and addresses of the five treasury-committees; and will the friends in these centers, as soon as they have chosen the treasury-committee, send the names and addresses to us?—or if other plans are found more suitable, we will be pleased to publish them.

Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Haifa, Syria, March 7, 1916.

Received by Helen S. Goodall and Ella G. Cooper,
August 8, 1916.

To the friends of God, men, women and children in the photograph of the First International Bahai Congress, San Francisco, California—Upon them be greeting and praise!

O you real friends and lovers of the Kingdom of God!

In these days the scroll of the photograph of the blessed faces of those pure souls, which was taken during the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, was received.

Praise be to God, that the faces are radiant, indicating the sanctification of the hearts. All those who have looked at the photograph have obtained immediate joy—outflowing, and inexhaustible.

I beg infinite grace from the Kingdom of God for each one of those friends who were present in that gathering, wishing for them heavenly powers so that the members of that congress may irradiate the white rays of the Sun of Reality to all parts and illumine the cities, counties, towns and villages of the United States.

The magnet whereby to attract these favors and bounties, is firmness and steadfastness.

Upon you be greeting and praise!

“Towards the orphans the utmost consideration must be shown”

Portion of a Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha for Mrs. Cora Ditmars, of Spokane, Washington.

O thou happy and blessed one!

In this holy Cause the question of the education and the maintenance of the orphans has the utmost importance. Towards the orphans the utmost consideration must be shown, they must be taught and instructed; especially the teachings of his holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH must be given freely to every orphan according to the means at hand. I beg of God that to the orphaned children thou mayst become a kind father and mother, to quicken them with the fragrances of the Holy Spirit—thus they may attain to the age of maturity, and each one may become the real servant of the world of humanity—nay rather, they may become as bright candles in the assemblages of mankind.

“I never ask anyone to send me money”

A Talk Given by Abdul-Baha to Mr. Remy and Mr. Latimer at Haifa, October 15, 1914.

WHEN you return to America say to all the believers in my behalf that whenever a person comes to that country, no matter to what nationality he may belong, and tries to collect money in my name, know that it has no connection with me. I am free from it. Whosoever asks for money for me, does so of his own volition. There are some people who desire to collect money under all kinds of pretexts. I desire to impress upon your minds that I have nothing to do with such affairs. I never ask anyone to send me money.

Whosoever loves money does not love God and whosoever loves God does not love money.

On the other hand, if some of the believers voluntarily desire to help and assist one another or some philanthropic institutions, whose objects are for the public welfare and progress, it is very good and praiseworthy. I do not desire that anyone shall ask money in my name for any affair. The souls must be detached from the world. Those souls who are attached to this world and its wealth are deprived of spiritual advancement.

The believers must live such an independent life that if one comes and begs them to accept money, they should refuse him. As long as the souls are not severed, how do they expect to journey along the ideal path?

On the eve of my departure from New York, I told a number of believers that his holiness Christ has stated that “when you leave a city, shake its dust from off your feet.” So far, very few people have lived according to this best, but it is my will to live accordingly. Before coming to America, the believers of God, through Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, offered for my traveling expenses $16,000 but I did not accept one cent. Man must live in the utmost sanctity and purity and he must ever think to assist others and not beg assistance from them.

In short, may you ever be confirmed and assisted. May you ever be illumined; may you ever be the means of the guidance of the people; may you ever breathe the breath of life in the hearts; may you be the signs of mercy to all mankind. May you be the shining lamps of severance and detachment in this dark world

“We must arise to accomplish that which is required by the Lord”

Talk Given by Abdul-Baha, Tuesday Morning, December 3, 1912, at 780 West End Avenue, New York City.

I HAVE been in your gatherings many times. I have not attended one-tenth of the number of meetings in other cities which I have attended in this city, but with you I have been in meetings day times, during evenings, with you individually, with you collectively, and I have told you the teachings and exhortations of his holiness, BAHÁ'O'LLAH. I conveyed unto you the glad tidings of God, I explained unto you the wishes of the Blessed Perfection; that which is conducive to human progress have I explained to you, and that which leads to the most great humility. I have given you a thorough explanation of the teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

Now the time is well nigh when I shall leave you, and I cannot appear in your assemblages, for I have a great deal to do, and I have to go away day after tomorrow. I therefore look upon this gathering of ours today as the farewell gathering.

I am pleased with you all. I am very much rejoiced because of you all, because you have all shown the utmost kindness towards me; the utmost affection have you demonstrated towards me. I desire that his holiness, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, be pleased with you, that you may keep the promises and confirmations of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. The promises of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, the requirements that BAHÁ'O'LLAH has made of you are these: that your hearts must be illumined, your souls must be rejoiced with the glad tidings of God, your morals must be spiritual morals, your conduct must be an evidence of faith and assurance, you must be in the utmost of sanctity and purity and in the high degree of love and attraction toward the Kingdom of Abha. You must become the lamps of BAHÁ'O'LLAH so that you may give eternal light, that you may become evidences and proofs of the truth of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, so that as men consider your deeds and conduct they will see the signs of purity and chastity therein and see the heavenly illumination clearly in your deeds, so that all men may say, “Verily, ye are the proofs of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Verily, BAHÁ'O'LLAH is the true One; he is the one of truth, because he has trained such souls, each of which is a proof of himself.” Ye must so live that they may say to others, “Come and see the conduct of these souls, come and listen to their words, come and witness the illumination of their hearts, come and see the traces of the love of God within them, come and see praiseworthy morals in them, come and find the foundation of the oneness of humanity within them. What greater proof can there be than these persons as to the truth of BAHÁ'O'LLAH?”

It is my hope that everyone of you shall be a crier unto God, proclaiming his truth, either through his words or through his deeds or through his thoughts. Let your deeds and utterances be a proof that you are of the kingdom of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. These are the duties enjoined upon you by BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

His holiness, BAHÁ'O'LLAH endured great hardship, no night did he find rest, no day did he gain peace. He was constantly in great calamity. Now he was in prison, now under the chains, now an object of threat, brought by a sword, and finally leaving imprisonment he ascended from here to the heaven of God. He endured all these hardships for our sakes; he suffered all these deprivations for our sakes. Therefore, we must be faithful towards him, we must not follow the selfish desires of our fancies. We must arise to accomplish that which is required by the Lord.

It is my hope that you will arise to live in accord with all these teachings and exhortations, so that we may all be strengthened in accomplishing them, so that we may reach the paradise of the spiritual kingdom, and diffuse the lights of the Sun of Truth and cause the waves of the Most Great Ocean to reach all the souls, so that this world of earth may be converted into the world of heaven, this devastated ground be converted into a delectable paradise, and this jungle of confusion be converted into a paradise of Abha.

without ending. The greatest bounties of God in this phenomenal world are his Manifestations. (i. e. the great prophets). They are the greatest bounty. These Manifestations are the suns of the reality. Therefore, for the appearance of the holy divine Manifestations of God there has been no beginning and for the appearance of the holy divine Manifestations of God in the future there is no ending whatsoever, because God is infinite and his grace cannot be limited. And if we ever dare to circumscribe his grace within certain limited spheres, then we have as a necessity circumscribed the reality of divinity which is all-powerful. Therefore the perfect man ever beholds the rays of the sun, he ever expects the coming of the effulgence of God, he ever gazes at the grace and bounties of God, he ever ponders over the omnipotent God, and he knows of a certainty that the reality of divinity is not finite. His names and his attributes are not finite, his graces and bounties are not limited and the coming of the Manifestations of God are not circumscribed. This fact is self-evident and manifest.

Those people who have harkened to the teachings of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH—Hindus, Mohammedans, Christians, Zoroastrians, Buddhists, Jews—such people have discarded their past rancour and are associating with the utmost love and unity. Take my example and see with what degree of love I am associating with you tonight, loving you with all my heart and soul. In the same way all those people are living together, with the utmost accord and unity, to such an extent that they are ready to sacrifice their possessions and lives for each other; and to such an extent has the transformation been wrought that they are ever self-sacrificing for each other. Were you to enter into any (Bahai) gathering in the Orient, it would be very hard for you to discover who is a Christian and who is a Jew, or who is a Zoroastrian, for they are just like so many flames which have become one big flame. (Applause) All these different faiths are merging into one great faith.

“O ye people! Draw nigh unto It
(The Branch) and taste the fruits of Its Knowledge and Wisdom”

O YE PEOPLE! Do ye flee from the mercy of God after it hath encompassed the existent things created between the heavens and earths? Beware lest ye prefer your own selves before the mercy of God, and deprive not yourselves thereof. Verily, whosoever turneth away therefrom will be in great loss. . . .

Verily, the ocean of pre-existence hath branched forth from this most great ocean. Blessed therefore is he who abides upon its shores, and is of those who are established thereon. Verily, this most sacred temple of Abha—the Branch of Holiness—hath branched forth from the Sadrat-el-Muntaha.* Blessed is whosoever sought shelter beneath it and is of those who rest therein!

Verily, the Branch of Command hath sprung forth from this Root which God hath firmly planted in the ground of the will, the Limb of which hath been elevated to a station which encompasses all existence. Therefore, exalted be He for this creation, the Lofty, the Blessed, the Inaccessible, the Mighty!

O ye people! Draw nigh unto it (The Branch) and taste the fruits of its knowledge and wisdom on the part of the Mighty, the Knowing One. . . .

O people! Praise ye God for its manifestation (The Branch), for verily it is the most great favor unto you and the most perfect blessing upon you; and through him every mouldering bone is quickened. Whosoever turns to him hath surely turned unto God, and whosoever turneth away from him hath turned away from my beauty, denied my proof and is of those who transgress. Verily, he is the remembrance of God amongst you and His trust within you, and His manifestation unto you, and His appearance among the servants who are nigh. Thus have I been commanded to convey to you the message of God, your Creator; and I have delivered to you that of which I was commanded. Whereupon, thereunto testifieth God, then His angels, then His messengers, and then His holy servants. . . .

"This Movement is Stupendous and of Paramount Importance"

Tablet Revealed by Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant.

HE IS GOD!

O God! O God! Thou dost behold me, how my forehead is laid upon the dust of humility and submission and how my face is covered in the ground of the threshold of thy singleness. O thou my Lord, the Unconstrained! Thou seest me lowly and contrite, supplicating, entreating and imploring toward the Kingdom of thy light by day and by night, that thou encircle us with the eye of thy providence and the glances of the outlook of thy mercifulness.

O Lord! Forgive our sins, pardon our shortcomings and deal with us through thy grace and generosity under all circumstances. O our Lord! We are sinners, but thou art the merciful forgiver. We are transgressors, but thou art the clement pardoner. Absolve our iniquities, remove our sorrows, destine for us through thy bestowal severance from the world, occupation with thy mentioning, enkindlement with the fire of thy love, perpetual contemplation of thy signs, the knowledge of thy words, meditation over thy verses and the attraction of thy lights.

O Lord! O Lord! These are thy servants; they have turned their faces toward thy countenance and they have resolved their joy and happiness in thy favor and bounty. Strengthen their backs in thy obedience. Reinforce their lives in thy adoration. Perfume their hearts with the fragrances of thy holiness. Ordain for them presence in the paradise of thy meeting. Suffer them to become such servants as peruse the verses of unity in the assemblages held in thy name; that attract the rays of singleness from the lamp of thy bestowal; as those drawn towards thy beauty, humble before thy glory; who have abandoned aught else save thee and are relying upon thy protection and preservation; as those rendered meek by the sway of thy Word, made submissive before thy beloved ones; as those diffusing thy fragrances, disclosing thy mysteries, informing people with thy teachings and suffering mankind to become rejoiced through thy glad-tidings. Verily, thou art powerful over that which thou willest and thou feedest whomsoever thou desirest with thy hand. The world and the Kingdom belong to thee and thou art the mighty, the omnipotent and the beloved!

O ye believers of God! O ye dear friends of Abdul-Baha!

The goblet of the Covenant is overflowing and the outpouring of the bestowal of the Luminary of Effulgence is manifest and apparent in the regions from behind the invisible world, like unto the radiant moon. The twilight of the Moon of Guidance is scattered and the grace of the Orb of the Beauty of Abha is continuous and renowned. The fame of the grandeur of the Most Great Name hath reached the East and the West and the call of the Cause of the

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Latest Word from Abdul-Baha

In a letter dated October 25, 1916, to Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, recently received, Mirza Ahmad Sohrab advises Khan that the beloved Abdul-Baha has addressed three Tablets to Khan, one in his own name, one to Khanom, his wife, and one to the American Bahais, concerning him, his family and household, and his relatives.

The last of the three Tablets has just been received by Khan, through Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, of Washington, D. C., in a letter from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, in which Abdul-Baha addresses himself to the American believers as follows:

To the Believers of God in America!—Upon them be greeting and praise!
O ye believers of God!

It is a long time that his honor Ali Kuli Khan is engaged in the service of the Cause of God; therefore I love him. Regarding the niece and the relatives of Khan who are in America, their aim is likewise good, and the believers of God must exercise toward them the utmost kindness. For these souls are strangers, and hospitality must be shown towards strangers. Should you hear contrary and conflicting stories concerning them, do not accept those stories. I beg of God that that family—that is Khan, and the relatives of Khan—may be happy in that strange country, and that the believers may show them kindness and consideration.

Man is worthy of honor and merits respect, especially a stranger. The friends of God must become the cause of the consolation of every stranger—unless he is a corrupt and wicked person. They must be the means of joy for every sorrowful one, a protective shelter for every fearful one, and a true friend and sympathizer to every friendless one. This is the reward and compensation of every human being. I hope you may become assisted therein. Upon ye be greeting and praise.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Then Mirza Ahmad says: "Praise be to God, that the health of Abdul-Baha is well. At present he lives in Bahjee with his holy sister; Monnavar Khanom, his daughter, and one of his grand-daughters."

[Following its usual custom this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST emphasizes "The Center of The Covenant" in the person and function of ABDUL-BAHA, inasmuch as the Twenty-sixth of November is the "Feast of the Appointment of The Center of The Covenant."—The Editors]

The turning of the pages of the "Book of the Covenant"

Brittingham, in Chicago, November 5, 1916.

THERE are two parts to this Book. There is the collective Book; but back of it is the reality—that creation which made the "Center" of the Covenant—Abdul-Baha, the real Book. He tells us that the Covenant means, "the power and authority that BAHÁ'O'LLÁH has given to him.

Nine days after the great ascension* of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, Abdul-Baha took a few Oriental believers into the Holy Tomb, and in their presence, the "Book of the Covenant" (Kitab-el-Ahd) was read. That turned for the world the first page of the real "Book of the Covenant." Hadjai Hassan Khorassani, who was one of those present, told me of this when en route to Akka in 1901.

In 1893 another page was turned. The Message of the Kingdom was first heard in America, covering a period of several clouded years.

Again a page of that Creative Book was turned when, for several years following this Message, American believers visited (at Akka) the presence of that Book shining from the mirror of Abdul-Baha and returned, confirming the glad tidings.

Another turned page followed: The page of the pioneer work in America—in which period the proclamation of those wonderful glad tidings was made in assemblies, in assembly vicinities, from east to west, from north to south, blazing a trail and hewing the way in the wilderness, as it were, for the coming of the Great Seed-sower. During that period, in order to meet the limitation of any human conceptions, Abdul-Baha ever described himself as the servant, or slave, of the servants of God.

In 1912 that Seed-sower came to America, and his presence changed the face of our country as well as that of the world. He turned another page of the real "Book of the Covenant," at that time adorning it with the Tablet of the Branch, which the Infinite Creator had revealed through BAHÁ'O'LLÁH for the world. In that Tablet Abdul-Baha is proclaimed: "The most sacred Temple of Abha." What is the meaning of the title, "BAHÁ'O'LLÁH?" It is "THE GLORY OF GOD." That "Glory," continued in manifestation, is shining in this hour from "the most sacred Temple of Abha." The "Branch" is dependent upon the "Pre-existent Root," as the divine sap pours upward through the Greatest Branch (or Trunk) and finds its greatest expression thereupon, in the fruit which contains the Creative Seed.

We must always call him "Abdul-Baha," for he has chosen that title for himself. This has to do with his individual offering of servitude and sacrifice. This is his personal station. But seeing eyes behold this station as the altar upon which burns the flame of the Covenant, and which is the "Book of the Covenant."

Upon all of the pages of this Book is unfolded in golden words and letters the Mashrak-el-Azkar. The presence of the Covenant is the one who calls himself "Abdul-Baha" is the spiritual Mashrak-el-Azkar—of which the edifice soon, God grant, to be built in Chicago, is the outer symbol—and he has said that radiant pure hearts are (to build) this Symbol Temple. That is, he is building a Temple, not made with hands, of hearts who are becoming severed and molded by the fire of the love of God. This spiritual Temple of severed souls, this spiritually purified collective unit of radiant hearts, will receive the descent of his spirit after his great departure, and be confirmed to complete this outward and visible symbol, the foundations of which he is now laying.

The latest page of the "Book of the Covenant" has just been turned. Upon it is inscribed the five great Tablets to North America containing the greatest call which has ever come from that presence, to arise and awaken and summon all the sleeping portions of this country, to the Kingdom of God.

Never has there been heard upon the earth such a call! We, as Bahais, are all in one station. This has long been stated by Abdul-Baha. Thus there rests equally upon each and all responsibility to respond in some way, to this great command. How is it to be met? Through the mystery of sacrifice. What is this mystery of sacrifice? It consists of the absolute evanescence and laying down of every hindrance upon the Holy Threshold, and thus arising in pure response; and in arising not at some future period, but NOW. Thus determining to burn every veil of delay or hindrance of the (subtle) self, the confirmations appear out of the invisible horizon "whereof the spirits receive the Light," and sacrifice becomes transformed into a chalice of bestowal. Only in this way will all of the barren parts of North America become illumined.

A superhuman effort is demanded. This proves the greatness of this page, and the test of fidelity to its call. It is not to be postponed to some indefinite future. When Abdul-Baha left America in 1912 he said he had sown the pure seeds and that it was now the turn of the believers to "Act! Act! Act!" It is the time for the teaching of new souls! Each one of the older believers should be teaching a class of new souls. Our responsible response to those Tablets is only limited by ourselves. This new call has nothing to do with our past services. Past calls and the responses thereto are recorded on the earlier (turned) pages of the "Book of the Covenant" and belong to those past periods.

A new page demands a new arising, to which the offering must be that of fuller consecration and greater activity than ever before! It involves this response from us, and this definite proof of our spiritual life. The days of negation are ended. The presence of the "Center" of the Covenant will not be with us very much longer. His departure will judge our deeds, as to real severance and actions, now! This constitutes our firmness in the Covenant. Abdul-Baha has given us its definition. He tells us it "is love, and obedience to his commands." And "It is not mere words. The command is explicit."

Blessed Perfection (BAHA'O'LLAH) hath encircled the North and the South. The fragrances of sanctity are being wafted and the breeze of life is passing by. The Word of God is upheld and the everlasting glory is revealed. The lamp of divine unity is ignited and the flame of clemency is glowing. From every direction the call of "Ya-Baha-el-Abha!" is raised and in the Orient and in the Occident the teachings of God have struck wonder to the heart of every thinker. Pamphlets and periodicals are being published and circulated in America, Europe and Africa. A section of the press is engaged in praise and eulogy, and another section of the press is awakening the interest of the nations by exclaiming: "This Movement is stupendous and of paramount importance."

Some people express wonder and astonishment; others complain bitterly on account of their intense prejudices. One of the nations says: "After the departure of his holiness Christ only a limited number of people were his disciples; notwithstanding this his fame became world-conquering and his song reached the sphere of ether." But, the Blessed Perfection—May my life be a ransom to his believers!—on the eve of his ascension, hundreds and thousands were associating together under the shade of the flag of his majesty. From this illustration you can draw the conclusion that a mighty resurrection will be witnessed in the not-far distant future. One of the greatest apostles of his holiness the Spirit was the great Peter; but, notwithstanding this, before Christ's crucifixion he became agitated and was harassed with fear; while thousands of souls, singing, dancing and clapping their hands, have given up their lives and hastened toward the city of martyrdom, for the sake and in the path of the Most Great Name—May my identity be a sacrifice to his friends!

In short, the affairs of the Cause revolve around just such a center of self-abnegation. How self-evident it is that the believers of God must clothe themselves in these days with the attributes of self-sacrifice, consecrate their time to the teaching of the heedless ones, diffuse the sweet aroma of the teachings, re-entkindle the white flame and make apparent the splendor of the Merciful.

O ye friends of God! Is it befitting that we rest for one moment after the departure of the Beauty of the Clement, or seek the organization of committees, or exhale one breath of comfort, or taste the honey of fleeting pleasure, or lay our heads on the cushions of repose, or pursue the luxury and affluence of the world of creation? No! I declare by God! This is not the condition of loyalty nor the state of faithfulness and appreciation.

Therefore, O ye friends! With heart and soul yearn for the service of the divine threshold and like unto the righteous ones become ye the guardians of the court of the merciful. Servitude at the holy threshold means the spread of the fragrances, the explanation of signs and verses, thralldom at the hall of unity and attachment to the palace of mercifulness. Consider with what severance, attraction and enkindlement the apostles of his holiness the Spirit—May my life be a ransom to him!—arose in the promulgation of the Word of God after his crucifixion. We hope from the bestowal of the True One that we may likewise walk in the footsteps of those pure ones and hasten unhesitatingly and rejoicingly toward the arena of love and sacrifice. This is the inexhaustible outpouring. This is the grace of His Highness the forgiving Lord.

In these days the progress of the divine principles are impeded in some parts and retarded in others, and this has become conducive to the sorrow and grief of the Supreme Concourse, because the dwellers of the Kingdom of Abha are expecting to see each one of us fulfilling the conditions of loyalty and for the sake of the love of the Most Great Name suffer every form of persecution. A number of the merciful friends forsook their material tranquillity and composure and traveled from city to city, nay, rather, village to village, in order to diffuse the fragrances of God. These souls, endowed with such pure spirits, became the objects of the commendation of the Supreme Concourse—May my life be a ransom to them!—for they became confirmed with this most exalted grace. They spent their days amidst the greatest difficulties and hardships, and employed their time in the guidance of the negligent ones.

O ye friends! This is not the time of rest and tranquillity! This is not the season of silence and stillness. The nightingale of the rose-garden of uprightness must display its wonderful melodies and trills. The bird of guidance must exhibit its eloquent speech. The light and the heat are the concomitant results of the lamp. The brilliancy of the stars must be everlasting. The existence of the ocean connotes the waves. The birds must soar toward the apex. The pearls are inseparable from their lustre and sweet fragrance must qualify the blossoms of the rose-garden of knowledge. It is hoped that through the favor of the living, Self-subsistent, we may become assisted in a befitting manner.

O ye believers of God! Divine teachings are conducive to eternal life, the cause of the illumination of the world of humanity, the means of peace and conciliation, love and salvation, the basis of fellowship, uprightness and friendship in the world of creation and the instrument of unity and accord, solidarity and inter-dependence amongst the individuals of the body politic. Consequently you must lay the foundation of this structure in this mortal world; thus you may confer upon it infinite and abundant life and become the source of the enlightenment of the world of existence. It is incumbent upon you to consort with all the nations and people of the world with the utmost love, kindness and show affection, justice, assistance, consideration and courtesy to all the different communities and sects. Become ye a remedy to every pain, a balsam of healing and recovery to every wound, to every weak one become ye a support and aid and succor every poor one. Become ye to the fearful ones the impregnable cave of safety and to the agitated ones a sure asylum. . . . In this great cycle it is more acceptable and beloved to close one's eyes to all the limitations. The friends may become the manifestors of the qualities of the Merciful and Clement and arise in the service of all humanity; nay, rather they must be most kind toward the animals; for verily His mercy hath encompassed all things. . . .

O ye believers of God! This is the time of self-abnegation and renunciation and the era of servitude and loyalty. The utmost height of this servant is the station of Servitude to His Highness the Almighty. If he becomes accepted at the threshold of servitude how glorious will be this most great gift. Otherwise he will be deprived of the mercy of God. Therefore the utmost hope and aspiration of Abdul-Baha is to open his wings in this space, to run toward this field, obtain infinite exhilaration from this wine, be intoxicated with this cup and acquire the longing of heart and spirit. Every other mention save this unchangeable, beloved name (Abdul-Baha) will become the cause of grief and sorrow and the source of the greatest regret and illimitable remorse. I request from the friends of God that day and night they may supplicate and implore at the divine Kingdom so that my servitude might become accepted in the threshold of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH.

O ye believers of God! If you wish the joy, happiness and the composure of the spirit and the peace of the conscience of Abdul-Baha, strengthen the bonds of union and harmony amongst yourselves so that all of you may become the waves of one sea, the drops of one river, the flowers of one garden, the links of one cuirass, soaring in the atmosphere and breaking forth into one glad song. This is the cause of my everlasting joy! This is the motive of the repose of my mind and heart in the eternal world! . . . Today there is no greater service than union and accord amongst the believers. This is the imperative need! This is the happy consummation. This is the most great attainment and the manifest bestowal for those who are sheltered beneath the shade of the Blessed Tree!

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become 'one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened; that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Social Teachings of the Bahai Movement

A COMPILATION BY GEORGE O. LATIMER.

"Certain regulations are revealed which insure the welfare and well-being of all humanity. Just as the rich man enjoys his rest and his pleasures surrounded by luxuries, the poor man must likewise have a home, be provided with sustenance, and not be in want. . . .

"Until this is effected happiness is impossible. All are equal in the estimation of God; their rights are one and there is no distinction for any soul; all are protected beneath the justice of God."
—ABDUL-BAHA.

THE solution of our economic problems has long been considered a matter for the minds of philosophers and theoretical thinkers—a matter apart from religion. But social and economic questions are as much a part of religion as are prayer and worship, for true religion is the cause of the advancement of civilization and progress in the world and "the nobility and glory of man consists in the fact that, amidst the beings, he is the dawning place of righteousness. Can any greater blessing be imagined by man than the consciousness that by divine assistance the means of comfort, peace and prosperity of the human race are in his hands? How noble and excellent is man if he only attain to that state for which he was designed. And how mean and contemptible if he close his eyes to the public weal and spend his precious capacities on personal and selfish ends. The greatest happiness lies in the happiness of others. He who urges the matchless steed of endeavor on the race course of justice and civilization alone is capable of comprehending the wonderful signs of the natural and spiritual world."*

Civilization in its most general idea, is an improved condition of man resulting from his relation to the social order rather than the expression of his individual independence, and has a twofold aspect. One, a natural and material civilization which serves the physical world and the other a divine and heavenly civilization which renders service to the world of morality. One is founded by the philosophers and scientists of the world, the other is established by the Prophets of God. Material civilization may again be subdivided into those affairs which have no direct relation to life, producing luxury, indolence and effeminacy, and those affairs which contribute toward the maintenance of livelihood and to the happiness, welfare and comfort of mankind.

"In the world of nature the greatest dominant note is the struggle for existence—the result of which is the survival of the fittest. The law of the survival of the fittest is the origin of all difficulties. It is the cause of war and strife, hatred and animosity, between human beings. In the world of nature there is tyranny, egoism, aggression, overbearance, usurpation of the rights of others and other blameworthy attributes which are the defects of the animal world.

Therefore so long as the requirements of the natural world play paramount part among the children of men, success and prosperity are impossible; for the success and prosperity of the human world depend upon the qualities and virtues with which the reality of humanity is adorned while the exigencies of the natural world work against the realization of this object." Thus material civilization alone does not insure the safety and progress of mankind, but brings into existence the greatest instruments for human fratricide and destruction of property, and animalistic propensities reach their height under its influence.

Divine civilization, on the other hand, assists man in acquiring heavenly virtues, thus freeing him from oppression, cruelty, and greed brought about by the exploitation of his fellow-man for his own gain. "Divine civilization is a symposium of the perfections of the world of humanity. Divine civilization is the improvement of the ethical life of a nation. Divine civilization is the discovery of the reality of phenomena. Divine civilization is the spiritual philosophy. Divine civilization is the knowledge of God with rational and intellectual evidences." "Consequently consider what a difference and distinction is there between the material civilization and the divine civilization! The natural civilization prevents men from doing harm and wrong through force and punishment, and thus withholds them from committing crimes. But the divine civilization so trains men that the human individuals avoid sins without having any fear from (material) punishment; and the very sin itself becomes unto them as the severest punishment. And with the utmost zeal and fervor they will engage in acquiring human virtues, gaining that by which mankind will be uplifted and that which will enlighten the human world."

Thus divine civilization is in the same relation to material civilization as the light is to the lamp. Natural civilization is the body which is in need of the spirit of heavenly guidance for its life and advancement. Therefore the real and true civilization exists only when the material and spiritual combine to reach their highest development. A good man without any development along material lines does not represent true civilization; while on the other hand, the man who has developed only his material side, with no regard for the spiritual does not stand for real civilization. Man must first understand that "the outward trappings of civilization, without inward moral advancement, may be likened unto confused dreams which cannot be interpreted; and sensual enjoyment, apart from spiritual perfection, is like unto the mirage which he that is athirst believes to be water." (M. F. P. 126) The Bahai teaching awakens within him the realization of his duty to society by sowing such seeds of (divine) truth in his heart as these:—

"The poor among you are my trust. Therefore guard my trust, and be not wholly occupied with your own ease."

"Ye are the trees of my garden; ye must bear fresh and beautiful fruits, that ye and others may be profited by them. Therefore it is necessary for ye to engage in arts and business. This is the means of attaining wealth, O ye possessors of intellect. Affairs depend upon means, and the blessing of God will appear therein and enrich you. Fruitless trees have been and will be only fit for fire."

"Deeds reveal the station of the man."

"Let the rich learn the midnight sighing of the poor, lest negligence destroy them and they be deprived of their portion of the tree of wealth. Giving and generosity are qualities of mine. Happy is he who adorns himself with my virtues."

"Thy heart is my home; purify it for my descent: thy spirit is my outlook; prepare it for my Manifestation." (Hidden Words of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.)

Thus the first and fundamental, and most difficult step toward the establishment of the new social synthesis, is a change of heart in man.

And to effect this change in conscience the Bahais are today striving with all the power of their spiritual enthusiasm and wisdom. The result is already a multitude of men and women in many lands, and of many races who have been reborn of the spirit and united by the fire of the love of God into a world-wide spiritual brotherhood.

But the Bahais are also presenting to the world certain great principles of social reconstruction. Part of these principles are general and fundamental; some are very specific—a clean cut program of social laws for a new social order.

These principles include: The oneness of all humanity, a universal language, universal peace, education, the House of Justice, specific laws.

THE ONENESS OF ALL HUMANITY

The world is perishing through lack of the spiritual realization of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Therefore BAHÁ'O'LLAH addressed the world as follows: "Ye are all leaves of one tree and the fruits of one branch." With the full realization of this one principle the shackles of capitalism, industrialism, and militarism will be broken down and mutual helpfulness and co-operation, the cornerstones of economic freedom, will be laid. In a talk given April 14, 1912, in New York city, Abdul-Baha said: "Today the world of humanity is in need of international unity and conciliation. This great foundation needs a propelling power to spread these principles. It is self-evident that unity of the human world and the Most Great Peace cannot be accomplished through material means. It cannot be established through political power, for the political interests of nations are various and the policies of peoples are divergent and conflicting. It cannot be founded through racial or patriotic power, for these are human powers, selfish and weak. The very nature of racial differences and patriotic prejudices prevents the realization of this unity and agreement. Therefore it is established that the promotion of the oneness of the kingdom of humanity, which is the essence of the teachings of the holy Manifestations of God, is impossible except through the power spiritual and the breaths of the Holy Spirit."

There was a time in the history of the world when the family tie was the greatest unit. Out of this grew the common interest of the community, and later as the circle widened the people became united as a nation. Thus the keynote of the last century was nationalism; but now a new and higher ideal has been given to the world by BAHÁ'O'LLAH—internationalism or humanitarianism. "Let not a man glory in this that he loves his country; let him rather glory in this that he loves his kind." All problems are world problems and a solution must needs be based upon this fundamental truth, the oneness of all mankind.

A UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE

For the establishment of this principle, a common auxiliary language is of paramount importance as it will facilitate the intercourse of all peoples and bring about an understanding and interchange of their ideas. Upon this matter Abdul-Baha said in Paris that "An international congress should be formed, consisting of delegates from every nation in the world, Eastern as well as Western. This congress should form a language that could be acquired by all, and every country would thereby reap great benefit.

"Until such a language is in use, the world will continue to feel the vast need of this means of intercourse. Difference of speech is one of the most fruitful causes of dislike and distrust that exists between nations, which are kept apart by their inability to understand each other's language more than by any other reason. If everybody could speak one language, how much easier would it be to serve humanity!"

UNIVERSAL PEACE

"Every century holds the solution of one predominating problem. Although there may be many problems, yet one of the innumerable problems will loom large and become the most important of all. In the past century, the most important question that occupied the mind of man was the establishment of political freedom and this aim was more or less broadcast. But in this luminous century the greatest bestowal of the world of humanity is Universal Peace, which must be founded, so that the realm of creation may obtain composure, the East and the West, which include in their arms the five continents of the globe, may embrace each other, mankind may rest beneath the tent of oneness of the world of humanity, and the flag of universal peace may wave over all the regions. As long as this sentiment has not become the light of the assemblages of the world of humanity, eternal prosperity will not be obtained and estrangement will not be changed into good-fellowship. Like unto a spirit, this ideal must run and circulate through the veins and arteries of the body of the world."

Today the commercial and financial relations of the various countries of the world are so closely interwoven that the slightest rumor of war affects the markets and upsets the equilibrium of business everywhere. This relationship is such, that when two nations go to war, the result is inevitable—both the victor and the vanquished are losers. "The two combatants are like unto two ships which collide with each other. One may sink to the bottom of the sea, but the other will also carry away its injuries and bruises." In fact international ties are so delicate that not only the combatants suffer but all the nations are affected. What a shock business received in the United States during the Boer War when England withdrew two hundred and fifty merchant ships from active trade to assist in military operations! No one denies the devastating and paralyzing shock to the trade, commerce and industry of the entire world resulting from the present war, yet man, suffering from the results, does not attempt to remove the causes. He is blinded by the illusion of racial, patriotic, political and religious prejudices, and by his greed for the control of the economic surplus—produced at the expense of the masses—even though he bears a burden of taxation for military purposes which deprives him of the means of proper livelihood. Truly man today knows no peace for, "in reality war is continuous. The moral effect of the expenditures of these colossal sums of money for military purposes is just as deteriorating as the actual war and its train of dreadful carnage and horrors." "Such a financial drain ossifies the veins and muscles of the body politic and congeals the delicate sensibilities of the spirit."

"Today the true duty of a powerful king is to establish a universal peace; for verily it signifies the freedom of all the people of the world. Some persons who are ignorant of the world of true humanity and its high ambitions for the general good, reckon such a glorious condition of life to be very difficult, nay rather impossible to compass. But it is not so, far from it."

Alas, however, "the kings and rulers of the world are not yet ready to acknowledge that universal peace is conducive to the life of the world of humanity. In a similar strain the nobles, the demagogues, and those in authority find their glory and reputation in naval and military preparedness. Consequently it is impossible that 'economic contentment' be realized by the people of the world save through the transforming power of faith. For faith is the solvent for every problem."

For the establishment of universal peace, we need an International Board of Arbitration, composed of representatives from all the nations of the earth. This Board would decide upon questions of boundaries, of national honor and property, the size of armaments for each government, and all questions of an international and justiciable nature, having the backing of the united powers to make its rulings effective. Together they would furnish an international police force. Most of the battleships should be turned into a mighty merchant marine. "If so great a remedy would be applied to the sick body of the world, it would certainly be the means of continually and permanently healing its illness by the conciliation of universal moderation. Reflect that, under such conditions of life, no Government would need to prepare and accumulate war materials, or would need to pay heed to the invention of new weapons of defense for the vexation and hurt of mankind. On the contrary they would require only a few soldiers, as a means of assuring the safety of the state and punishing the wicked and rebellious and preventing the growth of civil sedition. Not more than these few would be needed. In the first place, therefore, the servants of God—that is to say, all the inhabitants of a state—would be freed from bearing the burden of the tremendous expense of an army; in the second, the many persons who now devote their lives to the invention of fresh instruments of war would no longer waste their time on such work, which but encourages ferocity and bloodthirstiness, and is repugnant to the universal ideal of humanity. On the contrary, they would then employ their natural gifts in the cause of the general well-being and would contribute towards the peace and salvation of mankind. All the rulers of the world will then be settled on peaceful thrones amid the glory of a perfect civilization, and all the nations and peoples will rest in the cradle of peace and comfort."

EDUCATION

"The most important of all matters in question, and that with which it is most specially necessary to deal effectively, is the promotion of education. And no freedom or salvation could be imagined in the case of any nation which had not progressed in this greatest and most important point; just as the greatest cause of degradation and decadency of every nation is bigotry and ignorance." "Another characteristic of progress consists in the earnest and sincere development of public education, in the teaching of all the useful sciences and in encouraging the people to adopt the modern inventions, in extending the spheres of arts and commerce, and endeavoring to induce them to adopt the methods by which the country may be enriched."

"If necessary, make this (education) even compulsory, for not until the veins and tendons of the nation stir with life, will any study and adoption of improvements be of any avail, because the nation is like unto the body, zeal and resolution are like unto the soul, so that the soulless body cannot move."

"In the scheme of human life, the teacher and his system of teaching plays the most important role, carrying with it the heaviest responsibilities and most subtle influence. A teacher is like unto a gardener. Just as a gardener sows the seeds and watches carefully over their sprouting, looks after their growth and progression—so also a teacher must watch over the education of the children and inculcate in their young lives the highest ideals of truth and justice."

BAHA'O'LLAH writes (in the Kitab-el-Akdas): "The first obligation of all the Bahais is to strive by all means to bring up and instruct their children, male or female. The girls are like the boys; there is no difference. Ignorance in both is censured, and in both stupidity is hateful. In reality, looked at with the eye of truth, the education and instruction of the girls is more useful than that of the boys; for in time these girls will become mothers and will have children. The first educator of the child, is she not the mother? Children are like green and tender branches; as they are cultivated, they grow and increase. If the cultivation is right, they grow straight, and if it is wrong they grow crookedly, and until the end of their lives they advance upon the same path. It is thus proved that if girls without education or instruction become mothers, it is they who are the cause of this loss, the ignorance, the stupidity, the want of education of many children. Strive then with all your souls to train and educate all children, above all your daughters. On this point no excuses can be accepted." "In the divine book of this cycle, instruction and education are not optional, they are obligatory. He who educates his child or any other's children, it is as though he educated one of my children."

Abdul-Baha has declared: "If women were educated with the same advantages as men, their capacity is the same and the result would be the same; in fact women have a superior disposition to men, they are more receptive, more sensitive, their intuition is more intense. The only reason for their present backwardness in some directions is that they have not had the same educational advantages as men. If a mother is well educated, her children will also be well taught. If the mother is wise, the children will be wise; if the mother is religious, the children will also be religious. If the mother is a good woman, then the children will also be good. The future generation depends then on the mothers of today. Is not this a vital responsibility for women? Surely God does not wish such an important instrument as woman to be less perfect than she is able to become! Divine justice demands that men and women should have equal rights; there is no difference between them, neither sex is superior to the other in the sight of God."

"The dissemination of high thoughts is the motive power in the arteries of this transitory world; yea, it is the soul of all peoples. Thoughts are infinite as the sea and the ways and manners of life are like embankments and dykes against the waves; and not until the sea moves do the waves rise up and cast on shore the pearls of wisdom." (M. F. p. 228)

"It is most clear and manifest that the national affairs will never revolve around their proper axis until the whole people have received instruction, and public thought has been directed to a single end."

THE HOUSE OF JUSTICE

"Two things are most urgently necessary to the political realm:

1. The Legislative Power.
2. The Executive Power.

The center of the executive power is the government, and the legislative power lies in the hands of thoughtful and wise men. On the other hand, if these strong pillars and firm foundations are not complete and comprehensive, how can it be supposed that there will be safety and salvation for the nation? But as, in these latter days, such excellency is rare, the government and the whole body of the nation are in sore need of just and discerning directions. Thus it is of the utmost importance to establish an assembly of learned men, who, being proficient in the different sciences and capable of dealing with all the present and future requirements will settle the questions in accordance with forbearance and firmness."

After pointing out the necessity for the establishment of "Councils" and "Deliberative Assemblies" as the solid basis of politics, Abdul-Baha lays down certain rules that will make these organizations permanent. "Firstly: The elected members must be religious persons, God-fearing, high-minded and followers of the law. Secondly: They should have an accurate knowledge of the divine commandments, of the most important fundamental matters and of the rules of the loosing and binding of domestic affairs and foreign relations; they should possess a knowledge of the sciences and arts necessary to civilization, and finally be contented with the income derived from their personal property."

As to the election of such men he says: "The election of temporary members of the assemblies of the kingdom should depend upon the choice and satisfaction of the public, for members elected by the people are pledged to carry out their will, and to follow out their instructions. Consequently they are careful to administer impartial justice, and to live according to true religion, so that they may establish a good reputation and keep their dignity in the eyes of the people."

These Councils are called Houses of Justice and every community, village, town, city, and nation will be under the control of one of these bodies. From all the different National Houses of Justice members will be chosen to compose an Universal House of Justice, to have charge of the international problems.

"All the civic affairs and the legislation of material laws for the increasing needs of the enlightened humanity belong to the House of Justice. This, the House of Justice, will be not only a body for the legislation of laws according to the spirit and requirement of the time, but a board of arbitration for the settlement of all disputes arising between peoples. When the Universal House of Justice is organized the members will do their utmost for the realization of greater cordiality and comity amongst the nations. The laws of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH are the unchangeable, organic laws of the Universal House of Justice. They are the very foundation upon which the structure of additional legislation is built." "As regards the places for the convening of such a general body, it will be decided by the members. The Universal House of Justice has only the legislative function; the executive power belongs to the administrative department of government. At first, National Houses of Justice will be established in every country, and they will elect in turn members to the Universal House of Justice. Again I repeat, the House of Justice, whether National or Universal, has only legislative power, and not executive power. For example, in Europe and America the Parliament or Congress enact laws, while the Government executes these laws. The House of Justice cannot fulfill two functions at the same time—legislative and executive."

The chief concern of the government is the establishment of equal justice and equal opportunity amongst its citizens. Therefore the members of the House of Justice must close the door to political pirates and their bribery, abolish their personal hatreds and crown themselves with wisdom, piety, truthfulness, capability, benevolence and zeal and such attributes that will prevent oppression, injustice and mismanagement of affairs. As they are to be under the inspiration and protection of God, they must hearken to his call.

"Friends of God, set forth the example of Justice! Justice is a universal quality. From the highest to the lowest, justice should be sacred; from the sovereign to the merchant, the minister of state to the artisan all must be just. Be just, respect the rights of each man, 'do unto others what you would have them do unto you.' A workman who commits an injustice is as much to blame as a tyrant. Each one of us can choose between justice and injustice. I hope you will be just in your relations with others, that you will never harm your fellows, that you will respect the rights

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

The Teaching Campaign—Selections from the Words of Abdul-Baha

Extract from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 24, 1914.

Extract from a Tablet: "O thou maidservant of God! The penetration of the word of man depends upon the heat of the fire of the Love of God. The more the splendors of the Love of God become manifest in the heart, the greater will be the penetration of the Word."

Words of Abdul-Baha: "Any undertaking by the believers of God and which directly or indirectly helps the promotion of the Cause, and the diffusion of Brotherhood between the East and the West, is commendable. This is the Standard."

AS THIS Bahai Cause is in the nascent stage and its basic doctrines are universal, uniformity of rules and forms are not only impossible but undesirable.

A Bahai teacher is a Constructionist. He avails himself of the unimpaired materials in the past religions, reinforces the faith of the inquirer by simply holding before his path a greater and brighter light.

He has come not to destroy but to build. The inquirer will discard the superannuated and unnecessary rituals of his former religion along the road of his search.

The teacher holds aloft the flambeau of truth, and little by little the darkness vanishes. The teacher before attempting to take hold of the search light of Truth must learn two lessons:—First, the art of manipulation, and second, the inflexibility of the will.

Just as the searchlight revolves around its axis on its hightower, sending forth into dark space a continuous stream of white, piercing light, so also the teacher must learn how to manipulate the searchlight of Truth—so as to scatter not only the forces of spiritual darkness, but mental, intellectual, social, physical, and economic darkness as well.

A teacher is a physician. A physician does not give the same kind of medicine to every patient. What is good for one may cause the death of another. What alleviates one kind of sickness may aggravate the other.

The pharmacopœia of a Bahai teacher must be well supplied. If he sticks to one kind of prescription I do not say he shall fail, but he will not accomplish universal results.

He must be fairly well informed with the Scriptures, the history of the Cause, and its principles, the underlying spirit of the age, and the longings of the hearts for vaster and more spacious fields of noble labor and elevating thoughts.

There is an Oriental saying: "There are as many roads to God as the number of His creatures!"

A teacher must know these roads and strive to put himself in sympathetic touch with the weary pilgrims who are struggling along each road, and little by little teach them that what they call a road is not a road but an unbeaten hard trail leading to jungles and deserts and precipices. When they are prepared, he might then cry at the top of his voice: "O men! The Highway of the Lord of Hosts hath appeared. The Broad Boulevard of the Kingdom of God is paved. Lo! Behold!"

There are many people who have left their trails and are walking along this Celestial Path.

Do you not see them? Are you not learning by their example? Open your eyes! Look! Look! How many companies of people composed of ever so many nationalities are thronging the Golden Way of the Kingdom!

They are marching on and on, and with every step they take they come nearer to the goal. Their path is strewn with the lilies of love, and the hyacinths of affection. In their white hands are the harps and lyres of divine music, and on their lips the songs of thanksgiving and anthems of glorification. Listen! Listen! Now they are singing in soft, harmonious murmur and anon raise their voices, flushed and inspired with rejoicing and happiness. Is it not better for thee, my brother, my sister, to leave thine own narrow trail over which is grown thorns of dogmas and underbrushes of creed, and walk on this broad, brilliantly lighted Path of the Kingdom? Here thou wilt enjoy the companionship of spiritually minded men and women who have given up everything to serve their God and the world of humanity. This golden hour is slipping by; this divine opportunity is passing away. Avail thyself of it!

Words of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and Abdul-Baha.

Words of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH.

"It is decreed that every father must educate his sons and daughters in learning and in writing and also in that which hath been ordained in the Tablets. He who neglects that which hath been commanded (in this matter), if he is rich, it is incumbent on the trustees (of the House of Justice) to recover from him the amount required for the education of the children; otherwise (i. e., if the parent is not capable) the matter shall devolve on the House of Justice. Verily We have made it (The House of Justice) an asylum for the poor and needy."

Words of Abdul-Baha.

"It is most clear and manifest that national affairs will never revolve around their proper axis until the whole people have received instruction, and public thought has been directed to a single end."

"The most important of all the matters in question, and that with which it is most specially necessary to deal effectively, is the promotion of education."

"No freedom or salvation could be imagined in the case of any nation which had not progressed in this greatest and most important point; just as the greatest cause of degradation and decadence of every nation is bigotry and ignorance."

"If necessary, make this even compulsory, for not until the veins and tendons of the nations stir with life, will any study and adoption of improvements be of any avail, because the nation is like unto the body, zeal and resolution are like unto the soul, so that the soulless body cannot move."

Talk by Abdul-Baha given in Stuttgart, Germany, April 28, 1913.

"Among the children many blessed souls will arise, if they be trained according to the Bahai Teaching.

"If a plant is carefully nurtured by a gardener, it will become good and produce better fruit. These children must be given a good training from their earliest childhood. They must be given a systematic training which will further their development, in order that they may receive greater insight, so that their spiritual receptivity be broadened. Beginning in childhood they must receive instruction. They cannot be taught through books. Many elementary sciences must be made clear to them in the nursery; they must learn them in play, in amusement.

"Most ideas must be taught them through speech, not by book-learning. One child must question the other concerning those things and the other child must give the answer. In this way they will make great progress. For example, mathematical problems must also be taught in the form of questions and answers. One of the children asks a question and the other must give the answer. Later the children will of their own accord speak with each other concerning these same subjects. The children who are at the head of their class must receive premiums. They must be encouraged, and when one of them shows good advancement, for their further development they must be praised and encouraged therein.

"Even so in God-like affairs. Verbal questions must be asked and the answers must be given verbally. They must discuss (these affairs) with each other in this manner."

Excerpt from the Notes of Mrs. Sara Herron, taken at Acca in 1900.

Abdul-Baha said: "BAHA'O'LLAH said the children are of two kinds—the mature and the immature. The mature are the children of believers, and the immature of the unbelievers. Some attain to the highest station because they are so well prepared that they can enter the highest station without earthly preparation. When we see a child wise beyond his years, it is a sign of this preparation, so we cannot question the justice of this. All are created in the same station by the Justice of God, but if some of these have become prophets and some teachers, this is from the favors and bounty of God."

From the Notes of Miss E. J. Rosenberg, London, at Haifa, February and March, 1901.

"We must be guided entirely by the intelligence and development of the child, as to how soon we should begin to teach it.

"A woman reaches her maturity at the age of twenty, and must then certainly receive the full teaching.

"Many a child of ten is sufficiently developed and advanced to receive some teaching, and some are ready for it at the age of eight or nine.

"The great thing that is necessary to teach children is to be characterized with the attributes of God, and to be good. Their hearts and minds must be prepared to receive the truth as soon as they are old enough to be taught anything—but children should not be taught facts and details which they may not speak of openly to their fellows and companions.

“But they must on no account allow their children to drink wine or alcoholic drinks. Abdul-Baha spoke of the Druses who never drank wine or smoked, and in consequence of this, many diseases were quite unknown to them.”

Excerpt from Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 16, 1914.

“Think of God, and let thy thought be of God, and let thy brother be trained according to the highest moral standard. In the tenderest years of their youth the pure hearts of boys and girls must be illumined with the light of love of God. Then when they grow up, most astonishing results will be produced, because the maps of their whole lives would be drawn with the hand of the spiritual Educator. A Bahai child must be trained according to the moral precepts of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, he must be taught daily of the love of God: the history of the Movement must be read to him, the love of humanity must be inculcated into every fibre of his being and the universal principles be explained to him in as easy a manner as possible to be devised. Then the power of great faith will take possession of his heart. But if these supreme precautions are not taken in the earliest stages of the child's growth, it will be most difficult to curb later on his growing manifold appetites. For then he will live according to the requirements of the world of nature and uncontrolled self. Once the lower and sensual habits of nature take hold of him, it will be very hard to reform him by any human agencies. Hence children must be brought under the control of the love of God and spiritual influence from their earliest youth. The lower appetites of nature are like kings over men, one must defeat their forces, otherwise he will be defeated by them.”

Excerpt from Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, September 2, 1913.

As though preordained, the subject of his (Abdul-Baha's) informal talk was on education, and the duty of the mothers toward their children, a most appropriate message to go out to the world of motherhood:

“The fathers, and especially the mothers, must always think how they can best educate their children, not how to fondle and embrace them and thus spoil them. By every means at their disposal they must inculcate into their growing bodies, souls, minds and spirits, the principles of sincerity, love, trustfulness, obedience, true democracy, and kindness toward all the races, thus hereafter the world of civilization may flow in one mighty current and the children of the next generation may make secure the foundations of human solidarity and goodwill. From the tenderest childhood the children must be taught by their mothers the love of God and the love of humanity—not the love of the humanity of Asia, or the humanity of Europe, or the humanity of America, but the humanity of humankind.

“There are some mothers who have a strange, inexplicable love for their children. One may call it the inversion of love, or, as we call it in Persia, ‘Bearish love.’ This kind of love does more injury to the child than good. When I was in Acca, during the life of the Blessed Perfection, he intrusted the son of one of the believers to a German carpenter. After a month, his mother went to BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH and lamented and bemoaned, saying: ‘I want my son, because he is unhappy with this carpenter, for he curses his religion.’ BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH told her, ‘Go to Aga (the Master) and act according to whatever he says.' She came to me, and after hearing her side of the story I said to her: 'The Germans never curse any one; they are not accustomed to it.' She went away, and after another month she came again to BAHÁ'O'LLAH with another complaint, that this carpenter had forced her son to carry on his back a load of wheat. Again I told her that if he had done so it was for discipline. I satisfied her, but she was murmuring inwardly. A few months rolled by and she returned with another set of complaints, frankly confessing that she did not want her son to be away from her, that he was the apple of her eye.

"Realizing how selfish her love was for her son, I told her at last that I would not take him away, that he must stay with the carpenter for eight years until his apprenticeship was over. Well, she yielded to the inexorable situation. After eight years of study he left his master, and his mother was very proud of him, everywhere praising his industry because his work was demanded on every hand. In short, the mothers must not think of themselves, but of the progress of their children, because upon the children of today—whether boys or girls—depends the moulding of the civilization of tomorrow."

Excerpt from Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 18, 1914.

"The children must receive divine and material education at the same time, and be protected from temptations and vices. How wonderful will it be if the teachers are faithful, attracted and assured, educated and refined Bahais, well-grounded in the science of pedagogy and familiar with child psychology; thus they may train the children with the fragrances of God. In the scheme of human life the teacher and his system of teaching plays the most important role, carrying with it the heaviest responsibilities and most subtle influence. A teacher is like unto a gardener. Just as a gardener sows the seeds and watches carefully over their sprouting, looks after their growth and progression—so also a teacher must watch over the education of the children and inculcate in their young lives the highest ideals of truth and justice."

Excerpt from Diary Letter of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, November 12, 1913.

Abdul-Baha is discussing the necessity of banishing superstitions and explaining how the apparent "lethargy" in the Mohammedan world is not because the religion of the Arabian prophet was or is false, but it is because the Mohammedans have forgotten the pure democratic principles of the first age of Islam, and have taken hold of spurious ceremonies and false premises, and are spending their time in the study of dead theology and worthless metaphysics. It is written in the Koran: "There is no virtue in this, whether thou mayest turn thy face (at the time of prayer) toward the East or the West; but the virtue lies in this, that thou mayest adorn thyself with righteousness and practise philanthropy." Take the example of the theological students of the University of Al-Azhar. They spend all their lives in that institution with no visible results. When a young man enters a western college he comes out after a few years, either an engineer, or an electrician, architect, physician, or any of the many technical and practical professions. But those students of Azhar waste their wonderful lives and are a heavy burden on the shoulders of the state. This is a crime, an unpardonable crime. Then, turning to a Bahai who has two of his children in a French school, Abdul-Baha said:

"Give to your children a manual profession, something whereby they may be able to support themselves and others. Let polite literature take care of itself. Teach them a technical art or profession."

of all men, and above all, consider the rights of others before your own."

SPECIFIC LAWS.

The spiritual principle in the establishment of the Bahai regulations and economic laws is the exaltation of work. "It is incumbent on every one to engage in some one occupation, such as arts, crafts, trades and the like. This, the occupation, is identical with the worship of God. Waste no time in idleness and indolence, but occupy yourselves with that which will profit yourselves and others beside yourself. The most despised of men before God is he who sits and begs. Every soul who is occupied in an art or trade, this will be accounted an act of worship before God." (BAHA'O'LLAH).

Thus the acquisition of wealth is not a sin, provided it is not accumulated at the expense and deprivation of another, for, "riches earned by personal effort with divine assistance, in various trades, agriculture and the arts, and rightly administered, are justly deserving of praise, forasmuch as if a wise and discerning man acquires them, they become a ready means of benefit to the state." Poverty must be eliminated and the surplus wealth devoted to the establishment of schools and colleges, in the propagation of science and for the public benefit, but man is warned by BAHA'O'LLAH: "Be not engrossed with this world, for with fire we test the gold, and with gold we try the servants."

The prevention of monopoly in the control of wealth is one of the most vital questions of social philosophy and the distribution of the vast fortunes has been theorized upon from many angles. The method presented by BAHA'O'LLAH is both direct and simple. It is based on the distribution of estates into the following seven divisions:

1. Children.
2. Husband or wife.
3. Fathers.
4. Mothers.
5. Brothers.
6. Sisters.
7. Teachers.

If anyone dies without heirs, the House of Justice has the right to the legacy in order to spend it for the good of the commonwealth.

If one dies without any heirs excepting children, two-thirds goes to them and one-third to the House of Justice. If there is no one to inherit the property and there are other relatives such as nephews or nieces, two-thirds goes to them; otherwise the two-thirds will go to the uncles and aunts (fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters) and after them to their sons and daughters; and the other one-third to the House of Justice. If one dies while his father is still alive, and he has children, the children will inherit what was allotted to their father. In the case of children who are under years or incapable of managing their affairs, their legacy should be put into the hands of a trustee or the "House of Partnership" to be invested until their maturity, the trustee receiving part of the acquired profits as his compensation, after deducting the portion for God's work, debts of the deceased if any, and funeral expenses—with honor and deference.

Thus a very clear method is given for preventing of the handing down of vast fortunes in one family from generation to generation, the evils of which are very manifest, and the results of which will be the abolition of monopoly and more equal distribution. Attention may be called to the fact that teachers, always underpaid, are especially provided for in this arrangement.

Closely allied to this question is the problem of the maintenance of the commonwealth, for the House of Justice would not receive sufficient revenue from the inheritance tax alone to carry on the duties and responsibilities of the state. In the reorganization of affairs Abdul-Baha begins with the land. He says: "The question of economics must commence with the farmers and from them proceed to the other classes, inasmuch as the number of farmers is greater than all other classes, many, many times greater. Therefore, it is becoming that the economic problem be solved with the farmer, for the farmer is the first active agent in the body politic. In brief, from among men of every village, a board should be organized and the affairs of that village be under the control of that board. Likewise, a general storehouse should be founded with the appointment of a secretary. At the time of harvest, with the approval of the members of that board, a determined percentage of the entire harvest should be appropriated for the storehouse. This storehouse is to have seven revenues. They are:

1. Tithes.
2. Taxes on animals.
3. Wealth without inheritors.
4. All things found whose owners cannot be discovered.
5. A third of all treasures (money) found in the earth.
6. A third of all mines.
7. Voluntary contributions.

"On the other hand there are seven expenditures:

1. General running expenses of the institution, salaries, etc., and the administration of public safety, including hygiene department.
2. Tithes to the general government.

3. Taxes for animals for the state.
4. Support of orphanages.
5. Support of cripples and incurables.
6. Support of educational institutions.
7. Supplying any deficiencies in the expenses of the poor."

Thus the first revenue is the tithe based upon a man's income. A person having an income, for example, of $500.00 and his necessary expenses being $500.00, he will not be required to pay any tithe. If his expenditures are $500.00 and his income is $1,000.00, then a tenth will be required of him. And so on in an increasing ratio according to the difference between the income and necessary expenditure, for man will have everything that he needs for his welfare and a large surplus besides. On the other hand, a person, owing to illness, poor crops and through no fault of his own, may be unable to earn a sufficient income to meet his necessary expenses for the year, then what he lacks for the necessary maintenance of himself and family will be supplied by the general storehouse. After certain amounts have been set aside for each of these seven expenditures, then any surplus will be transferred to the general treasury of the nation for general expenses.

"When such a system is established each individual member of the body politic will live in the utmost comfort and happiness and the degrees will be preserved. There will be no disturbance of these degrees whatever, for these degrees are the essential needs of the body politic. The body politic is like unto an army. An army needs a commander-in-chief, colonel, captain, lieutenant and private. It is impossible that all of them enjoy the same rank. Preservation of degrees is necessary but each member of that army must live in the utmost comfort and ease. Likewise, a city is in need of a mayor, judge, merchants, bankers, tradesmen and farmers. Undoubtedly these degrees should be preserved, otherwise the public order will be disturbed.”*

Another specific law is the prohibition of slavery. Up to the present time the governments have been engaged with the establishment of political freedom and the liberation of the chattel slave, but now a new and greater problem confronts the world,—industrial emancipation. When in San Francisco in 1912, Abdul-Baha said to the American people: “Between 1860 and 1865 you did a wonderful thing; you knocked the shackles from chattel slavery; but today you must do a much more wonderful thing: you must destroy industrial slavery.”

Under our present system the public is safeguarded through the force of laws based upon retaliation and correction, generally inadequate, but when the divine civilization is established man will be so trained and enlightened that he will shun crimes and evil deeds without any fear of material punishment. He will consider the very crime itself to be the greatest retribution and punishment. Until man is advanced to this condition, inasmuch as crime is due chiefly to ignorance, it will be the duty of the community to execute penal laws through its right of defense and self-protection, not through the spirit of revenge which breeds hatred and animosity. It is therefore incumbent upon man to be a dutiful, law abiding citizen of his country.

“The solution of economic questions, for instance, will not be accomplished by array of labor against capital and capital against labor in strife and conflict, but by the voluntary attitude of sacrifice on both sides. Then a real and lasting justness of conditions will be brought about. If a capitalist is forced to give up a portion of his income and possessions there will be no love in his heart, no permanent benefit in his action. But if it be given in the spirit of God, everything will be accomplished. As it is now the forces of labor strike and the capitalists retaliate. If the latter should voluntarily add to the scale of wages, love is evident and the greatest good results. Briefly: among the Bahais there are no extortionate, mercenary and unjust practices, no rebellious demands, no revolutionary uprisings against existing governments.”

*This is a recognition of the difference in degree of human capacities but the vital point is that to everyone is granted an equal opportunity for the development of his own ability.

The question of wages, which is the cause of nearly all industrial warfare at the present time, is so solved by Abdul-Baha that: “It will not be possible in the future for men to amass great fortunes by the labor of others. The rich will willingly divide. They will come to this gradually, naturally, by their own volition. It will never be accomplished by war and bloodshed. The ruling power or government cannot treat the rich unjustly. To force them to divide their wealth would be unjust. In the future, proportionately about three-quarters of the profits will go to the workmen and one-quarter to the owner.”

The evolution of the body politic cannot take place overnight but just as the new life of the physical world requires the spring winds, the April showers and the heat of the sun in order to grow and develop, so “in like manner, when the sincere purposes and the justice of the sovereign, the knowledge and perfect political efficiency of the ministers of state and the ambition and enthusiasm of the people are all realized at the same time, then indeed, the millennium of progress and human perfection, the consummation of the glory and the prosperity of state and nation will be accomplished.”

Work and worship go hand in hand and the Bahai Temple of worship, known as the Mashrak-el-Azkar, an Arabic expression meaning the “Dawning Point of Mention (of God),” holds an unique position, for it combines both the material and the spiritual. "The arrangement of the Mashrak-el-Azkar is such that it will exert the greatest influence upon the civilized world on account of its many accessories. Among them are the following: School for Orphans, College for Higher Scientific Education, Hospital, Home for the Cripples, and Hospice. When the Mashrak-el-Azkar, with its accessories, is founded in the world, aside from the religious and spiritual influence, it will have a tremendous effect upon civilization." The doors of these institutions will be open to all nations and religions.

Abdul-Baha recognizes the fact that in order to establish a better economic and social condition certain laws and regulations are necessary for the best welfare of humanity, but he goes on to say: "Where thousands are considering these questions, we have more essential questions. The secrets of the whole economic question are divine in nature and are concerned with the world of the heart and spirit. In the Bahai teaching this is most completely explained, and without the consideration of the Bahai teaching it is impossible to realize a better state. All this will come to pass—the Bahais will bring about the better state,—but not in a way that will have anything to do with corruption and sedition; not warfare, but perfect welfare. In short the hearts must be so connected together, love must become so dominant, that the rich shall most willingly, out of the free will of the hearts, help and extend assistance to the poor, and should take a step in the way of these adjustments. . . . You must strive as much as possible to create love in the hearts, in order that love may become shining and radiant. When that love shines in the hearts, even as this (electric) light, then it will permeate other hearts, and when the love of God obtains, everything else will be realized. This is the foundation. Be thoughtful of this. Think of becoming the cause yourselves of the attraction of the souls. Show the people what economics is, what love is, what kindness is, what severance is, what giving is."

"The disease which afflicts the body politic is lack of love and absence of altruism. In the hearts of men no real love is found, and the condition is such that unless their susceptibilities are quickened by some power within them there can be no healing, no agreement among mankind. Love and unity are the needs of the body politic today. Without these there can be no progress or prosperity attained. Therefore the friends of God must adhere to the power which will create this love and unity in the hearts of the sons of men. Science cannot cure the illness of the body politic. Science cannot create amity and fellowship in human hearts. Neither can patriotism or racial prejudice effect a remedy. It must be accomplished solely through the divine bounties and the spiritual bestowals which have descended from God in this Day for that purpose."

In conclusion since the Bahai Movement is essentially spiritual, attention is called to the significant fact that "these precepts were given more than half a century ago—at that moment no one spoke of universal peace—nor of any of these principles, but BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH proclaimed them to all the sovereigns of the world. . . . They are the spirit of this age, the light of this age; they are the well-being of this age." The Bahai Movement has breathed a new spirit into the dead body of the world of humanity and a new universal and divine consciousness has been presented to mankind for investigation.

STAR OF THE WEST

The Divine Art of Living

A COMPILATION BY MRS. MARY M. RABB

EDITORIAL

TOO often we think of religion as a set of creeds and beliefs, as merely a beautiful philosophy, subject-matter for intellectual speculation. And true religion, of course, is a philosophy divinely luminous in its completeness. Yet the philosophy is but a light which points the way to a radiant life. To see the light on the path is of value only when we walk in the path and, climbing its shining steps by acts of will and deeds of love, ascend into the Kingdom.

In his tablets, those glorious outpourings of the essence of the Bahai revelation, Abdul-Baha always speaks of love, of unity, of life abounding. He mentions philosophy only when he is questioned.

The Bahai Movement will sweep through America when it is presented by its followers and teachers as a way of life. And we are effective teachers of spiritual truth only when our own hearts are pure flames of love and our words fall as a consuming and holy fire. But how may we attain to this life which is so pure and radiant that its love shall burn away the darkness and sin which envelope our world? How may we win this exalted station of the true teacher?

With this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST we print the opening chapter of a wonderful compilation by Mrs. Mary M. Rabb of Portland, Oregon, on this the most important topic known to the human soul. Successive chapters of this compilation on "The Divine Art of Living" will appear throughout the year presenting the steps on the path to the exalted station to which every soul is called. Here is the way "to live the life" which "the people of reality" today are seeking. Here is the path revealed by those who are themselves the way, the truth and the life.

CHAPTER ONE

"Welcome to the Kingdom of God"

GRACE and welcome unto you. I wish you not the temporal strength of the passing body, but the eternal strength of the immortal soul. Some (persons) can be compared unto prepared lamps, only waiting the Spirit's breath to illumine them; while others are still unprepared. There is some wood that is inflamed at once; there is a damp, wet wood that has to be warmed before the flame can penetrate the heart. Again there is wood as hard as stone and verily, in vain the heat and flame caress it. Some earth must be tilled before the seed can be planted. Some plants absorb water in the earth and others remain dry. Open your hearts that they may be filled; open your souls that the divine light may shine therein. Strive, strive to receive the Spirit of Truth. Truth awaits your call.

from celebrated doctor to celebrated doctor, but they all fail to cure for the power is with the Divine. So it is with your soul. Your heart is pure and the Spirit can enter therein. Cut yourself from the world. Pray in the Greatest Name, then the breeze of truth, the flood of light will enter your searching soul. There is nothing else to be sought on earth or in the universe.

Yes, remain here. Your room will have no worldly comforts, but will be filled with the love of God. During a terrible storm Christ wandered on the mountain seeking shelter; a den of wild beasts was all he found and that was the beloved Son of God. All the world was his, but no worldly riches.

The Spirit will come to you with increased force, for your being must become as a temple in which the truth of God can dwell.

Welcome to the Kingdom of God. Even if every moment you thanked God a thousand times for the grace of being born in this, the most marvelous century and for the great favor of being allowed to reach the Promised Land, even that would not be sufficient thanks.

Your faith comes like rain; the first drops are far between, but soon it will pour in torrents. Your faith is also like a seed that will bear its fruit. In a tree we judge of its life and vigor by the way it grows; so it is with man. The knowledge of God rises in the heart like the sun; it mounts, mounts, always casting an immortal light.

You must be reborn by the Spirit. A child in the matrix has eyes and ears but only learns their use when it is born. A man cannot comprehend the Spirit before he has put aside earthly things.

All the centuries are the bringing forth of the twentieth. The deepest wish of many great men was to live in the latter day. . . . In past times people esteemed themselves blessed to live in the same time as one of the saints. How much greater is your privilege! To the people then a candle was given, while to you the sun.

The Spirit resembles a rivulet when the earth fills the soul. Put away the terrestrial and the mighty torrent of living water will rush through your freed body.

(Words of Abdul-Baha to Miss.
October 19-14, 1900, on the occasion of her visit to Acca.)

Although the life of the creature is called life, in reality, compared to the life of the children (of the Kingdom) it is not life; on the contrary it is death.

For instance, a mineral substance contains life, but this life compared to the life of the vegetable is death; in like manner the life of the vegetable compared to the life of an animal is death; in like manner the life of human beings compared to the life of the children of the Kingdom is death. As his majesty Christ said: "Let the dead bury their dead, because he who is born of the flesh is flesh and he who is born of the spirit is spirit."

Therefore, it is evident that life (in its true sense) is the life of the spirit and that life is the love of God, divine inspiration, spiritual joys and glad tidings of God. Seek, O servant of God, this life until day and night you remain in limitless joy.

(An early Tablet.)

The life of man will at last end in this world. We must all take out of this life some fruit. The tree of one's existence must bear some fruit. If a tree has no fruit you must cut it down and burn it; it would be useless for other purposes.

Question: "Abdul-Baha, what is the fruit of the human tree?"

"It is the love of God; it is the love of humankind; it is to wish good for all the people of the earth; it is service to humanity; it is truthfulness and honesty; it is virtues and good morals; it is devotion to God; it is the education of souls; such are the fruits of the human tree. Otherwise it is only wood—nothing else.”

(Kinney-Beebe-Thompson Notes of the words of Abdul-Baha, June-July 1909.)

The heart must of necessity be spiritual. A tree must be fruitful; it may be very tall, very verdant, but yield no fruits. The fruits of the tree of the human life are the love of God, magnetic, spiritual susceptibilities, heavenly illumination, the knowledge of God, praiseworthy attributes, good morals and conduct. A person whose tree of life produces such fruits is a Bahai; otherwise he is of the earth earthy, self-occupied, and following the dictates of his own desires, and is man only by name. As his holiness Christ says: “Ye shall know the tree by its fruits.”

If the fruit of the existence of man is not servitude at the threshold of the Almighty I declare by the living, self-subsistent God that life is death, existence is non-existence, non-being is better than being, pleasure is pain, joy is sorrow, immortality is mortality. In this court we must be humble and meek, active and progressive, wide-awake and thoughtful, true and sincere, noble and good, straightforward and zealous. This is the outcome of life! This is the result of ceaseless endeavor! This is the prize to be won! This is the illumination of the world of humanity! This is the eternal life! This is the sublimity of human nature. This is the heavenly glory! This is the radiant crown of the Kingdom of Abha!

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 18, 1914.)

The world is mortal. In one instant it will pass away; but the principle of ease and tranquillity is the soul which is in the eternal world. Real life is the life of the spirit, while the body has to die when its light has come to an end. Therefore, of what importance is it?

(Extract from Tablet to Mrs. Dealey, revealed July 14, 1911.)

Know thou, verily, God hath preferred the insight to the sight; because the sight sees the material things, while the insight apprehends the spiritual. The former witnesses the earthly world, while the latter sees the world of the Kingdom. The former's judgment is temporary, while the latter's vision is everlasting. . . .

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; Vol. 3, p. 604.)

I hope . . . certain souls may arise who may prove radiant lamps to the world of humanity and a merciful spirit to the phenomenal body; that they may be the cause of the purification of souls and the means of the sanctification of hearts;—that they may know this mortal world as fleeting shadow and call the rest and repose, the pleasure and blessing, the wealth and sovereignty of the earth the waves of the sea of imagination; that they may arise in such wise to live by the divine teachings and exhortations of (Baha'o'llah) as to sparkle like the morning star from the horizon of holiness.

It was my aim that after thy return to . . . thou shouldst hoist the ensign of the great guidance, that like the morning star thou shouldst glisten with the light of the great bestowal and that thou shouldst shout so as to awaken them that are asleep and set aglow all who are in lethargy. This is work!

Otherwise the foundation of man is entirely shaky and without immortality. The numbered days of life will come to an end, the bright days will at last become cloudy and at the last breath man, with limitless regrets, will hasten to the other world.

It is my aim that thou mayst advance to such an extent in the perfections in the realm of man, in the divine manifestations and the susceptibilities of the conscience as to become an angel of heaven and a manifestation of the favors of the Merciful.

(Extract from Tablet to an American believer; translated July 17, 1910.)

O my servants! The Ancient Beauty* commands: Hasten to the shadow of immortality, nearness and mercy from the shadow of desire, remoteness and heedlessness. Be ye resigned like unto the earth, so that the fragrant, sacred, multi-colored myrtles of my knowledge may grow in the soil of existence. Be ye ablaze like unto fire, so that ye may consume thick veils and quicken and immortalize the cold and veiled bodies through the heat of divine love. Be ye pure like unto air so that ye may enter the sacred abode of my friendship.

O servants! If ye be informed of the wonders of my generosity and grace which I have deposited in yourselves ye will certainly be cut from all directions and seeking to know your own selves, which is identical with knowing myself, will find yourselves independent of all save me and will see the ocean of my providence and the deeps of my beneficence in yourselves, with your outward and inward eye, as manifest and clear as the sun shining from the name of Abha.† Do not waste this most wonderful, most holy station, through the promptings of fancy and desire and through the falsehoods of superstition and blindness. Ye are like unto a bird which, with all joy and fragrance soars with the utmost security in the cheerful air of the Praised One. Then in the (imaginary) hope of grains it inclines toward the mud and water of the earth and, with all eagerness, besmears itself with dust and mire. Then, when it attempts to reascend it finds itself unable and a captive, forasmuch as wings besmeared with water and clay are not capable of flight. At that time that bird of the exalted heaven finds itself a dweller in the mortal earth!

Now, O servants, do not besmear your wings with the mire of heedlessness and imagination and the earth of animosity and rancor so that ye be deprived and prevented from soaring in the sacred heaven of knowledge.

O servants! If ye are possessed of sight, enter the city of seeing. If ye are the people of hearing, step into the land of hearing. And if ye are the possessors of hearts, choose an abode in the fortress of the assured ones so that in these dark days ye may not be veiled from witnessing the lights of the beauty of Abha. . . .

O servants! Inscribe the exhortations of the Spirit with the pen of resignation and the ink of submission and assurance upon the tablet of your heart and turn in every instant lest ye may neglect a single letter thereof, and advance toward the True One with all exertion, turning away from all else save him. For this is the root of the leaf of command grown upon the divine tree. . . . This world is a show without reality and is a non-existence adorned in the form of existence. Do not attach your hearts thereto. Do not sever yourselves from your Creator and be not of those who are heedless.

Truly I say, the world is like unto a mirage which has the shadow of water. Those who are athirst make abundant efforts in its search but when reaching it remain deprived and portionless. Or, it is like unto the image of a loved one which is destitute of life and soul; when the lover reaches it he finds it of no worth and value and finds no gain save great pain and despondency. . . .

(Words of Baha'o'llah, in a Tablet called Tablet of Ahmad.)

O Son of Dust! All things in the heavens and in the earth have I ordained for thee except the hearts which I have appointed as a place for the descent of the manifestation of my beauty and glory; . . .

(Hidden Words, Persian, verse 27.)

 Asked, "What is true greatness in man?" Abdul-Baha answered:

"His spiritual attributes. No one can destroy his spiritual qualities; they are from God."

(Ten Days in the Light of Acca; p. 13.)

 The station of man is great if he hold to truth and rectitude and keep firm and steadfast in the command.

A real man is seen before the Merciful One like unto the heaven; his sight and hearing are the sun and moon and his luminous and shining qualities are the stars; his station is the highest station and his traces are the educators of the world.

(Kitab-el-Ahd; Baha'o'llah's Words.)

 In the beginning of his life man was in the matrix world. In the world of the matrix he obtained capacity and preparation for this world. The forces and powers necessary for this world he attained there. In this world he needed eyes; he received them, potentially, in the other. He needed ears; therefore he obtained them in the world of the matrix. All the powers he needed in this world he attained potentially in the world of the matrix. In the world of the matrix therefore he was prepared for this world; so that when he came to this world he found that all the necessary forces were ready—all his needs for material sustenance were provided.

Therefore in this world also he must prepare himself and get ready for the life hereafter. That of which he is in need in the world of the Kingdom he must obtain here. Just as he prepared himself by acquiring the forces necessary in this world in the world of the matrix, so likewise it is necessary that all that is needful in the Kingdom, all the forces of the Kingdom—must be acquired in this world.

What is he in need of in the Kingdom after he is transferred from this world to the other world? That world is a world of sanctity; therefore it is necessary that he acquire sanctity in this world. In that world there is need of radiance; therefore radiance must be acquired in this world. In that world there is need of spirituality. In this world he must acquire spirituality. In that world faith and assurance, the knowledge of God, the love of God, are needed. These he must acquire in this world so that after he ascends from this mortal to that immortal world he shall find that all that is needful in that life eternal is ready for him.

It is self-evident that that world is a world of lights; therefore there is need of illumination. That world is a world of love; hence love of God is needed. That world is a world of perfections; virtues of perfection must be acquired. That world is a world of the breaths of the Holy Spirit and in this world must they be acquired. That world is a world of the life eternal. In this world must he acquire it. But how can he? By what means can he acquire these things? How is he to obtain these merciful powers?

First, through the knowledge of God. Second,—through the love of God. Third,—through faith. Fourth,—through philanthropic deeds. Fifth,—through self-sacrifice. Sixth,—through severance from this world. Seventh,—through sanctity and holiness. Unless he obtain these forces, unless he attain to these requirements, surely he will be deprived of the life eternal. But if he attains the knowledge of God, becomes ignited through the fire of the love of God, witnesses the great and mighty signs, becomes the cause of love among mankind and lives in the utmost sanctity and holiness, surely he shall attain to second birth, will

Praise be to God that his holiness Baha'o'llah, has spread before us the heavenly table upon which one finds every kind of food. There is the food of faith and assurance; the sustenance of divine virtues; the bread of the love of God; the meat of the glad-tidings of the kingdom of Abha; the victuals of severance and detachment; the viands of enkindlement and attraction; the nutriment of sanctity and holiness; the dish of attraction with the fragrances of God; the sustenance of the breaths of the Holy Spirit; the food of eternal life; the nourishment of teaching the cause of God and promulgating the religion of God. In short, one finds on this divine table all kinds of spiritual food which constitutes the real Supper of the Lord.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 17, 1914.)

The world and its objects are transitory. Phenomena undergo change and transformation but God and his servants remain unalterable and not subject to transmutation. We must attach our hearts to Him if we desire to be eternally happy.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, April 9, 1914.)

A material man lets himself be worried and harrassed by little things but a spiritual man is always calm and serene under all circumstances.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 10, 1914.)

If a person is confirmed in the accomplishment of the services of the Kingdom, his worldly conditions are of secondary importance. The greatest bestowal that it is possible for a soul to attain in this world is this: that he may spend his life, his forces, his possessions, his body, his heart and his spirit in the path of the service of the Blessed (Glory of God) and that towards the last of his life he may drink the cup of martyrdom. This is indeed the most blessed state, the loftiest pinnacle of perfection!

Is there a greater or more harrowing regret in the world than to spend one's physical energies in the awful road of lust, sinful passions, inordinate desires and the frivolities of the age! No! I declare by God! O how pitiful to watch the last flicker of hope dying out of such a life! Because when the last curtain falls on such a dissipated life he finds to his utter remorse his nerves racked, his resources drained, his fortune wrecked, his hopes unfulfilled, his opportunities lost, his visions unaccomplished, his energies wasted and the light of his spirit extinguished! What were the results of these deeds? What was the sum total of these thoughts? What was the outcome of this sowing of wild oats? Where is the man with his youthful ambitions? In what heap of mud and water did he throw the brilliant gems of his ideals? What has he done with his God-given intelligence? He has indeed lived a fruitless life, surrounded himself with the suggestions of passions and the gratification of selfish appetites. His life is brought to a tragic close, enveloped with regrets, remorse! Verily this is the most evident loss!

But, on the other hand, how glorious is the life of a person when toward the last days of his earthly existence he is able to contemplate with great satisfaction that, praise be to God, through the assistance of the Almighty, he has been fortunate and given his belongings, his life, his spirit, his body and all his faculties in the path of the love of God, accepting all manner of persecutions, revilings and afflictions with serenity of consciousness and standing firm in the Cause till his very last breath. . . .

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 20, 1914.)

While we were living in Bagdad one of the most honorable men in Persia came there. He called on Baha'o'llah and as he used to come and see us often I became attached to him. I grew to love him very much and as he was not a believer I spoke to him about the Cause. I used to tell him:

"My friend, The aim of this life is not the acquirement of wealth, honor and glory, not the display of the animal attributes such as eating, sleeping and chasing worldly pleasures. Such aimless and insipid pursuits do not befit man who is endowed with divine effulgence and radiant longings. The object of this life is the attainment of the spirit, the manifestation of the fear of God, the attainment of the knowledge of God, the acquisition of the love of God, the attaining the good pleasure of the Lord of mankind. If man characterizes himself with these God-like attributes he will become freed from all ties of this mortal world, the light of God will shine in his heart, he will hear the voice of the heavenly angels, he will be surrounded by the confirmations of the Holy Spirit, he will become an irradiating center of the perfect names and qualities of the Merciful and a light through which the darkness of the world of humanity is dispelled!"

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 19, 1914.)

When a man is thirsty he drinks water. When he is hungry he eats food. But if a man be not thirsty, water gives him no pleasure and if his hunger be already satisfied, food is distasteful to him.

This is not so with spiritual enjoyments. Spiritual enjoyments bring always joy. The love of God brings endless happiness. These are joys in themselves and not alleviations. The life of animals is more simple than that of man. Animals have all their needs supplied for them. All the grasses of the meadows are free to them. The birds build their nests in the branching trees and the palaces of kings are not so beautiful. If earthly needs are all then the animals are better supplied than man. But man has another food, the heavenly manna of the knowledge of God. All the divine prophets and Manifestations appeared in the world that this heavenly manna might be given to man. This is the food which fosters spiritual growth and strength and causes pure illumination in the souls of men. They become filled with the breaths of the Holy Spirit. They increase in the knowledge of God and in those virtues which belong to the world of humanity. They attain to the very image and likeness of God.

What greater joy is there than this? When they invoke God's favor at the divine threshold their minds become open, they enter into spiritual pleasures and make discoveries. By this they enjoy ecstasies of the Spirit and see the world illumined. They are filled with insight. They become fully attuned to the bounties of God and see them face to face, acquiring in themselves the virtues of the Manifestations.* Thus it is that man shall attain to the utmost hopes of the holy ones and the saints.

If man could not attain to this illumination and these bounties the mineral world would be better than he for it is not deficient in anything. When man is deprived of the illumination of God he feels a lack and a shortcoming on his part.

* i. e. great, world prophets. "Manifestation" when spelled with a capital "M" signifies in these pages a divinely perfect master who manifests the attributes of God as a pure polished mirror reflects the sun.

O thou Star of the West!

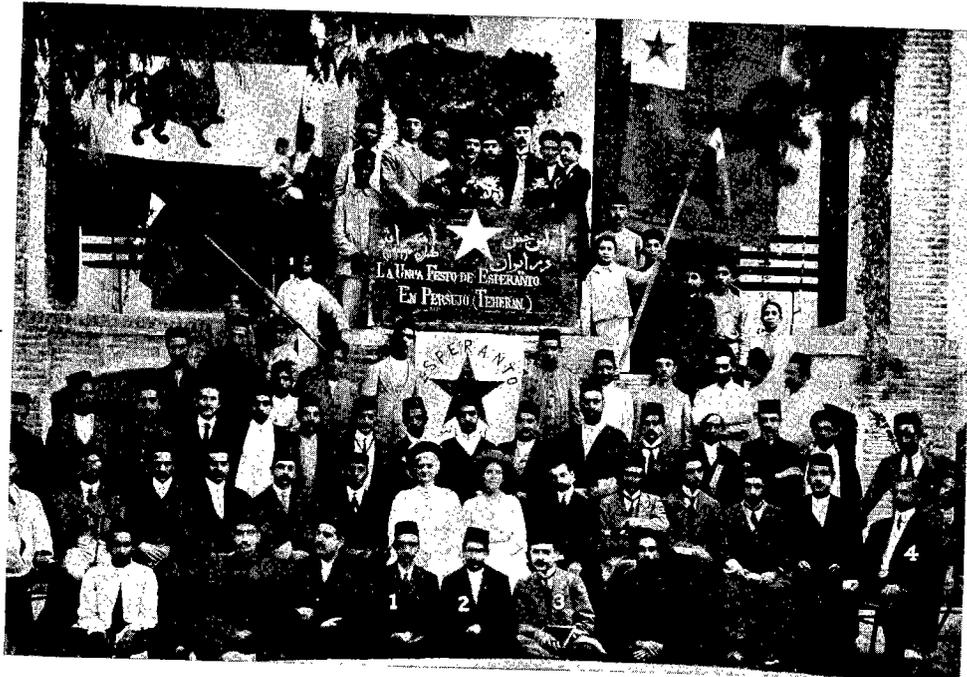

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Esperanto class in Teheran, Persia

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

I am loaning you the photograph of the Esperanto class in Teheran, Persia, for reproduction. It was sent me by Miss Stewart. She writes concerning it:

“No. 1 is Bahman Mirza, a prince; No. 2, Mohammed Yazdi, a bright boy who has just gone to Kazvin to teach school there; No. 3 is Manichair Khan.

These three have given Esperanto its start here. No. 4, sitting in a chair, is a Jew, whose name is Solem. He was in Paris at the same time that Abdul-Baha was there. He is the teacher of the Esperanto class.”

The Teaching Campaign

“Forward! Forward! my beloved soldiers”

(Extract from letter by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.)

While at Stuttgart, Germany, Abdul-Baha was one day looking out of his hotel window, and, observing a regiment of soldiers passing by in great array, he said:

“They are ready to fight for their fatherland. How barbarous it seems to send men who do not even know each other to the battlefield in order to shoot each other down. The Bahai Grand Army consists of the invisible angels of the Supreme Concourse. Our swords are the words of love and life. Our armaments are the invisible armaments of Heaven. We are fighting against the forces of darkness. O my soldiers, my beloved soldiers! Forward! Forward! Have no fear of defeat; do not have failing hearts. Our supreme commander is Baha’o’llah. From the heights of glory he is directing this dramatic engagement. He commands us! Rush forward! Rush forward! Show the strength of your arms. Ye shall scatter the forces of ignorance. Your war confers life; their war brings death. Your war is the cause of the illumination of all mankind. Your war means victory upon victory. Their war is defeat upon defeat. Their war is the origin of destruction. There are no dangers before you. Push forward! Fire! Fire! Attack the enemy. Your efforts should be crowned with the diadem of eternal peace and brotherhood.

News from the “soldiers” at the front

“ARISE! Shine for the Light has come” with unconquerable splendor to the American world. The hour has struck; the heavenly bell has rung. The most blessed year is at hand. A divine charter is spread before us in the form of five Tablets to the East, the West, the North, the South. This charter is given to us by the most glorious Servant of the world. Nothing more is needed. The time has arrived when the soldiers of light must go forth “and shine with such brilliancy as to illumine (the) entire continent.”

Those who arise to serve are surrounded with the heavenly hosts of confirmation. At first this was a promise; now it is a verified reality. From all parts of the country come radiant glad tidings of the “majestic onward march of the Cause of God.”

Mrs. Brittingham, Mr. Remy, Mr. Latimer, Mrs. Killius, Mr. Dunn, Mrs. Ralston, Mrs. Gillen and many others have entered the vast expanses of the Western States and are planting the pure seeds of the Kingdom in the prairie and the mountain regions of the untilled West. Mrs. Ford, Mr. William H. Randall, Mrs. Greenleaf, Dr. Bagdadi, Mrs. Brush, Mrs. Parmerton, Mrs. True and others are proclaiming the new era and its glory in the states of the Central West. Mrs. Ford has spoken to large gatherings in Chicago, St. Paul, and Minneapolis. Mr. Randall has addressed splendid gatherings in St. Louis where hundreds were attracted and has started us thinking of Abdul-Baha's predictions for that city. To a believer in St. Louis, Abdul-Baha wrote a few years ago:

"Thy letter was received. Thou hast written that in these days the establishment of the meeting has become impossible in that city. Be thou not unhappy. A day shall come when innumerable meetings in the utmost grandeur shall be established in that city. The cause of God shall be raised and the breath of the Holy Spirit shall impart eternal life. Be thou not sad. This indifference is temporary. Ere long the fires of the love of God shall raise a flame in that city and the splendors of the sun of truth shall cast intense rays and the melody of the Kingdom shall be heard."

Mrs. May Maxwell and Mrs. Ober are on their way to the far Northeast to sow the seeds in the provinces of Canada. New centers have appeared over night as it were in Springfield, Massachusetts and in New Haven and Hartford, Connecticut. They were organized after inspiring peace meetings. Dr. Strong, Dr. Shook, Mrs. Finch and Mrs. Hannen have been doing great service in these cities.

The Bahais about Boston have trebled in numbers in the last six months. Group meetings are held throughout the suburbs.

Wonderful responses to the divine call have come also from the South. "Mother" Beecher has just gone into Virginia and Kentucky. For the past two months Rev. Mr. Tate and Mr. Louis Gregory have been scattering the heavenly seeds broadcast in the vast regions from the Atlantic Ocean to Texas. Mr. Tate has spoken to 15,000 and Mr. Gregory to 15,000 people this autumn. Mr. Gregory writes a friend from Tulsa, Oklahoma:

Tulsa, Oklahoma, Nov. 25, 1916.

Dear Bahai brother:

I do not now recall whether or not I told you a dream I had during the days of preparation for this journey. Abdul-Baha was standing before an audience in the attitude of teaching. By his direction I was serving as a waiter, passing to the people bread from a tray. When the wafers reached the people, they were transformed into tablets and upon them they were to indicate how many of them accepted the teachings and became Bahais. An overwhelming number of those who received the tablets thus signified by writing their acceptance. I awoke feeling very happy.

By the way the doors are opened to deliver the Message and the happiness manifested among those who give ear, this dream becomes a glorious reality.

I think I wrote you last from New Orleans. Since then the following points have been visited: Galveston, Prairie View, Austin, Waco, Corsicana, Dallas, Texas, and Langston, Oklahoma. At Langston, after hearing the Message, the school sang, "Arise! Shine for the Light has come and the Glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!" Several thousand have heard the glad tidings, in these centers, without a word of opposition. Truly great are the divine confirmations from the Kingdom of El-Abha! The might of the Covenant removes all obstacles!

Tonight there is an audience of five hundred in a Methodist church. The pastor has given the right of way. The Bahai address will take the place of the sermon.

Leave for Arkansas and Northern Mississippi tomorrow. Am very happy over the results.

Praise be to God and Bahai greeting to the friends! May you ever be supremely happy!

In His Name, I have the honor to be

Your servant,

Louis G. Gregory.

Other News Notes

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 30, 1916.

Indianapolis will get to be an important center if you Chicago people take it into your hand. I talked on the Cause to eighteen hundred people at the Shortridge High School, and to hundreds at the church and other meetings, all of whom appreciate the great Message, and are hungry for further teaching and speakers. I dwelt at length upon the Mashrak-el-Azkar, and in time this will become a fruitful field. . . .

I am having nightly meetings, with some new faces nearly always. Two leading Theosophists present last night were greatly attracted. Large advertised meeting for Sunday afternoon—subject, "Universal Peace." George (Latimer) and Mason (Remey) to arrive today, and we will all address the meeting.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 25, 1916.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

A line to cheer those striving to spread the knowledge of God and His Covenant. During the recent journey through fourteen Southern states the hearts were found most receptive. The principles of unity and the Great Message were presented in churches, schools, colleges, Y. M. C. A., and social gatherings to a multitude of people. So slight was the opposition, even in the ranks of the clergy, as to be not worthy of mention. The souls of people were rejoiced, and their spirits exhilarated by the glad tidings. In one meeting, held at Memphis, Tenn., over fifty persons, all in sight save one, after hearing the message and proofs, arose and said the Greatest Name. Without exception, souls were found ready in cities where the message was given. The strongholds of orthodoxy were taken by the fire of divine love. Success was attained through divine confirmations.

The time has come to declare the message from the housetops. Yet with wisdom withhold. The hearts are hungry for the heavenly manna. Let us forget human limitations in the pursuit of divine ideals. The call of God is, work, speak, write, start assemblies, use all proper means of bringing life to the dead body of humanity. The veils are disappearing. The following tablet* shows what Abdul-Baha expects of us:

O ye spiritual friends of Abdul-Baha!

How long are ye silent and speechless? Although ye are speaking, yet in this age the speech of the believers of God must be the soul entrancing melody of the Kingdom of Abha and the harmony of the Supreme Concurrence!

Therefore Abdul-Baha is not satisfied with a meek voice and depressing lamentation! He seeks the passionate tumult and joyous clamor and he roars and cries at the top of his voice so that the realities of things may stir into movement and action and the Beloved of Bounty unveil her countenance in the world of creation!

Those friends must, like unto the stars in heaven, shine and gleam in the horizon of Truth with the Light of Guidance so that the realities of the existent beings and the spirit of humankind may find joy and happiness!

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

The Convention of the Mashrak-el-Azkar

Haifa, Syria, October 12, 1916.

Mr. Alfred Lunt, Boston, Mass.

My dear brother in the Cause:

The heavenly beacon of Truth is shining from the horizon of the Supreme Concourse, irradiating to all directions and dispelling the darkness of doubts and ignorance but the majority of mankind are held fast in the grim claws of a sound sleep. In these days of wars and battles many rays of hope and cheer have emanated from the sun of the Covenant. One of these shining rays has appeared in the form of a tablet in your name, the translation of which is the following:

To his honor, Mr. Alfred Lunt—Upon him be greeting and praise!

O thou my friend of the Kingdom!

Praise be to God, that the city of Boston is stirred into cheerfulness and the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the utmost firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament are engaged in the diffusion of the fragrances of God, that the divine favors and bestowals are continually descending upon the assembly of that city, for they have attained to capacity, and capacity like unto a magnet attracts the heavenly graces unto men. Ever do I supplicate at the threshold of the Lord of Hosts and beg for the friends infinite confirmations. It is my hope that supplications toward the Kingdom of God may be answered.

According to what is heard the convention of Mashrak-el-Azkar was going to be held in Boston. The believers of Boston must consider this as one of the greatest divine bounties and strive with all their strength so that all the delegates coming to the convention from the different cities of America may become attracted, thankful and grateful and spend a few days with the utmost joy and happiness; thus the convention in a behooving manner may become assisted in the promotion of the teachings of God, the hearts may become like unto the clear mirrors, the rays of the Sun of Reality shine therein, the melody of thanksgiving and glorification to the Lord of Hosts may ascend to the Supreme Concourse, the sleepy ones become awakened and the dead ones alive. Convey to each and all the friends longing greeting on my behalf.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

In the course of this year we have received few letters from the American friends although I suppose they have written to us regularly. It is our misfortune that we should not receive their messages of love and affection. Abdul-Baha's health has been more than well, especially after our trip to Tiberias. The medicinal value of the baths there has been known for more than 2000 years and people from all parts of the country go there with their nervous ailments to be cured. The weather also is very dry. Many of us slept in the open air under the glorious heaven studded with luminous stars. The cool western breeze wafting all night lulled the sleeper into sound and refreshing sleep. Only we are so very sorry that the gate of the sacred land is closed before the face of all the lovers of truth but we pray and hope that ere long the obstacles will be removed and free communications established.

Give, please, my love to all the believers,

Your faithful brother,

Ahmad.

Letter from England

Manchester, England,
December 22, 1916.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

Dear friends: I am enclosing a cheque for two pounds and five shillings which I want you to separate into two parts. One part, twelve shillings and six pence to go towards sending copies of the STAR OF THE WEST for two years to my sister, and one pound and seven shillings to go to the Mashrak-el-Azkar fund from the Manchester friends. The remainder to go to the STAR OF THE WEST to help against its expenses. I know you will do these two things for me, if at all possible.

I know not where I shall be sent after New Year's day (January 1st), for I am a conscript and under military law, and the war is, perhaps, not nearly over. But I am a follower of Abdul-Baha and a true believer in God, and meet the future with resignation and peace of heart, for with all my faults and mistakes, I have come nearer and nearer the love of God and the radiance of Abdul-Baha. God be praised! I shall hope to be able to do good wherever I get to.

God bless you all.

Ever sincerely,

Edward Theodore Hall.

The Divine Art of Living—Chapter One

God created in us a divine holy spirit,—the human spirit with its intellectual powers which are above the powers of nature. By this he enjoys the ecstasies of the spirit and sees the world illumined. The tree and the stone have not this power; they have no mind or soul; therefore they are excused. We are not excused. This power gives man effectual control over nature. He is enabled to discover reality and bring invisible things into the courts of the visible. Thus he is enabled to render effective the will of God and give it material station. This is what is meant by his holiness Baha'o'llah when he said, "Verily we have created thee rich, why have ye made yourselves poor?" And Jesus Christ, when he said, "The Father is in me and I in you." It was this power which through Baha'o'llah said, "Noble have I created you, why do ye degrade yourselves?" This power distinguishes you above all other creatures, why do you devote it only to your material conditions? This is that which should be used for the acquisition and manifestation of the bounties of God, that ye may establish the kingdom of God among men and attain to happiness in both worlds, the visible and the invisible.

(Address given by Abdul-Baha, at Green Acre, August 20, 1912.)

Asked, "How could a man who does not know God feel it a punishment to be without that knowledge?" Abdul-Baha answered:

"No man can be happy without God, though he may not know why he is miserable."

(Extract from Notes of Aline Shane Devin, October, 1900.)

The soul of man must be happy, no matter where he is. One must attain to that condition of inward beatitude and peace, then outward circumstances will not alter his spiritual calmness and joyousness. No one can imagine a worse place than the barracks of Acca.* The climate was bad, the water was no better. The surroundings were filthy and dirty, the treatment of the officials was unbearable and we were looked upon as the enemies of religion and corruptors of morals. The government had given an order that during our stay in Acca no one must talk with us and we must not talk with each other. Having arrived in Acca they found there were not enough rooms in the barracks to imprison us separately so they put us all in two rooms with no furniture at all. The court of the barrack had a most gloomy aspect. There were three or four fig trees over the branches of which several ominous owls screeched all night. Every one got sick and there were neither provisions nor medicine. At the entrance of the barrack there was an undertaker's room. It was a horrible room. Yet I lived there two years with the utmost happiness. Up to that period I had not had time to read the Koran from first to last but then I had ample time and used to read this holy book with fervor and enthusiasm. Going over the incidents and events of the lives of former prophets and finding how parallel they were with that of Baha'o'llah, I was consoled and encouraged. I would read for instance the following verse: "How thoughtless are the people! Whenever a prophet is sent to them they either ridicule him or persecute him." And then I would read this verse, "Verily, our host is victorious over them."

*The prison in Palestine to which Baha'o'llah and his family and some other Bahais were sent in 1868.

I was very happy all the time because I was a free man. Shut off in that room my spirit traveled throughout the immensity of space. At night I went on the roof and communed with the countless stars. What a divine feast! What a heavenly procession! What a spiritual freedom! What beatific bliss! What celestial sovereignty!

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 3, 1913.)

God has given man a heart and the heart must have some attachment. We have proved that nothing is completely worthy of our heart's devotion save reality, for all else is destined to perish. Therefore the heart is never at rest and never finds real joy and happiness until it attaches itself to the eternal. How foolish the bird that builds its nest in a tree that may perish when it could build its nest in an ever-verdant garden of paradise!

Man must attach himself to an infinite reality so that his glory, his joy and his progress may be infinite. Only the spirit is real; everything else is as shadow. All bodies are disintegrated in the end; only reality subsists. All physical perfections come to an end; but the divine virtues are infinite. How many kings have flourished in luxury and in a brief moment all has disappeared! Their glory and their honor are forgotten. Where are the sovereigns now? But those who have been servants of the divine beauty are never forgotten. The result of their works is everywhere visible. What king is there of two thousand years ago whose kingdom has lived in the hearts? But those disciples who were devoted to God, poor people who had neither fortune nor position, are today trees bearing fruit. Their banner is raised higher every day.

The world needs more happiness and illumination. The star of happiness is in every heart; we must remove the clouds so that it may twinkle radiantly. Happiness is an internal condition. When it is once established man will ascend to the supreme heights of bliss. A truly happy man will not be subject to the shifting eventualities of time. Like unto an eternal king he will sit upon the throne of fixed realities. He will be impervious to outward, changing circumstances and through his deeds and actions he will impart happiness to others.

A Bahai must be happy for the blessings of God are bestowed upon him.

Know thou that there are two kinds of happiness—spiritual and material.

As to material happiness, it never exists; nay, it is but imagination, an image reflected in mirrors, a specter and shadow. Consider the nature of material happiness. It is something, which but slightly removes one's afflictions; yet the people imagine it to be joy, delight, exultation and blessing. All the material blessings, including food, drink, etc., tend only to allay thirst, hunger and fatigue. They bestow no delight on the mind nor pleasure on the soul; nay, they furnish only the bodily wants. So this kind of happiness has no real existence.

As to spiritual happiness, this is the true basis of the life of man because life is created for happiness, not for sorrow; for pleasure, not for grief. Happiness is life; sorrow is death. Spiritual happiness is life eternal. This is a light which is not followed by darkness. This is an honor which is not followed by shame. This is a life that is not followed by death. This is an existence that is not followed by annihilation. This great blessing and precious gift is obtained by man only through the guidance of God.

Spiritual happiness is light, while sorrow is darkness.

This happiness is glad-tidings, while sorrow is disappointment.

This happiness is the Kingdom while sorrow is the earthly world.

This happiness is life, while sorrow is non-existence.

This happiness is the fundamental basis from which man is created, worlds are originated, the contingent beings have existence and the world of God appears like unto the appearance of the sun at mid-day.

This happiness is but the love of God.

This happiness is but the eternal might the brilliant traces of which are shining forth unto the temples of unity.

Were it not for this happiness the world of existence would not have been created.

(Extract from an early Tablet to a Bahai in Paris.)

Thy letter was received, and its perusal imparted happiness impossible to describe. It was an indication of the loftiness of thy nature, the strength of thy effort and the purity of thy intentions. Abdul-Baha's happiness is caused by such matters. If the material luxuries of the whole earth were available to Abdul-Baha he would not think for one moment that there was such a thing as comfort and luxury in the world. But when a soul-perfuming fragrance is wafted from the rose-garden of the hearts of the friends to the nostrils of Abdul-Baha, such joy is realized that involuntarily I render thanksgiving unto the Blessed Perfection who has trained such servants.

O my brother, when a seeker intends to turn the step of search and journeying into the path of the knowledge of the King of Pre-existence, he must first cleanse and purify the heart—which is the place of the appearance and emanation of the splendor of the hidden mysteries of divinity—and he must cleanse and refine his breast—which is the throne for the accession and establishment of the love of the eternal Beloved—from all gloomy dusts of acquired learnings and from the allusions of satanic appearances. He must likewise sanctify his heart from attachment to water and clay—that is, from all phantasmal forms and spectral images—in such manner that no trace of love or hatred may remain in the heart, lest that love may cause him to incline toward a direction, without guide, or that hatred prevent him from turning in another direction, just as in this day most are bereft of the immortal Face and of the threshold of meanings because of these two tendencies and are grazing shepherdless in the deserts of error and oblivion. He should at all times trust in God and turn away from the creatures; be severed and detached from the world of dust and united with the Lord of Lords; not preferring his own self before any one but cleansing the tablet of his heart from pride and vain-glory; attaching the heart to patience and self-restraint; observing silence and avoiding useless speech; for the tongue is a smouldering fire and loquacity is a deadly poison. Material fire devours bodies, but the fire of the tongue consumes souls and minds. The effect of the former vanishes in an hour but the latter continues for a century.

He should consider backbiting as error and never step into that court, for backbiting extinguishes the brilliant light of the heart and numbs the life of the soul. He should be content with little and free from avarice; profiting by the companionship of the severed ones and regarding seclusion from haughty and worldly people as a benefit. At dawn he should be engaged in commemorations, seeking for that Beloved One with the utmost earnestness and power; consuming heedlessness with the fire of love and praise; passing over all else save God with the swiftness of lightning; bestowing a portion upon the destitute and not refusing benevolence and favor to the unfortunate. He should show kindness to the animals; how much more to mankind, (especially) to the people of the Beyan; refusing not his life for the Beloved and turning not away from the True One when approached by the creatures. He should not wish for others what he doth not wish for himself nor say that which he will not fulfill; keeping aloof from evildoers with all determination and asking the forgiveness of God in their behalf; condoning the sinners and despising them not for the end is not known. Many a sinner who is favored with the essence of faith at the time of death drinks the wine of immortality and hastens to the Supreme Concourse; while many a believing and obedient one is estranged at the time of the soul's departure and dwells in the lowest abyss of fire. In a word the traveler and seeker should consider all else save God mortal and account all but the Adored One as nothing.

These conditions form the attributes of the lofty ones and nature of the spiritual ones. This hath already been mentioned concerning the requirements of the striver and the conduct of travelers in the highways of positive knowledge. When these conditions are realized in a sincere seeker and an unrestrained traveler then the term "striver" becomes true concerning him. When he is confirmed in the performance of "those who strive in us," he will surely enjoy the glad tidings of "We will direct them into our ways."

When the lamp of search, effort, longing, fervor, love, rapture, attraction and devotion is enkindled in the heart and the breeze of love blows forth from the direction of Unity the darkness of error, doubt and uncertainty will be dispelled and the lights of knowledge and assurance will encompass all the pillars of existence. Then the ideal herald will dawn as the true morn from the divine city with spiritual glad tidings and awaken the heart, soul and spirit from the sleep of negligence with the trumpet of knowledge. Then the favors and confirmations of the eternal Holy Spirit will impart such a new life that one will find himself the possessor of a new eye, a new ear, a new heart and a new mind and will direct his attention to the clear, universal signs and to the hidden individual secrets.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened; that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BABA'O'LLAH.

Recent Tablets from Abdul-Baha

"Should Abdul-Baha soar from this mortal prison to the immortal rose-garden, none of you must be disturbed"

Haifa, Syria, Oct. 9, 1916.

Mrs. Georgia Ralston,
New York City.

My dear sister in the Cause of God:

A few months ago I wrote you a letter which I hope you have received by this time and its contents have become known to you.

Now, after spending nearly forty days with Abdul-Baha in Tiberias, we returned last week to Haifa, finding the friends in good health and everything going along smoothly.

In the outside world there are many changes daily, many new ideals interplaying their forces, many important problems to occupy one's mind and thought, but here the page of our lives is blank; one day succeeds the other quiet, peaceful. Our life in this corner of the world is the life of the valley and the lowland—not the life of the highland and the mountain where the strong winds are blowing from all directions, the whirlwinds requiring iron constitutions and strong muscles.

It gives me great pleasure to give you here the translation of Abdul-Baha's tablet to you:

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Georgia Ralston.

O thou spiritual daughter of the Kingdom!

The letter that thou hast written to Mirza Ahmad Sohrab was perused. It imparted exceeding joy, joy to the heart, for it contained very good news, that, praise be to God, the friends of God, notwithstanding the interruption of the means of correspondence, are in the state of the utmost joy and fragrance. This must indeed be the condition of those souls who have entered the Kingdom. They must not be discouraged by any obstacles, nay, rather, they must, day by day, increase their attraction and enkindlement, for confirmations are descending upon them from the heavenly Spirit. You must be firm and steadfast to such a degree that not only the interruption of the means of communication, but should Abdul-Baha hasten from this world to another world and soar from this mortal prison to the immortal rose-garden, none of you must be shaken or disturbed; nay, rather, moment after moment the strength of heart be augmented and firmness and steadfastness be increased. For when the lamp of the love of God is ignited in the heart, its flame must become purer and whiter day by day—thus from head to foot he may become a torch of flaming fire. When his holiness the Bab and his holiness Baha'o'llah ascended to the Supreme Concourse, the intensity of the fire of the service of the friends of God became an hundred fold and in the assemblages of humanity they shone out with the utmost sanctity and purity. I hope you will likewise attain to such a station. Convey longing greetings, on my behalf, to each and all the friends. Should we enjoy life after this war, we shall correspond with all the believers.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

We hope and pray that this sad and dreadful war will soon come to an end and the doors of life and a new order of mutual relations appear. Please give my sincere greetings to all.

Ever sincerely yours,

Ahmad.

Haifa, Syria, October 11, 1916.

Miss A. Boylan,
New York City.

My dear Bahai sister:

A tablet has been revealed by Abdul-Baha in your name, the translation of which is as follows:

To the maid-servant of God, Miss A. Boylan—Upon her be greeting and praise!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Although it is a long time that I have not written a letter to that steadfast one in the Testament, still thou art ever before the sight and never forgotten. Now and then letters are being received from those friends that, praise be to God, they are engaged in service and are holding in their hands the candle of guidance, dispelling the darkness of superstitions and doubts. Convey to the dear daughter, Mrs. Krug, my respectful greeting. Some time ago I wrote her a brief note. It is hoped that her illumined meeting is still continued and the maid-servants of the Merciful gather in that assembly and are occupied in the commemoration of His Highness, the Almighty, are engaged in the establishment of unity and concord. Those days that meetings were held in her home and I used to present myself there and talk with the friends of God shall never be forgotten.

Upon thee and upon her be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Forty days I had the privilege to spend with Abdul-Baha in Tiberias. I wish there was space to relate for your benefit at least a little of our holy and spiritual experiences, but this pleasure must be given up for the present. Enough to say that I had a most wonderful time and now that we have returned, Abdul-Baha's health is quite improved. This was our second trip to Tiberias; you have the description of the first one and you shall have the second one, only this time there was an added interest to our journey because instead of traveling by railroad we drove in carriage, stopped two nights in Nazareth and saw that blessed and holy town. All along that heavenly journey Abdul-Baha spoke and I have faithfully treasured his ethereal words of love and peace. Please convey my faithful greeting to the friends and tell them their thoughts and prayers are much appreciated. Our only joy in these days is to think about their faith and services.

Ever your sincere brother,

Ahmad.

Haifa, Syria, October 12, 1916.

Dr. Pauline Barton-Peeke,
Cleveland, Ohio.

My dear sister in the Cause of God:

Some time ago your kind and spiritual letter was received and its inspiring contents read with great pleasure and happiness. Abdul-Baha was most glad to know that the friends in Cleveland are enkindled with the fire of the love of God and firm in the Covenant of the Merciful. Abdul-Baha hopes that your home may ever be the nest for the birds of sanctity, that from it, glorious songs of praise may be raised to the Supreme Kingdom, that the friends of God may become the guides of erring humanity, and that their lives and deeds may bear eloquent testimonies to their faith and knowledge. He dictated the following tablet:

To the maid-servant of God, Doctor Pauline Barton-Peeke.—Upon her be greetings and praise!

O thou the inheritor of the great, respected Mrs. Peeke!

Although that beloved maid-servant of God ascended from this mortal world to the world of immortality, praise be to God, she left thee behind as a token of herself. All the dwellers of the Kingdom and myself are pleased with thy services to the Kingdom of God. Truly I say the believers of God and thyself are displaying every effort in the promotion of the teachings of God in Cleveland. The evidence demonstrating this fact is that you have not forgotten us, nay rather with the utmost exertion and endeavor you are engaged in the service of Truth. Thank ye God that ye are confirmed therein. Ere long ye shall observe most important results and ye will behold the doors of the everlasting glory open before your faces. I am ever expecting to receive good news from you and the Cleveland believers, and in your behalf I supplicate and entreat toward the Kingdom of God, that every one of you may become ignited with the fire of the love of God and bestow the light of guidance upon that region and continent.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

Abdul-Baha's health is quite well. We stayed for about two months in Tiberias and the dry weather imparted to him invigoration. Now again he is living with his blessed family waiting patiently and quietly for the end of this world-wide war and praying for the protection of the friends. His thanks and prayers are for them.

Ever your faithful brother,

Ahmad.

Haifa, Syria, July 11th, 1916.

To Mr. and Mrs. Harlan F. Ober.

O ye two firm ones in the Covenant!

Although we are living in the holy land and you are dwelling in the United States, yet the spiritual relations and the communication of the hearts are firm and steadfast because the unity of the Divine Essence has bonded us together. In this material world we are cemented together and, God willing, in the Universe of God, the world of the Kingdom, we will be the associates and intimates of each other. Truly I say Mr. Ober rendered a great service to the Kingdom of God and undertook a long and arduous trip to India, and during our stay in America, Mrs. Ober served with heart and soul. Both of them are encircled with the Divine Favors and are firm and steadfast in the lordly Covenant.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Original received by Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, Washington, D. C., September 25, 1916.)

To Mr. Fred Mortensen, Minneapolis, Minn.—Upon him be Baha'o'llah-el-Abha.

O thou illumined youth!

Thy letter was received. Its perusal produced the utmost joy; for its contents indicated faith and its significances were proofs of firmness in the Covenant. That trip of thine from Minneapolis to Green Acre will never be forgotten.* Its mention will be recorded eternally in books and works of history. Therefore, be thou happy that, praise be to God, thou hast an illumined heart, a living spirit and art vivified with a merciful breath. Convey my greeting, longing and respect to the Editor of Labor Review and say: "This paper of yours in the future ages will become superior to all the newspapers of the world, because you have published in its columns the proclamation of the kingdom of Abha. I hope thou wilt become assisted to promote the teachings of Baha'o'llah. Then thou wilt observe that this paper has become a luminous star and the cause of the illumination of the hearts of humanity."

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

"We are ourselves the means of our degradation and exaltation"

Extract from the diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 23, 1914

A YOUNG man by the name of Mirza Lotfullah, who has been here (Haifa) for a month, was about to leave this afternoon for Aleppo, so Abdul-Baha addressed him, saying:

"Now that thou hast decided to live in Aleppo, thou must act, speak and conduct thyself with such holiness, sanctity, purity and chastity as to attract to the Cause everyone who comes in contact with thee, that everyone may testify that here lives in our midst an upright and virtuous man, that he has turned his face toward God, that he is spiritual, celestial and divine. A person through his own actions and deeds makes himself loved or disliked by the people; or through his own unselfish conduct and behavior, refined morality and selfless intention, trustworthiness and rectitude he suffers himself to become favored and beloved at the threshold of God.

There is a young man of Jewish origin in the college of Beirut by the name of Mirza Habbibollah Khodabaksh, who has fulfilled these requirements. Formerly he was not known, but now everyone knows him through his sanctity, purity of life, sincerity of aim and the beauty of his holiness, and he is favored and near the court of the Almighty, and loved and respected by all. From whomsoever you inquire of him the utmost satisfaction and pleasure is expressed concerning him.

Therefore, it is now proven that we are ourselves the means of our degradation and exaltation; that people are attracted to us or repelled by us according to the attributes and deeds emanating from us. In short, I hope that thou mayst live in such wise in Aleppo that all the inhabitants may exclaim: "This man is not a Bahai in a nominal way, but in a real manner; he is a Bahai in deed and not in words alone." For this reason his holiness Baha'o'llah hath said: 'My sorrow is not occasioned by my enemies, but by those souls who attribute themselves to me but whose deeds and actions are conducive to the degradation of the Cause.'"

While Abdul-Baha was walking in the rose-garden he passed by Haji Mullah Abou Taleb, the very old man with stooped shoulders and long beard. He looked at him, then at others, and smiled.

"Haji Mullah Abou Taleb is my friend," he said. "He looked just as old forty years ago when he came to this blessed spot for the first time. Now he has come never to leave. Are you well and happy? How can you descend and ascend the mountain every day?"

Then he came very near to him and looked at his thin and probably soiled overcoat.

"Hast thou not received thy new overcoat? I have brought one for thee. I will send it up for thee. Man must keep his clothes always clean and spotless."

He answered: "I am not particular about my outward clothes, but the robe of the virtue of God is necessary for us."

Immediately Abdul-Baha's face lighted up:

"Thou art right, the believers of God must ever strive to clothe their spiritual bodies with the garment of the virtue of God, the robe of the fear of God, and the vesture of the love of God. These robes will never become threadbare. They will never be out of fashion. Their market values do not fluctuate. They are always negotiable and ever on demand. They are the means of the adornment of the temple of man and woman.

"But the outward raiment must be also clean and immaculate, so that the outer may be a faint expression of the inner. Cleanliness is one of the fundamental laws of this religion."

Mashrak-El-Azkar Contribution from Cairo

Cairo, Egypt, November 30, 1916.

Mr. Alfred E. Lunt.

Dear Bahai Brother:

Sometime ago I received a letter from you in regard to the Mashrak-El-Azkar work. You were then Secretary of the Bahai Temple Unity Executive Board, now I believe you are President.

It gives me great pleasure to enclose a check for $75.00 for the Mashrek-El-Azkar in America. This amount is from the Egyptian Bahais of Cairo and Alexandria, in which two cities I do my Bahai work, as I usually pass the summers in Alexandria. The majority of the Bahais are poor and could not give, but those who have contributed have done so very joyfully. It is sent with Bahai love and greetings from all here to all the Bahai friends in the West. Mr. Mohamed Said helped me in collecting this money. Several years ago a contribution was sent by the older Bahais here.

List of contributors to the Mashrak-El-

Azkar in America, from the Bahais of Cairo and Alexandria, Egypt:

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

The Teaching Campaign—News from the South “Fifteen thousand were reached directly”

Extract from a letter by Louis G. Gregory

Washington, D. C.,

December 17, 1916.

The veils are everywhere being lifted and the Sun of Truth is shining with a radiance that will soon penetrate the ends of the earth.

I arrived here Friday morning and am very happy over the journey, which gave wonderful opportunities and privileges for service. Since I last wrote you, Jackson and Nashville, Tenn., Louisville, Lincoln and Lexington, Ky., and Charleston, W. Va., were visited, in all of which addresses were made and hearty responses found in receptive hearts. The Ministers' Alliance at Louisville passed a vote of thanks. In the entire journey probably more than fifteen thousand were reached directly, most of them students, representing many sections and communities. Less than half a dozen persons in all raised the voice of opposition. Almost without exception in the places visited there were souls ready to receive all that could be told them about Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha. Am returning to Charleston, S. C., to deliver the Emancipation Day address, January 1. This will be an opportunity to tell them of real freedom.

I hope, God willing, that in the future my affairs can be so arranged as to give more time to service of this kind (the opportunities seem limitless). The number of institutions in the south that cannot be reached must be very small.

May God render you victorious, O my brother, in every effort! This is my prayer. Ever yours,

Louis G. Gregory.

“Hast thou Love?”

Extract from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 9, 1914

“When our American visitors left the house a Christian minister called on Abdul-Baha. . . . Then the minister asked about the mission of Christ. Without pause Abdul-Baha continued, ‘His holiness Christ came for the promulgation of the law of love; all the prophets were sent, all the books were revealed, so that the law of love might be promoted. But a few self-seeking people subverted the original aims of the religion of God, changed its pure current and made it an instrument of hatred and rancor and quarrel and sedition. Why should we hate the members of other religions? Why should we not love each other? Why should we be tattlers and busy-bodies and gossip-mongers? Why are we not looking at our own shortcomings? Why do we not let people alone? Why do we not search after our own faults? ‘And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother’s eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? O, how wilt thou say to the brother, let me pull the mote out of thine eye and behold, a beam is in thine own eye! Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam that is in thine own eye and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother’s eye.’ Let us have love and more love, a love that melts all opposition, a love that conquers all foes, a love that sweeps away all barriers, a love that aboundeth in charity, large-heartedness, tolerance, and noblestriving, a love that triumphs over all obstacles, a boundless, resistless, sweeping love. Ah, me! Each one must be a sign of love, a sea of love, a center of love, a sun of love, a star of love, a haven of love, a pearl of love, a palace of love, a mountain of love, a world of love, a universe of love. Hast thou love? Then thy power is irresistible. Hast thou sympathy? Then all the stars will sing thy praise!”

“Earth should be a Paradise”

Part of an Address delivered by Abdul-Baha to a gathering of Socialists in Coronation Hall, St. Lawrence Street, Montreal, Canada. From the Montreal Star (Daily), Sept., 1912

“Earth should be a Paradise,” said Abdul-Baha.

“There are certain species of life that seemingly can live solitary and alone. Certain trees, certain animals and even herds wander far from their kind. But man is necessarily ever in need of cooperation and mutual help.

“In reality all mankind represents one family. God desires that each individual member of the body politic should live in the utmost well being and comfort.

“If all do not so enjoy life there is a lack of symmetry in the body politic. ‘Let us look after ourselves,’ the selfish say, ‘Let others die; so long as I am comfortable, all is going well!’ Such a callous attitude is due to a lack of control and a lack of working law!”

Abdul-Baha then outlined a scheme which had been formulated by Baha’-o’llah, the great Bahai Prophet, for ensuring the economic happiness of the people. In this scheme farmers were first to be dealt with for the agricultural industry is the most important and the most useful in the national life. It provides that every village community have a general storehouse to which a number of revenues would come. This income from the communal fund would include tithes, a certain percentage from the number of animals and one-third from mines and minerals.

Should anyone die without an heir, all his wealth would revert to the general storehouse and any treasure trove that was picked up would become public property.

The scheme further advocates that tithes be collected from the farmers on a graded scale. If a man's (necessary) expenditure equaled his income he would pay nothing. If one had an expenditure of one thousand dollars and an income of two thousand, he would pay one-tenth; from one having an income of ten thousand dollars and expense of one thousand, two-tenths would be exacted. If one had an income of twenty thousand and his expense were two thousand, the taxes would amount to one-fourth. If the income were two hundred thousand dollars and the expense ten thousand, then the community would exact one-half.

From this general storehouse the less fortunate members of the commonwealth would draw to secure their share of the common welfare.

There would be no poverty in the community. Orphans, cripples, the poor, the blind, the deaf, the aged, the helpless, would be looked after. The people themselves would elect trustees for the administration of the public trust.

Whatever surplus there might be after all were provided for would go to the national exchequer. For the big cities such a scheme would be carried out on a much more extended scale.

"Under this system," said Abdul-Baha, "every member of the community would live in comfort, without fear, and without being under obligations to anyone.

"Degrees or grades would not be abolished. These would be necessary, as in an army it is necessary to have marshals, generals, colonels, sergeants and foot-soldiers. But notwithstanding grades, all would have the right to share in the general well being.

"The earth can be made a Paradise. Let all the servants of God ever strive that such a great happiness may accrue to the world of humanity."

The Heavenly Tables

To three pilgrims to Acca, September 5, 1901, at supper, Abdul-Baha said:

"We should remember these meetings when we return to our homes. When we go to Paris, London and America we must remember these nights and these gatherings and must show the same spirit of love that is manifested here.

"The meal is divided into two parts, material and spiritual. We hope that this is both. The tables mentioned in the Bible are the spiritual tables. The effect of the material table lasts for twelve hours but that which is divine is everlasting and eternal.

"For example,—'Revelation' is one of the heavenly tables. As an illustration, think of the knowledge revealed two thousand year ago; we feel the effect of it now and that effect will remain forever.

"Some of the heavenly tables are the divine teachings and their power and effect will be everlasting. Another of the godly tables is His love, which is the cause of Eternal Life. Others of these tables are unity and harmony amongst the believers, like as we are gathered here tonight, the effect of which will remain forever and ever."

Divine Teachings

Words of Abdul-Baha, reprinted from The International Psychic Gazette,
July, 1914

There are two general and principal classes of divine teachings. One is spiritual, and pertains to the moralities. This is the fundamental basis of the divine law, unchangeable and unalterable, which has been reiterated and renewed in the cycle of every prophet. Its commands refer to justice, truthfulness, compassion, faith, love of God, self-devotion, self-sacrifice, steadfastness, including all divine and merciful attributes. This is the unchanging and unmoving law of God.

The second class of divine teachings is material and deals with behaviour, such as divorce, the commandments, the way of worshipping. All these conditions have changed in the cycle of every prophet. The character of divine sovereignty has no change or transformation, but the organization and administration change continually. This is why Jesus Christ said: "I came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it." At the same time there are conditions that are changeable.

Tablet from Abdul-Baha to the Bahais of Germany

Extract from a letter by Azizollah to Mrs. Alice Schwarz, dated June 30, 1916

Three days ago when we were all in Abdul-Baha's holy presence, I delivered to him the translations of your letters, as well as those of Mr. Herrigel and Miss Knobloch. He read them with a ringing loud voice and closed with a happy facial expression making a few remarks about the dear father (Consul Schwarz) and praising him highly.

After a few minutes of rest he said:

"The religion of God has now been proclaimed in Germany. When the divine seed takes root in the soil, they will automatically spread and other roots appear and extend into the depth of the hearts.

"Now the cause of Almighty God has taken root in Germany and its roots are going to radiate like trees in full bloom. In the same manner that pernicious and destructive types of men have a contagious influence, so the spiritual and divine type exerts an influence that is of a far-reaching and permeating nature.

"It is well known, that when once a blessed soul of any nation steps into the religion of God, it is capable of saving the whole community from the darkness of the world, from materialism and animalism. He brings to them divine qualities and frees them from indifference towards God, from prejudices which are founded on ignorance, from animal instincts, and from the attachment to the material world and the surrender of self to it—by attachment to the material world, I do not mean social intercourse and economic relations upon which the progress of the world depends, but I mean the ascendancy of the lower life over the higher ideals of human society. Now, God be praised, shining and divine realities have penetrated into Germany."

After uttering these words, Abdul-Baha gave us permission to leave saying: "Now you are to enjoy yourselves upon this mountain of the Lord (Mt. Carmel) on which the Prophets of God used to dwell or often lingered while on earth—rest and recreate after the arduous tasks and exhaustion of the year's study."

For Germany: To the friends of God
—Upon them be greeting and praise!
O ye true friends and ye who are firm in the love of God!

Although it has been a long time since I have written you a letter of any kind, the heart and soul were nevertheless in constant communication, and I supplicated to the Kingdom of Abha that you might be protected and preserved.

Although the unrests of the world are limitless and boundless, my hope is nevertheless that they may end and the dark clouds disappear from the horizon of the universe and that the sun of peace and unity may shine above all horizons.

We must under no circumstances be prevented from praying and the mentioning of God. We must always be enraptured with the fire of the love of God, be attracted by His Knowledge and be heralds of His Words, so that His invisible confirmations like unto the breeze of dawn, become the cause of spiritual life.

Pray then, that the universe may become a new universe and this dark world a world of light.

Convey my greatest love and affection, greetings and praise to all the friends.

Upon ye all be greetings and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Progress of the Cause in Bournemouth, England

It was suggested that when, in compliance with your request, we forwarded to you particulars of the Bahai Assembly in Bournemouth, we should also give you some cheering news of the "majestic progress of the Cause of God" in this beautiful seaside town.

The origin and growth of the Movement here is mainly associated with Dr. J. E. Esslemont of Southbourne, who, after intimate investigation of the Truth as embodied in the Bahai Revelation, started, some eighteen months ago, to deliver a series of addresses and lectures at various Adult Schools, Brotherhood Associations, and the local Theosophical Society. His clear and closely-reasoned expositions of the teachings resulted in sufficient interest being aroused for a special public meeting to be held, at which Mrs. F. George of Chelsea was also a speaker.

The Cause then continued to develop by means of regular weekly gatherings for study and discussion, prefaced by a friendly cup of tea. And to some of us these little meetings will ever remain a hallowed and joyful memory.

During the summer of 1915 Mrs. George paid us a lengthy visit; a series of private talks and addresses were given; earnestly and patiently the sowing of the seed went on.

In the autumn a small room was rented at Cromwell Hall, Southbourne and public Sunday evening services began. It seemed a bold step to take. The nights were dark and stormy and the severe lighting restrictions made traveling difficult. The congregation varied considerably, now swelling to as many as fifteen, anon dwindling to a faithful two. But "this is a Day wherein the gems of steadfastness must appear from the mine of man"—so we persevered. Week by week the Glad Tidings were proclaimed; over and over again the story of the Great Coming had to be recounted; slowly our attendance, with our faith and understanding increased.

About the same time a Sunday School was formed with the happy nucleus of three. Today the scholars number five times three. Bahai hymns are sung, some of the prayers chanted and the Message finds glad response in child hearts.

The following summer again brought us Mrs. George, whose beautiful and convincing presentation of the Truth has been used to attract many a seeking soul and has proved a source of inspiration and strength to us all.

After a while we found it necessary to remove into more spacious quarters. And we rejoice to realize that our assemblies have always maintained that warm spirit of brotherly love whereby the humblest member has felt himself of value to the rest and spiritually at home.

Then Mr. W. Tudor Pole came from Bristol, at considerable personal inconvenience, and delivered a vital message in his lecture on "The Things That Matter," bidding us seek for unity with the source of all life within our own consciousness.

We have also had the privilege of the presence and assistance of Mirza Lotfullah S. Hakim.

It seemed a fitting close to the year's work and to a season which has been so richly blessed, that we should have had, on October 1st, the joy of welcoming to our midst Mrs. J. Stannard of India, whose glowing words in her address on "The Ideals of East and West in Religion," thrilled our hearts and illumined our minds, unfolding to us deeper mysteries of the Divine Manifestations and of the underlying realities of a spiritual universe.

This brief resumé would scarcely be complete without reference being made to the Esperanto classes and study circles conducted by Dr. Esslemont throughout last winter and spring, and also to the much appreciated visit of Mrs. Paul Blaise, who is so well-known in the Esperanto world. It is indeed good to see the linking-up of the universal language with the universal religion.

A small lending library has been formed and we find the books and pamphlets very useful in stimulating interest and deepening knowledge.

We are glad to hear of the new effort being put forth by the STAR OF THE WEST, and earnestly pray that it will serve to hasten the coming of the Kingdom of El-Abha.

Cromwell Hall having now been commandeered by the military, we are holding our meetings in various private houses, particulars of which will gladly be supplied on application to the Secretary, care Dr. J. E. Esslemont, Home Sanatorium, Southbourne, Nr. Bournemouth, England.

The Earth and the Heavenly Civilization*

Words of Abdul-Baha to Bishop Birch of New York City, at the Hotel Ansonia:

"Praise be to God, that stupendous material developments are obtained in this country; but material civilization alone does not safeguard the progress of a nation, because through material civilization dynamite, Krupp guns, projectiles and Mauser rifles are invented: thus the infernal instruments of human fratricide are multiplied and constantly perfected. Therefore, natural civilization fosters both good and evil.

"All the wolfish bloodshed, all this feverish multiplication of military armaments are the results of material civilization.

"When material civilization joins hands with spiritual civilization, then it will be perfect. In former times a wooden box may have protected your possessions from the thief, but now the safes with their complicated keys and combinations do not daunt the robber.

"Consequently, just as 'good' is advancing through material civilization, 'evil' takes the same pace, unless the earthly civilization become the handmaid of heavenly civilization. Natural civilization is like unto the body of man. If the body is animated by the spirit it is alive; otherwise it is a vile corpse which in the long run will become putrid and decayed."

The Bishop expressed his pleasure and delight to hear the above words of light. Abdul-Baha answered:

"I am likewise very grateful to you. Praise be to God, that your churches are free from prejudices. They are not so creed-bound as not to be able to breathe. Many Christian churches in Europe are yet extremely dogmatic. But I have already spoken in churches belonging to your denomination. The congregations consisted of most intelligent people. This is a great distinction. Hence I love you with all my heart and soul. My chief aim is to remove the present misunderstanding between the nations of the East and West, so that we may express cordial love toward each other and promote the essentials of the heavenly civilization. I hope that such a confirmation may be vouchsafed us, so that we may become united."

The Bishop said: "Up to this time no one has come from the East to the West with such power, such lucid teachings and such an exalted aim. Therefore I am very grateful to you and most pleased to have met you."

"We must prepare ourselves for the reception of spiritual favors"

Letter from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.

Haifa, Syria, March 5, 1916.

My dear sister in Truth:

Your very kind note of Dec. 21st, 1915, enclosing a brief petition for Abdul-Baha, received and its contents presented to him. He assured me that at the Divine Threshold, he will pray for . . . so that heavenly benediction may descend upon him and the spirit of assurance may encircle him.

The bounties of the Lord of Hosts are limitless but there must also be a willingness to receive and a capacity to absorb those bounties. The rain descends upon the tilled and the untilled soil alike; out of the first useful grains grow, while the second may be covered with thorns and bushes. We must plough the ground of our hearts, not with the old tools of the time of Noah, but with modern agricultural implements, scatter the seeds and wait for the rain. But if we are living far from the ocean and do not receive enough rain, like the many Western States, we must be up and doing, dig canals, construct dams and bring the water within our door, to irrigate our lands and produce an abundance of crops. Under any circumstances a great deal depends upon our own exertion; we hunger and thirst after the bread and water of God's blessings; we can attract God's benediction upon ourselves by our sincere strivings. Many years ago in Egypt there was hardly any rainfall, the government ordered the farmers to plant a whole lot of trees all over the country, those trees brought atmospheric changes and now its annual rainfall is quite high. Similarly, God has given us the power and strength to attract His blessings and change the desert of our hearts into rose-gardens.

The remarkable growth of Spokane is another example—Fifteen years ago Spokane was a city with about thirty-six thousand inhabitants. In 1910 the population reached to nearly one hundred and five thousand. What has brought this stupendous growth? Of course you and others who live there and enjoy its beautiful scenery know the reasons better than I. My object, however, is this; we must prepare ourselves for the reception of spiritual favors, we must strive and work and be always cheerful and never get discouraged and ever be hopeful, joy-giver, hope-bringer. Soon we shall reach the height—the height of vision and beauty.

Ever your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

STAR OF THE WEST

The Divine Art of Living

A compilation by Mary M. Rabb—second article under the above title. Chapter One appeared in issue No. 16

CHAPTER TWO

Some Characteristics of Divine Souls

WALK, while ye have the light, that darkness overtake you not.

He that walketh in the darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have the light believe in the light that ye may become sons of light. (John 12:35-36.)

I beg of God that the divine light that is spoken of in John, in the twelfth chapter, may shed its rays upon thee forever, so that thou mayst always be in light. The life of man in this world is short and will soon draw to an end; consequently one must appreciate every moment of his life, exerting himself in that which is conducive to eternal glory.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 1, p. 106.)

The sun is in the utmost effulgence but the surface turned toward it must be a mirror. The clearer it is the more light shall be reflected therein.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; Vol. 1, p. 207.)

Spirituality is the possession of a good, a pure heart. When the heart is pure the Spirit enters and our growth is natural and assured. Every one is better informed of the condition of his own soul than of the soul of others. Our responsibility to God increases with our years.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca; p. 18.)

When the spirit is confirmed and assisted by the confirmation of the Holy Spirit then it will show its effect in every condition of the world of existence.

(An early Tablet; translator not given. Signed: Abdul-Baha Abbas.)

Unless man maketh spiritual progress in the world of spirit, intellect and heart he cannot gather universal results from material advancements.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; p. 525.)

The spiritual life is symbolized by simplicity and contemplation combined with usefulness and well-guided activity.

(Words of Abdul-Baha from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 25, 1914.)

Question: What can I do to become the real servant of God?

Abdul-Baha: Live thou in accord with the teachings of Baha'o'llah. Do not only read them. There is a vast difference between the soul who merely reads the words of Baha'o'llah and the one who tries to live them. Read thou the Hidden Words. Ponder over their meanings and embody the behests into thy life. All that I might say is only one drop of that illimitable sea. My duty is to explain, to elucidate, to interpret the writings of Baha'o'llah. For example: we must investigate the reality; we must show real love to the world of humanity; we must work for the establishment of universal peace; we must sacrifice our lives in the guidance of mankind; we must be kind to all the creatures of God; we must raise the call of the Kingdom; we must characterize ourselves with spiritual characteristics; we must show forth in our words and deeds the attributes of the holy ones.

I declare by him beside whom there is nought else, if we live in accord with one of the teachings we will become radiant like unto this lamp. If we confess verbally that Baha'o'llah's principles are the cause of eternal salvation and the means of nearness unto the throne of God and yet do not live according to their instructions we are not Bahais. Therefore day and night we must pray for each other, so that we be assisted to express in our lives the universal spirit of Baha'o'llah.

an Esperantist globe-trotter, who was unconscious of the identity of the person he was addressing:

Globe-trotter: 'Serve God!' There is no one in this world who can serve God, because we are not able to see him. He is above our human ken. In my mind the only way we can serve him is to serve mankind, and try to alleviate the sorrows and sufferings of the people.

Abdul-Baha: Christ served God and his apostles served God. Their service was to humanity and was a reflection of their service to God.

Globe-trotter: In this age the Christians have forgotten the commandments of Christ.

Abdul-Baha: What hast thou to do with others? Live thou according to the teachings of Christ.

A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. As I have loved you that ye also love one another.

(John 13:34.)

The cause of God is like unto a college. The believers are like unto the students. The college is founded for the sake of the acquirements of science, arts and literature. If the sciences are not therein and the scholars are not educated the object of the college is not achieved. The students must show the results of their study in their deportment and deeds; otherwise they have wasted their lives. Now the friends must so live and conduct themselves as to bring greater glory and results to the religion of God. To them the cause of God must be a dynamic force transforming the lives of men and not a question of meetings, committees, futile discussions, unnecessary debates and political wire-pulling.

What is the sum-total and upshot of farming, ploughing, sowing the seeds and irrigating? Is there any other thought behind all these labors save the gathering of crops? If the sheaves are only green and verdant but having no grains of wheat or barley the result is not achieved. The aim has been not the luxuriant verdancy of the field but the richness of the harvest. I hope the believers will do their utmost to crown their lives with abundant harvest.

Question: How can one understand the object of his life?

Abdul-Baha: There are two kinds of understanding; objective and subjective. To illustrate: thou seest this glass, or this water and thou dost comprehend in an objective manner their constituent parts. On the other hand, thou canst not see love, intellect, hate, anger, sorrow, but thou dost recognize them in a subjective way through their signs and manifestations. The first is material, the second is spiritual. The first is outward, the second is intuitive. I hope that thou mayst make great advancement in the second kind of understanding. Turn thy face toward God, and say:

O God! Refresh and gladden my spirit! Purify my heart! Illumine my powers! I lay all my affairs in thy hand. Thou art my guide and my refuge. I will not be sorrowful and grieved any more. I will be a happy and joyful being. O God! I will worry no more. I will not let trouble harass me any longer. I will not dwell on the unpleasant things of life. Thou art kinder to me than myself. I dedicate myself to thee, O Lord!

Life, life—let us have more life! Let us have the life of the spirit, a life which is a collective center of the beneficial forces, a life of sympathy, of practical co-operation, of celestial brotherhood. Let our life be an emanation of the kingdom of Christ. He came into this world to minister and not to be ministered unto. His greatest commandment was, "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publican so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect!"

The Bahais must fulfill to the letter the requirements of these holy principles. Every one of them must become the embodiment of these lofty ideals. The thoughts of preference must be banished from the minds. In the sight of the Heavenly Father all are equal. The religion of God is for the equalization of rights and not for the gradation of classes and the distribution of privileges. The religion of God is the leveller of all social inequalities and the destroyer of sacerdotal distinctions. In the court of the Almighty there are no offices or positions. Brotherhood? Yes. Humanity? Yes. Spiritual fellowship? Yes. Self-sacrifice? Yes. Extinction of self? Yes. Class? No. Preference? No. Titles? No. Spiritual superiority? No. Special privileges? No.

In the religion of Baha'o'llah all are servants and maid-servants, brothers and sisters. As soon as one feels a little better, a little superior to the rest he is in a dangerous position, and unless he casts away the seed of such an evil thought he is not a fit instrument for the service of the Kingdom. The religions of the past have fallen into decay on account of self-seeking leaders who in the course of time appropriated all the rights and powers unto themselves and looked down contemptuously upon the rest of their co-religionists as ignorant and deprived of the knowledge of God.

The Bahais must be always on the alert, so that they may not fall into this pit. They must keep the religion of God pure and uncontaminated, a haven of rest for the despondent souls, a safe harbor for the shipwrecked, a divine antidote for the ailing ones, a torch of light for those who are groping in the darkness, and a spiritual democracy for the down-trodden and the outcast.

Service, social, moral, intellectual service must be the sole aim of a soul. He must be sincere and heartfelt in his profession, otherwise he will not succeed and his simulation will soon be found out by his co-religionists. Every Bahai must be a loyal servant of the world of humanity. Bahais must clothe themselves with the robe of service, sit around the table of service, eat the food of service, drink the elixir of service, talk the problems of service, hold communication with the King of service, walk in the path of service, crown their heads with the diadem of service, be intoxicated with the wine of service, and quaff the salubrious water from the fountain of service.

All things were created for man and man for God. Man is distinguished from all other creations. Man, who is in part animal, possesses all the virtues of the mineral, because he has a body; he possesses the added faculty of the vegetable, growth; he has the virtue of the animal kingdom, sensation; and above all, he possesses reflective and mental power, by which he understands the reality of things. Perceiving and reflecting upon visible things, he realizes the reality of unknown things. When a man gazes at the earth he sees it as if it were level, but by his perception he finds that it is a globe. This power of perception can never be found in the animal kingdom. But man by this power can prove that the sun is a center and that the globe and other bodies revolve around it. This power of judgment, possessed only by man, proves his excellence; for the virtues and faculties of other things and substances are created by man, and, above all, he is given virtues with which the other kingdoms are not endowed. Everything is for man.

We speak now in examples, as Christ spoke in parables. The world is like a tree; the mineral kingdom is like the root; the vegetable kingdom is like the branches; the animal kingdom is like the blossoms; and man is like unto the fruit of that tree. The tree is but for its fruit. If the gardener did not expect fruit he would never plant trees. In the same way everything is for man.

There are two sides to man. One is divine, the other worldly; one is luminous, the other dark; one is angelic, the other diabolic. Man is equal to the animals in all sensuous conditions, for all animal characteristics exist in him. Likewise, divine and satanic qualities are contained in man; knowledge and ignorance; guidance and error; truth and falsehood; generosity and avarice; inclination towards God and tendency towards Satan; chastity and purity; corruption and vileness; valor and timidity; economy and avidity; good and evil: all are contained in man.

If the angelic side becomes more powerful and the divine power and brightness surround man, then the second birth takes place and eternal life is found at this point. Man becomes the noblest among creatures. On the other hand, if sensuous qualities surround and if terrestrial darkness and sensuous passions predominate; if they meet in man only the worldly feelings, if they find him a captive of evil qualities and fallen into everlasting death, then such a man is the basest and most abject among all creatures. In such a man divine power does not exist. An animal is not considered unjust and evil because of its cruelty and injustice, for it is not endued, as is man, with divine qualities. But if man falls into the same evil condition it is evident that he has permitted his ungodly attributes to overcome the divine qualities with which he was endowed. This shows the baseness and meanness that exist in human nature.

The nobility and glory of man consist in the fact that, amidst the beings, he is the dawning-place of righteousness. Can any greater blessing be imagined by man than the consciousness that by divine assistance the means of comfort, peace and prosperity of the human race are in his hands?

No, there is no greater or more complete pleasure or happiness than this. How long then shall we seek our own selfish desires, on the wings of egoism? Senses and inner faculties have been bestowed upon us that we may use them for the good of mankind and that we may become distinguished from the lower nature of man by the solidity and justice of our judgment and that we may continually engage ourselves in well-doing (pp. 9-10).

How noble and excellent is man, if he only attain to that state for which he was designed. And how mean and contemptible, if he close his eyes to the public weal, and spend his precious capacities on personal and selfish ends. The greatest happiness lies in the happiness of others (p. 11).

He who remaineth idle and indifferent and continueth in his egoism, indulging constantly his carnal appetites descendeth to the lowest abyss of degradation and ignorance, lower is he than the most dangerous of savage beasts. For it is written, "These indeed are worse than brutes; and meaner than cattle in the sight of God are the deaf and dumb who will not understand" (p. 11).

They have not yet understood that the greatest glory of man, the universal happiness of the world, consists in the joy of soul, high ambition, good intentions, virtue and chastity (p. 44).

Unhappily they imagine that greatness and glory follow on the accumulation of worldly riches and similar vanities. Now clearly consider! If a man gives a thought he will see that the omnipotent God has distinguished him from amongst his creatures by the dress of honor, of virtue and intelligence. . . . Man has become the spring of divine wonders and the center of the mysteries of the heavenly Kingdom.

Now why should he pollute this pure mantle with the stain of selfish desires and exchange this eternal honor for the lowest depths of baseness? "Dost thou think thy body a small thing, while in thee is enfolded the great universe?" (pp. 44-46).

By the details which we have already explained we have endeavored to show that the glory, happiness, honor and peace of man do not consist in personal wealth but on the contrary in sublimity of soul, nobility of resolution, extension of education and in the solution of the problem of life. . . . "Verily in the souls of man lieth their only glory" (p. 52).

There is a great difference between an authentic man and an imitator of one.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Vol. VII

Mulk 1, 72 (February 7, 1917)

No. 18

The former is David himself, the latter is merely the tone of his voice. Knowledge and wisdom, purity and faithfulness and freedom of soul have not been and are not judged by outward appearances and dress (p. 122).

Man should be a constant source of well-being and contentment and a ready help to prosperity for multitudes of people (p. 54).

We ask, what deeds in the world could be greater than working in the public interests? Can any higher career be imagined than this, that a man should devote himself to the cause of the education, progress, glory and prosperity of the servants of God? It is the greatest of pious deeds that the blessed souls should take them that are powerless by the hands and deliver them from ignorance, degradation and poverty and, filled with sincere purpose for the sake of God, should gird up the loins of their ambition in the service of all people, forgetting their own worldly advantage and striving for the common good. As it is written: "And prefer others over thyself, even though there be poverty amongst them; the best of men are those who do good to their fellows, and the worst are those who do harm to them" (p. 214).

It is plain and evident that the greatest glory of humanity consists in obeying the omnipotent God, and man's nobility and honor depend upon his following the injunctions and prohibitions of the Lord, the Single One (p. 150).

It is quite plain and obvious that the life of this mortal world like the breezes at daybreak is not enduring but passes away. Blessed therefore is the great one who, walking in the path of God's will shall leave behind him a praiseworthy fame and happy remembrance. "When the pure soul is about to pass away, what matter whether it dies on a throne or on the surface of dust" (p. 148).

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Mysterious Forces of Civilization.)

As to the seven qualifications of the divinely enlightened soul of which thou hast asked an explanation, it is as follows:

Knowledge. Man must attain the knowledge of God.

Faith.

Steadfastness.

Truthfulness. Truthfulness is the foundation of all the virtues of the world of humanity. Without truthfulness progress and success in all of the worlds of God are impossible for a soul. When this holy attribute is established in man all the other divine qualities will also become realized.

Uprightness. And this is one of the greatest divine attainments.

Fidelity. This is also a beautiful trait of the heavenly man.

Evanescence or humility. That is to say, man must become evanescent in God. Man must forget his own selfish conditions that he may thus arise to the station of sacrifice.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; Vol. 2, p. 459.)

Blessed is he who is charitable for he shall inherit eternal life.

Blessed is he who overlooks the faults of others for he shall enjoy divine beatitude.

Blessed is he who associates with all with joy and fragrance for he has obeyed the commands of Baha'o'llah.

Blessed is he who loves mankind for he has heeded the advice of Baha'o'llah.

Blessed is he who is kind to his enemies for he has walked in the footsteps of Christ.

Blessed is he who proclaims the doctrine of spiritual brotherhood for he shall be the child of light.

Blessed is he whose heart is tender and compassionate for he will throw stones at no one.

Blessed is he who will speak evil of no one for he hath attained to the good pleasure of the Lord.

Blessed is he who will not uncover the sins of others for he will become favored at the threshold of the Almighty.

Blessed is he who hath a forgiving nature for he will win the spiritual graces of God.

Blessed is he who diffuses only the sweet fragrance of the flowers of friendship and mutual association for he will obtain a goodly portion of the bounties of the Merciful.

Blessed is he who teaches union and concord for he will shine like unto a star in heaven.

Blessed is he who practices loving-kindness and co-operation for he will be encircled with celestial benedictions.

Blessed is he who comforts the down-trodden for he will be the friend of God.

(Beatitudes of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, May, 1913.)

The believers must be firmly founded in the principles of morality and honesty.

First, in truthfulness. No one should ever tell a lie.

Second, in honesty in all transactions.

Third, forbearance is necessary.

Fourth, the believers must observe the utmost kindness so that all may consider themselves servants of each other and be truthful and honest to all mankind. If they live up to these commandments the confirmations of the Spirit will surely reach them. The Spirit will descend and they will surely make progress.

From now on you must strive to beautify the moral aspect of your lives. Advise each other with the utmost consideration; watch daily your words and deeds. Thus from the very beginning you may characterize yourselves with divine ideals. The divine ideals are humility, submissiveness, annihilation of self, perfect evanescence, charity and loving kindness. You must die to self and live in God. You must be exceedingly compassionate to each other and to all the people of the world. Love and serve mankind just for the sake of God and not for anything else. The foundation of your love toward humanity must be spiritual faith and divine assurance. Again: you must be most careful that, God forbid, not one single word contrary to truth issue from your mouths. One falsehood throws man from the highest station of honor to the lowest abyss of disgrace. Always guard yourselves against this enemy, so that all you state may correspond with reality. Forever supplicate and entreat at the court of Majesty and beg confirmation and assistance. Make ye an effort that you may win the good pleasure of Baha'o'llah. All the natural and supernatural advancements in the human world revolve around this one problem. If you attain to this supreme goal all the elements of the world of creation will be ready to serve you at your bidding, i. e., they will find their highest attainment in you and through you or, in other words, you will become the fruits of the world of existence. . . . The evolution of the perfect man is a fruit of creation, just as the evolution of the trunk, branches, leaves and blossoms of the tree is the fruit thereof. Exalt your thoughts. Reflect over all your affairs. Magnify your endeavors. Enlarge the circle of your ideals. Open the wings of spiritual wisdom. Let your hope be the accomplishment of most great deeds the results of which may immortalize your names. All that the people are holding fast to are as the mirage and will not last.

Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, April 15, 1914.)

When a person's life is purely moral, when his daily actions are propelled by ethical forces he will influence tremendously the lives of those who come in touch with him. The insincere man learns from him the lessons of sincerity, the faithless becomes faithful, the ignorant, wise, and the cowardly, courageous.

(Words of Abdul-Baha from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 24, 1914.)

All these wishes are well worthy of asking, especially the rescue from self-love. This is a strange trait and the means of the destruction of many important souls in the world. If man be imbued with all the good qualities, but be selfish, all the other virtues will fade or pass away, and eventually he will grow worse.

I hope the beloved of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful will be entirely freed from selfishness. Should this become their nature they will indeed become manifestations of great bounties and the doors of divine grace will open.

Dissatisfaction with one's self is a sign of progress. The soul who is satisfied with himself is the manifestation of Satan and the person who is not contented with himself is the manifestation of the Clement One. If a person has one thousand good qualities he must not look at them; nay rather, he must strive to find out his own defects and imperfections. For example, a person having a palatial residence furnished with the most expensive furniture and decorated with the most exquisite arts, unquestionably will forget all these adornments as soon as he finds out there is a crack in the wall or ceiling and without loss of time will set to repair it. On the other hand absolute perfection is unattainable by man. However much a man may advance yet he is imperfect, because there is always a point ahead of him. No sooner does he look up toward that point than he becomes dissatisfied with his own condition and aspires to attain to that. Christ desired to teach us this thing in a concrete manner when some one said, "O thou good Master!" He answered, "Why dost thou call me good? There is one good, and that is God!"

Praising one's self is the sign of selfishness. Commanding others is not the passport to the realm of spiritual progress. Here is a man who speaks very few words but he is working all the time and attending to all his duties. There is another man who sits down, talks continually, and boasts of his past achievements.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 8, 1914.)

There are some people who make this short span of life miserable to themselves and others because they harbor envy in their hearts. Envy is the most despicable quality in man. Some people are so filled with it that they cannot bear to see any of their friends receive greater privileges and higher promotions in life than themselves. Like poison envy kills all their nobler sentiments. Envy lowers the station of man and makes him a supreme egoist, and self-centered. If man extricates himself from the claws of this ignoble monster he has defeated the powers of Satan. Then he will attain tranquility and peace of mind. Man must become evanescent and self-denying. Then all the difficulties and hardships of the world will not touch him. He will become like unto a sea, although on its surface the tempest is raging and the mountainous waves rising, in its depth there is complete calmness.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 26, 1913.)

To be approved of God alone should be one's aim.

And has thou realized thy own shortcomings? One must always search for his own shortcomings so that he may repent at the threshold of Oneness and become protected and guarded; otherwise, pride and haughtiness will take possession of one's heart and this will cause deprivation of the bounties of the Court of Singleness.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From tablet translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, November 1, 1909.)

Be pure—to be pure is to be selfless.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Divine Philosophy; p. 13.)

Say! Let your word be one, and agree in your opinions, and make your mornings preferable to your evenings and the morrow better than yesterday. The merit of man depends upon his service and perfection and not upon the ornaments of riches and wealth. Let your words be free from falsehood and lust and your actions sanctified and above suspicion and pure from hypocrisies. Say! Spend not the wealth of your precious lives on lustful desires and do not confine things only to your private interests, but bestow when you have and be patient when you have not. Distress is followed by affluence and confusion by clearness. Shun mendacity and slothfulness and take hold of that whereby the people will be profited, whether young or old, aged or widow.

Say! Beware of sowing the tares of discord among the creatures or the thorns of doubts and suspicion in the pure and brilliant hearts. Say, O beloved of God! Commit not that which will disturb the clearness of the pure water of love or sever the perfumed ties of friendship. By my life, ye are created for love and affection and not for hatred and obstinacy. Boast not of love to your own people, but of love to your fellow-creatures. Glory not in loving your homes, but in loving the whole world.

Let your eye be chaste, your hand faithful, your tongue truthful and your heart instructed. Abase not the glorious station of the learned and do not belittle the honor of the chief men who justly judge among you.

Let equity be your army, reason your arms and forgiveness your character and nature. . . . Regard not the people and their actions, but look to the Truth and his dominion; . . . drink the pure water of pleasure, from the cup of utterance of the day-spring of the Manifestation, who remembers thee in this strong fort. Spare not any effort within thy power to establish the truth with wisdom and explanations and destroy falsehood from amidst the creatures.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: From Tablet of Wisdom.)

If a man commit a transgression he has been unjust to himself, and soon he will find that he is in manifest regret and remorse.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 16, 1914.)

The thin eyelid prevents the eye from seeing and what is curtained therein. Then think of the result when the curtain of greed covers the sight of the heart. Say, O people! The darkness of greed and envy obscures the light of the soul as the cloud prevents the penetration of the sun's rays.

(Extract from Words of Baha'o'llah: The Primal Word.)

A thankful person is thankful under all circumstances. A complaining soul complains even if he lives in paradise. . . . If we are not thankful who then can be thankful? Are we not encircled with the bounties of God? Are we not enveloped with the bestowals of the Blessed Perfection? Has he not lighted a luminous lamp in our home? . . . Consider how each one of us is surrounded by his favors! How much divine grace descends upon us! How often our hearts respond to his call! . . . If we are not pleased then who is there to be pleased?

Verbal thanksgiving is fruitless. Thanksgiving is rendered in two effective ways. First, through the realization of spiritual susceptibilities which illumine the courts of the hearts with the bright stars of happiness and rejoice the heart by the glad-tidings of the Merciful. Second, through deeds, i. e., living in accord with the good pleasure of the Lord; adorning our being with his heavenly attributes and trying to alleviate the suffering and misery of mankind.

If a man does not do these things, even though he praises God and offers him a hundred thousand thanksgivings every second there will be for that man not the slightest result; it will be but words without light. Consequently, we must be very happy, very glad, very much pleased, very contented, very joyful, because we are submerged in the ocean of the bestowals of Baha'o'llah. . . . A thoughtful man enjoys the gifts and the blessings of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 14, 1914.)

Consider thy composure, for composure of thought will become the cause of one's confirmation in the service. If thou hast not composure of mind in Chicago, undoubtedly thou wouldst be more confirmed in service in New York; but, if thy mind is at peace in Chicago, it is better to stay there for perchance difficulties may arise in New York and then thou wouldst not have composure of mind. Thou must first think of thy tranquillity.

Be thou composed in all conditions.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; Vol. 2, p. 300.)

Live and act thou in the present as far as possible for thee, according to the divine instructions.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From tablet to Portland believer; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 20, 1907.)

Be not disappointed in thyself; trust thou in the favor and bounty of his highness, the Almighty.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From tablet to Portland believer; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 17, 1908.)

Afflictions and troubles are due to the state of not being content with what God has ordained for you. If one submits himself to God he is happy.

A man asked another: "In what station are you?" He answered: "In the utmost happiness." "Where does this happiness come from?" He answered: "Because all the existing things move according to my wish; therefore I do not find anything contrary to my desire; thus I have no sorrow. There is no doubt that all the beings move by the will of God, and I have given up my own will, desiring the will of God. Thus my will becomes the will of God, for there is nothing of myself. All are moving by His will, yet they are moving by my will. In this case, I am very happy."

When man surrenders himself everything will move according to his wish.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Kinney-Beede-Thompson Notes; taken at Acca, July 6, 1909.)

Man, as an individual unit of human society must not base his deeds according to the law of retaliation. He must forgive, just as God forgives the sins and transgressions of his servants.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 5, 1914.)

Man must be a mine of piety and sympathy. He must associate with all mankind with joy and fragrance. He must not turn away his face from any soul. He must raise the fallen and cheer the hopeless. He must treat with kindness both the friend and the stranger.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 24, 1914.)

O ye friends of God! Show ye an endeavor that all the nations and communities of the world even the enemies put their trust, assurance and hope in you; that if a person falls into error for a hundred thousand times he may yet turn his face to you hopeful that you will forgive his sins; for he must not become hopeless, neither grieved nor despondent! This is the conduct and the manner of the people of Baha! You should conform your conduct with the advices of Abdul-Baha!

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From tablet to New York Assembly of Bahais; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, May 9, 1909.)

May they attain to such heights of altruism as to be ready to sacrifice their lives for each other! This is the life of the world of humanity! This is in accord with the good-pleasure of the Blessed Perfection!

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 12, 1914.)

A man must ever think of the protection of others and not of himself.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 12, 1914.)

Man must always associate with those from whom he can get light or be with those to whom he can give light. He must either receive or give instructions; otherwise, being with people without these two intentions, is spending one's time for nothing and by so doing he is neither gaining nor causing people to gain.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Kinney-Beede-Thompson Notes; taken at Acca, July 5, 1909.)

O thou maid-servant! Have great magnanimity so that thou mayest be favored in the threshold of the Almighty. Have lofty aspirations so that thou mayest attain in the kingdom of God to eternal life.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From tablet translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 17, 1914.)

It is possible to so adjust one's self to the practice of nobility that its atmosphere surrounds and colors all our acts. When these acts are habitually and conscientiously adjusted to noble standards with no thought of the words that might herald them then nobility becomes the accent of life. At such a degree of evolution one scarcely needs to try to be good any longer; all our deeds are the distinctive expression of nobility.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford; taken in Paris, France, 1911.)

Today the real king is the soul who serves all, and dear is he who exhibits humility toward all humanity. The humbler and lowlier a person shall be the nearer to and more acceptable at the threshold of God is he.

The Beauty of Abha, Baha'o'llah, said that the one nearest the threshold of God is he who serves all and who considers himself evanescent and non-existent; who forgets himself utterly, turns to God alone and for the sake of God serves all mankind.

(From Address given by Abdul-Baha, Washington, D. C., May 12, 1912.)

O people of the world! I command you to that which is the cause of exalting your stations. Hold fast to divine piety and adhere to the hem of that which is just. Truly I say, the tongue is for honorable mention; pollute it not with evil speech. God hath forgiven that which is past. Henceforth ye must all speak in that which is proper. Abstain from cursing, reviling and that which is annoying to man.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Kitab-El-Ahd.)

Work for the sake of God and for the improvement of humanity, without any expectation of praise and reward. The present (is always) unimportant, but we must make our present so filled with mighty and altruistic deeds as to assume

Words of Abdul-Baha from Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab
February, 1914

THOU has asked concerning the spirit and its immortality after its departure. Know thou that at the time of its translation it ascends and ascends until it reaches the presence of God, clothed in a temple (body) which will not become subject to the changes wrought by ages and cycles, nor by the contingencies of the world, nor the emanations thereof. It will continue to exist through the eternity of the Kingdom of God—its sovereignty, its dominion, its potency. From it will appear the signs of God and his qualities, the providence of God and his bestowal. Verily the pen is unable to move in a befitting manner in explaining this truth—its exaltation and loftiness. The hand of mercy shall cause it to enter into men's minds, though it cannot be grasped through any explanation, nor be described by those means which are available in the world.

Blessed is the spirit which abandons the body, previously sanctified and freed from the doubts of the nations. Verily, it moves in the atmosphere of the will of its Lord, and it enters into the supreme paradise. It is welcomed by the angels of the Most High. It associates with the prophets of God, and his chosen ones, and it converses with them, and relates to them those events which have happened to it in the path of God, the Lord of both worlds.

Were one to become informed of that which is pre-ordained for the spirit in the worlds of God, the Lord of the throne and the earth, he would become immediately enkindled with the fire of yearning for this impregnable, exalted, holy, and most glorious state of being.

The prophets and the messengers have come in order to guide mankind to the straight path of the true one. Their aim has been no other than the education of the people, so that at the time of death they may depart to the supreme friend, with perfect sanctification, purification and severance. I declare that the prophets are causative of the improvements and the progress of the nations. They are the leaven of existence and the greatest means for the appearance of sciences and arts in this world.

As to the question concerning the soul, know thou, verily, that "soul" is a term applied to numerous realities, according to the exigencies of the following relations in regard to development in the world of existence:

(1) In the mineral kingdom, soul is called "latent force," silently working for the disintegration of the substance of the mineral.

(2) In the vegetable kingdom it is called "virtue augmentative," or the power of growth, which attracts and absorbs the delicate materials of inorganic substance found in the mineral kingdom of matter, and transforms them into the condition of growth. Thus the inorganic substance found in the mineral kingdom becomes growing vegetable life through the effect of the word of God. This vegetable soul, i. e. "virtue augmentative," or power of growth, is a quality which is produced by the admixture of elements, and appears in accidental organisms, of which contingency is an essential attribute.

(3) In the animal kingdom it is called "sense perceptions" (or instinct). This soul term, as applied to the animal kingdom, is also a natural quality resulting from the mixture of the elements, and it appears from their mingling and combination, for it is a quality which results from the composition of bodies (organisms), and is dispersed at their decomposition. From this we are to understand that the animal soul is not endowed with the capacity of attaining immortality, as the life force is dispersed at the decomposition of the animal tissues.

All these things up to this point are a contingent reality, and are not a divine reality. But a contingent reality, which is perpetuated by the fullness of existence, will then suffer no corruption, and will thus become a divine reality, for the accidental reality is only distinguished from the existent reality by its subjection to corruption. For transformation is an essential necessity to every contingent reality, and this is what the mature wisdom has deemed advisable.

(4) In the human, worldly soul signifies the "rational being, or mind." This has a potential existence before its appearance in human life. It is like unto the existence of a tree within the seed. The existence of the tree within the seed is potential; but when the seed is sown and watered, the signs thereof, its roots and branches, and all of its different qualities, appear. Likewise, the "rational soul" has a potential existence before its appearance in the human body, and through the mixture of elements and a wonderful combination, according to the natural order, law, conception, and birth, it appears with its identity.

Be it known that to know the reality or essence of the soul of man is impossible, for, in order to know a thing, one must comprehend it, and since a thing cannot comprehend itself, to know one's self in substance or essence is impossible. As the comprehender cannot be comprehended, man cannot know himself in reality or essence. In order to obtain knowledge of any reality, or soul of man, the student must study the manifestations, qualities, names and characteristics of man. This much can be stated, that the reality of man is a pure and unknown essence constituting a depository, emanating from the Light of the Ancient Entity—God. This essence or soul of man, because of its innate purity, and its connection with the unseen Ancient Entity, is old as regards time, but new as regards individuality. This connection is similar to that of the ray of the sun—the effect to the primal cause. Otherwise, the thing that is generated, or the creature, has no connection with or relation to its Generator or its Creator.

Since the pure essence, whose identity is unknown, possesses the virtues of the worlds of matter and of the Kingdom, it has two sides—first, the material and physical; second, the mental and spiritual—which are attributes not found as qualities of matter. It is the same reality which is given different names, according to the different conditions wherein it becomes manifest. Because of its attachment to matter and the phenomenal world, when it governs the physical functions of the body, it is called the human soul. When it manifests itself as the thinker, the comprehender, it is called the mind. And when it soars into the atmosphere of God, and travels in the spiritual world, it becomes designated as spirit.

There are two sides to man. One is divine, the other worldly; one is luminous, the other dark; one is angelic, the other diabolic; man is equal to the animals in all sensuous conditions, for all animal characteristics exist in him. Likewise, divine and satanic qualities are contained in man; knowledge and ignorance; guidance and error; truth and falsehood; generosity and avarice; valour and timidity; inclination towards God and tendency towards satan. Chastity and purity; corruption and vileness; economy and avidity; good and evil; all are contained in man.

(5) If the angelic side becomes more powerful, and the divine power and brightness surround man, then the second birth takes place, and eternal life is found at this point. Man becomes then the noblest among creatures. On the other hand, if sensuous qualities surround, and if terrestrial darkness and sensuous passions predominate, if they meet in man only the worldly feelings, if they find him a captive of evil qualities and fallen into everlasting death, then such a man is the basest and most abject among all creatures. In such a man, divine power does not exist. An animal is not considered unjust and evil because of its cruelty and injustice, for it is not endowed, as is man, with divine qualities; but if man falls into the same evil condition, it is evident that he has permitted his ungodly attributes to overcome the divine qualities with which he was endowed. This shows the baseness and meanness that exist in human nature.

“Exert yourselves to guide some soul out of the whirlwind of mortality to the fountain head of immortality”

Words of Baha'o'llah

I DECLARE by The Greatest Name, it is a pity that in these days anyone should look to unimportant worldly conditions! Stand in the command of God, and deal with each other with the utmost love. Sincerely, for the sake of the Beloved, consume selfish veils with the fire of oneness, and consort with each other with cheerful, shining faces. Ye all saw the manners of the True One with your own eyes. He has never wished that any night should pass while a single one of the beloved of God was offended with this youth!

The heart of the world is ablaze with the divine world! It is a pity that ye should not be enkindled with this fire! God willing, we hope ye will appoint this night as the “Night of Unity” and all become united with each other, and be adorned with the garment of excellent, praiseworthy qualities; and that ye will exert yourselves to guide some soul out of the whirlpool of mortality to the fountain head of immortality, and amongst men conduct yourselves in such a manner that the signs of the True One may become manifest in you. For ye are the first of worshippers, the first of adorers, and the first of those who revolve around the True One!

By the One who gave me utterance to that which he desireth,—in the Kingdom of Abha your names are better known than they are to your own selves! Do not suppose that this statement is an imagination! O that you could see that which your Lord sees as to the loftiness of your rank, the greatness of your worth, and the exaltation of your state! We beg of God that your desires may not prevent you from that which has been ordained for you.

We hope you will deal with each other in the utmost affinity, love and friendship, in such wise that through your unity the banner of oneness shall be hoisted and that of infidelity reversed, and that you will precede each other in good works and good will. His is command and creation. He doeth that which he willeth and commandeth that which he desireth! Verily, he is the powerful, the potent.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Tablets from Abdul-Baha on Immortal Life

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Mac-Cutcheon—Upon her be greeting and praise!

Thy letter was received. On account of the death of thy father and brother the utmost sorrow and regret was produced. How unfortunate it is that that young man was killed instantly by the sudden shock! But his spirit flew from this world into the world beyond and the spirit of thy father soared toward the heavenly realm. Be thou not sad or unhappy for these two heavenly birds flew toward the rose-garden of eternity and attained to the infinite immensity of the Kingdom. Although those two lamps were extinguished in the earthly glass yet they became the enkindled lamps in the everlasting lamp of the Kingdom. At this moment they are in the utmost state of joy and happiness and so they shall be throughout all eternity. Consequently do thou not grieve nor be thou dispirited.

Convey my longing greeting to all the friends of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

“She is not counted amongst the dead”

To Mrs. A. E. Magee—May her soul be happy!

O thou afflicted one!

In this great catastrophe* the eyes are weeping and the hearts are burning, because that incomparable plant was growing and developing with infinite joy and fragrance in the garden of the love of God. She was stirred into cheerfulness by the wafting of the breeze of providence; day by day she was progressing, and she was at all times the cause of the consolation of the hearts of the friends. I will never forget her, for she was one of the most important personages. But it was destined that she might become free from this material world, the world of physical sufferings and tribulations, and hasten toward the heavenly universe, so that through the showers of the cloud of grace she may obtain the utmost freshness and infinite delicacy and yield luscious fruits. Consequently be thou not unhappy, nor be thou grieved, for she is not counted amongst the dead. Nay rather she was dead, she became alive; she was evanescent, she became eternal; she was earthly, she became heavenly; she lived in the material world, she became wholly spiritual. Like unto a bird she was a prisoner and captive in the cage of this body. This cage was broken; that bird winged its way heavenward, and in the celestial rose-garden she became the associate and companion of other divine birds. Thou shalt find her in that rose-garden with the utmost joy and fragrance.

Convey on my behalf the utmost kindness and love to Mr. and Mrs. Inglis. I beg of God that in this affliction he may bestow upon them patience and consolation, and that they may educate their dear son in accord with their highest and purest standard.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

In Memoriam

Mrs. Lua Moore Getsinger

FURTHER word comes from Cairo of the last days of the brave maid-servant of the kingdom, Mrs. Lua Getsinger. Mrs. Getsinger went to Cairo last autumn, hoping to leave soon for America, and carry Abdul-Baha's message of light to the friends in the West. The friends in Cairo loved her devotedly and opened their homes to her. For a number of months she was at the home of Mirza Taki Esphaim, "Abdul-Baha's faithful steward in Cairo," where she suffered a long illness through the winter. He and his wife cared for their American sister most tenderly. "Before and after this illness," Miss Eleanor Hiscox writes, though she never recovered her strength, Lua Getsinger went about with heroic will "giving the Bahai teachings, her work being chiefly among the young men, as they are the only ones among the Egyptians who know English. All listened to her eagerly, and all were wonderfully uplifted and blessed by her inspiring words. The lives of some were completely transformed by her influence. Such was the power of the words of Baha'o'llah upon her lips."

"In the early spring she went to Shoubra, a suburb of Cairo, to the house of another Bahai, who greatly desired that she should remain there for a while for the sake of her Bahai influence upon his wife and her family, formerly Christian. And she spent her time in giving them all lessons in English, of which they had some knowledge. They all loved her devotedly and treated her as their own sister. It was there her last days were passed. One night (it was the 2nd of May) she awoke with a severe pain in her heart. She called the family, who telephoned for a doctor. But before his arrival she passed into the other world after uttering three times, 'Ya-Baha-el-Abha.'

"The grief and sorrow of all the Bahais was very great, for all loved her as a devoted sister. One of the choicest sites was selected for her tomb. No expense was spared by the Bahai friends for their devoted sister, beloved by Abdul-Baha, in the last acts which could be done for her. How they all loved her! How they still weep when they speak of her!

"Here our sister Lua lies buried in the same city with Mirza Abul Fazl. The prophetic words of Abdul-Baha have come to pass, for Bahai pilgrims and friends already visit her grave with offerings of love and devotion."

In the last days of illness she hovered between the will to serve on earth and the longing to fly away into the glorious freedom of "the immensity of the kingdom." On April 12th she wrote to Miss Hiscox: "Little by little I am seeing all the reasons why many things are as they are and the lessons I have to learn thereby. I am sure until the last day of our lives we will be learning lessons, for this world is a school, from which we graduate only when we leave it. I shall be so glad when the last day comes, and the school is forever (so far as I am concerned) dismissed. His will, not mine, be done!"

The lessons of the earth-world she learned beautifully in those last days of illness and trial. As Miss Hiscox says, her suffering "had a purifying influence upon her and seemed to burn away all the dross and to leave her pure gold. She had only love and forgiveness for all." She saw that every experience had been for the best. Like an angel ready to enter the kingdom of light, she turned her face, "a few days before her departure," to the picture of the Center of the Covenant, which hung on the wall, and said, with tears in her eyes but with manifest firmness: "All I want to do is his will and to be severed from ought else save God."

HENRY L. GOODALE.

Oct. 8, 1844—May 15, 1916.

After an illness of much suffering for three weeks, our beloved friend and brother, Mr. Henry L. Goodale, of Kenosha, Wisconsin, passed away most peacefully, realizing that he was going to join the Heavenly Concourse and meet his Glorious Lord.

He was among the first to receive the Message in America and a member of the original House of Spirituality in Chicago. Many of the friends there recall the happy hours spent with "Pa Goodale," in his little shoe shop. His love and wise counsel was freely given to all. Later he removed to Kenosha. He was beloved by all who knew him or had any dealings with him in business; sincere in the Cause of Baha'o'llah, both in his daily life and by teaching whenever the opportunity offered.

He attended, with his devoted wife, the Convention in San Francisco last year, where he made himself beloved as always. At the wonderful Feast of El-Rizwan, held in the beautiful home of Mrs. Goodall, the talk he gave melted every heart and tears came to the eyes. Everyone instinctively felt that the breezes of the Love of God surrounded him.

MIRZA ALI AKBAR.

On Saturday, June 10, 1916, in the Post-Graduate Hospital, New York City, where he had lain ill for many weeks, the pure and beautiful spirit of our Bahai brother, Mirza Ali Akbar, of Tabriz, Persia, ascended to the supreme home. A Bahai service was held the following Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

Isabella D. Brittingham.

CHARLES E. BRUSH.

Charles E. Brush, born March 17, 1855, at Carbondale, Ill., passed away in Chicago, October 30, 1916. Mr. Brush was an architect of high standing and left many monuments attesting his fine ability, among which near at home is the DeKalb Normal School, which is considered a model for that type of school, and also the Court House at Sycamore.

Mr. Brush loved his profession and was a man of high ideals and fine integrity. He appreciated merit wherever he found it, and always stood ready to assist those who were worthy either as workmen or as men.

Mr. Brush was a son of the late Col. D. H. Brush, who was a public spirited man and who figured largely in the history of Southern Illinois. He leaves to mourn his loss a widow, Ida Flemming Brush, who is an earnest follower of the Bahai teachings and intensely interested in the Cause.

JOHN HARRISON MILLS.

John Harrison Mills, 75 years old, one of Buffalo's oldest residents and an artist of note, died October 23, 1916. Mr. Mills had been ill only a short time. He had just completed a memorial tablet to Jesse Ketchum, founder of the Buffalo Normal school.

Mr. Mills was born at Williamsville, N. Y., but lived nearly all his life in Buffalo. His home was at No. 494 Elmwood Avenue. He was well known in art circles throughout the country. His bust of Abraham Lincoln and his scenes in the Rocky mountains are considered examples of his best work. He spent fifteen years in Colorado.

Some of Mr. Mills's work is on exhibition at the Buffalo Historical society's room.

As a member of the 21st New York regiment Mr. Mills was a member of the guard of honor when President Lincoln's body passed through Buffalo. He made a sketch of the martyr President, from which he later molded the bust.

Mr. Mills was the only survivor of the editorial staff of The Buffalo Express during Samuel L. Clemens's time, when he worked with the humorist as reporter and copy reader. That was from 1869 to 1871.

Besides a widow, he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Margaret Sprague of Buffalo, and a son, William of New York.

Mr. Mills was a Bahai. His supplication addressed to Abdul-Baha, begging acceptance into the Kingdom of God, reveals his clear vision and pure intention. We quote it in part:

"O Greatest Branch!

"I see in thee now that Greatest offshoot of the Tree whereon we may lay hold when the floods come, and not be swept away, and that beneath thee we may dwell when the earth shall be renewed, and I beg that I may be accepted in the Glorious Kingdom, and that my name may be registered in the book of the favorites. And I also beg the blessing of the worlds to come and the present one, for myself and for those who are near and dear to me, and for the gifts and powers to enable me to impart this Great Truth: The Coming of The Kingdom of God—to the people of my country, or for the spiritual gifts for which thou seest me best fitted. And I ask that in me the work of human hands may glorify God and that beauty which is His and which He has given as a token may be inward in me and in my work testify of Him.

"Humbly Thy servant,"

significant weight and momentous importance in the future.

Will is the center or focus of human understanding. We must will to know God, just as we must will in order to possess the life He has given us. The human will must be subdued and trained into the will of God. It is a great power to have a strong will, but a greater power to give that will to God. The will is what we do, the understanding is what we know. Will and understanding must be one in the cause of God. Intention brings attainment.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca; p. 30.)

In the world of humanity "good intentions" is the greatest means of personal development. If a person has “good intention” he will succeed in all of his undertakings.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, April 8, 1914.)

The worst human quality and the most great sin is back-biting, and most especially when it emanates from the tongues of the believers of God. If some means were devised so that the doors of back-biting could be shut eternally and each one of the believers of God unsealed his tongue in the praise of the other, then the teachings of His Holiness Baha’ollah would have been spread, the hearts illuminated, the spirit glorified, and the human world would have attained to everlasting felicity.

I hope that the believers of God will shun back-biting completely (gossip-making and fault-finding), each one praising the other cordially, and believe that back-biting is the cause of the divine wrath, to such an extent that if a person back-bites to the extent of one word he may become dishonored amongst the people; because the most hateful characteristic of man is fault-finding. One must expose the praise-worthy qualities of the souls and not their evil attributes. The friends must overlook their shortcomings and faults and speak only of their virtues and not their faults.

quoted in Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 11, 1913.)

In our physical selves we are like the animals; yet in some ways the animals are even higher than men; they are more restful and composed; more trustful and reliant upon the bounty of God, more in the flow of his will. The birds of Mount Carmel are his creatures. They can fly to the highest branches of the trees and build their nests. From the mountaintops the birds can enjoy the beautiful view of the sea and mountain by their power of sight. All this beauty exists for us as well. The love of God, the beauty of God is everywhere and exists for man if he will but rise to spiritual heights, open his spiritual vision and behold it. Is the king free as the bird is free to fly upward? The king’s head is often heavy with anxiety and the things of this world which hold him down. The true pleasure and happiness depend upon the spiritual perception and enjoyment. The powers of mind are the bounties of God given to man to lead him toward spiritual happiness. The highest grace in man is to love God. Love of God, knowledge of God is the greatest, the only real happiness, because it is nearness to God. This is the kingdom of God. To love God is to know Him. To know him is to enter his kingdom, and to be near him.

THE

IN this age His Holiness Baha'o'llah has breathed the Holy Spirit into the dead body of the world, consequently every weak soul is strengthened by these fresh Divine out-breathings—every poor man will become rich, every darkened soul will become illumined, every ignorant one will become wise, because the confirmations of the Holy Spirit are descending like torrents. A new era of Divine consciousness is upon us. The world of humanity is going through a process of transformation. A new race is being developed. The thoughts of human brotherhood are permeating all regions. New ideals are stirring the depths of hearts, and a new spirit of universal consciousness is being profoundly felt by all men.

ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Divine Springtime

O ye beloved of God! When the winds blow severely, rains fall fiercely, the lightning flashes, the thunder roars, the bolt descends and storms of trial become severe, grieve not; for after this storm, verily the divine spring will arrive, the hills and fields will become verdant, the expanses of grain will joyfully wave, the earth will become covered with blossoms, the trees will be clothed with green garments and adorned with blossoms and fruits. Thus blessings become manifest in all countries. These favors are results of those storms and hurricanes.

The discerning man rejoiceth at the day of trials, his breast becometh dilated at the time of severe storms, his eyes become brightened when seeing the showers of rain and gusts of wind, whereby trees are uprooted; because he foreseeth the result and the end (of these trials), the leaves, blossoms and fruits (which follow this wintry storm); while the ignorant (short-sighted) person becometh troubled when he seeth a storm, is saddened when it raineth severely, is terrified by the thunder and trembleth at the surging of the waves which storm the shores.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Economic Teaching of Abdul-Baha

BY MARY HANFORD FORD

THE reader of this article may wonder at the importance attributed to the teachings and utterances of Abdul-Baha, and a word of explanation in regard to his position in the world may not be inopportune. He is the leader of the Bahai movement, a great center of progressive thought, which had its origin in the illumined message of Ali Mohammed, later called the Bab, given to the Persian people in 1844. The Bab was martyred by the Persian government in 1850, as he was considered a dangerous heretic from the Mohammedan point of view, and Mohammedanism is a state religion. As is natural in such cases, any deviation from the established faith becomes in a way treasonable in the conception of the government. Before this tragic event took place, however, the Bab had fully proclaimed his mission and prophecies. Foreseeing his own end, he told the people that he himself was but the herald of the new day, which would center in the remarkable Revelator to follow him, who would be the messenger of God for this period, and whom he always spoke of under the title of the Glory of God, or Baha'o'llah. He declared that Baha'o'llah would bring peace and unity to mankind, and revive the true knowledge of God in all the world.

The essentials of human progress were included and insisted upon in the message of the Bab; and Baha'o'llah, who followed him, has written eloquent pages outlining the tendencies of future civilization. The Bahai movement which for many years has been a growing power in the Orient, in spite of the cruel persecution of governments, has at length penetrated the western world, and shows clearly that the ethical ideals of our most advanced western economics were generated and came to expression years ago, in the minds of these illumined eastern teachers.

According to the teaching of these supreme educators, messengers of God have been coming to the world from the beginning of creation, and their province is to refresh the soul of man as it grows cold to the love of God, and restore its sensitiveness to the breath of the holy spirit. Thus Moses came, Zoroaster, Mohammed, Christ came, and today the inspiring and ever necessary message has been given once more by the trinity of Persian teachers, who bring a universal teaching, through which all the races of mankind will be enlightened.

Abdul-Baha is the son of Baha'o'llah. He was imprisoned when only nine years old, at the time when his father was seized with his entire family and his immense property confiscated, simply because he had openly become a follower of the Bab, and a believer in the Oneness of God and humanity.

The Bahai conception is that three persons are always combined in the announcement of a divine message. As Christ was heralded by John the Baptist, and followed by Peter, Moses was presaged by his herald, and followed by Joshua; the Bab, Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha are the trinity of today, though the station of Abdul-Baha is more nearly allied to that of the center than in any previous case. He is called the Center of the Covenant renewed today between God and man, as it was renewed in the days of Christ and his predecessors. Abdul-Baha's title means the Servant of God, and naturally he can have no successor in the movement.

The intensely humanitarian feeling of Abdul-Baha is amply shown in his life, and his economic teaching manifests a singularly accurate acquaintance with the sociological conditions of the western world. He is well aware of the fact that measures of charitable relief are only palliations rendered necessary by existing misfortune and by no means to be considered more than methods of temporary relief. Nevertheless the charity, and the spirit of instant service in the life of Abdul-Baha are most inspiring.

His childhood and his youth were passed in moving from one oriental prison to another, until at last he lived in Acca, the prison town of the Sultan, as a prisoner on parole, controlling his own household, under the surveillance of the Turkish police. In this way he became familiar with all aspects of oriental poverty, and permitted himself the privilege of relieving it. In Acca as a prisoner he could do nothing against existing abuses except palliate their results, but this he did constantly.

Every Friday morning the poor of Acca gathered in the courtyard of Abdul-Baha's house, and he went among them personally. He knew them all by name, he knew just which one needed a coat or a warm shawl, he sent a physician or healed those who were ill. Those whom he succored were never among his own followers, for the believer in the revelation of Baha'o'llah does not beg. They were Mohammedans, sectaries of the creed which had persecuted him, deprived his father of property, liberty and station, and martyred the Bab, but they loved Abdul-Baha as their benefactor, and did not bother their heads about his religion.

Abdul-Baha had a donkey upon which he was accustomed to ride about the town daily upon his philanthropic missions. An American woman who was his guest at one time was terribly annoyed at the nightly braying of this creature, which she declared prevented her from sleeping, but when she discovered that it was the donkey upon which Abdul-Baha visited the sick, its braying suddenly assumed a musical character, and no longer disturbed her. Often when the family of Abdul-Baha was about to sit down to dinner at night, the report would come of some unfortunate who was starving, and who had been overlooked in the visits of the day. Then quickly the hot appetizing meal would be bundled into a basket, and rushed away to the suffering family, while Abdul-Baha would smile and say, "It does not matter for us, we had dinner last night, we shall have dinner tomorrow!"

Often he sent his bed to a feverish invalid whom he discovered, because it required thirty-six hours at least to procure a bed from Haifa, the nearest point of supply, and Abdul-Baha would be perfectly comfortable wrapped in a blanket, and lying upon the floor of his room, or the roof of the house, while he would not have been able to sleep at all, conscious of a bedless invalid, feverish and pain racked. He could not endure the sight of suffering which he was able to relieve.

When he reached the Occident, however, Abdul-Baha faced a condition which troubled him greatly, because it was beyond his power to assuage the misery he saw constantly about him. Housed luxuriously at Cadogan Gardens, London, he knew that within a stone's throw of him were people who had never had enough to eat—and in New York there was exactly the same situation. These things made him exceedingly sad, and he said: "The time will come in the near future when humanity will become so much more sensitive than at present that the man of great wealth will not enjoy his luxury, in comparison with the deplorable poverty about him. He will be forced, for his own happiness, to expend his wealth to procure better conditions for the community in which he lives."

When Abdul-Baha first arrived in England he was the guest of a friend in a village not far from London. The evident poverty around him in this wealthy country distressed him greatly. He would walk out in the town, garbed in his white turban and long Persian coat, and all eyes were centered upon this strange visitor, who, the people had been told, was "a holy man from the East." Naturally the children were attracted to him, followed him, pulled at his coat, or his hand, and were immediately taken into his arms and caressed. This delighted them, of course, and children are never afraid of Abdul-Baha, but what pleased and amazed them still more was that when they were put down they found in their little hands a shilling or sixpence from the capacious pockets of "the holy man's" long coat. Such bits of silver were a rarity in their experience, and they ran home with joy to tell the tale of the generous stranger from the Orient, possessed apparently of an endless store of shining sixpences.

The children crowded after him and so many sixpences were dispensed that the friend who entertained Abdul-Baha became alarmed, and talked the matter over with Miss Robarts, who was also a guest in the house. "It is a shame!" they said indignantly. "He comes to us accepting nothing, and is giving to our people all the time! It must not go on!"

That day Abdul-Baha had bestowed many sixpences, and people had come from the neighboring villages, bringing their children to receive the blessing from "the holy man,"—and of course the sixpences! About nine o'clock in the evening the ladies decided that no one else must see Abdul-Baha that night. But as they waited outside the cottage, a man came up the path, carrying one baby, and with others clinging to him. When he asked for "the holy man," however, he was told severely that he could not be seen, he was very tired and had gone to bed. The man sighed, as he said, "Oh, I have walked six miles from far away to see him. I am so sorry!"

The hostess responded severely, feeling that the desire for sixpences had prompted the journey perhaps more than religious enthusiasm, and the man sighed more deeply than ever, and was turning away, when suddenly Abdul-Baha came around the corner of the house. The way in which he embraced the man and all the babies was so wonderful, that the hearts of the too careful friends melted within them, and when he at last sent away the unbidden guests, comforted, their hearts full of joy, their hands bursting with sixpences, the two friends looked at one another and said: "How wrong we were! We will never again try to manage Abdul-Baha!"

Perhaps the most beautiful encounters with the poor he had in the Occident were at the Salvation Army headquarters in London, and the Bowery Mission in New York. Here he consoled the men for their poverty, saying: "Do not consider your poverty a degradation. The greatest of men have always been poor, the poets, and philosophers and benefactors of the race. Christ had not where to lay his head. The Messengers of God are ever overwhelmed by poverty and persecution. Moses was an outcast, and Mohammed a wanderer and an exile. Baha'o'llah suffered the utmost poverty and oppression, and I have known nothing but poverty and prison walls."

In London he gave the men a sum for a New Year's dinner which should duplicate the Christmas feast, and at the Bowery Mission he shook hands with each man at the close of the evening and gave him a quarter. A year afterward nearly every one of those men had kept his quarter because as one of them said:

"That was a heavenly man, and his quarter was not like other quarters, it will bring me luck!"

One result of Abdul-Baha's charity was the example of personal contact which it established. He said: "If the rich should see for themselves the evil conditions which exist, they would become eager to alter them. It is necessary in relieving poverty to come into direct touch with its pain. Then the world will determine to abolish it."

He said also, "The spending of money for the help of another brings a great blessing, but the mere dispatch of a check the loss of which one never feels is nothing."

Perhaps the tender heart of Abdul-Baha was never more fully manifested than in the incident which occurred in California. His hostess in San Francisco had arranged an interview with the Mayor of Berkeley. There was to be a grand reception, and many dignitaries and University people were to be present. As the appointed hour for departure approached the hostess went upstairs to warn Abdul-Baha that the time was near. He smiled and waved her away, saying "Very soon! Very soon!"

She left him with some impatience, for there was no evidence of preparation for the trip. After some time she went up again, for the automobile was honking at the door, and it looked as if the Mayor of Berkeley would be kept waiting. But she met only a smile, and "Very soon! Very soon!" from the important guest. At last her patience was quite exhausted for she knew that they could not possibly arrive at the reception in time. Suddenly there was a ring at the door bell. Immediately Abdul-Baha's step was on the stair, and when the door opened he was beside the maid, pulling over the threshold a dusty and disheveled man whom no one had ever heard of, but whom Abdul-Baha embraced like a long lost friend.

The man lived fifteen miles from San Francisco. He had read of Abdul-Baha in the newspapers. He felt that he must see him at any cost, but he had not five cents for street car fare. So he started to walk to San Francisco, and if Abdul-Baha had set forth promptly to fill his engagement with the Mayor of Berkeley he would have missed this seeker after truth. But Abdul-Baha had felt his approach, and would not leave for his appointment until he saw this friend of the spirit seated at his hostess' table, so well panoplied with sandwiches and tea that it was fully evident his outer man would be refreshed.

Then he said: "Now I must go, but when you have finished, wait for me in my room upstairs, until I return, and then we will have a great talk."

It is with this fund of deep sympathy and a profound comprehension that Abdul-Baha approaches the modern economic problem, but he does not regard it from any sentimental point of view. The new time is coming he declares, and it will manifest itself along two lines—a change in the human heart, and new laws enacted in every country. We cannot introduce the divine civilization by legislation alone, he says, there must be a change in the human heart before this is possible.

The lines along which the better government is coming have been clearly indicated by Abdul-Baha. When he was in New York in 1912 some one was talking to him about the United States, and he said:

"You did a wonderful thing in this country in 1865 when you abolished chattel slavery, but you must do a much more wonderful thing now, you must abolish industrial slavery!"

Only a few people understood in 1912 that the curse of industrial slavery existed among us, but the events which followed this dynamic utterance of Abdul-Baha made it plainly manifest. Is there not a wireless which carries the suggestion of a powerful mind to many hearts, and commands results? It is certainly most interesting to observe how closely the economic tendencies which have developed in the United States since 1912 have carried out the possibilities indicated by Abdul-Baha as denoting the future evolution of the country and the age.

In 1913 Congress appointed an Industrial Commission to investigate industrial conditions in the states, and best of all made Frank Walsh its chairman. There could hardly have been a better selection, for Frank Walsh is a criminal lawyer of wide fame and independent means, noted for his capacity to draw the truth from the most refractory witness, absolutely proof against graft, or that insidious and menacing respect for position and wealth, which so frequently prevents the escape of truth from its prison.

So the Commission went from place to place, unveiling the abuses of every locality, and two of the immediate results of its testimony are the federal laws for the prevention of Child Labor, and the Workmen's Compensation Act, neither of them perfect, but both a long step in the right direction.

Meanwhile every thinking American now knows that industrial slavery exists among us, and that it behooves us to remove it. The startling enactment of the Adamson Law is another pregnant move along the same line. Whatever may be the immediate result, great consequences must flow from it, for very soon no employer in this country will be able to enforce labor for more than eight hours a day, and this is only the beginning of change. The invention of labor-saving machinery which has been going on for many years would have had naturally the consequence of shortening the hours of labor, if the machines had not been in the hands of the capitalist class, who wished to use them only for increasing their own profits, and they must attain their natural aim of increasing the leisure of the world, so that all may have time for culture, for thought, to know God, as Abdul-Baha says.

Abdul-Baha in speaking of the changes that are coming into our economic life, said the solution of the struggle between labor and capital will be found in co-operation and profit sharing. The workers in any institution will presently be regarded as partners, and they will receive their proper share of the profits of the business. Whether in a factory or a mercantile enterprise the same rule will be applied.

Abdul-Baha said in 1912 at Dublin, New Hampshire, in discussing economic questions: "Now I want to tell you about the law of God. According to the divine law, no wages should be given to the employé. Nay, rather indeed they are partners in every work. . . ."

"The question of socialization is very important. It will not be solved by strikes for wages. All the governments of the world must be united and organize an assembly, the members of which should be elected from the parliaments and nobles of the nations. These must plan with utmost wisdom and power, so that neither the capitalists suffer from enormous losses, nor the laborers become needy. In the utmost moderation they should make the law, then announce to the public that the rights of the working people are to be strongly preserved. Also the rights of the capitalists are to be protected. When such a general law is adopted, by the will of both sides, should a strike occur, all the governments of the world collectively should resist it. Otherwise the work will lead to much destruction, especially in Europe. Terrible things will take place. One of the several causes of a universal European war will be this question. For instance the owners of properties, mines and factories should share their incomes with their employés, and give a fairly certain percentage of their products to their workingmen, in order that the employés may receive, beside their wages, some of the general income of the factory, so that the employé may strive with his soul in his work."

As organizations for the supreme enrichment of the few, the trusts, he said, must go; but the principle of organiza-

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Naurooz Greeting

Allah'o'Abha!

This Bahai year, which corresponds to 1917 of the Christian era, we believe marks the beginning of the "blessed days" foreseen by Daniel (Chap. XII, verse 12).

With the world at war it is, no doubt, a year fraught with great events.

According to dispatches published in the daily press, armies are approaching Palestine from the south and from the north.

The prophecies concerning that blessed spot are being fulfilled.

All eyes are upon the Holy Land.

What scene of this mighty world drama—the "Time of the End"—are we about to behold?

At this hour, we are reminded of the following words of Abdul-Baha* :—

"As to you, O friends of God! Make firm your feet in the Cause of God with such firmness as cannot be shaken by the most great disasters of this world. Be not troubled by anything under any condition. Be as lofty mountains, dawning-stars from the horizon of existence, brilliant lamps in the assemblies of oneness and lowly souls, pure hearted, with the friends."

"Be signs of guidance, lights of piety, severed from the world, holding fast to the firm rope, spreaders of the spirit of life, abiders in the ark of safety, manifestations of mercy, dawning-stars of the mysteries of existence, points of revelation, day-springs of light, strengthened by the holy spirit, attracted toward God, sanctified from all things and from the (natural) qualities of people and characterized with the attributes of the angels of heaven—so ye may attain to the greatest gift in this great century and new age!"

—The Editors.

The Coming Convention

The annual Bahai Congress and Convention will be held in Boston this year, from April 29th to May 2nd. The directors of the Temple Unity feel that they are thus following the suggestion of Abdul-Baha, made in the recent tablet published in the STAR OF THE WEST. The spiritual radiance of the friends in Boston has been especially brilliant this last season. All of those who attend the Convention in their city in this great year of 1917 will indeed have a unique privilege. May this be the most glorious and life-imparting of all the many splendid and Pentecostal Conventions thus far held in America.

O ye children of the Kingdom!

It is New Year*; that is to say, the rounding of the cycle of the year. A year is the expression of a cycle (of the sun); but now is the beginning of a cycle of Reality, a New Cycle, a New Age, a New Century, a New Time and a New Year. Therefore it is very blessed.

I wish this blessing to appear and become manifest in the faces and characteristics of the believers, so that they, too, many become a new people, and having found new life and been baptized with fire and spirit, may make the world a new world, to the end that the old ideas depart and new thoughts come; old garments be cast aside and new garments put on; ancient politics whose foundation is war be discarded and modern politics founded on peace raise the standards of victory; the new star shine and gleam and the new sun illumine and radiate; new flowers bloom; the new bounty descend; the new tree give forth new fruit; the new voice become raised and this new sound reach the ears, that the new will follow the new, and all the old furnishings and adornments be cast aside and new decorations put in their places.

I desire for you that you will have this great assistance and partake of this great bounty, and that in spirit and heart you will strive and endeavor until the world of war become the world of peace; the world of darkness the world of light; satanic conduct be turned into heavenly behavior; the ruined places become built up; the sword be turned into the olive branch; the flash of hatred become the flame of the love of God and the noise of the gun the voice of the kingdom; the soldiers of death the soldiers of life; all the nations of the world one nation; all races as one race; and all national anthems harmonized into one melody.

Then this material realm will be paradise, the earth heaven and the world of satan become the world of angels.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

This is a new cycle of human power. All the horizons of the world are luminous. The world will become even as a garden and a paradise. It is the hour of unity between the sons of men, and the drawing together of all races and all classes.—ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Mr. Randall in Montreal

SATURDAY noon, February 24th, Mr. William H. Randall spoke before the Men's Club of Canada upon the Bahai movement and its gospel of universal brotherhood; 1,700 men were present. At the close of Mr. Randall's stirring address the president of the club asked for a rising vote of thanks, saying that too little of the spiritual side of our natures was manifest. In the afternoon Mr. Randall spoke before the Woman's Club of Canada. In the evening an impromptu meeting was arranged by members of these two clubs, at which Mr. Randall spoke further of the creative words of Baha'o'llah. As he says, "The light of the Covenant shines over Montreal." His visit recalls the splendid reception accorded Abdul-Baha when he visited Montreal in 1912. It shows us further how the spiritual seed which Mrs. May Maxwell has been planting in her own inimitable way is now bearing radiant fruit. It shows also how the Montreal assembly because of its beautiful unity in the bond of love is laying the foundation of the kingdom of brotherhood and peace which is to be.

Mrs. Brittingham in Arizona—Paragraphs from a Letter

WHILE visiting friends in Douglas, Arizona, Miss Bailey, a member of the San Francisco assembly, met a woman who had heard the message in Chicago years before. Early on the morning of my arrival there, this dear newly-found Bahai sister came to me and arranged for an open meeting to be held the next Saturday night at the Y. W. C. A. club rooms. The members had just established an open forum and this was the first date of its observance. Then this dear sister opened her home and during the two weeks of my stay in Douglas a number of beautiful meetings and personal interviews were held. The result was that, in Douglas, the first Bahai assembly of Arizona has been established.

At Pearce, a small mining town, one minister, a broad-minded and spiritual man, invited me to give the principles of the Bahai movement in his church on Sunday evening. The following morning I had a brief but delightful call from him, at which time he gave me a letter of introduction to a brother clergyman in Tucson.

In Bisbee, several small meetings were held in homes. At one of them, there were nine guests, seven of whom were Mormons. One of these had brought a Mormon preacher to institute an argument. The argument occurred, but the Beloved was present in spirit and everything was so touched by that love that there existed only perfect harmony! After the meeting, the Mormon preacher came to me, acknowledging "that I had something," and asked for literature.

In Phoenix, one of Miss Bailey's letters of introduction brought to us an invitation to the home of some lovely Christian Scientists, to meet at dinner the Governor of Arizona and his wife, and several well known New York City people. All were interested in the message. Our hostess opened her home one afternoon and called a number of her friends to hear the glad tidings. The governor's wife was present and brought the wife of the governor's private secretary. This secretary is the brother of our own dear Isabel Fraser.

About a hundred and fifty souls in Arizona, some in groups, some individually, have heard the message, and now the ground has just been broken for other traveling teachers to accomplish a fuller work in the glorious Cause of God.

A Pilgrimage in Persia

NOTE where we are,—in Afjeh! We have come over the ground trodden by the feet of Baha'o'llah all the way from Teheran. He walked every step of the way down to Teheran in the hot summer sun without covering on his head, and loaded with heavy chains. Sorrow overflows at the thought of his enduring all so submissively that his glorious Cause might be established and that we, so unworthy, might hear of it, accept and obey his commands.

The valley of Afjeh is wide and fertile, with overflowing mountain streams, terraced wheat fields, and thousands of goats and sheep which flock down the steep paths at dusk about the time the sweet-voiced singer chants the Azan. And here at the head of the valley stand the ruins of the castle where Baha'o'llah dwelt at that time of the beginning of trouble. Many evenings at the twilight hour we go upon the roof of the palace and there hold you all in remembrance while chanting prayers and poems of Baha'o'llah in Persian and English. We pray that all the world may soon awake and acknowledge his power and that we, his followers, may all be established in integrity and more consecrated to service.

We have a few days longer in this blessed retreat, and then go down the mountain again, tracing the path his feet have trod, to begin our life so full of work and of pure satisfaction. We hope for renewed consecration.

tion will remain for the benefit of all. The employés must benefit from them as well as the managers.

Abdul-Baha has also said some remarkable things along the line of income and inheritance taxation. He said, for instance, while in this country: "In future a manufacturer will not be allowed to leave all his property to his own family. A law will be made something like this,—that he must leave one-quarter only of his property to his family, and the other three-quarters must go to the factory workers who have created his wealth."

Indications of the realization of these predictions are already evident along many lines. A new feeling is manifesting itself in the commercial life of our country. Many of the great department stores which furnished formerly the most vivid illustrations of money mania, are now showing the new spirit. For instance, the fine establishment of Filene's in Boston has for years carried on a profit-sharing plan with its employés, which has worked admirably for the enrichment of the concern, and has created an excellent feeling both among employés and customers. Moreover, the influence of the heads of this establishment has gone far and wide, and always in the same direction. The principle of the house has been that the endeavor of an institution must not be first of all to make money, but first to give good service to the public and fair treatment to employés. Filene's is the pioneer enterprise in realizing such principles and has given them wide publicity. Meanwhile the idea is bearing fruit everywhere and one sees its expression in the trade journals and in advertising. In former days we looked to our poets and preachers for the enunciation of noble sentiments and inspiring ideals, but now we find these not only on the stage, but in the advertising columns of our daily papers. For instance, here is an expression of feeling from Henry P. Williams who is the head of an advertising firm in Chicago:

"The man of real progress is always mentally, just a little ahead of where he is now. The idealist, the man of real imagination, seizes upon the present fact, and transforms it mentally into what it may be in the future, and projects it before him. Such a man is the really practical man.

"So long as the host saw God in the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night, they went forward with confidence; they followed an ideal. It was only when they lost the imaginative vision, when the cloud and the fire, being seen every day and every night became mere meteorological phenomena, that the host began to wander aimlessly.

"Blessed is the man to whom the ideal is always real; to whom the 'pillar of fire' of the sunset is always a sacred mystery of beauty; to whom the stars are forever an awe-inspiring revelation; to whom the business he happens to be in—the making of clothes, of shoes, or machines, or the selling of any merchandise in a fair way—is a continuous enthusiasm; to whom the prosaic business duties of each day offer a recurring opportunity for the advancing of the interests of good business, and thereby the interests of good people."

This sentiment printed upon a card hangs upon the wall in the big store of Willard Ashton in Rockford, Illinois, and expresses the spirit of the institution, which is one of the many now endeavoring in our country to spiritualize capital, or capitalize spirit, realizing that in this day the two opposite ends of creation must be brought together.

There is a school for saleswomen in Boston, conducted by Mrs. Prince, which has had an admirable influence. This lady wishing to improve the condition of saleswomen, and believing that education, skill and intelligence would do this better than anything else, opened her school, and has had such remarkable success that her graduates are in all the leading department stores of the country, and their presence seems to carry everywhere a new atmosphere of intelligence and the necessity for justice and kindness, which are the foundation for real brotherhood.

The famous establishment of Altman's in New York is one where these principles have been evident for many years, and when Mr. Altman died recently he left a large portion of his fortune to be divided among his employés and as a fund for the future conduct of the store. The action of Henry Ford in declaring that his employés must share in the prosperity of his establishment has had enormous influence upon the public mind, and he has extended his generosity of late by equalizing the pay of men and women in his factory. Edison has done the same thing more quietly and for a long time has shared his profits with his employés. Both instances illustrate the statement of Abdul-Baha that in the coming time men of wealth cannot enjoy their own luxury unless they use their means to improve the condition of others.

On the Pacific coast the fruit growers and farmers have formed co-operative alliances in business which have already broken the power of the commission men, whose intensely competitive practices threatened to drive the entire Pacific coast into bankruptcy. The fruit growers are now able to sell their product independently, and while the consumer pays no more than formerly, the producer is able to live in comfort. An interesting fact in connection with the growth of the "exchanges" is that there seems to be no temptation towards graft or dishonesty in this form of business. As all transactions are for mutual benefit, no one seeks to defraud another for his own enrichment. Nor do the men try to "corner" the market to increase the price. Wall Street practices are naturally banished from these associations where the desire is to benefit the many and not the few.

In California 70 per cent of the fruit growers have formed these co-operative exchanges and last year Governor Johnson appointed Mr. Weinstock, who had become famous through his organization of the raisin-growers' exchange, Supervisor of markets for California, which meant in reality, as the Californians understood it, supervisor of co-operative progress, and his appointment was hailed with great delight. Recently President Wilson, through the department of agriculture sent a committee of three to the northwest to assist the farmers of that section in forming co-operative exchanges like those of California.

In these enterprises the working people do not yet share the profits. The associations have been made to break the grasping power of the middle man, and people have not yet wakened to the broader ethical aspects of the case. But the rights of the harvester must be recognized in the near future, because it is the day when the worker is coming into his own, and fortunately the harvester is at present one of the best paid workers in the United States, and cannot complain of a badly ventilated factory.

While in this country in 1912 Abdul-Baha gave a remarkable talk before the socialist club of Montreal, in which he outlined the economic development of the coming time, and suggested a form of the income tax entirely new. He gave as an illustration of the way in which the plan would work, an agricultural community.

In the beginning he said, "In reality all mankind represents one family, God desires that each individual member of the body politic should live in the utmost well being and comfort. If all do not enjoy life there is a lack of symmetry in the body politic."

He then outlined a scheme by which the utmost justice could be brought into the communal life. He said the products of the community should be stored in a storehouse, that each man's share should be noted and when the property was sold, each should receive his proportion, and the tax he should pay to the community would be estimated from his share in the property.

At the time when Abdul-Baha spoke, no such thing as a community storehouse had been heard of in this country, but during the past two years its reality has been rapidly developing in North Dakota. The farmers in that section have been almost driven into bankruptcy by the exactions of the banks and the grain dealers. The farmer had no elevator in which to store his grain, and the banks would lend no money until the grain was harvested. Moreover he could get no accommodation except at a rate of from 12 to 14 per cent., and even then with ruinous restrictions. So he was obliged to look on while the middle man came along and bought his grain at starvation prices, to the producer, stored it in his elevator, and then immediately borrowed money on it at the bank, with which he went forth to buy more grain at starvation prices.

When the situation became unendurable the North Dakota farmers rose up in more than protest. They formed a "Federal Association" which included the entire state. They had already endeavored in vain to elect legislators, either democratic or republican, who would pass a law enabling them to build state elevators. So this year they broke the machines of both parties, sent their own men to the legislature, and are to build state elevators for the grain of North Dakota. Naturally in the process of this communal action, the country has developed a communal feeling quite unprecedented, and certain to lead to unusual progress in the future. Meanwhile the Rural Credits law has passed, assuring them easier money, and relieving them from the exactions of the banks. The Rural Credits Law is by no means perfect. It surrounds the issuing of money to the farmer with too many restrictions and is not yet freed from the over suspicion of the banking system. But it is a step forward and brings relief where it is much needed. Undoubtedly, in the future, its restrictions will be removed, and it will enable the needy one to obtain help without such a superfluity of red tape.

However, North Dakota is to have elevators, and the first step toward the remarkable plan suggested by Abdul-Baha has thus been taken. For his plan as to the income tax is unique, as has been said, and unlike any other that has been thought of. Most conservative people object to an income tax, and the most progressive yet attempted is to make the tax an increasing one, in proportion to the income taxed. Abdul-Baha says the tax must be levied in proportion to the excess of the income over the needs of the person taxed. If a man has an income of two thousand dollars, and expenses of two thousand dollars, he shall not be taxed at all, but if he has an income of ten thousand dollars, and expenses of two thousand or five thousand, he shall be taxed on the amount left over from his expenses. Thus if a man has an income of twenty thousand dollars, and expenses of only five, he could pay a large tax; if an income of fifty thousand dollars, and expenses of ten a still larger one.

This suggestion of taxation seems to imply a growing simplicity of life, and sincerity of heart, which do not exist today, because many a man would increase his expenses to decrease his tax, from the point of view of our time, and indulgence is so intensified by opportunity, that expenses often keep pace fully with increased income. In his illustration, however, Abdul-Baha is placing before us a condition in which communal equality and communal fair dealing have already been established, and the most surprising feature of his income tax is yet to come.

In ordinary economic planning the increased income tax is simply intended to enrich the community, and reduce excessive wealth, but in Abdul-Baha's scheme it is an elastic measure, benefiting rich and poor alike, because it takes from the citizen possessed of a surplus, to relieve the one suffering from a deficiency. Thus while the man with a surplus pays a large percentage into the treasury, the man whose expenses are greater than his income can draw from the common fund the sum lacking for the comfort or education of his family. If a man has expenses of two thousand a year, and his income has been cut down to one, he draws the necessary surplus from the common fund, until his affairs are adjusted, and he in his turn has a surplus.

The conservative will immediately cry out against such a measure, as one encouraging mendicancy, but we must remember that this adjustment only applies to the ideal community of the future, from which both suspicion and mendicancy have been banished. The steps toward the establishment of such a commonwealth have already been taken, and may be completed in a surprisingly short time. Abdul-Baha says that in future the accumulation of immense private fortunes will cease, because man's power of spiritual vision will increase so noticeably that he will be conscious of existence after death. He will realize that the present life opens the door to the coming one, and he will not be willing to expend all his energy in the attainment of wealth or fame, which have nothing to do with eternity, which on the contrary would act as a hindrance to the advancement of the soul in its onward career. He will prefer to use his energies for the benefit of society of which he is a member, after he has provided for his own needs, and he will lose the desire to centralize splendid power in himself. He will prefer to establish qualities which will remain his in the other life, rather than accumulate merely material advantages which he must leave behind him when he goes yonder. A great pugilist, or a successful financier may be enormously honored by his contemporaries, but he may not find himself too well supplied with capital in the other realm when he reaches it.

When man realizes that the continuation of life means the endless development of talent and opportunity, he will know that what he begins here, he will have the certainty of completing farther along in his career, and he will therefore look at existence from a vastly different point of view.

Abdul-Baha says the trouble with our economics heretofore has been twofold. Its system and application have been purely material, instead of material and spiritual, they have been purely masculine, instead of masculine and feminine. We need the feminine influence in the world housekeeping, says the great educator. When he met the suffragists of London in 1912, he expressed his opinion in regard to equal rights, and then asked Mrs. Pethick Lawrence to say what she thought was wrong with the world. She replied that in her opinion humanity had been trying to fly with one wing, when in reality it needed two for perfect flight. Abdul-Baha replied, "What would you think if I said that humanity not only needs another wing, but the wing that has been lacking is the stronger, and with its aid humanity will take a wider flight than it has ever achieved before?" Then he went on to tell the beautiful story of Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, and her attainments, showing that the supreme woman is not only capable of leadership and government, but that she possesses a faithful love, a power of self-sacrifice, in which she remains completely feminine, no matter what public functions her life may compass.

When Abdul-Baha had completed his tour of the western world, in 1912, he returned to London, and the editor of the Asiatic Quarterly Review thought it would be intensely interesting to have the opinion of the "greatest prisoner" in regard to western civilization, so different in every respect from that of the Orient. He therefore asked Abdul-Baha to write this article, and the result was a most luminous expression as to the meaning of civilization and the faults evident in that of the West.

Abdul-Baha says: "All that one observes in the Western Hemisphere are the appearances of the material world, and not of the divine world.

"As there are many defects in the world of nature, the lights of divine civilization are hidden, and nature has become the ruler over all things.

"In the world of nature the greatest dominant note is the struggle for existence—the result of which is the survival of the fittest. The law of the survival of the fittest is the origin of all difficulties. It is the cause of war and strife, hatred and animosity between human beings.

"In the world of nature there is tyranny, egoism, aggression, overbearance, usurpation of the rights of others, and other blameworthy attributes which are the defects of the animal world. Therefore so long as the requirements of the natural world play paramount part among the children of men, success and prosperity are impossible. For the success of the human world depends upon the qualities and virtues with which the reality of humanity is adorned; while the exigencies of the natural world work against the realization of this object.

"Nature is warlike, nature is blood-thirsty, nature is tyrannical, nature is unaware of His Highness the Almighty. That is why these cruel qualities are natural to the animal world.

"Therefore His Highness the Lord of mankind, having great love and mercy, has caused the appearance of the prophets, and the revelations of the holy books, so that through divine education the world of humanity may be released from the corruption of nature and the darkness of ignorance; be confirmed with ideal virtues, the susceptibilities of consciousness, and the spiritual attributes, and become the dawning place of merciful emotions. This is divine civilization. Today in the world of humanity material civilization is like unto a lamp of the utmost transparency, but this lamp—a thousand times alas—is deprived of light. This light is divine civilization, which is instituted by the holy divine Manifestations.

"This century is the century of light. This century is the century of the appearance of reality. This century is the century of universal progress."

Abdul-Baha goes on to tell us how we can incorporate the divine laws into the government of the world so as to create an ideal civilization, and he says we are to do this through the study of reality, the promotion of universal fellowship, the inculcation of divine love through the power of religion, the abandonment of religious, racial, patriotic and political prejudices, and in all those pathways leading to perfection which he points out so clearly and beautifully.

In Abdul-Baha's teaching, we cannot separate religion from life—as soon as that is done religion becomes a theology. True religion is the foundation of perfect government, but this religion is the feeling of the heart, not an established hierarchy.

Speaking of the enjoyment of the animal world in this remarkable essay, Abdul-Baha goes on: "Such then is the happiness of the animal world. But the happiness of the human world comes from the virtues of the world of humanity, which enjoyment the animals know not of. That comes from the extension of the range of vision, the excellencies of the world of humanity; the love of God, the knowledge of God, equality between the people, justice and equity and ideal communication between hearts."

While in the United States in 1912, Abdul-Baha foretold the outbreak of the great war in 1914, and said it would be followed by the formation of a world council, to which all countries would send delegates, with power to settle international difficulties, which would result in a permanent peace. He said the twentieth century is the century of federation and that all the world would become united in a bond so close that war would be impossible, governments and laws would be changed everywhere for the betterment of humanity, poverty would be eliminated, and justice would reign in human affairs more completely than had ever been possible in previous times.

He seemed to have perfect faith in the ability of the United States to maintain peace in the period of the terrible war which was imminent, and said it was her destiny to be "the peacemaker of the world," and that she would be the first of the great nations to establish ideal social conditions. He revealed a number of most beautiful prayers for this commonwealth, of which the following is one:

"O God, let this American Democracy become glorious in spiritual degrees, even as it has aspired to material degrees,—and render this great government victorious, confirm this revered nation to hoist the standard of the oneness of humanity, promulgate the Most Great Peace, to become thereby most glorious and praiseworthy among all the nations of the world."

The conclusion of the article in the Asiatic Quarterly contains a glorious promise for the future of humanity, which gives us hope that in the coming time we shall be able to incorporate, into our material civilization, those elements which will make it representative of the divine teaching we have received and of that love which will fully drive out injustice:

"In this age his holiness Baha'o'llah has breathed the holy spirit into the dead body of the world; consequently every weak soul is strengthened by these fresh divine out-breathings—every poor man will become rich, every darkened soul will become illumined, every ignorant one will become wise, because the confirmations of the holy spirit are descending like torrents. A new era of divine consciousness is upon us. The world of humanity is going through a process of transformation. A new race is being developed. The thoughts of human brotherhood are permeating all regions. New ideals are stirring the depths of hearts and a new spirit of universal consciousness is being profoundly felt by all men."

Mary Hanford Ford.

STAR OF THE WEST

The Divine Art of Living

A COMPILATION BY MARY M. RABB

[Chapter I appeared in issue No. 16, Vol. VII; Chapter II appeared in issue No. 18, Vol. VII.]

CHAPTER III

Some Practical Applications of the Spiritual Life

MATERIAL affairs are of two kinds. The first kind are those concerns which have no direct relation to life. They contribute toward luxury, effeminacy, indolence. Indulgence in these things makes one negligent of God and stifles all traces of spirituality. The other kind are those affairs which contribute toward the maintenance of livelihood, adding to the comfort, happiness and progress of the human family. Spiritual powers come always to the assistance of such affairs,—they increase the moral insight and responsibility of man and add to his awareness and mindfulness.

Man must live in contentment with the conditions of his time. He must not make himself the slave of any habit. He must eat a piece of stale bread with the same relish and enjoyment as the most sumptuous dinner. Contentment is real wealth. If one develops within himself the quality of contentment he will become independent. Contentment is the creator of happiness. When one is contented he does not care either for riches or poverty. He lives above the influence of them and is indifferent to them. When we were in Bagdad often with one pound of meat we served dinner to fifteen or twenty people. We cooked with it Persian stew and filled the pot with water so everyone could have a bowl of thin soup. Notwithstanding this we were all very happy and thought that ours was the most delicious dinner.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 25, 1913.)

How complex is the life of the present age and how much more complex we are making it daily! The needs of humanity seem never to come to an end. The more men accumulate the more they want. There is only one way of freedom and that is by shutting one's eyes and heart to all these things which distract the mind. The Arab of the desert teaches us a great lesson in the simple life. Living as he does in the waste Sahara he lacks all the means of life except a crude tent, a rug or mat, a caldron, a sword hanging to the inside pole of the tent and a javelin tied to the outside pole. This is all his furniture. Then, if he is wealthy he has a mare, or a horse, a few camels and maybe adjoining his tent a palm grove. It never occurs to his mind that there is anything else in this world. He is happy and has no worries. His food consists of a bowl of milk and a few dates and he may well wonder at the city man, how he can digest all the different kind of dishes with their flavors and spices. His thought is peaceful and serene, contrary to the city people who are always haunted by the nightmare of livelihood.

Economy is the foundation of human prosperity. The spendthrift is always in trouble. Prodigality on the part of any person is an unpardonable sin. The fewer the habits, the better for the man. It is a divine virtue to be satisfied with very few things. Contentment is the antidote for all the social diseases. We must live an independent life. We must never live on others like a parasitic plant. Every person must have a profession, whether it be literary or manual, and must live a clean, manly, honest life, an example of purity to be imitated by others. Contentment is the master-key to all success. If the members of my family starve I will not ask money from the people. It is more kingly to be satisfied with a crust of stale bread than to enjoy a good dinner composed of many delicious dishes the money for which comes out of the pockets of others.

. . . A Bahai must be satisfied. There was a time that I lived on five cents a day and I was then much happier than I am now. The Persian Bahais often live in the utmost poverty and want, yet they never complain nor ask for money from any one. Begging they consider to be below their spiritual station. A man who is the beneficiary of the treasury of the Kingdom is not poor. There have been some rich Bahais in Persia whose properties were entirely confiscated. Being thus reduced to utter destitution they went out cheerfully to work and in their turn spent all they made for the maintenance of the poorer Bahai families. Love, yea, love must be demonstrated through deeds. Love has never been a passive verb, a figure of speech; it has always been an active verb, an ideal reality. The sign of true faith is the service of the believers of God and service must always manifest itself in loving deeds and actions. . . .

A small business with a steady income is better than the wild, helter-skelter speculations of the financiers.

The mind of a contented person is always peaceful and his heart is at rest. He is like a monarch ruling over the whole world. How happily such a man helps himself to his frugal meals. How joyfully he takes his walks and how peacefully he sleeps!

At the table on board the Cedric Abdul-Baha spoke about simple diet—how much better it is for one's constitution to eat but one or two courses. One of the American Bahais asked him whether he would not prescribe a simple regime of diet for the believers, upon his arrival in America. He laughed heartily and said: "We do not interfere with their material food, but we shall give them a simple diet of spiritual food. This is our work."

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 20, 1913.)

The life of the Arabs in the interior is most simple. Their principal food consists of the milk of the camel and a few dates. These Arabs do not like the atmosphere of the city. They revel in the expansiveness of the desert. The other day a few of the Bedouin women taunted our women because they are living in the town, while the Bedouin women were happy to breathe the fresh air of the desert. When, years ago, I traveled from Acca to Tiberias, in our caravan there was a beautiful Bedouin woman riding on a camel. She was listless and thoughtful. In the same caravan there was a young Christian who was struck with the beauty of this Arab girl and her dark eyes. After some futile attempts he succeeded in establishing himself in her favor. As I was near I could hear their conversation. He was telling her:

"Thou art so beautiful! Why dost thou not come to the city?"

"Why?"

"O, thou wilt be married to a rich man!"

"What will he do for me?"

"He will build for thee a lovely house, thou wilt be served as a queen; servants and maids will wait on thee; thou wilt walk through green gardens, thou wilt sleep on soft beds instead of sand; thy husband will buy for thee many precious jewels with which thou wilt decorate thy body; he will surround thee with wonderful objects the like of which thou hast never seen even in thy dreams!"

The girl straightened herself on her camel and looked at the youth with pity and contempt in her whole demeanor.

"I have my beloved desert, vast, broad, and immeasurable," she said. "What do I want with your cave-like, cage-like and boxlike houses. There the air is stuffy. Here the whole expanse of the Sahara is our avenues and boulevards. Here is my home—the palace of immensity, the residence of God's own children. Fie upon your town and your civilization and your snobbish manners! I hate them! I cannot bear to look at them! They are all cheap tricks sanctioned by your so-called society. You come abroad to display your crafty etiquette of mock modesty and respectability, while in reality you are physically and morally corrupt, afflicted with loathsome diseases. Away from me! Let me stay where I am! My home is the Sahara, my couch is the soft sand, my decorations are God's virtues, my lamps by night the moon and stars."

Wealth becomes the cause of heedlessness to many souls with the exception of those who are believers in God and read the verses of God. For this reason his holiness Christ hath said: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." But blessed is the rich man whose wealth and opulence do not prevent him from turning his face toward God and whose heart is not attached to his possessions. Such a rich man is the light of the world.

Today Baron Rothschild came to Haifa. He is one of the wealthiest men of Europe. He is much interested in the Jewish colonization of Palestine and is devoting much of his time and attention to this problem. Now he has gone to Tiberias. He is busy all the time. He could not stay longer than one hour.

All the people are toiling and laboring to attain to the station of a rich man. Life to many rich men is nothing but a heavy burden. They are "wood carriers." Instead of a blessing wealth becomes a great calamity to them. The supervision of their colossal fortunes and their proper financial administration becomes the sole object of their lives. Day and night, asleep and awake, they think and work to make their piles larger and that of others smaller till finally they become mere money machines devoid of any other feeling or of higher emotions, wild-eyed, always hungering for more. Greed and selfishness become the dominant influences of their lives. Grab, grab, grab; right and left they grab at everything. In the mad rush and struggle for more lucre, for more worldly goods they walk over the bodies of the toilers and the children. They become the embodiment of heartlessness and cruelty. Pride and haughtiness lord it over them and they become mere tools in the hands of sordid, fiendish passion. . . . Wealth has a tempting and drawing quality. It bewilders the sight of its charmed victims with showy appearances and draws them on and on to the edge of yawning chasms. It makes a person self-centered, self-occupied, forgetful of God and of holy things.

On the other hand there are souls who are the essence of existence; in their estimation wealth offers no attractions. If the doors of the heavenly blessings are opened before their faces, if they become the possessors of the riches of all the world, if the mountains of the earth turn into diamonds, if the oceans of the globe change into gold . . . their spiritual independence will undergo no change or alteration, their faith in God will increase, their mindfulness will augment, the heat of the fire of their love for true democracy and the education of mankind will burn away all barriers of ostentation and pride. Their intense passion for God will wax greater day by day. Such rich men are in reality the light-bearing stars of the heaven of mankind, because they have been tried and tested and have come out of the crucible as pure gold . . . unalloyed and unadulterated. With all the wealth of the world at their feet they are yet mindful of God and humanity, they spend their acquired riches for the dispelling of the darkness of ignorance and employ their treasures for the alleviation of the misery of the children of God. The light of such rich men will never grow dim and the tree of their generosity will grow in size and stature, producing fruits in all seasons. Their every deed will be as an example for succeeding generations.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, February 24, 1914.)

It behooves thee to sever thyself from all desires save from thy Lord the Supreme, expecting no help or aid from any one in the universe, not even from thy father and children! Resign thyself to God. Content thyself with but little of this world's goods. Verily, economy is a great treasure. If any one of thy relatives oppress thee, complain not against him before the magistrates; rather, manifest magnificent patience during every calamity and hardship. Verily, thy Master is the Lord of faithfulness! Forgive and overlook the shortcomings which have appeared in that one—for the sake of love and affection. Know that nothing will benefit thee in this life save supplication and invocation unto God, service in his vineyard, and with a heart full of love to be in constant service unto him.

If thy daily living become difficult, soon God, thy Lord, will bestow upon thee that which will satisfy thee. Be patient in the time of affliction and trial, endure every difficulty and hardship with a dilated heart, attracted spirit and eloquent tongue in remembrance of the Merciful. Verily, this is the life of satisfaction, of spiritual existence, heavenly repose, divine benediction, and the celestial table. Soon the Lord will extenuate thy straightened circumstances, even in this world.

Be not grieved on account of poverty for true wealth is surging and inundating like unto the ocean.

“When I was in Paris one of the believers brought me a soft cushion and urged me to put it under my head. I became accustomed to it and as there is none in this hotel my neck has pained me all these nights. To be the slave of custom is the worst habit. I will have none of it! When I was young I often had a brick or a piece of rock as my pillow, and I slept soundly.”

Haji Niaz said that he had a soft cushion with him and asked to be allowed to go out and bring it. Abdul-Baha answered:

“No, no! I must get accustomed to my natural ways. This would not do. One must never accustom himself to anything the absence of which may disturb his comfort.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 17, 1913.)

I cannot understand why people insist on the fact that one cannot give up a thing once he is accustomed to it. One can do it very easily if he makes up his mind fully, resolving to quit it forever. It is all a matter of character and determination.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 17, 1914.)

He (Abdul-Baha) eulogized unre-servedly the untiring activity and zeal of Esmael Aga (the gardener).

“Devotion to and love for one’s vocation accomplishes miracles,” he said.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 11, 1914.)

Man must be tireless in his effort. Once his effort is directed in the proper channel if he does not succeed today he will succeed tomorrow. Effort in itself is one of the noblest traits of human character. Devotion to one’s calling, effort in its speedy execution, simplicity of spirit and steadfastness through all the ups and downs, these are the hall-marks of success. A person characterized with these attributes will gather the fruits of his labors and will win the happiness of the kingdom.

This morning I (Mirza Sohrab) called on him (Abdul-Baha) early and he spoke to me about the concentration of one’s powers. “Water flowing from one spring has more force and energy than if the same water is divided between eight springs,” he said. “Try always to concentrate your activities into one channel and let that one be the Cause of Baha’o’llah. Then you shall see how the confirmations of God will descend.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 13, 1912.)

Praise be to God that you have come into this desert and exalted the name of God. The nomads are utterly destitute of the knowledge of God. They live an animalistic life and all their thoughts are centered upon their cows, goats and crops. When they come together they speak of nothing else save these things. They know nothing else. Nominally they are Moslems, but they are unaware of the ideals of Mohammed. . . . I am most pleased with you and am satisfied with your conduct. I hope that you may become assisted and confirmed in the good pleasure of the Lord. . . . May your spiritual perception become keener, your attention to God more complete and your spirituality an example for others. When you are plowing the ground or sowing the seeds or reaping the harvest let all your thoughts and subconscious thinking be of God. Your hands and feet will be working but your heart must be attached to the Almighty. The body of man is created for this world but his heart is made for the habitation of the Holy Spirit.

Cleanliness and sanctity in all conditions are characteristics of pure beings and necessities of free souls.

The primary perfection consists in cleanliness and sanctity and in purity from every defect. When man in all conditions is pure and immaculate he will become a center for the reflection of the manifest light. In all man’s actions and conduct there must first be purity, then beauty and independence. The channel must be cleansed before it can be filled with sweet water. The pure nostrils in-

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Tidings from Egypt—Word from Elinor Hiscox

BEGINNING the winter of 1911-12, my chief work has been with the advanced student class, all of whom speak English fluently. I felt led by the spirit to invite two, whom I knew, to come to me. Much impressed by what was said, they wished to bring their friends. The number gradually increased until the group became so large that we had to divide it and two evenings every week my room would be filled with these earnest seekers for truth. The presence of the spirit was evident and I prayed much for them individually. Some of these students became devoted Bahais and attained the blessing of seeing Abdul-Baha at Ramleh. These have become active workers in the Cause and they continue to lead their friends to know the truth of Baha'o'llah. After the students graduate from the higher schools and colleges at Cairo, many go to smaller towns as lawyers, teachers, or to fill other positions. With some of them, I correspond regularly to keep them in touch with Bahai influences.

One of my best helpers in the Cause graduated from the law college here and is now a successful lawyer. He has a clear and penetrative mind, with great capacity for receiving the Truth and imparting it to others, and for meeting any arguments or doubts which may arise in the inquirer. Through his influence, many young men have been brought to me and have accepted the Bahai message. Among them were his two brothers, who have become devoted to the Cause, and these three brothers are now among the best known Bahais and workers in Egypt. Upon the invitation of Abdul-Baha, one of them visited him at Haifa, and Abdul-Baha requested him to have regular weekly Bahai meetings at his house in Alexandria, where he is a teacher in one of the government schools. I have seen much of his young wife and she also has become a sincere Bahai.

One devout young soul, who heard and accepted the message only during the past year, a telegraph operator in another town, has won such a spiritual influence over his associates that several of them also have become ardent Bahais.

Much of the time I am the only western Bahai in Egypt and the demands upon me are incessant and varied. To instruct inquirers, strengthen the weak or doubting ones, visit the ill and suffering, give advice and counsel, encourage and aid in the education of girls, seek positions of employment, apply for help for the needy, comfort the afflicted,—all of these involve an endless amount of visits, interviews and letter-writing. And I have this year helped to collect and have sent funds from the Egyptian Bahais to the Mashrak-El-Azkar in America. As I usually pass the summers at Alexandria and Ramleh, my field of service lies also there.

It is all God's work, not mine, and through much faith and prayer, I am only a channel for the spirit of God to work through.

The Divine Art of Living—Chapter Three

hale the perfumes of the rose garden of bounty, the pure heart becomes the mirror of the beauty of truth. This is why in the heavenly books the divine counsels and commands have been compared to water. So, in the Koran it is said: "And we have caused a pure water to descend from heaven"; and in the Gospel, "Except a man has received the baptism of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Then it is evident that the divine teachings are the heavenly grace and the showers of the mercy of God which purify the hearts of men.

The meaning is in all conditions cleanliness and sanctity, purity and delicacy exalt humanity and make the contingent beings progress.

Even when applied to physical things delicacy causes the attainment of spirituality as it is established in the holy scriptures.

External cleanliness although it is but a physical thing has great influence upon spirituality. For example, although sound is but the vibration of the air which affects the typanum of the ear and although vibrations of the air are but an accident among the accidents which depend upon the air, deeply consider how the marvelous notes of a charming song influence the spirits! A wonderful song gives wings to the spirit and fills the heart with exaltation.

I return to the subject that the fact of having a pure and spotless body likewise exercises an influence upon the spirit of man. Now see how much purity is approved in the court of God that it should be especially mentioned in the holy books of the prophets! So the holy books forbid the eating of any unclean things or the use of anything which is not pure. Certain prohibitions are absolute and imperative for all; he who commits that which is forbidden is detested by God and is excluded from the number of the elect. This applies to the things forbidden by an absolute prohibition, the perpetration of which is a grave sin; they are so vile that even to mention them is shameful. There are other forbidden things which do not cause an immediate evil and whose pernicious effect is only gradually produced. They are also abhorred, blamed and rejected by God but their prohibition is not recorded in an absolute way though cleanliness and sanctity, spotlessness and purity, the preservation of health and independence are required by these interdictions.

One of these last prohibitions is the smoking of tobacco which is unclean, malodorous, disagreeable and vulgar and of which the gradual harmfulness is universally recognized. All clever physicians have judged and have also shown by experiment that one of the constituents of tobacco is a mortal poison and that smokers are exposed to different indispositions and maladies. . . .

I wish to say that, in the sight of God, the smoking of tobacco is a thing which is blamed and condemned, very unclean and the result is by degrees injurious. Besides it is a cause of expense and of loss of time and it is a harmful habit. So, for those who are firm in the Covenant it is a thing discountenanced by the reason and by tradition, the renouncement of which giveth gradual repose and tranquillity, permitted one to have stainless hands and a clean mouth and hair which is not pervaded by a bad odor. . . .

As to the question of opium, disgusting and execrating, I resign myself to God for its punishment. The formal text of the Kitab-El-Akdas forbids and reproves it and, according to reason, its use leads to madness. Experience has shown that he who gives himself up to it is completely excluded from the world of humanity. . . . Happy is he who never mentions the word opium! . . .

O friends of God, experience has shown how much the renouncing of tobacco, wine and opium gives health, strength and intellectual enjoyment, penetration of judgment and physical vigor. There exists today a tribe, the Druses, which refrains and abstains from tobacco, alcohol and opium and it completely excels all others in power, in bravery, in health, beauty and grace. A single one of these men can withstand ten men of other tribes and this has been universally proved. That is to say, generally, the individuals of this tribe are superior to the individuals of the other tribes.

Regarding the use of liquors, according to the text of the Book of Akdas, both strong and light drinks are prohibited. The reason for this prohibition is that liquor leads the minds astray and is the cause of weakening the body. If alcohol were beneficial it would have been brought into the world by the divine creation and not by the effort of man. Whatever is beneficial for man exists in creation. Now it has been proven and established medically and scientifically that liquors are harmful. Therefore the meaning of that which is written in the tablets—"I have chosen for thee whatsoever is in the heavens and earth"—are those things which are according to the divine creation and not the things which are harmful. For instance, poison is one of the things: now how can we say that poisons are to be used habitually because God has created them for man? However, as to the spirituous liquors if prescribed by a doctor for the patient, and their use is necessary, then they may be used as directed.

While looking from the window Abdul-Baha said: "We hear the murmur of the sea always continuing. It never ceases. Were it to cease the world would be dead, stagnant, lifeless. But the waves of the mind of man are far greater than those of the sea. They also are ceaseless. They never stop for one instant. This movement is good. If these waves of the mind are few the man is dull and quiet. What pearls and jewels are contained in the depths of the sea! But the pearls and jewels hidden in the mind of man are the knowledge, virtues, capabilities, etc. These pearls can grow and increase in lustre forever but the pearls of the sea remain always the same. These waves from our minds go forth and create movement and thought in other minds. From one strong thought of love what great results may be produced."

Profitless discussions fatigue and weary a person. People who call on me almost every day carry on a stream of profitless, unspiritual talk and I must listen to them with patience. We are commanded to associate with all the people. Today three persons called and they talked for one hour without any definite result.

Man's speech is the revealer of his heart. In whatever world the heart travels, man's conversation will revolve around that center. From his words you can understand in what world he is traveling, whether he is looking upward toward the realm of light or downward to the nether world, whether he is mindful or unaware, whether he is awake or asleep, whether he is alive or dead. For this reason his holiness Ali says: "Man is hidden behind his tongue. Out of the abundance of his heart does man speak."

There are persons with whom you associate and converse whose utterances are life-imparting, joy-giving. The withered and faded are refreshed, the joyless become happy, the extinct become enkindled and the lifeless are quickened with the breaths of the Holy Spirit. The one drowned in the sea of hesitation and doubt is saved by the life-boat of certainty and assurance; the one attached to this material world becomes severed and the one steeped in blameworthy deeds is adorned with praiseworthy attributes. On the other hand there are some persons whose very respiration extinguishes the light of faith; whose conversation weakens firmness and steadfastness in the Cause of God; whose company diverts one's attention from the kingdom of Abha.

The souls who are rejoiced with the glad tidings of God, attracted to the fragrances of holiness, severed from aught else save God, who are commemorating the name of God are withdrawn from the world of darkness their thought permeated through and through with spiritual vibrations and their messages consisting of divine advices and exhortations; such souls are the manifestors of God's mercy, the educators of nations and the vivifiers of the world of humanity. They are guardian angels, the cause of human progress and the spiritual guides of the wandering children of men. Glory be unto them!

If a person reads the Hidden Words,

The Ishrakat, Tajallayat, The Glad Tidings, The Words of Wisdom and The Tarazat and lives in accord with one of these divine advices he shall reach to the station of perfection, he will become the center of merciful susceptibilities, the dawning-place of human virtues and the rays of the kingdom will become manifest from his face and character.

O ye friends of God! These advices and exhortations of the Blessed Perfection are revealed from the Supreme Pen in order to be considered as guides for actions and not to be read only. There are many people who read these tablets, praise their contents—but they do not live according to one of these words.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from tablet to the Boston Assembly of Bahais; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 13, 1914.)

Trustworthiness is the most brilliant jewel in the diadem which crowns man's heavenly attributes.

The best capital and the most profitable business is honesty in all things. Do thou continue to be honest in thy dealings for one month. Thou wilt see in the end that thou art honored and respected by all thy customers, and not considering thy spiritual welfare, thy material prosperity will be secured.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 17, 1914.)

Question: "Does the Bahai prohibition of gambling and lotteries forbid games of every description?"

Abdul-Baha answered: "No, some games are innocent, and if pursued for pastime there is no harm. But there is danger that pastime may degenerate into waste of time. Waste of time is not acceptable in the Cause of God. But recreation which may improve the bodily powers, as exercise, is desirable.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha: A Heavenly Vista; p. 9.)

Endeavor and make an effort that certain souls may be trained, of whom his holiness Christ said: “Ye shall know the tree by its fruits.” That is to say, every soul is known by (his) conduct, manners, words and deeds. Therefore, we must strive with life and heart that, day by day, our deeds may be better, our conduct more beautiful and our forbearance greater. That is, to cultivate love for all the world, to attain beatific character.

Ask thou of God that thou mayest attain to the age of maturity so that thou mayest recognize the beauty and ugliness of deeds and actions.

(Words of Baha’o’llah; from tablet to the Sultan of Turkey.)

God has endowed man with intelligence so that he may use his intelligence. Therefore he must supply himself with all that science can offer. He must be most deliberate and most careful. He must ever be thorough in his undertakings. He must build a thing well. Build the best ship that his ingenuity can lead him to and employ the most skilled captain, but with all that, let him rely upon God. Let him consider God as the one keeper.

Let the light of truth and honesty shine in your faces so that all may know that your word in business or pleasure may be a word to trust and be sure of. Forget self and work for the whole. Abdul-Baha said that one must always remember that one is working for the world, not for a town or even a country, but as all are brothers so every country is as it were one’s own. Above all, remember the teaching of Baha’o’llah about gossiping and talking about others. Stories repeated about others are never good, a silent tongue is always safest.

Chastity and purity of life are the two divine standards of the spiritual and moral law. The greater the aim of man the nobler his purpose. A man must ever be thoughtful of others and be polite and courteous toward his fellow-beings. This will win for him the good pleasure of the Lord and the satisfaction of the general public. One’s sitting and rising, speech and conversation, social intercourse and communication should be based upon a firm foundation and be conducive to the glory of the world of humanity.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, September 4, 1913.)

Moderation is necessary in all affairs. Man must take a lesson from divine actions and deeds for God suffers a tree to grow a long time before it attains to perfection. He is able to make a tree grow to fruition in an instant, but wisdom requires a gradual development.

The first Taraz* and the first Tajalli† is that man should know his own self and know those things which lead to loftiness or to baseness, to shame or to honor, to affluence or to poverty. After man has realized his own being and become mature then for him wealth (or competence) is needed. If this wealth is acquired through a craft and profession it is approvable and worthy of praise to men of wisdom especially to those servants (i. e., men) who arise to train the world and beautify the souls of nations.

Be not grieved or sorrowful that no great wealth or property has been bestowed upon you. Look at the birds! The first thing in the morning they are thirsty and hungry. They go to the spring and a few drops quench their thirst; then they pick up a few seeds and are perfectly satisfied and sit upon the branches and sing the praises of God. I hope you, too, will be satisfied.

Christ says that we are like the birds. The birds have habits; one is that they are satisfied with a few grains. They have neither property nor possessions, and they are most of the time on the branches of the trees singing their beautiful melodies. Now you should be satisfied with a few worldly things and spend most of the time in spreading the truths of the Word of God.

Taraz*, literally means ornament or an ornamented mantel. As a robe is adorned by ornaments, so likewise man is adorned by practicing these Words of Baha'o'llah.

†Tajalli, literally means splendor or light. As light illumines the body of the world, so likewise the inner heart of man is illumined with these Words and Commands of Baha'o'llah.

The length and shortness of life is not considered important. Whether man lives a few years or a hundred years, the purpose of his life is to achieve some definite results. If the tree of his life does not yield those luscious fruits, the purpose of his existence has not been accomplished even if he has lived many, many years. But if he has lived only a few years and the tree of his life has attained to fruition, he has obtained spiritual success. Consequently the duration of life is a conditional matter subject to the will of God. For example, this stone has existed 10,000 or 20,000 or 30,000 years but it has not advanced beyond the mineral kingdom. It has not achieved its final result. Again a merchant goes to his office every day in the year; he plans commercial enterprises, undertakes vast schemes, organizes large companies but at the end of the year he has not gained any profit. On the other hand another merchant through one stroke of good luck gains large profits in one day. Now the former merchant, although he worked harder all through the year, did not achieve any success, while the latter although he worked only one day yet the outcome of his activity was prosperous.

His highness Christ, has addressed the world, saying: "Be like unto children." That is, men must become pure in heart. The hearts of children are of the utmost purity. They contain dust. But this is on account of weakness, not on account of strength. In the early period of childhood the hearts are pure; they have no hypocrisy nor stratagem and they cannot display any great intelligence.

But man becomes pure through the power of strength, through the power of intelligence and understanding. He becomes simple through the great power of reason. He becomes sincere through the power of intelligence not through the power of weakness. When man attains to the great state of perfection his heart becomes pure, his spirit becomes enlightened, his soul becomes tender and receives these qualities through great strength. This is the difference between the perfect man and the child. Both have the great, simple, underlying qualities. But the child through the power of weakness and the man through the power of strength.

Strive day and night and do whatever is possible that perchance you may wake the heedless, give sight to the blind, bring life to the dead, refresh the weary and bring those in despair and darkness to light and splendor. If the hope of man be limited to the material world what ultimate result is he working for? A man with even a little understanding must realize that he should live differently from the worms who hold to the earth in which they are finally buried. How can he be satisfied with this low degree? How can he find happiness there? My hope is that you may become freed from the material world and strive to understand the meaning of the heavenly world, the world of lasting qualities, the world of truth, the world of eternal kingliness so that your life may not be barren of result, for the life of the material man has no fruit of reality. But lasting results are produced by the heavenly existence.

If a man becomes touched with the divine spark, even though he be an outcast and oppressed, he will be happy, and his happiness cannot die.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; Divine Philosophy; p. 20.)

What must be the result of a human life? It is evident that the goal is not to eat, sleep, dress and repose on the couch of negligence. No, it is to find one's way to reality and understand the divine signs; to receive wisdom from the Lord of Lords and to move steadily forward like a great sea.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; Divine Philosophy; p. 25.)

The religion of God reforms the moral side of the life of mankind. It is the spreader of the virtues of the world of humanity. It is the founder of divine perfections in the hearts of men. It is nearness to God. It is the cause of attraction and enkindlement with the fire of the love of God. It is conducive to the illumination of human consciousness.

. . . All the prophets are sent by God for the guidance of the people, for the enlightenment of the minds of the inhabitants of the earth and for the promotion of the Word of Truth.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 12, 1914.)

To an artist, Abdul-Baha said:

"Can you paint upon the page of the world the ideal pictures of the Supreme Concourse? The pictures which are in the ideal world are eternal. I desire you to become such an artist. Man can paint those ideal pictures upon the tablet of existence with the brush of deeds.

"The holy, divine Manifestations are all heavenly artists. Upon the canvas of creation, with the brush of their deeds and lives and actions they paint immortal pictures which cannot be found in any art museum of Europe or America. But you find the masterpieces of these spiritual artists in the hearts."

(Words of Abdul-Baha; Star of the West, Vol. 5, No. 10, p. 149.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened; that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Distinctive Characteristics of the Teachings of Baha'o'llah

Address by Abdul-Baha, November 15, 1912, at the home of Miss Juliet Thompson, New York City

I HAVE spoken in the various Christian churches and in the synagogues, and in no assemblage has there been a dissenting voice. All have listened and all have conceded that the teachings of Baha'o'llah are superlative in character; have acknowledged the fact that they constitute the very essence or spirit of this new age and that there is no better path-way to the attainment of its ideals. Not a single voice has been raised in objection. At most there have been those who have refused to acknowledge the mission of Baha'o'llah; though they have universally admitted that he was a great teacher, a most powerful soul, a very great man.

Some of them, however, who could find no other pretext whatsoever, have said, "these teachings are not new; they are old; we have heard them before."

Therefore I wish to speak to you this evening on the distinctive characteristics of the manifestation of Baha'o'llah, and to prove that from every standpoint his Cause is distinguished from all others.

From the standpoint of its didactic character, or its method of teaching it is distinguished.

From the standpoint of its practical effects, it is distinguished.

From the standpoint of its spread and progress, it is quite distinguished. . . .

The story of . . . of Baha'o'llah is as follows:

When he appeared in Persia all of the contemporaneous sects and religions rose against him. His enemies were kings. While the enemies of his holiness Christ were the Jews, the Pharisees; the enemies of Baha'o'llah were rulers who could command armies and bring into the arena of operation hundreds of thousands of soldiers. These kings were the representatives of some fifty millions of people all of whom under their influence and domination were opposed to Baha'o'llah. Therefore, in effect, Baha'o'llah, singly and alone virtually withstood fifty millions of enemies. Yet these fifty millions so far from being able to dominate the situation were unable to withstand his wonderful personality and the power and influence of his wonderful Cause. Though they were bent upon extinguishing the light in that most brilliant lantern they were ultimately defeated and day unto day his light became more radiant. These fifty millions of souls tried to lessen his greatness but day unto day his greatness grew in proportion to their increased efforts to diminish it.

Surrounded by enemies who were seeking his life he made no effort whatever to conceal himself; he did nothing to protect himself, nay, rather, in his spiritual might and power he was at all times visible before the faces of men, easy of access, ever withstanding these fifty millions who were opposing him. At last his banner was held aloft.

If we glance through history and review the pages of holy writ we will find that none of the prophets of the past ever spread his teachings or promulgated his cause from a prison. But his holiness Baha'o'llah held aloft the banner of the Cause of God while he was in a dungeon, addressing the kings of the earth from his prison cell and severely arraiging them for their oppression of their subjects and their misuse of power. The letter he sent to the Shah of Persia under such conditions may now be read by anyone. Likewise his epistle to the Sultan of Turkey is current among men as are also his epistles to Napoleon, the Emperor of the French, and to the other rulers of the world, including the President of the United States.

The book, or tablet, containing these "Epistles to the Kings," was published in India some thirty years ago and is known as the Surat'l'Hykl, or the "Discourse on the Temple." Whatever is recorded in these epistles has come to pass. Some of the prophecies contained in these "Epistles to the Kings" came to pass after two years; others were fulfilled after five or ten years; still others after twenty years. Some of the most important prophecies, relative to events transpiring in the Balkans are being fulfilled at the present time though written long ago. For instance, in the epistle which Baha'o'llah addressed to the Sultan of Turkey the war and the occurrences of the present day were foretold by him. These events were also prophesied in the tablet he addressed to the City of Constantinople. All of the events which are taking place in Constantinople at present were foretold by him long ago.

Now, during all this time, while he was addressing himself to these powerful rulers, he was a prisoner in a Turkish dungeon. Consider how marvelous it was for a prisoner under the eye and control of the Turks to address so daringly, so boldly and so severely the very king who was responsible for his imprisonment! What power is this! What greatness! Nowhere in history is the record of such an episode to be found. In spite of the iron rule and absolute dominion of these kings his function was to withstand them; and so constant and firm was he that he caused their banners to come down and his own standard to be upraised; for today the flags of both the Ottoman and the Persian empires are trailing in the dust, whereas the standard of Baha'o'llah is being held aloft in the world both in the East and in the West. Consider what tremendous power this is! What a decisive argument! Although a prisoner in a fortress, he paid no heed to these kings, regarded not their power of life and death but on the contrary addressed them in plain and fearless language telling them explicitly that the time would come when their flags would be brought low, whereas his own flag would be held aloft. He declared freely:

"Ere long you will find yourselves in manifest loss. Your sovereignties will be laid waste; your empires will become a wilderness and a heap of ruins; hosts from without will come and subdue your lands; lamentation and mourning will emanate from your homes. There will be no throne; there will be no crown; there will be no palace; there will be no armies. Nay, rather, all these will be brought low. But the standard of the Cause of God will be held aloft. Then you will see that hosts and hosts will enter the Cause of God and that this mighty revelation will be spread throughout the world."

All of you should get the "Discourse on the Temple," the Surat'l'Hykl, read these prophecies carefully, and ponder over them.

Now this is one of the characteristics of Baha'o'llah. Of what prophetic dispensation can you recount such events?

In what cycle have such things taken place? In which one of the sacred books do you find such prophecies of the future? Turn to the holy books of the past and study them and see if you can find such explicit statements!

And now let us compare the teachings of Baha'o'llah with the holy teachings which have descended in the past.

First among the great teachings of Baha'o'llah is that of the Investigation of Reality.

The meaning is that every individual member of humanity is exhorted to set aside superstitions, traditions and the blind imitation of ancestors and forefathers and investigate, for himself, reality. Inasmuch as the reality is one, through the investigation of reality all the religions and nations of the world will become one.

In which one of the sacred books of the past do you find the announcement of this principle?

The second great principle of the teachings of Baha'o'llah is that respecting the Oneness of the world of humanity.

Baha'o'llah addresses all mankind, saying:

"You are all the leaves of one tree; there are no race differences or distinctions. Nay, rather, all of you are the servants of God and all of you are submerged in the ocean of his oneness. Not a single soul is bereft. On the contrary, all humanity is the recipient of the bounties of God. Every human creature has a portion of his bestowals and a share of the effulgence of his reality. God is kind to all; all mankind are his sheep and he is their real Shepherd."

In what Scriptures do you find such a statement? Where else is there such universality? Where else such breadth? Where else this unequivocal statement of the solidarity of mankind? In what sacred record can you show such a teaching? As regards any possible distinctions the utmost that Baha'o'llah says is that conditions among men vary; that some, for instance, are defective. Therefore such souls must be educated in order that they may be brought to the level of perfection. Or, some are sick; they must be treated and cared for until they are healed. Or, some are asleep; they should be awakened. Some are but children; they should be helped to attain maturity. But all must be loved. The child must not be disliked simply because it is a child. Nay, rather, it should be educated. The sick man must not be avoided or slighted merely because he is sick. Nay, rather, he must be loved and treated until he is healed. Nor must the soul that is asleep be treated contemptuously. Nay, rather, he must be awakened.

Next, Baha'o'llah teaches that:

Religion must be in conformity with reason and science.

If it is not then it is not religion at all and is not worthy of credence.

Where do you find any such statement as this in any of the sacred books?

Another fundamental teaching of Baha'o'llah is that Religion must be the cause of unity and good fellowship.

If it is productive of enmity, hatred and rancor then it is better to abandon it and be without any religion at all.

In which one of the sacred books do you find such a statement?

Again, Baha'o'llah declares that:

Prejudice in all its forms . . . must be abolished.

and that until these prejudices are entirely removed the world of humanity will not and cannot attain peace, prosperity and composure.

In which one of the sacred volumes do you find the annunciation of such a principle?

Abdul-Baha's First Days in America

From Diary of Miss Juliet Thompson.

(Harbor) New York,
April 11, 1912.

We had been waiting all morning at the dock; then the ship appeared through the mists The ship docked but Abdul-Baha did not appear. Suddenly I had a glimpse into the dim interior of the ship: barely visible, striding to and fro near the door was one with a step that shook you—just that one stride, charged with power, the sweep of a robe, a majestic head, turban crowned—that was all I saw, but my heart stopped.

Next we saw him at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kinney. When I arrived, Abdul-Baha was sitting in the center of the dining-room, near the flower-strewn table; his aba* was of cream color; at his knees stood Howard and Sanford Kinney, and his arms were around them. He was very white and shining; no words could describe the ineffable peace about him. The people stood around him in rows and circles, several hundred in the room. We made a dark background for his effulgence. Our tears only reflected him; there were many, many weeping just at the sight of him.

He turned his face from one child to the other, from one group to another—oh, so tenderly—with that indescribable divine grace caught by Leonardo di Vinci in his 'Christ at the Last Supper;' but in Abdul-Baha, it was irradiated with smiles, and a lifting of the eyes filled with glory, which even Leonardo with all his mastery could never paint. It was the very essence of divine tenderness.

April 11th.

A message from Abdul-Baha to my mother:

"Convey to thy dear mother the greetings of Abha. Say to her: 'Always remember my advices. It is my hope that thou mayest forget everything save God. Nothing in this world is sufficient for man. God alone is sufficient for him. God is the protector of man. All the world will not protect the soul.' "

* Aba, cloak.

April 13th.

Today Abdul-Baha spoke at Marjorie Morten's. Again because of the immense crowd, he spoke standing on the stairway, dominating all the beauty of that house by his heavenly beauty.

His theme that day was the spiritual seasons; and in the midst of his address a little thing happened, which, slight though it was, I want to keep. In its very slightness it will draw the people of the future closer to Abdul-Baha, just as it drew us.

Those tender little touches of his humor and simplicity—how precious they are, bridging at the moment the space between us and his perfection! The disciples in the past, looking back to those mysterious days with their Master over the abyss of their tragic separation from him, were, I suppose, awed into silence about the little things; so 'the Man of Sorrows' of the past has been only the Man of sorrows to us—love and sorrows. We have never formed any conception of the Man of love and joy, great buoyant joy, a Christ whose love overflowed in little tendernesses and whose joy overflowed in fun and wit—a normal, happy, smiling, laughing Christ!

But now to tell you of this little thing: with his celestial eloquence Abdul-Baha had described the spiritual springtime—the quickening and awakening to life. "Va tabestan," he began and paused for the translator—poor Ahmad could not recall the English word! But while he stood, confused and helpless, Abdul-Baha, with a smile of bright humor, translated for himself: "And summer," he laughed. Whereupon a little ripple of delight ran through the audience. The charm of him had captured them all!

Afterwards he went up to rest in Mr. Morten's room. He had seen one hundred and forty people that morning and was so spent that he seemed almost ill. His fatigue was evident to all and yet, the people had no pity! When I returned from an errand to the kitchen, I found that his rest was being cruelly intruded on. Literally a hundred people were streaming towards his room. A dozen were in the room; at the door were many eager faces and behind them, coming up the stairs, a procession!

"Oh can't we shut the door?" I asked the interpreter, but Abdul-Baha heard my question.

"Let them come now," he said gently.

The disciples' attitude and—the Master's attitude! What a difference there has always been between them! "Suffer the little children to come unto me"; and the disciples were such little children themselves that he had to put it that way—"suffer them."

Tenderly he pressed a baby to his breast, smiling and fondling it. "Beautiful baby; little dove" he said in his dear English.

April 18th.

A young single taxer began to question him. "What message shall I take to my friends?"

"Tell them," laughed Abdul-Baha, with that wonderful spice of keen humor in his face, "to come into the Kingdom of God! There they will find plenty of land and there are no taxes on it!"

That day (the 18th of April) he agreed to go to the Bowery Mission, and he began to speak about it.

"I want to give them some money," he said to me; "I am in love with the poor." How many poor men go to the Mission?"

"About 300."

"Take this bill to the bank, Juliet, and change it into quarters," he said. He drew from his breastpocket a thousand franc note.

"Keep the money," he further instructed me, "and meet me at the Mission with it, in a bag."

As I left the room, with some lilies-of-the-valley in my hand, a pretty little chambermaid stopped me.

"Did he give you those?" she asked.

"Yes."

"He gave me some flowers yesterday—some roses. I think he is a saint."

The next night, Friday, we went to the Bowery Mission.

To the men of the Mission, Abdul-Baha said: "Christ blessed the poor. He never said 'Blessed are the rich'; therefore, you must be thankful to God, that although in this world you are indigent, yet the treasures of God are within your reach; although in the material realm you are poor, yet in the Kingdom of God, you are precious."

At the end of the service, Abdul-Baha stood at the Mission door, to greet the men as they passed out, and more than to greet them, to add to those tender words of his, a gift. Ah, the pitiful procession—the breadline—filing past the pure, majestic Abdul-Baha; the homeless, the hungry, the moral failures, the broken figures, blurred faces, sunken men! Into each poor palm, as he clasped it, he pressed his little gift of one, two or three quarters, just the symbol, and the price of a bed; not a man was shelterless that night, and many, I could see, found a spiritual shelter, a home, in his soul. I could see it by the faces lifted to his. It was wonderful to witness the looks interchanged; first the look of grateful surprise at the gift found in the palm; then another stealing into it; then a flash of revelation from the eyes of Abdul-Baha,

O thou Star of the West!

BE THOU HAPPY!
HE IS GOD!

“O Son of Clay! Be blind, that thou mayest behold My Beauty”

LETTERS FROM A BLIND JAPANESE BAHAI

Tokyo, Japan.

Dear friends:

I cannot allow another day to pass without writing you of the splendid work done here in Japan by our good Bahai sister Miss Agnes Alexander. You all know that she has devoted her time for the past three years to spreading the message and the result of her labors is beyond record.

I attended the Friday afternoon meeting and found young men students, earnest, attentive, reading the Hidden Words with a devotion that would put to shame many of our oldest Bahais. What struck me as the most wonderful of this wonderful gathering was a blind young man who had put into Braille the prayers, Hidden Words and message. Here he was reading, with his finger tips, the blessed words. There are now three blind men, earnest students. What blessed work for this dear woman who has left home and friends and out here, surrounded by everything foreign, devoting herself to the Cause. I send a photograph. Dr. Augur is in the lower row. He comes every Friday, a long train journey, to be present at these Friday gatherings.

Cannot some of our Bahais send a couple of typewriters for the use of these blind students? Truly a better gift to the Cause could not be offered.

There is even talk of a Bahai school in the air. We pray it may materialize and become a reality.

Yours in His Greatest Name,
Emma Erskine Hahn, of the New York Assembly.

Letter from a young blind Japanese Bahai to a lady who is working for the blind soldiers in England

Miss Helen M. Grand.
Bahai friend:

With great joy I received your letter through Miss Alexander the 23d inst. It was such a great pleasure for me to write to the poor blinded soldiers and at once I wrote with all my heart. Indeed it is a great privilege for me to send such a message of eternal light and hope among the blind brothers. Please use me in any way you want.

In the hearts of the oriental peoples is about to awaken a spring of peace and love, and also the darkness of the blind of Japan will be changed into the spiritual light. After this war—O after this war!—universal peace and love and unity of all mankind will surely be realized. There is no nation, no country now in my heart, so I am very happy!

I would be very much pleased if you would inform me something about your work for the blind, as I am much interested in the education of the blind in England.

My Bahai love to you and to the Bahai friends in England.

Hoping to hear from you,

Forever your spiritual friend,

Tokugiro Torii.

Miss Alexander (upper row) and Dr. Augur (lower row) of Honolulu, with group of Japanese Bahais in Japan

Letter from the same young man to an English soldier blinded in the war

Mikawachi mura, Yoza gun,
Kyoto fu, Japan, Nov. 23, 1916.

Mr. —

My dear friend:

I have just received a letter from Miss Helen M. Grand, telling of you. I am so very happy to write to you, for I am also one of your friends who is living in darkness.

Miss Grand told me that you are suffering so much in this terrible war, but never be unhappy, my friend, because this might be the last war of mankind and we should hope to meet with such a great war so that we may attain the true universal peace.

Abdul-Baha, our teacher and guide today, tells us that, after this war, the time for which all mankind have been waiting for many centuries will come, and all the nations of the world will unite in brotherhood, and that universal peace and love will be realized. And I think to realize this happy message is our part.

I do not know how to express my admiration of you who fought so bravely that you lost your sight, but I cannot be sorry for your distress, for I know that the physical blindness is nothing for you and that soon you will be able to have the inner sight more clearly than ever. Surely God will help you if you beseech him. So, dear friend, be cheerful, praise God and keep your hope and spiritual light firmly.

Abdul-Baha tells us: "Open your spiritual sight so that you may know his secrets, attain to the highest degree of existence, become manifestors of a spiritual humanity and have your share of the heavenly favors."

Baha'o'llah, the fountain of light and hope and love, told us, as follows:

"O Son of Clay!

"Be blind, that thou mayest behold my beauty; be deaf, that thou mayest hear my sweet melody and voice; be ignorant, that thou mayest enjoy a portion from my knowledge; be poor, that thou mayest obtain an everlasting share from the sea of my eternal wealth.

"Be blind, that is, to all save my beauty; be deaf, that is, to all except my word; be ignorant, that is, of all but my knowledge. Thus shalt thou enter my holy presence with pure eyes, keen ears and a mind undimmed."

And an American lady, Miss Helen Keller, said, in her message of happiness, even though she is blind and deaf, perhaps as you know: "I am never unhappy because I cannot see or hear. No matter how small your opportunities, you can do something for the betterment of mankind."

Another time she said: "I would not part with my experience in the dark, because out of the dark I may be able to carry light."

Indeed we are never sad because of our blindness even for a few minutes in the year. Today I took a walk with my pupils to the seashore, as I am a teacher of a small school for the blind. They enjoyed themselves very much running about the beach in the mild sunshine, chattering and joking with their friends. It seemed to me that they were not sorry at all about their blindness or rather that they knew not their own blindness or even what blindness is, or what darkness is.

I believe that it is a heavenly command for us, the blind of this century, to work for bringing happiness, peace, love, joy and hope to this world of humanity because for this great work no one needs any sight of the body and there should be no handicap between the blind and the sighted. Knowing this, I think we, the blind, must unite universally and it is much easier for the blind to unite universally than the seeing, because of their same fate, and the only instrument for this is the Esperanto language. So I hope that you will learn this language and have great joy by corresponding with many friends in the whole world.

Forget your blindness and turn your face to the bright side! This is the only way by which you can change darkness into light. Really, physical blindness is nothing, nothing for us. Believe yourself and you will find inner light therein, because a man is created so noble, although he is blind or deaf. Be not unhappy. Enjoy your enlightened life and go forward bravely holding a flag of love and peace for this glorious aim which is to bring hope and light to all mankind, as you did on the battlefield. My brave friend! This is my most hearty hope to you and to our brothers who share the same fate. Please give my best love to them.

With kindest regards and hoping you will write to me soon,

Forever your sincere friend,

Tokugiro Torii.

P. S. Please guess my English.

“China is the Country of the Future”

Words of Abdul-Baha from Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, April 3, 1917.

CHINA, China, China, China-ward the Cause of Baha'o'llah must march! Where is that holy, sanctified Bahai to become the teacher of China! China has most great capability. The Chinese people are most simple-hearted and truth-seeking. The Bahai teacher of the Chinese people must first be imbued with their spirit, know their sacred literature, study their national customs and speak to them from their own standpoint, and their own terminologies. He must entertain no thought of his own, but ever think of their spiritual welfare. In China one can teach many souls and train and educate divine personages, each one of whom may become a bright candle of the world of humanity. Truly, I say they are free from any deceit and hypocrisies and are prompted with ideal motives.

Had I been feeling well, I would have taken a journey to China myself! China is the country of the future. I hope the right kind of teacher will be inspired to go to that vast empire to lay the foundation of the Kingdom of God, to promote the principles of divine civilization, to unfurl the banner of the Cause of Baha'o'llah and to invite the people to the banquet of the Lord!

For the last twenty years I have repeatedly emphasized the matter of spreading the Cause of God. In every city there must be organized assemblies of teaching-classes to teach the young how to teach the Cause and prepare them for this most important service.

Every Bahai must acquire the lessons of teaching. This will yield results. No other service is as important as this. This service of the promotion of the revelation of Baha'o'llah is the most confirmed service. Every time one service holds the most supreme importance.

There is one season to harrow the ground, another season to scatter the seeds, still another season to irrigate the fields and still another to harvest the crop. We must attend to these various kinds of activities in their proper seasons in order to become successful. Now is the time of seed-sowing, but it seems to me some of the believers are thinking about crop-getting. This will give them no results. Whosoever is thinking of any other thing, is wasting his time.

The promotion of the principles of Baha'o'llah is the most dominant issue before the believers of God.

while his hand closed tightly again over that other hand with the clasp that saves.

After our return to the hotel, in the upper hall, on the way to the apartment, we met the little chambermaid. In the bag there were about eighty quarters left over from the Mission, and all these Abdul-Baha gave to her, emptying them suddenly into her hands. Then he passed swiftly into his apartment, we following, all but Mr. Grundy, whom the girl stopped: “Oh, see what he has given me!” she said; whereupon, Mr. Grundy told her about the Mission. When he had finished, she exclaimed, “I will do the same with this money; I, too, will give it!”

Later, as we sat in a group around Abdul-Baha, he was at that moment saying, with a laugh, in reply to some question as to the advisability of charity: “Surely, give to the poor! If you give them only words, when they put their hands into their pockets, they will find themselves no richer for you." There came a little tap at the door, and there on the threshold stood the little chambermaid. Her eyes were glistening with tears, and in a sort of wonder and oblivious to the rest of us, she walked straight up to Abdul-Baha. "I came to say good-bye, sir," she said, timidly and brokenly, "and to thank you for all your goodness to me. I never expected such goodness, and—and to ask you to pray for me!" Her head bowed, her voice broke, she turned and went out quickly.

Abdul-Baha took me back to supper with him. As we drove up Broadway, that crudely glittering street, flashing with electric advertisements, he spoke to us smilingly: "Baha'o'llah," he said, "loved light. He could never get enough light. He taught us to economize in everything else, but to use light freely."

"It is marvelous," I said, "to be driving through this glitter of light, by the side of the Eternal Light."

"This is nothing," he answered; "this is only the beginning. We will be together in all the worlds of God. You cannot realize what that means; you cannot imagine it; you can form no conception here—here, in this elementary world—of what it will be to be with me in the eternal world!"

May 22nd.

Oh, those mornings at the Hotel Ansonia in the flower-filled rooms! Abdul-Baha would invariably keep me all the morning, calling me again and again to him. People thronged there, sometimes one hundred and fifty in a morning. Sitting in the outer room I would watch them go in, and come out all different—as if they had had a bath of life—freshened, quickened or like candles that had been lighted.

Today I went up early to his house, but not early enough. As I turned into 78th street, I saw him at the end of the block on his way to the garden, his turban a dazzling spot in the sunlight, his robes floating out with great grace as he walked.

Later on he returned. Miss Buckton had arrived by this time, with a poor, little waif of humanity, a Jewess. She was all in black, this poor child, with a pale face, careworn and tearstained.

I had been in the kitchen with Lua Getsinger. I came out upon a scene dominated by Abdul-Baha. He was sitting as usual in the window, the strong carving of his face thrown into high relief by masses of shadow, his turban and white aba bright in the sunlight. On one side, sat Miss Buckton, on the other this poor stricken child, while the biggest tears I have ever seen splashed from her eyes. She told him her unspeakably dismal story.

"Don't grieve, now, don't grieve," he said. He was very, very still, and I think he was calming her.

"My brother has been in prison for three years. He was imprisoned unjustly. It was not his fault. He was led, he was weak, a victim of others. He has four more years to serve. My father and mother are depressed all the time. My brother-in-law, who was our support, has just died."

There it was, the sum of human misery: poverty, weakness, disgrace, sorrow, despair, and the mounting pall of gloom.

"You must trust in God," said Abdul-Baha.

"But the more I trust, the worse things become."

"You have never trusted."

"But my mother reads the Psalms all the time; she doesn't deserve that God should desert her so. I read the Psalms myself,—the ninety-first Psalm and the twenty-third Psalm every night before I go to bed. I pray too."

"To pray is not to read Psalms. To pray is to trust in God, and to be submissive in all things to Him. Be submissive, then things will change for you. Put your family in God's hands. Love God's will. Strong ships are not conquered by the sea,—they ride the waves. Now be a strong ship, not a battered one."

Next Baha'o'llah declares that—

There shall be perfect equality between men and women.

For God, he says, has created all and has not permitted any distinction between the two. Why should man create a distinction which God does not recognize? In the kingdoms beneath man, while, indeed, there is distinction of gender, yet the differences between male and female are not found to be at all vital. The mare, for instance, is as strong and even more speedy than the horse. In the animal and vegetable kingdoms there is perfect equality between the male and female. That person the mirror of whose heart is the purest and cleanest, whose character is the highest is the nearest and dearest to God be that person male or female.

Next, Baha'o'llah has declared the necessity for a

that it may serve as a means of international communication and thus remove misunderstandings. This teaching as to the importance of a universal language is set forth in the Kitab'l Akdas, or "Book of Laws," published fifty years ago.

Next, there is a principle initiated by Baha'o'llah relative to Universal Education.

In other words, that all mankind shall become educated and that no illiteracy shall remain.

In which one of the sacred books do you find such a text?

Work an act of worship.

Next, Baha'o'llah teaches that it is incumbent upon every soul to be qualified as the practicer of some useful trade, craft or profession and that the honest practice of such trade, craft or profession is to be regarded as an act of devotion.

But the teachings of Baha'o'llah are limitless and there is no time now to go into further details. The point is that these teachings are new and that they are not to be found in any of the religious books of the past. Therefore if anyone should raise an objection and ask the question, "What has Baha'o'llah brought that is new," in response you should refer to and cite these statements.

In brief, the manifestation of Baha'o'llah is distinguished from every standpoint.

The majesty of his manifestation was remarkable.

The power of God shown in this dispensation is remarkable.

The efficacy of the Word of God therein is remarkable.

All the prophets during their life time were scoffed at. For instance, consider how his holiness Moses was scorned. The people called him a murderer. They said, "You killed a man and fled, for you were afraid of retribution and is it possible that now, after your former acts, you have come to be a prophet?" There are many similar episodes recorded not only of Moses but of the other prophets. How severe was their molestation! But his holiness Moses endured all these difficulties, for he had engaged in the spread of the Word of God.

How much they endeavored to belittle his holiness Christ! They placed upon his head a crown of thorns and paraded him through the streets and bazaars. One passer-by or on-looker would say, "Peace be upon thee, thou king of the Jews!" This, instead of being said with respect would be uttered in mockery. Another would bow to him backward and say in scornful tones: "Thou King of the Jews!" or "Lord of Lords, peace be upon thee!" Still another would spit upon his blessed countenance.

In short, the various forms of persecution which they used are mentioned in the books of the old cycle, whether Jewish, Roman or Greek,—the persecution which Christ suffered during the time of his manifestation. There were no praises offered, nay, rather, the only praise which was offered Christ was offered by the believers. His holiness Peter, for instance, was one of those who praised him; and his disciples who were firm believers eulogized him. But how numerous are the books which were written against his holiness Christ! Refer to the history of the church and find how many were the books written against him by the Roman, Greek and Egyptian philosophers. How many were the calumnies which they attributed to him and how many were the libels against him!

But during the manifestation of his holiness Baha'o'llah, from the day of his appearance to the day of his disappearance all the nations of the world acknowledged his greatness and even those who were his bitterest enemies have recorded in their books: "This man was truly great; his influence was majestic. This person was a glorious man; his power was tremendous, his speech was most eloquent, but alas, he was a misleader of the people." This was the nature of their eulogies. It is evident that the writer of such a statement as this that Baha'o'llah was a misleader of the people must have been an enemy; but nevertheless, before making that statement he had first written: "This person was most glorious, was most mighty, was peerless, his speech was most eloquent." After that the writer adds: "But, alas, he was a misleader of the people!" His enemies have even written poems about him, which, though intended for satire have in reality been praise. For instance, a certain poet opposed to his Cause, has said:

"Beware! Beware! lest ye approach this person for he is possessed of such power, of such an eloquent tongue that he is a sorcerer. This person charms men, he drugs them, he is a hypnotizer and hypnotizes them. Beware! Beware! lest you read his book, lest you follow his example, lest you associate with his companions, because they are the possessors of tremendous power and they are misleaders." He used these characterizations believing them to be terms of belittlement, unaware that they were in reality praises, because a wise man, after reading such a warning would say, "The power of this man must be tremendous if even his enemies acknowledge his greatness. Undoubtedly such a power is heavenly in character." This was one of the reasons that so many were moved to investigate. The more they wrote against Baha'o'llah the more the people were attracted and the greater the number who came to investigate the truth. They would say, "This is remarkable! This is a great man and we must investigate. We must look into this Cause to find out what it all means, what is the purpose, what are the proofs, that we may learn for ourselves." Thus the maligning statements of the enemies caused the people to become friends and approach.

In Persia the mullahs went so far as to go into the pulpits and from the pulpits to proclaim against the Cause of Baha'o'llah, throwing their turbans upon the ground,—a sign of great agitation,—and saying, "O people, this Baha'o'llah is a sorcerer, he is mesmerizing you, he is alienating you from your own religion, he is making you a follower of his. Beware! Beware! lest you read his book; beware! beware! lest you associate with his friends."

Of these very ones who were thus decrying him, Baha'o'llah says:

"They are my heralds; they are the ones who are proclaiming my message; they are the ones who are spreading my word. Pray that they may be multiplied, pray that their number may increase and that they may cry more vociferously. The more badly they speak of me and the greater their agitation, the more tremendous will be the efficacy of the Cause of God, the more luminous the Word and the greater the radiance of the divine sun. And eventually the gloomy darkness of the world will disappear and the light of Reality will shine, until the whole earth shall be illuminated."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. Prayer

Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you.

If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him.

(Words of Jesus.)

There is nothing sweeter in the world of existence than prayer.

Man must live in a state of prayer. The most blessed condition is the condition of prayer and supplication. Prayer is conversation with God. The greatest attainment or the sweetest state is none other than conversation with God. It creates spirituality, creates mindfulness and celestial feelings, begets new attractions of the Kingdom and engenders the susceptibilities of the higher intelligence. The highest attribute given to his holiness Moses is the following verse: "God carried along a conversation with Moses."

What is prayer? It is conversation with God. While man prays he sees himself in the presence of God. If he concentrates his attention he will surely at the time of prayer realize that he is conversing with God. Often at night I do not sleep, and the thoughts of this world weigh heavily on my mind. I toss uneasily in my bed. Then in the darkness of the night I get up and pray—converse with God. It is most sweet and uplifting.

Prayer and supplication are so effective that they inspire one's heart for the whole day with high ideals and supreme sanctity and calmness. One's heart must be sensitive to the music of prayer. He must feel the effect of prayer. He must not be like an organ from which softest notes stream forth without having consciousness of sensation in itself.

Prayer and supplication are two wings whereby man soars toward the heavenly mansion of the True One. However, verbal repetition of prayer does not suffice. One must live in a continual attitude of prayer. When man is spiritually free his mind becomes the altar of prayer and his heart the sanctuary of prayer. Then the meaning of the verse, "We will lift up from before his eyes the veil," will become fulfilled in him.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 18, 1914.)

Abdul-Baha said we should speak in the language of heaven—in the language of the spirit—for there is a language of the spirit and heart. It is as different from our language as our own language is different from that of the animals, who express themselves only by cries and sounds.

When we pray to God a feeling fills our hearts. This is the language of the spirit which speaks to God.

When in prayer we are freed from all outward things and turn to God, then it is as if in our hearts we heard the voice of God. Without words we speak, we communicate, we converse with God and hear the answer. It is said that Moses in the wilderness heard the voice of God. But that wilderness, that holy land was his own heart. All of us when we attain to a true spiritual condition can hear the voice of God speaking to us in that wilderness. We must strive to attain to that condition by being separated from all things and from the people of the world and by turning to God alone. It will take some effort on the part of man to attain to that condition but he must work for it, strive for it. We can attain to it by thinking and caring less for material things and more for the spiritual. The further we go from the one, the nearer we are to the other—the choice is ours!

Our spiritual perception, our inward sight must be opened so that we can see the signs and traces of God's spirit in everything. Everything can reflect to us the light of the spirit.

When asked if prayer was necessary since presumably God knows the wishes of all our hearts Abdul-Baha said:

"If one friend feels love for another he will wish to say so. Though he knows that the friend is aware that he loves him, he will still wish to say so. If there is anyone that you love do you not seek an opportunity to speak with him, to speak lovingly with him, to bring him gifts, to write him letters? If you do not feel such a desire it would be that you did not love your friend. God knows the wishes of all hearts. But the impulse to pray is a natural one springing from man's love to God.

"If there be no love, if there be no pleasure or spiritual enjoyment in prayer, do not pray. Prayer should spring from love, from the desire of the person to commune with God. Just as the lover never ceases from wishing to communicate with the beloved so does the lover of God always wish for constant communication with the Deity.

"Prayer need not be in words, but in thought and attitude. But if this love and this desire are lacking it is useless to try to force them. Words without love mean nothing. If a person talks to you as an unpleasant duty with no love or pleasure in his meeting with you, do you wish to converse with him? Efforts should first be made to make attachment to God."

When asked how this attachment is to be made, how the love of God is to be obtained, since there are many people in the world who admit the existence of a Deity but without any emotion, Abdul-Baha said:

"Knowledge is love. Study, listen to exhortations, think, try to understand the wisdom and greatness of God. . . . The soil must be fertilized before the seed be sown."

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from an article in The Fortnightly Review, June, 1911, by Miss E. S. Stevens.)

Man becomes like a stone unless he continually supplicates to God. The heart of man is like a mirror which is covered with dust and to cleanse it one must continually pray to God that it may become clean. The act of supplication is the polish which erases all worldly desires. The delight of supplicating and entreating before God cuts one's heart from the world. When the taste of man is nourished by honey he never likes to taste any other sweetmeat. Therefore, prayer is a key by which the doors of the kingdom are opened. There are many subjects which are difficult for man to solve. But during prayer and supplication they are unveiled and there is nothing that man cannot find out. Mohammed said: "Prayer is a ladder by which every one can ascend to heaven." If one's heart is cut from the world his prayer is the ascension to heaven.

In the highest prayer men pray only for the love of God, not because they fear him or hell or hope for bounty or heaven. Thus the souls in whose hearts the fire of love is enkindled are attracted by supplication. True supplication to God must therefore be actuated by love to God only. . . . When a man falls in love with a human being it is impossible for him to keep from mentioning the name of his beloved. How much more difficult is it to keep from mentioning the name of God when one has come to love him. One can pray for the dead and by so doing their spiritual condition will become better. The spiritual man finds no delight in anything save in commemoration of God. When one is confirmed his heart becomes rejoiced through the commemoration of God.

O thou daughter of the Kingdom! Know thou that supplication and prayer is the Water of Life. It is the cause of the vivification of existence and brings glad tidings and joy to the soul.

Show thou attention to this matter as far as thou canst and summon others to prayer and supplication.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from tablet to an American believer; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 14, 1906.)

Question: "What is prayer, attitude or word?"

Answer: "Prayer is both attitude and word, it depends upon the soul-condition. It is like a song, both words and music make the song. Sometimes the melody will move us, sometimes the words."

(Words of Abdul-Baha; Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 15.)

The prayerful attitude is attained by two means. Just as a man who is going to deliver a lecture prepares therefor and his preparation consists of certain meditations and notations, so the preparation for the prayerful attitude is detaching one's mind from all other thoughts save the thought of God at the time of prayer and then praying when the prayerful attitude shall be attained.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; A Heavenly Feast, p. 19.)

Supplication to God at morn and eve is conducive to the joy of hearts, and prayer causes spirituality and fragrance. Thou shouldst necessarily continue therein. (p. 186.)

Neglect not praying and communing in the gloomy midnights and morn and eve and offer glory unto thy Lord, the Supreme. (p. 413.)

Know that nothing will benefit thee in this life save supplication and invocation unto God, service in his vineyard, and, with a heart full of love, to be in constant servitude unto him. (p. 98.)

Draw nigh unto God and persevere in communion with thy Lord so that the

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!
Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

fire of God's love may glow more luminously in the heart, its heat grow stronger and give warmth to that region and its sound reach the Supreme Concourse. (p. 639.)

Supplicate unto him and beseech in the middle of the night and at early morn just as a needy and captive one beseeches. It is incumbent upon thee to turn unto the kingdom of God and to pray, supplicate and invoke during all times. This is the means by which thy soul shall ascend upward to the apex of the gift of God. (p. 695.)

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from tablets.)

O thou spiritual friend! Thou hast asked the wisdom of prayer. Know thou that prayer is indispensable and obligatory and man under no pretext whatsoever is excused therefrom unless he be mentally unsound or an insurmountable obstacle prevent him.

The wisdom of prayer is this, that it causes a connection between the servant and the True One because in that state of prayer man with all his heart and soul turns his face towards His Highness the Almighty, seeking his association and desiring his love and compassion. The greatest happiness for a lover is to converse with his beloved, and the greatest gift for a seeker is to become familiar with the object of his longing. That is why the greatest hope of every soul who is attracted to the kingdom of God is to find an opportunity to entreat and supplicate at the ocean of his utterance, goodness and generosity.

Besides all this, prayer and fasting is the cause of awakening and mindfulness and is conducive to protection and preservation from tests.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 683.)

As to thy question, "Why pray? What is the wisdom thereof, for God has established everything and executes all affairs after the best order and he ordains everything according to a becoming measure and puts things in their places with the greatest propriety and perfection—therefore what is the wisdom in beseeching and supplicating and in stating one's wants and seeking help?" Know thou, verily, it is becoming of a weak one to supplicate to the strong One and it behooveth a seeker of bounty to beseech the glorious, bountiful One. When one supplicates to his Lord, turns to him and seeks bounty from his ocean this supplication is by itself a light to his heart, an illumination to his sight, a life to his soul and an exaltation to his being.

Therefore, during thy supplications to God and thy reciting "Thy name is my healing" consider how thine heart is cheered, thy soul delighted by the spirit of the love of God and thy mind attracted to the kingdom of God! By these attractions one's ability and capacity increase. When the vessel is widened the water increaseth and when the thirst grows the bounty of the cloud becomes agreeable to the taste of man. This is the mystery of supplication and the wisdom of stating one's wants.

Man is eternally in a state of communion and prayer with the source of all good. The highest and most elevating state is the state of prayer. Prayer is communion with God. . . . Its efficacy is conditional upon the freedom of the heart from extraneous suggestions and mundane thoughts. The worshipper must pray with a detached spirit, unconditional surrender of the will, concentrated attention and a magnetic spiritual passion. His innermost being must be stirred with the ethereal breeze of holiness. If the mirror of his life is polished from the dross of all desires the heavenly pictures and star-like images of the kingdom of God will become fully reflected therein. Then he will be given power to translate these celestial forms into his own daily life and the lives of many thousands.

Automatic, formalistic prayers which do not touch the core of the heart are of no avail. How sweet, how delicious, how satisfying, how spiritual is prayer in the middle of the night! While all the eyes are closed the eyes of the worshipper are wide open. While all the ears are stopped the ears of the suppliant are attuned to the subtle music of God. While the majority of the people are fast asleep the adorer of the Ideal Beloved is wakeful. All around him there is a rare and delicate silence, deep, airy, ethereal silence, calm, magical and subtle—and there is the worshipper, communing with nature and the author of nature.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, September 3, 1914.)

Question: "How do saints become saints?"

Answer: "Through prayer, supplication, purification of the heart and good wishes."

(Words of Abdul-Baha; answers to some questions asked by some American pilgrims to Acca, spring of 1907. Mirza Moneer, translator.)

You have asked concerning approval of Christian Science treatment and healing.

Spirit has influence; prayer has spiritual effect. Therefore we pray, "O God! heal this sick one!" Perchance God will answer. Does it matter who prays? God will answer the prayer of every servant if that prayer is urgent. His mercy is vast, illimitable. He answers the prayers of all his servants. He answers the prayer of this plant. The plant prays potentially, "O God! Send me rain!" God answers this prayer and the plant grows. God will answer any one. He answers prayers potentially. Before we were born into this world did we not pray, "O God! Give me a mother; give me two fountains of bright milk; purify the air for my breathing; grant me rest and comfort; prepare food for my sustenance and living!" Did we not pray potentially for these needed blessings before we were created? When we came into this world did we not find our prayers answered? Did we not find mother, father, food, light, home and every other necessity and blessing although we did not actually ask for them? Therefore it is natural that God will give to us when we ask him. His mercy is all-encircling.

But we ask for things which the divine wisdom does not desire for us and there is no answer to our prayer. His wisdom does not sanction what we wish. We pray, "O God! Make me wealthy." If this prayer were universally answered human affairs would be at a standstill. There would be no one left to work in the streets, no one to till the soil, no one to build, no one to run the trains. Therefore it is evident that it would not be well for us if all prayers were answered. The affairs of the world would be interfered with, energies crippled and progress hindered. But whatever we ask for which is in accord with divine wisdom, God will answer. Assuredly!

For instance, a very feeble patient may ask the doctor to give him food which would be positively dangerous to his life and condition. He may beg for roast meat. The doctor is kind and wise. He knows it would be dangerous to his patient so he refuses to allow it. The doctor is merciful, the patient ignorant. Through the doctor's kindness the patient recovers; his life is saved. Yet the patient may cry out that the doctor was unkind, not good, because he refused to answer his pleading.

God is merciful. In his mercy he answers the prayers of all his servants when they are according to his supreme wisdom.

Christ said, "Go into thy chamber and shut the door, and pray to thy Father which is in heaven." Why did he say this? It is with the tongue that man expresses his feelings to another man. But with the language of the heart man prays to God. Though God is within the heart of man, is ever present in every place, yet man lifts up his eyes to heaven and prays as if God were there, seated upon a throne. Surely this is pure superstition! Why should he utter the words, "O heavenly Father?" Why should it be necessary for him to repeat prayers aloud and with the tongue? One reason for this is that if the heart alone is speaking the mind can be more easily disturbed. But repeating the words so that the tongue and heart act together enables the mind to become concentrated. Then the whole man is surrounded by the spirit of prayer and the act is more perfect.

Another reason is that by the outward signs of entering into his room and praying the attention of others is attracted and they begin to ask, "Why does he do this?" and are aroused to enquire about the truth.

Man may say, "I can pray to God whenever I wish, when the feelings of my heart are drawn to God; when I am in the wilderness, when I am in the city, or wherever I may be. Why should I go where others are gathered upon a special day, at a certain hour, to unite my prayers with theirs when I may not be in a frame of mind for praying?" To think in this way is useless imagination for where many are gathered together their force is greater. Separate soldiers fighting alone and individually have not the force of a united army. If all the soldiers in this spiritual war gather together then their united spiritual feelings help each other and their prayers become more acceptable.

A wise schoolmaster may send his scholars out to play or to practice gymnastics for an hour so that their minds and bodies may be refreshed and during the hour of the lesson they may learn it better. If the teacher proves that his pupils are advancing no onlooker has a right to object to his system or to question his wisdom and say, "Why does he waste the boys' time?" If a wise father plays with his children who has a right to say it is not good for them? He calls them to come to him as the hen calls her chicks, he knows that they are little and must be coaxed along, coaxed along, because they are young and tiny.

For the time of Moses the law of "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth" was ordained. It is very hard to see the wisdom of this, but the people then were in the wilderness and needed teaching. Different teachings were needed for different people. If you give the same teachings to all some might be retarded by them instead of helped. Christ taught some things to his disciples which he commanded them not to tell the Pharisees. It is not for the soldier to question the general's orders. If he knows him to be the real general he must carry out and obey his orders exactly. If the general orders that a certain place must be taken and held the soldiers might say, "Why risk so much by leaving this secure and safe position for a point which is the aim and target of the enemy?" But the general knows that this is the important point which must be held at all costs. The true doctor, the true teacher, the real captain must be obeyed.

If every man knew what was best for his health, if every man could teach himself, if every soldier knew how to fight by himself, if every passenger could sail the ship, what need would there be for the doctor, for the teacher, for the general or for the captain? As he has not this wisdom he must first ascertain their truth and then follow their directions. Until he does this he cannot advance.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: from notes of Mrs. L. A. C. Dreyfus-Barney.

One of our friends was sitting silent. Abdul-Baha asked her to speak. "I would rather pray quietly in thy presence," she said.

Abdul-Baha: "Mayst thou ever be in a prayerful attitude. In all the worlds of existence there is nothing more important than prayer. Prayer confers spirituality upon the heart."

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 26, 1913.)

Thou hast asked what shouldst thou do and what prayer shouldst thou offer in order to become informed of the mysteries of God. Pray thou with an attracted heart and supplicate thou with a spirit stirred by the glad tidings of God. Then the doors of the kingdom of mysteries shall be opened before thy face and thou shalt comprehend the realities of all things.

Asked if we are not able through love and faith to make those who have departed from this life hear of the Cause who had not heard of it while here, Abdul-Baha replied:

"Yes, surely sincere prayer always has its effect and it has a great influence in the other world. We are never cut off from those who are there. The real and genuine influence is not in this world but in that other."

(Words from Abdul-Baha, from Notes of Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford, Paris, France, October, 1911.)

Supplication and prayer on behalf of others will surely be effective. When hearts are united, when faces are turned towards the kingdom of Abha, surely enlightenment will be the result.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, from tablet to Seattle Assembly of Bahais; translated in Haifa, Syria, August 14, 1914.)

In answer to the question, "Why should one pray through Christ as the Christians do, or through another manifestation of God and why should we not pray to God direct?" Abdul-Baha said:

"If we wish to pray we must have some object upon which to concentrate. If we turn to God we must direct our hearts to a certain center. If man worships God otherwise than through his Manifestation he must first form a conception of God and that conception is created by his own mind. As the finite cannot comprehend the Infinite so God is not to be comprehended in this fashion. That which man conceives with his own mind he comprehends. That which he can comprehend is not God. That conception of God which a man has is but a phantasm, an image, an imagination, an illusion. There is no connection between such a conception and the Supreme Being.

“If a man wishes to know God he must find him in the perfect mirror, Christ or Baha’o’llah. In either of these mirrors he will see reflected the Sun of Divinity.

“As we know the physical sun by its splendor, by its light and heat so we know God, by the spiritual sun, when he shines forth from the temple of Manifestation by his attributes of perfection, by the beauty of his qualities and by the splendor of his light. The Manifestations of God are the focal centers of the world.

Read Some Answered Questions, p. 268.

Turn thy face sincerely toward God; be severed from all save God; be ablaze with the fire of the love of God; be purified and sanctified, and beseech and supplicate unto God. Verily, he responds unto those who invoke him, is near unto those who pray unto him. And he is thy companion in every loneliness, and befriends every exile.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from tablet to American believer; translated by Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, Boston, February, 1908.)

Regarding thy question about the morning prayer. Both meanings are included in the word dawn—the natural dawn, and the dawn of the kingdom. When a soul rises in the morning from sleep before everything else he must commemorate the name of God in order that he may obtain spirituality and illumination.

(Words of Abdul-Baha; from tablet to an American believer; translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 5, 1914, Mt. Carmel, Haifa.)

Someone present asked how it was that in prayer and meditation the heart often turns with instinctive appeal to some friend who has passed into the next life.

Abdul-Baha answered: “It is a law of God’s creation that the weak should lean upon the strong. Those to whom you turn may be mediators of God’s power to you, even as when on earth. But it is the one Holy Spirit which strengthens all men.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Abdul-Baha in London, p. 98.)

Those who have ascended have different attributes from those who are still on earth, yet there is no real separation. In prayer there is a mingling of station, a mingling of condition. Pray for them as they pray for you.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Abdul-Baha in London, p. 97.)

Read Words of Baha’o’llah: Book of Ighan, pp. 28-29.

O God and assister of all!
Verily, thou art the hearer of prayers, and verily, thou art powerful in all things! (Abdul-Baha.)

The heavens of thy mercy and the oceans of thy bounty are so vast that thou hast never disappointed those who begged of thee nor refused those who willed to come to thee! (Baha’o’llah.)

"Teach the Cause! This is a matter that succeeds most miraculously"

Words of Abdul-Baha to Pilgrims

From the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 30, 1914

NOW that you are returning to your respective homes you must be like unto ignited candles and set aglow the hearts of all the believers; now like unto a company of tuneful birds you must sing every melody. I have done my part, I have sung my songs and have played almost every tune. Now it is your turn. For awhile I must sit silent, ever straining my ears to hear your anthems of praise. I love to listen to your spiritual symphonies and divine harmonies, ever flying upward and filling the world with the soothing music of peace and consolation. God willing, you will fulfill my eager expectations. O! I am sure you will not disappoint me. The confirmations of the Kingdom shall descend upon you, and the Supreme reinforcement shall surround you. Rest ye assured; let your hearts abide in peace. I ever expect to receive cheering news from you. May you become the cause of the happiness of the hearts of the believers. May all the friends become glad, rejoiced and grateful through meeting you and write me that these pilgrims who passed through our cities were enkindled, attracted, eloquent and willing to serve their fellowmen!

In short, God willing, may every one of you, as you leave this Holy Land, become a herald of the Cause, a harbinger of the establishment of the Kingdom.

May each one of you shine upon each city through which you pass as a radiant star. This is the Day wherein whomsoever arises to spread the Cause of God, the cohorts of the Supreme Concourse will assist him. Today the magnet of spiritual confirmation is teaching the Cause. Although the threshold of the Blessed Perfection was my heart, my spirit and the happiness of my soul, yet, notwithstanding this, I left everything and traveled around the world proclaiming at the top of my voice the glad tidings of the Kingdom of Abha. No affair today is as confirmed as that of the promulgation of the principles of this Cause. As much as they can the believers of God must occupy their time in conveying the Message.

Teach the Cause; this is a matter that succeeds, succeeds most miraculously. Praise be to God! You are beneath the protection of the Blessed Perfection, you are environed by his bestowals. What favor do you wish greater than this? When a number of souls are beneath the protecting wings of an important personage they consider themselves very fortunate; now, praise be to God, you are beneath the protection and preservation of the Blessed Perfection. Therefore, how great must be your happiness! As you go out of this room dedicate your lives to teaching the Cause; gird up the loins of endeavor and put forward extraordinary energy.

When a Cause is confirmed it is evident and manifest from its signs. For example, we say this earth is confirmed. Why? Because, as a result of the downpour of rain and the shining of the sun it is covered with green plants and flowers.

Again I say, teach the Cause! Do not tarry! Fill the goblet of every seeker with the wine of the love of God! . . .

Green Acre in 1917

SINCE last year's pentecostal outpouring on the quiet hills by the Piscataqua, "The River of Light," the friends of Green Acre have been counting the days until they might return thereto in the summer of 1917.

During the past year Miss Sarah Farmer, the founder of Green Acre, has ascended into the Supreme Concourse. A beautiful Bahai service was held at her home in South Eliot, on the occasion of her passing. Her saintly and luminous spirit will rest over the conferences this summer even more gloriously than during last August for now she is free from the prison-house of the body.

May the new and mighty wave of spiritual power which has this past year swept the Bahai world rise and burst into such splendor at Green Acre this summer that it may illumine the entire continent.

Abdul-Baha has taken great joy in Green Acre and made radiant predictions for its future. Among his first words upon his return to the city of Acca in Palestine from his world journey through Europe and America were these concerning Green Acre.

"There is a place in America," he said one evening when the friends had assembled to meet him, "called Green Acre. It is customary during the months of summer for people of different creeds and religions to gather there and the leaders of various movements and thoughts to deliver lectures and addresses. Thus they have combined most effectively education and recreation. The significance and usefulness of this unique place lie in the fact that it offers a free and unrestricted platform to the citizens of every nation and the adherents of every religion. Thus every subject is discussed with that full liberty of conscience which is enjoyed in the United States.

"The founder of these conferences wherein every nationality and religion is worthily represented, is Sarah J. Farmer. To her is due all praise and commendation for having thus initiated this wonderful plan which must be carried out to its logical conclusion—a universal platform for all mankind, irrespective of race, religion or nationality.

"As the name, Green Acre, is similar to that of Acca, when I arrived there I was made very happy. I spent one week in that green and delightful Acca. They had a large meeting every evening at which many people gathered, and I spoke to them on spiritual subjects. I met there many cultured and educated people. It is a most beautiful country place. Its water is pure, its air salubrious and its atmosphere is spiritual. There are many pine woods; and under a cluster of fine old trees people gather to hear lectures. Mirza Abul Fazl, when in Green Acre, used to give some of his addresses under these pines, so they are known as the 'Persian pines.' I went there one afternoon; many people had gathered, and I spoke on the Bahai teachings."

While sojourning in Paris, on his return from America en route to Palestine, Abdul-Baha pictured to some friends interested in Green Acre, the ultimate ideals on which as a sure foundation its future should be built.

"In Green Acre you must concentrate your forces around the one all important fact—the investigation of reality. Expend all your thoughts on this—that the union of opinions and expressions may be obtained

“If the circle of the activities of Green Acre be expanded so that each year the leaders of every religion and thought may associate with each other with perfect love and amity there will be good results.

“The aim of those souls who deliver addresses or who take part in the discussions must be the investigation of reality and not the presentation of dogmas and unprofitable, antiquated theories. The chief objects of Green Acre conferences must be the furtherance of universal peace, investigation of reality, brotherhood, tolerance, sympathy to all mankind, the cultivation of a better understanding between the nations of the world, the elimination of dogmas and superficialities, the illumination of the hearts with the light of truth, mutual assistance and co-operation, social service, the study of the fundamental principles of all the religions and their comparative co-ordination. Green Acre must carry away this palm of victory “Personal ambition must be thrown to the winds and all the available will-power directed towards the realization of the universal objects. If you outline such a practical, universal, all-inclusive programme and then invite me I will come again to Green Acre. Lay such a foundation that the influence of the confederation of religions and sects may permeate to all parts of the world from Green Acre; and Green Acre for the future ages and cycles may become the standard bearer of the oneness of the world of humanity. I will pray for the fulfilment of this truth.”

Early last winter the following tablet was received by a believer regarding the service of Green Acre, Abdul-Baha's latest word about the “Green Acca” of America:

“O thou maid-servant of God! Thy letter was received. Thy desire to serve Green Acre is in reality a very important matter. This name (Green Acre) must appear with all its significant meaning, that is Green Acre must become the reflection of the plain of Acca, and attain to the utmost verdancy, greenness and artistic beauty. Its charms and wonder lie in this, that it may become the center of the Bahais and the cry of ‘Ya-Baha-El-Abha’ be raised from all its direction. I hope that all thy aspirations may become fully realized. Upon thee be greeting and praise.”

“Plant thou a tree which may yield sweet fruits throughout all eternity”

(A Recent Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Maria P. Wilson, Malden, Mass.)

O thou my respected hostess!

The days that I was a guest in thy home are ever before my sight. They then include happy days, for they passed away in joy.

Truly, I say, with all thy power thou didst serve us and displayed towards us the utmost kindness. This service appeared through the sincerity of thine intention, thy love for humanity, and thy praiseworthy morals. At present, also, thou art engaged day and night in the service of the Kingdom of God, and art occupied in the promotion of heavenly teachings. Plant thou a tree which may yield sweet fruits throughout all eternity. Scatter thou such pure seeds which may produce various crops in the future ages and cycles. This is made possible through self-sacrifice in the path of God, and complete evanescence in the love of God—so that no trace of self, ego and desires be left behind; thus thou mayest consecrate thyself wholly and entirely to the heavenly Beloved.

Convey on my behalf to each and all the friends—men and women—my loving and yearning greetings.

Upon thee be greeting and praise.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

The Promotion of the Teachings of God in Japan Budget from Agnes B. Alexander, containing Tablets from Abdul-Baha

12 Ichibancho, Kojimachi,
Tokyo, Japan, Feb. 9, 1917.

To the STAR OF THE WEST.

Beloved friends:—On the evening of the 7th, great joy came to this home and I hasten to tell you of it that you may all rejoice with us. A wonderful spirit had uplifted me all that day; I felt that when I returned home in the evening I would find a message from Abdul-Baha. I looked for the mail the first thing on returning home and there it was enclosed in a letter from our brother, Mr. Hannen of Washington—a letter for Fukuta San from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab and one for me, embodying in them Tablets from our beloved Abdul-Baha. I cannot tell you of the wonderful peace and joy that has overflowed in my heart ever since. This is the first time since receiving word from Abdul-Baha to come to Japan that any message from him has reached here and Fukuta San is blessed by being the first Japanese in his own land to receive words “from that pen whose greatness, glory and splendor will shine down the ages, long after we have passed away from this earth and the traces of our service in His mighty Cause have appeared in dazzling clearness.” These wonderful words were written by a sister many years ago.

At this time the Cause is certainly spreading with great bounds in this land. Our brother, Mr. Kenzo Torikai, who is visiting his native home after an absence of twelve years, has been awake giving the Message wherever he goes. During the past week several Tokyo papers have had articles in reference to the Bahai Movement some of them giving my name and address which has brought many inquiries and many letters. Most of these are in Japanese, so that part of the work falls to Fukuta San and many come or send for the Japanese Bahai book which we keep here. The translation of one letter from a young girl in the north of Japan has touched me very much. One of the young students wrote

ALL the individuals of humanity are farmers. Every soul sows a certain kind of seed, but at the season of the harvest there will be gathered no result, except from the seeds which are sown by the believers of God. That alone will obtain heavenly blessing. Reflect that His Holiness Christ and His Holiness Mohammed scattered such holy seeds the fruits of which are being gathered till now; but all the other farmers were finally doomed to regret and disappointment.

the translation for me and they tell me in the Japanese language it is indeed a most beautiful letter:

My dear Miss Agnes Alexander:

I am a young girl student who lives in the northern and remotest part of this mainland. I was greatly influenced when I read in the Yomiuri Shimbun a few days ago that you are endeavoring to promulgate in Japan the Truth of the great Persian teacher, Baha'o'llah, who teaches the equality of man and woman, racial unity and universal peace, etc., and I am one of the great admirers of your strong and never yielding spirit for the religion.

What noble and wise women there are in your country like you and Miss Stinson* (the aviatrix who is here in Japan now), and I cannot help envying you and her. Especially what glory and pride it is to your nation to have a lady like you who is so noble and godlike-hearted acting day and night to teach our people your new Faith!

I will pray to God at my country town here in Japan that the religion, which you are promulgating may be believed by all the people of this world. If I were in Tokyo, I would like, I am sure, to help you in teaching, even though my power be poor—waiting upon near your knees (this is a Japanese expression). But, alas, I am far from Tokyo and there is no way to study the religion but by the little help of newspapers, so I wish to go to the capital for this purpose without the knowledge of my parents,

*Miss Katherine Stinson, 19-year-old aviatrix, made daring flights in Japan and China and where, "For the first time in their lives," she says, "the Chinese and Japanese had to look up to a woman."

Upon her return to the United States, in an interview, she said: "The Japanese are really the most polite people in the world, and the Chinese were just lovely, but I'm certainly glad I'm an American. They make their wives walk ten paces in the rear on all public occasions, and I wouldn't walk behind any man. I want to walk beside him."

"The women in China and Japan are waking up, though. There is a big feminist movement. In Japan a Mrs. Fujisawa, who is one of the but I am very sorry I have no money for the journey. I will pray that the religion will be successfully promulgated by you all over the world and I look forward to the day when it will be realized. I will never forget your glorious name as it has taken root in my bosom and also you will never forget me. It seems to me by inspiration that I must assist you in teaching when I come to womanhood. I pray you will do splendidly your calling! Be blest my dear sister! Good-by. Yours truly, Ritsuko (Miss).

The world is going through great changes and we know not what a day will bring forth, but we can only "be still and know that I am God."

I enclose to you the words of life from our glorious beloved, Abdul-Baha, his words which never fail. Oh! what will they not mean to this country. The light and truth already shines through the clouds and nothing can prevent its shining.

Forever your sister in the Great Cause,

Agnes B. Alexander.

TABLETS FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Agnes Alexander—Upon her be greeting and praise!

O thou heavenly daughter!

Thy letter through Mr. Hannen received from Japan, likewise the letters leaders of the woman movement there, gave me a check for $2,500 because she was so glad to see a woman do something that no other woman had done in Japan. That was when, clad in a kimono, I made my flight over the city of Tokio. The Japanese were wonderful then. They are intensely interested in aviation, and all the city turned out. They had the aviation field fenced in with slender bamboo rods. The crowd was tremendous and the interest keen, but the Japanese were so polite that not a rod was broken."

In China Miss Stinson made a flight from the grounds of the sacred temple of agriculture over the residence of the president, which was formerly the Chinese imperial palace.—Editors.

of Mr. Fukuta. The contents of both letters imparted exceeding joy, for each word was an eloquent tongue explaining the wonders of the love of God and elucidating the story of the attraction of the heart with the breaths of the holy spirit.

Praise be to God, that thou hast become assisted to promulgate the word of God in Japan. Ere long this circle in Japan will be enlarged, obtaining heavenly blessing.

God says in the glorious Koran: "A seed, growing out of it seven ears and every ear containing one hundred kernels, and God is able to double this for whomsoever He willeth." This verse means this: Whenever the word of truth is proclaimed it is like unto a seed which sown in a pure soil brings forth seven ears and every ear produces one hundred kernels and God says again that for whomsoever he desireth he will double this number, that is: He will make the seven hundred kernels fourteen hundred.

Now I hope that thy call in Japan may be like unto that seed, so that it may obtain heavenly blessing and benediction and the souls be educated and taught the oneness and singleness of God, the truthfulness of the prophets and the usefulness of the divine teachings.

An answer is written to the letters of Mr. Fukuta and forwarded. Present it to him.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Haifa, Syria, Oct. 27, 1916.)

To Mr. Fulsuta San.

O thou who art guided by the Light of Guidance!

Thy first and second letters were received: Praise be to God, that the light of guidance shone forth, the glass of the heart became luminous and the darkness of ignorance dispelled. The Most Great Guidance is a crown, the brilliant gems of which will shine upon all the future ages and cycles. If it is placed on the head of a servant, he will become the object of the envy of the kings; for this is an imperishable crown and an everlasting sovereignty. God says in the great Koran: "He specializes with His mercy whomsoever He desireth."

Praise be to God, that thou hast become specialized with divine favor and bounty. Thou didst become awake, beheld the lights and hearkened unto the melody of the Supreme Concurrence. In the glorious Gospel it is said: "Freely ye have received, freely give." That is you have found this bestowal; you have paid nothing for it: therefore give it to others without any exchange. Now with a heavenly power, with a lordly gift, with spiritual morals, with god-like deeds and with supreme glad-tidings be thou engaged in the promotion of the teachings of God in Japan. The confirmation of the Kingdom shall encompass you and the cohorts of the realm of might will grant triumph.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Haifa, Syria, Oct. 28, 1916.)

To Miss Agnes Alexander.

O thou daughter of the kingdom!

Thy letter dated July 15th, 1916, received. Its contents indicated that thou hast organized a meeting in Japan. Consider thou what a great favor God has bestowed that such spiritual meetings are being held in Tokyo and such heavenly gifts are being distributed! God says in the Koran: "The example of the people of faith is like unto a field which obtains freshness and verdancy from the rain descending from the clouds, attaining to full fruition and finding the blessing of the Kingdom! There is no doubt that day by day it will grow and develop and in the end the ears of the sheaves will be laden with God's benediction, bringing forth an hundred fold."

Now, ye are the fields of the plain of Reality and are under the protection of the educative rays of the Sun of Truth.

At every moment ye obtain a new vitality from the rain of divine bestowals and ere long ye will produce full grown seeds which are blessed by the care and attention of the Divine Farmer. There is no doubt that such will be the end.

Convey on my behalf the utmost longing greeting to the friends residing in Tokyo as well as the recently arrived travellers and say to them: All the individuals of humanity are farmers. Every soul sows a certain kind of seed, but at the season of the harvest there will be gathered no result, except from the seeds which are sown by the believers of God. That alone will obtain heavenly blessing. Reflect that His Holiness Christ and His Holiness Mohammed scattered such holy seeds the fruits of which are being gathered till now; but all the other farmers were finally doomed to regret and disappointment.

Upon ye be greeting and praise.

Seed Sowing

DURING the last few months our Persian brother, Ishtea Ebn Kalanter, has been travelling to and fro in the Middle West, speaking with clear, brilliant eloquence before large audiences in Indianapolis, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cincinnati and many other places. Recently he spoke to an audience of 700 in the Unitarian Church of Cincinnati. There was a driving rain but the church was packed to the doors to hear of the glad tidings which Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha have brought to this world.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, despite his medical practice, through which he serves all who come to him with true Bahai bounty, has devoted his Sundays to seed-sowing journeys. He has recently spoken in the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Minnesota and Missouri.

Thus are our eastern brothers sowing the seeds of that new spiritual tree which has arisen in the East "for the healing of the nations."

A Bahai Library

FOR seven years the STAR OF THE WEST has been publishing in its pages addresses and Tablets of Abdul-Baha and extracts from the glorious writings of Baha'o'llah. These now form a beautiful library of Bahai thought and Bahai news. To make this library easily accessible to the friends of Abdul-Baha the editors of the STAR OF THE WEST are having each year's numbers attractively bound in separate volumes. These volumes may be had from the Bahai News Service at the price of $2.50 a volume, postage or expressage additional.

Especial attention is called to Volume

II with its picture of Abdul-Baha in Paris and London, and to Volumes III and IV with their accounts of Abdul-Baha's addresses and journeys in America. Volume VII is especially significant because it contains the Five Great Teaching Tablets and the first installments of the remarkable compilation on the "Divine Art of Living."

All the volumes are full of radiant words from the heaven of light. Many of the friends are securing the entire set lest they miss any of the divine sentences which in these last few years have been flooding our western world.

STAR OF THE WEST

The Divine Art of Living

A COMPILATION BY MRS. MARY M. RABB

(Chapter I appeared in issue No. 16, Vol. VII; Chapter II appeared in issue No. 18, Vol. VII; Chapter III appeared in issue No. 2, Vol. VIII; Chapter IV appeared in issue No. 4, Vol. VIII.)

CHAPTER V

Faith, Severance, Sacrifice

NOW faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen. . . . By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the Word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which appear. . . .

He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him. By faith Noah, being warned of God concerning things not seen as yet, moved with Godly fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house. . . . By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out unto a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he became a sojourner in the land of promise, as in a land not his own, dwelling in tents, with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. For he looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God. By faith Moses forsook Egypt not fearing the wrath of the king for he endured as seeing Him who is invisible. . . .

And what more shall I say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Japhthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets, who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong. . . .

Others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword: they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, ill-treated—of whom the world was not worthy—wandering in deserts and mountains and caves and the holes of the earth. . . .

Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.

(Hebrews; from chapters 11, 12.)

All things are possible to him that believeth. . . . Verily I say unto you if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed . . . ye shall say unto this mountain, . . . Be thou taken up and cast into the sea and it shall be done. And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

(Words of Jesus in the Gospels.)

I say unto you that anyone who will arise in the Cause of God at this time shall be filled with the Spirit of God. And God will send his hosts from heaven to help you and nothing shall be impossible to you if you have faith. And now I give you a commandment which shall be for a covenant, . . . that ye have faith; that your faith be steadfast as a rock which no storms can move, which nothing can disturb, and that it endure through all things even to the end. . . . Be not shaken in your faith. . . . As ye have faith so shall your powers and blessings be. This is the balance; this is the balance; this is the balance!

(Words of Abdul-Baha from An Early Pilgrimage by Mrs. May Maxwell.)

The foundation of praiseworthy virtues is faith. The greater the faith of man the more illumined his life. Faith is a miracle; it has a wonder-working power. Its spiritual influence refines the character, suffers man to become humble and meek, places in his heart the fear of God, prompts him to devote his time to humanitarian deeds, spiritualizes his nature, exalts his ideals and enkindles his lamp. The greater the faith of man the more numerous will be his philanthropic actions. Faith is like unto the trees, deeds are like unto the fruits. Faith is like unto the lamp, deeds are like unto the light.

Question: What is real faith?

Answer: Faith outwardly means to believe in the message a Manifestation brings to the world and accept the fulfillment in him of that which the prophets have announced. But in reality faith embodies three degrees: to confess with the tongue; to believe in the heart; to show forth in our actions. These three things are essential to true faith. The important requirement is the love of God in the heart. For instance, we say a lamp gives light. In reality the oil which burns produces the illumination, but the lamp and the chimney are necessary before the light can express itself. The love of God is the light. The tongue is the chimney or the medium by which that love finds expression. It also protects the light. Likewise the members of the body reflect the inner light by their actions. So the tongue confesses in speech and the parts of the body confess in their actions the love of God within the soul of a true believer. Thus it was that Peter confessed Christ by his tongue and his actions. When the tongue and actions reflect the love of God the real qualities of man are revealed. Christ said "You will know them by their fruits"; that is, by their deeds. If a believer shows forth divine qualities we know that true faith is in his heart. If we do not find evidence of these qualities, if he is selfish or wicked, he has not the true kind of faith. Faith is mentioned in the Scriptures as the "second birth" or "everlasting life." In this day true belief is the Spirit of God. Many claim to possess true faith, but it is rare, and when it exists it cannot be destroyed.

By our actions we reveal what is growing in the heart. Actions are mirrors of the soul . . .

Faith is not so much what we believe as what we carry out.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, pp. 11-12.)

Man must prove whatsoever he speaketh by deeds and actions. If he claims faith he must live and do according to the teachings of the Kingdom of Abha.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From a Tablet to two Chicago believers.)

Faith is the magnet which draws the confirmation of the Merciful One. Service is the magnet which attracts the heavenly strength.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 62.)

We hear there is an invention; we believe it is good; then we come and see it. We hear there is wealth; we see it; we work hard for it; we become rich ourselves and help others. We know and see the Light, we go close to it, are warmed by it, and reflect its rays on others. This is real faith, and thus we receive power to become the eternal sons of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Abdul-Baha in London, p. 59.)

Question: How can one increase in faith?

Answer: You must strive. A child is uninformed. Through study he obtains knowledge. Search for truth.

There are three kinds of faith. First, that which is from tradition and birth. For example: A child is born of Mohammedan parents; he is a Mohammedan. This faith is weak, traditional faith. Second, that which comes from knowledge and is the faith of understanding. This is good. But there is a better, the faith of practice. This is the real faith.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Abdul-Baha in London, p. 59.)

Although a person of good deeds is acceptable at the threshold of the Almighty, yet it is first to know and then to do. Although a blind man produces a most wonderful and exquisite art, yet he is deprived of seeing it. See how most animals labor for man, draw loads and facilitate travel; yet as they are ignorant they do not receive any reward for this toil and labor. The cloud rains; roses and hyacinths grow, the plains and meadows, the gardens and trees become green and blossom, yet they do not realize the results and outcome of their activities. Therefore, they are not praised and commended, . . . This lamp is lighted, but as it has not a conscious knowledge of itself no one has become glad because of it.

Moreover, a soul of excellent deeds and good manners will undoubtedly advance, no matter from what horizon he beholds the light radiating. Herein lies the difference. By faith is meant first, conscious knowledge; second, the practice of good deeds.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 549.)

Praise be to God, you are firm in the Covenant and steadfast in the Testament. Firmness and steadfastness are the greatest conditions of faith and assurance. As long as the tree does not send its root to the bowels of the earth it will not become secure and established, neither will it grow and develop into full stature. But if it is not firmly rooted it will be broken by the blowing of one strong wind.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 24, 1914.)

There is no wonder in confessing the appearance of the Kingdom of God, but true wonder consists in good deeds, obedience to the commands and teachings of the True Lord, and firmness in this path, even when the storm is at its height.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet to American believer; received January 5, 1904.)

One of the requirements of faithfulness is that thou mayest sacrifice thyself and in the divine path, close thine eye to every pleasure and strive with all thy soul that thou mayest disappear and be lost, like unto a drop, in the ocean of the love of God.

The Manifestation of God is a perfect example of real obedience. Like him we must sacrifice every thing, every plan, every longing and ideal must be given up completely to the will of God. We must look to God for all we desire, all we wish to attain. The will of God must work out its purpose in us. Our human will must be laid down in sacrifice and love. Abdul-Baha has given everything in sacrifice and obedience to the will of God. . . . All our soul-powers, our outward self, our inward self must be consecrated to God in service and sacrifice. Even life must be given if necessary. If we have not reached this station of nothingness we have not attained to real obedience to the will of God. A pupil must submit entirely to the will of the teacher. This is true sacrifice, true obedience.

Real obedience and real sacrifice are identical, they are absolute readiness to follow and perform whatever you are called upon to do in the Cause of God. When you really love God you will be willing to sacrifice everything and submit yourself entirely to His will. Consecrate yourself wholly to Him. His will is everything. His service is paramount.

As to the fact that man must entirely forget himself. By this is meant that he should arise in the mystery of sacrifice, and that is the disappearance of mortal sentiments and the extinction of blamable morals which constitute the temporal gloom, and not that the physical health should be changed into weakness and debility.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 244.)

Asceticism is not necessary. A soul grows by the exercise of human virtues and the observance of human morals and by divine favor. The extreme asceticism of the saints was superstition. The monasticism of the Christian church was mistaken. St. Paul was responsible for much of this because in one of his epistles he praises those who do not marry and prophesied that sects would arise which would not marry. St. Paul disapproved of marriage. But God did not give us good gifts that we should reject them. He created all these blessings that His servants may bless Him.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From an article in Fortnightly Review, June, 1911, by Miss E. S. Stevens.)

In this day or dispensation asceticism is of the spiritual type, for spiritual asceticism is right and is productive of results. On the one hand a man may attain virtues by the inherent force of his nature; on the other hand these virtues may be due to the weakness of his nature. For instance, an infant is detached from the world. That severance or detachment is due to its weakness. But a wise man having passed to the stage of maturity will likewise be detached from the world and care nothing for the world. Severance at that stage is indicative of inherent strength of character. A withered arm is incapable of stoning or striking anybody. That harmlessness is not due to virtue, it is due to imperfection. But if a person whose arm and hand are well and whole shall not strike, then it is a symptom of strength and virtue. A man who is a mute and dumb cannot lie, but that lack of lying is an indication of his weakness, not of his perfection. But he whose tongue speaketh and yet lieth not is verily mighty. . . . A dead man is harmless, no harm can come from him, but that is not eulogy. But if he be alive and harmless that is eulogizing him. Now we come to the subject.

By enduring ascetic hardships the powers of nature will undergo dissolution which will result in great weakness whereby one is made incapable of doing anything. He will not show any temper. He will not do any evil. He will not cause a riot; he is quiet. He is wronged; he is like a lamb. But this is due to weakness. But he who has attained spiritual asceticism acquires these attributes by strength of character. When a man by nature, that is to say, by some imperfection of nature, is incapable of committing uncommendable acts, that is nothing in his favor. But if he by sheer force of will and spiritual training attains to a state of character which prevents him from doing such things, this is a great credit to him. The insane man is entirely detached from all bonds and ties; he is absolutely free from all attachments. But this is not a commendation to him. But when the disciples of Christ, who were in a normal state of mind and body let go of everything in life, that is indeed commendable. Physical asceticism will in the course of time cause absolute atrophy of the parts, resulting in the greatest weakness. There will be no love of transgression, no attachment to this life, no covetousness, no aggressiveness, but all this is due to great weakness of powers. But spiritual asceticism will help one to attain to such blossoming of powers as will enable him to make up his mind against the things that are not to be and will encourage him in the things to be. In this dispensation there is no physical or material asceticism. The spiritual are ascetics, and this asceticism is expressed by training souls and educating humanity in morals and in the acquisition of the qualities of the Kingdom.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Akka Lights; Notes of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Hannen, February, 1909.)

“Fasting is a symbol. Fasting signifies abstinence from lust. Physical fasting is a symbol of that abstinence, and is a reminder; that is, just as a person abstains from physical appetites, he is to abstain from self-appetites and self-desires. But mere abstention from food has no effect on the spirit. It is a mere symbol, a reminder. Otherwise, it is of no importance. Fasting for this purpose does not mean entire abstinence from food. The golden rule as to food is, do not take too much or too little. Moderation is necessary. There is a sect in India who practice extreme abstinence, and gradually reduce their food until they exist on almost nothing. But their intelligence suffers. A man is not fit to do service for God in brains or body if he is weakened by lack of food. He cannot see clearly.”

When told of American experiments whereby the mind was supposed to benefit personally by abstinence, Abdul-Baha replied: “It is imagination. . . . To sum up, God knows better than all. He has given us an appetite; therefore we should eat. If the body be deprived of that which is necessary for it the mind suffers. God asks of us according to our capacity. If a man who has only sufficient strength to carry fifty kilos be burdened with a hundred kilos he will fall. Moderation and common sense must be used.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From an article by Miss E. S. Stevens in the Fortnightly Review, June, 1911.)

Well done! Well done! Thou hast desired the evanescence of thy will in the will of God. . . . (p. 267.)

The reality of man is like unto a sea, and the Holy Power is like unto brilliant pearls. Not until the sea moveth in waves doth it throw a shell of pearls upon the shore. Therefore if thou wishest to become heavenly cut thy attention from the earth, that is, cease to attach thy heart unto this world and seek attachment to the Kingdom and turn unto God. And when thou doest this thou wilt become the mercy of God and a gift of the Almighty. (p. 326.)

Man must become evanescent in God,

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

HE IS GOD!

A prayer by Abdul-Baha

Translated by Ghodsia Khanum and Miss Juliet Thompson

O my God! O my God!
Thou beholdest and knowest
That refuge or shelter save thee
Have I not found,
Nor shall I find.
And beside the highroad of thy love
No pathway have I ever trodden,
Or shall I tread.

In mid-night's dark, fear-haunted vigils
The morn of thine infinite mercy
Awakens and brightens
The eye of my soul.
And when the Sun upriseth,
This withered heart, reviving in the light
Of thy perfection,
In rapture communes.

Each drop though infinitesimally small,
When assisted by the waves of the Eternal Outpouring Becomes a limitless sea.
And every atom by a ray from the Effulgence
Of thy bounty baptized,
Is as a sun of beaming splendor
And of power.

Wherefore, O pure Creator!
To this thy servant,
Enraptured, afire,
Grant a shelter in thy secret habitation.
And make him while in this passing world
In thy love and friendship,
Steadfast and faithful.

And in the nest of thy loving-kindness,
Amid the branches of the Tree of Spirit,
To this bird, featherless, broken-winged,
Grant thou an abiding-place.

The Divine Art of Living—Chapter V

must forget his own selfish conditions in order that he may rise to the station of sacrifice. This station should be attained to such a degree that if he sleeps it should not be for pleasure but to rest the body in order to work better, to speak better, to explain more beautifully, to serve the servants of God and to prove His truths. When he remains awake he should seek to be attentive, serve the Cause of God and sacrifice his own stations for those of God. When he attains to this station the confirmations of the Holy Spirit will surely reach him and man with this power can withstand all who inhabit the earth. (p. 460.)

No one will obtain this great favor save he who cuts himself from this world, being attracted by the love of God; who is dead to the desires and appetites of self, sincere to God in all things and meek, humble, imploring, pleading and lowly before God. (p. 5.)

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablets of Abdul-Baha.)

By being severed from the world I do not mean holding in contempt the things of the world, for civilization and education are the means of progress. I mean that one must not attach his heart to the world.

All that has been created is for man who is at the apex of creation and who must be thankful for the divine bestowals. All material things are for us so that through our gratitude we may learn to understand life as a divine benefit. . .

Therefore we must be happy and pass our time in praises, appreciating all things. But there is something else—detachment. We can appreciate without attaching ourselves to the things of this world. It sometimes happens that if a man loses his fortune he is so disheartened that he dies or becomes insane. While enjoying the things of this world we must remember that perhaps one day we shall have to do without them.

Attach not thyself to anything unless in it thou seest the reality of God. This is the first step into the court of eternity. The earth life lasts but a short time, even its benefits are transitory. That which is temporary does not deserve our heart's attachment.

Detachment does not consist in setting fire to one's house or becoming bankrupt or throwing one's fortune out of the window or even in giving away all one's possessions. Detachment consists in refraining from letting our possessions possess us. A prosperous merchant who is not attached to his business knows detachment. A banker whose occupation does not prevent him from serving humanity is detached. A poor man can be attached to a small thing. . . . There are many rich people who are detached, and many poor who are not.

We must not be attached to anything in the world. It is not worth one thought. We must not desire for those we love that they should be captivated by the attachments of this world. Nay, rather, we should desire for them eternal things, the things of the Kingdom. We should seek to free ourselves from all attachments. The things of this world are like the waves of the sea. It is impossible that they should endure. In comparison, the things of the Kingdom are like rocks, firm and enduring.

If one is attached to the demands of the human body he will never be at rest, for the body is constantly demanding change. This tree growing before the window, it is impossible that it should not die, no matter how it is tended and how well it is watered. How foolish to spend one's time and energy on that which can not endure. If one is turned toward heavenly things he will become like a rock. But if his heart be attached to anything in this world it will become subject to change. Attachments are like ropes which drag us to the earth when we try to fly. To be detached is to be free, is to be flying in a new ether, is to be light, is to be joyous—and a Bahai should be joyous. He should attain to such a station of joy that the world will enquire as to his secret. If he be entirely detached and emptied of self he will be enabled to start in a cold heart a great fire.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Quoted from a letter written Miss Juliet Thompson by Mrs. Isabel Fraser, Hamleh, September 24, 1913.)

The mystery of sacrifice is a most great subject and is inexhaustible. Briefly it is as follows: The moth is a sacrifice to the candle. The spring of water is a sacrifice to the thirsty one. The sincere lover is a sacrifice to the loved one and the longing one is a sacrifice to the beloved. One must wholly forget himself, must become a wanderer (in the Abode of the Beloved). He must seek the good pleasure of the True One, desire the face of the True One, and walk in the path of the True One; he must become intoxicated with His cup, resigned in His hand and close his eyes to life and living in order that he may shine like unto the light of truth from the horizon of Eternity. This is the first station of sacrifice.

The second station of sacrifice is as follows: Man must become severed from the human world; be delivered from the darkness of this world; the illumination of mercifulness must shine and radiate in him, the nether world become as non-existent and the Kingdom become manifest. He must become like iron thrown within the furnace of fire. The qualities of iron such as blackness, coldness and solidity which belong to the earth disappear and vanish while the characteristics of fire such as redness, glowing and heat which belong to the Kingdom become apparent and visible. Therefore, iron hath sacrificed its qualities and grades to the fire, acquiring the virtues of that element.

Likewise, when souls are released from the fetters of the world, the imperfections of mankind and animalistic darkness and have stepped into the realm of detachment, have partaken from the out-pouring of the Placeless and have acquired lordly perfection, they are the "ransomed ones" of the Sun of Truth, who are hastening to the altar of heart and soul.

When man dedicates his life to a cause he must dedicate himself entirely, then he is really dedicated. This is not through word but through deed. One must dedicate his life completely, fully, in reality, just as the dead branch sacrifices its life to the fire, and just as the oil sacrifices its life to give light. This is the greatest station, the station of sacrifice. There is no greater than this.

In Oriental language there is the expression, "May my life be a sacrifice to you," and a man writing a hundred letters a day might use these words a hundred times and yet he would not sacrifice anything for his friend. But this is custom, a usage. Everybody who writes a letter to his friend says, "May my life be a sacrifice to you," and perhaps he does not realize the meaning at all.

The station of sacrifice is the great foundation. When you read the Old and New Testament you will find that constantly the word sacrifice is mentioned. It is recorded that the Israelites sacrificed sheep that their sins might be forgiven. In the time of Adam Cain made a sacrifice of sheaves of wheat and Abel made sacrifice of sheep. Now this is a symbol, and this persisted after the time of Christ.

What is the symbol? Just as the sheep sacrificed its life likewise this natural state of man which is the animalistic state must be sacrificed. How should it be sacrificed? The vices of the animalistic state of man must be entirely annihilated and he must be characterized with divine virtues. It was a symbol and before His Holiness Christ appeared all the Israelitish prophets made sacrifice of animals. This was a mystery of a higher sacrifice, and when Christ came he said, "I will sacrifice myself for the sake of salvation of all." What did he mean? He meant, to change their characters and in this way make them heavenly, in this way make them God-like, spiritual and divine. This is one of the meanings of sacrifice.

The greatest sacrifice is to forget one's self entirely, to sacrifice everything, as did Christ.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Daily Lessons, p. 21. Read all of this chapter.)

Behold a candle how it gives its light. It weeps its life away, drop by drop, in order to give forth its flame of light.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From An Early Pilgrimage; by Mrs. May Maxwell.)

I wish for the happiness and prosperity of the believers even in this material world, but they must not be attracted by it or attached to it. Extreme wealth or utter poverty should be equal to them.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Table Talks with Abdul-Baha, p. 10.)

Concentrate the soul upon God so that it may become as a fountain pouring out the Water of Life to a thirsty world. Live up to the principles of sacrifice. The world will then become as nothing and be without power to attract you away from God. Sacrifice your will to the will of God. The Kingdom is attained by the one who forgets self. Everything becomes yours by renunciation of everything.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 12.)

Sacrifice of life is of two kinds. To be killed for the Cause is not so difficult as to live for it in absolute obedience to the commands of God. To attain to the condition of Mirza Abul Fazl* who cares for nothing in this world save to write something for the Cause that will be of benefit, or like Mirza Hayder Ali† who cares not for money, clothes, or even food, but only to teach someone something about the Kingdom is real attainment to the plain of sacrifice. And without attaining this condition all effort is without final result. One who cares for love, for husband, wife or children more than for the Cause of God has not attained.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August, 1913, Ramleh.)

All the days of his (Abul Fazl's) life were spent in the service of the Cause of God. His will and desire were devoted to the promotion of the Cause of God, to the promotion of the message of the Kingdom. He did not think of worldly comfort and tranquillity. He never tried to protect his life. He was not at all attached to the ephemeral objects of this contingent world. All his thoughts, ideals, conceptions and aims were centered upon the service of the world of the Merciful. Praise be to God, that his intellectual and spiritual life was very fruitful. All his books contain indubitable proofs and evidences concerning this impregnable, blessed Cause. Sanctified and holy, divine and spiritual, he ascended from this mortal world to the realm of light.

The disinterested actions and free-hearted deeds of a person proclaim with the sound of a trumpet his loyalty and sincerity in the Cause. He is in no need of self-justification. He lives above and beyond the criticism of petty and dwarfed assailers of his integrity and purity of motives. Their censure does not touch him. The innate nobility of his soul is not tarnished, the glories of his work are not beclouded. The river of his spiritual ideality, creative power and imaginative faculty is not dried up. The sea of his sympathy and increasing hopefulness and direct activity in the Cause is not calmed down. With a deep insight, holy vision and fresh inspiration he will cause the complete retreat of all his old enemies. With zest, unflinching courage and undisturbed spirit he will apply himself to new victories in channels of service, broader fields of labor, higher planes of triumph and the solution of vaster and more intricate problems by the magic wand of his determination. Thus he changes every stumbling block placed in his path to dishearten him from further progress into a stepping stone, advances with confident steps, ever rising higher, never looking backward but always forward, setting aside imperturbably all the seeming difficulties and finally planting his feet on the summit of the mountain of success, beatitude and undiminished glory. Such a man was Mirza Abul Fazl. On such an unshakable rock every person must lay the foundation of the palace of his life, so that the howling of the winds, the fury of the storms and the onslaught of the wild elements may not in the least shake it. The life of Mirza Abul Fazl was God-controlled and God-propelled. Not for one second did he set his own will above the will of God. He effaced self and lived eternally in God.

How humble and meek he (Mirza Abul Fazl) was! We tried our best to persuade him to keep a servant, but he would always gently decline. He desired to serve the believers personally. Whenever the believers and the non-believers called on him, although he was sick, weak and in fever, yet he would get up and prepare tea and serve his callers with his own hand. All his anxieties revolved around this supreme object—to make people satisfied and happy at any cost.

During all the days of his life I never heard from him the use of the word "I"—"I said so," or "I wrote so and so." He would say: "This servant requested them," or "This servant begged the believers." He never made a display of his knowledge, nor wished to impress upon the mind of any person that he knew such and such information. He was evanescent and lived in the station of nothingness. He was self-sacrificing at the Holy Threshold. No one inhaled from him the odor of superiority.

The question was asked Mirza Abul Fazl: "If everyone's mind was entirely given to holy thoughts of God, what would become of the world from a commercial standpoint?"

He replied: "Love, faith, and being filled with the will of God are not at variance with the temporal affairs which man has to attend to. We can be filled with the love of God and at the same time look after our worldly life and its pursuits. Though in the beginning it is difficult for us to realize this state in ourselves, yet this can become feasible and practical if we obey the laws and ordinances of God.

"Consider David. While he was attentive and watchful over his temporal affairs and worldly dominion to such an extent that he looked after each one of his soldiers, computed their number, arranged their sustenance and means of living, and while he was so alert in arranging administrative affairs that he was not at all heedless of the neighboring kings and their thoughts, even in such wise that through warfare and battles he strengthened that weak kingdom of the Israelites and glorified his people before the eyes of the great kings of Egypt, Aram and Assyria, yet, could it be thought that he was meanwhile separated from the love of God? Or, could it be said he ever was so carried away by temporal occupations and cares as to make him heedless of the commemoration of God?

"Likewise, consider His Holiness Abraham. He was a man who led a nomadic life, who possessed large herds and flocks in the desert and who gained his living by rearing sheep and cattle. He was so watchful and attentive in the administration of the affairs pertaining to temporal pursuits that nothing escaped his notice. Although he was single and alone when he migrated from Ur of the Chaldeans yet he exercised the utmost care in his worldly affairs and thus became accounted among the highest men of affluence in Syrian lands. And notwithstanding the fact that he gave personal care and attention to every single sheep, in case of sickness, yet he was not for a single moment heedless of the commemoration of God; so mindful was he, that, among all the inhabitants of the world, at that time he alone was chosen by God as his friend.

"Consequently, we and you must likewise exert ourselves in order to reach such a state in the love of God that the world and its occupations no matter how involving they may be may not prevent us from the praise of God nor make us heedless of His commemoration.

"Mohammed, the prophet of God, has said: 'Man in this world must be so attentive to his worldly affairs and temporal, necessary pursuits that it may seem as though he thinks he is going to live forever in this world. And he must, at the same time, be so submerged in the love of God and occupied with the thoughts of the hereafter that it may seem as though he is going to die and leave this earth at the very moment'."

(An extract from a letter written by a believer containing teachings by Mirza Abul Fazl.)

It is incumbent upon every one of you to engage in some one occupation, such as arts, trades and the like. We have made this your occupation identical with the worship of God, the True One. Reflect, O people, upon the mercy of God and upon his favors; then thank him in the mornings and evenings.

Waste not your time in idleness and indolence, and occupy yourselves with that which will profit yourselves and others beside yourself. . . . Every soul who occupies himself in an art or trade—this will be accounted an act of worship before God.

(The words of Baha'o'llah in the Glad Tidings.)

The guidance of God is that which will always guide people in the right way. All human beings are earthly; their hearts are connected with this world. Day and night their thoughts and occupations are earthly; all belong to this world. They think about the honors of this world, or about the riches and wealth of this world, or of name and fame in this world. Their days and nights pass in this way. The guidance of God makes it evident and plain when the way of the Kingdom, the divine path, is opened, that this is the road of the Kingdom.

It is not sufficient only to distinguish the way of the Kingdom, only to discover the heavenly way: you must travel upon it until the end is reached. For example, that a man discovers the way to America is not sufficient. He must travel in it that he may reach that country. If he remains for years discovering more about the way yet does not travel by it, he will never arrive. It is not sufficient for a child to know where the school is; he must study in it that he may gain knowledge. Faith is not merely to know which is the school and to recognize the teacher; one must acquire knowledge in this school. If one does not gain knowledge it is useless to know of the school.

This is what Christ said: "Ye shall know the tree by its fruits." If you see one who is truthful, who really believes and is just, who is attracted to the Kingdom, and whose will is annihilated in the way of God, then you will know he is a tree of the Kingdom, if he shows forth all these qualities. If you see one whose heart is attached to this world and in whom there is no truthfulness or detachment or turning to God, one who is not occupied in praising and speaking of God, or in attraction to the love of God, then you will know he is a tree of darkness. For true belief is not only to acknowledge the oneness of God: by belief we mean that the reality of a man will be characterized by divine characteristics. If his reality is dark, he will become enlightened; if he is heedless, he will become conscious; if he is sleeping, he will be awakened; if he is earthly, he will become heavenly; if he is satanic, he will become divine. This is the meaning of true belief.

Therefore I say that man must travel in the way of God. Day by day he must endeavor to become better, his belief must increase and become firmer, his good qualities and his turning to God must be greater, the fire of his love must flame more brightly; then day by day he will make progress, for to stop advancing is the means of going back. The bird when he flies soars ever higher and higher, for as soon as he stops flying he will come down. Every day, in the morning when arising you should compare today with yesterday and see in what condition you are. If you see your belief is stronger and your heart more occupied with God and your love increased and your freedom from the world greater then thank God and ask for the increase of these qualities. You must begin to pray and repent for all that you have done which is wrong and you must implore and ask for help and assistance that you may become better than yesterday so that you may continue to make progress.

Do not let the desires of the self find a place within you; for it is certain that when you reach the highest station of spirituality one worldly desire can cause your downfall. The spirit is like a bird; when it flies in the air it is always mounting. But the self is like the hunter who is thinking all the time how to catch the bird. As when a bird is in the air the hunter aims at it and brings it down, so is it with the human desires in the soul. You will see that by one arrow, one shot, it will be brought low. This arrow is the connection with this world, the occupations of this world, the desires of this world, the honors of this world.

In many ways the hunter will stop the spirit from ascending. That is why you must ask and implore and entreat: "O God, protect me from myself!"

(Words of Abdul-Baha: from pamphlet True Belief.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Religion and Science in the Light of the Bahai Revelation

By J. E. ESSLEMONT, M.B.

ONE of the fundamental teachings of Baha'o'llah is that true science and true religion must always be in harmony. Truth is one and wherever conflict appears it is due not to truth but to error. Between so-called science and so-called religion there has been conflict all down the ages, but looking back on these conflicts in the light of fuller truth we can trace them every time to ignorance, prejudice, vanity, greed, narrow-mindedness, intolerance, obstinacy, vested interests or something of the kind,—something foreign to the true spirit of both science and religion for the spirit of both is one.

As Huxley tells us, "The great deeds of philosophers have been less the fruit of their intellect than the direction of that intellect by an eminently religious tone of mind. Truth has yielded herself rather to their patience, their love, their single-heartedness and self-denial than to their logical acumen." Boole, the mathematician, assures us that "geometric induction is essentially a process of prayer—an appeal from the finite mind to the Infinite for light on finite concerns." The great prophets of religion and science have never denounced one another. They have always reverently received the torch of inspiration from their predecessors in the prophetic series, and lighted the way for their successors. It is the unworthy followers of these great world-teachers—worshippers of the letter but not of the spirit of their teaching—who have always been the persecutors of the later prophets and the bitterest opponents of progress.

They have studied the light of the particular revelation which they hold sacred, and have defined its properties and peculiarities as seen by their limited vision, with the utmost care and precision. That is for them the one true light. If God in His infinite bounty sends fuller light from another quarter, and the torch of inspiration burns brighter than before from a new torch-holder, instead of welcoming the new light and worshipping with renewed gratitude the Father of all lights, they are angry and alarmed. This new light does not correspond with their definitions. It has not the orthodox color and does not shine from the orthodox place, therefore it must at all costs be extinguished lest it lead men astray into the paths of heresy! Many enemies of the prophets are of this type—blind leaders of the blind, who oppose new and fuller truth in the supposed interests of what they believe to be the truth. Others are of baser sort and are either moved by selfish interests to fight against truth, or else block the path of progress by reason of spiritual deadness and inertia. The appearance of a prophet is always a testing time for mankind—a day of judgment, in which the sheep are separated from the goats, those who worship the living reality of truth from those who worship only the material garments in which it is clothed. Alas! how few there have always been who were ready to welcome truth in a new garment—to welcome the spiritual light when it shone from a new torch!

and rejected of men. Both they and their early followers have given their backs to the smiters and sacrificed their possessions and their lives in the path of God. Even in our own times this has been so. Since 1844 some twenty thousand of the Babis and Bahais in Persia have suffered cruel deaths for their faith, and many more have borne imprisonment, poverty, exile and degradation. This latest of the great religions has been baptized in blood more than its predecessors, and martyrdoms have continued down to the present year.

With the prophets of science the same thing has happened. Giordano Bruno was burned as a heretic in 1600 A. D. for teaching, amongst other things, that the earth moved around the sun. A few years later the veteran philosopher Galileo had to abjure the same doctrine on his knees, in order to escape the same fate. In later times Darwin, and the pioneers of modern geology were vehemently denounced for daring to dispute the teaching of Holy Writ that the world was made in six days, and in the year 4004 B. C.! The opposition to new scientific truth has not all come from the church, however. The orthodox in science have been just as hostile to progress as the orthodox in religion. Columbus was laughed to scorn by the so-called scientists of his day who proved to their own satisfaction that if ships did succeed in getting down to the Antipodes over the side of the globe, it would be absolutely impossible for them to get up again! Galvani, the pioneer of electrical science, was scoffed at by his learned colleagues and called the "frogs' dancing master." Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was ridiculed and persecuted by his professional brethren on account of his heresy and driven from his lecture chair. When Stephenson invented his locomotive engine, European mathematicians of the time, instead of opening their eyes and studying the facts, went on for years proving from their preconceived ideas that an engine on smooth rails could never pull a load, as the wheels would simply slip round and the train get no "forarder."

To examples like these one might add indefinitely, both from ancient and modern history, and even from our own times. Dr. Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto*, (who has just passed away), had to battle for his wonderful international language against the same sort of ridicule, contempt and stupid opposition which greeted Columbus, Galvani, and Stephenson. Even Esperanto which was given to the world less than thirty years ago has had its martyrs. In the last half century or so, however, a change has come over the spirit of the times, a New Light of Truth has arisen which has already made the controversies of last century seem strangely out of date.

Where are now the boastful materialists and dogmatic atheists who, only a few short years ago were threatening to drive religion out of the world? And where the preachers who so confidently consigned those who did not accept their dogmas to the fires of hell and the tortures of the damned? Echoes of their clamor we may still hear, but their day is done and their doctrines are discredited. We can see now that the doctrines around which their controversies waxed most bitter were neither true science nor true religion. What scientist in the light of modern psychical research, could still maintain that "brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile"?—or that decay of the body is necessarily accompanied by decay of the soul?

We now see that thought to be really free must soar to the realms of psychical and spiritual phenomena and not be confined to the material only. We realize that what we now know about nature is but as a drop in the ocean compared with what remains to be discovered. We therefore freely admit the possibility of miracles, not indeed in the sense of the breaking of nature's laws, but as manifestations of the operation of subtle forces which are still unknown to us, as electricity and X-rays to our ancestors.

On the other hand who among our leading religious teachers would still declare that it is necessary to salvation to believe that the world was made in six days, or that the description of the plagues of Egypt as given in the book of Exodus is literally true, or that the sun stood still in the heavens (i. e., that the earth stopped its rotation) to let Joshua pursue his enemies? Such beliefs may still be repeated in form, but who, even among the clergy, accepts them in their literal sense and without reservation? Their hold on people's hearts and minds has gone or is fast going.

The religious world owes a debt of gratitude to the men of science who helped to tear such wornout creeds and dogmas to tatters and allowed the truth to step forth free. But the scientific world owes an even heavier debt to the real saints and mystics who, through good report and ill, held to the vital truths of spiritual experience and demonstrated to an incredulous world that the life is more than meat and the unseen greater than the seen. These scientists and saints were like the mountain peaks which caught the first rays of the rising sun and reflected them to the lower world, but now the sun has risen and its rays are illuminating the world.

In the teachings of Baha'o'llah we have a glorious revelation of truth which satisfies both heart and mind, in which religion and science are at one. Before going further let us first hear what the Bahai teachings say about the way in which we must seek the truth:

THE SEARCH FOR TRUTH

Man must cut himself free from all prejudice and from the result of his own imagination so that he may search for truth unhindered. He must accept nothing as final which he has received simply on the authority of parents or ancestors or teachers. He must aim at seeing all things with his own eyes, understanding them with his own mind. If he accepts any creed or doctrine which is either opposed to his reason or beyond his comprehension, he is putting into practice superstition and not true faith. Teachers are necessary, of course, but they must be educators, not crammers. The real educator draws out the innate powers of his pupils so that they can grasp things for themselves, and does not aim simply at packing their memories with ready made information and rules. The good pupil is he who while accepting his teacher as an indispensable guide and help, yet tests every step of his progress by the light of his own reason and intuition—in other words, by the Inner Light of the Divine Spirit in his own mind and heart. That Inner Light must be his final authority. "Turn thy sight unto thyself that thou mayest find Me standing within thee powerful, mighty and supreme." In this spirit of search let us now examine the main features of the teaching and see whether it affords a satisfactory basis for the reconciliation of reason and faith.

TRUE AGNOSTICISM.

The Bahai teaching is at one with science and philosophy in declaring the essential nature of God to be entirely beyond human comprehension. As emphatically as Huxley and Spencer teach that the nature of the Great First Cause is unknowable, does Baha'o'llah teach that "God comprehends all; He cannot be comprehended." To knowledge of the Divine Essence "the way is barred; seeking is forbidden." How can the finite comprehend the Infinite? How can a drop contain the ocean or a mote dancing in the sunbeam embrace the universe? Yet in each drop of water are hidden oceans of meaning and in each mote is concealed a whole universe of significances, reaching far beyond the ken of the most learned scientist. The chemist and physicist, pursuing their researches into the nature of matter, have passed from masses to molecules, from molecules to atoms, from atoms to electrons and ether, but at every step the difficulties of the search increase till the most profound intellect can penetrate no further, and can but bow in silent awe before the Great First Cause which remains ever shrouded in inscrutable mystery.

“Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies.
I hold you here, root and all in my hand,
Little flower; but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.”

(Tennyson)

If the flower in the crannied wall, if even a single atom of matter, presents mysteries which the most profound intellect cannot solve, how is it possible for man to comprehend the universe? How dare he pretend to define or describe the Infinite Cause of all things? All theological speculations about the nature of God's Essence are thus swept aside as foolish and futile.

KNOWLEDGE OF GOD

But if the Essence is unknowable, the manifestations of its bounty are everywhere apparent. If the First Cause cannot be conceived, its effects appeal to our every faculty. A cat cannot comprehend the sun or fathom the mysteries of its daily appearance and disappearance, its composition, or its career through celestial space, but she can bask in its beams and appreciate their warmth. Her eyes are a miracle of organization which enable her to guide her movements by means of the sun's rays reflected from every visible object in her environment. At every step she skilfully uses these rays, although she may never dream that they have any connection with the sun. There may be cats who have never seen the sun and have no idea of its existence, yet at every moment their lives depend on it, and they know very well how to take advantage in a thousand ways of the beneficent effects of this unknown cause. So it is with our relation to God. At every moment we are absolutely dependent on Him, whether we know it or not. He has, however, given us the power to know Him through His works. All things are from Him, and just as knowledge of a painter's pictures gives to the connoisseur a true knowledge of the artist, so knowledge of the universe in any of its aspects—knowledge of nature or of human nature, of things visible or of things invisible—is knowledge of God's handiwork, and gives to the seeker for Divine Truth a real knowledge of His glory. “The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge.” (Psalm xix:1.)

THE DIVINE MANIFESTATIONS

All things manifest the bounty of God with greater or less clearness, as all material objects exposed to the sun reflect its light in greater or less degree. A heap of soot reflects a little, a stone reflects more, a piece of chalk more still, but in none of these reflections can we trace the form and color of the glorious orb. A perfect mirror however reflects the sun's very form and color, so that looking into it is like looking at the sun itself. So is it with the way in which things speak to us of God. The stone can tell us something of the divine attributes, the flower can tell us more, the animal with its marvelous senses, instincts and powers of movement, more still. In the lowest of our fellow-men we can trace wonderful faculties which tell of a wonderful Creator. In the poet, the saint, the genius, we find a higher revelation still, but the great prophets and founders of religions, like Moses, Christ, Mohammed and Baha'o'llah are the perfect mirrors by which the love and wisdom of God are reflected to the rest of mankind. Other men's mirrors have been dulled by the stains and accretions of selfishness and prejudice, but these were pure and without blemish—wholly devoted to the will of God. Thus they became the greatest educators of mankind. The divine teachings and the power of the Holy Spirit proceeding through them have been and are the cause of the progress of humanity, for God helps men through other men (embodied or disembodied). Each man who is higher in the ascent of life is the means of helping those below him, and those who are highest of all are the helpers of all mankind. It is as if all men were connected together by elastic cords. If a man rises a little above the general level of his fellows, the cords tighten. His former companions tend to drag him back, but with a precisely equal force he draws them upwards. The higher he gets the more he feels the weight of the whole world pulling him back, and the more dependent he is on the divine support, which reaches him through the few who are still above him. Highest of all are the great Prophets and Saviors, the Divine "Manifestations"—those Perfect Men who were each, in their day, without peer or companion, and bore the burden of the whole world, supported by God alone. "The burden of our sins was upon him" was true of each of them. Each was the "Way, the Truth and the Life" to his followers. Each was the unobstructed channel of God's bounty to every heart that would receive it.

The love that flows from the "Manifestation" is God's love. The wisdom is God's wisdom, the spirit is God's spirit. He is indeed divine—God manifest in a human temple; but God is One, and the same One God conferred the gift of His Holy Spirit through all the "Manifestations," not indeed according to His power to give, but according to the people's power to receive. The messages differed, because the peoples for whom they were given were at different stages of development, but the differences were only in the externals, the forms and ceremonies, the rules and punishments, not in the inner spiritual realities of love to God and love to man which have been the heart and soul of all the great religions.

CREATION

Baha'o'llah teaches that the universe is without beginning in time. It is a perpetual emanation from the Great First Cause. The Creator always had His creation and always will have. This is in harmony with the teachings of science regarding the conservation of matter and energy. Worlds and systems may come and go, but the universe remains. All things that undergo composition, in time undergo decomposition, but the component elements remain. The creation of a world, a daisy or a human body is not "making something out of nothing," it is but a bringing together of elements which before were scattered, a making visible of something which before was hidden. By and by the elements will again be scattered, the form will disappear, but nothing is really lost or annihilated, ever new combinations and forms arise from the ruins of the old. Baha'o'llah has no quarrel with the scientists who claim, not six thousand, but millions and billions of years for the history of the earth's creation. The evolution theory does not deny Creative Power. It only tries to describe the method of its manifestation, and the wonderful story of the material universe which the astronomer, the geologist, the physicist and the biologist are gradually unfolding to our gaze is, rightly appreciated, far more capable of evoking the deepest reverence and worship, than the crude and bald account of creation given in the Hebrew Scriptures. The old account in the book of Genesis had however the advantage of indicating by a few bold strokes of symbolism, the essential spiritual meanings of the story, as a master painter may by a few strokes of the brush convey expressions which the mere plodder with the most laborious accuracy of detail may utterly fail to express. If the material detail blinds us to the spiritual meaning then we should be better without it, but if we have once firmly grasped the essential meaning of the whole scheme, then knowledge of the detail will give our conception a wonderful added richness and splendor and make it a magnificent picture instead of a mere sketch plan. Of course, even the most magnificent picture which the trained imagination can frame is in itself but the rudest and crudest of sketches compared with the wonderful universe it attempts to portray.

THE DESCENT OF MAN

Neither does Baha'o'llah quarrel with the biologist who finds for the body of man, a history reaching back in the development of the species, through millions of years—a history which, starting from a very simple, apparently insignificant form, gradually develops in the course of untold generations, becoming more and more complex, and better and better organized until the man of the present day is reached. Each individual human body develops through such a series of stages from a tiny round speck of jelly-like protoplasm to the fully developed man. If this is true of the individual, as nobody denies, why should we consider it derogatory to human dignity to admit a similar development for the species? This is a very different thing from claiming (as Darwin is popularly although quite erroneously supposed to have claimed) that man is descended from the monkey. The human embryo may at one time resemble a fish with gill-slits and tail, but it is not a fish. It is a human embryo. So the human species may at various stages of its long development have resembled to the outward eye various species of lower animals, but it was still the human species, possessing the mysterious latent power of developing into man as we know him today, nay more, of developing in the future, we trust, into something far higher still.

BODY AND SOUL

The materialist idea that "mind is a function of matter" is no longer tenable in the light of psychical research. A large body of scientific evidence has gradually been accumulating which in the opinion of impartial but highly critical investigators is amply sufficient to establish beyond all question the fact of a life after death—of the continued life and activity of the conscious "soul" after the dissolution of the material body. As F. W. H. Myers says in his Human Personality: "Observation, experiment, inference, have led many enquirers, of whom I am one, to a belief in direct or telepathic intercommunication, not only between the minds of men still on earth, but between minds or spirits still on earth and spirits departed. Such a discovery opens the door also to revelation. . . . We have shown that amid much deception and self-deception, fraud and illusion, veritable manifestations do reach us from beyond the grave."

The Bahai teachings with regard to body and soul, and the life after death, are quite in harmony with the results of psychical research. They teach that death is but a new birth—the escape from the prison of the body into a larger life. They teach that soul can affect soul independently of spoken or written communication, and that this influence is independent of the body and can take place whether the soul is embodied or disembodied. They advocate the use of prayers for the "dead" and teach that mutual communion and help are still possible between the "living" and the so-called "dead." They speak much of the "Supreme Concurrence" of holy souls, whose assistance is available for every human being who is advancing in the path of God. The relation of the soul to the body they picture as like that of a musician to his instrument. If the instrument is broken and out of tune, the musician will no longer be able to produce beautiful music from it, although he may be as capable as ever. So when the body is diseased and out of order, the soul can no longer adequately manifest through it on the material plane, and to the eye which sees only the body it might appear as if the whole man had decayed, instead of only the material instrument.

HEAVEN AND HELL

The Bahais regard the descriptions of heaven and hell given in some of the older religious writings as symbolic, like the Biblical story of the Creation, and not literally true. According to them, heaven is the state of perfection and hell that of imperfection, heaven is harmony with God's will and with one's fellows, and hell is the want of such harmony, heaven is the condition of spiritual life, and hell that of spiritual death. A man may be either in heaven or in hell while still in the body. The joys of heaven are spiritual joys, and the pains of hell consist in the deprivation of these joys. There is no worse hell in the after-death life than the hell in which many of the people around us are living. Those who have not been "born again," whose spiritual life has not awakened, are dead while they live, and although their souls continue to exist after the death of the body, their condition compared with that of those who rejoice in the love of God is as death. Even for those who have died in ignorance and sin, however, there is still hope, because the bounty of God is infinite. For these also we should pray, for our prayers can bear them help from the Source of all help.

The Bahais believe in progress in the after-life as well as in the present. The divine worlds are infinite, and the possibilities of progress in knowledge, love and good-will are without limit. This progress depends on God's infinite bounty, and that bounty is available for all who seek it. The only condition is that we must seek it. "Love Me that I may love thee, for if thou lovest Me not, My love can never reach thee." As long as we are content with the animal and material side of life and prefer self to God, so long are we spiritually dead. It is only when we turn to God and say with all our hearts, "Not my will but Thine be done," that we become spiritually alive and enter the heaven of the blessed.

With such a view as this, surely no true lover of science could quarrel. F. W. H. Myers says in the work previously quoted which summarizes much of the work of the Psychological Research Society: "By discovery and by revelation certain theses have been provisionally established with regard to such departed souls as we have been able to encounter. First and chiefly I at least see ground to believe that their state is one of endless evolution in wisdom and in love. Their loves of earth persist, and most of all those highest loves which find their outlet in adoration and worship. . . . Evil to them seems less a terrible than a slavish thing. It is embodied in no mighty potentate; rather it forms an isolating madness from which higher spirits strive to free the distorted soul. There needs no chastisement of fire; self-knowledge is man's punishment and his reward; self-knowledge and the nearness or the aloofness of companion souls. For in that world love is actually self-preservation; the communion of saints not only adorns but constitutes the life everlasting. Nay, from the laws of telepathy it follows that that communion is valid to us here and now. Even now the love of souls departed makes answer to our invocations. Even now our loving memory—love is itself a prayer—supports and strengthens those delivered spirits upon their upward way."

THE NATURE OF EVIL

According to the Bahai philosophy it follows from the doctrine of the unity of God that there can be no such thing as positive evil. There can only be One Infinite. If there were any other power in the universe outside of or opposed to the One, then the One would not be Infinite. In the realm of created things however, there is variety—variety of light and shade, of color, of consistence, of taste, of smell. Among human beings there is variety of physical strength, of health, of intelligence, of courage, of every possible faculty and attribute.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

“Baha’o’llah has proclaimed the promise of the Oneness of Humanity”

Address by Abdul-Baha at Green Acre, Maine, August 17, 1912

ARE you all well and happy? This is a delightful spot; the scenery is beautiful and an atmosphere of spirituality haloes everything. In the future, God willing, Green Acre shall become a great center, the cause of the unity of the world of humanity, the cause of uniting hearts, the cause of binding together the East and the West. This is my hope.

Tonight I wish to speak upon the Oneness of the World of Humanity. This is one of the important subjects of the present period. If the oneness of the human world were effected all the differences which separate mankind would be eradicated. All strife and warfare would cease and the world of humanity would find repose. Universal peace would be promoted and the East and West would be conjoined in a strong bond. All men would be sheltered beneath one tabernacle. All nationalities would become one, all races and religions be unified. The people of the world would live together in peace and their well-being would be assured.

From the beginning of human history down to the present time the various religions of the world have anathematized and accused one another of falsity. Each religion has considered the others bereft of the face of God, rejected of God and in the direct line of divine wrath. Therefore they have shunned one another most rigidly, exercising mutual animosity and rancor. Consider the record of religious warfare,—the battles between nations, the bloodshed and destruction in the name of religion. One of the greatest religious wars, the Crusades, extended over a period of two hundred years. In this succession of great campaigns the Western Crusaders were constantly invading the Orient bent upon recovering the Holy City from the hands of the Islamic people. Army after army raised in Europe poured its fanatical legions into the East. The kings of European nations personally led these Crusades, killing and shedding the blood of the orientals. During this period of two hundred years the East and West were in a state of violence and commotion. Sometimes the Crusaders were successful,—killing, pillaging and taking captive the Moham-medan people; sometimes the Mussulmen were victorious, inflicting bloodshed, death and ruin in turn upon the invaders. So it continued for two centuries alternately fighting with fury and relaxing from weakness until the European religionists withdrew from the East, leaving ashes of desolation behind them and finding their own nations in a condition of turbulence and upheaval.

For hundreds of thousands of human beings have been killed and untold wealth wasted in fruitless warfare. How many fathers mourned the loss of their sons! How many mothers and wives bemoaned the absence of their dear ones! Yet this was only one of the "holy" wars. Consider and reflect.

For religious wars have been many. Nine hundred thousand martyrs to the Protestant Cause was the record of conflict and difference between that sect of Christians and the Catholics. Consult history and confirm this. How many languished in prisons! How merciless the treatment of captives! All in the name of religion! Consider and estimate the outcome of other wars between the people and sects of religious belief.

From the beginning of human history down to this time the world of humanity has not enjoyed a day of absolute rest and relaxation from conflict and strife. Most of the wars have been caused by religious prejudice, fanaticism and sectarian hatred. Religionists have anathematized religionists, each considering the other as deprived of the mercy of God, abiding in gross darkness and the children of Satan. For example, the Christians and Mohammedans considered the Jews satanic and the enemies of God. Therefore they cursed and persecuted them. Great numbers of Jews were killed, their houses burned and pillaged, their children carried into captivity. The Jews in turn regarded the Christians as infidels, and the Mohammedans as enemies and destroyers of the Law of Moses. Therefore they call down vengeance upon them and curse them even to this day.

Consider what injuries, ordeals and calamities have been inflicted by humanity since the beginning of history. Every city, country, nation and people has been subjected to the destruction and havoc of war. Each one of the divine religions considers itself as belonging to a goodly and blessed tree,—the tree of the Merciful, and other religious systems as belonging to a tree of evil,—the tree of Satan. For this reason they heap execration and abuse upon one another. This is clearly apparent in books of historical record and prevailed until the time of the appearance of His Holiness Baha'o'llah.

When the light of Baha'o'llah dawned from the East, He proclaimed the promise of the oneness of humanity. He addressed all mankind, saying: "Ye are all the fruits of one tree. There are not two trees,—one a tree of divine mercy, the other the tree of Satan." Again he said, "Ye are all the fruits of one tree, the leaves of one branch." This was his announcement; this was his promise of the oneness of the world of humanity. Anathema and execration were utterly abrogated. He said, "It is not becoming in man to curse another;—it is not befitting that man should attribute darkness to another;—it is not meet that one human being should ever consider another human being as bad,—nay rather, all mankind are the servants of one God;—God is the Father of all,—there is not a single exception to that law. There are no people of Satan;—all belong to the Merciful. There is no darkness;—all is light. All are the servants of God, and man must love all humanity from his heart. He must verily behold all humanity as submerged in the divine mercy."

Baha'o'llah has made no exception to this rule. He said that among mankind there may be those who are ignorant; they must be trained. Some are sick; they must be treated. Some are immature; they must be helped to attain maturity. In other respects all humanity is submerged in the ocean of divine mercy. God is the Father of all. He educates all. He provides for all. He loves all. For they are all His servants and His creation. Surely the Creator loves His creatures. It would be impossible to find an artist who does not love his own production. Have you ever seen a man who did not love his own actions? Even though they be bad actions he loves them. How ignorant therefore the thought that God who created man, educated and nurtured him, surrounded him with all blessings, made the sun and all phenomenal existence for his benefit, bestowed upon him tenderness and kindness, and then did not love him. This is palpable ignorance, for no matter to what religion a man belongs even though he be an atheist or materialist nevertheless God nurtures him, bestows His kindness and sheds upon him His light. How then can we believe God is inimical and unloving? How can we even imagine this when as a matter of fact, we are witnesses of the tenderness and mercy of God upon every hand. All about us we behold manifestations of the love of God. If therefore God be loving, what should we do? We have nothing else to do but to emulate Him. Just as God loves all and is kind to all, so must we really love and be kind to everybody. We must consider none bad, none worthy of detestation, no one as an enemy. We must love all;—nay we must consider every one as our relation, for all are the servants of one God. All are under the instructions of one educator. We must strive day and night that love and amity may increase,—that this bond of unity may be strengthened,—that joy and happiness may more and more prevail,—that in unity and solidarity all mankind may gather beneath the shadow of God,—that people may turn to God for their sustenance, finding in Him the life that is everlasting. Thus may they be confirmed in the Kingdom of God and live forever through His grace and bounty.

Baha'o'llah has clearly said in his Tablets that if you have an enemy, consider him not as an enemy. Do not simply be long-suffering,—nay rather love him. Your treatment of him should be that which is becoming lovers. Do not even say that he is your enemy. Do not see any enemies. Though he be your murderer, see no enemy. Look upon him with the eye of friendship. Be mindful that you do not consider him as an enemy and simply tolerate him, for that is but stratagem and hypocrisy. To consider a man your enemy and love him is hypocrisy. This is not becoming of any soul. You must behold him as a friend. You must treat him well. This is right.

We return to the subject: When we observe the phenomena of the universe, we realize the axis around which life revolves is love, while the axis around which death and destruction revolve is animosity and hatred. Let us view the mineral kingdom. Here we see that if attraction did not exist between the atoms the substance of matter would not cohere. Every existent phenomenon you look upon is composed of single elements and cellular particles. This is scientifically true and correct. If there be no attraction among the elements and among the cellular particles the composition of that phenomenon would never have come into existence. For instance the stone is an existent phenomenon. The stone is made up of single elements. A bond of attraction has brought them together and through this cohesion of ingredients this petrous object has been formed. The stone is the lowest degree of phenomena but nevertheless within it a power of attraction is manifest without which the stone could not exist. This power of attraction in the mineral world is love,—the only expression of love the stone can manifest.

Look now upon the next higher stage of life:—the vegetable kingdom. Here we see that the plant is the result of cohesion among various elements, just as the mineral in its kingdom. But furthermore the plant has the power of absorption from the earth. This is a higher degree of attraction which differentiates the plant from the mineral. In the kingdom of the vegetable this is an expression of love,—the highest capacity of expression the vegetable possesses. By this power of attraction or augmentation the plant grows day by day. Therefore in this kingdom also love is the cause of life. If repulsion existed among the elements instead of attraction the result would be disintegration, destruction and non-existence. Because cohesion exists among the elements and cellular attraction is manifest, the plant appears. When this attraction disappears and the ingredients separate, the plant ceases to exist.

Then we come to the animal world which is still higher in degree than the vegetable kingdom. In it the power of love makes itself still more manifest. The light of love is more resplendent in the animal kingdom because the power of attraction whereby elements cohere, and cellular atoms commingle now reveals itself in certain emotions and sensibilities which produce instinctive fellowship and association. The animals are imbued with kindness and affinity which manifests itself among those of the same species.

Finally we reach the kingdom of man. Here we find that all the degrees of the mineral, vegetable and animal expressions of love are present plus unmistakable attractions of the conscience. That is to say, man is the possessor of a degree of attraction which is conscious and spiritual. Here is an immeasurable advance. In the human kingdom spiritual susceptibilities come into view, love exercises its superlative degree, and this is the cause of human life.

The proof is clear that in all degrees and kingdoms unity and agreement, love and fellowship are the cause of life, whereas dissension, animosity and separation are ever conducive to death. Therefore we must strive with life and soul in order that day by day unity and agreement may be increased among humanity and that love and affinity may become more resplendently glorious and manifest. In the animal kingdom you will observe that domestic species live together in the utmost fellowship. See how sociable and friendly sheep gather together in a flock. Look at the doves and other domestic birds. There is no sectarianism among them, no separation due to notions of patriotism. They live together in the utmost love and unity, flying, feeding, associating. Ferocious animals, beasts of prey such as the wolf, bear, tiger and hyena are never amiable and do not associate together. They attack one another. Whenever they meet they fight. Three wolves are never seen associating happily. If you see them together it is with some ferocious intent. They are like selfish brutal men who are inimical, cursing and killing one another. Better that man should resemble the domestic animals than the ferocious beasts of prey, for in the estimation of God love is acceptable whereas hatred and animosity are rejected. Why should we act contrary to the good-pleasure of God? Why should we be as ferocious animals, constantly shedding blood, pillaging and destroying? Because we belong to one race or family of humankind why should we consider all others bad and inferior, deserving of death, pillage and invasion, worthy of hatred and detestation by God, people of darkness? Why does man show forth such attitude and actions toward his fellowman? We see that God is kind to all. Just as He loves us He loves all others, just as He provides for us He provides for the rest. He nurtures and trains all with equal solicitude.

God is great, God is kind! He does not behold human shortcomings; He does not regard human weaknesses. Man is a creature of His mercy and to His mercy He summons all. Why then should we despise or detest His creatures because this one is a Jew, another a Buddhist or Zoroastrian and so on? This is ignorance; for the oneness of humanity as servants of God is an assured and certain fact.

Baha'o'llah has proclaimed the promise of the oneness of humanity. Therefore we must exercise the utmost love toward one another. We must be loving to all the people of the world. We must not consider any people the people of Satan, but know and recognize all as the servants of the one God. At most it is this,—some do not know, they must be guided and trained. They must be taught humanitarianism and encouraged in the acquisition of virtues. Some are ignorant,—they must be informed. Some are as children, undeveloped,—they must be helped to reach maturity. Some are ailing,—their moral condition is bad,—they must be treated until their morals are purified. But the sick man is not to be hated because he is sick,—the child must not be shunned because he is a child,—the ignorant one is not to be despised because he lacks knowledge. They must be treated, educated, trained and assisted in love. Everything must be done, in order that all humanity may live under the shadow of God in the utmost security,—in happiness of the highest type.

The Religious Aspect of Esperanto

Address by Mr. Rufus W. Powell, given in New York City, recently

THE topic assigned to me this evening is one which it is very difficult to treat adequately in the ten minutes given for its presentation, and all that I can hope to do is to stimulate you to serious consideration of an important aspect of a movement which is destined to play a large part in the future adaptation of basic religious thought to the broad social and economic life of humanity. But the difficulty to a layman in speaking under such circumstances is greatly lessened by the fact that the presentation is made from a platform which represents such firm conviction in fundamental truth that it does not fear question and, while loyal to its own form of worship and doctrine, judges others only by their faith in reality and leaves to them the full right to their own history and their own lives in the sight of God. For, no matter what any of us may say, we all believe in something beyond and above us although now but imperfectly comprehending just what that beyond and above may be. The tree does not know why its sap rises and its life begins anew each springtime. So we cannot ourselves quite understand what has given us the impulse forward.

Abdul-Baha has said that "when a man turns his face to God he sees sunshine everywhere. All men are his broth-

*Dr. Ludoviko Lazaro Zamenhof, a Russian-Polish Jew, was born in Bjalostok, Russia, December 15, 1859 (Russian calendar, December 3rd). He died in Varsovio, April 14, 1917.

His father was a teacher of French and German, therefore giving the young Zamenhof an opportunity to get acquainted with the languages in his early boyhood. At the age of four years the boy showed such brilliancy as to read and write although he was of a delicate constitution. In 1869 he commenced to study in the Bjalostok high school. Later, in 1873, his parents sent him to Varsovio to study, where his father was an education inspector and sometime later a professor.

The following quotations are from his own words (Esperantaj Prozajij, pp. 239, 244, 246):

"I was born at Bjalostok, in the province of Grodno. This scene of my birth and childhood determined the trend of my future aspirations. In Bjalostok the population contains four different elements—Russians, Poles, Germans and Jews. Each of these sections speaks a different language, and is on bad terms with the others. . . . I was educated to be an idealist; I was taught that all men were brothers, while, all the time, everything around me made me feel that men did not exist; there only existed Russians, Poles, Germans, Jews, and so on."

After describing various steps in the evolution of Esperanto, Dr. Zamenhof continues:—

"Practical experience convinced me that the language still lacked an intangible something, a unifying element, which would give life and a definite spirit. . . . I began to avoid literal translations from this or that language, and tried to think straight away in the neutral tongue. I then noticed that the language . . . acquired a spirit of its own."

Referring to the momentous final step which he took, in 1887, by publishing his language to the world, Dr. Zamenhof says:—

"I felt that I stood on the banks of the Rubicon, and that from the day that my booklet appeared, I should no longer have the possibility of retreating; I knew the fate that awaits a medical man who depends on the public, if that public looks upon him as a crank, as a man who occupies himself with outside matters; I felt I was staking the future peace of mind of myself and my family; but I could not give up the idea, which had entered into the fibres of my being, and I crossed the Rubicon." The Editors.

ers," and it is this idea which is so basic in the life and work of Dr. Zamenhof* that one cannot escape the feeling that he was, in some sense, God-inspired, and that his work will go on and profoundly influence mankind for good, not only in a social but also in a spiritual way. None of the three hundred or more attempts to form a common international tongue has had for its founder a man who went through such a pathetic personal experience as this tender-hearted Jew, and his whole life seems to us who loved him to have been developed by the work he was doing.

We are our real selves when we are at our best, for it is only then that we are more nearly at one with God. And how can we be at one with God unless we are at one with our fellow man, and how can we be at one with our fellow man if we have to judge him without the help of common thought which can more easily come through a common tongue? It is just eighty years ago that De Tocqueville said in his great book Democracy in America: "The tie of language is perhaps the strongest and the most durable that can unite mankind." He was writing about our national life by itself, but since then we have learned that the world is larger than our own nation, larger even than those who speak the English tongue, large as all humanity, and we are now to consider briefly how far the use of Esperanto already has been and still more may be of service to all men in their religious and spiritual life as well as in their social welfare.

Transportation by railroad and steamboat, the use of the telegraph and telephone, cable codes and maritime signals, and things of that kind, have done more to bring men together in material matters during the last 70 years than they had been unified during the 700 years preceding, and during the same 70 years men have been released from many political and religious bonds which had hampered their spiritual development, but the same progress has not yet been made in the transmission of ideas. It is the order of the day to eliminate the middlemen in the distribution of the world's goods, so why not eliminate the middlemen, (i. e., the interpreter and the translator), in the distribution of the best ideas, both spoken and written?

The archaic translation of the common version of our English Bible, and even Moulton's adaptation of it to literary form, makes the Psalmist say that he prevented the night watches that he might meditate in God's word, but Zamenhof's version reads, (Ps. cxix:147) "Antau la Matenrugo mi vokas; Vian vorton mi fidas" (Before the dawn I call; in thy word I trust), and this is typical of much that might be said about the way in which we have been "prevented" by old habits of thought from awakening to the dawning of the light already beginning before the Most Great Peace which is sure to come. This is a time to remember the prophecy of Zephaniah (iii:9) where he says, "For then will I turn to the people a pure language that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." We are told that the prophets themselves did not know the full meaning of what was put into their mouths to say, and it may be that Zephaniah could not foresee that this is the time when men may be helped to a better knowledge of the largeness of God's nature through being better able to understand their fellow men.

This is the age of universals, and it is time to turn from some of our narrow conceptions of God and our mere local and inherited habits of religious thought and remember that in the human world there are two kinds of undertakings—universal and particular. The results of universal undertakings are infinite and are, therefore, limitless, and we may properly look upon Esperanto as almost limitless in its possible effects upon the minds and hearts of mankind as compared to the past use of any simply national tongue which confirmed men in their own separate interests. We can hardly imagine a family life where each child had to address his brothers and his parents in a different language. Whatever tongue he might use in his outside work or pleasure he would most certainly use in his home that language which could be fully understood by all. And how much more important that we should have for use in our higher life with our fellow man a means of communication such as Esperanto furnishes.

You have probably heard from others here this evening about the Esperanto translation of the New Testament, said to be the best rendering yet made from the most correct Greek version; the regard that some of the best Hebrew scholars in England have for the Esperanto rendering of the Old Testament; how the prayer book of the Roman Catholics and quite a number of their spiritual writings have been acceptably rendered into Esperanto; how the Swedenborgians, the Quakers, the Theosophists, the Socialists, the Scientists, the Red Cross, the Good Templars and many other organizations of that kind are using this effective tool of common thought to make known their writings to one another and to the world. And the very best things regarding the Peace Movement have been written by Esperantists and published in the organ of the Universal Esperanto Association at their headquarters in Geneva. This ought to be a sufficient answer to the question which might properly be made as to the capacity of this common language to express their higher thought.

A still stronger example can be given by a statement about a very interesting matter so far known to but few: A few words said in the United States to a lady born in the Hawaiian Islands led her to look into the merits of Esperanto and, while in Switzerland soon afterwards, she took the study up further with a Russian lady residing in Geneva, and, while lately in Japan, she took the matter up still further with a blind Russian* who had just come from London, and this resulted in a translation into Esperanto of a part of one of the deepest books of devotion of the East, which has since been followed by a translation just completed in England of a further part of the same work from the original Persian into Esperanto, which translation was done jointly by an English physician, a Persian prince in Teheran, a Persian merchant living in London, and finally passed upon as thoroughly satisfactory by one of the best Persian scholars in England, a retired English officer of the East Indian medical service, who has made the most correct translation of Omar Khayyam into English. This special instance ought to be a sufficient answer to any doubt as to the power of this common language to help men towards higher thought in a universal way.

Esperanto does not say that any one form of thought is the only form that is the best. It is free for the use of all. It is like the sun that shines and the rain that falls alike on the just and the unjust, but why should we not use it for the highest things, and, even dissatisfied as we are because of our imperfections, try to raise our souls into the higher atmosphere of better communion with God through sympathy with the common aspirations of our fellow man?—and, in this way, feel that we have done something to advance the world towards the New Day in which all peoples shall raise their faces towards the divine Light and be able to call to God and praise him in the same tongue; when we may all see that the sons of God have in common many noble thoughts which they will be better able to feel towards one another when a common means of expressing shall be used.

We have met here this evening to commemorate the life and work of one of the really great men of the age; a man whose life was one of constant service to humanity and who never lost his love for and his faith in his fellow man notwithstanding the many disappointments that were his lot. But he was greater than his disappointments, greater than what may seem to be his unfinished life, and it now remains for us to do what we can to carry on his work and show that our love for this noble language and its founder is not simply a feeling; that it is an earnest and abiding purpose.

With regard to every one of these qualities however the differences among different people are differences of degree, not of essence. Just as darkness is but the absence or lesser degree of light, so evil is but the absence or lesser degree of good—the undeveloped state. A bad man is a man with the higher side of his nature still undeveloped. If we are selfish, the evil is not in our love of self—all love, even self love, is good, is divine. The evil is that we have such a poor, inadequate, misguided love of self and such a lack of love for others and for God. We look upon ourself as only a superior sort of animal and foolishly pamper our lower nature as we might pamper a pet dog—with worse results in our own case than in that of the dog. We may be brilliantly intellectual with regard to material things but we are blind to the things of the spirit and lacking in the higher and nobler part of life. Evil is always lack of life. If the lower side of man's nature is disproportionately developed, the remedy is not less life for that side, but more life for the higher side, so that the balance may be restored. "I am come," said Christ, "that ye may have life and that ye may have it more abundantly." That is what we all need—life, more life, the life that is life indeed!

THE BAHAI TEACHING OF UNITY

"Ye are all the fruits of one tree, the leaves of one branch, flowers of one garden, sons and daughters of one Father whose name is Love." That is one of the most characteristic sayings of Baha'o'llah, and another is like it: "Glory is not his who loves his (own) country, but glory is his who loves his kind." Unity—unity of mankind, and of all created beings in God—is the main theme of his teaching. Men must cast away all prejudices of race, religion, nation, class and sect, and realize that they are all "leaves of one tree." As the leaf cannot reach its best development unless the whole tree is healthy, so neither can we attain the highest life of which we are capable until the whole of humanity does so too. One man cannot be truly rich, so long as his brothers are poor, nor can he be perfectly healthy so long as his brothers are sick. We are all members of one body, and the spirit that animates that body is God's Spirit.

Each individual life is but a fragment of the whole and cannot live apart from the whole any more than a single muscle-cell or brain-cell from the human body could live apart from the rest of the body. Just as each cell of the body must live not for itself, but in the service of the whole man and in obedience to his will, so each individual man must live not for himself, but in the service of humanity and in obedience to God's will. Only so can humanity be healthy. Only so can each man truly prosper. Never must self-interest, or family interest, or church interest, or national interest or any limited interest whatever take precedence of our supreme duties to mankind and to God. God first! If our attitude to Him be right then we shall serve aright ourselves, our families, our church, our nation, our kind. Devotion to God—severance from everything that would interfere with our devotion to Him—that is the one great secret of successful living. All the evil and misery in the world come from one cause—forsaking the path of God's will and saying, "My will not Thine be done."

Baha'o'llah has given us a new and wonderful revelation of God's will. If men and nations will but obey His commands, the world will be a paradise indeed! Now for the first time in the history of the world have the mechanical difficulties in the way of the unity of mankind been overcome by railway trains and steamships, tunnels and aeroplanes, post office and printing press, telegraph and telephone. Now for the first time in the world (at any rate since the Tower of Babel!) has a solution for the language difficulty been found, and now for the first time in the world, as it seems to me, has a complete and adequate plan for the reconciliation of the conflicting interests of mankind been given to the world. Baha'o'llah has raised the Standard of Peace and Unity and called on all mankind to gather under its ample folds: "O people of the earth! Make not the religion of God a cause for variance among you. Verily it was revealed for the purpose of unifying the whole world. Blessed is he who loves the world simply for the sake of his generous Lord." "These fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away and the Most Great Peace shall come, and all nations shall be as one kindred and one family."

Here again the harmony between true religion and science is evident. With every advance in science the oneness of the universe and the interdependence of its parts has become more clearly evident. The astronomer's domain is inseparably bound up with the physicist's, the physicist's with the chemist's, the chemist's with the biologist's, the biologist's with the psychologist's, and so on. Every new discovery in one field of research throws new light on other fields. Just as physical science has shown that every particle of matter in the universe attracts and influences every other particle, no matter how minute or how distant, so psychical science is finding that every soul in the universe affects and influences every other soul. Prince Kropotkin, in his book on Mutual Aid, shows most clearly that even among the lower animals mutual aid is absolutely necessary to continued life, while in the case of man, the progress of civilization depends on the increasing substitution of mutual aid for mutual enmity. "Each for all and all for each" is the only principle on which a community can prosper.

CONCLUSION

All the signs of the times indicate that we are at the dawn of a new era in the history of mankind. Hitherto the young eagle of humanity has clung to the old eyrie in the solid rock of selfishness and materialism. Its attempts to use its wings have been timid and tentative. It has had restless longings for something still unattained. More and more it has been chafing in the confinement of the old dogmas and orthodoxies. But now the era of confinement is at an end, and it can launch on the wings of faith and reason into the higher realms of spiritual love and truth. It will no longer be earth-bound as it was before its wings had grown, but will soar at will to the regions of wide outlook and glorious freedom.

One thing is necessary, however, if its flight is to be sure and steady. Its wings must not only be strong, but they must act in perfect harmony and co-ordination. As Abdul-Baha says: "It cannot fly with one wing alone. If it tries to fly with the wing of religion alone it will land in the slough of superstition, and if it tries to fly with the wing of science alone it will end in the dreary bog of materialism." Perfect harmony between religion and science is the sine qua non of the higher life for humanity. When that is achieved, and every child is trained not only in the study of the sciences and arts, but equally in love to all mankind and in radiant acquiescence to the will of God as revealed in the progress of evolution and the teachings of the prophets, and through the Inner Light in our own hearts, then and not till then, shall the Kingdom of God have come on earth and His will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Then and not till then shall the Most Great Peace have fully come.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened; that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

CHAPTER VI

The Power of the Holy Spirit

THERE was the true light that lighteth every man as he cometh into the world.

(John 1:9.)

The voice of God, speaking:—

"I have placed in thee the essence of My Light: Therefore depend upon it." "My love is in thee: Seek and thou wilt find Me near."

(Baha'o'llah.)

In the world of existence there is nothing so important as spirit. Nothing is as essential as the spirit of man. The spirit of man is the most noble of phenomena. The spirit of man is the meeting between man and God. The spirit of man is the cause of human life. The spirit of man is the collective center of all virtues. The spirit of man is the cause of the illumination of this world. The world may be likened to the body and man may be likened to the spirit of the body, because the light of the world is this spirit. Man in the world is the life of the world, and the life of man is the spirit. The happiness of the world depends upon man, and the happiness of man is dependent upon the spirit. The world may be likened to the lamp chimney, whereas man may be likened to the light itself. Man may be likened to the lamp, the spirit to the very light within the lamp. Therefore let us speak of this spirit.

The people of the world are divided into two classes. One class is the materialistic philosophers who deny the spirit and its immortality. The second class comprises the divine philosophers, the wise men of God, the wise illuminati. They believe in the spirit and its immortality. Some of the Greek philosophers declared man to consist of simply the material elements. These material elements compose the cellular elements of the human organism, and when this composition is subjected to disintegration, the life of man becomes extinct. They taught that other than the body there is no spirit. It is body and body only. From these elements these human emanations have come. To them the eye and the ear are due; by them the sense of taste, smell and touch are caused; and when these elements are decomposed, these senses are likewise decomposed. This is the statement of the materialistic philosophers.

But the philosophers of God say, No! the spirit does exist; the spirit is living and eternal. Because of the objections of the materialistic philosophers, therefore, the wise men of God have advanced rational proofs in regard to the validity of the spirit. The materialistic philosophers do not believe in the books of God, and, hence, for them traditional proofs are no evidence; materialistic proofs are necessary. Consequently, the philosophers and wise men of God have said that it is firmly established that existing phenomena may be resolved into grades; that is to say, the mineral, vegetable or animal kingdoms. When we look at the mineral we discover that it exists. . . . When we consider the vegetable we see that it possesses the power of the mineral plus the power of growth. Therefore, it is evident that the vegetable kingdom is superior to the mineral. When we look at the animal kingdom we discover that the animal possesses the power of the vegetable and also those of the mineral. . . . It has in addition the sense of hearing, sight, taste, smell and touch, the five senses of perception. It likewise has the power of memory. These do not exist in the lower kingdoms.

Just as the animal is more noble than the vegetable and the mineral, so is man superior to the animal. When we look at the animal we see that, although it possesses the five senses, it is bereft of ideation; that is to say, the animal is a captive of the world of nature, it is not in touch with that which lies beyond nature, it is bereft of spiritual susceptibilities, it is bereft of the attractions of conscience, it is not in touch with the world of God, it cannot deviate one hair's breadth from the law of nature. It is different with man. Man is possessed of the promptings of conscience; he has intelligence and perception and is capable of discovering mysteries in the universe. All the human industries we see, all the inventions and undertakings we observe are mysteries of nature and at one time were hidden; but the reality of man has discovered these mysteries. As a matter of fact, according to nature's laws, these things should be hidden and latent, but man having transcended the laws of nature, discovered these mysteries and brought them from the invisible state to the visible plane. See what a marvel man is! Consider electricity—one of the mysteries of creation. Under the requirement of natural law it should remain latent, but man discovered this power, brought it forth from the invisible state to the visible plane and utilized its energies. That is to say, man transcended this law of nature. How many of the mysteries of nature have been penetrated! Columbus, while in Spain, discovered America. Man is capable of discovering that the sun is stationary, while the earth revolves about it. The animal cannot do this. Man perceives the mirage is an illusion. This is beyond the power of the animal. The animal can only perceive through sense impressions, but cannot grasp intellectual realities. The animal cannot conceive of the power of thought. This is an intellectual matter and not limited to the senses. The animal cannot conceive of the fact that the earth is spherical. Intellectual phenomena are human powers. All creation is the captive of nature: it cannot deviate a hair's breadth from the laws established by nature. But man wrests the sword from nature's hand and uses it upon nature's head. For example, it is a requirement of nature than man should be a dweller upon the earth, but the power of the human spirit transcends the law and he soars aloft in aeroplanes. This is contrary to the law and requirement of nature. He sails at high speed upon the ocean. He dives beneath its surface in submarines. He imprisons the voice in the phonograph. He communicates in the twinkling of an eye from the East to the West.

These are some of the things we know to be contrary to the law of nature. Man transcends nature's laws. The animal, the vegetable, the mineral cannot do this. This can only be done through the power of the spirit, because the spirit is the reality. But in the physical powers and senses man and the animal are partners. In fact, animal is often superior to man in sense perception. For instance, the vision of some animals is exceedingly acute; the ear of the animal can detect a voice at a long distance. Consider the instinct of a dog; it is much greater than a man's. But although the animal shares with man all the physical virtues and senses, a spiritual power is bestowed upon man, of which the animal is devoid. This is proof that there is something in man which is absent in the animal; there is a faculty in man which is lacking in the animal. This is the spirit of man. All these wonderful accomplishments are due to the efficacy and penetration of the spirit of man. Were man bereft of this spirit, none of these accomplishments would have been possible. This is a proof that man is possessed of a spirit. This is evident as the sun at midday.

All creatures of material organization are limited to an image or form. That is to say, every created material being is possessed of one form. It cannot possess two forms at the same time. For example, a body may be triangular, spherical, square, a hexagon or an octagon, but it is impossible for a given object to be triangular and spherical simultaneously; it cannot possess two shapes at one time. It may be either triangular or square. If it is to become square it must first rid itself of the triangular shape. It is absolutely impossible for it to be square and triangular at the same time. That is to say, in the reality of the creatures the different forms cannot be simultaneously possessed. But in the reality of man all geometrical figures can be simultaneously conceived. In other realities one image must be forsaken in order that another might be possible. This is the law of change and transformation, and change and transformation are harbingers of mortality. Were it not for change and transformation in form, phenomena would be immortal, but because phenomena is subject to change and transformation from one figure or shape to another, it is mortal. But the reality of man is possessed of all virtues; he does not have to give up one image for another as other mere bodies do. Therefore in that reality there is no change and transformation; there it is immortal and everlasting. Verily the body of man may be in America but his spirit laboring and working in the far east, discovering, organizing and systematizing. Although governing, making laws, erecting a building in Russia, his body is still here in America. What is this power, which notwithstanding it is embodied in America, is still working in the East, organizing, systematizing, destroying, upbuilding? It is the spirit of man. This is irrefutable.

When you wish to reflect upon or consider a matter you consult something within you. You say, shall I do it or shall I not do it? Is it better to do this or abandon it? Whom do you consult? Who is within you deciding this question? Surely there is a distinct power, a distinct ego. Were it not distinct from your ego, you would not be consulting it. It is greater than the faculty of thought. It is your spirit which teaches you, which inspires and decides upon matters. Who is it that interrogates? Who is it that answers? There is no doubt that it is the spirit and that there is no change or transformation there, for it is not composed of composite elements; and anything that is not composed of elements is eternal. Change and transformation are peculiarities of composition. There is no change and transformation in the spirit. In proof of this the body may become weakened in its members. It may be dismembered or one of its members may be incapacitated. The whole body may be paralyzed and yet the mind, the spirit remains ever the same. The mind decides, the thought is perfect and yet the hand is withered, the feet have become useless, the spinal column is paralyzed, and there is no muscular movement at all, but the spirit is in the same status. Dismember a healthy man:—the spirit is not dismembered. Amputate his feet; his spirit is there. He may become lame, the spirit is not affected. The spirit is ever the same; no change or transformation can you perceive, and because there is no change or transformation, it is everlasting and permanent.

Consider man while in the state of sleep; it is evident that all his parts and members are at a standstill, are functionless. His eye does not see, his ear does not hear, his feet and hands are motionless, but, nevertheless, he does see in the world of dreams, he does hear, he speaks, he walks, he may even fly in an aeroplane. Therefore it becomes evident that though the body be dead yet the spirit is permanent. Nay, the perceptions may be keener when man's body is asleep, the flight may be higher, the hearing may be better; all the functions are there and yet the body is at a standstill. Hence it is proof that there is a spirit in the man and in this spirit there is no distinction as to whether the body be asleep or absolutely dead and dependent. The spirit is not incapacitated by these conditions; it is not bereft of its existence, it is not bereft of its perfections. The proofs are many—innumerable.

These are all rational proofs. Nobody can deny them. As we have shown there is a spirit and that this spirit is permanent and everlasting, we must strive to learn of it. May you become informed of this spirit, hasten to render it divine, to have it become sanctified and holy, and that it may become the very light of the world illumining the East and the West.

Recent Tablet from Abdul-Baha To Miss Jean Masson, Chicago

O thou respected one, a herald of the Kingdom of God!

The article that thou hast written* concerning the Mashrak-el-Azkar contained eloquent paragraphs and wonderful and subtle significances. At the time of writing the power of attraction was manifest and apparent and the real Teacher was instructing and inspiring. Consequently, it was composed in the utmost fluency and eloquence.

Today, whosoever turns his face toward the Lord of the Kingdom and, with sincere intention, taking the pen in his hand, engages his time in writing, there is no doubt that the Holy Spirit shall confirm him and the power of the Kingdom of God shall instruct him.

Therefore, rest thou assured in the divine graces and occupy thy time with the utmost power and seriousness in writing and composition, in talking and explanation.

Consider, how in former ages a number of women became confirmed and assisted in the demonstration of faith and assurance and how in this mortal world they left behind immortal names.

In the world of existence there are no greater women than the queens of empires. Materially they have reached the highest station of womanhood and gained great riches, infinite power and glory. Notwithstanding all these advantages, when they die and go under the earth, they disappear and become non-existent. They leave behind no name, no trace, no fruit and no sign. But the maid-servants of God who are outwardly in the utmost poverty and imprisoned by the people of oppression, humiliated and scoffed at by the outsiders, ere long they will crown their heads with the diadem of the everlasting glory and will be established upon the eternal throne of majesty. Their signs are eternal and their fame universal. This is the glory of the Kingdom! This is the heavenly bestowal! This is the divine outpouring!

Now, praise be to God! that thou didst quaff from the goblet of the love of God, became intoxicated with the wine of the knowledge of God, unloosed thy tongue in the glorification of the Lord of the Kingdom, and became assisted and confirmed with the power of the Supreme.

Therefore, thank thou God, that thou hast become one of the chosen ones and attained to the station of the favored ones.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

The Mashrak-el-Azkar and the Bahai Movement

BY JEAN MASSON

(From The Lake Shore News, Thursday, October 19, 1916.)

THE citizens of Wilmette are very well aware of the fact that, in the fall of 1917, will be laid, near the southern border of the town, the corner stone of a Temple of Worship, which may seem, to the uninformed, very mysterious, very occult and, consequently, altogether undesirable. To the citizens of Wilmette this event will be hardly less momentous than to the followers themselves of the great Bahai Movement.

The Bahai Temple will be the initial building of a great institution—the Mashrak-el-Azkar. Another mysterious term, that surely has no place in America, least of all in the inoffensive town of Wilmette!

Now, about this institution and the movement, from which it emanates, there is nothing mysterious, nothing occult, nothing condemnatory.

The Bahai Movement is the most practical religious movement in the world today. It is the effort to bring again into expression in human life and service the essential teachings of the Christ. That this reversion to Christian principles is vital to the continuance of the human race, no one today will presume to deny, with the terrible European war and its vast toll of carnage and hatred and crimes unspeakable forever present in his consciousness. The Bahai Movement makes for the abolition of the human prejudices that induce division and hatred and injustice among men.

Sometimes I have been asked why we Bahais don't use intelligible English to express what we are trying to do and be, what we are trying to build.

The reason is very manifest. We have no English words succinctly expressive of these oriental terms. And the English translation is cumbersome and indirect and inadequate.

Bahai is the Arabic for glory or splendor. A Bahai, therefore, is a follower of the light. And he glories in the name, because it is significant. It is a proclamation to the world of his connection with the great founder of the movement, Baha'o'llah.

Mashrak-el-Azkar, another Arabic term, signifies "the dawning place of the mentionings of God." And this dawning place will be not only a place of prayer and the worship of God, but a place from which shall go forth actual and selfless service to humanity, a reflection of service to God.

The sign erected upon the site of the Mashrak-el-Azkar by the Bahai Assembly of Chicago embodies, in general terms, the purpose of the institution—

MASHRAK-EL-AZKAR

"These grounds are the site of an edifice to be erected as an 'evident standard' in America of the oneness of humanity.

"Its doors will be open to all nations, races and religions.

"Its charities will be dispensed without regard to race or color. 'Prejudice toward none—Love for all.'

"Here, for the first time in history, religion and science will become harmonious, each the handmaid of the other, both showering their spiritual gifts on all humanity.

"Until the erection of this great edifice, all are welcome to this beautiful spot, and in its enjoyment we ask you to keep it pure and sacred."

Today we are concerned, more than ever before, with the meaning of this Bahai Institution; more than ever before with the meaning of the Bahai Movement; with its relation to the world, and to world affairs.

The time is ripe for the Mashrak-el-Azkar—the symbol of the universal principles and truth uttered by Baha'o'llah—to begin to take impressive and visible form. It is time for the world to know that in its midst is a powerful, universal movement, whose adherents are found in every country in the world, who believe in intensive and practical Christianity; who believe with a magnificent faith in the great principles that form the substructure of the Bahai Movement.

We can no longer be provincial or isolated or insular. It is the day of the universal. It is the day of interhuman consciousness; of the coming together of all peoples into a universal brotherhood. And our religion must partake of the same universal quality. We must be ready to say, "Brother, I greet you in the name of your prophet and my prophet, in the name of our God." And so—the Bahai Movement.

The site in Wilmette was chosen for the Mashrak-el-Azkar, because it was the most beautiful to be found available in Chicago or its immediate environs. A symbol of the highest spiritual ideals, of the noblest religious thought of all ages, to be expressed in superlative architectural beauty, should have a beautiful setting. And the Bahais of America chose well, when they purchased the land in Wilmette at the juncture of the drainage canal and Lake Michigan.

The Mashrak-el-Azkar will not be built in a day, even after the laying of the corner stone, in 1917, of the central house of worship. The building of the Temple, without any of the accessories, is concentrating the attention of Bahais today.

The Bahai Temple will be a structure of great beauty and magnificence. Many designs have already been submitted by American architects, any one of which would be celebrated far and wide for impressiveness of conception. A board of architects, however, will complete the final design for the edifice.

But, whatever the design accepted, it will embody various basic principles, symbolic of the universal tenets of the Bahai Movement. It will have nine sides and nine entrances, through which all the religions of the world may enter and unite in the worship of God. Where they have been separated in the past, by prejudice and mutual unfriendliness, here, in the Bahai house of worship will they be harmoniously united.

Throughout the structure and the ornamentation will be expressed this same dynamic thought of world unity. A massive dome, suggestive of this same unity of religions and peoples, will surmount the Temple. Picturesque and beautiful gardens will surround it. Bahais believe in the externalization, in the utmost of beauty and joy and happiness, of the great spiritual truth which they are charged to deliver to the world.

As I have said, the erection of the Mashrak-el-Azkar is not a matter of a day's work. So tremendous a thought of religious unity and universal service, as the Mashrak-el-Azkar embodies, cannot be hastily or impermanently externalized.

The erection of the Temple completed, the accessory buildings will then claim the attention of Bahais. These buildings will harmonize architecturally with the house of worship. And, in the years to come, when the last stone of the last building shall be laid, nowhere in the world will be found a group of buildings so beautiful, so imposing, so full of inspiration for humanity, as the first Mashrak-el-Azkar of America.

Not only will the Mashrak-el-Azkar usher in a new spiritual day for man; it will usher in a new architectural day, a new scientific day, a new day of universal human service.

Again and again I have been asked the purpose of so many buildings. I have been asked if this is a colonization scheme, if Bahais mean to establish a community life at the southern extremity of Wilmette. To the last question I have replied emphatically, "No!" The world is the home of Bahais. They can never be nucleated or secluded. In the Temple of Worship they will find spiritual refreshment, which they will carry out with them into the world and express in work and selfless service.

The accessory buildings will be devoted to the study and propagation of the highest scientific truths. Here will be taught that basic principle of the Bahai Revelation, that religion and science must harmonize. Art, music will find here, in the Mashrak-el-Azkar, their most perfect expression. Philanthropic service to the world, to the poor, to the unfortunate will proceed from the Mashrak-el-Azkar through its various accessories.

Bahais believe that the time will come, whether in our generation or not, when the Kingdom of God will be actually established on earth, when right living and a complete understanding of spiritual and scientific law by a unified humanity will preclude the possibility of any poor or unfortunate. Sociologic, industrial conditions will be regulated with justice to all mankind. There will be no more oppression, no more exploitation of the weak for the aggrandizement of the strong.

Surely, when such beatific conditions prevail among us, the Kingdom of God shall have been established. And "the founding of this Mashrak-el-Azkar is to be in the inception of the organization of the Kingdom" (Abdul-Baha).

This is the faith not only of the Bahais of America, but it is the faith of millions of Bahais throughout the world.

A great institution for the spiritual, religious, scientific education of humanity—the expression of a universal movement for the realization among men of brotherhood, of the unification of religions, must be the exalted conception of a master spiritual genius, a master seer.

And, as such, Baha'o'llah is recognized today by scholars, by those that sit in high places, by the poor and the lowly. His genius makes a universal appeal to humanity. And to his genius the world is indebted for the Mashrak-el-Azkar.

The story has often been told of his heroic life, of his sufferings, of his banishment and imprisonment for the utterance of the great truths that were his by virtue of his spiritual genius. And we of the immediate day remember well the visit to America, in 1912, of his distinguished eldest son, Abdul-Baha, after his release from the prison of Acca by the establishment of the Turkish Constitution and the declaration of the Committee of Union and Progress.

It is a story that never palls, for history records no such life of supreme heroism as that manifested by Baha'o'llah and his followers.

No superficial, insignificant movement is it that will make its first momentous expression, in the western hemisphere, through the Mashrak-el-Azkar of Wilmette. It is founded on the blood of thirty thousand martyrs. It is founded on lives of complete sacrifice and selflessness. It is founded on the stupendous faith and love, in the midst of a world of hatred, of three of the most remarkable characters of all time—the Bab, Baha'o'llah, Abdul-Baha.

Here are the bare historical facts: On the 23d of May, 1844, a young Persian merchant proclaimed the coming of a great world teacher. Himself he called the Bab, the Arabic for door or gate—the herald of the great one. Immediately he set to work to prepare Persia spiritually for his recognition. But a skeptical Mohammedan world scoffed at the declaration of the young Persian merchant, persecuted him, imprisoned him and finally, in 1850, martyred him for his faith.

From the same country, in 1852, arose Baha'o'llah, who gathered the followers of the Bab together, who proclaimed not the coming of a world teacher, but universal principles for the guidance of the world, and the elevation of mankind into lofty realms of spiritual and religious thought.

In the middle of the last century the world had not yet been united by any of the means of intercommunication with which today we are so familiar. Nations and races and religions were separated by what seemed insurmountable barriers. And yet here, in the darkness of a dark Mohammedan land, was a man who taught the oneness of the world of humanity, the oneness of religion, the harmony of religion and science, universal peace, universal education, the equality of men and women. He urged the creation of a universal language, the independent investigation of truth. He taught that prejudice of all kinds must be forgotten, racial antipathy, religious antagonism.

And, strange as it may seem to us of the twentieth century, he declared the incumbency of establishing a universal tribunal for the arbitration of international differences.

He seemed, Baha'o'llah, to possess a vision so universal and penetrating as to embrace within its range the whole world, and centuries and ages and cycles of time.

Men say of him now that he was far ahead of his time. The world has just begun to think in universal terms, to talk of the universal principles which he proclaimed almost seventy years ago.

And for this priority of vision, for the declaration of his great principles for the conduct of the world, Baha'o'llah with his followers was persecuted and banished, first to Bagdad, then to Constantinople, then to Adrianople, and in the summer of 1868, with seventy of his followers, to the penal colony of Acca, in Syria, on the Mediterranean coast.

The imprisonment in Acca is known as the "most great imprisonment," so prolonged it was and so terrible.

For twenty-four years here he was confined. And during all this time, as from the first day of his proclamation to the world, he gave continuous utterance to what we know today as the Bahai Revelation—religious, scientific, ethical, economic treatises; text books for the conduct of individuals and the guidance of nations, for spiritual illumination—in itself a complete cyclopaedia of knowledge.

From the prison of Acca, before the Franco-Prussian war, Baha'o'llah sent epistles to the crowned heads of Europe and to the President of the United States, calling them to universal peace and brotherhood.

That they did not heed the call, we have conclusive evidence today, when the desirability of universal peace was never so urgent, so overwhelming.

On the 28th day of May, 1892, after forty years of exile and imprisonment, Baha'o'llah passed away, an exile still and a prisoner—his message given, his work done.

A marvelous record of endurance and faith, unparalleled in history, save by the endurance and faith of Abdul-Baha, the central figure today of the Bahai Movement.

By the death of Baha'o'llah, through his last will and testament, Abdul-Baha became the great Bahai leader. It is his mission to interpret the Revelation of Baha'o'llah, to lay the foundation of a permanent civilization, that shall be undisturbed by the horrific cataclysms of hate and carnage that tear asunder today the social and religious structure of the world.

Abdul-Baha, "the servant of God," as his name implies, was eight years old, when, in 1852, the first Bahai exile occurred. And from that date he shared the vicissitudes, the persecution, the exile, the imprisonment, meted out to his illustrious father. And, because of his spiritual perception and understanding of the Revelation, because of his worthiness to be the successor of Baha'o'llah, it was entrusted to him to continue the great work—the work of calling men and nations to unity and peace and brotherly love.

It was in 1908, sixteen years after the death of Baha'o'llah, when Abdul-Baha was released from the prison of Acca. He was sixty-four years old. The marks and the ravages of exile and imprisonment were upon him. And yet he went forth to deliver to the world the message of Baha'o'llah. He went to Europe, he came to America, proclaiming the basic principles of that message, calling the statesmen and diplomats of the world, the people of the world to universal peace.

Four years ago, on May 1st, 1912, he visited the site of the Mashrak-el-Azkar in Wilmette. He commended the beauty of the location and addressed the Bahais gathered around him upon the great importance to the world of this first Mashrak-el-Azkar of the occident.

"Thousands of Mashrak-el-Azkars,—which means the dawning point of praise for all religionists,—will be built in the world," he said. "In the orient and in the occident of the world will they be built. But this Mashrak-el-Azkar, being the first one in the occident, has great importance."

Elsewhere he has said of the Mashrak-el-Azkar—

"The Mashrak-el-Azkar of Chicago is of the greatest importance. This is a Bahai Temple, a supreme house of worship, a place of spiritual gathering and the manifestation of divine mysteries."

"This organization of the Mashrak-el-Azkar will be a type for the coming centuries and will hold the station of the Mother, and thus, later, in other cities many Mashrak-el-Azkars will be its offspring."

"When the Mashrak-el-Azkar, with its accessories, is established in the world, aside from its religious or spiritual influence, it will have a tremendous effect upon civilization."

I wish it were within the possibilities of space to quote at length from the utterances of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha. Such wealth of literature and knowledge cannot be compressed to the requirements of a short newspaper article. But the few quotations here produced may convey to the reader somewhat of the inspiration back of the Bahai Movement.

The first words of Baha'o'llah brought to America were words spoken by him in 1890 to Professor Edward Granville Browne of Cambridge University, who had succeeded in gaining access to the great prisoner—

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; yet they deem us a stirrer up of strife and sedition worthy of bondage and banishment. That all nations should become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men should be strengthened; that diversity of religions should cease and differences of race be annulled—what harm is there in this? Yet so it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the Most Great Peace shall come. Do not you in Europe need this also? Is this not what Christ foretold? Yet do

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

we see your kings and rulers lavishing their treasures more freely on means for the destruction of the human race than on that which would conduce to the happiness of mankind. These strifes and this bloodshed and discord must cease, and all men be as one kindred and one family.

"Let not a man glory in this that he loves his country; let him rather glory in this that he loves his kind."

The words that follow, with all their oriental imagery, can hardly be conceived today as words whose utterance would throw a man into prison or keep him there, if already confined. They are the words of Baha'o'llah.

"Be thou a giver; when thou art wealthy, and grateful, when thou art poor.

"Be thou trustworthy, when thou art entrusted. Face the comers with a welcome smile.

"Be thou a treasure to the poor, an adviser to the rich.

"Be an answerer to the seeker, a fulfiller of promise and faithful in all things.

"Be thou silent when amid the crowds, and let thy judgment be just.

"Be submissive to thy fellowman.

"Be a light in darkness.

"Be thou a comfort to the sorrowful, and a sea to the thirsty.

"Be thou a shelter to the distressed, and a help, an assistant and a support to the oppressed.

"Be pious in all thy actions.

"Be a home to the stranger, a healer to the sick, a stronghold to him who calls for aid, a sight to the blind, and a path to him who is led astray.

"Be thou the beauty of the face of truth, an ornament to the temple of faithfulness, a throne to the house of character, a spirit to the body of the world, a banner to the hosts of justice, and a lamp to the horizon of goodness.

"Be thou a shadow to the fertile soil, a life-boat to the sea of knowledge, a star in the heaven of generosity, a crown to the head of wisdom, a brilliancy to the forehead of the world, and a fruit to the tree of obedience.

"I ask God to protect thee from the fire of hatred and the chill of enmity, for He is the near, the Answerer."

This is the service enjoined upon every Bahai to render to the world. It is Christian service in its essence, in its purity, in its sublimity.

Abdul-Baha has been asked innumerable questions concerning the problems confronting humanity today. A few of his answers are here reproduced.

As to the Bahai Movement—

"The Bahai Movement is not an organization. You can never organize the Bahai Cause. The Bahai Movement is the spirit of this age. It is the essence of all the highest ideals of this century. The Bahai Cause is an inclusive movement; the teachings of all the religions and societies are found here; the Christians, Jews, Buddhists, Mohammedans, Zoroastrians, Theosophists, Freemasons, Spiritualists, etc., find their highest aims in this Cause—the Socialists and philosophers find their theories fully developed in this Movement."

"The objective aims of this Cause are the oneness of the world of humanity; universal peace; universal love; international co-operation, reciprocity; the promotion of the principle of human consanguinity and solidarity, and the establishment of the Kingdom of God, first in the hearts of men and then upon earth."

"Today, in the world of humanity, the most important matter is the question of universal peace. The realization of this principle is the crying need of the time."

"By a general agreement all the governments of the world must disarm simultaneously. It will not do if one lays down its arms and the other refuses to do so. The nations of the world must concur with one another concerning this supremely important subject, thus they may abandon together the deadly weapons of human slaughter."

"The call to arbitration, to peace, to love and to loyalty is the call of Baha'ullah. His standard has floated for fifty years, summoning all of whatever race and creed."

"Where Love dwells, there is light! Where animosity dwells, there is darkness!"

"Let your effort be to find harmony. Let brotherhood be felt among you, and carry ye its quickening power throughout the world."

Questions that have been asked with greater concern, perhaps, of Bahais, than any other questions, are—

"What relation does the Bahai Movement bear to Christianity?"

"What place does Christ hold in the Bahai Religion?"

These questions are best answered in the words of Abdul-Baha—

"Baha'o'llah established Christ in the East. He has praised Christ, honored Christ, exalted Him, called Him 'the Word of God, the Spirit of God,' raised the name of Christ to supreme summits of glorification. Throughout the orient Bahais have illumined the lamp of Christ and spread His mention."

"The Cause of Baha'o'llah is the same as the Cause of Christ. It is the same temple and the same foundation. Both of these are the spiritual springs and the seasons of the soul-refreshing awakening and the cause of the renovation of the life of mankind."

"The spring of this year is the same as the spring of last year. The origin and end are the same. The sun of today is the sun of yesterday."

"In the coming of Christ the divine teachings were given in accordance with the infancy of the human race. The teachings of Baha'o'llah have the same basic principles, but are according to the stage of the maturity of the world and the requirements of this illumined age."

Back of the Mashrak-el-Azkar, whose walls will soon begin to rise in Wilmette, is a great historic world movement. The day has gone by to regard it lightly or superficially or superciliously. Great souls have come to re-assert the constructive teachings of the Christ, in terms applicable to the complex requirements of the age.

The world needs them—the teachers and the teachings. Christians are murdering Christians today. Christians are guilty today of instituting not universal peace, but universal war to destroy millions of other Christians. And we have before us the appalling spectacle of the spoliation, the annihilation of unoffending peoples and nations by followers of the Christ. And civilization is doomed, unless we have the re-creative word spoken that shall penetrate the great aching heart of the world and lead it out of immeasurable darkness into the immeasurable light of a new and glorious day.

Bahais believe that word has again been spoken. And Bahais believe that city, in which the first Mashrak-el-Azkar of the occident is erected, is a city of brilliant destiny. They believe that before it lies a great transcendent future. They believe that it shall influence civilization for all time to come.

Let us approach then the Mashrak-el-Azkar with a spirit of humility, of prayer and thanksgiving. It was greatly conceived. Let it be greatly honored.

The Divine Art of Living—Chapter VI

There are five divisions of the spirit:
First: the vegetable spirit. . . .
After this is the animal spirit. . . .
The human spirit. . . .

The fourth degree of spirit is the heavenly spirit; it is the spirit of faith and the bounty of God. It comes from the breath of the Holy Spirit. . . .

The fifth is the Holy Spirit. This Holy Spirit is the mediator between God and his creatures. It is like a mirror facing the sun. As the pure mirror receives light from the sun and transmits this bounty to others, so the Holy Spirit is the mediator of the Holy Light from the Sun of Reality, which it gives to the sanctified realities. It is adorned with all the divine perfections. Every time it appears the world is renewed, and a new cycle is founded. The body of the world of humanity puts on a new garment. It can be compared to the spring; whenever it comes, the world passes from one condition to another. Through the advent of the season of spring the black earth and the fields and wildernesses will become verdant and blooming, and all sorts of flowers and sweet-scented herbs will grow; the trees will have new life, and new fruits will ap pear, and a new cycle is founded. The appearance of the Holy Spirit is like this. Whenever it appears, it renews the world of humanity and gives a new spirit to the human realities; it arrays the world of existence in a praiseworthy garment, dispels the darkness of ignorance, and causes the radiation of the light of perfections.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Some Answered Questions; pp. 163-166.)

There is a wonderful power and strength which belongs to the human spirit, but it must receive confirmation from the Holy Spirit. . . . If it is aided by the bounty of the Holy Spirit, it will show great power, it will discover realities, it will be informed of the mysteries. Direct all the attention to the Holy Spirit, and call the attention of every soul to it. Then you will see wonderful signs. . . .

(Abdul-Baha.)

Ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you.

(Words of Jesus. Acts 1:8.)

. . . . The human body is in need of material force, but the spirit has need of the Holy Spirit. Were it not for the protection of the Holy Spirit the human world would be extinguished. His Holiness Jesus Christ declared, "Let the dead bury the dead." This statement of His Holiness indicates, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit," and it becomes manifest that the human spirit which is not protected beneath the Holy Spirit is dead. It is clear that the human spirit is in need of the resuscitation of the Holy Spirit, otherwise, though materially advanced, man cannot attain full and complete progress."

The power of the Holy Spirit enlightening man's intelligence has enabled him to discover means of bending many natural laws to his will. He flies through the air, floats on the sea, and even moves under the waters. . . . The Holy Spirit will give to man greater powers than these if only he will strive after the things of the Spirit and endeavor to attune his heart to the divinely infinite love.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Talks Given in Paris; p. 15.)

The human spirit is a power which comprehends the realities of things. All that thou seest, such as arts, inventions, traces and discoveries were once in the realm of the unknown and were a hidden matter. But the human spirit discovered such hidden mysteries and brought them out of the sphere of the unknown into the world of visibility. For instance, the power of steam, photography, phonography, telegraphy and mathematical problems were all once hidden mysteries and unknown secrets. But the human spirit discovered such invisible mysteries and brought them from the hidden into the visible world. Consequently it is evident that the human spirit is a comprehensive energy and controls the realities of things and discovers the hidden secrets in the domain of the physical world. But the divine Spirit discovereth divine realities and cosmic mysteries in the realm of the divine world. I hope thou mayest attain to the divine Spirit, discover the mysteries of the divine world and comprehend the secrets of the physical world.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet translated by Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, November, 1907.)

There are several kinds of light. First, there is the visible light of the sun by whose aid we can discern the beauties of the world around us. Without this we could see nothing. Nevertheless, though it is the function of this light to make things visible to us it cannot give us the power to see them or understand what their various charms may be for this light has no intelligence, no consciousness.

It is the light of the intellect which gives us knowledge and understanding and without this light the physical eyes would be useless. The light of the intellect is . . . born of the Light divine. The light of the intellect enables us to understand and realize all that exists. But it is the divine Light alone which can give us sight for the invisible things and which enables us to see truths that will not be visible to the world for thousands of years hence. It was the divine Light which enabled the prophets to see 2000 years in advance what was going to take place. And today we see the realization of their vision. Thus it is this Light which we must strive to seek, for it is greater than any other.

By the help of this effulgent Light all the spiritual interpretation of the holy writings has been made plain, the hidden things of God's universe have become manifest and we have been enabled to comprehend the divine purposes for man.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Talks Given in Paris; p. 61.)

The light is of four kinds: First, the light of the sun. . . . Second, the light of the eye. . . . Third, the light of the intellect. . . . Fourth, the light of guidance. This last is the supreme Light, the conscious reality which comprehends mysteries.

"Can this last ever be cognizable through the special senses, as the eye?" was asked.

"By the insight," Abdul-Baha answered.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Heavenly Vista; p. 25.)

Truth (the highest truth) is unattainable except through the favor of the Holy Spirit.

(Abdul-Baha.)

The (Holy) Spirit is encompassing and surrounding all. It is holy. It is sanctified from attachment to a special place. It is present everywhere and at every time. It exists in all places, yet is placeless.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From a message to "Body of Friends" in 1910.)

The Christ is the central point of the Holy Spirit; he was born of the Holy Spirit; he was raised up of the Holy Spirit. . . . The focus of the rays of the Sun of Reality was Christ; and from this glorious focus the bounty of God was reflected upon the other mirrors which were the reality of the apostles. . . . Jesus was the sun and his rays shone upon his disciples through his teachings.

(Compiled from the words of Abdul-Baha.)

The Holy Spirit (in its completeness) is given only to the prophets; the people can possess but the rays of the Holy Spirit.

(Abdul-Baha.)

The greatest power of the Holy Spirit exists in the divine Manifestations of the Truth (i. e., the greatest world-prophets like Christ). Through the power of the Spirit, the heavenly teachings have been brought into the world of humanity.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Talks Given in Paris; p. 82.)

When Christ appeared with those marvelous breaths of the Holy Spirit, the children of Israel said, "We are quite independent of him; we can do without him and follow Moses; we have a book and in it are found the teachings of God. What need therefore have we of this man?"

Christ said to them, "The book sufficeth you not." It is possible for a man to hold to a book of medicine and say, "I have no need of a doctor, I will act according to the book. In it every disease is named, all symptoms are explained, the diagnosis of each ailment is completely written out and a prescription for each malady is furnished; therefore why do I need a doctor?"

This is sheer ignorance. A physician is needed to prescribe. Through his skill the principles of the book are correctly and effectively applied until the patient is restored to health. Christ was a heavenly physician. He brought spiritual health and healing into the world. Baha'o'llah is likewise a divine physician. He has revealed prescriptions for removing disease from the body politic and has remedied human conditions by spiritual power.

Therefore mere knowledge is not sufficient for complete human attainment. The teachings of the Holy Books need a heavenly power and divine potency to carry them out. A house is not builded by mere acquaintance with the plans. Money must be forthcoming, volition is necessary to construct it, a carpenter must be employed in its erection. It is not enough to say, "The plan and purpose of this house are very good; I will live in it." There are no walls of protection, there is no roof of shelter in this mere statement. The house must be actually built before we can live in it.

Briefly, the teachings of the holy books need a divine potency to complete their accomplishment in human hearts. In Persia, His Holiness Baha'o'llah reared and taught souls, established a bond of affiliation among various peoples and united divergent religious beliefs to such an extent that twenty thousand devoted ones sacrificed themselves for the Cause of God in the glorious unity of martyrdom. No differences whatever remained among these blessed souls; Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Zoroastrians were all blended, unified and agreed through the potency of his heavenly power—not by mere words, not by merely saying, "Unity is good and love is praiseworthy."

His Holiness Baha'o'llah not only proclaimed this unity and love; he established it. As a heavenly physician he not only gave prescriptions for these ailments of discord and hatred, but accomplished the actual healing. We may read in a medical book that a certain form of illness requires such and such a remedy. While this may be absolutely true, the remedy is useless unless there is volition and executive force to apply it. Every man in the king's army can give a command, but when the king speaks, it is carried out. This one, that one, may say, "Go conquer a country;" but when the king says, "Go!" the army advances. Therefore it is evident that the confirmation of the Holy Spirit and the impelling influence of a heavenly power are needed to accomplish the divine purpose in human hearts and conditions. His Holiness Jesus Christ, single, solitary and alone accomplished what all the kings of the earth could not have carried out. If all the kingdoms and nations of the world had combined to effect it they would have failed.

The point is this, that to gain control over physical bodies is an extremely easy matter, but to bring spirits within the bonds of serenity is a most arduous undertaking. This is not the work of everybody. It necessitates a divine and holy potency, the potency of inspiration, the power of the Holy Spirit. For example, His Holiness Christ was capable of leading spirits into that abode of serenity. He was capable of guiding hearts into that haven of rest.

In this century of the "latter times" Baha'o'llah has appeared and so resuscitated spirits that they have manifested powers more than human. Thousands of his followers have given their lives and while under the sword, shedding their blood, they have proclaimed "Ya-Baha-el-Abha!"* Such resuscitation is impossible except through a heavenly potency, a power supernatural, the divine power of the Holy Spirit. Through a natural and mere human power this is impossible. Therefore the question arises, "How is this resuscitation to be accomplished?"

*"O thou Glory of the Most Glorious!"
A prayer of intense concentration upon God.

There are certain means for its attainment by which mankind is regenerated and quickened with a new birth. This is the "second birth" mentioned in the heavenly books. Its accomplishment is through the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The rebirth of the spirit of man is through the science of the love of God. It is through the efficacy of the water of life. This life and quickening is the regeneration of the phenomenal world. After the coming of the spiritual springtime, the falling of the vernal showers, the shining of the Sun of Reality, the blowing of the breezes of perfection, all phenomena become imbued with the life of a new creation and are reformed in the process of a new genesis. Reflect upon the material springtime. When winter comes the trees are leafless, the fields and meadows withered, the flowers die away into dust-heaps. In prairie, mountain and garden no freshness lingers, no beauty is visible, no verdure is seen. Everything is clad in the robe of death. Wherever you look around you will find the expression of death and decay. But when the spring comes the showers descend, the sun floods the meadows and plains with light, you will observe creation clad in a new robe of expression. The showers have made the meadows green and verdant. The warm breezes have caused the trees to put on their garments of leaves. They have blossomed and soon will produce new, fresh and delightful fruits. Everything appears endowed with a newness of life, a new life and spirit are everywhere visible. The spring has resuscitated all phenomena and has adorned the earth with beauty as it willeth.

Even so is the springtime spiritual when it comes. When the holy, divine Manifestations or Prophets appear in the world a cycle of radiance, an age of mercy dawns. Everything is renewed. Minds, hearts and all human forces are reformed, perfections are quickened, sciences, discoveries and investigations are stimulated afresh and everything appertaining to the virtues of the human world is re-vitalized. . . .

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West; Vol. 4, No. 7, p. 118.)

The most important thing is that which comes through the Spirit—the breath of the Holy Spirit. The soul through the Spirit can realize the Kingdom. The soul can recognize and feel the love of God. Distance cannot prevent the receiving of spiritual bounties. Hills and mountains cannot check that. Why? Because there are no chains and bonds for the Spirit. The sun is very far,—in the highest position,—there is a great distance between the earth and sun, yet remoteness and distance cannot prevent its rays from shining.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Kinney-Beede-Thompson Notes; Acca, June 30; 1909.)

Verily the poems of Bishop Kan and John Newton are exalted, but it were possible to abridge them all to this: "O God quicken me with the breaths of the Holy Spirit." For that which contains the fulfillment of all human inspiration, for that which we supplicate in words is the breath of the Holy Spirit. Verily, it changeth the earthly man into a heavenly one, the materialist into a spiritual being, the unenlightened into a reflection of the divine, and the satanic man into a godly person. It maketh the blind to see and quickeneth the dead.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Y. Dawud, London, 1912.)

The Holy Spirit is the only power which will ultimately unite and harmonize the races and nations of the world. The Cause of God is the only panacea which will heal for all time to come the social, economic and political diseases of mankind. The revelation of Baha'o'llah is the tree which will send its outstretched branches to all the countries and under its cool shade all the religious sects will gather there to fraternize and associate with one another. The world is full of ideas but they are either fleeting or profitless or impractical or limited in their influence or confined within a narrow scope. The beaming shafts of the light of cosmic ideals must pierce through the hearts of men and the power of the Holy Spirit is necessary to carry into execution these noble thoughts of the age. Human power is limited in its influence. It can unite two persons, or two tribes, or two communities, or at the utmost two nations. At the same time it confesses that this unity is temporal and may be abrogated by the whim of either of the high contracting parties.

But the divine power unites nations and peoples and cements them together in the bond of brotherhood and peace for ages and cycles. His Holiness Christ was one person, without any worldly assistance and help, but through the effect of the Holy Spirit he was enabled to unite many nations and religions under the standard of Christianity. Likewise Mohammed unified the wild, savage tribes of Arabs and made them the conquerors of Asia. Consequently there must needs be divine power for the accomplishment of this universal aim. Human power fails in this undertaking.

The words of those souls who are the essences of severance, who are in the utmost sanctity and purity will have an effect upon the hearts of men the result of which will be unity and good-fellowship. Save through this, ideal communication will not be made possible between the children of men. They may achieve a temporal union for a few years. Men may so compound the various ingredients as to be promiscuously mixed together. But there must needs be the solvent so that they may become perfectly blended and united. In the human world that solvent is the power of the Holy Spirit which will thoroughly mix and blend the different constituents and elements representing the various nationalities, religions and sects. I hope the believers of God will unfurl the "World Peace Flag" because their aim is altruistic and they are helped by the confirmations of the Holy Spirit. Through the power of God it is possible for one Bahai to guide one whole nation. Such spiritual victories are dependent upon the breaths and bestowals of the Holy Spirit.

Spiritual education consists in the inculcation of the ideals of divine morality and promotes high thoughts. This spiritual education is made possible through the power of the Holy Spirit. As long as the breaths of the Holy Spirit do not display any influence, spiritual education is not obtained; whereas if a soul is inspired by the Holy Spirit he will be enabled to educate a nation.

Consider the records of bygone philosophers; the utmost that they could do was to educate themselves. The circle of their influence was very limited. All that they could do was to instruct a few pupils. Of such a type was the influence of Plato and Aristotle. These philosophers were only able to train a limited number of people. But those souls who are assisted by the breath of the Holy Spirit can educate a nation. The prophets of God were neither philosophers nor celebrated for their genius. Outwardly, they belong to the common people, but as they were encircled with the all-comprehending power of the Holy Spirit they were thus enabled to impart a general education to all men. For instance, His Holiness Christ and His Holiness Mohammed were not among the thinkers of the age neither were they counted great geniuses; but through the power of the Holy Spirit they were able to confer universal instruction upon many nations.

They illumined the world of morality. They laid the foundation of a spiritual sovereignty which is everlasting. It is the same with those souls who have entered the tabernacle of the Cause of God. Although not important in appearance, yet everyone is confirmed in stimulating the cause of general moral instruction. Therefore it has become evident that real spiritual universal education cannot be realized save through the breath of the Holy Spirit. Man must not look at his own capabilities, but think of the power of the Holy Spirit.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Asiatic Quarterly Review, April, 1913.)

This power is not verbal. It must be actual, demonstrative, dynamic. This power has gone out of the body of Islam. The Islamic world cannot grasp the political principles of modern times and is devoid of spiritual potency. If they desire tremendous progress in as short a time as possible they must obtain spiritual potency, thus reforming and changing all the various branches of the institutional life. The western nations for the last five centuries have steadily been going forward and, with superhuman energy pushing further and further the frontiers of ignorance and illiteracy, they have attained to their present unassailable position. Now if the Islamic people start on this path with the same determination and constancy it will take them at least five centuries before they could reach the up-to-date level of western civilization. This is of course a slow process and, as I told you they must attain to celestial power. Then you will observe their magical advancement.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 25, 1913.)

The power of the Holy Spirit is here for all.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Talks Given in Paris; p. 78.)

No philosophy, no system, has ever changed the manners and customs of the people for the better. The morals of the philosophers who are not enlightened by the divine Spirit are inferior. An ignorant man filled with the Holy Spirit, is powerful. He who is educated by the Holy Spirit can in his turn educate others in the same spirit.

The life and morals of a spiritual man are in themselves an education to others. Let your thoughts, words and actions bring life to those around you. Do not think of your own limitations; dream only of the welfare of the Kingdom of Abha. See the influence of Jesus Christ among his apostles, then consider their influence on others. These simple men were helped by the power of the Holy Spirit. So may you receive the divine assistance. Our capabilities are limited, but the help of the Kingdom of Abha is limitless. The earth of itself has no properties of life, but it is fertilized by the sun and the rain. The earth must not consider its own limited power. Likewise may you be given life, may the rain of the divine mercy and the Sun of Truth make your gardens fruitful so that many beautiful flowers of exquisite fragrance and hue may blossom there in abundance.

The captive of the Holy Spirit is exempt from every captivity.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Verily, thy Lord will assist and inspire thee with the breath of the Holy Spirit and will cause thee to utter the proofs and principles of thy Lord with great penetration and confidence.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Excerpt from Tablet, translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Ramleh, 1913.)

Rest assured in the fact that the breath of the Holy Spirit will aid you,—provided no doubts obtain in your hearts. Know this for a certainty.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Kinney-Beede-Thompson Notes, July 8, 1909.)

When you breathe forth the breath of the Holy Spirit from your hearts into the world, commerce and politics will take care of themselves in perfect harmony. All arts and sciences will become revealed and the knowledge of God will be manifested. It is not your work but that of the Holy Spirit which you breathe forth through the Word. This is a fundamental truth.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Waite-Harrison Notes; Acca, October 12, 1909.)

The withered and faded are refreshed, the joyless becomes happy, the extinct become enkindled and the lifeless are quickened with the breaths of the Holy Spirit.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Pay not attention to things material but reach after the Spirit. Fix your eyes on the Sun of Truth for his light floods the whole earth. Let the sun give you of his strength then the clouds of prejudice will not hide his light from your eyes, then will the sun be without clouds for you. May we share in the divine bounties of the Kingdom. May the world be for you no obstacle hiding the Sun of Truth from your sight, as the human body of Christ hid his divinity from the people of his day.

May you receive the clear vision of the Holy Spirit so that your hearts may be illumined and see the Sun of Truth shining through all material clouds.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Notes of Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford, Paris, October 27, 1911.)

The spiritual food is the principal food, . . . the effect of the spiritual food is eternal. The material food, that is, the food for the body, is simply water and bread, but the food for the intellect is knowledge and the food for the spirit is the significances of the heavenly words and the bounties of the Holy Spirit.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Kinney-Beede-Thompson Notes, Acca, July 6, 1909.)

The teachings of Baha'o'llah are the breaths of the Holy Spirit which create men anew.

(Abdul-Baha.)

And now you, if you act in accordance with the teachings of Baha'o'llah, may rest assured that you will be aided and confirmed. In all affairs which you undertake, you shall be rendered victorious, and all the inhabitants of the earth cannot withstand you. You are the conquerors, because the power of the Holy Spirit is your assistant. Above and over physical forces, phenomenal forces, the Holy Spirit itself shall aid you.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From address, Washington, D. C., May 10, 1912.)

The outpouring of the Holy Spirit changes the small acorn into an overshadowing tree and the showers of the heavenly clouds of mercy transform the black soil into a delectable rose-garden.

(Abdul-Baha.)

The body of man is created for this world but his heart is made for the habitation of the Holy Spirit. . . . When you are plowing the ground or sowing the seeds or reaping the harvest let all your thoughts and sub-conscious thinking be of God. Your hands and feet will be working but your heart must be attached to the Almighty.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, May 17, 1914.)

In the work of the Kingdom of God one should not consider capacity or ability; the confirmation of the Spirit will descend, because the weakest souls through the confirmation of the Holy Spirit become the most powerful. Some souls who are outwardly ignorant through this gift become learned men. The weakest souls become the strongest. Many times a woman has surpassed a thousand men, or, rather, through this help can withstand all the people of the world.

His Holiness Moses was apparently a shepherd but through the divine power he overcame Pharaoh and his armies. Likewise the disciples were the weakest souls but through the breath of the Holy Spirit and the assistance of the Kingdom of God they became the strongest ones. The thought which I wish to convey to you is this,—you should not look at your capacity or ability, nay, rather rely upon the confirmation of the Holy Spirit,—do not doubt. (After a long pause) Be confident and sure. It will help you.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Flowers from the Rose-Garden of Acca; p. 21.)

One must never consider one's own feebleness, it is the strength of the Holy Spirit of love which gives the power to teach.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Talks Given in Paris; p. 28.)

Upon calling Abdul-Baha's attention to some French warships in the harbor of Alexandria, he said:

"I desire that you may see the divine ships. These ships are the blessed sails who are traversing the sea of divine mercy; their propellers are the powers of spiritual love and their captains are the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. No ship is ever wrecked in this sea; its waves are life-giving. Each one of the friends of God is like unto an ark of salvation. Each ark saves many souls from the storms of troubles. The signs and traces of these sails are never-ending and eternal. The future centuries and cycles are like the sea on the surface of which these arks glide blissfully toward their spiritual destination.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 26, 1913.)

Let us pray to God that the breath of the Holy Spirit may again give hope and refreshment to the people, awakening in them a desire to do the Will of God.

(Abdul-Baha)

Once a learned man journeyed to see me to receive my blessing, saying he knew and comprehended the Bahai teachings. When I told him that he could receive the blessings of the Holy Spirit at any time when he put himself in a receptive attitude to accept them he said that he was always in a receptive attitude.

"What would you do," I asked, "if I were to suddenly turn and strike you?" He instantly flared with indignation and strode angrily about the room.

After a little I went over and took his arm, saying, "But you must return good for evil. Whether I honored you or despised you, you should follow the teachings; now you merely read them. Remember the words of Jesus who said, 'The first shall be last, and the last first.'" The man turned, shook my hand and departed, and I have since heard of many kind acts he has done.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Abdul-Baha in London; p. 112.)

STAR OF THE WEST

Mashrak-el-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress

Held by the Bahai Temple Unity for the Exposition of the Universal Principles, Economic, Social and Religious, of the Bahai Movement

All Sessions held at Hotel Brunswick, April 29-May 2, 1917, Boston, Massachusetts

THE sessions of the Congress were held Sunday afternoon and each evening from Sunday to Wednesday. There were addresses upon the social, economic and spiritual principles which the Bahai Movement is today presenting to the world, and beautiful music interspersed among the addresses. The music helped to heighten the glory of that spiritual atmosphere which made the Congress often so irresistible in its appeal to the hearts and the spirits. Among the speakers were Mr. Horace Holley, Mr. Howard MacNutt, and Mr. Hooper Harris of New York, Mr. Albert H. Hall of Minneapolis, Mrs. Corinne True of Chicago, Mrs. Mary H. Ford of Kansas City, Mrs. May Maxwell of Montreal and Mr. Joseph H. Hannen of Washington. Each session of the Congress was crowded with eager listeners—their bright faces betokening the joy with which the Gospel of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha is being received in this year of 1917.

The Feast of El-Rizwan

OPENING the glorious events in Boston preceding the ninth annual Mashrak-el-Azkar convention was the memorable and lovely Rizwan Feast held Saturday evening, April 28th, in Filene's great store. Fragrant and exquisite flowers made the place resemble somewhat the Garden of El-Rizwan and the spirit was the same as in that blessed and hallowed spot in the Orient. Everyone present heard the call to service, heard it as never before with throbs of longing, with yearning, with sincerity of purpose, with a determination to become "refulgent dawns." It was as though Abdul-Baha stood in their spiritual presence and said: "Arise, shine, for Light has come! The Glory of God has arisen upon thee; the Sun of Truth is in this Word!"

Among the speakers were Mr. Wm. H. Randall, Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, Mrs. Mary H. Ford, Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, and Mr. Joseph H. Hannen. Delightful music was given and a feature of the evening was the singing of the National Anthem, words and music composed by Mr. Edward B. Kinney and dedicated to the President of the United States, His Excellency, Woodrow Wilson.

Pot-Pourri of Convention Fragrances

By Martha L. Root.

THE ninth annual Mashrak-el-Azkar convention, assembled at the suggestion of Abdul-Baha, was opened at 10 o'clock, Monday morning, April 30, 1917, at Hotel Brunswick, Boston, Mass. The chairman, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, concisely stated its purpose:

"We are here to do Abdul-Baha's will. We are here with illumined vision, we pray, with ears listening for the divine guidance, to catch the desire of the Center of the Covenant for this gathering, and to do it; for he has in a tablet indicated, as he always indicates, that there is a great purpose in each one of these gatherings.

"Those of you who have assembled in past conventions know that in each one a great and fundamental spiritual problem has come before the convention for settlement, and in every case it has been settled right and has received the blessed confirmation of Abdul-Baha later."

Importance of Teaching.

The vision of the 1917 convention was glimpsed when the teaching tablets of Abdul-Baha were read, and action was taken to translate that vision into enduring form in firm and permanent action.

Mr. Hooper Harris voiced the thought of all when he said: "The one specific call for this convention is to take up in a fitting manner the matter of the promotion of teaching."

Mrs. Ella G. Cooper added that just as the previous year the convention was fired by the inspiration of giving, so this season it would be aflame through the plan of teaching.

A motion was made at once by Mr. Albert H. Hall that the Unity co-operate in the plan of teaching and spreading the teachings in the North American continent, communicated in the five tablets by Abdul-Baha, and that the Unity recognize the persons addressed in each of the five geographical divisions of North America as the persons best fitted to initiate the work in their several geographical boundaries fixed in the tablets. Quoting the speaker directly, "That we ask the executive board of this Unity to be elected, to co-operate and to co-ordinate the energies of this Unity with those five persons, so superintending the work in the five geographical divisions fixed by Abdul-Baha."

In the discussion on teaching which followed it was suggested by one of the speakers "that if we are to spread the light of the new Kingdom into all the cities and towns of America, we must have both organization and freedom. We must present the most great glad tidings 'systematically and enthusiastically,' Abdul-Baha has said. This requires that there be committees in each of the five great districts to systematize and guide the divine campaign in their district. It requires also a central committee which shall be a sort of clearing house to keep mutual understanding among the five districts.

"But the greatest need is for freedom, for the most glorious spontaneity which the Bahai Cause can present, lest anyone check the Holy Spirit when it is going into action. The five great tablets ring like a divine bell from the heaven of the new era calling everyone who hears to arise, if he can, and teach. If he cannot go to new cities let him then contribute some money and send or assist in sending someone else. He may send his contribution to the central committee of his district, or to his assembly, or he may send out some pure and illumined teacher himself. The great call of the hour is that the work be done and that radiant messengers of the good news enter every city and hamlet of our continent with the message that the most great community and world brotherhood is at hand.

"In our teaching campaign consultation in the open-minded spirit of perfect love is of supreme importance for most of us gaze upon the Center of Guidance through the colored glasses of our particular temperament and training. Some see the light of God's Center of Reality as red, others as violet or orange. Perhaps if we can unite our minds in pure love we may also combine these many colors so perfectly that they will shine forth as the pure white light of God's truth, the perfect light from which they are all descended. Then can we send forth our teachers and go forth ourselves so firm and wise and radiant in the light of God's new guidance that through us His light may enter the doorway of innumerable hearts.

"But let no one try to direct very much or put his own will into operation, because perhaps he does not know what God wants, and God works in a mysterious way to spread His Cause throughout America."

Mr. Hall's motion was then amended to the effect that "we recommend, in the spirit of loving consultation, that each one of these districts to which each one of these tablets is directed, shall get together in any way that seems wise and elect a committee of five or nine people, and let them elect a committee which has central guidance for all the committees and let the central committee feel itself merely a clearing house."

Before putting the motion as the question of authority came up, one speaker expressed the spirit of the tablets when he said: "We are not organizing the teachings. We are organizing a little group to assist the teaching. Don't you realize that God does the teaching? It is the Holy Spirit that is going to do the teaching. It is the pure fire from the words of the teacher that is going to illumine the world. You cannot organize this teaching; the force of the love of God will spread through this country in spite of, and quite beyond our organization. Let us just realize that we are doing this to bring together a little harmonious group with the idea and intent of assisting those pure hearts to rise and go forth, who with their words can illumine this great continent."

Business and Spiritual Fragrance Combined.

Interspersed with some alluring business reports were the sweet-scented spiritual messages of delegates gathered in Boston to bear witness to the power of God in this day. Mr. Wm. H. Randall well expressed how the Bahais combine business and the real spiritual fragrance in their gatherings.

"I think," said Mr. Randall, "that we must not feel when we speak of matters which we call business, and material, that we have divorced that line from spirituality. We must have a body through which the spirit speaks, and it seems to me that a proof of our interest in the material affairs of the Mashrak-el-Azkar is the demonstration of our spirituality and our spiritual effort to see that it becomes built and established.

"To me the very greatest note we can strike in the world is to bring the business world and the economic world into line with the new spiritual economics whereby our business affairs are governed, and in the broad fields of life breathe forth the fragrance of the rose-garden of the Covenant."

"As a delegate from Boston I have resigned, because Boston is its own delegate. The spirit of Boston is surrounding you and is bringing to you its own message of love. It is bringing you its welcome; it is filling this hall daily with many who will come to hear the spiritual message which you have brought them. Abdul-Baha at a feast once said, 'At this feast we have entered into a new hour and that new hour in the day of God brings a new bounty.' You have brought to Boston a new hour. You have brought to Boston a new bounty. Boston never again will be the same. Its spiritual center has been established by the supplications of every heart here to the Center of Reality.

"Our service here is to put into motion a great spiritual tide. The tides of the ocean move to the attraction of the moon, and the tide is really the effort of the ocean to lift itself up to the moon of its attraction. And this great spiritual tide here is the effort of these hearts, and the unified love of this assembly to lift itself up to the orb of the Covenant, to the moon of guidance. Therefore, we cease to be individual in our real work, and we become a living stream of spiritual fire that shall mold the peoples of the world into the great streams which are moving always toward the orb of the Covenant."

After giving a full Mashrak-el-Azkar report Mr. Randall mentioned that some of the pledges read "As much as we can give" and some "one-nineteenth of all I earn." In every case where these were the forms of the subscriptions the subscriptions seemed to increase all the time. Prosperity seemed to come to the people who were giving one-nineteenth, and to those who said "I will give all I can." "Thus many of the pledgers," continued Mr. Randall, "have doubled and trebled the amount of their pledges. So that a little more of this wonderful prosperity, a little more of this deep spiritual insight into the great foundation of the Mashrak-el-Azkar, will, I hope, enable us to cable to our beloved Master before the fall that we have the sum which will permit us to prepare for the building."

Mr. Randall summed the spirit of our work together in these words: "The great binding love of the Center of the Covenant is not a philosophy. That binding and unifying power is not the language of words, but it is a language of the deep spiritual love which brings us all together in the great unifying power of oneness and the desire to make our efforts a oneness."

The New Booklets.

Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm's attractive booklets, merrily called "Big Bens" and "Little Bens," were one of the bright features of the convention. They made their debut at the Rizwan Feast, as favors, and so popular did they become that the edition of 15,000 is sold and another edition of 75,000 is just filled.

"Many people say," explained Mr. Wilhelm, "'Your meeting was interesting, and some very beautiful things were said, but I am not sure I know what it is all about.' Now if we can place in their hands something, at an expense so small that we can give them out liberally, something they can take home and read at their leisure and thus get the principles this movement stands for, they are very likely to speak of this matter to some good friend whose judgment they value, and pass the booklet on."

These booklets may be purchased from the nearest assembly or from the Bahai Publishing Society, 4319 Lake Park avenue, Chicago, Ill. The price is $19 a thousand for the big and $9 a thousand for the little booklets. The plan is for every Bahai in the United States to keep these at hand and daily put some into circulation.

Mr. Albert H. Hall made a motion which was carried: "That this Unity recommend the early publication in standard form of all the Tablets of Baha'o'llah thus far translated into English and which are available to us through English translations approved by the board, with the exception of the Kitab-el-Akdas and the Ighan; that these publications be in a standard form, contemplating the uniformity with future publications of Abdul-Baha; and that for the purpose of promoting and accomplishing that work Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm and Miss Mary Lesch be appointed a special committee to co-ordinate this Unity with the Bahai Publishing Society, and also that they co-ordinate with them all other volunteers in this work.

He then moved that for the purpose of carrying out this work covered by the resolution just adopted, Mr. Wilhelm and Miss Lesch be appointed a special committee to co-ordinate and secure the co-operation of the Bahai Temple Unity with the Bahai Publishing Society and all other volunteers to that work who will assist therein.

Star of the West.

There was much enthusiasm over the way the STAR OF THE WEST has been growing in interest and the splendid way it has been bringing good things to readers. Mr. Hall said, "In our meetings there is nothing so good as the STAR OF THE WEST," and he made a motion that an appreciation be sent to the editors.

Mr. Wilhelm said that everything that comes out now in the STAR is so broad gauge that it is excellent to pass along. His exact words were: "Now to come down to the business end for a moment, if we could double its subscription it would be so enormously better than it is now you would not know it. Anybody that knows anything about printing will tell you that the big expense is the first thousand. There is not a single booklet that we have that is so splendidly adapted to interest people as the STAR OF THE WEST. And I move that in the first communication that is sent out to the membership at large a request be made to all believers who can, to take an additional copy. And they will see mighty quickly what a wonderful improvement it will make in the STAR OF THE WEST."

Mr. Hall suggested that there be brought to their attention the plan of ordering five, ten or twenty copies for distribution, to be paid for by the assembly, as a teaching agency.

[It was later suggested in Chicago that it would be a great service if those who could afford it would send in five, ten, twenty or a hundred subscriptions and distribute or let traveling teachers distribute the extra copies to those who are today hungering for the life-giving words which the STAR OF THE WEST is presenting.]

Teachings for Bahai Sunday Schools.

Mr. Andrew J. Nelson, delegate from Racine, Wis., asked for information about teaching small children in a Bahai Sunday School or Saturday school or whatever day is chosen. The children in Racine are asking for a Sunday School (they did have one, but the young women teachers married and the young men have joined the United States army). "Therefore," he said, "if there is any one among you who can suggest a method to teach the children, so that they will not need to go through what the older ones have, I wish you would bear it in mind."

Mrs. Breed replied: "If you will get into communication with Mr. Joseph H. Hannen in Washington, D. C., you will get plenty of ideas for a Sunday School."

One Boston delegate said this was one of the most important suggestions made in the convention for it is a tremendous inspiration that we should not neglect these beautiful children, who really are in the world to take up the work which we shall leave almost unworthily done.

"The time has come to take up this question of teaching children," said Mrs. Grace Ober. "Abdul-Baha has promised that some very wonderful children will arise in the Cause. He was asked as to whether we should send the children to the Sunday Schools. He said, 'No! Why lay a foundation that will later need to be torn down?' So it behooves us to do some work for these children. We in Cambridge wrote all over the country for information as to what to do for the children because we did not know enough about it; and if you had seen the shower of letters that came to us you would realize that the time has come.

“This matter is so near our hearts that we desire to have some definite action taken, so that we can go forward immediately with the work. Mrs. Joseph H. Hannen, when in Acca, received some very wonderful instructions from Abdul-Baha regarding the teaching of children. She has this material and material is coming into Cambridge from all over the land. I move that a committee be formed of possibly nine members for the collection of material to be put into some definite form which will prove of assistance all over the world, which will meet the needs not only of very little children, but the children who are in different degrees of unfolding. If we had a group of nine workers to draw from all the writings of Baha’o’llah and Abdul-Baha whatever there is on this subject, possibly then when the committee was brought together they could reduce it to a committee of three and get the matter into some definite booklet or serial form.”

The motion was seconded and carried unanimously, Mrs. Hannen being made chairman.

Mr. Hannen, who received the instructions with Mrs. Hannen at Acca, mentioned that those instructions were particularly to the effect that the Words of Baha’o’llah, such as the Words of Wisdom and Hidden Words, be made the basis of the teachings—“the very words that we have thought the deepest and the part that we would need to bring to them last.” But those were the instructions.

M. Eshte’al-Ebn Kalanter said that Abdul-Baha had told him on several different occasions that we all look to the next generation. Bahais of today have brought in with them their prejudices and it is a mighty task for each of them to withstand the tests which are constantly nourished by these shades of bias; whereas the new generation will be free from this handicap, not having had any teachings of the schools of religion preceding Baha’o’llah, they will look upon all humanity as equal before God.

M. Kalanter also said that Mr. and Mrs. Hannen will be considered the parents of the Bahai Sunday School idea in America.

Mr. Harlan F. Ober told of Bahai night schools in India where young people attending other day schools are taught Bahai principles in the evening.

Bahai Books in Libraries.

Mr. Joseph H. Hannen gave an account of the placing of Bahai books in the leading libraries of America. A list of several hundred public libraries, representing a rather complete list from the Library of Congress was circularized in regard to Bahai books. In several instances large libraries such as that at Princeton, purchased at the full catalogue price such of the books they did not have. Other libraries willing to accept them were furnished with books. Mr. Hannen gave special praise to Mr. Ober, Mr. Harris, Mr. Remy and Miss Elizabeth Hopper for their help. Nearly six hundred copies of Mr. Remy’s two books are in American public libraries. The Shirazi family of Rangoon, Burma, had translations of these two books made by the hundreds for distribution in the Orient.

Some Beautiful Messages.

Some great meetings in the southland were spoken of by Mr. Louis G. Gregory and a new but radiant Bahai, Mr. Samuel Tait. One point made by Mr. Gregory was: “Abdul-Baha, in his tablet that was revealed since the war began, says that the hearts of the people are in a marvelous state of receptivity, and in traveling about through the country one finds just this condition. He describes also the condition of the teachers as they go forward. They must be severed from everything but God and be willing to do the will of God wherever that leads. And he declares that if the teachers go forth with these qualifications that all opposition shall be swept away. He says something like this: The ephemeral moth shall become the soaring falcon, and the butterfly shall become the eagle of the Testament, that everything in the way of opposition shall be swept away by this resistless fire of the love of God, if the teachers only go forth equipped with the word of God to do this wonderful work."

Mr. Tait told of visits to scores of southern cities and he said: "At all of these places I found a wonderful awakening. Some of the things that impressed me after my return from the field were the demonstrations of the power of the Branch.* I never realized the power of the Branch until I returned. I have been just saturated and impregnated by the power of the Branch, the greatest Covenant! And the thought that impressed me was that in this universal movement if we only had the effulgence of this divine glory that is permeating the world and the very atoms of the universe, we could capture the world!"

Mrs. Mabel Geary speaking for the northwest announced that Seattle has recently built a hall of its own. It has also formed a little public service bureau, the only one in Seattle. When Mr. and Mrs. Gillen's daughter was married in Seattle, the Bahai service was used and the bride and bridegroom gave the nineteen-day feast in their new home that same evening. Seattle, too, has the distinction of teaching the Bahai Cause to a Japanese. Abdul-Baha sent him a tablet urging him to illumine his own land, and the young man went back to his country, spoke in eight schools, published in Japanese a booklet about the Cause, and designed a card "Bahai, the New Revelation," which he spread over the country.

Mrs. Carre of Newark, N. J., described the Bahai burial service which was used at her daughter's funeral. Many friends of the beautiful girl accepted the Bahai teaching because she had lived it so radiantly. One man who had only known the girl by sight came to hear what religion had so illumined her face. When he heard the Message he said: "Why, from the time I was a little boy, I have wanted this Revelation, and when my mother would call me in for anything I would think, 'Oh! now she is going to tell me that wonderful thing I wanted to know.' And I have grown up and never heard of it until now." He died three weeks later, a glorious Bahai.

Here is a line from Dr. F. W. D'Evelyn's talk. He said (quoting Abdul-Baha): "'The banner of Baha'o'llah will be upraised, and all the people of America will hear the call of God.' As Abdul-Baha said to us in San Francisco, 'If all the forces of the world rise against you, they will not prevail, for they are retrogressing, but you are progressing.'"

"On our last meeting night before I left, the friends were gathered together to give me a message, and to have a vibrant keynote between myself and my colleague and those at home, and they selected that passage on page 155 of the Paris Talks, 'Cease the contemplation of your own finite selves, and fix your eyes upon regnant reality. Then will the soul come into the full nature of the divine power of the spirit and receive the blessing of infinite bounty'."

He continued: "May this convention be a great creative center from which will emanate a power which shall go forward, breaking down and overcoming every barrier until there be fulfilled the promises of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha, that this flag will float above every

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Conduct of the Assembly and Duties of Its Committee of Consultation

Words of Abdul-Baha: From the Diary of Mirza Mahmood. Translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago

ABDUL-BAHA addressed the Bahai children in the parlor of the Plaza Hotel, Chicago, on the morning of May 5, 1912. After embracing them with the utmost tenderness, and giving them candy and flowers, he said, "According to the words of Christ, you are the children of the Kingdom. And according to the words of Baha'o'llah, you are the candles of the world of humanity, for your hearts are in the utmost chastity, and your souls are in the utmost holiness. You are not entangled by this world. And like unto a mirror, your hearts are pure and clear. Your fathers and mothers must train you with the utmost tenderness and teach you the best manners and perfections, in order that you may be perfectly qualified with the virtues of the world of humanity; that you may advance in all the stations, that you may acquire sciences and arts, become the cause of the manifestation of everlasting bounties and universal progress."

Then Abdul-Baha turned and spoke to the friends:

"I am going, but you must arise to serve the word of God. Your hearts must become pure and your intentions sincere, in order that you may become the recipients of the divine bestowals. Consider that, although the sun shines equally upon all things, yet in the clear mirror the reflection is most brilliant and not in the black stone. That great brilliancy and its heat are produced because of the clearness of the glass and the crystal. If there were no clearness and purity, no such effects would have been manifested. Likewise, should the rain fall on salty earth, it would never have effect. But, if it falls on a good, pure soil, it becomes green and verdant and brings forth fruits.

"Today is the day when the pure hearts have a share of the everlasting bestowals and the sanctified souls are being illumined by the eternal manifestations. Praise be to God, you are believers in God; assured by the words of God and are turned to the Kingdom of God. You have heard the divine call. Your hearts are moved by the breezes of the paradise of Abha. You have good intentions. Your purpose is the good-pleasure of God. You desire to serve in the Kingdom of the Merciful One.

Therefore, arise in the utmost power. Be in the utmost unity. Never become angry with one another. Let your eyes be directed toward the Kingdom of truth and not toward the world of creation. Love the creatures for the sake of God, not for themselves. You never become angry if you love them for the sake of God, because humanity is not perfect.

looks at imperfections. The eye that covers faults looks toward the Creator of the souls, because He created them all; trains them all, provides for them. To all He gives soul and life. He gives eyes and ears. Therefore, all are the signs of His grandeur. You must love all, be kind to all. The poor must be cared for, the weak protected, the sick

IN EVERY COUNTRY or government where any of this community reside [i. e., the Bahais], they must behave toward that government with faithfulness, trustfulness and truthfulness. This is that which is revealed from the Presence of the Ancient Commander! It is obligatory and incumbent on the people of the world in general, to assist this Most Great Cause,—which has descended from the Heaven of the Will of the King of Pre-existence—that perchance the fire of animosity which is ablaze in the hearts of some of the nations, may be quenched through the water of Divine Wisdom and Lordly Commands and Exhortations, and that the light of union and accord may irradiate and illumine the regions of the world.

Words of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH from The Glad Tidings.

Undoubtedly, every human being has imperfection. And you will always become unhappy if you look toward the people. But if you look toward God, you will love them and be kind to them all, because the world of God is the world of perfection and complete mercy. Therefore, do not look at the shortcomings of anybody. Look at all with the sight of forgiveness. The imperfect eye healed, the ignorant taught and educated.

“Therefore, my hope is that the unity and the harmony of the friends of Chicago may become the cause of the unity of all the friends in America, and all the people become the recipients of their courtesy. That is, that they may become the example for all. Then the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha and the bestowals of the Sun of Reality will be all encircling.”

At the home of Mrs. Corinne True, November 1, 1912:

The Spiritual Committee of Consultation asked Abdul-Baha as to the duties of the Committee. He answered:

“The first duty of the members is to effect their own unity and harmony, in order to obtain good results. If there be no unity, or the Committee becomes the cause of inharmony, undoubtedly, it is better that it does not exist. If the Committee of Consultation or the general assembly becomes the cause of unhappiness, it must be abandoned. How pleased I was with the friends in California. They said: ‘We do not want a Committee of Consultation lest we fall into the thought of leadership and superiority and become the cause of dissension. But, now, praise be to God, we are serving according to our capacity and have no thought or aim, except the spreading of the fragrances of God.’

“Therefore, when the unity of the members of the Committee is established, their second duty is to read the verses and communes, to be in a state of commemoration and mindfulness, that they may see each other as if in the presence of God.

“The third duty of the Committee is consultation and meditation regarding the teaching of the Cause of God in all regions and climes. They must arise for this great purpose with all their power; they must declare and hasten the necessary steps for teaching the Cause of God.

“Their fourth duty is to meditate and consult for the helping of the poor and the weak and the protection of the sick.

“Their fifth duty is to correct and manage the affairs of the friends and attend to other matters concerning the Cause.”

The Symbolic Meaning of Walking on the Sea

Words of Abdul-Baha: From the Notes of Miss E. Rosenberg, 1901

IN this story (the “miracle” of Jesus walking on the water) of our Lord Jesus, the Sea of Tiberius represents the ocean of creation,—the two shores represent earthly truth and spiritual truth. The boat or ark stands for arguments and reasons by which men acquire knowledge and in this boat Jesus’ disciples were tossed on the waves of the ocean of creation. The shore which Jesus left in order to come to them, walking on the water, represents earthly knowledge. The haven or shore to which he guided them represents spiritual knowledge.

There are three ways of apprehending truth: 1. The earthly way,—by means of the five senses; 2. The way of argument and reasoning—and all philosophers have taught that it is possible to reach the knowledge of all truth by this method; 3. The spiritual way,—by which man receives knowledge from the inner light or inspiration. The ancient philosophers and indeed the philosophers of all times have taught that the first method,—that is by means of the five senses,—was the one certain way of knowing truth. . . . For instance, people in the desert often see a most beautiful mirage of trees and water, but the nearer you approach to this phantom, the more it fades away, and you begin to perceive its unreality. All this proves that the evidence of the senses alone is not to be relied on for conceiving the truth.

The ancient philosophers have also taught that by the intellect (the second method of argument and reasoning) accurate and absolute knowledge of everything can be obtained. . . . But it is evident that we cannot rely on this second method of obtaining knowledge to insure absolute accuracy. Successive philosophers are always contradicting each other, and propounding diverse theories. If absolute knowledge were to be obtained by this means, the wisest philosophers would agree in saying the same things.

There is yet a third method of acquiring knowledge,—by revelation, or the inspired books; but the difficulty in this case is that every person's interpretation of the book is colored by his own individuality. In the time of Jesus Christ, the Jews were prevented from accepting him by clinging to the literal interpretation of their book. . . .

As we have before said in the account of this miracle, the disciples of Jesus attempted to sail over the sea of creation in the ark of argument and reasoning, finding great difficulty and danger in proving the truth by so doing. But when Christ, the Light of the world, who knew all things by the light of inner spiritual illumination, came to them in their boat, walking by his knowledge over the ocean of existence, and having no need of the ark of argument, then immediately they were at their desired haven.

region, and every ear in America will hear the call of Allah'o'Abha!"

Miss Edna McKinney, representing Denver, spoke of a November night in Chicago but ten years ago when Mrs. Corinne True gave a dinner and nine persons from as many assemblies stayed afterward to discuss the possibility of forming an association for the erection of a Mashrak-el-Azkar in this country. That night there were about ten at the dinner. At the Rizwan Feast last Saturday night in the year of 1917 nearly four hundred friends were present, drawn by one great impulse to build the temple and to serve humanity.

"There is but one thing in the world today which can cause such a quickening, and that is the power of the Center of the Covenant.

"This wonderful ninth convention is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Baha'o'llah."

From Mrs. Josephine C. De Lagnel: "When I was in the presence of Abdul-Baha, I supplicated again and again that I might be his servant, and this one answer he always gave me: 'You know a poor, ignorant, Persian woman has become a great teacher on account of the love in her heart.'"

Mrs. Claudia Stuart Coles: "In this day no matter what mistake we make, it can be corrected, because the power of the Holy Spirit is surging through the whole world. As in the time of the apostles nineteen hundred years ago, so today the Pentecostal visitation gives to the weak and vacillating the power to go forth and die for the faith that God had lighted in their hearts.

"Our duty is merely to look at the Center of the Covenant and receive the light that is shining, and we need not bother with any fear as to how the world is to be run. But the power of the Spirit is remaking us all, and no law that we make, no word that we say, can stand before the will of God in this day which is to make us, anew."

Mrs. Greenleaf quoted Abdul-Baha as saying to her: "Be patient, be magnificently patient" and again, "Be happy. Happiness is life and sorrow is death. Be happy," then she knew that happiness came through activity. Another time he said to her, "The general of the army is never so much interested in the reserve forces, but it is necessary for him to be in communication with those at the front." Mrs. Greenleaf ended her talk by saying "Baha'o'llah is the center of light in the world. Need we worry too much about the darkness? When the center rises within the sky, it takes within its bosom all the light of the stars, and we behold not the stars for we have the dawn of the day."

Among the stories relating to the Mashrak-el-Azkar, Roy C. Wilhelm gave the following: "Abdul-Baha told the story of the rich man who gave all he had; and he told about the widow who was left with two children to support and who supported them by knitting socks, and that of every pair of socks she knit, one went to the support of herself and her children and the other went to the building of the Mashrak-el-Azkar; and he turned and said, 'These are the things that will build the Mashrak-el-Azkar in America.'"

Relative to certain matters which came up, Mr. A. W. Randall quoted the following words from Abdul-Baha: "There are no officers in this Cause. I do not and have not appointed any one to perform any special services, but I encourage every one to engage in the service of the Kingdom. The foundation of this Cause is purely a democracy, and not a theocracy."

Greatest Name Used for Applause.

An innovation at the convention was that instead of clapping to show appreciation, the friends were asked to use the Greatest Name.

Suggestion: Who will write a good article for the encyclopaedias? People are turning to them for facts about the Bahai movement.

It was moved and carried that Dr. Bagdadi and M. Kalanter translate the desires of Abdul-Baha on the conduct of assemblies and the five things its committee of consultation should do and that this be published in the STAR OF THE WEST.*

Mr. Frank E. Osborne read a complete Bahai calendar on which he has been working for the past four or five years. Abdul-Baha gave it his verbal sanction. It was referred to the executive board.

Dr. Hills Cole presented a resolution which was passed that the Bahai Temple Unity of America express its sympathy with Esperantists throughout the world in the loss of leadership sustained by them through the recent death of Dr. Zamenhof, desiring to join with them in paying tribute to the aspirations and endeavors of this true lover and advocate of universal peace, and commend to Bahais everywhere active participation in the work which, under God, Dr. Zamenhof was permitted to bring to so advanced a stage of fruition.

Membership of Executive Board.

The membership of the executive board for the coming year consists of Mr. Wm. H. Randall, chairman; Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, Mr. Albert H. Hall, Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Harlan F. Ober, M. Eshte'al-Ebn Kalanter, Mrs. A. S. Parsons, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, and Mrs. H. Emogene Hoagg.

The chairman of the board read the words of Abdul-Baha: "In meetings of consultation the majority should rule, but it is far preferable that there should be such unity that there be no majority, that all should be of one mind.

"In the election of the House of Spirituality (Spiritual Assembly of Consultation) no political tactics shall enter. They must be free from self, not anxious to further their own personal ambitions. The existence of the Spiritual Assembly is for no other purpose than to discuss those means which would further the promotion of the Cause; or otherwise its non-existence is better than its existence. . . .

"The apostles of Christ never devised any political schemes whereby to win the majority of votes. The result is that when we mention the names of John, of Peter, of Matthew, a wonderful spirituality is obtained, the hearts are inspired and the souls rejoiced. The disciples were not politicians, they were harbingers of the glad tidings of the Kingdom. They did not know anything about elections, votes, initiative and referendum. They knew Him only. Similarly, this Cause is pure spiritually. It deals with the moral aspect of mankind. The hearts of the believers must be fountains of the love of Baha'o'llah. Freeing themselves from all withering restrictions, they must occupy themselves with the promulgation of the Word."

Memorial Service for Mrs. Lua Getsinger.

On the last day of Rizwan, and the last day of the convention, as it was the first anniversary of the passing from this earth of Mrs. Lua Getsinger, a short memorial service was held for her. Mrs. May Maxwell spoke thus of the spiritual mother of so many souls in America: "Lua needs no eulogy from human beings. But whenever I think of her I remember something that Abdul-Baha said about her to me, 'It is indeed the truth that Lua has guided many, many, many souls into the Kingdom.'

"I think—as the convention is disbanding and we are going forth to the really great work for which in this convention we have received such inspiration, that it has been like drinking from a fountain of living water, it is fitting that we speak of Lua. It has seemed that last year's convention was like a limpid pool that was still and calm and deep, reflecting the image of the Center of the Convent, on that day when Lua gave up her life far away in the land of Egypt. I think many of us felt last year that the spiritual temple came into being on that day and at that convention. But this has been much more wonderful, because it has been like a surging sea, the tempestuous waves of power surging through this convention in all our hearts and souls; but the depths—those great depths of love—of wonderful love that we all feel for one another have remained untouched and undisturbed; and they are surely the basis of all that work we are going forth to do.

"And if we can attain to any part of the sacrifice and service of Lua, we shall do well, because I never knew her to refuse any call, no matter how weak, exhausted, or tired. She would always give up everything to serve. One day in Paris, at one moment's notice she gave up her trip to London and gave up her tickets to give the message to one man, because he wanted to hear it from Lua."

A silent prayer followed in memory of that one who was among the first to herald in America the new Kingdom of universal love and peace.

Adjourned to Meet in Chicago.

The Boston session was adjourned to meet in Chicago, June 17th, formally to ratify within the State of Illinois the action of the Boston meeting.

In the homes of Boston Bahais, delegates who remained a day longer, met and had wonderful times praying for the return of the pilgrims to the different parts of the country.

The One Day Convention in Chicago

ON the seventeenth of June friends from Boston, San Francisco, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh gathered in Chicago for a joyous one-day congress. The occasion of their meeting was the ratifying of the plans made in Boston for the Temple to be built in Chicago. This business was quickly finished and then came the chief glory of the day—two meetings, one in the afternoon at the Auditorium Hotel, another in the evening at the Masonic Temple which the Chicago Bahais had arranged.

Both meetings were crowded with eager seekers for the light of God. And the light of God's love and truth was there, shining with conquering brilliance. At times the Holy Spirit seemed to sweep the audiences in bright waves. Many had a new and holy consciousness that the Day of God had really dawned in this night of war. To some this consciousness was so vivid that at midnight they felt all the freshness and glory of the morning. Others who came to Chicago for the day went away feeling they had been born from above by the Eternal Life flowing bright from the Kingdom of Abha.

Addresses delivered at the Bahai Congress

THE ONENESS OF HUMANITY.

Outline of Talk by Mr. Horace Holley at Boston.

WE live today in an organized, developed society, among the accumulated resources of the past. The youthful mind, feeling its own solitary weakness in the presence of so much authority and power, tends to discredit its own resources and its own power, and early becomes susceptible to the all-pervading influences of materialism. For, in the broad view of things, materialism is simply the preponderance of external influence over the innate quality of the individual spiritual life. The ordinary mind, therefore, learns to develop its imitative, memorizing qualities at the expense of its creative, independent attributes. It locates authority in institutions, and traditional customs and beliefs rather than in spiritual impulse. In all activities, however, the creative work is done by minds which use accumulated knowledge, tradition and custom as fuel to their own vision. Without such minds in art, science, politics and philisophy—to say nothing of religion—the world would rapidly become stagnant, the slave of material doctrines. The vision of the few keeps alive the faith that the ultimate authority is really invested in the individual soul, for every new advance, every improvement, comes from some soul's independent activity. The spirit creates all things, and without spiritual activity thoughts decay.

Thus when we deal with the sources of things, even those things not commonly called religious, we perceive that society is essentially a manifestation of states of mind. Though most minds are early benumbed into the belief that they are the results and not the causes of society, materialism actually creates nothing, it merely has the power to perpetuate error and lack of faith.

Since we have come to a condition of affairs where the influence of minds upon one another is the all-determining factor in life, almost totally replacing the influence of the natural environment which determined life in earlier times, nothing is more important today than a general realization of the truth that society, in the long run, reflects mental states. We still manifest the mental states established under primitive conditions, still hold to the physical law of self-preservation and rivalry learned in the jungle, though the great war, as well as unrest and disturbance throughout society, show clearly enough that the physical law is no longer a guide but a betrayal. In other words, we stand half way between two civilizations—that in which nature determines thought, and that in which thought looks for guidance from the world of consciousness. In the world of consciousness we have a reality as universal, and far more powerful than nature, we have the Divine Manifestation, the Prophet who exemplifies not merely the Will but also the Reality of God.

Revelation is the proper environment of man's spiritual self. Revelation is the mother nature of the soul. It is the universe into which all men must be born anew to live complete, free lives. The religious teaching of love has been negative by man's fear of his fellow—the Bahai teaching of Unity casts out this fear by showing the inter-dependence in which all now live. Love or Christianity, is like a ship which has been drawn up on the sands of spiritual ignorance. Unity, or the Bahai Movement, is the sea in which that ship can now be launched.

Long ago it was said that the proper study of mankind is man. Man, however, exemplifies all degrees of existence from the lowest animal up. To study man in general is to find abundant proofs for every opinion about life. The proper study of mankind is really Man—the Revelator, the Mirror in which our true attributes can be beheld.

RELIGION MUST BE THE CAUSE OF UNITY IN THE HUMAN WORLD

From Talk by Mr. Howard MacNutt at Boston.

THIS is the Cycle of Definition;—not only have the meanings of the prophecies, terms and symbols of the heavenly books become manifest, but now is the time of clear vision, real perception and accurate observation. A few years ago, standing in the Lick observatory upon the summit of Mt. Hamilton in California, looking out into the starry abysses, an astronomer said to me, "Tonight definition is perfect; all the constellations are visible." In this day of inner perception and spiritual vision, standing in the lofty height of the Universal Manifestation, Baha'o'llah, we behold the divine Manifestations as one in the heaven of the Will of God, each constellation clear, distinct and shining in its own time and place, but all coordinated in the oneness of an infinite perfection.

Baha'o'llah is the object-glass of our spiritual telescope; Abdul-Baha is the lens or eye-piece through whom when rightly focused we view not his personality, but the light of the Abha splendor streaming through him.

Religion then is the revealed will of God by the light of which the conscious eye of man is quickened into intuitive recognition of the divine plan and Covenant. The natal hunger of human consciousness proves this knowledge must be revealed. Therefore the Word is made flesh only in the human kingdom.

Religion has been considered as codes of philosophical explanation and theological interpretation. In reality these have been satanic fancies. The very antithesis of true religion, are therefore the cause of disunion and hatred. Still the fact of the Word proclaims "Religion must be the cause of unity in the human world."

Each Manifestation has sounded the true diapason harmony of the inner and outer spheres. Mankind wanders away from the pitch, becomes dissonant, then another Manifestation sounds the original chord, summoning the world again to the true harmony.

This is the cycle of spiritual democracy. We are in the evolutionary times of transition from autocracy to democracy; from theocracy to individual responsibility of service and greater measure of judgment. It is the cycle of universal problems and universal solutions. The various systems of religious belief were not intended to unite before this day of God. Rivers mingle in their outlet with the ocean, but not in their courses. The barriers or watersheds are the concealed ordinances and ceremonials.

The materials for the divine temple of unity are now assembled. They cannot build themselves together into the plan of the Architect. The Architect himself does not build the structure. There must be a master builder who combines the materials in obedience to the Architect's intention. This master-builder is the Center of the Covenant through whom a creative cosmic constructive power is now manifesting itself. At the point of boiling, every atom of water is in intense agitation; then a new element, steam, appears. We are at the climax of ebullition.

Once I saw thousands of fishes stranded in pools upon the beach. They could not reach the ocean nor reach one another. I tried to help them, but not until the great ocean tide itself came in were they blended with it and brought together in salvation and unity. This unity of man in the revealed will of God, is the bounty of God descending upon those who now see the sign of the Son of Man in the heaven of religion, coming with his angels and servants to quicken conscious perception of the heavenly Covenant and its Center, Abdul-Baha.

THE EQUALITY OF MEN AND WOMEN

Resume of Address by Mr. Louis G. Gregory at Boston

THE Day of God is the day of freedom for all the varied elements of humanity. It accords with divine justice that each and all may develop their powers without hindrance from their fellows. Hand in hand with the oneness of humanity is the other principle, the equality of men and women. Humanity "cannot exist half-slave and half-free." Women must be free in order that men may be free. Considering the physical, mental and spiritual effects: thralldom rests as heavily upon the oppressor as upon the oppressed.

Are women inferior to men on the physical plane? This proposition cannot be scientifically proved. Instances are multiplied where women perform the tasks usually assigned to men with good results. In this great cycle the latent powers of women become more and more patent. It becomes apparent that any relative weakness on the part of women can be corrected by proper exercise and training. In the lower kingdoms, the female is often more active and powerful than the male. With the opportunities now afforded to women for physical culture, men who boast of physical prowess may look to their laurels.

Are the sexes intellectually equal? Although in past ages women who arose to places of commanding influence were rare and exceptional, yet a number of such cases can be cited to prove their inherent powers. In politics they have successfully ruled nations, inspiring their subjects to growth and freedom. Their contributions to literature, art and science have won fame and even in war time they have been forces to be reckoned with. Their right to vote grows in public favor throughout the world. Here again any seeming inequality of the sexes yields to those opportunities for education which the new cycle brings.

On the spiritual plane the attainments of women cannot be questioned. The thing speaks for itself. In nearly all religions women are in the majority and be it said to their eternal honor, they do not exercise over men the tyranny of a majority. How noble is that modesty, how spiritual is that trait, by which they so often efface themselves and vote men into office!

Many great women have arisen in the world. Among the very greatest was Kurrat-ul-Ayn, who was a follower of the Bab and one of the nineteen Letters of the Living. Beautiful, witty, learned, she became, through divine power, a brilliant star of reality. She spread the light of God and wrought a marvel toward the emancipation of women. She sacrificed life and more than life, in the path of God. Traces of her glorious service may now be found in all parts of the world.

The greatest attribute of God is His justice. The Most Great Peace will be permanent because its basis is divine justice. The equality of men and women is a light of reality. The Bab, Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha, have in oneness proclaimed this principle. The thing is done which ought to be done. The light shines, though the darkness doth not understand. In the Kingdom of El-Abha, no differences are recognized. The purest heart is most acceptable to God, whether man or woman.

STAR OF THE WEST

CHAPTER VII

Love

UNITY is love. It cannot be established without love. Therefore try, as far as possible, to be filled with love. Love is perpetual life, the most perfect vitality. Consider how love has gathered us together from the East and the West! If there were no love between us our friendship would have been concluded with salutations, such as "Good morning" and "Good evening." Love draws us in friendship to the people of every race and religion. He is a Bahai, of the people of Baha, from whom we breathe the fragrance of this love again. . . . The highest love is independent of any personal advantages which we may draw from the love of the friend. If you love truly, your love for your friend will continue, even if he treats you ill. A man who really loves God, will love Him whether he be ill, or sad, or unfortunate. He does not love God because He has created him—his life may be full of disassociations and miseries. He does not love God because He has given him health or wealth, because these may disappear at any moment. He does not love Him because He has given him the strength of youth, because old age will surely come upon him. The reason for his love is not because he is grateful for certain mercies and benefits. No!

The lover of God desires and adores Him because He is perfection and because of His perfections. Love should be the very essence of love, and not dependent on outward manifestations.

A moth loves the light, though his wings are burnt. Though his wings are singed, he throws himself against the flame. He does not love the light because it has conferred some benefit upon him. Therefore he hovers round the light, though he sacrifices his wings.

This is the highest degree of love. Without this abandonment, this ecstasy, love is imperfect.

The lover of God loves Him for Himself, not for his own sake.

(Abdul-Baha: Quoted from Fortnightly Review; June, 1911.)

When the fire of love is become ablaze, the harvest of reason will be wholly consumed.

(Baha'o'llah: Seven Valleys, p. 11.)

All the divine messengers have come to this earth as specialists of the law of love. They came to teach a divine love to the children of men; they came to minister a divine healing between the nations; they came to cement in one the hearts of men and to bring humanity into a state of unity and concord. In this pathway, each one of these divine Manifestations of God's love has accepted innumerable calamities and hardships. For the sake of a realization of love and concord among men, they have sacrificed their lives. How many persecutions have they suffered so that they might bring into a state of harmony those contending nations and religions, so that they might create peace and consolation among these various peoples of the earth.

The body-politic today is greatly in need of a physician. It is similar to a human body afflicted with nervous ailments. A doctor diagnoses the case and then prescribes treatment. He does not prescribe, however, until he has made the diagnosis. The disease which afflicts the body-politic is lack of love and absence of altruism. In the hearts of men no real love is found, and the condition is such that unless their susceptibilities are quickened by some power so that unity, love and accord may develop within them, there can be no healing, no agreement among mankind. Love and unity are the needs of the body-politic today. Without these no progress or prosperity can be attained. Therefore the friends of God must adhere to the power which will create this love and unity in the hearts of the sons of men. Science cannot cure the illness of the body-politic. Science cannot create amity and fellowship in human hearts. Neither can patriotism or racial prejudice effect a remedy. It must be accomplished solely through the divine bounties and spiritual bestowals which have descended from God, in this day, for that purpose. This is an exigency of the times, and the divine remedy has been provided. For the spiritual teachings of the religion of God can alone create this love, unity and accord in human hearts. . . .

Although the body-politic is one family, yet because of the lack of symmetry some members are comfortable and some are in the utmost misery; some members are satisfied and some are hungry; some are clothed with the most costly garments while some families are in need of food and shelter. Why? Because this family has not that reciprocity and symmetry needed. This household is not well arranged. . . . Is it possible for a member of a family to be subjected to the utmost of misery and abject poverty, and for the rest of the family to be comfortable? It is impossible, unless the rest of the family be without feeling, having become spiritually atrophied, inhospitable, unkind. . . .

The purport is this, that as we are all inhabitants of the same earth, in reality we are one family, and each one of us is a member of that family. Therefore we must all live in the utmost of happiness and comfort under a just rule and regulation in accordance with the laws of God, because this life is fleeting, and if man looks after himself only, he is no better than the animal, for the animal alone is to that degree egotistic. On the contrary man should be willing to accept hardships for himself in order that others may be happy. . . . This is characteristic of man, this is becoming to man. . . . Such a man is the honor of the world of humanity; such a man is the glory of the world of mankind; such a man is he who wins eternal bliss; such a man is nearer the threshold of God; such a man is the very manifestation of eternal happiness. . . .

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Address given at Montreal, Canada, September 3, 1912.)

The most glorious attainment is the understanding of this great saying: All beings are the fruits of one tree, the leaves of one branch, the drops of one sea. Honor is for him who loveth men, not for him who loveth his own.

O thou daughter of the Kingdom! The Lord of the Kingdom and the Sun of Truth hath sent forth a splendor and effulgence upon the world and the universe. All the contingent things found life and existence from the rays of that effulgence, entered and became manifest in the arena of being. Therefore all the objective phenomena are as surfaces of mirrors upon which the Sun of Truth hath cast the rays of the outpouring of bounty. All these surfaces (different stages of life) are mirrors reflecting the rays of the Sun of Truth. The outpouring is the One outpouring and the effulgence is the One effulgence. These complex and diversified mirrors are different from one another. Some of them are in a state of the utmost purity and clearness, reflecting the rays of the Sun of Truth, and the effulgence of the Luminary is manifest and visible in them. On the other hand there are mirrors full of dust and therefore dark; consequently, they are deprived and bereft of any radiation.

The believers of God are the translucent mirrors who, with the utmost purity and clearness, are reflecting the rays of the Orb of regions. Other communities are being darkened and bedimmed like unto stone and adamant. This condition is especially true of the people of hostility, animosity, oppression and tyranny, and the fanatical ones, who, on account of the accumulation of dust (prejudice) have become like unto the black stone, into which the rays of the sun do not penetrate and from which no light radiates.

Now we must not consider nor recognize these mirrors, which are deprived of every gift, as strangers and foreigners, neither should we speak of nor know them as enemies or savages; nay rather, must we recognize them as the members of our body, showing them love and affection; not as strangers, but as associates; not as foreigners, but as friends. One must become engaged in their training and education, sympathize with and show pity to them and lead them into the heavenly characteristics, in order that the accumulated dust may disappear from the surfaces of those mirrors and the shining rays of the Sun of Truth radiate from them.

O thou daughter of the Kingdom! Be ye not a stranger to anyone, even if he be the lowest of savages on the face of the earth and knows nothing of God, or even if he be an enemy. Desire ye his association, aspire ye for his freedom and long ye for his perfection, in order that hatred and dissension, animosity and oppression, cruelty and tyranny, brutality and falsehood, pride and transgression may be removed from among mankind, the universe become the Paradise of Abha, the world be transformed into the Kingdom of Heaven, the human race become angels and the individuals of the world of humanity become the manifestors of the favors of the glorious Lord. This is the perfection of the human world. This is the divine guidance of the Almighty.

O thou daughter of the Kingdom! Display ye the utmost charity toward the poor, the orphans and the helpless ones of all communities and nations, and have ye for them exceeding consideration. Serve ye them like unto the real servants. Know ye them as excellent persons and count yourselves day and night the thralls of mankind.

(Abdul-Baha.)

O Son of Man! In My ancient entity and in My eternal being was I hidden. I knew my love in thee, therefore I created thee; upon thee I laid My image, and to thee revealed My beauty.

O Son of Man! I loved thy creation, therefore I created thee. . . .

(From Hidden Words.)

We declare that love is the cause of the existence of all phenomena and that the absence of love is the cause of disintegration or non-existence. Love is the conscious bestowal of God,—the bond of affiliation in all phenomena. We will first consider the proof of this through sense-perception: As we look upon the universe we observe that all composite beings or existing phenomena are made up primarily of single elements bound together by a power of attraction. Through this power of attraction, cohesion has become manifest between the atoms of these composing elements. The resultant being is a phenomenon of the lower contingent type. The power of cohesion expressed in the mineral kingdom is in reality love or affinity manifested in a low degree according to the exigencies of the mineral world. We take a step higher into the vegetable kingdom where we find an increased power of attraction has become manifest among the composing elements which form phenomena. Through this degree of attraction a cellular admixture is produced among these elements which make up the body of a plant. Therefore in the degree of the vegetable kingdom there is love. We enter the animal kingdom and find the attractive power binding together single elements as in the mineral, plus the cellular admixture as in the vegetable, plus the phenomena of feelings or susceptibilities. We observe that the animals are susceptible to certain affiliation and fellowship, and that they exercise natural selection. This elemental attraction, this admixture and selective affinity is love manifest in the degree of the animal kingdom.

Finally we come to the kingdom of man. As this is the superior kingdom, the light of love is more resplendent. In man we find the power of attraction among the elements which compose his material body, plus the attraction which produces cellular admixture or power augmentative, plus the attraction which characterizes the sensibilities of the animal kingdom, but still beyond and above all these lower powers we discover in the being of man the attraction of heart, the susceptibilities and affinities which bind men together, enabling them to live and associate in friendship and solidarity. It is therefore evident that in the world of humanity, the greatest king and sovereign is Love. If love were extinguished, the power of attraction dispelled, the affinity of human hearts destroyed, the phenomena of human life would disappear.

This is a proof perceptible to the senses, acceptable to reason, in accord with traditions and teachings of the holy books and verified by the promptings of human hearts themselves. It is a proof upon which we can absolutely rely and declare to be complete.

But these are only degrees of love which exist in the natural or physical world. Their manifestation is ever according to the requirement of natural conditions and standards. Real love is the love which exists between God and His servants,—the love which binds together holy souls. This is the love of the spiritual world, not the love of the physical bodies and organisms. For example, consider and observe how the bestowals of God successively descend upon mankind; how the divine effulgences ever shine upon the human world! There can be no doubt that these bestowals, these bounties, these effulgences emanate from love. Unless love be the divine motive, it would be impossible for the heart of man to attain or receive them. Unless love exists the divine blessing could not descend upon any object or thing. Unless there be love the recipient of divine effulgence could not radiate and reflect that effulgence upon other objects. If we are of those who perceive we realize that the bounties of God manifest themselves continuously, even as the rays of the sun unceasingly emanate from the solar center. The phenomenal world through the resplendent effulgence of the sun is radiant and bright. In the same way the realm of hearts and spirits is illumined and resuscitated through the shining rays of the Sun of Reality and the bounties of the love of God. Thereby the world of existence, the kingdom of hearts and spirits, is ever quickened into life. Were it not for the love of God, hearts would be inanimate, spirits would wither and the reality of man would be bereft of the everlasting bestowal.

Consider to what extent the love of God makes itself manifest. Among the signs of His love which appear in the world are the dawning-points of His Manifestations. What an infinite degree of love is reflected by the divine Manifestations toward mankind! For the sake of guiding the people they have willingly forfeited their lives to resuscitate human hearts. They have accepted the cross. To enable human souls to attain the supreme degree of advancement they have suffered during their limited years extreme ordeals and difficulties. If His Holiness Jesus Christ had not possessed love for the world of humanity surely he would not have welcomed the cross. He was crucified for the love of mankind. Consider the infinite degree of that love! Without love for humanity John the Baptist would not have offered his life. It has been likewise with all the prophets and holy souls. If His Holiness the Bab had not manifested love for mankind surely he would not have offered his breast for a thousand bullets. If His Holiness Baha'ollah had not been aflame with love for humanity, he would not have willingly accepted forty years imprisonment.

Observe how rarely human souls sacrifice their pleasure or comfort for others; how improbable that a man would offer his eye or suffer himself to be dismembered for the benefit of another. Yet all the divine Manifestations suffered, offered their lives and blood, sacrificed their existence, comfort and all they possessed for mankind. Therefore consider how much they love! Were it not for their illumination human souls would not be radiant. How effective is their love! This is a sign of the love of God; a ray of the Sun of Reality. . . .

Consider then what the love of God means. Were it not for the love of God all the spirits would be inanimate. The meaning of this is not physical death; nay rather it is that condition concerning which His Holiness Christ declared "Let the dead bury their dead; for that which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of spirit is spirit." Were it not for the love of God the hearts would not be illumined. Were it not for the love of God the pathway of the Kingdom would not be opened. Were it not for the love of God the holy books would not have been revealed. Were it not for the love of God the divine prophets would not have been sent to the world. The foundation of all these bestowals is the love of God. Therefore in the human world there is no greater power than the love of God.

. . . Love is greater than peace, for peace is founded upon love. Love is the objective point of peace; peace is an outcome of love. Until love obtains, peace cannot be; but you may have peace without love. The love which is from God is the fundamental. This love is the object of all human attainment, the radiance of heaven, the light of man.

O thou who art attracted by the fragrances of God! Know thou assuredly that—

Love is the mystery of divine revelation;

Love is the effulgent manifestation;
 Love is the spiritual fulfillment;
 Love is the light of the Kingdom;
 Love is the breath of the Holy Spirit inspired into the human spirit;

Love is the cause of the Manifestation of the Truth (God) in the phenomenal world;

Love is the necessary tie proceeding from the realities of things through divine creation;

Love is the means of the most great happiness in both the material and spiritual worlds;

Love is a light of guidance in the dark night;

Love is the bond between the Creator and the creature in the inner world;

Love is the cause of development to every enlightened man;

Love is the greatest law in this vast universe of God;

Love is the one law which causes and controls order among the existing atoms;

Love is the universal magnetic power between the planets and the stars shining in the lofty firmament;

Love is the cause of unfoldment, to a searching mind, of the secrets deposited in the universe by the Infinite;

Love is the spirit of life in the bountiful body of the world;

Love is the cause of the civilization of nations in this mortal world;

Love is the highest honor to every righteous nation.

The people who are confirmed therein are indeed glorified by the Supreme Concourse, the angels of heaven and the dwellers in the Kingdom of El-Abha.
 But, if the hearts of the people become void of the divine grace—the love of God—they wander in the desert of ignorance, descend to the depths of ruin and fall to the abyss of despair where there is no refuge. They are like insects living on the lowest plane.

This is the path of El-Baha.

This is the religion of El-Baha.

This is the law of El-Baha.

He who has not this has no portion with El-Baha.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; Vol. 3, p. 325.)

The cause of the creation of the contingent world was love. As it is mentioned in the well known tradition which says, "I was a hidden treasure and I wished that I should be known; so I created the creation that I should be known;" therefore it is necessary that all should unite in the religion of the love of God, in such a way that not the slightest breeze of difference among the friends and companions should blow.
 All, fixing their gaze upon love, should move in perfect union so that no difference among any of them could be observed. In good and evil, in gain and loss, in adversity and prosperity, all should partake. . . .

(Baha'o'llah.)

Abdul-Baha said there are five kinds of love:

First: The love of His own perfec-tions which caused God to create that His beauty might be made manifest and appreciated.

Second: The love between sanctified souls for the attributes of the divine which they see reflected in one another.

Third: God's love to man individually that is gained according to the measure in which a man turns to God.

Fourth: Man's love for God, the Creator. This is the cause of his life, progress and happiness.

Fifth: The love of self, which if directed to the ego will deprive man of all true development, but if the love of self is a realization that one is a creature of God and must therefore attain to the station appointed for him, this love will be an uplifting one.

(A Brief Account of My Visit to Acca;
 p. 38.)

Among the human race, the bonds of, and means for, love are numerous, for man cannot live without it; nay rather, human life is dependent upon friendship and affection. Both the material and intrinsic development of man are conditional upon amity and love and the greatest honor and pleasure in the human world is love; but the ways and means are different. Sometimes the cause of love is simply relationship and kinship: and sometimes it is a racial bond, patriotism, political affairs, etc. But, through all these various bonds and means it is impossible to obtain a real and pure love: it is rather superficial and temporary. Such love may easily be changed into enmity and rancor, for it is affected by the slightest manifestation of hostility; whereas a true and ideal love is faith and assurance. Those who believe in God and are confident in His word shall enter the Kingdom, and the essential oneness appear from among them to such an extent that all become the drops of one ocean, the rays of one sun, the fishes of one sea, the trees of one garden, the birds of one orchard, the candles of one assembly and the stars of the same heaven. Such love is real; there is no interruption for this connection, nor any separation for this union. This foundation shall never be destroyed, for it is eternal. Hence it is established that the love which exists among the beloved of God is everlasting for it is a divine bounty, a godly appearance, a melody of the Kingdom and a heavenly cohesion. In the Koran it is said: "They love Him and He loves them"—i. e., the bounty of love is one of the divine bounties which comes to man from God, just as the sun sends its rays to the mirrors and thereby the mirrors are illumined: this effulgence and splendor are from the bounty of the sun. Therefore, this love which is among the beloved is a divine bounty, a godly splendor, an eternal manifestation and the power of divinity: it is perpetual.

(Abdul-Baha: Bahai News, No. 8, p. 5.)

That which is most delicious in the world of existence is love. The air of itself is not delicious, neither is water, nor in short, all the elements; but when coupled with love they are most delicious. Love is the best condiment. When love exists in the heart the slightest gesture proves welcome. When love exists in the heart, even if it be a blow it is delicious.

For instance: the food on this table is nothing, indeed very simple; yet because it is prompted by love it is delicious.

The Lord's Supper of Christ was indeed a very common thing, but because there was excessive love among the individual members who convened there, that table surpassed the royal tables and it was established as the Lord's Supper. Even now, at this time, it is known as such. This was due to the love which existed between Jesus Christ and the disciples.

. . . . The protestant missionaries were amazed at our love, and they were greatly disturbed and grieved exceedingly over it. They wonder what has cemented the Americans and Persians! . . . They do not know that the factor is the love of God and that it has united us.

The disciples of Christ represented many different nations and climes. One was a Hebrew; another a Syrian and another a Roman. How God, through His love, cemented their hearts! Even so it is now! It is the love of God which has connected us, so that in the utmost love do we assemble and are gathered together here.

The means for friendliness are multitudinous.

There is the family bond which is the cause of love. There is the patriotic

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

M. Eshte'al-Ebn Kalanter, being present, was duly made a delegate from Persia.

The convention continued the call of the assemblies which was responded to by the delegates or alternates, giving reports in detail of the work and progress of the Cause in their respective assemblies and vicinities.

On motion of Mr. Hannen, the convention unanimously adopted resolutions expressing the appreciation of the Unity of the life, character and work of Dr. Zamenhof, the author of Esperanto, and its sympathy with Esperantists throughout the world in the loss sustained in his recent death, and directing copy of the resolution to be sent to his widow, family and the Esperanto Association of North America and the other Esperanto associations of the world.

The secretary of the Unity reported that two-thirds of the assemblies had voted in favor of the amendments to the constitution. The chair thereupon declared that the two-thirds assent required by the constitution in favor of the amendment had been voted; that the amendments had been carried and adopted and had become a part of the constitution of the Unity.

The secretary of the Unity was directed to prepare a copy of the constitution, including all amendments thereto, to date, and to publish the same, if feasible, or to furnish each assembly and members of the executive board and interested persons with copies.

The following resolutions were adopted:

I. Resolved, That every Bahai assembly now a member of this Unity be required, within ninety days, to file a certificate of registration with the secretary of the Unity, in the following form substantially:

.....assembly does hereby register as a member of the Bahai Temple Unity of Illinois, and does hereby designate..... as duly elected delegate to represent said assembly during the year.

(Signed).....
Secretary.

II. Resolved, That any Bahai assembly, now a member of Bahai Temple Unity, which shall not within said period, file a certificate of registration (that is, within ninety days as above provided) shall be deemed to have abandoned its membership in Bahai Temple Unity, and that the secretary of the Unity shall forthwith send written notice to each and every Bahai assembly now a member of this Unity of the provisions of this resolution.

The following by-laws were unanimously adopted:

Any Bahai assembly may become a member of this Unity in the following manner:

1. It shall duly authorize, at a regular meeting thereof, an application in substantially the following form:

The Bahai assembly of..... hereby certifies that, at a regular meeting thereof, it was resolved to become a member of the Bahai Temple Unity, a corporation of Illinois, under and in accordance with its constitution and by-laws.

The delegate who is hereby authorized to represent this assembly, in accordance with the constitution and by-laws of the Unity, until further notice is sent or given.

Name Address
By.....
Secretary.

The application shall be sent to the secretary of the Unity and shall be presented by the secretary to the executive board for investigation and verification of the facts stated in the application. The executive board shall be entitled to ask for and to obtain any further information which it may desire, and may advise the applying assembly of its apparent acceptance, subject to final approval by the convention; but, in case of becoming convinced that, in the interest of the Bahai movement, the acceptance of such assembly is inadvisable, the executive board shall notify the applying assembly of its intention to so report to the coming convention. The question of the acceptance or rejection of the application shall be decided by the convention in its consideration of the report of its regularly constituted committee on credentials.

II. Any assembly, a regularly enrolled member of this Unity, which shall fail to elect a delegate to represent it in accordance with the constitution and by-laws of the Unity for a period of two years, shall be deemed to have abandoned its membership in the Unity, provided that any such assembly may revive its membership by making application for membership in accordance with the provisions of these by-laws.

III. These by-laws may be amended by the Unity at any annual or special meeting, by resolution adopted by three-fourths of the votes cast at such meeting, provided, that notice that an amendment will be proposed, stating the general scope of the amendment, shall be sent by mail by the secretary to each of the assemblies of this Unity thirty days before the meeting at which such amendment is proposed to be submitted.

IV. All notices required by these by-laws to be given in pursuance of any provisions thereof shall be considered duly given, when mailed by the secretary to the secretaries of the assemblies of this Unity, at such address as may appear from the records of the secretary, or if no such address appear, to the address believed by the secretary to be the address of any member of said assembly.

V. These by-laws shall go into effect from and after their enactment.

The convention, by resolution, supplemented by addresses of members expressed its appreciation of the work of the STAR OF THE WEST and directed that the secretary, in the first communication sent out to the membership, request therein all friends to subscribe for additional copies of the STAR OF THE WEST and that each assembly be requested to subscribe for from five to twenty copies additional for monthly distribution as a teaching agency.

The auditing committee made its report, approving the accounts of the financial secretary and treasurer; the reports were accepted and directed placed on file.

By resolution, Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi and M. Eshte'al-Ebn Kalanter were requested to translate from the Persian the instructions of Abdul-Baha, with reference to the conduct and procedure of assemblies and to furnish the secretary with a copy of such resolution and that the same be incorporated into the minutes of this meeting, and a copy sent to the secretary of each assembly of the Unity.

The committee on publication was directed to furnish to all encyclopedias accurate information concerning the Bahai movement.

It was resolved—"The Unity recommends the early publication, in standard form, of all the tablets of Baha'ollah thus far translated into English, excepting Kitab-el-Akdas and the Book of Ighan, with the approval of the Publication Board, contemplating a standard form in uniformity with future publications of Abdul-Baha."

On motion, Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm and Miss Mary Lesch were appointed a special committee to co-ordinate and secure the co-operation of Bahai Temple Unity with the Bahai Publishing Society, and all other Bahai agencies that will assist in the publication work.

It was resolved—"This Unity recommends the hearty co-operation in the plan of teaching and spreading teachings in North America as communicated to us in the five tablets of Abdul-Baha; that we recognize the persons addressed in each of these five geographical divisions as persons best fitted to initiate the work therein, and direct the executive board of this Unity to co-operate and co-ordinate the energies of this Unity with the persons so indicated."

The chairman was authorized to appoint a committee with Mr. Gregory as chairman to prepare a condensed statement of the proceedings and resolutions of the annual conventions of 1915, 1916 and 1917, to be published in the STAR OF THE WEST, and to contract with the STAR OF THE WEST for such publication, and that the original complete stenographic transcript of the 1917 convention be preserved with the secretary.

The convention expressed its appreciation and thanks to the Boston assembly, the host of this convention, for courteous and loving hospitality.

It was resolved—"That it be the future policy of this Unity, that one person shall represent but one assembly in the annual convention of this Unity, and that the assemblies in selecting proxies give them power of substitution to that end."

The convention proceeded by ballot to the election of an executive board for the ensuing year. The following were duly elected by the vote indicated:

Mr. Albert H. Hall.....50 votes
 Mrs. Corinne True.....49 votes
 Mr. Alfred E. Lunt.....49 votes
 Mr. William H. Randall.....49 votes

Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm.....44 votes
 Mrs. A. S. Parsons.....43 votes
 Mrs. H. Emogene Hoagg.....39 votes
 M. Eshte'al-Ebn Kalanter.....38 votes
 Mr. Harlan F. Ober.....32 votes

It was resolved—"That the chair appoint a committee of nine to collect material into definite form, including tablets and Bahai teachings for children of all degrees of unfoldment, and to consider and act upon the best means of bringing this material to the attention of all."

It was resolved—"That this Unity communicate directly with Abdul-Baha, if possible between now and November 12, 1917, and request his directions as to the immediate beginning of the laying of the foundation of the Mashrak-el-Azkar, and upon his permission thereto, that such foundation be forthwith laid."

The report of Frank E. Osborne concerning the Bahai calendar was accepted and referred to the publication committee for action.

It was resolved—"This Unity and convention do now adjourn to meet in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, at a special annual meeting of this Unity, called by the executive board for the 17th day of June, 1917."

ALFRED E. LUNT, Chairman.

STAR OF THE WEST:

Will you kindly publish in the earliest number of the STAR available the following notice?

"The Publications Committee, authorized by the recent convention of the Bahai Temple Unity of Boston, has been appointed and is comprised as follows:

"Chairman, Miss Jean Masson, 1055 Buena Ave., Chicago, Ill.; Mr. Horace Holley, New York City; Mr. Harlan F. Ober, 10 Dana St., Cambridge.

"The tablet from Abdul-Baha upon which the authorization of the Publications Committee was made is as follows:

To Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm—Upon him be greeting and praise!

Concerning the publications of books and pamphlets: The books of Mirza Abul Fazl, the books and pamphlets of Mr. Remey, likewise the instructive books and pamphlets written by some of the friends, also the translations of the Book of Ighan, Tarazat, Tajalleyat, Ishrakat, the Words, the Glad-Tidings, the Hidden Words, the Seven Valleys, and other translated and published works of the Blessed Perfection—likewise the new leaflet written by his honor, Mr. Remy, giving the twelve principles of the Cause—print, publish and circulate these books and pamphlets whenever necessary. But other books and pamphlets and those newly written or composed by the friends must be carefully read and thoroughly examined by a committee of the blessed believers in the annual Convention of the Mashrak-el-Azkar. If, in accordance with the majority of votes they deem these publications advisable, they may print and circulate them; otherwise they may wait until the way is opened and they may forward them to the Holy Land for correction.

“All manuscripts or writings coming within the scope of the tablet should be sent to the chairman, Miss Masson, and will receive early and thorough consideration.”

Faithfully yours in His Name,

Alfred E. Lunt.

The Divine Art of Living—Chapter VII

bond which is a basis for love. There is the racial cause which is a source of love. There is the political one which is the cause of love and unity. Partnership in business is one sort of connection.

But there is no bond like the love of God, for the love of God is the bond eternal, and outside of it there are only temporary ones.

The love of God is that peculiar bond which is not subject to corruption; whereas, other bonds, other loves, are subject to instantaneous corruptive changes. For the least cause such another love might be changed into hate. It owes its origin to a cause; when the cause is removed, the effect will likewise disappear.

But the love of God is not dependent upon material causes. For example, our assemblage here is absolutely free from any of the petty causes.

(Abdul-Baha: A Heavenly Feast; p. 30.)

There are two kinds of love, one universal and one individual. You must love humanity in order to uplift and help humanity. Even if they kill you, you must love them. Individual love cannot be forced and you are not called upon to love everybody personally, but if they are in your lives see to it that they are means of your development and that you are means of their development through your universal love for them.

(Abdul-Baha: Unity Through Love; p. 26.)

Question: “How can one love another whose personality is unpleasant?”

Answer: “We are creatures of the same God. We must therefore love all as children of God even though they are doing us harm. Christ loved his persecutors. It is possible for us to attain to that love. God manifested his love by creating man in His own image. Man must manifest his love by developing himself and others more and more in the image of God. The true fruit of man is, therefore, love. The purpose of a tree is to produce fruit. Man is like a tree; his fruit should be love.”

(Abdul-Baha: Unity Through Love; p. 27.)

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

(Jesus the Christ.)

I met a man this morning who belongs to a sect of Buddhists and I said to him, "What is your message?" He replied, "I'Amour—Love!" I said, "Yes but what beside that?" He repeated, "Love, that is all, that is the only message."

But the word love is not a message; the word love indicates an infinite thing and how shall we bring an infinite thing into relation with humanity which is finite?

There are in reality many kinds of love, and each in itself is infinite and finite. There is the love of country, or the patriotic love, there is the family love, there is the love of friendship, the love of man and woman—each one is finite and limited. There is only one love which is unlimited and divine, and that is the love which comes with the breath of the Holy Spirit—the love of God—which breaks all barriers and sweeps all before it.

Animals are completely subject to nature, they are its slaves. They live and die in the places in which they are born, they are the victims of storm and flood, they are hemmed in by desert, forest, by the great rivers and the sea.

But man has conquered nature and is free. He is no longer the slave of the physical world, he dominates it and is free. He compels the physical world to do his will. He crosses wide spaces, sails over the ocean, and is beginning to fly through the air. He is in all things a freed being, and can give his commands to that nature in the midst of which he was born.

So man, who is freed from material things and dominates nature, should learn to render his love also unlimited and divine. He should open his soul to the breeze of God that it may blow through him and break down all barriers.

So, if you love, endeavor to love divinely. If you love your country, love it not with the narrow feeling that it must be loved because it is yours alone, but with the greater consciousness that your home is a part of the universe. If you love brother or comrade or wife, love each one as a part of God, and not the narrow sense of possession which renders the love selfish and exclusive. Then the breeze of God blowing constantly through your love will purify it and make it divine so that the breath of the Holy Spirit will enter into your being and unite you to God.

But do not seek the honors and loves of this world, seek rather God and His love, and then the honors and loves which belong to Him will be yours. All the glory of the heavens is His, all the beauty of the flowers, the scent of the roses and the colors of the sunset. But more than this the beauty of the soul is His, so that when you look long upon His beauty, it takes many forms and re-appears in your consciousness in many figures. But all other beauty fades and disappears, all other honor but His becomes insignificant, all other love but His is undesirable.

. . . The object of the dawn of the Morn of Guidance and the effulgence of the Sun of Reality have been no other than the inculcation of the utmost love among the children of men and perfect good-fellowship between the individuals of mankind. Therefore, in the beginning the foundation of this love and unity must be laid among the believers of God, and then permeate through the nations of the world. Therefore as much as you can be ye kind towards one another, and likewise to others. The first melody of the Kingdom is the song of the love of God, and the love of God is realized in the universal love of all humanity. . . .

The world is black; the divine bestowal is radiant. This blackness must be changed into light, and this narrow, dark sphere must be transformed into a vast, illimitable universe of illumination. The body of the world is like a corpse; it must be resuscitated. It is withered; it must be made fresh and blooming. It is extinct; it must be enkindled. It is the arena for the expression of animosity; it must be made the dawning-place of love and good-fellowship. It is the place of origin for the emanation of contention; we must make it the axis around which revolves unity. It is the expression of the baser qualities which lead to eternal disgrace; we must make it the rising-point of the refulgent rays of the everlasting glory. The strangers must be instructed in the lesson of neighborliness; and the heedless made aware; the enemies must be loved, and the hateful ones be shown kindness. We must become flaming torches and the burning fire of God. We must move this world and illumine this dark globe. All this depends upon the effort of the friends and the sacrifice of the beloved ones.

(Abdul-Baha: Dairy of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 26, 1913.)

. . . . Radiate the light of the love of God to such an extent as to be able to remove entirely the gloom and darkness of hatred, bigotry and enmity from among humanity. Know all mankind of all nations, sects and tribes as your kith and kin. Consider not their deeds, but only God. Seek your reward from Him and not from them. Know the aged of all nations as your fathers, the youths as your brothers and the children as your own. No matter what lack of courtesy or what severe persecution or stern expressions of hate and unfathomable enmity you receive, you must have no excuse like the following: "So and so has spoken unkindly about me." "So and so has not done me justice,"—nay, rather you must have no excuse but live according to the divine teachings, whether humanity prove agreeable or disagreeable, whether humanity prove hateful or loving, whether it receives you or casts you out, so that perchance you may be assisted in hoisting the standard of peace and pitching the tabernacle of oneness and solidarity of the world of humanity—so that this temporal life may ultimate in the Life Everlasting, and this darkness of ignorance which has pervaded the whole world may be converted into the illumination of guidance.

This is one of the wonders of this age, that an oriental and an occidental can meet each other on a common ground. Although there exists among them no racial, no patriotic, or political relations, yet they love each other as though they belonged to the same race. This is spiritual relationship. Often two brothers, reared in the same family, are antagonistic toward each other, but you two who are remote from each other, are in reality as brother and sister. Happy are you because you have drunk from this spiritual fountain and attained to the reality of existence.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 6, 1913.)

. . . . The test of the truth (of God) lies in the influence the conception has on our lives. If it makes us kind and loving in our relationship with our fellowman, we know it is a true one. In other words it must produce in our hearts a love of God which must be transmitted into love for man.

(Abdul-Baha: Notes of Aline Shane Devin, Acca, about 1900.)

STAR OF THE WEST

Love

WHEN a man turns his face to God he finds sunshine everywhere. All men are his brothers. Let not conventionality cause you to seem cold and unsympathetic when you meet strange people from other countries. Do not look at them as though you suspected them of being evil-doers, thieves and boors, or that you think it necessary to be very careful, not to expose yourself to the risk of making acquaintance with such, possibly, undesirable people.

I ask you not to think only of yourselves. Be kind to the strangers, whether they come from Turkey, Japan, Persia, Russia, China or any other country in the world.

Help to make them feel at home; find out where they are staying, ask if you may render them any service; try to make their lives a little happier.

In this way, even if, sometimes, what you first suspected should be true, still go out of your way to be kind to them—this kindness will help them to become better.

After all, why should any foreign people be treated as strangers? . . . Do not be content with showing friendship in words alone, let your heart burn with loving-kindness for all who may cross your path.

O you of the western nations! Be kind to those who come from the eastern world to sojourn among you. Forget your conventionality when you speak with them; they are not accustomed to it. To eastern people this demeanor seems cold, unfriendly. Rather let your manner be sympathetic. Let it be seen that you are filled with universal love. When you meet a Persian or any other stranger, speak to him as to a friend; if he seems to be lonely try to help him, give him of your willing service; if he be sad console him, if poor succor him, if oppressed rescue him, if in misery comfort him. In so doing you will manifest that not in words only, but in deed and in truth, you think of all men as your brothers.

. . . All the infinite beings exist by this law of mutual action and helpfulness. Should this law of joint interchange of forces be removed from the arena of life, existence would be entirely destroyed.

When we ponder deeply on the connection and interdependence of beings we clearly realize that the life of every being draws benefit and sustenance from all the other innumerable existences. This mutual helpfulness is realized either directly or through mediation and if, for the twinkling of an eye, this confirmation and assistance does not descend upon the living being, that one will become non-existent, for all the existing things are linked together and draw help from each other. Therefore, the greatest foundation of the world of existence is this co-operation and mutuality.

Liken the world of existence to the temple of man. All the limbs and organs of the human body assist one another; therefore life continues. When, in this wonderful organism, there is a disconnection, life is changed into death and the parts of the body disintegrate. Likewise, among the parts of existence there is a wonderful connection and interchange of forces, which is the cause of the life of the world and the continuation of these countless phenomena.

When one considers the living beings and the growing plants, he realizes that the animals and man sustain life by inhaling the emanations from the vegetable world, and this fiery element is called oxygen. The vegetable kingdom also draws life from the living creatures in the substance called carbon. In brief, the beings of sensation acquire life from the growing beings and in turn the growing things receive life from the sensitive creatures. Therefore this interchange of forces and inter-communication is continual and uninterrupted.

From this illustration one can see the base of life is this mutual aid and helpfulness and the cause of destruction and non-existence would be the interruption of this mutual assistance. The more the world aspires to civilization the more this most important matter of co-operation and assistance becomes manifest. Therefore in the world of humanity one sees this matter of helpfulness attain to a high degree of efficiency; so much so that the continuance of humanity entirely depends upon this inter-relation. . . .

If you desire to love God, love thy fellow-men. In them you can see the image and likeness of God. If you are eager to serve God, serve mankind. Renounce the self in the Self of God. When the aerial mariner steers his airship skyward, little by little the inharmony and incongruity of the world of matter are lost, and before his astonished vision he sees widespread the wonderful panorama of God's creation. Likewise when the student of the path of Reality has attained to the loftiest summit of divine love, he will not look upon the ugliness and misery of mankind; he will not observe any differences; he will not see any racial and patriotic differences; but he will look upon humanity with the glorified vision of a seer and a prophet. Let us all strive that we may attain to this highest pinnacle of ideal and spiritual life.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Question: "How shall I overcome seeing the faults of others—recognizing the wrong in others?"

Answer: "I will tell you. Whenever you recognize the fault of another, think of yourself: What are my imperfections?—and try to remove them. Do this whenever you are tried through the words or deeds of others. Thus you will grow, become more perfect. You will overcome self, you will not even have time to think of the faults of others. Man is blind, yet he sees far. That is puzzling. We are in Paris and we see the faults of the believers in America and in Stuttgart, but, we are so blind that we cannot see the nose (touching his nose) on our own face. While we are blind we have a far-sighted vision to America, to Germany. You must carry the glad-tidings of the Kingdom wherever you go, and make the people happy, awake them into greater activity—make them active. . . ."

(Abdul-Baha: Notes of private interview, Paris, 1913.)

Holding out in his hand, a piece of very thin paper before his eyes, Abdul-Baha said: "See what a slight thing will shut off our physical sight; so will a slight indiscretion, a cross word, an adverse criticism shut off the delicate spiritual sight."

(Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford, Paris, 1911.)

Question: "How can we love our enemies; it is so hard?"

Answer: "There are two kinds of love: one is direct love which proceeds from a person to another person; the other is indirect love—that is to love an object for another's sake. Now we must love our enemies for God's sake and because He has created them; we must love them and not for their own personality. For instance, if your beloved sends you a rose, you appreciate it, kiss it and it is valuable to you. This love is not regarding the personality of the thing itself, but for the sake of the one who has sent it to you. We must love the house for its owner's sake."

(Abdul-Baha.)

. . . Treat ye the sinners, the tyrants and the blood-thirsty enemies as the faithful friends and the confidants of the heart. In truth ye must become the embodiment of benevolence and the expression of grace. Do not look upon the "worth" and "merit" of the people. In former ages and cycles, the command of love and non-resistance had been revealed. But there was a pretext among the people,—“merit” and “de-merit.” They would say this person is contumacious and a hypocrite and that person is blood-thirsty and cruel. And if any one practiced forgiveness that forgiveness was coupled with blame and reproach. But in this dispensation, all these pretexts are dispelled and real love and kindness with all the soul and heart to all the nations of the earth is the absolute law. . . .

(Abdul-Baha: Tablet; translated February 5, 1907, by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.)

His Holiness Christ came for the promulgation of the law of love; all the prophets were sent, all the Books were revealed, so that the law of love might be promoted. But a few self-seeking people subverted the original aims of the religion of God, changed its pure current and made it an instrument of hatred and rancor and quarrel and sedition. Why should we hate the members of other religions? Why should we not love one another? Why should we be tattlers and busy-bodies and gossip-mongers? Why are we not looking at our own short-comings? Why do we not let people alone? Why do we not search after our own faults? "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, let me pull the mote out of thine eye and behold, a beam is in thine own eye. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam that is in thine own eye, and then thou shalt see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

Let us have love and more love, a love that melts all opposition, a love that conquers all foes, a love that sweeps away all barriers, a love that aboundeth in charity, large-heartedness, tolerance and noble-striving, a love that triumphs over all obstacles,—a boundless, resistless, sweeping love. Ah me! Each one must be a sign of love, a sea of love, a center of love, a sun of love, a star of love, a haven of love, a pearl of love, a palace of love, a mountain of love, a world of love, a universe of love. Hast thou love? Then thy power is irresistible. Hast thou sym-

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

pathy? Then all the stars will sing thy praise!

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 10, 1914.)

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. . . .

Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love.

(I. Corinthians, 13; 1-13.)

When the Arabs observed Mohammed's charity toward the orphans and unprotected, his extreme simplicity and democratic attitude toward all mankind, they used to say: "He is in love with his Maker." One of the sayings of the Prophet (Mohammed) is: "Do you love your Creator? Love your fellow beings first." In another place he says: "That man who is most considerate of his kind is the favorite of God." In another place he says: "How do you think God will know you when you are in His presence? By your love of your children, of your kin, of your neighbors, of your fellow-creatures." . . .

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 2, 1913.)

We were commanded by Baha'o'llah to assist all the communities without the exclusion of any one. We do not consider their deeds and actions. We never lose sight of the fact that mankind are the children of God and their wants must be relieved without distinction of race or religion.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 27, 1914.)

In every dispensation the command of friendship and the law of love have been revealed, but it has been circumscribed within the circle of the believing friends and not with contrary enemies. Praise be to God, that in this wonderful cycle the laws of God are not confined within any limitations, neither must they be exercised toward a special community to the exclusion of another. He hath commanded all the friends to show love, friendship, amity and kindness to all the people of the world.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 26, 1913.)

No brotherhood appears in the world as lasting save that of the spiritual type. Only that brotherhood is permanent and eternal, for it is a spiritual brotherhood for the attainment of physical or material interests. This spiritual brotherhood has no other purpose than nearness to the Threshold of God. It is not

A Prayer for the Confirmation of the American Government

Revealed about the year 1900

O God—O thou who art the confirmer of every just power and equitable empire in eternal glory, everlasting power, continuance, steadfastness, firmness and greatness!—strengthen, by the abundance of thy mercy, every government which acts rightly towards its subjects and every dominion that protects the poor and weak by its flag.

I ask thee, by the abundance of thy holiness and that of thy bounty, to assist this just government which hath stretched out the ropes of its tent to far and wide countries; the justice of which hath manifested its proofs throughout the well inhabited, cultivated and flourishing regions belonging to such government.

O God, strengthen its soldiers and flag, give authority and influence to its word and utterance, protect its territories and dominions, guard its reputation, make its renown widely spread, divulge its traces and exalt its flag by thy conquering power and wonderful might in the kingdom of creation.

Thou are the confirmer of whomsoever thou willest. Verily, thou art the powerful and the almighty!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS

through the breath of the Holy Spirit. It is absolutely indissoluble; permanently will it remain intact, and in all the worlds of God will it be everlasting. It is a brotherhood not based upon thoughts, but one that has emanated from the love of God. It is not founded for defensive purposes but for the illumination of the human heart. . . .

(Abdul-Baha: Address given in Montreal, Canada, September 4, 1912.)

Material friendship is not permanent; for every kind of love which is not purely for the sake of God is ended in hatred. Amity which is not for the sake of the Lord changeth into enmity. But the divine friends are the faithful ones; they are the consolation of the heart and the peace of my spirit. They are spirit embodied, love personified, sincerity incarnated, loyal friends and staunch lovers. Therefore they are the cause of the happiness of the heart and soul.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 26, 1913.)

Did you know what I was smiling for? There was a person inside who called me. When I entered he said:

“Two years ago I came to you and stated that you were the chief of all the infidels. Now I want to tell you that you are not an arch-infidel.”

Then Abdul-Baha laughed and said: “In either case he has not understood, he is just revealing the state of his own consciousness. We must be kind to such people.”

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 21, 1913.)

Now the believers of God must live in accord with these divine teachings. They must become kind fathers to the children of humanity, affectionate brothers to the youths of mankind and soul-sacrificing children toward those laden with age. The aim is this: you must be in the utmost state of joy and fragrance, love and kindness toward all, even toward the enemies. Meet the persecutions and adversity with the utmost faithfulness. Whenever animosity appears deal with it with forbearance. Make your breasts the targets for the arrows and spears of opposition. Brave the ridicule, the blame and the rebuke with perfect love so that all the nations may observe the power of the Most Great Name, and all the people may acknowledge the potency of the Blessed Perfection, showing how he hath destroyed the foundation of strangeness, hath guided the inhabitants of the world to unity and love, hath illumined the realm of man and hath transformed this terrestrial globe into the delectable paradise. These people are like children, negligent and mindless. One must train these children with the utmost love and carry them in the arms of grace with infinite tenderness, in order that they may taste the spiritual love of the Merciful One, that they may shine like the candles and cause the disappearance of the darkness of the world. Thus they may behold clearly and manifestly with what glorious crown and brilliant diadem the Most Great Name, the Blessed Perfection,—May my life be a sacrifice to him!—hath adorned the heads of his believers; what graces he hath poured upon the hearts of his friends; what love he hath brought into the world of humanity and what friendship he hath caused to appear among the children of men.

O thou maid-servant of God, the penetration of the word of man depends upon the heat of the fire of the love of God. The more the splendors of the love of God become manifest in the heart the greater will be the penetration of the word.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Thy letter was received. . . . From its words I heard a sweet melody and that melody was the psalm of the love of God. Although in the world of existence the outpourings of the Almighty are infinite, yet the greatest divine outpouring is the love of God. This is the dominant, transcendental power which rises above all the natural susceptibilities of the world of humanity. Man, like the animal, is captive of the world of nature and the laws of nature exercise full control over his nature. He cannot even be compared to the beasts of prey. For example, one of the forces of nature is ferocity. A ferocious, blood-thirsty man goes beyond the ferocious animals. If an animal tears another animal it is only for its daily food, but man destroys a hundred thousand lives in one day. Hence it becomes evident that the power of nature is the unbridled and ungovernable ruler over man. What is written concerning the "ego is always inclined to do evil" is no other than the fermentation of the passionate desires in the breast of man and the complete, unchecked sway of the carnal and natural forces over him. Therefore, man cannot win victory over these physical forces save through the "power of the love of God." The fire of the love of God is like unto the lightning which strikes upon the head of nature, emasculating it of its virility and leaving it fallen on the ground—a lifeless body. Consequently the greatest power in the world of existence is the love of God.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 17, 1914.)

. . . It is related that an aged and decrepit man became the guest of his holiness Abraham. He exercised toward his guest the utmost hospitality and courtesy. When dinner was served, his holiness Abraham uttered the name of God, and then started eating. On the other hand, the guest uttered the name of an idol and began to eat. His holiness was grieved, arose in wrath and rebuked his guest most severely. But even as he did so, God's revelation descended upon him. "O Abraham! For a hundred years this man has been an idol-worshipper and I have been patient with him; I have nurtured him; I have protected him. I have taken good care of him; I have trained him; I have showered on him many bounties and I have been kind and loving to him; but thou wert not able to endure his society for one night! And I, an hundred years!" His holiness Abraham was deeply touched by this address and begged his aged guest to pardon him.

(A story told by Abdul-Baha who said that it appeared in the Masnawi. From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 4, 1913.)

It is very strange that when a face is not illumined with the light of the love of God it is dark. When you look into it the traces of the divine glad tidings are not manifest, but when the lights of God shine upon it, it becomes bright and enlightened, as it is said, "In their faces you shall see the verdancy of paradise, and in their countenances is the sign of worship."

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, September 3, 1913.)

The Bahais in Baghdad are not rich, but they are firm and strong believers. They keep the nineteen day feast. One morning they sent to one of the believers the word that the feast would be held that night in his house. He searched his pockets and there was no money. What should he do? He had only a watch which he had purchased for ten dollars. He took it out of his waist pocket and sent it to the bazaar to be sold at auction. Incidentally one of the Bahais passing by recognized the watch. He stopped and saw that it was going to be sold for two dollars. He raised the price half a dollar and bought it. He put it into his pocket and went home quietly. When the night came, he went to the meeting and after the refreshments were served, he went to the host and taking the watch out of his pocket offered it to him as a present. The host was very much surprised, but delighted.

(Words of Mirza Jalal, the son-in-law of Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 30, 1913.)

The duty of the believers of God is to be servants to one another and attend to one another's wants. I am the servant of the friends of God.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 5, 1913.)

Abdul-Baha said the story of Mary and the ointment has a deep spiritual significance. The bottle which contained perfumed oil (ointment) represents the heart of Mary. The ointment is the love of God which filled her heart, and all this love she poured forth at the feet of Jesus. Then Judas said, "Why did she lavish all this love upon Jesus, who did not need it so much as the poor? Why did she not pour some of this great love and care upon them?" Then Jesus said that she did well to give him all her love.

That is what we ought to do. We must give all our heart's love to God, then for His sake and through our love for Him, we shall love all others. By "the poor" in this sense, is meant those who needed love. Baha'o'llah said, "The poor among you are My trust." Therefore we must always cherish the poor for his sake.

(Abdul-Baha: Notes of Miss Rosenberg, Acca, 1901.)

As long as ye can, strive to set aglow the hearts with love; be attracted to one another and be members of one body. Every soul of the beloved ones must honor the others, and withhold not his possessions and life from them, and by all means he must endeavor to make the others joyous and happy. But the others (the recipients of such love) must also be disinterested and life-sacrificing. Thus may this sunrise flood the horizons, this melody gladden and make happy all the people, this divine remedy become the panacea for every disease, this spirit of reality become the cause of life for every soul.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Another commandment give I unto you! That ye love one another as I love you. Great mercy and blessings are promised to the people of your land, but on one condition; that their hearts be filled with the fire of love, that they live in perfect kindness and harmony, like one soul in different bodies,—like one soul in different bodies. If they fail in this condition, the great blessings will be deferred. Never forget this: Look at one another with the eye of perfection. Look at me, follow me, be as I am. Take no thought for yourselves or your lives,—whether ye eat, or whether ye sleep, whether ye are comfortable, whether ye are well or ill, whether ye have friends or foes. For all of these things ye must not care at all. Look at me and be as I am. Ye must die to yourselves and to the world; so shall ye be born again and enter the kingdom of heaven. Behold a candle, how it gives its light. It weeps its life away, drop by drop, in order to give forth its flame of light.

(Abdul-Baha: From An Early Pilgrimage.)

Know thou that there is in the world of existence a center for each great matter and bounties shower from that center.

For instance, in the circle of the sun, the sun is the center of the light. Likewise there is a real center for pure love and now that Center is manifest in this world from which the lights of love reflect to all parts of the universe.

If thou partake but one ray from that Center thou wilt become self-sufficient from the world, finding a new condition and witnessing an exaltation which overshadows all the existence.

Pray God that thou mayst catch with all thy exertion the lights of the love from that Center.

Letter of Invitation to the Centennial Festival to be held in Chicago, November 10-12, 1917

Dear Friends:—

The One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of His Holiness, Baha'o'llah, approaches. The day is anticipated by the Bahais of the world as an occasion for the universal proclamation of the supreme mission of that great and radiant Manifestation.

And, that the Message of Baha'o'llah—that dynamic Message of love for all peoples and races, that great, unifying Message—shall fittingly be acclaimed, on this significant occasion, the House of Spirituality, in behalf of the Bahai Assembly of Chicago, calls you to participate in the commemoration of the day.

God, in His bounty, has given, through the Revelation of Baha'o'llah, the spiritual remedy for the sick body of the world. God, in His mercy to humanity, through the Bab, the herald of the Kingdom; through the appointment of a supreme Center, Abdul-Baha, to whom, after the passing of Baha'o'llah, all should turn, without deviation, has fulfilled all the prophecies of the Holy Books.

So great a Message the Bahais of the world are charged to deliver.

Let the Centennial Celebration be, in reality, a festival of love. And let this Twelfth Day of November, 1917, be forever remembered in the annals of the Bahai Movement.

Let this gathering demonstrate to the world the power of the Message of Baha'o'llah to dispel all superstitions of the past; to unite the hearts of humanity and bring them into direct harmony with the divine will.

A program of great beauty and attraction has been prepared. Prominent speakers from the various Assemblies of America will be in attendance. And altogether the occasion will be one of complete joy and fragrance.

The presence of the friends in great numbers is desired, that the light of their faces and the love in their hearts may impress the world with the truth of the Message and the Mission of Baha'o'llah.

Through the courtesy of the STAR OF THE WEST, we shall be able to see again the moving pictures of Abdul-Baha, as he walked among us, during his visit to America, in 1912.

On Monday, the Anniversary Day, a pilgrimage to the Temple Grounds, weather permitting; the Convention of Teaching and the illustrated exposition of the Mashrak-el-Azkar, emphasizing its tremendous significance to the world, will close what we believe will be one of the most memorable festivals of the Bahai Calendar.

Come! And indicate your intention to do so, by writing at once to that effect to the Secretary of the House of Spirituality, 56 East Congress Street, Chicago.

Faithfully yours, in the service of El-Abha,

Carl Scheffler, Secretary.

Letter by the President of the Bahai Temple Unity

“Baha’o’llah came to breathe life into the dead body of the world.”

Dear friends in El-Abha:

This Peerless Century for which all centuries have existed, in which all the horizons of the world have been illumined and which encircles the world of man with the glory of God, completes the span of its centennial Nov. 12th, the Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of Baha’o’llah.

This age, the meeting point of the eternal past with the eternal future, has opened the attraction of earth to the hosts of heaven longing to follow in His Visitation; and to the hosts of earth has opened the doors of Heaven to walk with the Center of His Covenant. How great is the bounty that we are privileged to live in this radiant day, this age of bestowals!

In a world torn with dissension and rent with division the Bahai body must be the dayspring of composure, the organism of unity sustaining the breath of the Holy Spirit.

“It is not your work but that of the Holy Spirit which you breathe forth through the Word. This is a fundamental truth; when you breathe forth the breath of the Holy Spirit from your hearts into the world, commerce and politics will take care of themselves in perfect harmony. All arts and sciences will become revealed and the knowledge of God will be manifested.”

Abdul-Baha.

The mystery of unity consists in spiritually breathing together, that the arteries of the world may be purified by the respiration of heaven. In all the Assemblages gathered together on Nov.

12th lovingly to commemorate with joy and glad tidings the birth of Baha’o’llah, individually and in Assembly, let us supplicate the Lordly Oneness to bestow upon His servants, as an organic body, the breath of the Holy Spirit to unite us and show forth to mankind the fruits of unity, for this breath of oneness is the attribute of God in the world of His humanity.

Thereby will we show forth the degrees of devotion.

The Chicago Convention of 1916 pledged for itself and the Bahais of America to have subscribed by this Anniversary date of Nov. 12th, the initial fund indicated by Abdul-Baha for the conception of the foundation of the Mashrak-el-Azkar.

Each feels the share of his responsibility. This accomplishment will bring to us all the joy of a new era in this Century of Light. Can we make this blessed commemoration the fulfillment of our heart’s desire, the Temple fund to start the Temple, that the spiritual and material foundations may meet?

Thus will we show forth the degrees of our endeavor.

“Verily the founding of the Mashrak-el-Azkar will mark the inception of the Kingdom of God on earth.”
Abdul-Baha.

The hand of Power has placed in our hands this kingly service.

The Executive Board sends to you its greetings, and joins with you in loving commemoration, that this meeting of Nov. 12th may fulfill the aspirations of our hopes.

Executive Board,

BAHAI TEMPLE UNITY.

William H. Randall, President.

News from Palestine

Extract from a Letter dated at Devonshire, England, August 17, 1917, from Mirza Lotfullah Hakim to Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm

I am sure you will be interested to hear some news of the beloved Abdul-Baha. Two days ago I had a letter from a friend in Cairo dated July 25, 1917, giving the following news:

"I have been hearing from home regularly lately, but they only write a few lines and simply tell me that they are all well and that Agha (i e., Abdul-Baha) is well and is sometimes at Haifa and other times at Acca. The food question is not as difficult as we hear of especially in that district; but undoubtedly there is a shortage of all imported goods, and food is tolerably expensive."

To the STAR OF THE WEST.

I was so pleased you published the photograph of Miss Alexander's group, but sad to say the group is suspended for a while. Miss Alexander was suddenly called to her home at Honolulu and we are all heart broken. I feel especially sad for those who were groping in the dark looking to her for light. Dr. Auger, who is still here, will do all he can to spread the work. A young Japanese, Tokugiro Torii (a blind man), is to open a Bahai center in September, and an English center will be opened at Shiba Park early in the fall, so the seed scattered with such a lavish hand by Miss Alexander will not have been in vain. . . . I feel Miss Alexander's mantle has fallen upon me during her absence and it is my prayer that I may do a little to prove worthy.

With many greetings in His Greatest Name.

To the STAR OF THE WEST.

Following the report of the Boston Convention, as reported in the STAR OF THE WEST, a number of calls have reached Washington for help in establishing a Children's Sunday Class. Among the letters received are communications from London, from British Columbia and from Cleveland, Ohio, etc. Replies have been forwarded, with a prayer that they may be of some service. But the Cleveland request and answer was quickly followed by a personal demonstration, Sunday and Monday, September 23-24, of two of the many methods which we have tried in Washington. Praise God! I found the children and young people marvels of spiritual insight. Their quick responsiveness and eagerness to learn more, their unwillingness to go home when the hour was ended, desiring more and more of the Words, were evident proof that the hour has struck for the training of children along spiritual lines, that they may be prepared to carry on the work of the Cause; that they may be taught to teach one another and learn to ask intelligent questions of one another; simply guided by an enthusiastic, loving teacher. This is the plan laid down by our beloved Abdul-Baha.

After two wonderful meetings with the children and young people of the Cleveland Assembly, I am convinced that it is the spirit of the children themselves that must determine the wisest method. We are still most willing to

The coming Convention of Teaching at Chicago, Nov. 12.

LETTER ISSUED BY THE HOUSE OF SPIRITUALITY

Dear Bahai Friends:—

As the day approaches for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Baha'o'llah, there has awakened within the hearts of the believers a fervent desire to make the occasion not only a time of great rejoicing, but the beginning of greater service to the Bahai Cause, that the whole world may know of the mission of the Manifestation and the presence among us of the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha.

It will be remembered, that the Teaching Tablets received in August, 1916, were a distinct call to service to the various sections of the United States and Canada. Friends arose in response to that call. The Message has been carried far—into every state in the Union and many new Assemblies have been created.

Notwithstanding the extent of the work already accomplished, we are deeply conscious of our failure to reach that high standard of effective service set for us by Abdul-Baha. And some of us are asking ourselves vital questions that must be answered before the truth of the Revelation of Baha'o'llah shall penetrate the heart of America:

How shall we respond to the emphatic call of Abdul-Baha?

How shall we spread broadcast over America this Message of Light and Life?

How shall we carry conviction of its essential truth into the millions of human hearts?

How, in this day of prodigious achievement, shall the Revelation of Baha-o'llah be presented, to fulfill the requirements of so tremendous a Message, in so tremendous an age?

How shall the work of teaching be carried forward into potential centers of innumerable Assemblies?

Briefly, how shall we spread the Message into every corner of America?

In contemplating the work before us, it has been thought by the members of the House of Spirituality, that more effective service can be rendered to the Cause, should the Bahais of the central states, our particular field of action, come together, into a closer union, of which every center shall be a working unit.

We believe the permanent work of spreading the great Cause is of supreme importance. And no more fitting memorial can there be to Baha'o'llah than the achievement of a strongly unified movement for its promotion.

So, looking toward this end, let representatives from every Assembly of the middle west meet in convention, in Chicago, during the coming celebration of the birth of the Manifestation, prepared to consider ways and means for launching a vigorous campaign of teaching in our allotted territory.

We, in Chicago, would co-operate with you in this great service, and we are confident that this, our earnest desire, is reciprocated by you. Together we can accomplish what alone we cannot effect. . . .

Let this celebration not supersede in your minds and hearts the vastly important task of spreading the Cause.

If it is impossible for you to attend the celebration, make it possible to attend the Convention of Teaching. . . .

A call similar to this from the House of Spirituality of Chicago began the organization of the Mashrak-el-Azkar work.

Who knows what great results may develop from this, its second call?

Let us arise with enthusiasm to the service of Abdul-Baha.

Faithfully, in the service of the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha,
 THE HOUSE OF SPIRITUALITY,
 Carl Scheffler, Secretary,

Corrections

To the STAR OF THE WEST.

Feeling assured that it is your intention to have all statements issuing from the STAR OF THE WEST conform to the reality, I beg leave to call your attention to a portion of the report of the Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity, held in Boston, on page 116, No. 9, Vol. VIII, it is stated, as follows:

As this is at least misleading it gives me pleasure to advise you as to the facts, that you may be able to correctly inform your readers. In the year 1911, this servant was commanded to “confer with those who are versed in astronomy and mathematics and make the calendar complete and perfect in accordance with the scientific, then print and publish it.”

The result of my effort in this direction was given to Abdul-Baha in June, 1912, in the shape of a Bahai calendar with dates of importance set forth and blended with the Gregorian calendar. On the fourth of July, 1912, he informed me that “the transference of dates from the lunar year to that of the solar year made this a matter of great importance and that he would send it to Persia for correction.” And the calendar that was given to the convention was this one which Abdul-Baha received from Persia and handed to me December 4, 1912, with the statement, “Now your calendar is correct,” but it was not published because I was desirous of having this “word” over the signature of Abdul-Baha, and was in hopes that this might be brought about through the good offices of the executive committee of the Bahai Temple Unity.

The Persian manuscript which Abdul-Baha received with an English translation was delivered to that committee.

With Bahai greeting and a prayer for the continued success of the STAR, believe me

Your servant,
 F. E. Osborne.

To the STAR OF THE WEST.

My address on “The Religious Aspect of Esperanto” as delivered in New York on May 27th was very hastily and unexpectedly prepared and was given without any thought of its being published. The announcement of the address was printed and distributed by those in charge of the meeting before I knew about the matter, and its publication in your journal was also a surprise to me. All this is of no importance except that the hasty preparation of the address, and its being printed without my having a chance to revise it somewhat, has been the cause of an error of statement which I would thank you very much to correct. My statements about the translators of the Kasitaj Vortoj were as I then understood the matter, but I am now trustworthily informed that no help was received in this special work from Teheran, and that our brother Lotfullah Hakim, whose name appears on the title page jointly with that of Dr. Esslemont, is a medical student in London.

This work is destined to be one of the classics of Bahai Esperanto literature, and any reference to it should be quite correct. May I therefore ask you to publish in the STAR OF THE WEST that lines 6 to 8 of column two of page 82 should read:

“was done jointly by an English physician, a Persian medical student living in London, and”

Yours truly,

Rufus W. Powell.

The “Hidden Words” in Esperanto

Bahai Esperanto circles, and friends in general, will be much interested in the appearance of an attractive booklet entitled, Kasitaj Vortoj de Baha'u'llah (el la Persa), which is just at hand, from the press of the British Esperanto Association. This is a translation of the Persian Hidden Words, directly from the original Persian manuscript into Esperanto, done jointly by Lotfullah Hakim, of Persia and London, and Dr. John E. Esslemont, Res. Med. Supt., The Home Sanatorium, West Southbourne, nr. Bournemouth, England.

It is said that this translation conveys a wonderfully clear presentation of the original Persian concepts, excelling in many respects the possibilities of English translations. The style has been approved enthusiastically by Col. John Pollen, the noted Orientalist, of England.

This volume is being handled by the Bahai Publishing Society, 4319 Lake Park Ave., Chicago, at 10c per copy for the paper-bound and 40c per copy for the leather-bound edition.

share with others what we have tried. But the real help is of the Spirit and personal contact with the children. Therefore it is hoped that more calls may come for personal service, to which we shall endeavor to respond.

The friends of Cleveland are aflame with the fire of the love of God. I was literally in heaven while with them. Letters have been received since my return, of which the following quotation will indicate the spirit: “You recall in Abdul-Baha’s tablet to the Cleveland Assembly, he says that ‘ere long the doors of the everlasting glory will be opened before your faces.’ I feel sure that this visit is one of the channels for this promise becoming fulfilled.”

The meeting in Akron, Ohio, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Brooker, was another heavenly feast. Mrs. Brooker has a class of children, on a week afternoon. It was not, however, my pleasure to meet them.

The Washington Assembly is actively engaged in the great work. Meetings are held regularly on Friday and Sunday nights, the latter in beautiful “Studio Hall.” Mr. Richard Mayer, of Boston, was a recent visiting speaker, and we are planning to have Mr. James F. Morton, Jr. and Dr. Hilles Cole, of New York City, in the near future. Visiting friends who are available for addresses on Sunday nights are invited to communicate with Mr. Hannen, the Secretary of the Assembly, at P. O. Box 1319.

Mr. Louis G. Gregory is planning to leave for an extended teaching tour, having closed his home and given up his business for that purpose, and Rev. D. S.

Tate is also booked for an extended visit in the South, where he will teach the Cause in a very wide area.

It is contemplated that in the STAR OF THE WEST a compilation of teachings and instructions concerning the teaching of children will soon be published, this having been assembled by the Committee appointed for that purpose following the action of the Boston Convention.

A Communication to the Government at Washington

This letter was composed and compiled by Alfred E. Lunt, at the request of the executive board of the Bahai Temple Unity during its recent meeting in Green Acre, and sent to the officials at Washington, D. C.

August 30, 1917.

Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sirs:

It seems opportune and may prove of assistance to the Government in view of the existing state of world war in which our country is a participant, if we record at this time with the Department of State certain of the laws and precepts of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha relative to the fundamental attitude and duty of the Bahais, at such a time as this, toward existing governments and especially the government of the United States. These laws and precepts are plain and unequivocal and require no elucidation by us, nor is it our purpose to attempt to interpret them or call attention to other than their plain meaning. We would respectfully emphasize only the peculiar and striking relevancy of these principles to the special circumstances surrounding this world war and to the aspirations of the nations concerning the establishment of an ultimate lasting peace.

1. One of the great laws of Baha'o'llah, the founder of the Bahai movement, is this:

"In every country or government where any of this (Bahai) community resides, they must behave toward that government with faithfulness, trustfulness and truthfulness." (See Glad Tidings, 5th.)

2. Abdul-Baha, the center and leader of the Bahai movement since the departure of Baha'o'llah in 1892, in a Tablet issued some years before the outbreak of the present war, said:

"My object in telling the American believers that they should not interfere in the affairs of the government is this: that they should not make any trouble and that they should not move against the opinion of the government; but obedience to the laws and the administration of the Commonwealth is necessary.

3. Speaking of certain Bahais, citizens of a foreign belligerent country which in 1914 was enforcing conscription laws, Abdul-Baha said "their duty is to obey their government."

4. In the book entitled Some Answered Questions, published by Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd., London, 1908, at pages 309 and 310, Abdul-Baha re-capitulates the true principles underlying the words of Christ "Who-soever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the left also." He says:

"This was for the purpose of teaching men not to take personal revenge.

Christ did not mean that if a wolf should fall upon a flock of sheep and wish to destroy it that the wolf be encouraged to do so. No, if Christ had known that a wolf had entered the fold and was about to destroy the sheep, most certainly he would have prevented it. . . .

“The constitution of the communities depends upon justice, not upon forgiveness. Then what Christ meant by forgiveness and pardon is not that when nations attack you, burn your homes, plunder your goods, assault your wives, children and relatives, and violate your honor, you should be submissive in the presence of these tyrannical foes and allow them to perform all their cruelties and oppressions. No, the words of Christ refer to the conduct of two individuals toward each other: if one person assaults another the injured one should forgive him; but the communities must protect the rights of man. So, if someone assaults, injures, oppresses and wounds me, I will offer no resistance and I will forgive him, but if a person wishes to assault (one who was present) certainly I will prevent him. Although for the malefactor non-interference is apparently a kindness, it would be an oppression to”

Speaking of a similar situation to two American pilgrims in Acca, Syria, many years ago, Abdul-Baha said:

“(Under such circumstances) if I should fail to make an effort to protect you, I should be not only responsible for your injury, but also guilty of connivance with the enemy.”

5. Again in the book entitled The Mysterious Forces of Civilization, published some forty years ago in the Orient, Abdul-Baha said:

“War is sometimes the great foundation of peace and destroying is the cause of re-building. If, for example, a great sovereign should wage war against a threatening foe or for the unification of the whole body of people and divided kingdom, he should urge the steed of resolution into the race-course of bravery and courage; in short, his war may be attuned to the melodies of peace; and then verily this fury is kindness itself and this oppression is the essence of justice itself and this war is the source of reconciliation.”

The foregoing extracts have clear application to questions arising under the present selective draft act, claims for exemption on the basis of belief, etc.

We deem this statement of interest to the Government because the great principle of Universal Peace is a fundamental principle of the Bahai movement. It may be invoked in the utmost good faith by conscientious objectors who are not informed of the detailed applications to the existing situation above quoted. On the general principle of Universal Peace, Baha'o'llah said in 1889 to Professor E. G. Brown of the University of Cambridge:

“We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; yet they deem us a stirrer up of strife and sedition worthy of bondage and banishment. That all nations should become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men should be strengthened; that diversity of religion should cease and differences of race be annulled;—what harm is there in this? Yet so it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away and the ‘Most Great Peace’ shall come. Is not this that which Christ foretold? Yet do we see your kings and rulers lavishing their treasures more freely on means for the destruction of the human race than on that which would conduce to the happiness of mankind. These strifes and this bloodshed and discord must cease, and all men be as one kindred and one family.

"Let not a man glory in this that he loves his country; let him rather glory in this, that he loves his kind."

And again he said in the Words of Paradise:

"O ye wise men among nations! Turn your eyes away from foreignness and gaze unto oneness, and hold fast unto the means which conduce to the tranquillity and security of the whole world. This span-wide world is but one native land and one locality. Abandon that glory which is the cause of discord, and turn unto that which promotes harmony. To the people of Baha glory is in knowledge, good deeds, good morals and wisdom—not in native land, or station. O people of the earth; appreciate the worth of this heavenly word, for it is like unto a ship for the sea of knowledge, and is as the sun to the universe of perception."

But it is explicitly laid down that the realization of Universal Peace can be attained only through certain conditions precedent. On this point, quoting from the writings of Abdul-Baha, he says in The Mysterious Forces of Civilization:

"When keeping fast hold of the means of enforcing their views they, (the rulers and sovereignties of the world) shall establish a union of the the states of the world, and conclude a definite treaty and strict alliance between them upon conditions not to be evaded. When the whole race has been consulted through their representatives and invited to corroborate this treaty which verily would be a treaty of universal peace and would be accounted sacred by all the peoples of the earth, it would be the duty of the united powers of the world to see that this great treaty should be strengthened and should endure.

"In such a universal treaty, the limits of the borders and boundaries of every state should be fixed, and the customs and laws of every government; all agreements and affairs of state and the arrangements between the various governments should be propounded and settled in due form; the size of the armaments of each government should likewise be definitely agreed upon, because if in the case of any state there were to be an increase in the preparation for war, it would be a cause of alarm to the other states. At any rate, the bases of this powerful alliance should be so fixed that, if one of the states afterwards broke any of the articles of it, the rest of the nations of the world would rise up, and destroy it. Yea, the whole human race would band its forces together to exterminate it."

And again, from the writings of Baha'-'o'llah over fifty years ago it is recorded as follows:

"Originally mankind was one family, united and compact; later on the members of this happy family were divided and sub-divided through ignorance and prejudice. Now the time has come again for their final unification and universal peace will bring the long-wished for consummation."

In 1914, Abdul-Baha, just prior to the outbreak of the present war, said:

"By a general agreement all the governments of the world must disarm simultaneously. It will not do if one lays down its arms and the other refuses to do so. The nations of the world must concur with each other concerning this supremely important subject; thus they may abandon together these deadly weapons of human slaughter. As long as one power increases its military or naval budget, another power will be forced into this crazed competition through its natural and supposed interests. Therefore, the question of disarmament must be put into practice by all the nations and not only by one or two. . . . Once the Parliament of Man is established, and its constituent parts organized, the governments of the world, having entered into a covenant of eternal friendship, will have no need of keeping large standing armies and navies. A few battalions to preserve internal order, an international police to keep the highways of the seas clear, will be all that is necessary. Then these huge sums will be diverted to other more useful channels, pauperism will disappear, the victories of peace will be sung by poets and bards, knowledge will increase and improve every condition, and mankind will be rocked in the cradle of felicity and bliss. Then, whether a government is constitutional, republican, hereditary monarchy, or democratic, the rulers will devote their energies to the prosperity of their peoples, the enactment of just and sane laws, and the fostering of closer and more amicable relations with their neighbors. Thus the world of humanity may become a mirror in which are reflected all the virtues and attributes of the kingdom of God."

It is thus seen that the Universal Peace contemplated is synonymous with the well-being of all humanity, and the ultimate establishment of the essential spiritual and material relationship between and among all the nations of the globe in an eternal bond of unity, and that to secure this, concerted action is necessary. Questions, therefore, relating to the establishment of such a peace, and, on the other hand, questions of citizenship arising in any one of the belligerent nations, may be purely differentiated. One relates to an ultimate status toward which present conditions are inevitably tending, the other to an existing exigency prior to the establishment of that status. For each of these conditions we have quoted the necessary application from the foundation principles of the Bahai movement. And these principles are seen to be in perfect harmony when applied to their proper and corresponding set of circumstances.

We find pleasure, therefore, in closing this statement with a steadfast and unwavering pledge of loyalty and fidelity to the government of the United States and to its laws. With all lovers of humanity, we yearn for the permanent establishment of a righteous peace and the deliverance of man from the slaying of his brother of whatever nation or race, for this is no other than the destruction of the divine edifice (i.e. The Temple of Man). But if it be necessary, that, in order thus to become soldiers in the great army of peace, we now enlist in our country's marching hosts through the wise behests of our government, then this also is our wish and our duty, and to this we subscribe our allegiance knowing that from this greatest of world conflagrations shall arise the Phoenix of the spiritual civilization, and that from this conflict shall emerge the tabernacle of the oneness of the world of humanity under whose protecting shade all mankind shall gather.

"May the shining star of eternal felicity and happiness of the world of humanity dawn with this utmost brilliancy from the horizon of international comity, and the luminous orb of international brotherhood of all races and tongues illumine that united gathering of humanity with the ineffable light of God throughout countless ages and cycles."

A copy of this original communication is sent to the Provost Marshal General, and will be further published in the Bahai publications of the country. We invite your attention to the booklet enclosed and to the announcement of the twelve Basic principles therein set forth.

Yours respectfully,

Bahai Temple Unity, by its Executive Board.

William H. Randall, President.

The Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Baha'o'llah

Baha'o'llah was born in Teheran, Persia, on November 12, 1817 A. D.

EDITORIAL

One hundred years ago this twelfth of November there was born in the City of Teheran a world-teacher destined to bring the light of peace and oneness to all mankind. He was so radiant with the attributes of the divine world that the Bab, his brilliant precursor called him Baha'o'llah, the Glory of God. His immediate followers, watching his pure and flawless life, named him the Blessed Perfection.

In his deeds and teachings are manifest the splendors of the Sun of Reality, which is flooding the world with brighter and brighter radiance. The clouds of war and strife and materialism have for many obscured the glory of the rising Sun of Righteousness which brings healing on its wings. Yet, here and there, over the world, receptive thinkers and reformers are catching glimpses of this Sun of the new cycle. The movement toward scientific research, toward prohibition, woman's suffrage, universal education, the cry for democracy, for industrial justice, for world-federation, for a league to enforce abiding peace, for religious unity, for a spiritual renaissance are so many rays of this new light. Baha'o'llah some sixty years ago proclaimed them. In him and in his great interpreter, Abdul-Baha, are focused the Holy Spirit of the new day.

The STAR OF THE WEST would celebrate this hundredth anniversary of Baha'o'llah's birth by recording some of the incidents in his life. "Guidance hath ever been by words, but at this time it is by deeds." "Words must be followed by deeds," Baha'o'llah declared, "for true words are verified by action. One without the other will not satisfy the thirsty or open the doors of perception before the blind." Baha'o'llah's deeds and words are one. Through his books and through his life shine the brightness of the divine Kingdom.

The Dawning of a Great Light

A Compilation of Incidents from the Life of Baha'o'llah

GLAD tidings of the Kingdom of Abha! We announce to you glad tidings of great joy! Similar words were spoken almost two thousand years ago. Reflect and be not of the heedless. This is the great day of God. This is the day of universal peace, of universal brotherhood, of a universal language and of the union of all religions. This is the day wherein the prophecies of the Holy Books of every tongue have been or are being fulfilled. This is the cycle of Baha'o'llah.

We announce to you Baha'o'llah, "He whom God shall manifest," the one who has broken the seals of both the creational and collective books.

(Words of the editor of a Minneapolis newspaper, as corrected by Abdul-Baha. Diary Letter of Mirza Sohrab, July 29, 1913.)

Baha'o'llah (whose given name was Hussein Ali), was the son of Mirza Abbas, renowned as Mirza-Bozork of Noor. The Nooris are one of the well-known families of Mazanderan. During the reigns of Kadjar, the present Persian dynasty, the members of this family have usually occupied the highest positions in the state, such as Prime Minister, Minister, Secretary and other civil and military dignities. Even at the present day most of them are in the Government.

(Abul Fazl: The Bahai Proofs, p. 51.)

Baha'o'llah, when he was six years old, had a dream in which he saw himself swimming in a mighty ocean which was so great that he marveled. His hair, which was long, was floating out on the waves and soon he discovered that to each separate hair a fish was attached by its mouth, that is, the fish was holding the hair in its mouth. There were large fish, small fish, white fish, black fish, in fact all kinds of fishes.

The impression he received was so vivid that he was awakened. When he told his father in the morning the father decided to have the meaning if possible. Being, as you know, a Grand Vizier, he applied to the Shah, asking permission to have the dream interpreted by the court interpreter of dreams. This was granted him. When the interpreter had heard the dream he stood amazed. He said, "This is a most wonderful dream, but I do not see how it can come true.

The ocean symbolizes the world; the fish are the people of the world who are to gain knowledge from this boy—knowledge of God. You must protect and keep him, for he will be very great, but it is not possible that he can fulfill entirely such a wonderful dream. How can the entire world receive knowledge of God from this boy? However, this is what I see in this dream. Protect him. Keep and guard him. He will be very great and will teach great and learned people as well as others."

When I was a child and had not yet reached the age of maturity one of my brothers intended to marry in Teheran and according to the custom of that country for seven days and nights they were engaged in feasting and banqueting. The program for the last day of the entertainment for the guests was the play of Sultan Salim. The ministers, the grandees and officials of the city were there in a great throng, and I was sitting in one of the galleries of the building, observing the scenes. They raised a great tent in the middle of the court. Representations of human forms only a few inches in height would come out of the tent and cry: "The king is coming, arrange the seats in order." Then other figures came out, sweeping the ground while a number were sprinkling the streets with water. Then another figure was presented who was supposed to be the herald bidding the people be ready for review before His Majesty, the Sultan.

Then the ministers came, with hat and shawl, according to the Persian custom. Others were present with clubs while a number of others were garbed as chamberlains, aides-de-camp, ferrashes and executioners with instruments of punishment. All these lined up according to their station and class. At last the king appeared with sovereign power and shining diadem upon his head and with splendor and glory walked slowly and majestically, and with perfect calmness, tranquillity and composure seated himself upon the throne. At that moment the noise of the guns and the music of the national anthem was raised and the smoke surrounded the tent and king. When the air was cleared it was seen that the king was on his throne and the ministers, the magistrates and secretaries had taken their places according to their rank. Immediately a thief, captured by the police, was brought before the king and a royal order was issued to behead him. Then the chief of the executioners took the captive and decapitated him and a red fluid which was like blood was seen by all the spectators. While the Sultan was consulting with some of his ministers the news was brought in that a certain person had become a rebel. The Sultan issued orders that several regiments of soldiers and artillerymen be sent to the scene to quell the disturbance. After a few minutes the thunderous noise of guns and artillery was heard behind the tent and we were told they were engaged in battle. I became astonished and bewildered at these affairs. Then the review ended and the curtain descended.

After twenty minutes a man came out from behind the tent with a box under his arm. I asked him, "What is this box? Where are the king and all the men?" He answered that all these great things and manifest objects, such as kings, princes and ministers, glory, majesty, power and sovereignty which we beheld were enclosed in this box.

I declare by the Lord who has created all things through his Word that from that day all the conditions of this world and its greatness have been like that play before my eyes. It has not nor will ever have the weight of a mustard seed. I wondered greatly that the people should glorify themselves in these affairs. Notwithstanding this, the people of insight will discern with the eye of certainty the end of the glory of every great one before beholding it.

Tonight I wish to tell you something of the Bahai history, the history of Baha'o'llah. The Blessed Perfection belonged to the royal family of Persia. From his earliest childhood he became distinguished among his relatives and friends. They remarked: "This child has extraordinary power of intellect, wisdom, and innate knowledge." He was superior to his age and class. All were astonished. Some remarked: "Such a precocious child will not survive for it has been proved that children who are too precocious do not live long."

Up to the age of maturity the Blessed Perfection, Baha'o'llah, had not consented to enter any school; he was not willing to be taught by any teacher. This fact is well known among all Persians of Teheran. Nevertheless, he solved the difficult problems of all who presented them to him. In whatever meetings, scientific gatherings, or meetings for theological discussions—wherever he was present—he always solved the abstruse problems presented to him.

Until the father of Baha'o'llah passed away the Blessed Perfection had not sought for any position or political situation. All were surprised at this, that notwithstanding his connection with the ministry, he would not accept any position. They remarked: "How is it that a young man so intelligent, so keen, so perceptive, so conscientious is not a candidate for positions of the lucrative type?" As a matter of fact every position was open to him and all the people of Persia are witnesses to this historic fact.

He was most generous to all the poor, he did not refuse anyone who asked of him. The doors of his house were open to all. He always had many guests. This generosity was conducive to greater astonishment from the fact that he did not seek position or prominence. In commenting on this they remarked that all his wealth and affluence would one day be given away for his expenses were unlimited and his income was becoming limited. As it was his principle that was being spent all were amazed at his conduct and were greatly astonished at his doings. Some remarked: "This person is connected with some other world, he has something sublime within him. It is not evident now, but a day will come when it will be manifest."

In short the Blessed Perfection was a refuge for every weak one, a shelter for every fearful one, kind to every indigent one, and most lenient to all the creatures. He became well known with regard to these qualities.

When His Holiness the Bab appeared Baha'o'llah declared that the Bab was true, and Baha'o'llah promulgated the Bab's cause. The Bab said and maintained that the greater manifestation would come after him and he called that appearance "Him whom God would manifest," stating that after the ninth year the reality of his mission would become apparent.

The Bab stated in his writings, "In the ninth year, you will meet the Promised One, you will attain to the meeting of that Promised One. In the ninth year you will attain to all good. In the ninth year you will attain to all glory. In the ninth year you will rapidly advance."

Between Baha'o'llah and the Bab there was communication privately and the Bab wrote a letter to Baha'o'llah in which the name "Baha" was incorporated three hundred and sixty times. Then the Bab was martyred, and in the ninth year, in the city of Baghdad, Baha'o'llah appeared and made known to a few that he was the one the Bab had foretold.

The Bab had proclaimed the dawn of the great light and the new cycle of reality on May 23, 1844. That same night Abbas Effendi (Abdul-Baha) was born. Baha'o'llah for eight years summoned the people of Persia to the new movement. He traveled to and fro. "He arose with mighty resolution, and engaged with the utmost constancy in systematizing the principles and consolidating the ethical canons" of the new spiritual society. "He displayed in assemblies, meetings, conferences, inns, mosques and colleges a mighty power of utterance and exposition. Whoever beheld his open brow or heard his vivid addresses perceived him with the eye of actual vision to be a patent demonstration of the new life and a pervading influence."

A great number both of rich and poor and many prominent doctors of theology were "filled with amazement and astonishment at the seething and waving of the ocean of his utterance" and were so attracted by the Holy Spirit shining through his spiritual persuasions that "they washed their hands of heart and life" and when the persecutions came "laid down their lives under the sword dancing (with joy)."

(Notes by compiler; quotations from A Traveller's Narrative, translated by Prof. E. G. Browne, Cambridge, England.)

"The ulama (or priests) of the state religion had constrained the Persian government to oppose and resist (the Bab) and had further issued decrees ordering the massacre, pillage, persecution and expulsion of his followers. In all the provinces they began to kill, to burn, to pillage the converts and even assault the women and children. Regardless of this, Baha'o'llah arose to proclaim the word of the Bab with the greatest firmness and energy. Not for one moment was he in concealment; he mixed openly with his enemies. . . . In many changes he endured the greatest misfortunes."

When, after the martyrdom of the Bab, a frenzied "Babi", mentally unbalanced by the sight of his beloved Master's suffering, attempted the life of the Shah, the persecutions became more intense.

The Mohammedan priests only too glad of any excuse to lay hands upon Baha'o'llah who knew nothing whatever of the poor misguided Babi's deed, straightway arrested him, had him bastinadoed, "put into chains and confined in an underground prison. His vast property and inheritance were pillaged and confiscated."

(Quotations from Abdul-Baha in Some Answered Questions, p. 33.)

The Blessed Beauty of El-Abha (Baha'o'llah)—may the divine souls of the existence be a ransom to his friends!—endured personally, all kinds of calamities and bore the most violent ordeals. There remained no torture which did not come to his holy body, and no suffering which did not descend upon his pure spirit. How many nights he could not take rest under the chains and heaviness of fetters and how many days he gave himself not a minute's repose because of the burden of fetters and chains!

From Neyaveran to Teheran that pure spirit, who was brought up on a bed of down, was forced to run, with bare head and bare feet, under chains and fetters, and, in a dark and narrow subterranean prison, he was placed with murderers, thieves, criminals, malefactors; at every moment a new torture was inflicted upon him and at every moment his martyrdom was expected by all.

After a long time, he was sent from the city of his residence to foreign countries. For many years in Baghdad at every moment a new arrow was darted toward his holy breast, and at every instant a sword was bent on his pure body. At no instant was there any hope for safety and security, and the enemies, with utmost dexterity, were attacking the blessed soul from all sides, and he, alone, personally resisted them all.

(Abdul-Baha.)

His Holiness Baha'o'llah spent many days in the utmost poverty. During the term of his imprisonment in Teheran, his daily ration was one loaf of bread only. According to the opinion of some people it is impossible to imagine greater poverty than this!

(Abdul-Baha: Diary Letter of Mirza Sohrab, March 26, 1914.)

Baha'o'llah (writing in later years says) in one of his poems: "The mark of the chain is yet visible on my neck and the impress of the fetters can be seen around my ankles!"

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, March 1, 1914.)

When Baha'o'llah was imprisoned and chains were around his neck, Abdul-Baha, then eight years old, was with some of the believers in another place. The people finally captured him also. The boys of this place gathered together and began to beat him; about two or three hundred children surrounded him. They beat him severely on the head, cursed him and otherwise persecuted him.

(From Notes of Mrs. I. D. Brittingham, taken at Haifa, in 1901.)

Another incident:—"We found Abbas Effendi (Abdul-Baha) surrounded by a band of boys who had undertaken personally to molest him. He was standing in their midst as straight as an arrow—a little fellow, the youngest and smallest of the group—firmly but quietly commanding them not to lay their hands upon him, which, strange to say, they seemed unable to do."

(Words of the sister of Abdul-Baha: Abbas Effendi, p. 14.)

When I was a small boy in Teheran, I remember whenever two of the believers of God desired to meet each other they could not do it during the day time, so a time was set for the evening, between sunset and midnight. They were so persecuted that if they met each other in the bazaar, they would not show any sign of recognition. The meetings were held at midnight. One of the believers acted as a guard and watched the street so that they might not be seen by any strangers. The guard looked continually to the left and right, in order not to be detected by the night police. At that time, all the inhabitants of Persia thought that the fire of the cause was entirely extinguished, that all traces of internal growth were effaced. Every one who was known as a Bahai was arrested, thrown into prison, and then killed and their possessions pillaged and their houses destroyed. . . .

In reality those were days of self-sacrifice, days of great tests, days of matchless heroism, days of spirituality, days of complete severance, days of attraction and enkindlement, days of divine bliss and beatitude. The material conditions were made subservient to the spiritual laws. The believers were filled with the Spirit. Although they walked on the surface of the earth, yet they were living in the Supreme Concourse. It is impossible to find souls more attracted, more severed, more self-sacrificing than they were!

When Baha'o'llah was thrown into the dungeon, there were many other believers arrested and imprisoned at the same time. They were arranged in two rows, one opposite the other. Their feet were shackled, their hands manacled, their necks chained. The prison being an underground room, it was so pitch dark that they could not see each other's face. The Blessed Perfection was in the right row and in order to keep up their spirits, he taught them two verses, each line to be chanted in turn by the two rows during the evenings. Their loud, clear voices, singing in unison, pierced through the impenetrable darkness of the jail and ascended to the very throne of the Almighty. The first row would sing: "He is my Guardian and the Guardian of all creatures!" and the opposite row would cry out: "Sufficient unto us is God, and to this we bear witness!" There was such exultation and serene happiness in the awful darkness of the jail that it was illumined with the Light of the Kingdom of Abha. . . .

In every dispensation a number of sanctified souls have become manifest who were self-sacrificing, severed from all else save God, forbearing sufferings and tribulations, accepting hardships and persecutions, welcoming tortures and death for the sake of truth. But in none of the past dispensations have there been such heroic and sublime instances of devotion and martyrdom as in this Bahai Cause! At the time when all the inhabitants of Teheran had arisen against this Cause and the Blessed Perfection (Baha'o'llah) was arrested and thrown into prison, I was a very young child. The jail wherein Baha'o'llah was imprisoned was a dark and gloomy cell underground, and had no aperture, no window save a small door. When the door was unlocked one had to descend many rickety steps before reaching the gloomy, stuffy ground floor. The name of the jailer was Aga Bozork, and he was an inhabitant of the city of Gazwin. As in the past he had received many favors, bounties and kindnesses from the beloved hands of Baha'o'llah, he came one day to our house and took me with him to see my father. Descending half the stairs of the cell, I peered through the darkness to try and see someone. Everything was pitch darkness. Suddenly I heard the wonderful, resonant voice of the Blessed Perfection: "Take this child away! Do not let him come in!" Obeying the words of Baha'o'llah, the jailer took me out and said: "Sit down here and be patient. About noon the prisoners are taken out, and then you can see your father!" I sat there. A little after twelve o'clock they brought the prisoners out and among them I saw the Blessed Perfection. A thick heavy chain called gare kahar, the heaviest and thickest chain of the time, was placed about his holy feet, the end of which dragged along the ground. His neck was also chained with heavy fetters and his hands manacled. Mirza Mahmoud—a most wonderful Bahai—was the fellow-prisoner of Baha'o'llah. They were chained together. A common, ordinary felt hat, the top of which was worn out and the fringe torn and soiled, was on his blessed head. I cannot describe to you the pain and anguish that attacked and tortured me by this sight of the Manifestation!

[The compiler wishes to state just here that anguish personified, the vibrations of which pierced every listener as a two-edged sword, marked Abdul-Baha's address as he told of this same event, while he was in San Francisco. Never shall it be forgotten by those who were blessed by listening to his voice, even if it was such a saddened occasion.]

In short, the fiendish cruelties of the authorities reached to such a height as to divide a large number of the believers among the various classes of the inhabitants of Teheran, so that these people might martyr them according to their own devilish desires. For example, a believer was given to the government clerks, another to the policemen, another to the infantry, another to the ulemas, another to the dervishes, another to the butchers—one to the members of each craft and profession—so that all of them might lend a hand in shedding the blood of these innocent Bahais. For instance, a believer was given to the cavalry. These ferocious beasts took him to Saleza Meydan and about one thousand of them riding on their horses, with drawn swords attacked him from all sides. The body was actually cut into a thousand small pieces, and yet they did not give up. The sight of blood maddened them, and turned them into wild, dancing savages, thirsting for more blood. Finally the executioner called out to them: "O ye madmen! Stop! It is enough! Nothing is left of the body. I must take these small shreds and pieces and bury them. Do not add more to the horrors of my task!" At this juncture a restaurant keeper arrived on the scene and asked the executioner to let him have the remains of the "accursed Bahai," because he would burn them in his stove and by this act gain his entrance into Paradise. . . . Those were the days of miraculous deeds, matchless heroism, unsurpassable firmness and divine courage. Each one of the believers while walking upon the earth, was at the same time soaring toward the Supreme Concourse. They were the angels of the Kingdom of Abha and the spiritual heroes of the arena of unparalleled sacrifice.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, February 22, 1914.)

When Baha'o'llah was imprisoned in Teheran, the Russian ambassador went about twenty times to the Shah to plead in his behalf, saying: "This man has no fault. He is faultless. Why do you imprison him?" The Shah answered that Baha'o'llah must be punished because he had ordered an attack on his life. The Ambassador said: "That is not a reasonable supposition, for if he had ordered such an attempt he would have ordered a bullet put in the gun instead of merely powder and small shot." The Shah acknowledged this reasoning, but was determined to hold Baha'o'llah responsible so as to have a pretext for keeping him in prison.

Again and again the Russian ambassador went to talk with the Shah about the matter, and at last the Shah confessed that he was afraid of the influence of Baha'o'llah, and that if he should set him free, it would create a great tumult among the people.

The Ambassador answered: "If then, you fear him so much, why keep him in Teheran; would it not be better to exile him to Baghdad?" This was accordingly done.

(Daily Lessons, p. 58.)

When the Blessed Perfection and his family were exiled from Persia, all along our way from Teheran to Baghdad we did not find a believer, only a handful of despondent friends were in Baghdad. All the people firmly believed that with the exile of Baha'o'llah the fire of this Cause would become extinct. Were they not wrong in their reckonings? How many houses were pillaged! How many people were exiled! How many were thrown into prison! How many thousands were killed! And yet they did not succeed in their fiendish work of extermination! For this Cause is constantly reinforced by the cohorts of the Supreme Concourse, and no army, no matter how invulnerable, can defeat the phalanxes of the Kingdom!

About thirty years ago, no one heard the name of the Bahai Cause in Eshkabad; but now the dome of the first Mashrak-el-Azkar, like a radiant jewel, glitters under the rays of the sun! . . . Praise be to God that it has become evident and known to all that the Bahais are free from any intrigues and seditions. They confer life and not death! . . . The people of Persia looked on the Bahais as the enemies of their religion, possessions and life, and consequently they considered one of the holiest duties the extermination of this sect. Well do I remember when still a child and in Teheran, one day I entered the Mosque and saw a fanatical Mullah haranguing the crowd: "O people! If you love God, kill the Babis; if you wish the descent of the blessings of the Almighty, kill the Babis, and if you want to protect your hearts and possessions, your wives and families, kill the Babis!" So ingrained was the enmity of the Moham-medans against this wronged community. . . . On the other hand, Baha'o'llah compelled the Babis to non-resistance and taught them day and night to adorn themselves with the qualities of holiness and sanctity, and commanded them to be meek and holy. He said: "It is better for you to be killed than to kill!" He exhorted them to be faithful, to be kind toward all the nations, to deal sincerely with all the people, to characterize themselves with mercy, benevolence, clemency and charity and to exert themselves at all times to serve the world of humanity.

Exiled in Baghdad

NO one can ever imagine even faintly how we were surrounded from all sides by test and trials in the nascent stage of the Cause. When we were exiled from Persia, outwardly the means of happiness were completely lacking; we did not have even our daily necessities. Notwithstanding all this whenever I think of this time my heart is filled with exultation.

For eleven years we lived in Baghdad.

The heat of that place was very intense, yet we were most happy, because we were assisted in serving at the Holy Threshold. One cannot experience a greater amount of heat than in Baghdad; at that time the summers were unbearable. We were strangers and penniless, yet our joy was supreme. The trip from Teheran to Baghdad and the days spent in Baghdad in the presence of the Blessed Perfection are very vivid in my memory and shall never be forgotten. Those days were overflowing with joy and fragrance.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Mirza Yahya or Subhi-Ezel, the younger half brother, whom Baha'o'llah in his love had taught most tenderly, became ambitious for prominence in the wonderful movement the Bab had started. He was encouraged by a temporary leadership which the Bab had entrusted to him. He lacked courage, however, and when the persecutions broke out fled in disguise to Baghdad, where he began to oppose the pure and glorious Baha'o'llah and claimed that he himself was the great teacher whom the Bab had foretold, "Him whom God should manifest." Other followers of the Bab also made similar claims. With these claims they evidently stirred up quite a commotion and Baha'o'llah, always a man of peace, withdrew for two years into the mountains and let them do the teaching. But the words of Abdul-Baha, which are quoted a few paragraphs below, show how powerless these claimants were to quicken the spirits and purify the lives of those to whom Baha'o'llah had brought the very water of life. When their failure to produce in their hearers the fruits of righteousness was apparent Baha'o'llah returned that through the radiance of his spirit he might bring them back from death into life.

Later when Baha'o'llah felt compelled to proclaim that God had called him to be the teacher of world-unity whom the Bab had announced, he enclosed in the envelope with his own proclamation a letter of Subhi-Ezel's. These he sent without a word of comment and let the readers judge from the comparative spiritual power of the two letters which had the sanction of God's Holy Spirit.

Almost everyone accepted Baha'o'llah. Subhi-Ezel thus defeated descended to intrigues and for many years carried on intrigues against his glorious brother. Some writers in the West failing to probe the disguise of Subhi-Ezel's pretended goodness have tried to justify him. But the great higher critic, Prof. T. K. Cheyne, has proved beyond the shadow of a question the futility and emptiness of all Subhi-Ezel's claims. A few years ago Subhi-Ezel's own son seeing how Baha'o'llah had now proved his greatness and divine power by bringing multitudes of those divergent races and sects into a new life of brotherhood and love became a devoted follower of Baha'o'llah.

During the first years of our stay in Baghdad, Baha'o'llah suddenly departed for the mountains of Suleymanieh. At that time we did not know his whereabouts at all and so it happened that there was no one to teach the Cause or muster the scattered Bahai forces. The fire of search was almost extinguished and the interest of the public waned. There was no one to assuage the fear of the few or attract the hearts of the many. The voice of divine authority was hushed and the thunders and lightnings of spiritual revelations did not roll and flash across the heavenly track. Mirza Yahya, who claimed to be the vice-regent of the Bab, always fearing his own shadow, was concealing himself in a thousand hiding-places. Completely disguised and under the assumed name of Haji Ali, he traveled like a dervish between Baghdad and Balsorah. In order to hide his identity from the public he had hung on a string a few red and yellow Arabian slippers, which he sold to the people while walking through the streets and bazaars.

At this juncture, two young men from Meelan came to Baghdad. They were enkindled believers and they brought cheer and happiness to our despondent and sorrowing hearts. It was then a long time that we had had no news from the Blessed Perfection (Baha'o'llah). The fire of spirituality and activity was put out of every soul. The hearts were bewildered and the spirits drooped. No amount of exertion whatever could in the least stir to courage or self-sacrifice the spirits of the few remaining, fearful Bahais. At that time I was very young.

These two new believers from Meelan came and knocked at the door. I went and opened it. I observed that they were two young men from Meelan. Their faces were luminous, their eyes radiant. They were shining like unto two suns. I asked them to come in. . . . After awhile they asked about the Cause. I told them that the Cause was extinct, there was no Cause. They asked about Mirza Yahya. I told them he was concealed and no one knew his whereabouts. They asked about Baha'o'llah. I told them I did not know where he was. As soon as they heard this sad news they looked at each other and began to weep and weep. For nearly one hour they sat on the floor and wept bitter tears of regret and disappointment. I tried to console them but I could not succeed. My own heart was sad when I realized the chaotic condition of the Cause and the absence of any life. Then they arose from their seats, without any remarks they left the house. They did not leave any address and I never heard from them afterwards.

How different it is now! The banner of the Cause of Baha'o'llah is waving over all the regions. The power of the Most Great Name is felt by all the nations of the world. The glad tidings of the Kingdom are proclaimed to all the religions of the world. The potency of the Holy Spirit is moving the hearts of men, and the fearless teachers of the Cause are spreading the Gospel of salvation both in the East and in the West.

Baha'o'llah departed to Sarkalu alone. Nobody knew just where he was, even we were not informed. Two years he passed at Sarkalu. Some of the time he passed in the mountains, some of the time in grottoes, and some of the time in the city of Sarkalu. Although solitary and alone, nobody knowing him, yet all through Kurdistan he became well known. It was said, "This unknown person is a most remarkable person, is exceedingly learned, is possessed of a tremendous power, and has a colossal force." All Kurdistan was magnetized by his love. But Baha'o'llah was passing his time in poverty and even his robes and clothes were those of the poor; his food was that of the indigent. The signs of severance were manifest upon him as the sun at mid-day, and he was absolutely careless regarding his life.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Once I was in the presence of Baha'o'llah. He was reading some of the writings of the Master (Abdul-Baha). After reading every line he would praise it and express the highest commendation saying: "We have never taught the Master, yet he writes with such deep penetration and inspiration; but we are daily teaching his brothers, and they are copying the holy tablets all the time, but they cannot write correctly one letter."

(Words of Haji Mohammed, one of the early Oriental Bahais: Diary Letter of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, November 17, 1913.)

Although he (Abdul-Baha) had not studied in any school, yet, from his youth, fountains of knowledge flowed in his fluent explanations. The first trace which emanated from his holy being in the world of knowledge was the treatise he wrote in his early youth at Baghdad. This was a commentary upon the holy tradition: "I was an invisible Treasury; as I loved to be known therefore I created men to know Me." He wrote this commentary in answer to the request of one of the Pashas. The author (Abul-Fazl) was present at a meeting when some one asked Haji-Seyd-Jawad

Taba-Tabay of Kerbela concerning the life of Baha'o'llah. The great Seyd answered: "That holy being must be a shining light whose great son hath written such a treatise during his childhood."

(Mirza Abul Fazl: Bahai Proofs, p. 49-50.)

During these years Abbas Effendi was accustomed to frequent the mosques and argue with the doctors and learned men. They were astonished at his knowledge and acumen and he came to be known as the youthful sage. They would ask him, "Who is your teacher, where do you learn the things which you say?" His reply was that his father had taught him. Although he had never been a day in school, he was as proficient in all that was taught as well-educated young men, which was the cause of much remark among those who knew.

In appearance my brother was at this time a remarkably fine-looking youth. He was noted as one of the handsomest young men in Baghdad.

(Sister of Abdul-Baha: Quoted from Abbas Effendi, by Myron H. Phelps.)

Once when I lived in Baghdad I was invited to the home of a poor thorn-picker. In Baghdad the heat is even more intense than in Syria and it was a very hot day. But I walked twelve miles to the thorn-picker's hut. Then his wife made a little cake out of some meal for me, and burnt it in cooking it. Still that was the best reception I ever attended.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary record of Miss Juliet Thompson.)

When we were living in Baghdad according to the custom of that country we slept on the roof during the summer months. I always commenced sleeping on the roof one month earlier than any one else and stayed one month and a half longer at the end of the season. The members of the family always insisted that I should come down because it was getting too cold; but I did not listen to them. I loved the perfect quietness, the mystic silence, the awe-inspiring, heavenly scene! Long after midnight I would get up, commune with God in spirit and watch the stars circling in their majestic spheres. There was such spirituality in that Eastern silence that whenever I think of it I feel myself transported to those divine nights of concentration and contemplation!

I was asleep upon my couch; the breaths of my Lord, the Merciful, passed over me and awakened me from my sleep and commanded me to proclaim between earth and heaven. This was not on my part but on His part, and to this bear witness the denizens of the realms of His power and His Kingdom and the dwellers of the cities of His glory and Himself the Truth.

The gales of the All-knowing, the All-glorious passed by me and taught me the knowledge of what hath been. . . . I have not studied these sciences which men possess nor have I entered the colleges.

This (Baha'o'llah) is a leaf which the breezes of the will of thy Lord the Mighty, the Extolled have stirred. Can it be still when the rushing winds blow? . . . Verily, I was not save as one dead in the presence of His command, the hand of thy Lord, the Merciful, turning me.

Thou knowest, O God, that in every action, I desire nothing save Thy affairs, and that in every utterance I seek naught but Thy celebration; neither doth my pen move except I desire therein Thy good pleasure and the setting forth of what Thou hast enjoined upon me by Thy authority.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

“The Cause of Baha’o’llah is the same as the Cause of Christ”

The Cause of Baha’o’llah is the same as the Cause of Christ. It is the same temple and the same foundation. Both of these are the spiritual spring and the seasons of the soul-refreshing awakening and the cause of the renovation of the life of mankind. The spring of this year is the same as the spring of last year. The origins and ends are the same. The sun of today is the sun of yesterday. In the coming of Christ the divine teachings were given in accordance with the infancy of the human race. The teachings of Baha’o’llah have the same basic principles but are according to the stage of the maturity of the world and the requirements of this illumined age.

—ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS

The Hundreth Anniversary of the Birth of Baha’o’llah

Thou seest me, O God, confounded in Thine earth. If I tell what Thou hast enjoined on me, Thy creatures turn against me; if I forsake what Thou hast enjoined on me for Thy part, I should be far removed from the gardens of nearness to Thee. (Wherefore) I advance toward Thy good pleasure, turning aside from what the souls of Thy servants desire, accepting what is with Thee and forsaking what would remove me afar off from the retreats or nearness to Thee and the heights of Thy glory. For Thy love I flinch not from aught and for Thy good pleasure I fear not all the afflictions of the world. This is but through Thy strength and Thy might, Thy grace and Thy favor, not because I am deserving thereof.

(From a letter to the Shah of Persia. Baha'o'llah's account of God's call ringing in his inmost consciousness bidding him arise and announce himself the one whom the Bab had foretold.)

During this time (the time of the Bab's banishment and imprisonment) Baha'o'llah was constantly engaged in the promulgation of the Cause of God; but without proclaiming himself or making known his station. Some, but few, among his friends, the early disciples, discovered that he was the one of whom the Bab spoke—"He whom God shall manifest." Although Baha'o'llah was of royal lineage, and not of the scholastic or learned, the people naturally looking for this Promised One among the divines, yet his marvelous discourses astonished the wise and learned and they who were pure in heart saw in him the fulfillment of their hopes.*

Baha'o'llah well prepared the people for the coming of the great event, namely, his declaration, which took place in the Garden of the Rizwan, outside the city of Baghdad. During twelve days he made his mission known to his disciples, and inasmuch as this great event occurred in the Garden of the Rizwan the greatest of Bahai feasts is called after that garden in commemorating the twelve days.

(Flowers from the Rose Garden of Acca, p. 26.)

*Baha'o'llah announced himself twice in Baghdad, once to a few in 1853, then to all his friends in 1863, in the garden of the Rizwan.

In Baghdad I was a child nine years old. There and then he (Baha'o'llah) announced to me the Word, and I believed him. As soon as he proclaimed to me the Word I threw myself at his holy feet and implored and supplicated him to accept this one drop of blood as a sacrifice in his pathway.

This is a blessed day (the ninth day of the Rizwan), a happy and joyous day. The beauty, the holiness and the significance of these days are not known now. This is the time of gladness, bliss and ecstasy for the believers of God because we have lived during the days of the Blessed Perfection and have experienced the great joy of these days. Their celebration by us is always shaded with a recollection, but for those who have not seen Baha'o'llah with their physical eyes these days will be celebrated with a genuine rejoicing and a most thorough preparation. The beauty, the sheer joy, the exhilaration of the golden Rizwan days are now brought back to my memory and in reviewing them I find each day a perfect gem of spiritual rapture.

During the nights of those days we could not sleep because we fancied in our minds the unparalleled joy of meeting Baha'o'llah in the morning, standing in his presence, receiving his graces, and listening to his words. It was on the ninth day that the Blessed Perfection leaving Baghdad stayed in the Garden of Hajib Pasha before starting for Constantinople. It is impossible to describe with words the beatific vibrations with which we were surrounded in those days. Although to all outward appearances the Blessed Perfection was in exile, yet he moved with such power and manifested such majesty! The list of visitors calling on him during these ten days looks rather like the roll call of an army. Those who had never seen him while he lived in Baghdad called. All the leaders of the community, the officers of the army, and of the government paid a visit. Even the Governor, Najib Pasha, called and Baha'o'llah did not return these rather important calls. Were one to reflect for a moment he would realize that such great events have never occurred in the history of the past dispensations!

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, April 30, 1914.)

Life in the Most Great Prison

THE government of Persia said: "As long as Baha'o'llah is in Persia the country will not be at peace. When Baha'o'llah is exiled from Persia the country will then find peace. He shall no longer be connected with this country; all communications with him shall be suspended." So the Shah of Persia endeavored until he succeeded in expelling the Blessed Perfection to Constantinople, and from Constantinople to Roumelia. Communication with him had to be in secret, but still the Cause spread, and they said: "Day by day his lamp becomes brighter, his potency becomes greater. The cause of this spreading is due to the populous cities to which he is sent. Therefore it is better to send him to a penal colony where he may be considered as a suspect, that the people may know he is in the prison of murderers and highway robbers; and in a bad climate he and his followers may perish." Therefore the King of Persia, Nasser-Ud-Din, Shah, endeavored until he succeeded in having him transported to the prison of Acca.

But the banishment of Baha'o'llah, the Blessed Perfection, instead of resulting in the extermination of the Cause in the country proved just the contrary; the Cause was spread more rapidly; the fame became more widely circulated; the teachings of the Blessed Perfection became more widely promulgated in Persia. Through the power of God he was able to hoist his banner. If at first it was a lamp, it became a flame. If it was a star, it became a mighty sun. The fame of the Cause of the Blessed Perfection went as far as the East and the West.

He paid no attention to the ministers and viziers. The Governor-in-Chief of Acca craved to be honored by admission to the presence of Baha'o'llah. For five years this one man, called Zia Pasha, asked Abdul-Baha if he would supplicate the Manifestation to permit him to make this visit, but the Manifestation never granted it. All the people of Acca know this. The Blessed Perfection was imprisoned, yet he had that power to refuse anything or to do anything he wished.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Whosoever reads the Book of H'ykl (Surat-ul-H'ykl) can observe the tremendous and colossal power of Baha'o'llah. He addressed the kings from the prison, each individually, summoning all to the oneness of humanity, and the most great peace, arraigning some, and predicting what would happen in their kingdoms, and these predictions have come to pass!

Some of the kings exhibited pride, one was the Ottoman king, Abdul Aziz Khan. When Baha'o'llah was a prisoner in his kingdom, he addressed him very critically, and literally did it come to pass.

Another was the French emperor. The Emperor of France did not send any reply, then a second epistle was sent to him. It was addressed to Napoleon the Third, saying, "I wrote you an epistle before, and I summoned you to a cause, but you heeded it not. You proclaimed once that you were a defender of the oppressed, but it becomes evident that you are not; rather, you magnify your own selfish desires and passions.

You advocate your own interests, and this pride of yours is supported by your empire and sovereignty. Because of your arrogance, God will shortly destroy your sovereignty and a revolution shall be set up in that kingdom, and the reins of government shall be taken from your hands, and in the utmost of debasement and degradation will you be cast, and now surely I see you in degradation. Soon it shall be manifested! The river Rhine will be the place of your humiliation and mourning, and the women will bemoan the loss of their sons." Such was the arraignment which was sent. It has been published and sent abroad.

Similar addresses were directed to other kings. And this he accomplished within a prison which was beyond human endurance, and all that he wrote or declared came to pass. It became evident and manifest, no one could hinder it. Some have not yet come to pass; they will occur later.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From address given in Washington, D. C., May 10, 1912.)

In spite of all difficulties Baha'o'llah was ever in an exalted state; his face shone continually. He had the presence of a king. One cannot imagine any one with more majesty. One would have said that he was enjoying the greatest comfort. He drew his strength from divine powers, which always triumph. Minds were exalted on beholding him, and Baha'o'llah never hid himself. He spoke courageously before all. "He is incomparable," declared the people, "but he is setting himself against Islam. Such an one is an honor to humanity," they said, "but a detriment to our religion; therefore we must declare ourselves against him." . . .

(Abdul-Baha.)

In his lifetime he was restless for activity. He did not pass one night restfully in his bed. He bore all his ordeals and catastrophies in order that in the world of humanity a heavenly radiance might become apparent; in order that in the world of humanity the most great peace might become a reality; in order that certain souls might become manifest as the very angels of heaven; in order that heaven's morals might become apparent among men; in order that humanity, or individuals of humanity, might become educated; in order that the precious, priceless qualities of God in the human temple might be developed to the fullest capacity; in order that man might be the likeness of God, even as it has been stated in the Bible.

It was in all probability the second month of the summer when one early morning the steamer anchored off the shore of Haifa. Altogether we were seventy-seven persons. After sunrise we landed at Haifa, and hardly three or four hours had passed before a large sailing boat was brought into commission by the authorities, in which they were going to carry us back to Acca. The baggage was taken on board, and immediately afterward all of us were taken off. It was about 4 p. m. when we reached Acca.

As we entered the place we found the inhabitants of Acca, without exception, sickly looking people of sallow, yellow complexion, a good many unable to walk and hence strewn on the narrow streets. Even the soldiers and officers, who possessed privileges, looked ill. In fact, a number of the soldiers, that is, those who were ordered to guard us, were very sick and I began treating them at once.

(Abdul-Baha.)

That night we were kept by the soldiers who guarded us entirely without food. Two sentries were placed at the door and we were forbidden to go to the market to buy anything. The mothers not having eaten, had no milk for their babies; the young children were famishing and the bodily sufferings of all of us were very great. But we were so happy in spite of all our miseries, and Khanom (the speaker) especially laughed so much that the Blessed Perfection sent a messenger to us to say, "Do not laugh so much, or the soldiers will say, 'Listen to those foolish people enjoying themselves and laughing with nothing to eat.'"

The day following the governor sent us some rice, but it was very bad rice, unwashed, and full of stones. The children were very happy when they saw food, and crowded around the tables. But when it was cooked, it was so black and dirty it made them sick, and they could not eat it. Then the Manifestation came to us and said, "Do not cry; I have made some food for you." He gave each of the children one sugar-plum. When they had eaten these they all went to sleep, quite peacefully and contentedly.

The weather was extremely hot, the water was bad, the prison ration coarse black bread, so that in those days many of us felt sick, and it was not long afterward when everyone became ill, except Abdul-Baha and another believer, Agha Riza Chirazi, and these two nursed us through.

(Zea Khanom, daughter of Abdul-Baha.)

When we arrived in Acca it was found there were not enough rooms in the barracks to imprison us separately, so they put us all in two rooms with no furniture at all. The court of the barracks had a most gloomy aspect. There were three or four fig trees on the branches of which several ominous owls screeched all night. Every one got sick, and there were neither provisions nor medicine. At the entrance of the barracks there was a morgue. It was a horrible looking room, yet I lived there two years in the utmost happiness. Up to that period I had not had time to read the Koran from first to last, but then I had ample time and used to read this Holy Book with fervor and enthusiasm.

Going over the incidents and events of the lives of former Prophets, and finding how parallel they were with ours, I was consoled and encouraged. I would read for instance, the following verse:

"How thoughtless are the people! Whenever a Prophet is sent to them, they either ridicule him or persecute him." And then I would read this verse: "Verily, Our Host is victorious over them." I was very happy all the time, because I was a free man. Shut off in that room, my spirit travelled throughout the immensity of space.

The soul of man must be happy no matter where he is. One must attain to that condition of inward beatitude and peace—then outward circumstances will not alter his spiritual calmness and joyousness. No one can imagine a worse place than the barracks of Acca. The surroundings were filthy and dirty, the treatment of the officials was unbearable, and we were looked upon as the enemies of religion and corruptors of morals. The government had given an order that during our stay in Acca, no one must talk with us and we must not talk with each other.

(Abdul-Baha.)

When the Purest Branch (Baha'o'-lah's youngest son) fell from the roof and was killed, the believers were not allowed to bury him, but four soldiers came and took away the body, and the holy family did not know for two years whether it had been thrown into the sea or what the soldiers had done with it. Naturally his mother was terribly sad and grieved at his death under such sad circumstances, and this sorrow made her so ill that it caused a disease of the heart, so that for a long time she was not able to walk about, but was obliged to sit on the bed.

However, when the Blessed Perfection said to her, "For my sake has this come upon him, and he has borne for me a sorrow and a trouble that was coming to me," from that day no one ever saw the mother weeping and she was always quite happy and cheerful. This was because of her faith and the strength of her spirit.

(Zea Khanom, daughter of Abdul-Baha.)

(Notes of Miss E. J. Rosenberg, Haifa, February, March, 1901.)

In the first month two of us died, and we had no money to pay for the funeral expenses, so we sold the one remaining rug. This money was also pocketed by the officials, and the two bodies thrown together in a hole outside of the town.

In the beginning, no one was allowed to leave the barracks without being accompanied by two or four guards. But after six months or a year, when they saw that not a soul ever tried to escape they gave us greater freedom and the friends could go out in the bazaar to buy things, either followed by one soldier or none. . . .

(Sister of Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 5, 1914.)

Since that date consider how conditions have changed, and how every one of those who oppressed this party of exiles and endeavored with might and main to suppress the spread of this light has become lost in the abyss of despair and oblivion.

They are gone and we are still here, whereas, from the standpoint of the world and human reason, it should have been reversed. Everybody imagined that under the existing circumstances all this would end shortly and naught would be left of the Bahais. Is not this an evidence of divine protection and providence? We have longed for death in the path of God; we have been ready to welcome the cup of sacrifice and were thirsty for the chalice of martyrdom. The Lord willed that we stay and serve Him.

When two years had passed a regiment of soldiers was assigned to Acca. Of course there was no other place for them to live except the barracks. Therefore they had no other alternative but to turn us out. All the time there was an inn in Acca which was inhabited by different people. This inn became the hospice for the pilgrims in after years.

I went to the inn-keeper and said: "As our number is large and there are several families in our party I desire to rent the inn as a whole, and if possible the present inmates may vacate and go elsewhere." He gave his consent to my suggestion. When after a few days I came back to draw up the papers and sign the documents I saw one of the rooms was still inhabited. "Who is this?" I asked. "He is the German consul," he answered. "He must leave the premises," I said, "otherwise I will not rent the place. It is impossible for an outsider to live here." The inn-keeper looked at me with ridicule and contempt. "Ha! Ha!" he laughed, "and they say you are a prisoner! Bah! You talk to me as though you were my lord and master. What do you think, Mr. Prisoner—do you expect to get an exclusive palace in this prison town? Not much! Not much! This man is a German consul; I cannot drive him out."

Finally the German consul left of his own accord and requested to come only two hours a day to attend to his official duties, to which proposition we assented cheerfully.

Then we began to repair the rooms. One of the rooms was left unrepaired, because our small fund was exhausted. The rooms then were assigned to various families and friends, and I chose the last one for myself. This room was so damp that moss had grown on the walls and ceiling, and when it rained there were several cracks in the ceiling which gave free and welcome entrance to the rain.

The floor consisted of humid earth, a breeder of fleas. I had a piece of mat and a long Persian fur coat. It was my seat by day and my coverlet by night. When I covered myself with it an army of fleas hiding in the ambushade of the fur attacked me and tried their best to defeat me, but I defeated them by turning the coat and covering myself with the other side. For one hour I slept, then the wily, indomitable fleas found their way again to the inner side. Every night I had recourse to this maneuvering eight or ten times. Notwithstanding this I was far happier and more joyful at that time than now, sleeping on this fine bed!

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 17, 1913.)

When we were imprisoned in the military barracks of Acca there was a small primitive bath in which the Blessed Perfection took an occasional bath. When the time arrived for our departure from the barracks we rented a very small house in the town. It was a two-story house having two rooms on the lower and four rooms on the upper floor, but they were small indeed.

On the other hand, our party consisted of many people, and we wondered how all these souls could be accommodated in this small house. Finally thirteen of us agreed to live in one room. We lived and slept and worked in this one small room. We lived in this house for well-nigh twenty years. It so happened that although the house was small yet it contained some sort of a bath, and so the Blessed Perfection could use it as often as he wished.

At the end of twenty years we rented a much larger house, but it had no bath. We went to Baha'o'llah and asked permission to build one. The more I begged the stronger was his refusal. I said: "With only fifty pounds a little comfortable bath can be built." But he did not give his consent. Finally a month passed and I was quite worried. At last I went to an Arab friend and borrowed from him two-hundred and fifty pounds at two per cent.

This money I took to a merchant who was in former times a grain dealer, but now out of work. I said to him: "We will enter into a partnership, I to furnish the capital, you the labor. With this fund you will deal four months in grain. After paying off all the expenses of rent, etc., and receiving your monthly salary, we will divide the net profit; one-third for you and two-thirds for me." We entered into this agreement and engaged in business. After four months we cleared our accounts. I paid the debt with its two per cent, the merchant received his one-third of the net profit, all the other expenses were defrayed, and eighty pounds left in the balance for me. With that sum then, I built a bath in the house which is kept intact to the present day.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, August 5, 1913.)

The house of Baha'o'llah (in Acca) was, in the beginning, two houses. At first the Blessed Perfection lived in one of them; after some years the other, fronting on the sea, was added to the first; and as they were built side by side, the partition was taken away. Thus from the older house, Baha'o'llah moved into the newer one, which has a most sublime, uninterrupted view of the sea, and took the room the veranda of which I see from my window. It is said that often in the mornings, and almost always in the afternoons, the Blessed Perfection used to walk on the veranda; the believers and pilgrims, knowing the custom, would come and walk in the neighborhood and if he desired to see any of them he would beckon to them with his blessed hands. It is now the room in the older house that Abdul-Baha is living in. Both houses are large, and although their architecture is not modern yet they are the best houses in Acca with regard to position, outward appearance and inside accommodations.

(Mirza Sohrab: Diary, December 9, 1913.)

For nine consecutive years the Blessed Perfection did not put his feet outside the gate of Acca. He was either imprisoned in the barracks or closely watched and guarded in the house. The day of his departure from the town to the plain of Acca was considered the most important in the Bahai cause. A prisoner he was, and according to the strict, royal firman of Abdul Aziz he was to be jailed in a cell alone, not even one of us was to be allowed to see or to talk to him, and to leave the town of Acca was a matter strictly forbidden. In brief, he was to be a life prisoner, with these deadly restrictions.

One day, while he was walking in the house, in the course of his conversation he said, "It is nine years since my eyes have beheld one blade of grass." He loved the green pastures, verdant plains, blossoming trees and flowering spots; especially the prairie of Acca which was wonderfully green and carpeted with wild flowers during the months of spring. For this reason he often remarked: "The city is the world of bodies, the country is the world of spirits!" Hearing these statements from the blessed lips of Baha'o'llah one day I took with me Nouri Bey, Hakki Bey and Mahmoud Effendi Toupjee—all three political prisoners and walked straight out of the gate into the plain of Acca. The strange part of this strange proceeding was that while the guards were stationed on both sides of the gate they did not as much as lift one finger to prevent us from going out, which was of course the most natural thing for them to do. On and on we walked, revelling in our newfound freedom, till we reached the present palace of Baha'o'llah (Bahajee). Here they had just laid out an orchard wherein they had planted new apricot and peach trees. The wind blowing through the branches stirred our hearts with a quick and new vibration. It was a most ideal scene. That day we walked and walked around the green country and then I returned to town. Several days passed after this event, and then I gave a feast to the officials of the town under the pines near Bahajee. This broke the bonds of incarceration, and from that time I was allowed to go out and walk as my inclination led me.

There lived in Acca a man by the name of Mohammed Pasha Safvat, who was most inimical to the Cause. He had built a palace five or six miles outside the town. Many days I searched for a suitable house to rent for the Blessed Perfection, but I could find nothing else but the palace of this man. After much delay and postponement, through the confirmation of God I succeeded in renting this palace from him at £25 a year provided I might be allowed to repair the mansion with the rent of the first five years. Having papered and furnished all the rooms I ordered the carpenters to make for me a carriage with a cover which was done in due time. Having prepared everything and attended to every detail I went to the Blessed Perfection and said: "A good mansion is made ready for you outside of Acca. It is wonderfully situated and very charming. From one side the lovely mountains and undulating valleys are seen; from another side there are large orange and mandarine orchards; the oranges, like unto red lanterns, shine and glow through the green boughs; from another side, verdant gardens and prairies full of narcissis and tulips are seen; the Mediterranean glistens in the distance; a stream of cool water flows in the center; in brief, it is an ideal place. I supplicate you to leave the town and live there."

The Blessed Perfection answered: "I am a prisoner. The prisoners are not allowed to go beyond the town of Acca." I repeated my praises of the place and begged him to come out. But to no avail. Again he refused my request. I did not want to go on with this insistence so I chose silence and left the Blessed Perfection's presence.

I thought a good deal over this matter, trying to find a solution to this problem. Finally I decided to send for the Mofti, who loved Baha'o'llah and enjoyed freedom of conversation in his presence. When he arrived I told him something had come which none of us was able to cope with save him. He asked me what it was. I said: "We are all anxious that the Blessed Perfection should go out of town. I have begged him twice, the believers have also entreated, but all have been refused. This is thy work. After sunset go thou to the house, knock at the door, and if they ask thee what thou dost want, say, 'I have come to meet Baha'o'llah.' Thou must not leave his presence without his promise to go out."

As soon as he was given permission to enter the presence he went directly to him and threw himself at his holy feet, took hold of his blessed hands, and bluntly said: "My Lord, why dost thou not go out. The country is charming, the weather is delightful, the pastures are green, the water is cool and the palace is made ready." The Blessed Perfection said to him: "Mofti! I am a prisoner!" "O," he said, "You are not a prisoner. You are free. Everything depends upon your own will." Again Baha'o'llah objected, but the Mofti did not let his hands go and insisted and insisted till the much-expected promise was given. Coming out of the house the Mofti came to me and imparted to me the glad news. I was overjoyed, so much so that I kissed his lips many times. On the next day when I stood in the presence of the Blessed Perfection he smiled and said: "What a tenacious man you sent to me!" I said: "Now you have given your promise to the Mofti that you will go out, the carriage is ready at the door. . . ." I rode with him through the streets of Acca and beyond the gate. Then I alighted from the carriage and walked to the palace of Mazreah. The Blessed Perfection was most pleased with the place.

It was about the middle of February, and in that month and in March the whole country was bedecked with flowers. The plain of Acca was dancing with joy and the mountain, the valleys and gardens were intoxicated with the wine of happiness and were crying out, "O rapture! O bliss!" Those heavenly months and years were spent in the utmost rejoicing until it was found that the place was too small to accommodate the growing needs of the holy family. Then there was another palace belonging to Abboud and his family. This was the palace of Bahjee. Abboud and his children were sick and went into town. I wanted to rent this palace from him; he wished to present it to me and insisted upon it. Finally I rented it from him at £150 a year, and Baha'o'llah and the members of the holy family moved into it. From that time on he lived in Bahjee and Acca, alternately, till the day of his departure dawned upon us and threw us into the depths of despair and sorrow.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, March 23, 1914.)

Prof. Edward G. Browne of Cambridge University, England, whose specialty was Persian Literature and History, heard of the great spiritual awakening which was sweeping through Persia among a people that as he said "slumber in a sleep like unto that of death."

At last he was so much interested that he obtained a year's leave of absence and went to study at first-hand this remarkable spiritual renaissance. He visited "the fountain head" of the movement in Acca. He records his impression of Baha'o'llah as follows:

"Of the culminating event of this my journey some few words at least must be said. During the morning of the day after my installation at Bahje one of Baha's younger sons entered the room where I was sitting and beckoned to me to follow him. I did so, and was conducted through passages and rooms at which I scarcely had time to glance to a spacious hall, paved, so far as I remember (for my mind was occupied with other thoughts) with a mosaic of marble. Before a curtain suspended from the wall of this great ante-chamber my conductor paused for a moment while I removed my shoes. Then, with a quick movement of the hand, he withdrew, and, as I passed, replaced the curtain; and I found myself in a large apartment along the upper end of which ran a low divan, while on the side opposite to the door were placed two or three chairs. Though I dimly suspected whither I was going, and whom I was to behold (for no distinct intimation had been given to me), a second or two elapsed ere, with a throb of wonder and awe, I became definitely conscious that the room was not untenanted. In the corner where the divan met the wall sat a wondrous and venerable figure, crowned with a felt head-dress of the kind called 'taj' by dervishes (but of unusual height and make), 'round the base of which was wound a small white turban. The face of him on whom I gazed I shall never forget, though I cannot describe it. Those piercing eyes seemed to read one's very soul; power and authority sat on that ample brow; while the deep lines on the forehead and face implied an age which the jet-black hair and beard flowing down in indistinguishable luxuriance almost to the waist seemed to belie. No need to ask in whose presence I stood, as I bowed myself before one who is the object of a devotion and love which kings might envy and emperors sigh for in vain!"

During the life of Baha'o'llah there lived in Acca an honorable gentleman from Europe. He had heard much about the praise of the Rizwan and expressed the wish to see the place. Permission being granted, he came there one day with his family. I prepared tea for them and showed them the utmost hospitality. When they were going to leave in the evening, the gentleman left on the table a purse containing twelve pounds. Realizing what he had done, I ran back to him and forced the money into his hands. He urged me to accept it and I persisted in my refusal. Seeing how useless was his insistence, he took it back, alighted from his carriage, took off his hat and shook my hands. However, he went straight to the Blessed Perfection and said: "I wished to give a small present to your gardener, but he would not accept it; it seemed it was too little for him." When next I went to see him the Blessed Perfection addressed me: "Abdul Kasim! I have heard that thou didst not accept the present offered to thee by the European gentleman. Why didst thou not accept it?" "I? Never will I accept anything from anyone while I am serving the Lord of mankind." "Wilt thou accept something from me?" "Yes, with the greatest honor!" Then he showed me a small purse of Cashmere shawl and raising it up, he said: "This contains only one pound, but it is from me. Thou canst not realize how happy thou hast made me because thou didst manifest the wealth of the spirit. Those who are in my service must be independent of all else save me."

There are many kinds of roses, but this kind is the most fragrant. The extract of rose is taken from this. The Blessed Perfection always loved this species of roses. Large bowls containing the same decorated the table of his room all the time. The fragrance of this rose has a greatly refining effect upon the human constitution. Baha'o'llah liked perfumes very much, and he always used the attar of roses.

The physical susceptibilities of the Blessed Perfection were very great. His sense of smell was very keen indeed, and also his eyesight, and up to the end of his life he read the finest type without the aid of glasses.

The holy divine Manifestations are even superior and distinguished in their physical powers from the rest of mankind! For example, even when the Blessed Perfection was not feeling well, his pulse would beat regularly like the pulse of a young man twenty years old. For the last three years of his life he hardly ate anything. The servants brought the tray before him; he would look at the various dishes, eat a few mouthfuls, and then it was immediately removed; yet the pulse was normal. At that time there was a Greek doctor who regularly called on the family whenever any of us was not feeling well. One day he was allowed to stand in the presence of Baha'o'llah. He looked into his face and his eyes, and asked permission to feel his pulse. After due examination, the doctor expressed his astonishment, and said that he had never seen a constitution so highly sensitive as that of Baha'o'llah.

The greatest proof of the Blessed Perfection—may my life be a ransom to him!—consists in the fact that he was always manifest and evident under all conditions and circumstances. He was never concealed nor was he disguised for one day. In Persia, in Baghdad, in Constantinople, in Adrianople, and in the most great prison (Acca), Baha'o'llah ever withstood the persecutions of the enemies and kept his own ground in the face of all the world. He never attempted to protect or shield himself for one second. Before all nations and all religions he proclaimed his Cause and declared his teachings. The foes were resisting the spread of the Cause with the greatest hostility and his blessed breast was the target for an hundred thousand arrows.

Continually he was threatened with the darts and javelins of the adversaries. He cried out, "We have burned away the veil and the shroud and are enkindled with the fire of love. Like unto the candle we are set aglow and like unto the Beloved we are ever present in the gatherings of the lovers." It is well-nigh beyond belief that notwithstanding all these dangers the Blessed Perfection was protected. The condition was like that of a deer; although surrounded by a hundred thousand hounds attacking it from every side yet it is protected by an invisible power.

In an Arabic poem, the Blessed Perfection said about the calamities and allegations heaped upon him: "In every moment they inflict upon me the wound of polytheism and at every second they aim at me the dart of infidelity. O Thou Divine Spirit! Descend and behold how my humiliation is greater than Thy glory."

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, June 21, 1914.)

All this diffusion of the fragrances of the Cause of God, throughout the Orient and the Occident, is mainly due to the successive exiles and imprisonments of the Blessed Perfection. If these events had not transpired the holy Cause would not have left the frontier of Persia, the prophecies of the prophets concerning the raising of the voice of the Lord of Hosts from the mountains and hills of the Holy Land would not have been fulfilled and the tent of the Lord of Lords would not have been pitched on its plains and meadows!

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, May 25, 1914.)

Indeed God's ways are most mysterious and unsearchable. What outward relation exists between Shiraz, Teheran, Baghdad, Constantinople, Adrianople, Acca and Haifa? Yet God worked patiently step by step through these various cities according to his own definite eternal plan, so that the prophecies and predictions as foretold by the prophets might be fulfilled. The golden thread of promise runs through the Bible, and it was so destined that God in his own good time would cause its appearance. Not even a single word will be left meaningless or unfulfilled.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, February 14, 1914.)

From the beginning of the Cause or more definitely from the time that the Blessed Perfection was exiled from Teheran all the events in this movement, although their outward appearances for the time being were fraught with pain and sorrow, yet they were based upon the consummate wisdom of God.

On the eve of the departure from Persia the believers were in tears. It is evident that after those dreadful persecutions, sufferings, trials and martyrdoms it was most difficult for them to bear this last blow. They thought the voice would be hushed, the truth would die, the light would become extinct and the truth defeated. However, the spiritual wisdom of such an event became apparent afterwards. Eleven years' sojourn in Baghdad widened immensely the circle of influence of the Cause and carried its fame to the four corners of the earth.

Having received the firman of exile from Baghdad to Constantinople, when the friends heard this dire news they were deeply grieved. Through the intensity of anguish they were weeping uncontrollably. The wisdom of this event became likewise manifest later.

When the two despotic governments decided to exile us from Adrianople to Acca there was such a manifestation of sorrow and anxiety that neither word nor pen can describe it adequately. The floodgate of unutterable grief was set loose. Thus you observe the ship of this Cause has weathered fearful storms, the like of which it is impossible for you to imagine. Now it has become apparent how these events constitute the unparalleled victories of the Cause although at the time of their happening many people thought they were crushing defeats.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, May 25, 1914.)

All the time of the sojourn of the Blessed Perfection—may the souls of all existence be a ransom to his forbearance!—in this mortal world, he was enduring the most painful afflictions. At last, in this greatest prison, his holy body was extremely weakened from the intense sufferings and his beautiful person became as weak as a web from these continual hardships. His main purpose in bearing this heavy burden and all these troubles which gave forth their waves like an ocean, in accepting chains and fetters and showing forth the greatest forbearance, was for the sake of harmony, concord and union among all the people of the world and for the establishment of the signs of the real unity among all nations, until the essential Unity (of God) might appear in the end in the existing realities, and the light of the saying: "Thou seest no difference among the creatures of God" might shine forth upon the whole world.

(Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed about 1904 or 1905 for the Persian believers.)

Baha'o'llah departed to the everlasting world and ascended to the Supreme Horizon, May 28, 1892. On the day of his departure the inhabitants of Haifa, Acca and neighboring places, assembled in the presence of his eldest son, Abdul-Baha, the "Greatest Branch," and interred his remains, with extraordinary respect, close to the mansion of Bahje, which is situated a short distance from Acca.

(Abul Fazl: Bahai Proofs, p. 69.)

O ye friends of God and assistants of Abdul-Baha:

When the Sun of Truth was concealed behind the cloud of glory, the orb of the universe disappeared from the dawning-place of the visible and shone forth in the invisible world, and conferred successive bounties upon the contingent world, then from the unseen realms, the bats began to move, opened their wings and flew around. They supposed they could interrupt the glorious bounties of that beautiful face, quench the shining rays of the Sun of Truth; extinguish the ignited fire and destroy the praiseworthy light; for they imagined that on account of the departure of His Highness the desired One, the divine foundations would be demolished and the blessed tree uprooted. Evil was that which they imagined and thou findest them in this day in manifest loss.

For, according to what was heard, the enemies in some of the lands, upon receiving the news of the most great disaster, held banquets. They rejoiced and made merry, celebrated festivals, burned incense, served sweets and flowers, lit many a candle, mixed honey and wine, played lutes and harps, spent that evening in cheerfulness and gladness until dawn, and sought delight and pleasure. But (they were) heedless that the bounty of that Sun has no end, the torrent of that rain is free from interruption, the radiance of that blessed Orb is continual, and that the dominion of the "Merciful One (who) is established upon the Throne" is permanent. Nay, rather, the human temple, like unto a cloud, prevents (people) from beholding the rays of the Sun. Therefore, it is said in the Gospel that when His Highness the Promised One comes, he shall be mounted on a cloud; but when that noble cloud is concealed, then shall the disk of the sun become manifest and transmit intense rays throughout all regions.

Consequently, after the lapse of but a short time arose a tumult throughout the regions and the pillars of the world trembled. The East became full of cries of joy and the West full of clamor. The most luminous Sun of the beauty of Truth shone forth with the utmost ardor from the invisible zodiac, upon all regions. The veil of covering and concealment was removed and the fire of the love of God became ablaze within the hearts. The beloved of God were enkindled as candles and became well known among men like unto enraptured lovers. From every quarter a song and melody was heard and the call of "O our Lord, we have heard Thy voice." was raised in all regions. The Word of God was promoted and the fragrances of God diffused. The fame of the True One was universally spread. The call of "Am I not (your Lord)" reached the ears of the far and near. The Cause of the religion of God became loftier. All the nations became impressed, and the enemies of the Blessed Beauty (Baha'o'llah) were disappointed and in loss.

When they considered that the departure of His Highness the Desired One—may my life be a sacrifice to his beloved!—led to the exaltation of his blessed Cause, and the flame of the ignited fire increased and every assured believer stepped forward, therefore the shining of the brilliant light proved a manifest loss to the denying people. Moreover, the grace of His Highness the Almighty adorned the imperial throne of Persia with the accession of an equitable king and through the power of the Merciful One that perfect sovereign became compassionate toward this oppressed community. This was also a confirmation from His Highness the Powerful Lord.

Old Testament Prophecies Concerning The Branch

Behold the man whose name is The BRANCH; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord; even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne; and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.—(Zechariah 6:12, 13.)

Hear now, O Joshua, the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant The BRANCH. . . . In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbor under the vine and under the fig tree.—(Zechariah 3:8-10.)

And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears, but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his resting place shall be glorious. . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—(Isaiah 11:1-12.)

In that day shall The BRANCH of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel.—(Isaiah 4:2.)

THE CENTER OF THE COVENANT
THE GREATEST BRANCH
ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS

"When the ocean of My Presence hath disappeared and the Book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces toward Him-Whom-God-hath-purposed, who hath branched from this Pre-Existent Root." — Words of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Center of the Covenant, The Greatest Branch: Abdul-Baha Abbas

[Following its usual custom this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST emphasizes the "Center of the Covenant" in the person and function of ABDUL-BAHA, inasmuch as the Twenty-sixth of November is the "Feast of the Appointment of the Center of the Covenant."—The Editors]

IN order to preserve the unity of the Cause and to spread the religion of God, Baha'o'llah has established this Covenant and Testament. Were it not for the power of the Covenant you would have witnessed the dispersion of the believers and the total disappearance of the Cause of God. When I say the Covenant, I mean the power and authority of Baha'o'llah given to me.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Diary Letter of Mirza Sohrab, to Miss Magee, Paris, May 10, 1913.)

When the ocean of My Presence hath disappeared and the Book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces toward "Him-Whom-God-hath-purposed," who hath branched from this Pre-Existent Root.

When the Nightingale soareth from the grove of praise, and repaireth to the furthestmost concealed destination, refer ye that which you understand not from the Book, to The Branch extended from this firm Root.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Quotations from Kitab-El-Akdas—the Most Holy Book.)

O my Branches! In this Existent Being the greatest strength and the most perfect power is hidden and concealed; look towards it and gaze in the direction of its union and not at its seeming differences. This is the Testament of God, that the Branches (Aghsan), Twigs (Afnan) and Relations (Muntessabeen) must each and every one look to the Greatest Branch (Ghusn Azam). Reflect upon that which is revealed in my Book, the Akdas: "When the ocean of my presence hath disappeared and the book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces towards him whom God hath purposed, who hath branched from this Pre-existent Root." The aim of this blessed verse hath been the Greatest Branch. We have likewise elucidated the command as a favor from before us; and I am the Generous, the All-dispenser!

Verily God hath ordained the station of the Greater Branch (Ghusn Akbar) after the station of the Greatest.* Verily he is the Ordainer, the Wise! We have surely chosen the Greater (Akbar) after the Greatest (Azam) as a command from the All-knowing, the Omniscient!

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Kitab-El-Ah'd—the Book of the Covenant.)

*Baha'o'llah said in this connection, that, "After the Truth there is naught but error." When any of the Branches sever themselves from the Tree, the station also becomes severed. They are then only fit for fire.—Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi.

the Center of His Covenant

In His Name who shines from the horizon of might!

Verily the Tongue of the Ancient gives glad tidings to those who are in the world concerning the appearance of the Greatest Name, and who takes His Covenant among the nations. Verily he is myself; the shining-place of my identity; the east of my Cause; the heaven of my bounty; the sea of my will; the lamp of my guidance; the path of my justice; the standard of my laws.

The one who has turned to him hath turned to my face and is illumined through the lights of my Beauty; has acknowledged my oneness and confessed my singleness.

The one who has denied him has been deprived of the salsabil of my love, of the kawther of my favor, the cup of my mercy, and of the wine through which the sincere ones have been attracted and the monotheists have taken flight in the air of my kindness, which no one hath known except the One whom I have taught the thing that has been revealed in my Hidden Tablet.

(Translated by Mirza Valiollah Khan Vargha, Teheran, Persia, December 11, 1913. Photographs of the original manuscript of this Tablet have been received in America.)

He is The Most Great, the El-Abha!

This is The Branch that hath extended from the bower of thy oneness and from the tree of thy unity. Thou beholdest him, O my God, gazing unto thee and holding fast to the rope of thy providence. Preserve him in the neighborhood of thy mercy!

Thou knowest, O my God, that verily, I have chosen him only because thou hast chosen him; I have elected him, only because thou hast elected him. Therefore, assist him by the hosts of thy heaven and earth. Help thou, O my God, whosoever may help him; choose whosoever may choose him. Strengthen whosoever may advance toward him; and reject whosoever may deny him and desire him not!

O my Lord! Thou beholdest my pen moving and my limbs trembling in this moment of revelation. I beg of thee by my craving in thy love, and my yearning for the declaration of thy command, to ordain for him and his lovers that which thou hast ordained for thy messengers and the trusted ones of thy revelation.

Verily, thou art the Powerful, the Mighty!

O thou my Greatest Branch!

Thy letter was surely presented before this oppressed one, and I heard that which thou hast communed with God, the Lord of the worlds.

Verily, we have ordained thee the guardian of all the creatures, and a protection to all those in the heavens and earths, and a fortress to those who believe in God, the One, the Omniscient!

I beg of God to protect them by thee, to enrich them by thee; to nourish them by thee; and to reveal to thee that which is the dawning-point of riches to the people of creation, and the ocean of generosity to those in the world, and the rising-point of favor to all nations. Verily, he is the Powerful, the All-knowing and the Wise!

I beg of him to water the earth and all that is in it by thee, that there may spring up from it the flowers of wisdom and revelation and the hyacinths of science and knowledge. Verily, he is the friend to those who love him, and an assistant to those who commune with him.

There is no God but Him, the Mighty, and the Magnified!

(Tablet sent to Abdul-Baha when he was in Beirut, Syria.)

O thou my Greatest Branch!

El-Baha be upon thee, and upon whomsoever may serve thee; and woe unto those who contradict thee; blessed are those who love thee; and fire unto those who are thine enemies!

Praise be unto him who honored the land of Beirut, with the feet of him around whom all the names revolve. Therefore, all the (created) atoms have announced good tidings unto all the contingent beings, that the sun of the Beauty of the Greatest and Majestic Branch of God, the most weighty and well-made Mystery of God, hath arisen, dawned, appeared, gleamed and shone forth from the door of the prison (Acca) and its horizon, and advanced to the former place (Beirut). Therefore, the prison land is darkened, while the former is rejoiced.

Exalted! Exalted! is our Lord God, the creator of all things and the maker of heaven, by whose power the gate of the prison is opened, the opening of which fulfilled that which was formerly revealed in the tablets.

Verily he is the powerful to do that which he pleases; the kingdom of emanation is within his grasp. He is the Powerful, the Knowing, the Wise!

Blessed is the land which is honored with his footsteps! Blessed is the eye which is illuminated by his Beauty; the ear which is favored with hearing his voice; the heart which has tasted the sweetness of his love; the breast which is dilated by commemorating him; the pen which moves in praising him; and the tablet which bears his signs! I beg of God, the Exalted, the Most High, to cause us to attain his visit ere long.

Verily, He is the Hearer, the Powerful, the Answerer!

(Tablet sent to Abdul-Baha when he was in Beirut, Syria.)

Verily a Word hath gone forth in favor from the most great Tablet and God hath adorned it with the mantle of Himself and made it sovereign over all in the earth and a sign of His grandeur and omnipotence among the creatures; in order that, through it, the people shall praise their Lord, the Mighty, the Powerful, the Wise; and that, through it, they shall glorify their creator and sanctify the self of God which standeth within all things. Verily this is naught but a revelation upon the part of the Wise, the Ancient One! Say: O people, praise ye God for its manifestation (The Branch), for verily it (The Branch) is the most great favor upon you and the most perfect blessing upon you; and through him every mouldering bone is quickened. Whosoever turns to him hath surely turned unto God and whosoever turneth away from him hath turned away from my Beauty, denied my proof and is of those who transgress. Verily, he is the remembrance of God amongst you and his appearance among the servants who are nigh.

Verily, those who withhold from the shelter of The Branch are indeed lost in the wilderness of perplexity—and are consumed by the heat of self-desire—and are of those who perish.

(Extract from the Tablet of The Branch.)

But the One (from among his sons) who will appear among them with innate knowledge, God will cause the verses of His power to flow from his tongue, and he is the One to whom God has assigned His Cause. Verily there is no God but Him, in whom is the creation and the command, and verily we are all performing His commands.

I beg of God to incline them to his obedience, and to nourish them with that whereby their mind is satisfied, and the minds of those who are facing the direction of God at every instant, and to overlook their oppression, and to ordain them of those who will inherit the heaven of paradise from before God, the Mighty, the Protector, the Self-subsistent!

Words of Abdul-Baha concerning the Covenant and His Station therein

But if any soul asks concerning the station of this servant the answer is—Abdul-Baha. If he inquires after the meaning of The Branch, the answer is—Abdul-Baha. If he desires to know the significance of the verse regarding The Branch, the answer is—Abdul-Baha. If he insists upon the explanation of the meaning of "The Branch extended from the Ancient Root," the answer is—Abdul-Baha.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for Persian believers and throughout the world.)

I am, however, contented with what is inflicted upon me in thy path. Would that thy servants could be satisfied therewith, and that it would have sufficed them to do all these things unto myself. No! by thy Might! this shall never satisfy them. Nay, they will attack the countenance which thou hast raised (to be) in thy place, and whom thou hast established to be on the throne of thy sovereignty; whom thou hast concealed under the tents of thy glory, and under the canopy of thy sublimity, whom thou hast branched from the ocean of thy singleness and enkindled with the fire of thine eternity, whom thou hast elevated to the station which is never comprehended by anyone, and is never known by any soul, whom thou hast appointed a fortress unto thy servants, and a light unto the countries, whom thou hast ordained the people to have recourse unto as they have recourse unto thee, and to be submissive under his hands as their submission unto thee. Notwithstanding all this, they contradicted him.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet.)

Verily, know that the Letter (Tablet) of Abdul-Baha and his address is a hidden mystery and concealed fact; no one is informed of its greatness and importance at these times. But in course of time and in future centuries it will dawn forth; the fragrances thereof will be diffused and the greatness, the importance thereof will be known. The truth I say unto thee, that each leaflet from Abdul-Baha will be a wide-spread book, nay, rather a glistening gem on the glorious crown. Know thou its value and hold great its station!

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Booklet: Abdul-Baha.)

The herald who proclaimed the written names is Abdul-Baha, who announces the names of those who deserve salvation and are firm in the Covenant of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablets of Abdul-Baha. p. 681, Vol. 3.)

This covenant is the Covenant of His Holiness Baha'o'llah. Now its importance is not known befittingly; but in the future it shall attain to such a degree of importance that if a king violates to the extent of one atom he shall be cut off immediately.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet to American believer; translated August 2, 1913.)

His Holiness Abraham—On him be Peace—made a covenant concerning His Holiness Moses and gave the glad tidings of his coming. His Holiness Moses made a covenant concerning the promised One, i. e., His Holiness Christ and announced the good news of his manifestation to the world. His Holiness Christ made a covenant concerning (the) Paraclete and gave the tidings of his coming. His Holiness the prophet Mohammed made a covenant concerning His Holiness The Bab and The Bab was the one promised by Mohammed, for Mohammed gave the tidings of his coming. The Bab made a covenant concerning Baha'o'llah and gave the glad tidings of his coming, the One promised by His Holiness The Bab. Baha'o'llah made a covenant concerning a promised One who will become manifest after one thousand, or thousands of years. He likewise, with his Supreme Pen, entered into a great Covenant and Testament with all the Bahais whereby they were all commanded to follow the Center of the Covenant after his (Baha'o'llah's) departure, and turn not away, even to a hair's breadth, from obeying him.

In the Book of Akdas, he (Baha'o'llah) has given positive commands in two clear instances, and has explicitly appointed the interpreter of "The Book." Also in all the divine tablets, especially in the "Chapter of The Branch," all means the Servitude of Abdul-Baha, all that was needed to explain the Center of the Covenant and the Interpreter of the Book has been revealed from the Supreme Pen. Now as Abdul-Baha is the interpreter of The Book he says that the "Chapter of the Branch" means Abdul-Baha, that is, the Servitude of Abdul-Baha, and none other.

In short, one of the specific teachings of this cycle of His Holiness Baha'o'llah which has not been manifest during the former cycles, is that His Holiness Baha'o'llah left no opportunity for a difference (division). For in his blessed Day he made a Covenant and Testament with the traces of the Supreme Pen and explained the One to whom all should turn; and he explicitly pointed to the Interpreter of the Book, and thus closed all doors to interpretations. We must all offer thanks to God, for he gave us rest (peace) in this blessed cycle, and left no occasion for anyone to hesitate (doubt). All must therefore obey and be submissive, and wholly turn themselves to the One appointed by him, i. e., the Center of the Covenant.

But all explanations must alone be limited to what has been stated. Do you by no means exceed it; so that it may be conducive to harmony, and remove differences.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: A Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha for Charles Mason Remey about 1912.)

Today, the most important affair is firmness in the Covenant, because firmness in the Covenant wards off differences.

In former cycles no distinct covenant was made in writing by the Supreme Pen; no distinct personage was appointed to be the standard of differentiating falsehood from truth, so that whatsoever he said was to stand as truth and that which he repudiated was to be known as falsehood. At most, His Holiness Jesus Christ gave only an intimation, a symbol, and that was but an indication of the solidity of Peter's faith. When he mentioned his faith, His Holiness said, "Thou art Peter"—which means rock—"and upon this rock will I build my church." This was a sanction of Peter's faith; it was not indicative of his (Peter) being the expounder of the Book, but was a confirmation of Peter's faith.

But in this dispensation of the Blessed Beauty (Baha'o'llah) among its distinctions is that he did not leave people in perplexity. He entered into a Covenant and Testament with the people. He appointed a Center of the Covenant. He wrote with his own pen and revealed it in the Kitab-el-Akdas, the Book of Laws, and Kitab-el-Ah'd, the Book of the Covenant, appointing him (Abdul-Baha) the Expounder of the Book. You must ask him (Abdul-Baha) regarding the meanings of the texts of the verses. Whatsoever he says is correct. Outside of this, in numerous Tablets he (Baha'o'llah) has explicitly recorded it, with clear, sufficient, valid and forceful statements. In the Tablet of The Branch he explicitly states: Whatsoever The Branch says is right, or correct; and every person must obey The Branch with his life, with his heart, with his tongue. Without his will, not a word shall anyone utter. This is an explicit text of the Blessed Beauty. So there is no excuse left for anybody. No soul shall, of himself, speak anything. Whatsoever his (Abdul-Baha's) tongue utters, whatsoever his pen records, that is correct; according to the explicit text of Baha'o'llah in the Tablet of The Branch.

His Holiness Abraham covenanted with regard to Moses. His Holiness Moses was the promised One of Abraham, and he, Moses, covenanted with regard to His Holiness Christ, saying that Christ was the promised One. His Holiness Christ covenanted with regard to His Holiness "The Paraclete," which means His Holiness Mohammed. His Holiness Mohammed covenanted as regards The Bab, whom he called "My promised One," His Holiness The Bab, in all his books, in all his epistles, explicitly covenanted with regard to the Blessed Beauty, Baha'o'llah, that Baha'o'llah was the promised One of His Holiness The Bab. His Holiness Baha'o'llah covenanted, not that I (Abdul-Baha) am the promised One, but that Abdul-Baha is the Expounder of the Book and the Center of His Covenant, and that the promised One of Baha'o'llah will appear after one thousand or thousands of years. This is the Covenant which Baha'o'llah made. If a person shall deviate, he is not acceptable at the Threshold of Baha'o'llah. In case of difference, Abdul-Baha must be consulted. They must revolve around his good pleasure. After Abdul-Baha, whenever the Universal House of Justice is organized, it will ward off differences.

Every movement in this world has a center. For example, the power of gravitation has a center; and although there are many luminous centers of lights, yet there is a most great center, and that is the sun. Now, that you are independent of all the smaller centers, you must turn your face toward the Great Orb.

For example, this electric bulb is a center of light, but it only illumines the room; but the sun shines upon all the created phenomena without any distinction.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 30, 1913.)

After His Holiness Christ, there were many who appeared who were instrumental in creating factions, dissensions. It was not known which one was pursuing the right way. For example, there appeared one among them whose name was Nestor (?) who said that Christ was not a prophet of God.

Another division was created when the Catholics declared Jesus Christ to be the Son of God; they even pronounced him to be Divinity Himself. The Protestants claimed that Jesus Christ was possessed of two elements, a human element and a divine element. Thus another division was created. In short, the religion of Christ was divided and it was not known who was pursuing the right pathway, because there was no appointed Center to whom Christ referred, whose word was to be a gateway. If His Holiness Christ had taken a covenant with any soul, summoning all to cling to his word as correct, then it would have been evident as to what was veracity.

Because there was no appointed book, every one declared, saying: "We are the right pathway and the others are not." But the Blessed Perfection, Baha'o'llah, to ward off dissensions, so that no interested person should create any division or belief, appointed a Central Personage, declaring him to be the Expounder of the Book. That is, people do not generally understand the meanings of the Book, but he does understand. "He is the Expounder of my Book and the Center of my Testament." In the last two verses of the Book are revealed explicit instructions, declaring that "after me, you should turn your attention to a distinct personage and whatsoever he says is correct." And in the Book of the Covenant, he said that by these two verses are meant such and such a person. In all his Tablets and Books he has praised the firm ones in the Covenant and he has anathematized those who are not firm in the Covenant, and in all his Tablets he said: "Verily, shun those who are shaken in the Covenant. Verily, God is the confirmer of the firm ones." In his prayers he has said: "O God! Render those who are firm in the Covenant as dear. Degrade those who are not firm in the Covenant, O God! Be the protector of him who protecteth him and confirm him who confirms the Center of the Covenant." Many are the utterances regarding the violators of the Covenant, so that in the blessed Cause there should be no dissensions. No one should say: "My opinion is this," or, "My thought is this." That they may know who is the Expounder and that whatsoever he says is correct. He has not left any room for dissensions—not at all. Of course it is certain that in the world there are those who are antagonistic; there are those who are followers of passion; there are those who follow their own thoughts; there are those who like to create dissension in the Cause. For example: Judas Iscariot was one of the disciples, but he betrayed Jesus Christ. Such things have happened in the past, but now the Blessed Beauty has explicitly declared: "This person is the Expounder of my Book and all must turn to him." And this is to ward off dissension. The purpose of the Blessed One is that no differences shall be created.

If a soul shall utter a word without the sanction of the Covenant, he is not firm. Baha'o'llah appointed a Covenant to ward off dissensions: so that no one can have his own opinion,—so that the Center can be referred to. There were dissensions in the time of Christ because there was no Center. This is the reality of the question. Whatever the Center of the Covenant says is correct. No one shall speak a word of himself. Baha'o'llah has called down the vengeance of God upon anyone who violates the Covenant. Beware! Beware! Lest ye be shaken: Remain firm even if the people of heaven try to shake you. Firmness in the Covenant is not mere words. The command is explicit. (Signed—Abdul-Baha Abbas.)

The point to which all eyes should turn is One. All eyes must turn their attention to the Center of the Covenant while the presence of the Covenant is among us. No other soul should have any existence. All others save the Center of the Covenant are equal. (Signed—Abdul-Baha Abbas.)

(Excerpts from some instructions given by Abdul-Baha to several friends in America, July, 1912. These excerpts received his personal signature.)

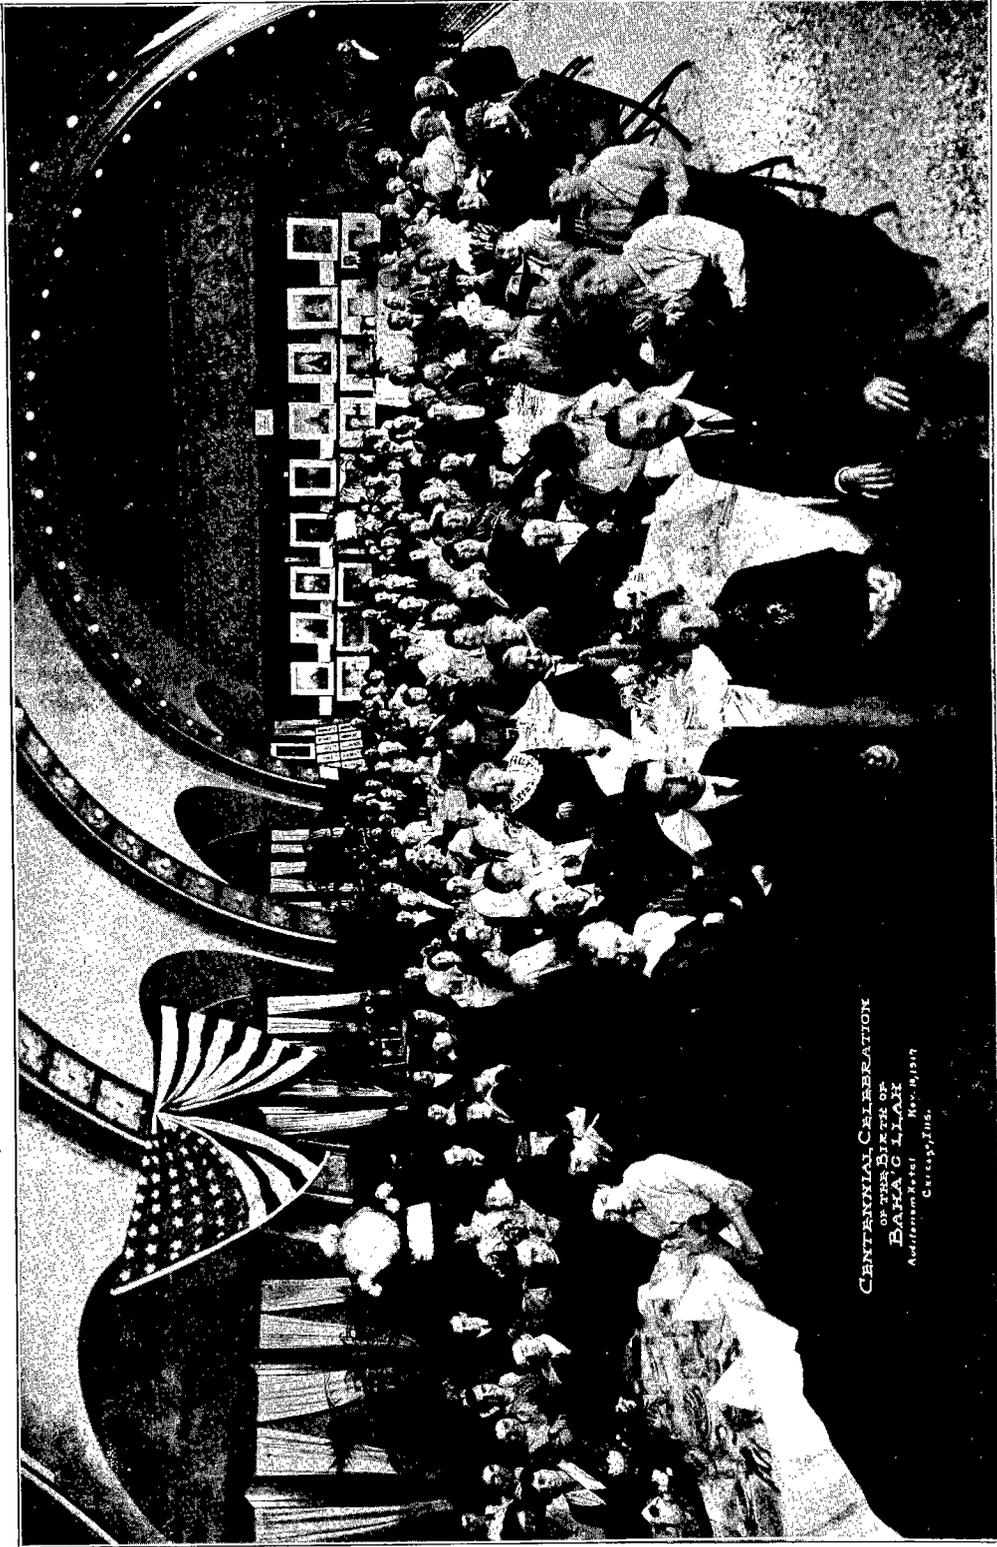

These great days are swiftly passing and once gone can never be recalled, so while the rays of the Sun of Truth are still shining and the Center of the Covenant of God is manifest, let us go forth to work, for after awhile the night will come and the way to the vineyard will not then be so easy to find.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: A Heavenly Vista, p. 32.)

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in His temple the ark of His testament: . . ." (Revelation 11:19).

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven," means also that by the diffusion of the divine teachings, the appearance of these heavenly mysteries, and the rising of the Sun of Reality, the doors of success and prosperity will be opened in all directions, and the signs of goodness and heavenly benedictions will be made plain.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF THE BIRTH OF BARAK OBLAR
Auditorium Street New Haven
Chicago, Ill.

Centennial Celebration of the Birth of Baha'o'llah

THE Centennial Festival in commemoration of the Birth of the Greatest Manifestation of God, Baha'o'llah, was celebrated by the Chicago Assembly and visiting friends from the central states and others, New York, Oregon and California being among those represented. The happiness of the assembled friends was evident. The meetings throughout the three days were full of spiritual joy and heavenly harmony.

The festival began Saturday evening, November 10th, with a banquet in the Auditorium hotel, where all meetings were held.

THE FESTIVAL

Mr. Charles H. Greenleaf of Chicago presided. He read the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom as revealed by Abdul-Baha, as follows:

"Do you know in what Day you are living? Do you realize in what Dispensation you are alive? Have you not read in the Holy Scriptures that at the consummation of the ages there shall appear a Day which is the Sun of all the past Days? This is the Day in which the Lord of Hosts has come down from Heaven on the Clouds of Glory! This is the Day in which all the inhabitants of all the world shall come under the Tent of the Word of God!"

"This is the Day whose real sovereign is His Highness the Almighty. This is the Day when the East and the West shall embrace each other like unto two lovers. This is the Day in which war and contention shall be forgotten. This is the Day in which nations and governments will enter into an eternal bond of amity and conciliation. This Century is the fulfillment of the Promised Century.

"This Day is the dawn of the appearances of the traces of the glorious visions of past prophets and sages. Now is the dawn: ere long the effulgent Sun shall rise and shall station itself in the meridian of its majesty. Then ye shall observe the effects of the Sun. Then ye shall behold what heavenly illumination has become manifest. Then ye shall comprehend that these are the infinite Bestowals of God! Then ye shall see that this world has become another world. Then ye shall perceive that the teachings of God have universally spread. Rest ye assured that this darkness shall be dispelled and these impenetrable clouds which have darkened the horizon shall be scattered, and the Sun of Reality shall appear in full splendor. Its rays shall melt the icebergs of hatred and differences which have transformed the moving sea of humanity into hard frozen immensity. The vices of the world of nature shall be changed into praiseworthy attributes, and the lights of the excellences of the divine realm shall appear.

"The principles of His Holiness Baha'o'llah, like unto the spirit, shall penetrate the body of the world and the love of God, like unto an artery, shall beat through the five continents.

"The East shall become illumined, the West perfumed, and the children of men shall enter beneath the all-embracing canopy of the oneness of the world of humanity.

"In this Day the rest of the world are asleep. Praise be to God! that you are awake! They are all uninformed; but, praise be to God! you are informed of the mysteries of God. Thank ye God that in this arena ye have preceded others. I hope that each one of you may become a pillar in the palace of the oneness of the world of humanity. May each one of you become a luminous star of this heaven, thus lighting the path of those who are seeking the goal of human perfection."

Mr. Greenleaf said in part, "We begin tonight a series of meetings commemorating the greatest event in human history, for one hundred years ago One

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Vol. VIII

Kowl 1, 73 (November 23, 1917)

No. 14

“Be most careful about matters of politics. Do not mention it. Our Cause is not political.”

MANY years ago, Baha’o’llah declared that a time of test would come upon the world and that every nation, place and person would feel its fire.

The hour of test has come upon the Western world.

At such a time it is well for the Bahais to make clear to themselves, the distinctive characteristics of the teachings of Baha’o’llah—as interpreted by Abdul-Baha—and take cognizance of the fact that although he came to establish a new era in the world, he never interfered in political matters and was at all times obedient to the government, commanding his followers in every country to behave toward the government with faithfulness, trustfulness and truthfulness. (See STAR OF THE WEST, issue No. 9, page 113.)

It is also very important that the Bahais give close attention to the most great characteristic of the Revelation of Baha’o’llah namely, his teaching concerning the Center of the Covenant which is a specific teaching not given by any of the prophets of the past. By giving the teaching concerning the Center of the Covenant, He made provision against all kinds of differences, so that no man should be able to create a new sect. To guard against that state of thing, He entered into a Covenant with all the people of the world, indicating the Person or Interpreter of His teaching so that no one should be able to say that he explains a certain teaching in a certain way, and thus create a sect revolving around his individual understanding of a part of the teachings.

With both these ideas in mind:—first, that of non-interference in governmental matters or political affairs, and second, the giving forth of an interpretation of the teachings of Baha’o’llah other than Abdul-Baha’s interpretation thereof,—we beg of the Bahais everywhere to assist the STAR OF THE WEST, and not to place the editors in an embarrassing position before the world by insisting that we publish articles on political questions. We refer to a communication drafted by the Bahai Temple Unity, under date of August 30, 1917, which was sent to the government at Washington, D. C., wherein it was stated that it would be printed in the Bahai publication—meaning the STAR OF THE WEST. It was printed in No. 12 issue. If it had not been published the government might ask, "Why did not the Bahais keep their word?"

That all may clearly understand the purpose or policy of the STAR OF THE WEST, we give herewith Abdul-Baha's instructions to the editors* when he was in this country:

"Very welcome! Most welcome!

"Your services are acceptable. You have labored much. These labors are productive of great results. They are the cause of the good pleasure of God and will be the magnet for the favors or blessings of God. Therefore, be thankful because of your attainment to services.

"Your greatest aim and effort must be directed to the service of the Kingdom of God.

"The greatest service to the Kingdom of God is kindness to the servants of God.

"The greatest kindness to the friends of God, to the servants of God, is guidance or guiding them.

*Words of Abdul-Baha spoken to Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Miss Gertrude Buikema and Mr. Albert R. Windust in his room at the Hotel Plaza, Chicago, May 1, 1912.

"Strive in your efforts, in your management, to become orderly, for this newspaper is now a link between the East and the West.

"Have no word in that publication which can be of displeasure to anyone.

"Attribute nothing to anyone.

"Let there be no displeasing statement; no debasing element regarding or concerning religions.

"Be most careful about matters of politics. Do not mention it. Our Cause is not political."

We are happy to present herewith two remarkable tablets revealed by Abdul-Baha to the friends of God in Persia, translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, having been received in Chicago a few days before the Centennial Celebration of the birth of Baha'o'llah and read on that memorable occasion.

The tablet addressed to Janabe Ameen speaks of the good health of Abdul-Baha. It also records the name of the messenger who carried them from Syria to Persia, Hadji Ramazan.

The tablet in the form of a Commune, is Abdul-Baha's view-point regarding the war, and we respectfully suggest to all that it be read to those who desire to know the Bahai attitude toward this world conflagration.

Both tablets are the latest word from Abdul-Baha:

The Latest Word from Abdul-Baha

TABLET TO JANABE AMEEN

O Janabe Ameen!

HE IS GOD!

Although the doors are closed, the ways and the roads are severed and the means of communication are lost, yet the ideal ties and inner communications still exist. Though the mirror and the lights are far apart, yet the uniting force of the rays and the outpouring of reflections are strong and continuous.

The friends of God must move and conduct themselves with the utmost uprightness and power, so that all that are in the world of existence may become amazed at their firmness and steadfastness, their dignity and might.

This servant day and night is thinking of the friends in the utmost joy and fragrance, supplicating to His Holiness, The Merciful, for unlimited confirmations, so that every drop may become like unto the ocean, full of waves, and every atom expand in the rays of the sun. This is not much to ask of the favor of God.

Convey the utmost longing to every one of the friends. Praise be to God!

through the assistance and the bounty of His Holiness, the Single, we are in perfect health on Mount Carmel, at the home of his honor, Agha Abbas Kuli. On account of the severance of communication, to inquire about the friends and convey news of the safety here, his honor, Hadji Ramazan is sent, because no one else is able to travel this road in these days.

TABLET TO THE PERSIAN BAHAIS

Commune to be read by the friends of God in Persia.

HE IS GOD!

Thou seest me, O my God, on this lofty mountain; the sublime and supreme threshold; the shelter of every great one and the refuge of all the glorious and noble.

Verily, the youths whose hearts were burning with the fire of the love of God in the past ages have taken shelter therein—the meeting place of the prophets, the refuge of his holiness Elijah, the shelter of Isaiah. The spirit of God, Jesus, the Christ—upon Him be greeting and praise!—passed over it, and in the Supreme Threshold, pressed by the feet of the Lord of Hosts.

O Lord, this is a mountain to which Thou hast given the name Carmel in the Torah. And thou hast attributed it to Thyself in the innermost heart of the tablets and scriptures.

O Lord, verily, I invoke Thee in this Supreme Threshold, under the wing of the gloomy nights; pray to Thee with throbbing heart and flowing tears, imploring Thee, supplicating between Thy hands and cry, O my Lord, verily, the fire of battles is raging in the valleys, hills and streams, and the fire of war is burning even under the seas and high in the air, in destruction and devastation. The earth is enveloped by its own fires and the seas are encompassed by its storms, thunderbolts and floods.

O Lord, the souls are stifling, the death rattle is in their throats, the earthquakes and has become so small that even the birds are frightened in their nests and the animals terrified in their lairs and caves.

We hear only the sighs of the maidens and the cries of the orphans, the moaning of the mothers, the tears of the fathers because of false reports. We see only tears flowing from every bereaved mother and the heart of every father, bereft of sons, burning. Towns are being devastated, people are perishing, the children are made orphans and the women are becoming widows. And this is only because of our heedlessness of Thy commemoration and our deprivation of Thy love. Verily, we have been occupied with ourselves. The intoxication of passion seized us; we have taken the road of heedlessness and blindness; have abandoned the path of guidance and have chosen the path of obstinacy and forgotten the commandments of the ancient scriptures. We have forsaken the exhortations in the preserved tablets and parchments—the great verses.

O my Lord! O my Lord! I confess and acknowledge the sins. Verily, every dark calamity and every hard ordeal has surrounded us by our own hands, in this transient world. O Lord, verily, the minds are astounded, the souls are repelled. And there remain only darkened faces, deaf ears, speechless tongues and hearts heedless of thy commemoration, filled with human passions and desires.

O Lord, Thou hast said in Thy manifest book and in thy great glad tidings, with explicit statement, "God does not change that which a people have, until they change what is within themselves." "And when they forgot God, He made them forget themselves."

O my Lord, verily, the nations have gone too deep into the fields of battle and struggle. Nothing will check this sweeping torrent and this grinding war but Thy mercy, which has encompassed that which was and is.

O Lord, do not deal with us according to our offenses and forgive our sins and trespasses. Imperfections are the characteristic of everything possible of creation in the arena of Thy world. And to Thy forgiveness and pardon Thou hast accustomed every one in existence.

O my Lord, only favor and mercy to every sinner, who has fallen into the pit of degradation and wretchedness, is befitting to divinity and only by the imperfections of servitude will the perfections of divinity become manifest. O Lord, verily, the brilliant rays of the Sun of Reality are the removers of the utter darkness and the pure water cleanses the foulness and the sorrow of the world.

O my Lord, verily, the sins are bubbling foam and a full ocean is Thy mercy. Trespasses are bitter trees and Thy pardon is a fire whose flame is intense.

O my Lord, remove the veil, scatter this dense cloud on the horizon, extinguish these fires, subdue this flood, in order to stanch the bloodshed, as compassion to the widows and mercy to the orphans, that these hurricanes may cease, the thunderbolts be extinguished, the torrents quelled, the land become visible, the souls find composure, and the breasts be dilated. And we will thank Thee for Thy abundant favor, O Thou dear! O Thou forgiver!

O my Lord, verily, thou hast clearly stated in the tablets and scriptures, that, had the ordinances fallen on solid rock, rivers would have gushed forth and it had crumbled to pieces from fear of the Dear, the Powerful. But the hearts are harder than the rocks. And the souls are in heedlessness and pride. The people of heedlessness do not profit by the verses and exhortations.

O my Lord, verily, Thy exhortations are celebrated and have been spread broadcast, in the east and the west of the earth. Thou hast called all to love and harmony and to forsake discord in all regions, so that the east of the earth may embrace the west; the people of the desert may embrace the people of the city; their scattered members become reunited and the lost ones be gathered together; that the darkness of the earth may pass away and its lights shine forth. But the eyes and the inner sight have become blind, the ears deaf, the hearts hardened and the susceptibilities like rocks and stones. The minds and intellects are being confused. Souls have forgotten the explicit teachings of the Book, wherein Thou hast warned them of punishment. Thus they have merited severe punishment and deserved the sentence of torment.

O Lord, forgive our sins and stumbling. Make us not an example for the possessors of insight. Guide us to the straight path, so that we may awake from the slumber of passion and be saved from heedlessness and blindness. Deliver us, O Lord of Verses, from the abyss of passions and preserve us from errors.

O my Lord, verily, we have forgotten faithfulness and are reveling in unfaithfulness. With the people of oppression and vice we are associating. There is no deliverer for us save Thee. There is no answerer save Thee. There is no refuge save Thee. Verily, we have trusted in Thee and we lay our affairs in Thy hands. Deal with us according to Thy favor and pardon and punish us not according to Thy justice and wrath. Verily, Thou art the compassionate. Verily, thou are the pardoner and, verily, thou art the forgiver.

O my Lord, verily, the people of righteousness and goodness and the communities of freedom in every country are turning to thee, at dusk and dawn supplicating between Thy hands during the wing of the night and in the dew of the morn, lamenting as a bereaved mother laments during the grievous nights, burning with the fire of sorrow, yearning and separation. They are longing for Thy meeting even with rending of soul, as they traverse the dunes and the hills and cross the valleys and the heights. But these wars that demolish mountains have interfered so that news has ceased and the doors are closed.

O Lord, comfort them in their loneliness; deliver them from their terror and guide them in their affairs.

O my Lord, Thou knowest my sighs, my cries and my anguish, the burning pain because of their separation; my great longing for their meeting, my yearning for their love, my desire for their remembrance and my anxiety to see them. Day and night their remembrance is my treasure and my roses. When night comes my heart loves the memory of their illumined faces. I yearn for them as the nightingale yearns for the beautiful meadows.

O my Lord, O my Lord, open the doors; prepare for us the means; render the path safe and pave the way so that the sincere ones may be reunited in the lofty meetings; the attracted ones gathered together in Thy commemoration in the great assemblies, to speak among the people of Thy bestowals, taste of the honeycomb of Thy meeting. Then the breezes of acceptance will reach them and they will be swayed thereby as if intoxicated by wine.

Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Dear, the Giver and, verily, Thou art the Generous, the Compassionate, the Chosen One.

was born who is the hope and dream of all past centuries and ages, Baha'o'llah. If Abdul-Baha were here he would see radiant faces, expressing the Reality to which he is always appealing. If we bring ourselves into harmony with the Reality, there is sure to follow great confirmation and blessing."

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi spoke on the Mission of Baha'o'llah. "I greet you in the greatest name, Baha'o'llah. At a time of indescribable hatred and animosity among various nations and races the Light of Baha'o'llah arose in the Orient. If now you attend the gatherings of these various peoples, you will find them in the utmost harmony, joy and fragrance. Baha'o'llah broke the chains of superstition and error, proved the unity and singleness of Truth, and removed the chains of imitation. He also removed pride and the feeling of superiority of one nation over another. Another chain he removed was that of prejudice. The most bitter prejudice among Orientals is religious. He proved that the foundation of all religions is one. He also removed racial prejudice, showing the races that their colors are like the different colors of birds and flowers. And so with national prejudice. He proved that the earth is one home. In like manner, he freed the women from oppression and proved the harmony between science, religion and reason. He freed the world from the fetters of misunderstandings and raised the banner of the oneness of humanity from his great prison. These fundamental principles were revealed about sixty years ago. The kings did not heed his admonitions. Let us take heed and not suffer through disobedience. Had the kings heeded his warnings and protected their subjects, these great calamities of war would not have occurred. Do not teach the youth the prejudices of past ages. Baha'o'llah has revealed the means of harmony and happiness for the whole world. In but a short time his teachings have spread throughout the world. The Divine Manifestation is the only one who can change the hearts of men and accomplish this marvelous work. Man, in order to know and have peace, must fill his heart with love. Love is the creator of peace. Let us conquer ourselves. The Bab said, 'A man can conquer the East and the West, but cannot conquer himself.' Let us be brave and give the message. We follow the Master who is brave and unconquerable."

A commune, the latest writing received in America from the pen of Abdul-Baha, was read. Dr. Bagdadi explained how it reached America. Abdul-Baha selected a small, weak Arab, Hadji Ramazan, who is nearly blind, and who was without money or transportation to carry this holy tablet from the Holy Land to Persia. He walked from Haifa to the capital of Persia. It took him two months to reach there. He rested ten days and then started back. From Persia it came to America by mail. Thus an humble, weak instrument, through the Power of God, can accomplish a great work.

Mr. Albert R. Windust spoke, his subject being, "The Birth of the New Era." He quoted the Words of Baha'o'llah from the Surat'ul H'ykl:

"The fecundation of Bounty has been wafted over all things in this day and everything has generated and brought forth its own kind; but verily the majority of the people have turned away from it. The trees bring forth the beautiful fruit; the seas the brilliant pearls; man knowledge and science; the universe, the transfiguration of the Merciful; and the earth, that which no one comprehendeth save the True One, the knower of secrets and unseen things."

Mr. Windust said, "In the writings of Baha'o'llah the word 'Bounty' is unusual and significant. Bounty is from above upon every plane of existence. The bounty of the animal plane descends to the vegetable. The bounty of the divine plane descends to man. If man attains to any knowledge or science it is from the divine bounty. Man of himself cannot lift himself up. The 'fecundation of bounty' has raised up a new era. During the past four hundred years—since the time Columbus demonstrated that the world was round—wonderful discoveries have occurred. The divine bounty flowed into minds and exploration developed, science unfolded, literature expanded, art—especially the art of music—became manifest to welcome the birth of the new era. The student of musical history speaks of one hundred years ago as the golden age of music. At that time Baha'o'llah was born, and then the bounty of God, of Divinity, descended into the hearts of men. What a wonderful period of preparation preceded his earthly advent! Consider also the period between 1817 and 1844—what a time of religious excitement it was! The 'gales of the All-Glorious' were passing over, when on May 23d, 1844, the Bab declared his mission, Abdul-Baha was born, and the first telegraph message to pass in the twinkling of an eye between men at a distance, read, 'What hath God wrought!' The prophet Nahum (2:3, 4) declared that 'in the day of his preparation, the fir trees shall be terribly shaken'—the fir forests of Europe and America were depleted in the nineteenth century, to build the towns, railroads, streets, telegraph lines, etc.—and 'chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broadways, they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.' What a picture of steam railways and electric cars! There seems a coincidence in that the World's Columbian Exposition was held in Chicago—it should have been in 1892, but could not be made ready until 1893—because it marks not only the year of the departure of Baha'o'llah and signified the results of his appearance, in that for the first time in history all nations met in one place to lay at the feet of one another the fruits of their arts and sciences in peace; but because on the arch of the peristyle—that architectural creation comprising the eastern side of the grand court of honor—crowning it, so to speak, as one looked toward the east, were these words, in letters of gold: 'Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.' Shortly after that the Message of the Appearance of Baha'o'llah was received in Chicago, and from here it spread throughout America, even to Europe. Such were some of the remarkable coincidences at the birth of the new era.

"Baha'o'llah fulfilled all the prophecies of all the Holy Books. He was the one of whom Isaiah spoke: 'For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given and the government shall be upon his shoulder and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.' The new era is the Era of The Almighty. If this statement of mine seems startling, permit me to read what one of our Oriental Bahais says of the birth of the new era:

"Look at the twenty-third chapter of Deuteronomy, second verse, "And he said: The Lord came from Sinai—and rose up from Seir unto them—he shined forth from Mount Paran—and he came with ten thousand of saints; from his right hand went a fiery law for them." This means four appearances of God; the first refers to the time when He appeared to Moses in Mount Sinai; the second, to Christ in the name of the Son; the third, to Mohammed from Mount Paran; and the fourth in Baha'o'llah, when He, God, The Almighty, came with ten thousand of His saints. Read the fourteenth verse of the epistle of Jude: "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."

"Then know, O people, that upon the day when God, The Almighty—in the form of man, known as Baha'o'llah—declared himself (April 21, 1863, in the Garden of El-Rizwan in Bagdad) and uttered to the inhabitants of the contingent world, to the mountains, hill-tops, trees, grass, shrubs, flowers, weeds, stones, sands, seas, winds, waves, and every atom comprising the earth, and all the ethers comprising the air: "I am God and there is no God but me"—the old heaven and the old earth passed away and were no more, and from that moment all things became new and that which was, was not! That day marked the era of a new creation, a new people, a new heaven, and a new earth! And the secret Word—the Word of Mystery mentioned first by Adam, then by the Prophets, Messengers, Christ, and later by Mohammed, then by The Bab—that Word became flesh and dwelt among men. Its Power and Glory flashed from heaven and earth when Baha'o'llah stood up and declared: "I am God and there is no God but Me, the Ancient, the Everlasting, the Creator of all things, the Almighty, the Potent!" Then know, O people, at that time the earth trembled and did quake, the heavens rolled together as a scroll, and in less than the twinkling of an eye all things passed away and God alone existed! Then from the Shining Mouth of the Living Word went forth the command, "Be!"—and in another twinkling, a new creation was!"

"It is the Day of God."

The friends who assisted with musical numbers, including Mrs. Carl Scheffler, contralto, Miss Marie Herzog, pianist, Mr. Charles Weeks, baritone, and Zeenat Khanum, chanting, lent to the program a pleasing variety and gave spiritual joy to the assembled friends.

CINEMATOGRAPH EXHIBITION

Sunday morning at nine o'clock, November 11th, the friends and many seekers assembled at Castle Theatre, where, through the courtesy of the STAR OF THE WEST, they were entertained by a cinematograph exhibition, "Abdul-Baha in America." Mr. Albert R. Windust in well-chosen words explained the scenes to the large audience, many persons being visibly affected by the impressive incidents. Not only were the dignity and majesty of Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant of God, seen to advantage, but his sweet humility of spirit and his universal love for all elements of humanity. Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi also gave a brief address in which he explained some stereoscopic scenes of the Holy Land and other oriental cities, which added to the interest of the program. "The dress worn by Abdul-Baha, in the pictures as represented, is of the same style as that worn by Jesus Christ nineteen centuries ago." There was great joy, especially among sincere hearts who had never seen Abdul-Baha in person.

PUBLIC MEETING

The subject of the Sunday afternoon meeting, held at the Auditorium Hotel, was Baha'o'llah's contribution to world civilization. Mr. Albert R. Windust presided and the attendance was large. Mr. Albert H. Hall of Minneapolis spoke with eloquence and enthusiasm on the irresistible movement toward world federation and world peace. He showed that all the forces in the universe are striving to bring about world democracy and that even the great war is preparing the way for a lasting peace. He mentioned many of the nations, explaining their relations to each other and their work for world democracy.

Mrs. Claudia Stuart Coles of Washington, D. C., spoke of the emancipation of women and universal suffrage. She was well fortified with the Holy Utterances and proved the station of women with spiritual illumination. She had an array of facts, historical and otherwise, which carried conviction. She gratefully acknowledged the bounty of Baha'o'llah which made men and women equal. She believed that the ideal freedom would come to women through spiritual and educational unfoldment; through evolution rather than revolution. Her tribute to Kurrat-ul-Aine was eloquent and beautiful.

Mr. Louis G. Gregory of Washington, D. C., brought forward the new educational system of Baha'o'llah. He said in part, "The Sun of Truth sheds its rays upon all the contingent beings. Those who stand at the head and front of modern educational reform owe their ideals to the universal spirit, Baha'o'llah. The education of the child begins at its conception in the holy bond of wedlock. Wonderful prayers are revealed in this dispensation for its growth and progress. Games are introduced and play is used as a means of acquiring knowledge. Children learn much more quickly from each other than from their elders. So a uniform curriculum for the education of all the children of the world will tend to abolish prejudices. The education of Baha'o'llah "does not begin and end in mere words." It is at once the most ideal and the most practical. It promotes the highest efficiency. The compulsory education of both sexes and of all classes also promotes the spirit of true freedom. Baha'o'llah, through the Center of His Covenant, is the educator of the reality of man."

Miss Helen E. Peterson, contralto, Miss Ruth Breyspraak, violinist, and Miss Marie Herzog, accompanist, charmed the audience on this occasion with musical numbers.

MEETING OF COMMEMORATION

Monday morning, November 12th, many of the friends, like birds of paradise, soared to the Temple grounds and sang the praises of the Blessed Beauty, through whose bounty the friends were gathered from the East and the West. This meeting of commemoration was concluded at the Auditorium Hotel, Dr. Pauline Barton-Peake presiding. Mr. Bernard M. Jacobsen of Kenosha spoke of the history of Baha'o'llah and showed forth the wonderful power of the Cause which has spread so widely in such a short period of time. Mrs. Annie L. Parmerton pleased the ears and hearts all difficulties and become eternally happy. This meeting was followed by

The names of those who have attended this glorious gathering will be recorded in the history of this great Cause. The results of your answer to this call will soon become manifest. The first call sent from Chicago accomplished the Mashrak-el-Azkar work. Now we have met to consult in regard to teaching. May our consultation be like that of the disciples of Christ, same medicine for every disease. He called on a tailor who was ill with intermittent fever. After feeling his pulse, and looking wise, he left his directions and went his way. He returned next day and found the tailor well enough to be around. ‘Praise be to God!’ he exclaimed, ‘I see you followed my directions.’ ‘No,’ rejoined the tailor, ‘I did not.’ ‘Then what did you do?’ ‘Why nothing in particular, except that I drank a bowl of cabbage soup.’ The mullah at once reached his opinion as to learn that the man was dead. ‘ ’Twas the will of God,’ he exclaimed. Then he departed, jotting down this astonishing medical discovery, in his book of knowledge: ‘Cabbage soup will cure low fever in a tailor, but will kill an upholsterer.’ Therefore, give the glorious message with wisdom.

“The second point is, teach with the spirit of humility, sincerity, love, and attraction.

“Third, teach only in accordance with the words revealed by Baha’o’llah and Abdul-Baha and be free from everything else. Baha'o'llah says: 'Verily we shall assist every one who rises to serve the cause by an army of the Supreme Course and a contingent of the near angels.'

"Fourth, we should fearlessly teach that the only relief from the present war calamities is turning to the Greatest Name and by accepting the teachings of Baha'o'llah. Otherwise all nations who refuse to do this are in the greatest danger. We practice no sedition nor corruption, but proclaim the Glad Tidings of Abha and the might of His Covenant. We are commanded not to interfere with or even speak one word on the subject of politics.

"Fifth, it is the duty of all to teach. Arise with all strength and those who cannot go should help to send others. The foundation of all teaching is firmness in the Covenant."

Miss Mary Lesch said, "Seventeen years ago there was not one line of the teachings in print in America. Now the Bahai Publishing Society has many books that have been translated and published. Thus the teacher should inform himself of the teachings and go forth well equipped for service."

Mr. Windust said, "The hour has struck. From now on those who serve in the Cause must be firm in the Covenant. They must also be well known as such. . . . This is especially true of those who would teach." He then presented a plan for teaching throughout the Central States.

Mesdames Annie L. Parmerton and T. C. Rice-Wray, Messrs. Charles Mason Remy, Thomas W. Fleming, Louis G. Gregory, Dr. Pauline Barton-Peake, Dr. H. S. Harper and Mr. Fred Mortensen, took part in the discussion. Their collective thoughts centered around the qualifications of the teachers, sincerity, severance, attraction, sanctity.

THE MASHRAK-EL-AZKAR.

This was the theme of the Monday evening meeting over which Dr. William F. Slater of Chicago presided.

The first speaker was Mr. Albert H. Hall of Minneapolis who spoke of the Mashrak-el-Azkar as the evident sign of the new civilization.

Mr. Charles Mason Remy of Washington, D. C., spoke of the birth of the new architecture. He said, "One of the greatest signs of a civilization is its architecture which reaches its most complete form in a temple, the outward symbol of spiritual things." He illustrated by many beautiful drawings nine different civilizations, showing how each in turn, as the Roman Classic, the Byzantine, the Arabian Moorish, the Persian, the Indian, the Romanesque, the Gothic, the Renaissance and the Modern has contributed to the world's treasures in architecture. These beautiful drawings suggested to the happy friends how wonderfully beautiful the completed Mashrak-el-Azkar will appear. Certainly such a building will be unique and will attract the attention of the whole world. But these of course were only suggestions. The speaker declared that the new divine civilization would produce a new type of architecture which would be more beautiful and perfect than all the others. The spiritual outpouring of the Day of Peace will create a new and wonderful design for the Mashrak-el-Azkar in America. The friends were charmed by this simple, earnest presentation, in which the speaker lost himself in his love for the beauty of holiness.

Mrs. Corinne True, the last speaker was happy in her presentation of the development of the Mashrak-el-Azkar in America. She said in part, "In this day the Sun of Spiritual Truth has again arisen in the Orient, and its radiance is seen in the Occident as well. Baha'o'llah has said that the human family was once one, dwelling together in the greatest state of harmony. Then differences crept in and racial and religious bias appeared until discord and hatred were found among the children of men. The great purpose of the Bahai movement is to restore the foundation of human solidarity. The Mashrak-el-Azkar is the outward sign of the inward spiritual Reality which brings to pass this glorious work. Those who join with sincerity in the building of this unique and wonderful edifice share the bounty of God and are under His protection."

The following was reported as the state of the building fund to date:

Certificate of deposit and cash in hand.....	$88,282.42
Cash, reported in Boston...	5,000.00
Pledges	40,000.00

Madame Josephine Cowles De Lagnel of Washington, D. C., made a donation of an heirloom to the Mashrak-el-Azkar—a watch of great value because of its unique design and workmanship. It was given in memory of her husband, Colonel Julius De Lagnel, in whose family it had been for over one hundred years. An interpretation of its symbolism was given by Mrs. Annie L. Parmerton.

Miss Alpha Bratton, vocal soloist, accompanied by Mr. Taylor, pianist, Mr. Samuel M. Dolnick, violinist, and Mr. Albert R. Windust, tenor, contributed to the happiness of the friends. The meetings ended in the singing of the Benediction.

The banquet room where the meetings were held were profusely decorated with variegated flowers. The Greatest Name, "Ya-Baha-El-Abha," in Persian letters, adorned the walls. Numerous beautiful drawings, suggestions of the Mashrak-el-Azkar, met the eyes. The efforts of the House of Spirituality and the Chicago Assembly to arrange for the comfort and happiness of all, the love of those present for each other, the mingling of the various elements of humanity, the eloquent addresses and spiritual songs, were all signs of the confirmations which descend from the Throne of Majesty to those who are firm in the Covenant. The effect of such gatherings is far-reaching, as the hearts are attracted by the fire of divine love. This Festival of Commemoration was an occasion of historic value in the growth of the divine Cause. The friends left for their homes with longing and grateful hearts.

The Center of the Covenant, The Greatest Branch:
Abdul-Baha Abbas

"And there was seen in his temple the ark of His Testament." That is to say, the Book of His Testament will appear in His Jerusalem, the Epistle of the Covenant will be established, and the meaning of the Testament and of the Covenant will become evident. The renown of God will overspread the East and West, and the proclamation of the cause of God will fill the world. . . .

"And there were lightnings and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake and great hail," means that after the appearance of the Book of the Testament there will be a great storm, and the lightnings of the anger and the wrath of God will flash, the noise of the thunder of the violation of the Covenant will resound, the earthquake of doubts will take place, the hail of torments will beat upon the violators of the Covenant, and even those who profess belief will fall into trials and temptations.

The City of God

A Compilation of Utterances of Baha'o'llah

IN this day a great banquet is celebrated in the Supreme Concourse for all that was promised in the Divine Books has appeared. This is the day of the most great rejoicing. All must direct themselves to the court of Nearness (to God) with the utmost joy, happiness, exultation and gladness, and deliver themselves from the fire of remoteness.

The way of freedom is opened; hasten thereto: and the fountain of knowledge is welling up; drink thereof. . . . Truly I say that which will diminish ignorance and increase wisdom is pleasing to the Creator. Say: O people, walk in the shadow of justice and uprightness and enter the pavilion of unity.

It is hoped that in this morn when the world is illumined by the Sun of Knowledge we may seek the good pleasure of the Friend (the Heavenly Father) and drink from the sea of recognition.

O friends! Sleep with your face turned to the Friend and rest in bed in the thought of the Beloved One. From flowers inhale the Fragrance of the Loved One, and in every fire see the light of the face of the Desired One. . . . Then exert thyself in love with thy soul, and enter the abode of the Beloved One with thy heart. Abandon grief for the world to its people and give no heed to the limited days of this worldly life.

(Pass over all else save God with the swiftess of lightning.) Thus mayst thou cast off the old garment of this world, be seated on the immortal, everlasting throne, be clad in a divine raiment, drink the wine of love from the cup of the Beloved One, become ablaze with the light of love and sew the robe of love! This is that matter which shall never change. Know thou, therefore, that in every age and dispensation all divine ordinances are changed and transformed according to the requirement of the time, except the law of love which always flows and is never overtaken by change. This is of the wonderful mysteries which God hath mentioned for His servants! Verily He is the Merciful, the Compassionate!

In this day the City of God hath appeared and is seen in full adornment. This is the city wherein the God of all is become manifest. . . . Take the rod of resignation in the name of God and guide the erring people with entire severance to the great city of God, that perchance the wanderers may attain to the real native land and the blind may receive discerning sight. Verily, He is powerful to do that which He willeth. All things are in the prayer of His power. Verily he is the Powerful, the Mighty.

A Question Answered

From a Tablet by Abdul-Baha to Ella G. Cooper, San Francisco. Translated and mailed from Haifa, Syria, March 19, 1916.

Question: In the copies of the talk given by Abdul-Baha to the Society of Friends in London, there seems to be a discrepancy in the time in the opening line. In some it reads, "About six thousand years ago," in others "six hundred years," and in others "sixty years." If the Society referred to signifies the Bahai Movement, would not sixty years be the correct number?

Answer: This talk opens with the words, "About six hundred years ago." This Society was founded in the city of Hamadan six hundred years ago and has nothing to do with this movement. It is almost disbanded, but under different names and forms one may come across them in Persia. They were called the Society of Sokoutyyoun, that is, the "Silent Ones."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

"Concerning the Station of this Servant, the answer is: 'Abdul-Baha' "

Before Baha'o'llah's ascension into the City of Eternal Light he wrote a glorious Tablet called "The Book of the Covenant." In this he appointed his eldest son, whom he loved to call the Master, to be the Center of this Covenant. This son in his pure selflessness and evanescence renounced the title of Master, laid aside his given name and took the name of Servant, that is, Abdul-Baha, the Servant of Baha'. There is nothing about Abdul-Baha more wonderful than his servitude. To those whose spiritual eyes God has opened, his presence is glorious in its majesty, his face brilliant with love, his words luminous with wisdom and beauty, his whole being vibrant with the vital force of the Holy Spirit. Yet he seems as unconscious of his powers as though he did not know of his own existence.

Because the Servant of Baha' is selfless he is able to reflect the truth, the love, the unity of the new era. For this reason was he chosen to be the Center of the new order, the new Covenant. In that Covenant God makes an agreement with men which is that if men will follow His will, His law, His divine love as revealed in the Manifestation of His Holy Spirit in this age "the world of war shall become the world of peace, the world of darkness, the world of light, all the nations of the world as one nation, all races as one race, the earth, heaven, and the world of satan the world of angels;" and mankind shall then enter the Kingdom prepared for them from the foundations of the world. But the Center of this new Covenant, this new world-order is Abdul-Baha. In him and his words are focused in life-imparting glory the light of the new City of God.

THE MASTER

MY FATHER!" said Valiolah Khan, the son of the glorious Persian martyr, "was much with Baha'o'llah. One night Baha'o'llah, as he strode back and forth in his room, said to him: 'At stated periods souls are sent to earth by the Creator with what we call the Power of the Great Ether (Holy Spirit). And those who possess this power can do anything; they have all power. . . . Jesus Christ had this power. The people thought him a poor young man whom they had crucified but he possessed the power of the Holy Spirit; therefore he could not remain underground. This ethereal power arose and quickened the world. And now look to the Master,' said Baha'o'llah, 'for this power is his.'

"Baha'o'llah," added Valiolah Khan, "taught my father much about the Master. The Master, you know, is one of the titles of Abdul-Baha, and the Greatest Branch is another. Baha'o'llah, the Blessed Perfection, revealed the station of Abdul-Baha to my father; and my father wrote many poems to the Master, though the Master would chide him and say, 'You must not write such things to me.' But the heart of my father could not keep quiet. Once he wrote: 'O Dawning-place of the Beauty of God, I know thee.

Though thou wrappest thyself in ten thousand veils I know thee.
Though thou shouldst wear the tatters of a beggar still would I know thee'."

We spoke of having read so many tablets in which we were told that Abdul-Baha should be known only by the name of "Abdul-Baha." Monaver Khanum, the daughter of Abdul-Baha, said that Baha'o'llah called him "Master." And every prophet, after proclaiming his mission, adopts a name. Moses spoke of himself as the Interlocutor; Christ of himself as the Son of God; and Abdul-Baha calls himself the Servant of God.

(Flowers from the Rose Garden of Acca, p. 8.)

During the lifetime of the Blessed Perfection, the Master, one day, was going to Tyre. He wanted to take me with him; so he sent me to Bahajee [the house of Baha'o'llah] to fulfill some errand. When I reached there the Blessed Perfection sent for me. "Where are you going?" he asked.

"The Master is going to take me to Tyre," I answered.

"Very well; always listen to the Master. Whatever the Master speaks, I speak; and whatever I speak, the Master speaks. . . ."

Whenever the Master came from Acca to Bahajee, Baha'o'llah would see him from his window and then call aloud to his sons and secretaries: "The Master is coming! The Master is coming! Everyone must hurry downstairs and out in the field to welcome him."

(Words of Abul Kasim: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, December 15, 1913. Abul Kasim is the gardener of the Rizwan, the wonderful garden just outside of Acca.)

At another time the Blessed Perfection instructed the gardener, Abul Kasim, to attend to some business for him, he and the Master both being in the Rizwan. The Master, meeting Abul Kasim just afterward, instructed him to go to Acca and bring them some food for supper.

The gardener sought Baha'o'llah and asked that he might tell him of the Master's command. Baha'o'llah said in reply to Abul Kasim: "That is well. You must go. You must do everything that the Master says. Everything the Master says is just the same as if I said it. He is me, and I am he. There is no difference between my commands and the commands of the Master."

(Notes of Mrs. I. D. Brittingham, September, 1901.)

THE GREATEST BRANCH

Kitab-el-Akdas was revealed by Baha'o'llah, the Manifestation, soon after his arrival at Acca, and is the greatest Book. . . . The statutes and laws were given in the Kitab-el-Akdas. In this Book is mentioned everything that is necessary for us, and in two places he says: "After the Sun of Truth sets, we must turn our faces unto 'Him-whom-God-hath-chosen,' who is branched from the Ancient Root;" and in another place: "Anything you do not understand from the Book, must be submitted to the great chosen One." Nothing whatever is mentioned in the Book concerning any other one save the Greatest Branch, and if you read from the beginning to the end, you cannot find anything that refers to any other person save him. Although it was known to all the believers that the Greatest Branch was Abdul-Baha, at the time of the Manifestation if any one pronounced the word "Agha" (Lord or Master), and meant by it any one of the branches besides Abdul-Baha, Baha'o'llah would say: "There is only one 'Agha' and he is Abbas Effendi [given name of Abdul-Baha]" and the Manifestation would point to him at every important question.

The Manifestation wrote the Kitab-cl-Ah'd two years before his departure, in which he said: The One-whom-God-hath-chosen is the Greatest Branch, and he commanded the branches, the twigs and kinsmen to turn their faces unto Him-whom-God-hath-chosen. "Aghsan" means the branches of the Manifestation; "Afnan" means the branches of The Bab. He said: "We have chosen El-Akbar after El-Azam (El-Akbar-Mohammed-Ali)," but he does not command us to obey him or to turn our faces unto him and there is nothing in the Kitab-el-Akdas which refers to Mohammed-Ali, and this word "We have chosen" does not give Mohammed-Ali any importance or high station to enable him to be our commander or master.

We must not be astonished that such a choice was given by the Manifestation, because the same thing took place at the time of Christ, for instead of choosing two branches, he chose twelve, and it is impossible for us to say that Christ did not know which one of those branches would betray him. Neither can we say: Why did the Manifestation, knowing all things, choose Mohammed-Ali after Abdul-Baha? Because Christ also chose his twelve, and commanded obedience to them, saying: "He who gives them a glass of water, will have a great reward in the Kingdom." So if the same thing occurred in the past, you must not be astonished at what takes place in the present, for the two are similar. But the only proof which will make us understand this question, is this, that God, according to His law, will never pronounce any judgment or condemn anybody before one shows his disobedience and commits the crime for which he is to be judged; because, if God would pass judgment upon all, though some are good and some bad, before the good or bad actions are exercised by us, there would be no necessity whatever for laws, statutes or ordinances, and because God does not judge anybody before good or bad actions are produced. He chooses some to be his people, and then he waits for their actions to prove whether they are good or bad. As Christ chose his disciples and said to them: "I am the the vine, and you are clean through the Word which I have spoken, but every branch which does not bring forth good fruit, will be cut off;" so also, the Manifestation chose the branches and declared they would be the best of people if they continued to be under the shadow of the Tree. In several tablets, he said: "Any one of the branches who departs from the shadow of the Tree, will be cut off." Besides there is a special tablet which was revealed by the Manifestation to Mohammed-Ali, in which he says: "Shouldst thou deviate from the right path for an instant, thou shalt be cut off."

If one of my sons should exceed beyond the ordinances of God, by God, my eye shall not turn to him at all, and to this bear witness all the just and informed. (p. 34)

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Prayers, Instructions, Tablets and Miscellany gathered by American visitors to Acca in 1900.)

Fear not if this Branch be severed from the material earth and cast aside its leaves, for this Branch will grow after it is cut from the earth and will ascend until it shelters the universe; its foliage will reach to the Supreme Apex and bear fruit imparting fragrance to the world.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

“The people are vociferously discussing this Manifestation and all nations are investigating”

was translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago, November 29, 1917.)

HE IS GOD!

O ye beloved and ideal friends of God!

The divine voice from the invisible Kingdom of Abha is reaching those who are asleep in the valley of unconsciousness with the call:—

O ye heedless, awake!

O ye drunken, be sober!

O ye dead, arise!

O ye wilted, be revived and full of vigor!

O ye dumb, speak!

O ye silent, cry out!

The voice is the melody of the Covenant, and the effulgences are from the Light of the bountiful bestowals of the horizons. It is the breeze of the meadows of singleness that is blowing and the effusion of the fragrances of the rose gardens that are wafting; it is the candle of the favor of the Ancient Beauty (Baha'o'llah) that is lighted in every assembly; it is the outpouring of the clouds of mercy that is bestowing freshness to every garden and lawn;
it is the verse of oneness that is uttered in the glorious Book, and the tablets of the unique Lord of the Kingdom are unfolding the mysteries of “they are clothed by the new creation”; incline your ears in order that ye may hear the melody of joy, and open your eyes to see the lights.

The favor of the Truth is abundant and His ancient bestowal is uninterrupted. His cycle is all light. His century fulfills all the signs. Be not hopeless neither disappointed. It is the day of hope and the century of the Glorious God. It is the first resurrection and the dispensation of the Beauty of Abha!—
May my soul be a ransom to His Blessed Threshold.

In every horizon His light is brilliant and in every region His bounty is manifest. His great fame has filled the east and the west. The song of His divinity has encompassed the south and the north, and caused a tumult among the pillars of the world, making the hearts of the sons of Adam to quake.

The people are vociferously discussing this Manifestation and all nations are investigating. The flame of this burning fire in all regions has reached the zenith of heaven, and the call of, "Verily, the evident Light is manifest!" has ascended from the earth to the inhabitants of the Supreme Kingdom. All are exuberant with joy and intoxicated with the wine of love!

Ye, who are dwelling in the native land of His Holiness (Baha'o'llah) and are in the place where the Blessed Tree hath grown: Why should ye sit quietly as in a corner? Ye must be so aflame that the heat of your fire may enkindle the adjacent districts; the fragrances of the rose-garden of your hearts may perfume the nostrils of the Supreme Concourse; the flood of bestowal may pour from those hills and mountains to all regions, and the rivers of knowledge may flow from that city to all the valleys and the desert.

Hasten ye to prosperity!

Hasten ye to success!

Hasten ye to the great favor!

Hasten ye to evident light!

Hasten ye to the glorious attainment!

Hasten ye to the abundant share!

El-Baha be upon ye!

O my Beloved, God! These are thy servants who have heard thy voice, responded to thy word and accepted thy call. They believed in thee; became assured in thy verses; acknowledged thy proofs; listened to thy evidences; walked in thy path and followed thy guidance; became informed of thy mysteries; comprehended the symbols of thy Book, the signs of thy Scriptures and the glad tidings of thy epistles and tablets; grasped the hem of thy garment and were held by the radiance of thy grandeur; their feet became firm in thy Covenant and their hearts strong in thy Testament.

O my Lord! Ignite the fire of attraction in their hearts; let the birds of knowledge soar in the rose-gardens of their breasts and sing in the meadows of their souls, songs of love with the most wonderful melodies and harmonies; make them strong verses, unfurled ensigns and perfect words; elevate thy Cause by them; raise thy banners, spread thy signs, assist thy Word and support thy friends by them; make them to utter in thy praise and inspire them to arise in thy good-pleasure; illumine their faces in the Kingdom of thy holiness, and complete their joy by confirming them in assisting thy Cause!

O my Lord! We are weak, strengthen us in spreading the fragrances of thy sanctity; we are poor, enrich us from the treasury of thy singleness; we are naked, clothe us from thy generous bounty; we are sinners, pardon our transgressions by thy favor, generosity and forgiveness.

Verily, thou are the Confirmer, the Helper, the Beloved, the Mighty, the Omnipotent!

El-Baha be upon those who are firm and steadfast!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

"Concerning the Station of this Servant, the answer is: 'Abdul-Baha'"

Now listen unto what I say for it is the foundation of success and the basis of righteousness among the people of the world, that you may be obedient un- to Abdul-Baha in all he wishes and says, Verily this is possessing strong faith. Therefore, know that I have sacrificed my soul, spirit, life, mention, honor, attributes, my comfort and my name in the path of God and I have chosen no dignity or possession save the obedience of Baha' and no name or title save "Abdul-Baha" (servant of Baha'). Therefore be content with this and follow in my words and wishes, because in so doing the blessed trees of life springing up in the paradise of God will become green and verdant.

If you desire to speak in praise, praise the Beauty of El-Abha; if you desire to commend, commend the name of your Supreme Lord; for if you exalt the Tree you also exalt the Branch. If you mention the sea you are also mentioning its gulf and bays. Therefore mention the "Beauty of Abha" by this sweet command among the people, for in my command is contained his command, my attributes are embodied in his attributes. If, therefore, you commend a man you commend all related to him. This is that upon which all the believers will unite and harmonize. Therefore let nothing arise to cause separation among the chosen ones.

(Abdul-Baha.)

I ask one favor of all the friends of God: It is the wish of my soul that they may all praise me only in my utter servitude to the Holy Threshold, without any interpretation and not to commend Abdul-Baha with any other than the words and explanations which have proceeded from the very pen of this servant; that they may depart by no means therefrom, but confine themselves to that same measure.

Verily, my qualification, praise, rank, name, title, being, substance, reality and renown is "Abdul-Baha," and I have no grade except this.

The friends of God shall certainly agree with the request made by this servant with the utmost lowliness and humility. They shall thus rejoice this afflicted heart and bestow new life upon this weak body, so that by hearing this mighty glad tidings and obtaining this divine gift Abdul-Baha may rejoice and find divine gladness and exultation.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Mirza Ali Kuli Khan and Mirza Abul Fazl; translated by Mirza Khan, June 4, 1903.)

I am a servant and this station I have chosen for myself.

(Abdul-Baha.)

I am serving God. I am the servant of God. I give sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, the power of speech to the mute and knowledge to the ignorant. I raise the dead, I deliver those who are in darkness and guide them into the realm of light. I make the poor rich and the weak powerful. I satisfy the hungry ones with the bread of life and allay the thirsty ones with the pure water of immortality. This is my work.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, June 30, 1914.)

Servitude to all the human race is my perpetual religion. Through the bounty and favor of the Blessed Perfection, Abdul-Baha is the ensign of the Most Great Peace, which is waving from the Supreme Apex; and through the gift of the Greatest Name, he is the lamp of universal salvation, which is shining with the light of the love of God. The herald of the Kingdom is he, so that he may awaken the people of the East and of the West. The voice of friendship, uprightness, truth and reconciliation is he, so as to cause acceleration throughout all regions. . . . Through the appearance of the Blessed Perfection the theories are abrogated and the facts established. The time of superficiality is gone by and the cycle of reality has appeared. One must become the incarnation of servitude, the personification of love, the embodiment of spirituality, and the mirror of mercy. . . . The quintessence of truth is this: We must all become united and harmonized in order to illumine this gloomy world; to abolish the foundations of hostility and animosity from among mankind; to perfume the inhabitants of the universe with the holy fragrances of the nature and disposition of the Beauty of Abha; to enlighten the people of the East and West with the light of guidance; to hoist the tent of the love of God and suffer each and all to enter under its protection; to bestow comfort and tranquillity upon every one under the shade of the Divine Tree; to astonish the enemy by the manifestation of the utmost love. . . . to reach the ears of the inhabitants of the Kingdom with the outcry—“Verily the earth is illumined by the lights of its Lord.” This is reality! This is guidance! This is service! This is the consummation of the perfection of the realm of humanity.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for New York Board of Council, translated January 1, 1907.)

. . . I am the servant of Baha'o'llah and nothing more; Abdul-Baha is the sum of all perfections. They must not attempt to surpass that name, “Abdul-Baha.” All must say to others that he claims for himself to be Abdul-Baha and the believers must call him by his name as he wishes. This is the only name he has appointed for himself.

(Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hannen, Haifa, 1909.)

Know thou that all the promises of Abdul-Baha are true and his instructions are inspirations of the Holy Spirit and received as suggestions from Baha'o'llah.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Mrs. Lua Getsinger.)

Concerning my power: it is one bestowal of the bestowals of His Holiness Baha'o'llah. It is my confirmer. It is the light of my guidance. It is the fire of my love. Save it I have nothing. Beside it I know nothing. Except it I wish for nothing.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, May 26, 1914.)

Although Abdul-Baha considers himself as a drop, yet this drop is connected with the Most Great Sea. Although he looks upon himself as an atom, yet this atom is related to the world-illuminating Sun. As is said: “The originator of all these voices is the King himself” or in other words: “It is through his assistance.”

(Abdul-Baha.)

The Blessed Perfection has explicitly promised me with his own tongue that he will assist me. “Rest thou assured,” he said, “my confirmations shall reach thee.” This has ever been the cause of my consolation. Whenever these words are remembered my wound is healed and all the tempests are calmed.

(Abdul-Baha: Diary of Mirza Sohrab, January 10, 1914.)

As to the critical period (1901): Know thou, that verily, Abdul-Baha dominates every critical period through the confirmation of Baha', nor is he dominated by any critical period. And as a proof of this Abdul-Baha has withstood all critical periods and great dangers since his earliest childhood to the present day through the assistance of the Supreme Lord. . . .

My assistance is the assistance of the Blessed Perfection. If all the world should gather together against me I would still possess this and all the world could not take it from me. I have a weapon to fight with forever and ever. With it I am always victorious. It is a sword which can never be dulled, a magazine which will always be full.

(Abdul-Baha: From booklet, Abdul-Baha.)

If any soul asks concerning the station of this servant, the answer is Abdul-Baha. If he inquires after the meaning of The Branch, the answer is Abdul-Baha. If he desires to know the significance of the verse regarding The Branch, the answer is Abdul-Baha. If he insists upon the explanation of the meaning of "The Branch extended from the Ancient Root," the answer is Abdul-Baha.

In brief, the friends must be satisfied with the word of Abdul-Baha. Outside of this word, "Abdul-Baha," no other word, not even the word, Branch, should they refer to in their writings and their speeches. By no means whatsoever should they exceed this word, neither ought they to harbor any discussion and question. However, if any other soul declares another word than this, he will make this servant a target for the arrows of opposition and will become the cause of my grief. For the utmost desire and the ultimate hope of Abdul-Baha is to be a sincere servant at the Holy Threshold. This gift is enough for this servant throughout the worlds.

At the time of the end God shall manifest himself to all mankind with all the attributes of divinity and majesty, but very few shall advance toward him and the rest shall exclaim in horror: "We take refuge in God! O what blasphemy!" Then again he will appear a second time manifesting all the qualities of servitude and the people will flock around him and believe in him and praise and laud his uncreated virtues.

Bokhari, who is celebrated for his accuracy, and wisdom. From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, January 19, 1914.)

My name should be confined to "Abdul-Baha" in all writings. This is the collective name which will gather all the people and it is the strong fortress and protection of the Cause of God. The beloved ones must limit themselves to this. However you may mention me as the light of the love of God, the flame of the guidance of God and the banner of peace and harmony. I trust in God that you may ever be confirmed through the Holy Spirit. . . .

You must know this, that the principle of the divine foundation is love, unison, oneness and the purity of intention. When love is attained, the mystery of truth will then become manifest. No one should adhere to different titles; one title (or station) is enough, and it is, "Abdul-Baha." All must agree to this word, until the difference of opinion be removed from their midst. But that which is essential to the acknowledgment of this word (i. e., Abdul-Baha) is attraction to the love of God, service to the Cause of God, diffusing the Word of God, severance from all else save God, affinity, union and oneness, humility, meekness, nothingness and servitude to the beloved of God. If one does not become characterized with these attributes he has not acknowledged the title (or station) of Abdul-Baha. Because Abdul-Baha is the banner of the love of God, the lamp of the knowledge of God, the herald of the kingdom of God, the commander of the hosts of peace and reconciliation, and the orb of union and harmony among all the nations of the world. Consequently, every one in whose heart the love of Abdul-Baha has irradiated must act in this manner. And when persons walk and move in this path all differences shall be removed.

(Abdul-Baha: From booklet, Abdul-Baha.)

"If the world should combine to overthrow the Covenant, it could not succeed"

FOR years God has been preparing you for this day, in order that you may be illumined like a candle for the dark night, that you may direct the people and establish them in the divine Covenant and Testament. And if, like pure gold, you should be melted in the fire of calamity, you will be purged by that fire of calamity but you will be content.

The time was fully ripe for your coming and for the testing of man, because the great basis of the divine Cause is firmly fixed upon the pillar of the Covenant and Testament and the skies of the divine religions are brilliant and illumined by the stars of the Covenant. God be my refuge! If this pillar is to be opposed by a low fellow (Anoud) there will remain no supports for the divine Tabernacle and for the lesser tents, and there will be no candle lighted for the divine Assembly. The well-built house will be razed to the foundation, it will become like a useless tomb, the commands will be delayed and the waves of the sea of favor will be retarded. The sea of assurance will be cut off, the Breath of Life will cease to blow, the sails of the life-boat will be destroyed, the bright dawn will become dark evening, the dawning-point of desire will be covered under the clouds of regrets; all these troubles will become useless and all these sheddings of blood will be fruitless; the pure blood of the martyrs will become defiled and the remembrance of the blessed Bab [the Forerunner], whose breast became the target for a hundred thousand arrows, will disappear from among men, and his influence will become non-existent. The whole fifty years of the troubles of the Blessed Perfection (Baha'o'llah), the looting and plundering, the imprisoning and beating; the false accusing and injuring; the wandering and homelessness; the threatening by dagger and sword; the shackles and chains will become forgotten and without result. It will become the source of joking and quarrelling among the enemies, the source of their gaiety and rejoicing.

Then, whatever mountain or plain you traverse, cry aloud: *This cycle is the Cycle of Alast! And this Covenant is the Ancient Covenant, the Illuminator of the horizons. The armies of the Kingdom are the protectors of this foundation. The sun of righteousness is radiant stability and this becomes the shining lamp of the assembly of unity. It is the Strong Rope and the illumination of the Giver of Light. It is Arva (untranslatable) and the fruit of the Toobah tree is in the concealed tablet and is recorded in the Book and the decreed Leaf. It is the Testament and the Covenant and it is mentioned in all the tablets and in all the early Books and in the later tablets. It is the governor of the era of Shadad and the balance of the day of reckoning. It is the life-boat and the refuge of the future. It is the holy fragrance of His Holiness, the Creator, and the Breaths of Life of the garden of the Creator. It is the strong fortress; therefore it is a sure shelter for all created beings, and in brief, it is the sum of all the sacred writings, ancient and modern!

How happy is the man who lays hold upon God; trusts in him, remains firm and inwardly becomes confirmed in the love of God and takes refuge under his banner!

(Words of Abdul-Baha: A tablet revealed for a believer in Teheran, sent to America by Dr. Moody.)

The radiance of servitude shining from the Candle of the Testament has illumined all horizons in spite of the people of discord, and the renown of the grandeur of the Blessed Perfection hath caused such an outcry throughout the world that it hath made the limbs of all nations quiver.

All the religions of the world have the loud cry of "Woe unto us!" on their lips, and the cry of "Woe to our Faith!" which is raised by the ignorant, is heard in the east and west. The power of the blessed Cause has such effulgence that it has become apparent to all peoples; and all the nations and creeds have acknowledged and confessed the greatness of the Cause of God. Had it not been for the injuries inflicted by the party of conceit (the nakazeen), the world of existence would have been in this day an exalted garden. But the people of conceit, being heedless of this cup mixed with kafur (a fountain intended to be drunk by the true and firm believers), have imagined that they can upset the standard of the Testament, and that they can disappoint the delivered nations. They have poured forth seditious rumors on the lips and tongues of all people, and they have made calumniating statements, hoping by this means to mingle the contents of the pre-existent cup of the Testament with the bitterness of violation. Far, far be it from them to do this!

Jesus Christ—May my soul be a sacrifice to him—had only a few followers in the time of his departure. Then after his departure all the kings of the world, philosophers of all nations, learned men of all races, and wise men of all creeds, arose to suppress and degrade his cause; but finally, all the standards hoisted by those numerous nations were upset, and the banner of Jesus Christ was fluttering on the loftiest mountain.

Now, praise be unto God, that hundreds of thousands of souls have assembled under the standard of the Covenant through the assistance of the Blessed Perfection. I declare by the Educator of the visible and invisible, it will evidently be witnessed that the descendants of the violators will think their descent as a disgrace and will disown their fathers and forefathers, just as Akrama, the son of Abudjahl,* kept clear of his father, and Kaled, the son of Valid, left his father. As these darkened people (nakazeen) have imagined that the power of the divine Testament is but a power of man, and that the edifice of the Covenant is as one of the baseless foundations of the material world, they are plotting to destroy this divine edifice with all intrigues and machinations.

Praise be to God, that the power of Nero, the great Roman emperor, proved impotent to withstand the cause of Christ—while these weak souls are plot-ting to resist the power of the Covenant of God! "Wherefore, take example from them, O ye who have eyes!"

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Portion of Tablet revealed for one of the Persian believers. Translated about 1903.)

The confirmation of the Kingdom of Abha shall descend uninterruptedly upon those souls who are firm in the Covenant. Thou hast well observed that every firm one is assisted and aided and every violator is degraded and humiliated and lost. It is very astonishing that people are not admonished. They have observed how Mohammed-Ali, on account of the violation of the Covenant, descended to the lowest degree of humiliation and yet they do not become mindful. They have seen how others through disobedience to the Testament have fallen into a well of degradation, and yet they are not awakened.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 4, No. 14, p. 240.)

Abdul-Baha said that he had seen the faces of the American believers and he was very glad—for their faces were radiant with the light of the Covenant of God, for the faces of those who violated the Covenant of God would appear veiled in darkness.

The Covenant of God is like the sun—the brilliance and light of the Covenant radiates and shines forth from the faces of those who are firm in it. He said: "I pray to the Blessed Perfection that he will so turn their faces to the Covenant, that all America may be enlightened by the brightness of their light." . . . The radiance of this Sun (the Covenant) has been felt from here to America, and notwithstanding all this, the violators desire to quench the light of the Covenant of God. They wish to extinguish this light, but they do not know that the light of God's Covenant is kindled and comes from the presence of God, and though it were surrounded by all the winds of the earth, they could not prevail to blow it out.

The existent contingent world was shaken by the Covenant of God, and yet they wish to remove it by their most weak power. It is as if a handful of earth should endeavor to stop the waves of the ocean. It is like a mote trying to stop the rays of the sun from reaching the earth.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Prayers, Tablets, Instructions and Miscellany, gathered by some American visitors to Abdul-Baha in 1900.)

From the graces of His Holiness Baha'ollah I beg for you firmness and steadfastness. Today whosoever is a herald of the Covenant is confirmed and assisted. In these days a number of souls, whose deeds are known in America as clear as the sun, have arisen in enmity against the Center of the Covenant. Theirs is the vain imagination that they can extinguish the light of the Candle of the Covenant. Vain indeed is their thought. The Candle of the Covenant is like unto the Morning Star which never sets.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, October 19, 1914.)

Thy letter was received. It was an indication that (thou art) firm and steadfast in the Covenant and Testament, and art holding fast to the "Strong Rope." Today firmness in the Covenant is the means of the promotion of the Word of God and conducive to the effect of the word of man. Any explanation which does not accord with the Covenant will have no effect whatever. Therefore, whosoever heralds the Covenant of God, unquestionably he is confirmed. This has been tried a thousand times. Any soul

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

“This is what we inform ye in the days of tests”

Through his honor, Dr. Bagdadi, to the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, Muskegon, Michigan.—Upon ye be Baha’o’llah-El-Abha!

HE IS GOD!

O ye who are attracted to the Kingdom of Abha!

Verily, I have read your letter, which indicates illumined consciences and hearts filled with the love of God. Blessed are ye, for ye have attained to a Bounty which was the desire of the greatest holy men in past centuries and which is befitting for those who are like unto ye.

Verily, I ask God to make ye the signs of guidance among mankind and to bestow upon ye stability and uprightness.

Perhaps papers of doubts will come to ye from souls who have emerged from the Kingdom of God. Care ye not therein. Arise with a firm foot in the Covenant, in order that the people of hypocrisy becomes hopeless, even if they should come with the greatest intrigues, evil suggestions and discords.

This is what we inform ye in the days of tests.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“If the world should combine to overthrow the Covenant, it could not succeed”

who violates the Covenant and Testament in the least degree, immediately he is cut off; even in this material world he will become afflicted with remorse and regret. Consequently, as much as you are able, call the people to the Covenant and make the souls firm and steadfast.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet translated March 29, 1913.)

If the world should combine to overthrow the Covenant, it could not succeed. Abdul-Baha loves all no matter how they turn away from him. Whether they love or hate him, go or come, he never changes in his love for them. The Blessed Perfection has left nothing undone. What he ordained can never be set aside.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 8.)

O my Lord! O my Lord! Intoxicate them with the wine of knowledge; sweeten their tastes with the delicacies of prayer in the early morn and eve; gather them together in one congregation; confer upon them a shelter; protect them in the cave of thy Covenant and thy Testament; shield them from the doubts of the violators and the evil suggestions of the waverers; make them mines of knowledge, wisdom and assurance; cause their feet to be firm and steadfast in the straight pathway and grant unto them prosperity in whatever country they call the people to thy Name! Verily, thou art the Lord of the Cause, and thou are powerful to do whatsoever thou desirest!

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 18, 1913.)

Give my salutations and praise to that assembly who are firm in the Covenant of God, and say:

O ye whom God hath chosen from among those who are called (know ye that many are called but few chosen); upon whom he caused the evident light to descend; whom he guided into the right path and to whom he gave the glad tidings of the great success—ye must be sincere and faithful, ye must follow the ordinances which refer to the Covenant of God, which is the solid edifice.

O ye beloved of God, know that steadfastness and firmness in this new and wonderful Covenant is indeed the spirit that quickens the hearts which are overflowing with the love of the glorious Lord. Verily, it is the power which penetrates into the hearts of the people of the world! Your Lord has assuredly promised His servants who are firm and steadfast, to render them victorious at all times, to exalt their word, propagate their power, diffuse their light, strengthen their hearts, elevate their banners, assist their hosts, brighten their stars, increase the abundance of the showers of mercy upon them, and enable the brave lions (teachers) to conquer.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for an American Bahai, July, 1900.)

There are many heralds in this world. Here is a herald who summons the people to the love and defense of his country, calling out at the top of his voice: "O my country, O my beloved country!" There is a herald who blows the bugle of new nationalism. Here is another herald who calls the people to politics, in order that he may wield great powers of state. There is another person who is a herald of literature and science. Here you find a soul who is the herald of the commercial interests and its expansion. And there is still another herald who sounds the trumpet of war and militarism. But praise be to God, that you are the heralds of the Kingdom of God. All these contending voices which are raised in the world today will ere long be silenced and hushed, but the call of the Kingdom of God will gain volume and impetus day by day. The popularity of these worldly heralds may last for a year or two, but the fame of the souls who are the heralds of the Kingdom, is eternal for they are sounding the trumpet of celestial, universal peace. Their voices will ring throughout the future centuries and will be immortal and age-abiding. Thank ye God, that ye are the heralds of the Kingdom of Abha, the heralds of the Covenant of the Almighty.

All other voices will be repressed, but this harmonic song of the Kingdom of Peace and Truth is eternal and everlasting.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 5, No. 14, p. 216.)

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, the Covenant of God and His Testament is the lamp with world-illuminating rays, and from the Supreme Concurrence it enlightens the horizons of the earth and heaven. Whoever stations himself in front of this divine Light, his face will become illumined with the Manifest Glory, his speech will become effective in the hearts and spirits and God shall reinforce him with power which permeates through the realities of things.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 18, 1913.)

The Covenant has such a sway that it astonishes the minds. In every region the sign of the power of the Covenant is apparent and manifest. For instance, in Persia the fire of revolution blazed in such wise that all communities, government and nation became afflicted with the most severe trials; but the power of the Covenant protected the Bahai friends to such a degree that in this turbulent storm no dust fell upon them, except in one locality, which became the cause of the spreading of the religion of God and the diffusion of the Word of God. Now all the parties in Persia are wondering how the people of Baha' were guarded and protected.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 6, No. 14, p. 108.)

The Covenant is an Orb which shines and gleams forth unto the universe. Verily, its lights will dispel darkness, its sea will cast out the froth of suspicion upon the shores of perdition. Verily, naught in the world can resist the power of the Kingdom. Should all mankind assemble, could they prevent the sun from giving its light, the winds from their blowing, the clouds from their showers, the mountains from their firmness or the stars from their beaming? No! by the Lord, the Clement. Everything (in the world) is subject to corruption, but the Covenant of thy Lord shall continue to pervade all regions.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 6, No. 14, p. 107.)

Know thou this of a certainty that today the title of the most great bestowal is firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant of the Almighty, but the magnet for the attraction of the graces of His Highness the Merciful is to teach and guide mankind.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, October 12, 1913.)

If you could realize what an effect your letter produced, undoubtedly you would feel assured that the heart of Abdul-Baha has the utmost attachment to you, and day and night he is supplicating toward the Kingdom of Abha and begs for you confirmation, for you are firm in the Covenant and are the heralds of the Testament.

Today the greatest of all affairs is firmness in the Covenant. This Covenant is the Covenant of God, and this Testament is the Testament of the Lord of Hosts. If you consider that any soul shows the slightest weakness in the Covenant, undoubtedly counsel him and guide him so that he may become firm.

Today no soul has any station or enjoys any title except the soul who is firm in the Covenant and steadfast in the Testament, who entirely forgets himself and is released from the world.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Portion of a Tablet revealed by him in response to a letter asking him to visit the Northwest. It was signed by about ninety Bahais of Spokane, Seattle and Portland.)

This (Covenant) is the Ark of Noah, its moving power is the fire of the love of God and its captain is Baha'o'llah.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, December 6, 1912.)

Thy detailed letter was duly received. Its contents produced joy and happiness, for it indicated the manifestation of the power of the Cause of God in that country, and the worthy services rendered by the firm ones in the Covenant and Testament.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet, translated March 5, 1914.)

Firmness in the Covenant contains an odor like unto the fragrance of the musk which perfumes the nostrils, while violation of the Covenant has a stench which nauseates the nostrils. Therefore, when one inhales with a spiritual power unquestionably he will distinguish between the two smells.

The world of violation is like unto a rootless tree, ere long it will entirely die. The world of the Covenant is like unto the Blessed Tree which is growing beside the river of the Water of Life in the utmost delicacy and beauty, and day by day it is developing and adding to its verdancy. Ere long no trace will be left of the world of violation. No one will ever abandon His Holiness Baha'o'llah and his incontrovertible texts and no one will ever follow the superstitions of the nakazeen [the violators]. For in his irrefutable utterances and blessed writing he has most emphatically commanded all the nakazeen to obey (the Center of the Covenant). All the nakazeen whom you observe know this fact but self-interest having crept in they are following violation. . . . This century will pass and in the next century there will remain not one nakazeen.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Portion of Tablet, translated September 30, 1913.)

Thy letter was received and its contents imparted the utmost of happiness because it was an indication of thy firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant. Today whoever is firm in the Covenant shall become ignited like unto a candle in the assemblage of the world and the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha shall encircle him from all directions. Thank thou God that both thyself and thy revered husband are confirmed in the firmness of the Testament and from every standpoint thou art serving the Kingdom of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Portion of Tablet revealed for a Los Angeles believer, translated July 16, 1913.)

Today the highest of all the degrees are the degrees of firmness and steadfastness in faith and certainty. This firmness and steadfastness will be conducive to the descent of divine assistance and confirmation.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 24, 1914.)

Thy letter was received. Its perusal indicated thy faith and firmness in the Covenant and Testament. . . . Therefore, exercise the utmost love and kindness toward each other to the utmost degree, and love each other heartily and strive in the assistance of each other and take a firm hold on the divine Testament and the Covenant. Because the spirit of this age is the Covenant and the Testament of God. It is like the pulsating artery in the body of the world. Speak in your meetings and assemblages about the Testament and the Covenant, and invite every one to firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant. Know ye this: that if any person is the least doubtful about the Covenant, he is immediately cut off—although he may be the greatest among men. The harmful results of such an event will appear in the future; therefore, give your utmost attention to this question. Consider that the words of Mirza Ali Akbar [a Bahai teacher] were so effective because he is firm in the Covenant.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet translated July 4, 1913.)

You have written that "We all pray that we and all the friends everywhere be favored with the Will of the Center of the Covenant, which is by itself, the good of the whole world, the eternal glory and life (for humanity)." This statement plainly shows that, thank God, you are firm in the Covenant. Today whosoever is firm in the Covenant is helped by the hosts of angels, and favored with the Spirit of God. Wherever he may be, he will shine forth like unto a bright star. This has been experienced by some. But, if he hesitates, although he may make great noises, yet he is in evident loss in the end.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet, received September 7, 1914, by a London Bahai.)

As to thee, O thou who art confessing the oneness of God! arise with all thy power to keep firm in the Testament of God, and firmly believe that, verily, all troops are defeated save those of the Testament and all banners are reversed, save those of the Covenant of God, which will wave over all horizons and will overshadow the hosts of spirit, love and peace, while agitated by the breeze of the favor of God. Be thou of this great host and among the vanguard of this great and powerful army. (P. 108.)

"Leave them to amuse themselves with their own vain discourses," and turn thou to the light of the Testament, and rejoice at the bounty of the effulgence, and seek shelter under the shadow of the standard of the Covenant. Thou wilt soon find it fluttering on the highest summits of glory, surrounded by the valiant hosts of the angels of heaven and assisted by spiritual armies of great number that proceed from the Supreme Concourse. (P. 72.)

Be ye assured with the greatest assurance that, verily, God will help those who are firm in His Covenant in every matter, through His confirmation and favor, the lights of which will shine forth unto the east of the earth, as well as the west thereof. He will make them the signs of guidance among the creation and as shining and glittering stars from all horizons. (P. 83.)

Soon the lights will glisten and the Sun of Truth will shine with a burning ray in that country. At that time the maid-servants who are firm and constant will rejoice; while every doubtful soul who wavers will regret. Woe unto him! woe unto him! in that day wherein the beloved will attain joy by the surrounding Kingdom of thy Lord, the Precious, the Beneficent. Verily, the end is for them who are ushered into the tent of the Covenant of thy merciful Lord. (P. 96.)

Be well watered with the abundant rain falling from the clouds of the Testament of God. (P. 131.)

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha: Pages indicated, Volume 1.)

Therefore, roll up thy sleeves to serve the Covenant, make the hearts firm in the Covenant of the beloved Lord, create harmony and agreement among the believers. . . . Verily, I send thee good news of the confirmation which thou shalt receive . . . if thou wilt arise with all thy power to assist the Testament of God and to serve the Covenant of God.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha: Vol. 1, p. 161.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Vol. VIII

Sultan 1, 73 (January 19, 1918)

No. 17

"Today the penetrative power in the heart of the world is the power of the Covenant"

JESUS CHRIST said only a few words to Peter, telling him that upon that rock he would build his church. He left no written instruction or will, and yet because it was the Word of God, it took root, and millions have obeyed it. And now, when the Covenant has been written and established, how can any one be foolish enough to imagine that they can resist it? No, the ensign of the Covenant has reached to the supreme heights, and its authority will be spread over all the earth.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Prayers, Instructions, Miscellany gathered by American visitors to Acca in 1900.)

Moses said that after him should come Joshua. The Christ said, addressing Peter "Thou art the rock and I will build my temple upon this rock." Jesus spoke this to Peter by word of mouth. The Blessed Perfection* did not appoint his successor by statement of tongue, but in the Kitab-el-Ah'd (Book of the Covenant), he wrote it with his own hand, commanding therein that all the branches and relations should look toward the Center of the Covenant. Also in the Kitab-el-Akdas revealed thirty years before his ascension, it is mentioned in two places. During these thirty years these commands of the Blessed Perfection were known and clearly understood by all. Again in a tablet he refers specifically to this, naming one who would violate his commands.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 62.)

Real obedience and real sacrifice are identical—absolute readiness to follow and perform whatever you are called upon to do in the Cause of God. When you really love God you will be willing to sacrifice everything and submit yourself entirely to his will. Consecrate yourself wholly to him. His will is everything, his service paramount. If they were to burn me, kill or torture me—no matter what affliction might descend upon me, I would welcome it as one welcomes pleasure. These are precious moments in Acca; so precious we wish that they might never end. . . . After your return (to America) the believers will be in a much stronger and better condition. But this cannot be unless they see and know the will and desire of God. I have no wish but his will. His will is Abdul-Baha. If each human creature had his own will and way, spiritual development would be impossible. The soldiers in an army are under the will and control of one commander; therefore they are united and can press on to victory. If each soldier carried out his own inclination and desire there would be just that many different intentions and nothing would be accomplished.

One thousand soldiers under the control of a commander can overthrow and defeat any number of disorganized troops. Without a directing will all would be conquered and defeated.

Be sure, therefore, that if the believers are not united in the will of God they will not be assisted. This is especially necessary because all of them are under the tent of the Covenant in this revelation. There is strength only in unity. Under one tent there is union and harmony. The Covenant of God in this day of manifestation is a lifeboat and ark of salvation. All true followers of the Blessed Perfection are sheltered and protected in this ark. Whoever leaves it, trusting in his own will and strength, will drown and be destroyed. For the Blessed Perfection left no possibility for discord, disagreement and dissension. The Covenant is like the sea and the believers as the fishes in the sea. If a fish leaves the water it cannot live. There is nothing to equal, nothing so effective as the Covenant of God to bring about and continue unity. Christ said to Peter "Thou art my rock upon which I will build my church." Therefore, all the disciples followed Peter and there was no dissension among them. The Blessed Perfection wrote a Testament or Covenant with his own pen so that no one who obeys it will deny or disobey God. The point is expressed very clearly in the Covenant be revealed. Therefore there can be no possibility, no position of disobedience. He knew that Mohammed-Ali would disobey the Covenant. By violating the Covenant he has become a fallen branch. The Covenant was also written by Mohammed-Ali's own hand from dictation of the Blessed Perfection who knew he would disobey. What cause of union could be greater than the Covenant God has revealed through his Manifestation, Baha'o'llah? After the departure of Baha'o'llah the beautiful blossoms upon the Tree of Life were destroyed by Mohammed-Ali and must now be grown again by the love of Abdul-Baha. The work and mission of Abdul-Baha are very great. No one could express the grief which followed the turning away from the Covenant by Mohammed-Ali. We should be thankful that the Blessed Perfection, foreseeing this action, ordained a Center of the Covenant through which by allegiance and love we may protect and preserve the Cause of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 48.)

Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. And truly the Son of Man goeth, as it was determined; but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

(Words of Jesus: St. Luke 22:21, 22.)

Verily, I say unto you, That one of you shall betray me. . . . He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. . . . Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.

(Words of Jesus: St. John 13:21-27.)

Thy letter was received. According to the clear text of the Book of Akdas and the explicit contents of the Book of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha is the interpreter of all the works and books of the Blessed Perfection, and not only of the Book of Akdas. This question is clear and evident to those who are informed of the writings and tablets (of Baha'o'llah). Were this not the case, every one would have given an interpretation according to his own inclination and considered his interpretation preferable to the interpretation of others—this would naturally lead to great differences. If some one interprets one verse of the verses of God, and his interpretation is not approved by Abdul-Baha, it is not authoritative.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 5, No. 9, p. 137.)

Praise be to God, that you have a blessed Assembly surnamed by the name of the Center of the Covenant! This is an evidence of your utmost firmness and steadfastness and a proof of your faith and assurance in the Blessed Perfection.

For this divine Covenant is an institution of the Lord. The Blessed Perfection, in all the tablets, books, epistles and supplications, has begged confirmation for and praised and commended those who are firm in this Covenant and Testament, and has asked the wrath of God and woe and desolation unto the violators.

For firmness in the Covenant will preserve the unity of the religion of God and the foundation of the religion of God will not be shaken.

According to the clear text of the Kitab-el-Akdas and other tablets, the Center of the Covenant is the remover of all difficulties, for he is the interpreter of the Book. Not one soul has the right to say one word of his own account, or to explain anything or to elucidate the text of the Book, whether in public or private. . . .

Convey the rare greetings of Abdul-Baha to all those who are firm in the Covenant. If all the believers and maid-servants of the Merciful do proclaim their firmness in the Covenant, such steadfastness in the Covenant, like unto a magnet, will draw Abdul-Baha to those regions.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Portion of Tablet revealed for San Francisco Bahai Assembly, during 1912.)

With the utmost resolution and constancy call the souls to the Kingdom of Abha and invite them to firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament. Read to them the translation of the Tablet of the Branch and speak with gentleness, moderation and loving-kindness, saying: "We have no other aim save the protection of the fortified fortress of the Cause of God. We must guard this fortified fortress from the attack of the thoughtless ones. Hence we must all turn our faces to the appointed Center in order that the Bahai unity be preserved; otherwise in one year the Bahais would be divided into a thousand sects. We entertain no other object except the safety of the Cause of God."

Abdul-Baha is the interpreter of the aims, intents, and purposes of the words of the Blessed Perfection, and is the interpreter of his own written words, and none can say that this or that is the intention conveyed therein save Abdul-Baha. The spirit of unity exists in the divine words, and one who interprets them in such wise as to create division and discord is indeed one who errs.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 6, No. 6, p. 44.)

If any soul wishes to say a word, they should ask him: "Is this a word of your own or from the Center of the Covenant? If you have a certificate from the Center of the Covenant, show it. Where is the letter from him? Where is his signature?" If he can produce it, they will accept it. If he has not that in his hand, they say: "We cannot accept this because this is from you and returns to you. O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Prayer

(Translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago. This supplication was revealed at a time when in some parts of Persia the believers were awaking to an understanding of the importance of the Covenant.)

PRAISE be unto thee, O God, and glory be unto thee, O my Lord, for thou hast sent from among thy servants those whose consciences became clear; whose countenances were beautified; who flourished outwardly; became inwardly purified; whose faces became illumined; whose stars shone; whose hearts rejoiced; whose sorrows vanished; whose breasts dilated—when they heard the call of the Covenant.

They witnessed the signs of harmony; saw the light of dawn and responded to the Orb of the Horizons. Their faces radiated with the light of bounties and their tongues delighted in the mention of the Lord of great bestowals. They spoke with praise; were illumined with the light of guidance and became ignited with the blazing fire of the Tree of Sinai. They became firm in the Ancient Covenant; walked in the straight path; took hold of the mighty rope; turned to the manifest horizon and followed in the steps of the greatly refined. They gathered in the assembly of glory, in thy name, the Merciful, the Compassionate. They consulted concerning the mighty Testament; agreed upon the right decision and were confirmed with a new spirit. Their breasts were dilated through the reading of the mighty Covenant. They wrote the evident book which speaks of firmness and indicates steadfastness. They held fast to the strong and unbreakable support and grasped the hem of the Garment of Grandeur.

O Lord, illumine their faces in the Kingdom of Abha; incline their ears to the voice of commendation from the Supreme Concourse; make them great signs of thee; ordain for them the best of this world and the world to come; elevate their stations to the sublime canopy. Give them a truthful tongue among the people of the world and usher them into the paradise of thy meeting after they ascend to the Supreme Companion.

Verily, thou art the Omnipotent in whatsoever thou desirest and verily thou art the Pure Almighty.

—ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“From all parts of the world, tribes of Jews are coming to the Holy Land”

WHEN the Sun of Reality shone forth from the horizon of sanctity it flooded the world with the rays of the oneness of thoughts, the oneness of opinions, the oneness of ideals and the oneness of truth so that mankind, in doctrines and articles of belief, might converge toward one common center; differences, contention and discord be entirely effaced from the world of humanity and the unique light which hath branched forth from the Sun of Reality might illumine all the hearts.

Abdul-Baha is the Center of the Covenant of God, the Branch which is subservient to the Tree. The essential object is the Tree, the foundation is the Tree and the universal reality is the Tree.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to the American believers; translated by Mirza Sohrab, April 19, 1914.)

One of the great events which is to occur in the day of the manifestation of that incomparable Branch, is the hoisting of the standard of God among all nations; meaning that all the nations and tribes will come under the shadow of this divine Banner, which is no other than the lordly Branch itself, and will become a single nation. The antagonism of faiths and religions, the hostility of races and peoples, and the patriotic differences, will be eradicated from among them. All will become one religion, one faith, one race, and one single people, and will dwell in one native land, which is the terrestrial globe. Universal peace and concord will be realized between all the nations. The incomparable Branch will gather together all Israel—signifying also that in this cycle the Jewish people who are scattered to the east and west, south and north, will be assembled together in the Holy Land.

Now see: these events did not take place in the Christian cycle, for the nations did not come under the one standard which is the divine Branch. But in this cycle of the Lord of Hosts all the nations and peoples will enter under the shadow of this flag. In the same way, Israel, scattered all over the world, was not reassembled in the Holy Land in the Christian cycle; but in the beginning of the cycle of Baha'o'llah this divine promise, as is clearly stated in all the books of the prophets, has begun to be manifest. You can see that from all parts of the world tribes of Jews are coming to the Holy Land; they live in villages and lands which they make their own, and day by day they are increasing to such an extent that all Palestine will become their home.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Some Answered Questions, p. 75.)

Know ye of a certainty that the question of the gathering of the descendants of Abraham in Jerusalem is an inviolable fact; for that time of the fulfillment of all the promises which the Lord of Hosts gave them through the prophets of the people in the Taurat (Bible) hath dawned and the divine will is predestined to fulfill all the prophecies. Now day by day the signs thereof become apparent, its arguments obvious, its proof evident and its path visible.

From all parts and corners of the world the descendants of His Highness, the noble Friend (Abraham) are arriving in the Holy Land and are engaged in the cultivation and development of towns and villages. However, the divine standard is the ensign of the Covenant. It is the manifest assistor of the children of Israel and the cause of their gathering and unending glory. This promise is already fulfilled in part and ere long will be fulfilled completely.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: To the sons of Agha Joseph, the Israelite of Hamadan; translated July 26, 1907.)

Mr. . . . referred to a meeting (in Persia) when a Jew, a Christian, a Zoroastrian and a Mohammedan were present and remaining for the night, shared the same bed. Abdul-Baha said: "Consider what the power of the Covenant has done. It was an absolute impossibility for a Zoroastrian to unite with a Jew, a Seyed, and a Mullah and for these to unite with a Christian was an impossibility; but the power of the Covenant has even so gathered them that they are accounted as one spirit. Although the bodies are numerous, the spirit is one."

(From the notes of Kinney-Beede-Thompson visit to Acca, 1909.)

And he said: It is a light thing that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth. . . . Thus saith the Lord: In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee; and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Show yourselves, They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

(Isaiah 49: 6-9.)

Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. . . . He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he hath set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law. . . . I, the Lord, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house. I am the Lord; that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images. Behold the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them. . . . I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from afar, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him. . . . Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled; who among them can declare this, and show us former things? Let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth. Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen; that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he.

Regarding the rainbow,—this rainbow is the Covenant of God and the Testament of the Merciful One. The lights of the Kingdom and the heavenly illumination emanated from this rainbow. This rainbow is the sign of the removal of the wrath of God from all the people and the sign of prosperity, tranquillity, universal peace, the oneness of humanity, and the unity of the world of man.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From a Tablet translated about 1907.)

“Today the penetrative power in the heart of the world is the power of the Covenant”

of the Covenant in which he has covenanted with us to obey a certain Center of the Covenant. He has not covenanted with us to obey you. Therefore this statement of yours is rejected. You will have to advance a proof. We are commanded to turn to one Center. We do not obey various centers. The Blessed Perfection has taken a Covenant with us and we are holding to this Covenant and Testament. We do not listen to such nonsense.”

Perhaps people will arise who may speak words of their own and we are not commanded to obey them. This is not like the past dispensation, for His Holiness Christ did not appoint a Center; he did not say, “Obey the Center.” Jesus said to his disciples: “But whom say ye that I am?” And Simon Peter answered and said, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God, the Word of God.” And His Holiness wished to make firm the faith of Peter, and he said, “Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church”—which means that this faith of his was the correct faith. It was a sanction of the faith of Peter. He did not say that all should turn to him. He did not say, “He is the appointed Center of my Covenant.” He did not say, “He is the Branch extended from my Ancient Root.” He did not say, “O God! Render as dear all who serve Peter. O God! degrade anyone who is not obedient to him. O God! Verily shun him who is a violator of the Covenant. O God! Thou knowest that I love every one who is steadfast in the Covenant.” In all Baha’o’llah’s Books and Epistles this has been revealed. Therefore, the Bahai dispensation is distinguished. No one can cause any differences. After Christ there were various sects, there were various denominations, each one claiming to be the right one, and none of them had any written document from Christ—no proof from him. Therefore each claimed to be the right one, but Baha’o’llah, with his own pen, has written a Covenant and Testament in which he declares himself covenanting that the one who is the Center of the Covenant is the one to be turned to. Therefore you must thank God that Baha’o’llah has made the pathway straight. Everything he has illustrated and every door he has opened for you. There is no occasion for any hesitation on the part of any soul. The purpose of the Covenant was simply to ward off differences, so no one can say, “My opinion is the valid one.” Any opinion expressed by the Center of the Covenant is correct, and there is no way for disobedience for anyone.

Thou hast written regarding the love and unity of the believers and their firmness in the Covenant. This is through the confirmation of the Kingdom of Abha which has attracted those souls and made them steadfast in the Covenant. Today the penetrative power in the heart of the world is the power of the Covenant. The more firm the believers are, the more they are confirmed.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet to American believers; translated by Mirza Sohrab, July 16, 1913.)

Firmness in the Covenant means obedience, so that no one may say this is my opinion. Nay, rather he must obey that which proceeds from the pen and tongue of the Covenant. I am Abdul-Baha. The crown of my head is the servitude of Baha’o’llah and the service of his believers.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet; translated March 4, 1913.)

As thou hast realized thy own shortcomings, rest thou assured that thou art firm in the Covenant and Testament, and in the love of the True One art steadfast and growing.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for an American believer; translated November 1, 1909.)

This is the first step in the path of God, but the distance of the way is great. I hope that thou mayest traverse that distance and reach the house of the object. That pathway is that of severance from the world-tie, reliance upon God, baptism through spirit and fire; namely, to attain the spirit of the knowledge of God, and conflagration with the fire of the love of God; trustworthiness, faithfulness and firmness in the Covenant, steadfastness in the cause of God, and service to the kingdom of peace which shall soon establish its tent in the center of the world.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Tablet revealed for an American believer; received October 8, 1906.)

O thou daughter of the Kingdom! If thou desirest divine confirmation and assistance, so that the heavenly Cohorts may grant thee victory, remain thou firm and steadfast in the cause of God and be thou constant in the Covenant and Testament—thus like unto a solid structure thou mayest become established and unshakable throughout all eternity. Whenever a great object adheres to its own center, great results and signs will become apparent.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 13, 1914.)

But the sincere servant of Baha'o'llah who is firm in the Covenant and steadfast in the Testament while surrounded by the most great sea of tests, threatened by the surging, rocking waves of persecutions and encircled by the whirlwinds of calumnies and backbitings, will blossom like unto a rose and break into joyous song and sweet melodies like unto the nightingale.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 28, 1913.)

The words of love and unity have been more dwelt upon in the writings of Baha'o'llah than by any other prophet. In the Book of the Covenant it is noted most especially. In this tablet he says: "O people of the world! I hope you will hold to the principles which will uphold your station." The station of man is great if he be true to himself and live up to it. If the friends live up to the teachings of the two pages of the Covenant, it will be sufficient.

(Words of wife of Abdul-Baha: Flowers from Rose Garden of Acca, p. 31.)

O God! Assist me with the hosts of the Supreme Concourse and make me firm and steadfast in the Covenant and Testament. I am weak in the Covenant and the Testament, confer upon me strength; I am poor, bestow upon me wealth from the treasury of the Kingdom; I am ignorant, open before my face the doors of knowledge; I am dead, breathe into me the breath of life; I am dumb, grant me an eloquent tongue so that with a fluent expression I may raise the call of thy Kingdom and guide all to the firmness of thy Covenant. Thou art the Generous, the Giver, and the Mighty!

(Prayer revealed by Abdul-Baha: From notes of an American pilgrim to Abdul-Baha while in Dublin, N. H., July 1912.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Divine Art of Living

A COMPILATION BY MRS. MARY M. RABB

CHAPTER VIII

Spiritual Healing

HEALING comes from God. If the heavenly benediction be upon us while we are being healed then only can we be truly healed. All depends upon God. Medicine is merely an outward form or means by which we obtain heavenly healing. Without the heavenly benediction it is worth nothing. If man looks at the nature of the world around him he will see that all created beings are dependent upon something; i. e., man is dependent for his life upon the air which he breathes, likewise the animals which are upon the earth, and each created being is dependent for its life upon some material circumstances. Man, therefore, and all creatures are prisoners of nature. The sun must follow its law; the earth must follow its law of motion, and so also the sea. But by the spiritual power of God which, through his bounty, he has bestowed upon man alone, man is enabled to transcend the laws of nature in many and wonderful ways. It is the law of nature that man should walk upon the earth; but he transcends this law, for he sojourns upon the water and also flies like the bird through the air.

Through the wonderful spiritual power which God gives to man he is enabled to reach the Kingdom. But behold! man is not grateful and is careless of the great mercy which God has shown him.

O maid-servant of God, there are two kinds of disease, spiritual and physical. Physical diseases are cured by medicine and the essence of shrubs and plants. Diseases which are caused by the emotions of the mind are cured by the power of the spirit of man. But the power of the divine spirit dominates all the bodily ailments and those of the mind. When the spirit of man is confirmed and assisted by the confirmations of the Holy Spirit, then it will show its effect in every condition in the world of existence.

As to mental healing,—it also has an effect because some reflections are produced between the hearts by the power of concentration. From this power of concentration impressions are produced and healing or relief is realized from these impressions.

(Abdul-Baha.)

Between material things and spiritual things there is a connection. The more healthful his body the greater will be the power of the spirit of man; the power of the intellect, the power of the memory, the power of reflection will then be greater.

I hope thou wilt become as a rising light and obtain spiritual health; and spiritual health is conducive to physical health.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; p. 305.)

Disease is of two kinds, material and spiritual. For instance, a cut on the hand—if you pray for the cut to be healed, and do not stop its bleeding, you will not do much good; this needs a material remedy.

Sometimes, if the nervous system is paralyzed through fear, a spiritual remedy is necessary. Madness, incurable otherwise, can be cured through prayer. . . . It often happens that sorrow makes one ill. That illness can be cured by spiritual means.

O seeker for the truth! There are two ways of healing sickness, material means and spiritual means. The first way is through the use of medical remedies. The second consists in praying to God and in turning to him. Both means should be used and practiced. Illness caused by physical accident should be treated with medical remedies. Those which are due to spiritual causes disappear through spiritual means. Thus an illness caused by affliction, fear, nervous impressions, will be healed by spiritual rather than by physical treatment. Hence, both kinds of remedies should be considered. Moreover, they are not contradictory and you should accept the physical remedies as coming from the mercy and favor of God who has revealed and made manifest medical knowledge so that his servants may profit by this kind of treatment also. You should give equal attention to spiritual treatments for they produce marvelous effects. Now, if you wish to know the divine remedy which will heal man from all sickness and will give him the health of the divine Kingdom know that it is the precepts and teachings of God. Guard them sacredly.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 587.)

O maid-servant of God! The prayers which were written for the purpose of healing are both for the spiritual and material healing. Therefore chant them for the spiritual and material healing. If healing is best for the patient surely it will be granted. For some who are sick, healing for them would only be the cause of other ills. Thus it is that wisdom does not decree the answer to some prayers.

O maid-servant of God! The power of the Holy Spirit heals both material and spiritual ills.

It is not the body which feels pain or trouble, but the soul. If we have a pain in our arm the defect is in the body yet it is the soul which feels the pain and is troubled, not the body, though the body is the cause of that trouble.

(Abdul-Baha.)

My spiritual health is always perfect. I enjoy an eternal health of the spirit. I hope all of the people of the world will win this celestial gift. Pray that the spiritual health of mankind may be improved daily, for there are many doctors who attend to the physical ailments of the people, but there are very few divine physicians. It is in this connection that Christ said: "Do not be afraid of those people who have control over your body, but have fear of those who may control your spirit." Let your spirit be free so that it may soar toward the heights of sanctity. Let your spirit unfold the white wings of progress. Often physical sickness draws man nearer unto his Maker, suffers his heart to be made empty of all worldly desires until it becomes tender and sympathetic toward all sufferers and compassionate to all creatures. Although physical diseases cause man to suffer temporarily, yet they do not touch his spirit. Nay, rather, they contribute toward the divine purpose; that is, spiritual susceptibilities will be created in his heart.

(Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, October 27, 1913.)

O thou who art conscious! At last thou didst learn of salvation and didst find the straight way. Now remain firm that thou mayest attain confirmation and victory.

The powers of the sympathetic nerve are neither entirely physical nor spiritual, but are between the two (systems). The nerve is connected with both. Its phenomena will be perfect when its spiritual and physical relations are normal.

When the material world and the divine world are well co-related, when the hearts become heavenly and the aspirations grow pure and divine, perfect connection will take place. Then will its power produce a perfect manifestation. Physical and spiritual diseases will then receive absolute healing.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 309. An answer to the question of a physician regarding the sympathetic nervous system.)

Christ healed by the power of his word, because the word of the Messiah was the Holy Spirit purified from all else.

The words of many speakers are mixed with the lusts of their souls and their worldly appetites; therefore they will have neither authority nor success.

Jesus said: "Arise, take up thy bed and walk." He did not use prayers or mental suggestion. He used spiritual authority in the command which was the power of the Holy Spirit manifest in him. Therefore his word was obeyed because it was creative.

(Abdul-Baha.)

As to the fact that man must entirely forget himself, by this is meant that he should arise in the mystery of sacrifice and that is the disappearance of mortal sentiments and the extinction of blamable morals which constitute the temporal gloom, and not that the physical health should be changed into weakness and debility.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 244.)

Looking after one's health is done with two intentions. Man may take good care of his body for the purpose of satisfying his personal wishes. Or, he may look after his health with the good intention of serving humanity and of living long enough to perform his duty toward mankind. The latter is most commendable.

A teacher should sleep at night with the thought that the next day he may be refreshed in order to do his duty more fully in relation to teaching his pupils. Therefore, Mrs. . . . must take good care of her health. Just look at Mr. . . . 's very good health—see how much work he can do, how much work he can stand! Whatever work is referred to him, he can discharge it fully. But remember that the essential health is spiritual health, for by means of spiritual health eternal life is obtained; whereas, through physical health only temporal results are achieved.

(Abdul-Baha: A Heavenly Feast, p. 11.)

If the health and well-being of the body be expended in the path of the Kingdom, this is very acceptable and praiseworthy; if it is expended for the benefit of the human world in general—even though it be for their material benefit and be a means of doing good—that is also acceptable. But if the health and welfare of man be spent in sensual desires, in a life on the animal plane and in devilish pursuits—then disease is better than such health; nay, death itself is preferable to such a life. If thou art desirous of health, wish thou health for serving the Kingdom, I hope that thou mayest attain a perfect insight, an inflexible resolution, complete health and spiritual and physical strength in order that thou mayest drink from the fountain of eternal life and be assisted by the spirit of divine confirmation.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 207.)

O thou who art supplicating unto God! I read thy precious letter and am informed of its contents, which show that thou art ill in body and weak, and indicates thine affection toward thy daughter who is in the age of youth.

I beseech God to ordain prosperity unto thee in this world, to confer favor upon thee in his supreme Kingdom, and to heal thee from the illness which has befallen thee for some hidden reason which no one knows save God. Verily, the will of God engages occasionally in some matter for which mankind is unable to find out the reason. The causes and reasons shall appear. Trust in God and confide in him, and resign thyself to the will of God. Verily, thy God is affectionate, compassionate and merciful. He will look at thee with the glances of the eye of mercifulness, will guard thee with the eye of bounty, and will cause his mercy to descend upon thee.

(Abdul-Baha.)

I hope, as you have received physical health, you will receive your spiritual health. As the body will be cured of physical diseases, in the same way the spirit will be cured of all spiritual diseases. A cure of physical disease is very easy, but the cure of spiritual disease is very difficult. If one has fever and you give him medicine, the fever will vanish; but if the spirit is afflicted with the disease of ignorance, it is difficult to remove that disease. For example, if the spiritual health is afflicted with the love of the world, spiritual medicine must be given. These medicines are the advices and commands of God, which will have effect upon it.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Mme. L'Astre, Acca, January 1905.)

For these thy prevailing diseases are not on account of sins, but they are to make thee detest this world and know that there is no rest and composure in this temporal life.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 185.)

O thou who art attracted to God! May God uphold thee. . . . ; he who is filled with the love of Baha,' and forgets all things, the Holy Spirit will be heard from his lips and the spirit of life will fill his heart, the lights of the sign will shine forth from his face, words will issue from his mouth in strands of pearls, and all sickness and disease will be healed by the laying on of the hands.

(Abdul-Baha.)

A friend interested in healing quoted the words of Baha'o'llah, "If one is sick, let him go to the greatest physician."

Abdul-Baha said: "There is but one power which heals,—that is God. The state or condition through which healing takes place is the condition of the heart. By some this state is reached through pills, powders, and physicians. By others through hygiene, fasting, and prayer. By others through direct perception."

On another occasion Abdul-Baha said, with regard to the same subject, "All that we see around us is the work of mind. It is mind in the herb and in the mineral that acts on the human body, and changes its condition."

(Abdul-Baha in London, p. 96.)

Turning the face toward God brings healing to the body, the mind and the soul. When this advancement toward God has become complete, one is able to overcome passion and desire, one becomes protected from sin and transgression and is delivered from heedlessness. This will bestow eternal life and will grant the imperishable gift.

(Abdul-Baha.)

"The healer of all thy troubles is the remembrance of Me; forget it not."

(Baha'o'llah: Hidden Words from the Persian, p. 36.)

PRAYERS FOR SPIRITUAL AND PHYSICAL HEALING.

O my God, thy name is my healing, thy remembrance is my remedy. Thy nearness is my hope, and thy love is my companion. Thy mercy is my need and my aid in this world and in the worlds to come. Verily, thou are the Giver, the All-knowing and the Wise!

(Baha'o'llah.)

O thou kind God! To me thou art kinder than myself, and thy love is more abundant and more ancient. Whenever I am reminded of thy bestowals I am made happy and hopeful. If I have been agitated I obtain ease of heart and soul. If I am sick, I gain eternal health. If I am disloyal, I become loyal. If I have been hopeless, I become hopeful. O thou Lord of the Kingdom! Cause thou the rejoicing of my heart; empower my weak spirit and strengthen my exhausted nerves. Illumine thou my eyes: suffer my ears to become hearing, so that I may hearken to the music of the Kingdom and attain to the joy and happiness everlasting. Verily, thou art the Generous, the Giver, and the Kind!

(Abdul-Baha.)

Is there any remover of difficulties save God? Say: No!—Praise be to God!—He is God! All are his servants and all are standing by his command.

(The Bab.)

CHAPTER IX.

Tests

TODAY, O Lord, deliver us from all temptations, tests and evil suggestions of those who have turned their faces from thee: Then, O thou merciful God, confirm us through thine invisible hosts, and reinforce us through thy heavenly angels.

O Lord! We are weak, poor, submissive and humble: Strengthen us, enrich us and uplift us above all earthly conditions. O thou God! As thou hast illumined our hearts with the light of knowing thee, make us firm in thy blessed Covenant. Verily, thou art the Clement, the Forgiver!

(Baha'o'llah: Hidden Words; p. 70.)

I am not impatient of calamities in God's way, nor of afflictions for his love and at his good pleasure. God hath made affliction as a morning shower to this green pasture and as a match for his lamp whereby earth and heaven are illumined.

(Baha'o'llah: Tablet to (Nassar-ud-Din) Shah of Persia.)

Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty: For he maketh sore, and bindeth up; he woundeth, and his hands make whole.

(Job 5:17, 18.)

As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

(Revelation 3:19.)

"O son of man! If calamity befall thee not in My path, how wilt thou tread in the way of those who are content in My will? If affliction overtake thee not in thy longing to meet Me, how canst thou attain the light of the love of My Beauty." (v. 51.)

"O son of man! My calamity is My providence. In appearance it is fire and vengeance; in reality it is light and mercy. Therefore approach it, that thou mayest become an eternal light and an immortal spirit. This is My command; know thou it." (v. 52.)

"O son of humanity! Rejoice not if fortune smile upon thee, and if humiliation overtake thee, mourn not because of it, for, in their time, they both shall cease and be no more." (v. 53.)

"O son of existence! If thou encounter poverty, grieve not; for, in time, the King of riches will descend to thee. Fear not humiliation, for glory shall be thy portion." (v. 54.)

"O son of existence! Be not engrossed with this world, for with fire We test the gold, and with gold We try the servants." (v. 56.)

(Baha'o'llah: Hidden Words from the Arabic, pp. 15-17.)

The more one is severed from the world, from desires, from human affairs and conditions, the more impervious does one become to the tests of God. Tests are a means by which a soul is measured as to its fitness, and proven out by its own acts. God knows its fitness beforehand, and also its unpreparedness, but man, with an ego, would not believe himself unfit unless proof were given him. Consequently his susceptibility to evil is proven to him when he falls into the tests, and the tests are continued until the soul realizes its own unfitness, then remorse and regret tend to root out the weakness. The same test comes again in greater degree, until it is shown that a former weakness has become a strength, and the power to overcome evil has been established.

My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasures; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

(Hebrews 12:5-13.)

Thou hast questioned concerning ordeals and difficulties and catastrophies: "Are these from God or the result of man's (own) evil deeds?"

Know thou that ordeals are of two kinds: One kind is for trial (to test the soul), and the other is punishment for actions. ("As a man soweth so shall he also reap.") That which is for testing is educational and developmental and that which is the punishment of deeds is severe retribution.

The father and the teacher sometimes humor the children and then again discipline them. This discipline is for educational purposes and is indeed to give them true happiness; it is absolute kindness and true providence. Although in appearance it is wrath yet in reality it is kindness. Although outwardly it is an ordeal yet inwardly it is purifying water.

Verily, in both cases we must supplicate and implore and commune to the divine Threshold in order to be patient in ordeals.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Portland, Oregon, believer; translated July 27, 1909.)

Our light affliction, which is for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.

(II Cor. 4:17.)

O ye friends of God! The joy and happiness of the people of faithfulness consist in serving the Threshold of the Most High and turning their faces to the Kingdom of Abha. The hope of the lovers is self-sacrificing and the yearning of the longing ones is self-effacement and evanescence. For love is an irresistible power and an inextinguishable conflagration and the mirror of the love of God is the great martyrdom. Therefore, the sanctified souls and the Manifestations of God yearned for self-abnegation and attainment to the city of martyrdom. They gave up their lives, experienced exile and banishment, endured persecution and dire calamities, became subject to imprisonment and bondage and the targets of the arrows of oppression and objects of the sword of malice. They did not complain; neither did they become disheartened. They drank the cup of martyrdom from the hand of the Cup-bearer of Providence and tasted with the greatest joy the sweetness of annihilation. They found not a moment of rest. They sought not an instant of tranquillity. They withstood the persecution of the enemies and became the centers of the derision and scoffing of the people of envy. They sacrificed their homes and property and became homeless and wanderers. They experienced not one hour of safety nor a day of repose of mind and body. This is the proof of the sincere lover and this is the evidence of the faithful friend. If it were not so every stranger would become a friend and the deprived one would become the confidant of the mysteries, the remote one would become the near one and the outcast would become the beloved. Consequently the most great wisdom has ordained that the fire of tests shall rage and the rushing torrent of ordeals sweep tumultuously from the mountain of revelation, so that the untruthful may become distinguished from the truthful, the unrighteous be known from the righteous, the worshipper of self be separated from the worshipper of God, the good fruit be set apart from the evil fruit, the signs of light be manifest and the gloom of darkness be dispelled, the nightingale of trustworthiness sing the melody of love and the raven of oppression croak the discordant notes of error, the fertile soil become green and verdant and the barren ground produce its thorns and thistles, the ones attracted to the breath of Abha become firm and the followers of passion and desire turn away. This is the wisdom of trials and this is the cause of ordeals.

(Abdul-Baha: Bahai News; No. 3, pp. 2, 3.)

Thy detailed letter was received. Its perusal produced the utmost happiness for it revealed the fact that thou hast attained to the knowledge of the reality of tests; namely, that tests endured in the path of God are conducive to confirmation, nay, rather, they are heavenly powers and the bounties of the realm of Might. But to the weak believers tests are trials and examination, for, on account of the weakness of their faith and assurance they fall into difficulties and vicissitudes. However, to those souls who are firm and steadfast, tests are the greatest favors.

Consider thou that at the time of an examination in sciences and arts, the dull and lazy pupil finds himself in calamity. But to the intelligent and sagacious student, examination in learning produces honor and infinite happiness. Alloyed gold subjected to the fire portrays its baseness. While the intensity of the flame enhances the beauty of the (pure) gold. Therefore, tests to the weak souls are calamity and to the veiled ones the cause of their disgrace and humiliation.

The point is this, that in the path of Truth every difficulty is made plain and every trial is a matchless bounty.

Therefore, the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful must not relax during trials, and no disaster must deter their service in the Cause of God.

(Abdul-Baha: Daily Lessons; pp. 85, 86.)

That soul is alone who is negligent of God. But if he knows God, although he may live in an interminable desert without water and vegetation yet he is not alone,—God is with him. The sky of this terrestrial globe is always obscure and misty and covered with black, inky clouds. Now the thunder rolls and anon the lightning flashes. Now the hail falls and again the snow descends. Now there is a wild hurricane and then a tempestuous torrent rushing down from the mountain side. Therefore, do not think for one moment that these trials and ordeals are confined to thee. In reality all the people are surrounded with sufferings so that they may not attach their hearts to the world, but will seek for composure and rest in the divine world and beg for the bestowal of the Kingdom. Consequently be thou glad from the bottom of thy heart and be rejoiced through the divine glad tidings.

(Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 20, 1914.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

"This is the conduct and manners of the people of Baha'."

Words of Abdul-Baha: Compiled from the Tablets of Abdul-Baha, pages indicated.

O YE sanctified souls! It is the time of firmness and steadfastness and the period of arising in the service of the Word of God, for the Blessed City (Acca) is environed from all directions with the tempestuous waves of tests and trials and the sweeping hurricanes of persecutions and hardships are blowing and roaring high. The joy and happiness of the heart of Abdul-Baha depends upon the stability and constancy of the believers. For they must live and act in accord with the divine advices and exhortations and show forth to each other the power of the perfection of love with infinite accord and unity, so that they may become the embodiment of one existence, the waves of one sea, the myrtles of one rose-garden, the rays of one sun, the stars of one horizon, the fruits of one tree and the birds of one meadow.

Likewise, they must treat with and behave toward all the governments, nations, communities, kings and subjects with the utmost sincerity, trustworthiness, straightforwardness, love and kindness. Even they must make hopeful a bloodthirsty enemy, show sympathy with the utmost faithfulness and honor to the perfidious unjust, know the ill-wisher as the well-wisher and torment not the sinner with reproaches. Should they become the targets of a thousand arrows of persecution, they must challenge it with love and friendship and treat every one with purity of purpose and kindness.

O ye friends of God! Show ye an endeavor that all the nations and communities of the world, even the enemies, put their trust, assurance and hope in you; that if a person falls into errors for a hundred-thousand times he may yet turn his face to you, hopeful that you will forgive his sins; for he must not become hopeless, neither grieved nor despondent. This is the conduct and the manners of the people of Baha'. This is the foundation of the most high pathway! Ye should conform your conduct and manners with the advices of Abdul-Baha. (pp. 435, 436.)

If any one of you enters a city he must become the center of attraction because of the sincerity, faithfulness, love, honesty, fidelity, truthfulness and loving-kindness of his disposition and nature toward all the inhabitants of the world, that the people of the city may all cry out: "This person is unquestionably a Bahai; for his manners, his behavior, his conduct, his morals, his nature and his disposition are of the attributes of the Bahais." Until you do attain to this station, you have not fulfilled the Covenant and the Testament of God. For according to the irrefutable texts, he has taken from us a firm covenant that we may live and act in accord with the divine exhortations, commands and lordly teachings. (p. 42.)

Arise with every power to assist the Covenant of God and serve in his vineyard. Be confident that a confirmation will be granted unto you and a success on his part is given unto you. Verily, he shall support you by the angels of his holiness and reinforce you with the breaths of the spirit that ye may enter the Ark of Safety, set forth the evident signs, impart the spirit of life, declare the essence of his commands and precepts, guide the sheep who are straying from the fold in all directions, and give the blessings. Ye have to use every effort in your power and strive earnestly and wisely in this new century. By God, verily the Lord of Hosts is your support, the angels of heaven your assistance, the Holy Spirit your companion and the Center of the Covenant your helper. Be not idle, but active and fear not. . . . Ye are now in a great station and noble rank and ye shall find yourselves in evident success and prosperity, the like of which the eye of existence never saw in former ages. El-Baha and salutations be upon every one who is firm in the Covenant, free from dissension, sanctified from deceits and steadfast in the path. (p. 162.)

Habits of Prayer in the Orient

From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 3, 1913.

HERE in the East everybody arises very early so that between five and six o'clock we are all out of our beds with the words, "Allah-o-Abha," on our lips, greeting each other. There are four customs that have impressed me deeply and are significant signs of the religious nature of these people.

First: Their uniform early rising. Although in the West it is taught, "Early to bed and early to rise," it is seldom practiced.

Second: No sooner do they open their eyes than the holy name of God is upon their lips, thanking him for all his past graces and future bestowals.

Third: Their quiet, solitary prayer and concentration lasting from ten to thirty minutes according to the religious spirit of the individual.

Fourth: As soon as they have finished their individual prayer and before taking their breakfast they assemble in the reception room and pray to God, read communions or chant tablets. They will then, refreshed by the spiritual food, gather around the table to partake of the material breakfast.

Tests

AS TO trials (tests in the path of God), verily, they are necessary. Hast thou not heard and read how there appeared trials from God in the day of Jesus, and thereafter, and how the whirlwind of tests became severe? Even the glorious Peter was not rescued from the flame of trials, and wavered. Then he repented and mourned the mourning of a bereaved one and his lamentations raised unto the Supreme Concourse. Is it, then, possible to be saved from the trials of God? No, verily. There is a great wisdom therein of which no one is aware save the wise and knowing. Were it not for tests, genuine gold could not be distinguished from the counterfeit. Were it not for tests, the courageous could not be known from the coward. Were it not for tests, the people of faithfulness could not be known from those of selfishness. Were it not for tests, the intellects and faculties of the scholars in the great colleges would not be developed. Were it not for tests, the sparkling gems could not be known from worthless pebbles. Were it not for tests, the fisherman could not be distinguished from Annas and Caiaphas who were amid glory (worldly dignity).

Were it not for tests the face of Mary, the Magdalene, would not glisten with the light of firmness and certainty unto all the horizons. These are some of the mysteries of tests which we have unfolded unto thee that thou mayest become cognizant of the mysteries of God in every cycle. Verily, I pray God to illumine the faces as pure gold in the fire of tests.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to an American believer, December 23, 1902.)

Verily, I read thy latest letter, and my great love welled forth unto thee on account of its wonderful contents. Verily, it showed thy firmness in the Cause of God and that thou wilt resist great tests in the future. . . .

As to thee, make firm the footsteps of the believers of God on this right path, and say, verily, the test has a great power and when its storms wax fierce they uproot everything, even large and well-rooted trees and they wreck great ships on the ocean.

But whosoever among the maid-servants of God firmly resists a great test, her face shall gleam and her brow shall glitter in the Supreme Concourse. This is what we inform thee, so that when the test appears thou mayest be heedful thereof, and mayst remind the maidservants of God that the tests have also occurred in former dispensations, even at the time of Christ.

Christ said, "Fast, so that you may not fall into temptation." Verily, tests withheld a great apostle (Judas) from the mercy of God and made him take part in the shedding of the blood of Jesus. Tests made Peter, the apostle, deny Jesus Christ. Tests made the brothers of Jesus deny him. Many a just, faithful and assured soul did not endure the power of tests but turned backward, until they reached the lowest of the low.

(Abdul-Baha: Daily Lessons; pp.97, 98.)

Be thou resolute and steadfast. When the tree is firmly rooted it will bear fruit, therefore it is not permitted to be agitated by any test. Be thou not disheartened! Be thou not discouraged! The trials of God are many, but if man remains firm and steadfast the test itself is a stepping-stone for the progress of humanity.

(Abdul-Baha.)

The rain does not stop. I have been intending every day to go up the mountain, but I have been detained on account of the rain. This is the rainy season. If the rain does not pour down, if the wind does not blow, if the storm and tempest do not rage, the soul-refreshing springtime will not appear. If the clouds do not weep the meadows will not laugh. The hurricane and tornado, the cyclone and the blast are the harbingers of the spring.

Likewise, were there no tests and trials, no hardships and afflictions the attraction of the hearts could not be realized, the spiritual fragrances could not be obtained, nor could merciful happiness be acquired and the beauties of the celestial springtime would not have been disclosed.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!
(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS,

Vol. VIII

No. 19

If thy daily living become difficult, soon thy Lord will bestow upon thee that which shall satisfy thee. Be patient in the time of affliction and trial, endure every difficulty and hardship with a dilated heart, attracted spirit and eloquent tongue in remembrance of the Merciful. Verily, this is the life of satisfaction, of spiritual existence, heavenly repose, divine benediction and of the celestial table. Soon thy Lord will extenuate thy straightened circumstances even in this world.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; p. 98.)

Thou hast manifested joy at the freedom of Abdul-Baha. This happiness came from thy great love. There is no doubt that the friends have become joyful on account of the liberation of Abdul-Baha. But I was thankful for this prison in the path of God and the lack of liberty was very pleasing to me, for those days were passed in the path of the love of God with the utmost difficulty and trials, bearing fruits and results. Unless one accept suffering, undergo trials and endure vicissitudes he will reap no reward nor will he attain success and prosperity. Therefore, thou must likewise endure great tests so that the infinite divine outpourings may encircle thee and that thou mayest be assisted in spreading the fragrances of God. Behold the apostles of His Highness, Christ! They accepted all trials and persecutions and received all kinds of oppression and trouble until they became assisted by great bestowals and confirmed in the guidance of the people.

(Abdul-Baha: From a Tablet.)

My happiness was complete in those dark days of imprisonment and vicissitude. I was happier than now, because I had no will of my own. I was perfectly resigned. The life of this world is only a few days. Whether happy or unhappy, in freedom or in bonds, healthy or ill, in comfort or in poverty,—they will pass away. The one who is established on the throne and the one sitting on the mat—both will cease to exist here.

(Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, April 1, 1914.)

It is difficult for the weak ones to endure the tests but for souls like you, it is very easy. It is my hope that during the time of tests thou mayest remain in the utmost firmness and steadfastness, so that like unto a lamp thou mayest be protected within the glass, and be not extinguished by the blowing of winds.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to an American believer; translated August 4, 1911.)

The higher our station is, the nearer we are to God and the more severe do our tests become; when we have received great blessings, we are apt to become self-confident and think that we are secure from falling, and then is our danger great.

(Abdul-Baha: Notes of Miss E. J. Rosenberg, Acca, 1901.)

Rest assured in the protection of God. He will preserve his own children under all circumstances. Be ye not afraid nor be ye agitated. He holds the scepter of power in his hand, and like unto a hen he gathereth his chickens under his wings. "To everything there is a season, and a time for every purpose under the sun. A time to be born, and a time to die, a time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to keep silent and a time to speak." Now, friends, this is the time of assurance and faith and not fear and dread.

These people who called on us today were in a state of fright. They are expecting daily the bombardment of Haifa by the foreign warships. As soon as they see a little moving speck in the horizon of the sea, they look through their glasses, anxiously scanning to see whether these are the expected cruisers. Their hearts are in a state of anxiety. They are terror-stricken. They have no peace of mind. This is one of the signs of absence of faith. It is stated in the Koran: "They imagine every cry raised is an enemy unto them." For example, when a thief enters a house, the least noise causes his flight. He trembles and quakes.

But the hearts of the people of faith are assured. If they are surrounded by a thousand enemies they stand firm on their ground. The greatest divine bounty is a confident heart. When the heart is confident, all the trials of the world will be as child's play. Should they throw him into prison, should they cast him into a black well, should they heap upon him all manner of afflictions, still his heart is content, peaceful and assured.

(Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, October 18, 1914.)

To enter the Kingdom is easy, but to remain firm and constant is difficult. The planting of trees is easy but their cultivation and training to strengthen their roots and to make them firm is difficult. Now, as thou art a firm tree, thou shalt certainly grow and send out branches, leaves and blossoms and bear fruits. These branches, leaves, blossoms and fruits are the souls who may be guided, through the providence of God, by thee.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 105.)

Man must seek to gain the acceptance of God and not that of the different classes of men. If one is praised and chosen by God, the accusation of all the creatures will cause no loss to him; and if a man is not accepted at the Threshold of God the praise and admiration of all men will be of no use to him.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; p. 158.)

Thou hast written concerning the tests that have come upon thee. To the sincere ones, tests are as a gift from God, the Exalted, for a heroic person hasteneth, with the utmost joy and gladness, to the tests of a violent battlefield, but the coward is afraid and trembles and utters moaning and lamentation. Likewise, an expert student prepareth and memorizeth his lessons and exercises with the utmost effort, and in the day of examination he appeareth with infinite joy before the master. Likewise the pure gold shineth radiantly in the fire of test.

Consequently, it is made clear that for holy souls, trials are as the gift of God, the Exalted; but for weak souls they are an unexpected calamity. This test is just as thou hast written: it removeth the rust of egotism from the mirror of the heart until the Sun of Truth may shine therein. For, no veil is greater than egotism and no matter how thin that covering may be, yet it will finally veil man entirely and prevent him from receiving a portion of the eternal bounty.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha; p. 722.)

Be not sorrowful on account of the affliction of Abdul-Baha, for calamity is a light whereby his face glistens among the Supreme Concourse; affliction is healing to his breast, joy to his heart, happiness to his soul; nay, rather, a most honored garment upon his temple, best gown upon his body, and dearest crown on his head. This is his utmost desire.

Ye have expressed words of solicitude and anxiety over the troubles and persecutions which have fallen upon this imprisoned one. Do not be at all sad, be ye not affected. Do not worry, for incarceration to this prisoner is a feast of bliss and a perpetual paradise. Persecutions and adversities are the merciful gifts. If these persecutions and sufferings did not exist in the path of God, how could Abdul-Baha obtain happiness and peace? Through the appearance of tests, my heart is consoled, and through the experiencing of dire afflictions my soul is calmed.

(Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to Oakland Assembly; translated July 17, 1908.)

Haji Kamaledin was one of God's own servants, severed from aught else

save him, enkindled, trusting in God and free from every tie. Before accepting this Cause, he was much respected and honored in Narag. When he embraced this Cause, they pursued him with such dogged perseverance and enmity that he was finally obliged to leave his native land and come to Bagdad. Having arrived, he found himself in most difficult circumstances, and in great need of his daily bread. Being a man of letters, he had never essayed any work; but putting aside his pride, he opened—with a small capital given to him—a little grocery shop at the entrance to the curious boat-shaped bridge of the Euphrates, where multitudes of people cross and recross daily. Not for one moment did he think of his noble connections nor brood over his former position of leisure, ease and worldly honor. He never bothered his mind over what his many countrymen might think who passed yearly by his store to visit the Holy Shrine of the Imams in Najaf and Karbala; nay, rather, he sat there serene and with the happiness of the Kingdom and the joy of heaven in his heart. The spiritual station of that household will become evident in the future. Whenever he would hear that the Blessed Perfection had gone to Kazemain, although the distance was several miles and the weather hot, he would immediately shut his store and start for that town afoot. Although at that time one could hire a donkey for five cents yet he could not very well afford this lavish expenditure. Nevertheless you never saw him cross or bad-tempered. He was a source of delight and happiness to all. Such souls are the bright gems in the crown of existence.

Grieve not at the divine trials. Be not troubled because of hardships and ordeals; turn unto God, bowing in humbleness and praying to him, while bearing every ordeal, contented under all conditions and thankful in every difficulty. Verily, thy Lord loveth his maid-servants who are patient, believing and firm. He draws them nigh to him through these ordeals and trials.

Be not sorrowful on account of the departure of thy good son. He hath indeed departed from this narrow and gloomy world which is darkened by unlimited sorrow, unto the Kingdom which is spacious, illumined, joyous and beautiful. God delivered him from this dark well and promoted him unto the Supreme Height! He gave him wings whereby he soared to the heaven of happiness. Verily, this is the great mercy from him who is precious and forgiving.

We are living in a day when so many people rely wholly or solely upon matter. They imagine that the size of a great ship, that the perfection of the machinery or the skill of a captain will ensure the safety of a vessel. These things (referring to the recent sinking of the magnificent steamship, the Titanic, through the collision with an iceberg) take place sometimes that men may know that there is a Protector and that is God. If God protects man, if it be his will, a little ship sometimes escapes death, but if he shall rely solely on a ship, though it be the greatest, biggest ship, though it may be well built, though the captain be the best captain, yet in a danger such as was present on the ocean it may not survive or escape, so that the people of the world may know that they must turn to the One who is the Protector. So that souls may rely upon the preservation of God and that they may know that he is the real Keeper. These events do sometimes occur for such reasons as those stated. They take place in order that man's faith may increase. . . .

But let no one imagine that these words should lead men to think that they must not be thorough in their undertakings. God has endowed man with intelligence, so that he may use his intelligence. Therefore, he must supply himself with all that science can offer. He must be most deliberate and most careful. He must be ever thorough in his undertakings. He must build a thing well, build the best ship that his ingenuity can lead him to, and employ the most skilled captain, but with all that let him rely upon God. Let him consider God as the One Keeper.

"I have heard thy cries and am conscious of thy tears. Remember at all times and in all places that God is faithful and do not doubt this. Be patient even though great calamities may come upon thee. Yet fear not! Be firm in the path of thy Lord; as a mountain unmoved, unchanging in thy steadfastness."

These words were written by Baha'ollah to Mirza Haider Ali to strengthen him during great persecutions. In his early days Mirza Haider Ali traveled from city to city in Persia proclaiming with great wisdom and love the glad tidings of the new and divine day which was dawning upon the earth. But the fanatical religious leaders to whom the vision of universal brotherhood and peace was too bright to be endured soon persecuted him with terrible bitterness. At one time he was beaten and driven through the streets of a city by a wild and howling mob. During this experience he cried out, "This is my triumphal procession." Again he was transported from one prison to another in a very cruel fashion. His hands and feet were tied and he was put in a bag, head downward, and flung across the back of a donkey. Another Bahai was put in a bag on the donkey's other side. The head of each of the prisoners dragged on the sand as the donkey was driven the long journey over the desert. Mirza Haider Ali sang gaily as they went along. The guard whipped him unmercifully, saying, "Now, will you sing?" Mirza Haider Ali replied, "I will sing more gladly than ever because you have given me the pleasure of enduring something for the sake of God."

For twelve years Mirza Haider Ali was a prisoner in Khartoum, Egypt. The dungeon-room in which he was confined had a tiny window through which the sun shone but one hour a day. For one precious hour every day Mirza Haider Ali read with glowing heart the Tablets of Baha'o'llah. The rest of the day he was in the twilight. But he concentrated his spirit upon the glory of God so perfectly that each day he grew more saintly.

When, in later years, he was asked by Miss Stevens why the Bahais all looked so happy (she was thinking especially of the radiant joy in his face), he replied, "Sometimes we have surface troubles, but that cannot touch our happiness. The hearts of those who belong to the Kingdom are like the sea. When the wind is rough it troubles the surface of the water; but two meters down there is perfect calmness."

(Fortnightly Review, June 1911.)

Mrs. Lua Getsinger was one day in Acca. A western woman was there also and she was telling Abdul-Baha all about her troubles. This was a strange thing to do for usually people when they enter the presence of Abdul-Baha are so filled with the contagion of his radiant love that they think only of their blessings. Abdul-Baha with great kindness listened for a half hour to the western woman's troubles; they were really not very big troubles. At last he arose, and said he had another engagement and must be going. "But there," he said, pointing out of the window, "goes a man whom I will bring in to see you. His name is Mirza Haider Ali. We call him the 'Angel of Mount Carmel.' He walks on earth but he lives in heaven. He has had many troubles and he will tell you about them." Abdul-Baha went out, but quickly returned with Mirza Haider Ali whom he presented to the woman, and then departed.

The "Angel of Mount Carmel" with great humility and sweetness of manner began to talk with the woman of the luminous century in which we live and the divine age that is to be. She listened for a while, impatiently, and at last broke in with, "But Abdul-Baha said you would tell me about your troubles." Mirza Haider Ali looked up in amazement.

"Troubles?" he replied, "why madam, I never had any troubles. I don't know what troubles are."

O ye beloved of God! When the winds blow severely, rains fall fiercely, the lightning flashes, the thunder roars, the bolts descend and storms of trial become severe, grieve not; for after this storm, verily, the divine spring will arrive, the hills and fields will become verdant, the expanses of grain will joyfully wave, the earth will become covered with blossoms, the trees will be clothed with green garments and adorned with blossoms and fruits. Thus blessings become manifest in all countries. These favors are results of those storms and hurricanes.

The discerning man rejoiceth at the day of trials, his breast becometh dilated at the time of severe storms, his eyes become brightened when seeing the showers of rain and gusts of wind whereby trees are uprooted; because he foreseeth the result and the end,—the leaves, blossoms and fruits; while the ignorant person becometh troubled when he seeth a storm, is saddened when it raineth severely, is terrified by the thunder and trembleth at the surging of the waves which storm the shore.

STAR OF THE WEST

O ye children of the Kingdom!

IT is New Year; that is to say, the rounding of the cycle of the year. A year is the expression of a cycle (of the sun); but now is the beginning of a cycle of Realty, a New Cycle, a New Age, a New Century, a New Time and a New Year. Therefore, it is very blessed.

I wish this blessing to appear and become manifest in the faces and characteristics of the believers, so that they, too, may become a new people, and having found new life and been baptized with fire and spirit, may make the world a new world, to the end that the old earth may disappear and the new earth appear; old ideas depart and new thoughts come; old garments be cast aside and new garments put on; ancient politics whose foundation is war be discarded and modern politics founded on peace raise the standard of victory; the new star shine and gleam and the new sun illumine and radiate; new flowers bloom; the new spring become known; the new breeze blow; the new bounty descend; the new tree give forth new fruit; the new voice become raised and this new sound reach the ears, that the new may follow the new, and all the old furnishings and adornments be cast aside and new decorations put in their places.

I desire for you all that you may have this great assistance and partake of this great bounty, and that in spirit and heart you may strive and endeavor until the world of war become the world of peace; the world of darkness the world of light; satanic conduct be turned into heavenly behavior; the ruined places become built up; the sword be turned into the olive branch; the flash of hatred become the flame of the love of God and the noise of the gun the voice of the Kingdom; the soldiers of death the soldiers of life; all the nations of the world one nation; all races as one race; and all national anthems harmonized into one melody.

Then this material realm will be paradise, the earth heaven, and the world of satan become the world of angels.

ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Bahai Movement

BY JEAN MASSON

HISTORICALLY, the Bahai Movement is the most dramatic movement of the age. Spiritually, it is the most dynamic. It compels attention as the effective, permanent solution—the only solution—of the horrific problems with which the world grapples in its hour of unspeakable tragedy. It is the movement that makes for internationalism, universal peace, social re-organization.

Three figures, brilliant, impressive, stand forth in the movement, against the dark background of the world: The Bab, Baha'o'llah, Abdul-Baha*.

In 1844, the Bab proclaimed the coming of the Universal Teacher of men. For his courage and his unconquerable faith he was martyred in 1850.

Baha'o'llah we recognize as he whose coming the Bab heralded; as he anticipated by all the prophetic books; as the revelator of a Message, powerful enough to penetrate every country in the world; so sublimely universal in its concept as to include all nations, all races—all humanity.

Abdul-Baha is the interpreter for the world of the Message of Baha'o'llah—the "Center of His Covenant," the "Greatest Branch."

A hostile world greeted the Message of Baha'o'llah. For forty years, from 1852 until his death, in 1892, he dwelt in exile and, finally, imprisonment, in the Turkish penal colony of Acca, Syria.

A proclamation of human liberty and justice and internationalism seemed, to the nineteenth century, visionary, fanatical, seditious, revolutionary. Today, by countless multitudes, Baha'o'llah is acclaimed, around whom is evolving—is revolving—a new dispensation, a new cycle, a new order of civic righteousness, a new world, glorified through love.

And the Message of Baha'o'llah?

Baha'o'llah taught the actual oneness of the religions of the world; the oneness of all humanity; the universal brotherhood of man, universal peace; the perfect harmony of religion and science. He enjoined men to search diligently for truth and to abolish all prejudices, religious, national, racial, social. He proclaimed the equality of the sexes, commanding equal educational advantages for both, besides vast equitable social readjustments, the equalization of the means of livelihood, and the complete establishment of justice among men. Also,

*The Bab, Arabic for the Gate or Door.

Baha'o'llah, Arabic for the Glory of God.

Abdul-Baha, Arabic for the Servant of Baha.

he proclaimed the urgency of a universal language to bring men into closer fellowship and mutual understanding. He emphasized the incumbency of a Parliament of Man—a universal tribunal of justice or arbitration for the adjustment of international affairs. And, unequivocally, he taught the power of the Holy Spirit in the life of humanity.

Here we have the basic principles of the Revelation of Baha'o'llah, the substructure of an edifice of marvelous beauty and perfection—the embodiment of the great new world civilization.

“The essence of the teachings of His Holiness, Baha'o'llah, is universal love, which comprehendeth all the virtues of the world of humanity, is the cause of eternal life and of the progress of all the individuals of the human race.”*

For the promulgation of such exalted sentiments, Baha'o'llah was officially condemned, officially persecuted. It is a bewildering world that stones its prophets, crucifies its saviors.

Now, the essential feature of the Bahai Revelation is what is known among Bahais as the “Most Great Characteristic”—the station of Abdul-Baha, the leader of the movement today, the “Center of the Covenant” of Baha'o'llah, to whom all Bahais, the world over, turn for inspiration, for guidance and instruction. For he alone is the interpreter of the great Message.

“Behold the man whose name is The Branch!”†

Abdul-Baha was born in 1844 on the day of the Bab's proclamation. At the age of eight he accompanied his father into exile. In 1908, at the age of sixty-four, he emerged from prison, white-haired, bearing the eloquent traces of the long years of persecution.

Where, in all history, in all literature, will you find such a record of faith, yes, of divinity, as the record of the lives of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha?

Great souls, so intellectually endowed, they might have held high governmental positions, yet they chose the path of complete deprivation and renunciation. Travellers were they in the “White Path and the Red Support.”‡

The Bahai Movement, supremely exemplified by the transcendent lives of its great leaders, signifies the practical application of the Christ teachings in conformity with the requirements of the times.

And, today, despite the human carnage, perhaps, because of it, the Movement goes forward, a mighty undercurrent in the affairs of men, which nothing can resist. For “it is the spirit of the age.”

In every country in the world are Bahais, who believe implicitly in the divine mission of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha and the creative power of their utterances to transform the hearts.

America has many working assemblies for the propagation of the Movement. Near Chicago will be erected the first universal Temple of Worship of the occident, the Mashrak-el-Azkar, under the great dome of which shall come together, in worship of the one God, all nations and all races.

The Bahai Movement is creative of universal love, of universal peace.

“Baha’o’llah is the Promised One expected by all nations”

A COMPILATION BY MRS. MARY M. RABB

From the Words of Baha’o’llah and Abdul-Baha in Books and Tablets indicated.

THE promised one of all the nations of the world has become apparent and manifest. Each community and religion expects the coming of their promised one, and his highness, Baha’o’llah, is the promised one of all. Therefore, the Cause of Baha’o’llah is conducive to harmony, raises the canopy of the oneness of the kingdom of humanity upon the apex of the contingent beings, and unfurls the ensign of universal brotherhood and ideal commonwealth upon the summit of the hills and mountains.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for an American Bahai; translated by Mirza Sohrab, December 14, 1908).

Praise be to God, he hath appeared with a luminous countenance. Verily, the promised one is his highness, Baha’o’llah, who hath dawned from the eastern horizons like unto a glorious sun and hath diffused the rays of the most great guidance (i. e., the heavenly teachings), in all the countries of the world.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet to Los Angeles assembly of Bahais; translated July 10, 1913.)

All the prophets, during their appearance, announced to the people the coming of another prophet and recorded a sign for the subsequent manifestation, as stated in the books.

(Words of Baha’o’llah: Book of Ighan, p. 9.)

Regarding the appearance of Christ, there were many prophecies in the Bible which foretold his coming. . . . The teachings of Moses were like a seed, but when the seed grew into a plant and bore blossom, then fruit—the fruit signified Christ, who was the result of all the teachings of Moses. . . . As to the Manifestation (Baha’o’llah) all the religious books in the world bear witness to him. The Magis have resisted the Mohammedans for nearly 1400 years, refusing to accept Mohammedanism, and suffered great persecutions. They accept and believe in the Manifestation (Baha’o’llah), because of the prophecies of their books. The Jews would not accept Christ, but, because they see their Bible prophecies literally fulfilled, they are becoming believers in great numbers. All of the Koran bears witness to the coming of God. It is said: “O people, you will meet God in the flesh; you will visit him.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Sarah Herron, 1900).

O thou who art looking for the Kingdom of God! Thy letter was considered. Glad tidings be unto thee for thy supreme wish became manifest in the assemblage of the world. The spacious Kingdom was newly adorned, and like unto paradise, manifested beautiful scenes. The King of the Kingdom established his canopy in the center of the universe. The Sun of Truth dawned and the light of God appeared. The banner of holiness was lifted up and the Holy Spirit began its work of confirming. The fragrance of God emanated and his divine Spirit conferred life. Turn absolutely to that Kingdom, and thou wilt see, at every moment, new manifestations.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet to American believer, dated February 12, 1904).

All nations were promised by a sure promise and were awaiting with anxiety and longing the coming of the promised one.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet to American believer, dated June 9, 1903.)

The Lord of the day of the manifestation is his highness, Baha'o'llah.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet, dated July 20, 1911.)

What is meant in the prophecies by the Lord of hosts, the promised Christ, is the Blessed Perfection (Baha'o'llah) and his highness, the Supreme (Bab).

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet revealed for New York Assembly of Bahais; translated by Mirza Sohrab, January 1, 1907.)

The Cause of Baha'o'llah is in fulfillment of all the prophecies in all the books of the religions of the world.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, July 13, 1914.)

“What art thou reading?” “A lecture on the coming world teacher, by Mrs. Besant.” “The great world teacher has already come,” Abdul-Baha said.

(From Diary of Mirza Sohrab, dated July 26, 1914.)

The “One who is to come” is he who was promised in the books of God and his epistles; that is, this Manifestation.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Tablet dated March 13, 1903.)

The Manifestation (Baha'o'llah) had all the qualities of the Sun of Truth manifested in him. All of the learned and wise men confessed that the teachings of the Manifestation were complete and perfect. The glory of the Manifestation was acknowledged by people of all nations of the earth, but they did not believe in his divinity. People of all nations composed poetry in praise of the Manifestation. The explanations of the Manifestation were all revelations, and there is not a single learned man on the earth who can produce the like of them. During fifty years the Manifestation withstood all nations of the earth. Though all nations were against him and contradicted him, they were always submissive and humble before him. As the miracles and the extraordinary signs of the Manifestation will not be proof for the centuries to come after this, we have not mentioned them. The miracles are only proof for those who are present, not for those who are to come, for the idolators have also recorded miracles, on the part of their gods, in their books.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Herron, 1900.)

The Zoroastrians, who were very numerous throughout Persia, notwithstanding all the calamities and sufferings inflicted upon them by the Mohammedans, would not accept the teachings of Mohammed, but they say that their books plainly indicate the coming of the Manifestation in this time and many of them have accepted this religion because of this fact. . . . All the Old Testament prophecies foretold the coming of Christ. The Gospel of Christ shadowed forth the coming of the Manifestation (Baha'o'llah). There is a sect in Persia of the Parsee faith, who would not read the Koran or the Bible, but who have now organized an assembly under the laws of the British and Persian governments, and day before yesterday (December 3, 1900) Abdul-Baha received a letter from the chief acknowledging Baha'o'llah to be the divine Manifestation of God.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Sarah Herron, 1900.)

Let us consider the prophecies announcing the coming of God or the Manifestation: The coming of the Kingdom of God is foretold in all the holy books, and these sayings are not confined to a small number, but the books are full of them—especially Daniel and Isaiah. It is plainly stated in the Bible that, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." This refers to the Manifestation. Christians have always believed that this refers to the Holy Spirit. How can this be? The Holy Spirit (Christ) was already in the world. He came in Jesus when he was born. . . . The Koran says, "There is a day in which the Lord shall come." and again, "Know ye that ye shall meet him." . . . The prophecies in the books of Zoroaster plainly foretold the coming of the Bab and the Manifestation.

There are no prophecies to foretell the coming of Moses, but for the coming of Jesus we find them, and in the Bible the coming of Mohammed was mentioned in the Gospels as the Advocate; but regarding the coming of the Bab and the Manifestation, all the religious Books foretell of them—the Bible, the Gospels, the Koran, the holy traditions of Ali, and the Zoroastrian writings; all are quite plain on this point. No one can contradict them.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From notes of Mrs. Herron, 1900.)

The world of humanity has ever been in a state of anticipation of the coming of the divine Manifestations. Each religion expected the coming of a promised one. They longingly prayed for the dawn of the Sun of Reality. A thousand times alas, when he appeared they remained heedless and did not turn their faces toward him! Pitiful indeed is this condition. They were praying for the glorious dawn of the Sun of Reality, but when it appeared from the eastern horizon they exclaimed: "Where is the sun? We do not see it." For instance, the Israelitish nation expected the coming of a Messiah. . . . They were hoping for the arrival of their promised one, but when his holiness, Christ, appeared they turned away from him. . . .

This century is the century of the Sun of Reality. This century is the century of the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon the earth.

But now after the lapse of many centuries, his highness, the Almighty, has again looked upon them with the glance of mercifulness, and the cup-bearer of celestial bestowals became manifest in the land of Persia. The Sun of Reality shone forth, casting the effulgences of his graces upon that country. He proclaimed the heavenly teachings and instituted the religion of the clement Lord. . . .

But alas, alas! still the majority of the inhabitants of Persia are in sound sleep and have not heard, neither are they informed of the most eminent bestowal. The owner of the house has come to the door, but the dwellers in the house have shut the door and do not desire to let him in. They have treated the friend as though he were the stranger, and the known as though he were unknown. They seem to say: "We are satisfied with this degradation. We are comfortable amidst all these distractions, dissipations, groveling in dirt and uncleanness. We do not want the owner of the house. We are not seeking his faith. We loathe him and are holding aloof from his favor and grace. This is not the kind Father but a foreigner. Even though he may be the beloved one of all the nations of the world, his renown world-conquering, the fame of his grandeur reaching the ears of the rich and poor alike, others from different

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

The Feast of Naurooz (New Day)

Talk by Abdul-Baha on the Feast of Naurooz, March 21st, 1912, at Victoria Hotel, Alexandria, Egypt. Eighty-five believers were then eating dinner at his table.

ACCORDING to the ancient customs every one of the nations have general holidays when all the people become happy and enjoy themselves. That is, they choose the day of the year wherein a great event or a glorious matter occurred. On that day, they manifest great joy and happiness. They visit one another. If there are any feelings of bitterness among them they become reconciled on that day, hard hearted feelings pass away and they unite and love each other. As great events occurred on the day of Naurooz for the Persians, therefore, that nation made it a national feast and considered it as a holiday.

This is indeed a blessed day because it is the beginning of the temperate season and the commencement of springtime in the northern hemisphere. All earthly things whether trees, animals or human become refreshed; they receive power from the life-giving breeze and obtain a new life; a resurrection takes place, and because it is the season of springtime there is a general marvelous activity in all contingent beings.

There was a time when the Persian dynasty became extinct and no trace remained thereof. On such a day (Naurooz) it became renewed. Jamshedd ascended the throne.* Persia became happily settled. Its power, which had been dissipated, once more returned. The hearts and souls became possessed with wonderful susceptibilities, to such a degree that Persia became more advanced than it was in former days, under the sovereignty of Kayomrth and Hoshang. The glory and greatness of the government and nation of Persia took a higher station. Likewise, a great many events occurred upon the day of Naurooz that brought honor and glory to Persia and to the Persians. Therefore, the Persian nation, for the last five or six thousand years, has always considered the Feast of Naurooz as a day of national happiness and until now it is sanctified and recognized as a blessed day.

Briefly, every nation has a day known as a holiday which they celebrate with joy. In the sacred laws of God, in every cycle and dispensation, there are blessed feasts, holidays and workless days. On such days all kinds of occupations, commerce, industry, agriculture etc., are not allowed. Every work is unlawful. All must enjoy a good time, gather together, hold general meetings, become as one assembly, so that the national oneness, unity and harmony may become personified in all eyes. As it is a blessed day it should not be neglected or without results by making it a day limited to the fruits of mere pleasure. During such blessed days institutions should be founded that may be of permanent benefit and value to the people so that in current conversation and in history it may become widely known that such a good work was inaugurated on such a feast day. Therefore, the intelligent must search and investigate reality to find out what important affair, what philanthropic institutions are most needed and what foundations should be laid for the community on that particular day, so that they may be established. For example, if they find that the community needs morality, then they may lay down the foundation of good morals on that day. If the community be in need of spreading sciences and widening the circle of knowledge, on that day they should proceed in that direction, that is to say, direct the thoughts of all the people to that philanthropic cause. If, however, the community is in need of widening the circle of commerce or industry or agriculture they should start the means so that the desired aim may be attained. If the community needs protection, proper support and care of orphans, they should act upon the welfare of the orphans, etc. Such undertakings that are beneficial to the poor, the weak and the helpless should be pursued in order that, on that day, through the unity of all and through great meetings, results may be obtained, the glory and blessings of that day may be declared and manifest.

* About 3000 B. C.

Likewise in this wonderful dispensation this day (Naurooz) is a blessed day. The friends of God should be confirmed in service and servitude. With one another they must be in the utmost harmony, love and oneness, clasping hands, engaged in the commemoration of the Blessed Beauty and thinking of the great results that may be obtained on such a blessed day.

Today, there is no result or fruit greater than guiding the people, because these helpless creatures, especially the Persians, have remained without a share of all the bestowals of God. Undoubtedly, the friends of God, upon such a day, must leave tangible, philanthropic or ideal traces that should reach all mankind and not only pertain to the Bahais.

In all the cycles of the prophets the philanthropic affairs were confined to their respective peoples only—with the exception of small matters, such as charity, which was permissible to extend to others. But in this wonderful dispensation, philanthropic affairs are for all humanity, without any exception, because it is the manifestation of the mercifulness of God. Therefore, every universal matter—that is, one that belongs to all the world of humanity—is divine; and every matter that is sectarian and special is not universal in character—that is, it is limited. Therefore, my hope is that the friends of God, every one of them, may become as the mercy of God to all mankind.

(Translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago.)

Naurooz Greeting:

The STAR OF THE WEST enters upon its ninth year with this issue. We rejoice that it was founded on the blessed day of Naurooz. May it become an institution of permanent benefit, universal in scope and divine in character. Allah'o'Abha!

parts of the world entering under the shade of his sacred tree by cohort and cohort, accepting his teachings, and receiving a share from the table of his sustenance.”

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Diary of Mirza Sohrab, October 13, 1914.

Thousands of souls, including the great divines and Pharisees among the Jews, were awaiting the Manifestation of Christ, lamenting and weeping and supplicating that the Messiah should soon appear. But when his holiness, Christ, came with a beautiful face and sweet utterance and dawned from the day-spring of the contingent world like unto the shining sun, all those souls who awaited him rejected him, became afflicted with the sleep of heedlessness, did not wake up by the voice of Christ nor did they gain consciousness. Now again the same is the case in the Manifestation of Baha’o’llah.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, p. 688.)

The various religious systems are coming closer together. Baha’o’llah stands at the meeting of their ways to God. In him the Mohammedans are going forward to meet their promised Imam Mahdi, the Christians to meet Christ, the Jews their Messiah, and so on. When they meet Baha’o’llah they meet each other as at the top of a mountain. There they find unity because there they find him. There is the widest view, the heavenly horizon. No one but a Manifestation of God can unify the religious systems of the world. No law, no war, no power of kings could do this. The Kingdom is a real visible Kingdom, a real unity. This cannot be attained from books. It comes from the heart.

(Words spoken while in the presence of Abdul-Baha: Ten Days in the Light of Acca, p. 75.)

This is that whereof the Spirit (Christ) gave you tidings when he brought the truth.

(Words of Baha’o’llah: From Tablet revealed for Napoleon III.)

Say: O concourse of the Son (Christians) are ye hidden from myself because of my name? What maketh ye to doubt? Ye have called for your Lord, the Self-dependent, night and day and when he hath come from the heaven of Pre-existence, in his greatest glory, ye have not approached him, and are of the heedless. Then consider those who turned away from the Spirit (Christ) when he came to them with manifest power. How many of the Pharisees were abiding in the temples in his name, and were entreating because of his separation! But when the gate of union was opened, and the light shone forth from the day-spring of beauty, they disbelieved in God, the Exalted, the Great, and did not attain to his visitation—after having been promised thereunto in the book of Isaiah, as well as in the books of the prophets and the apostles.

Say: Surely the Father hath come, and hath fulfilled that whereunto you were promised in the Kingdom of God. This is the Word the Son veiled when he said to those around him, that at that time they could not bear it; but when the stated time was ended and the hour arrived, the Word shone forth from the horizon of the will. . . .

Say: Verily he beareth witness to me, and I bear witness to him; verily he desired naught but my person, whereunto bear witness all those just ones who know. . . .

Say unto the priest that the Chief hath surely come! . . . Verily the Spirit of Truth hath come to guide you into all truth. Verily he speaketh not unto you from himself; nay, but rather from before the All-knowing, the Wise.

Say: He is the one whom the Son hath glorified and hath upraised his command. Abandon that which is before you, O people of the earth! and take that which is commanded you from before the Powerful, the Faithful. Purify your ears and turn your minds to hear the sweet call which hath arisen from the direction of Sinai, the abode of your most glorious (Abha) Lord. Verily he attracts you unto a station wherein you will behold the lights of the face, which hath shone forth from this brilliant horizon. . . .

Do you choose to be silent whilst all trees and stones are calling out with the loudest voice, "Surely the Lord hath come, the Possessor of great glory!"? . . . Say: Verily he hath surely shone forth from the direction of the orient; and his signs have appeared in the occident.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Lawh-el-Akdas—the Most Holy Tablet. Star of the West, Vol. 4, No. 1, p. 14.)

Verily, he hath appeared in truth, and hath uttered a word whereby "all in the heavens and earth—except those whom God wished—are stunned." Faith in God, and the knowledge of him cannot be fully realized except through believing in all that hath proceeded from him (the Manifestation), and by practicing all that he hath commanded and all that is revealed in the book from the Supreme Pen.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Tablet of Tajalleyat, p. 75.)

This is indeed the Father, whereof Isaiah gave you tidings and the Comforter whose covenant the Spirit (Christ) hath received. . . . The perfection of the Ancient hath come by his most mighty name and hath desired to make the people enter into the most holy Kingdom, and that the sincere may see the Kingdom of God before his face . . . Blessed is he who fulfilleth the Covenant, and woe unto him who breaketh the promise and denieth God, the knower of secrets. . . . Advance thereunto, verily thy glorious Lord hath honored his country by his coming, thus we teach you the path whereof the Spirit (Christ) hath declared. Verily, I bear witness for him as he was indeed a witness for me; verily he said: "Come, that I may make you fishers of men," and today we say, "Come, that we may make you vivifiers of the world." Thus was the decree ordained in a Tablet written by the Pen of Command.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for the Pope.)

The promised one hath appeared in this exalted station, whereat smiled the mouths of existence—of both the seen and the unseen. O people! Avail yourselves of the day of God; verily, to meet him is indeed better unto you than that upon which the sun riseth, were ye of those who know!

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for the United States.)

We have commanded you to purify your hearts from the love and detestation of those who are upon the earth, lest anything will prevent you from one direction and enforce you to another,—and this is of my greatest advice unto you in a perspicuous Tablet. He who adhereth to either the one or the other, verily he cannot know the command as it is,—unto this will bear witness every just and informed one. Ye have forgotten the promise of God, and violated his Covenant in such a manner that ye turned away from the one by whose appearance the eyes of the Unitarians were consoled. Purify your sight from the hidden and the veiled, than look to the evidences of the prophets and messengers, that ye may know the matter of God in these days wherein the promised one hath come with great sovereignty.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Surat'ul Hykl, p. 58.)

Beware lest sovereignty prevent thee from the Sovereign; verily he hath come with his Kingdom, and all the atoms cry out, "The Lord hath come in his most great glory!" The Father hath come, and with him the Son, who crieth out in the holy valley, "Here am I, O my God, I am ready!" Mt. Sinai surroundeth the house, and the trees vociferously cry: "The Generous hath come, mounting on the clouds; blessed is he who advanceth unto him, and woe unto those who are far off." Arise among the people with this irresistible command, then summon the nations to God, the Exalted, the Great. Be not of those who call upon him by a name among his names, and when the named one comes, they turn from him and pronounce sentence against him with evident injustice. Consider, then, and remember the days wherein came the Spirit (Christ) and Herod gave judgment against him. God helped the Spirit (Christ) with the hosts of the seen and the unseen and protected him with the truth and sent him to another land as a promise on his part.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for Czar of Russia.)

O king of the earth, hear the voice of this servant. Verily, I am a man who hath believed in God and his signs, and I have sacrificed myself in his way; to this do the afflictions wherein I am—the like of which none among mankind hath borne!—testify, and my Lord the All-knowing is the witness to what I say. I have not summoned men unto aught save unto thy Lord and the Lord of the worlds. In love for him there hath come upon me that whereof the eye of creation hath not beheld the like. . . .

O king, verily I was as (any) one among mankind slumbering upon my couch. The gales of the All-glorious passed by me and taught me the knowledge of what hath been. This thing is not from me, but from one (who is) Mighty and All-knowing. And he bade me proclaim between the earth and heaven, and for this hath there befallen me that whereat the eyes of those who know overflow with tears.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for Shah of Persia.)

O thou Temple! We have made thee a mirror for the kingdom of the names to speak of my dominion among all the creatures and summon all the people to my meeting and beauty and to be a guide to my obvious and upright path. We have elevated thy name among the servants as a bounty on our part—verily, I am the Ancient Bounty!—and adorned thee with the embroidered garment of myself and cast upon thee my Word to use the authority in the Kingdom as it pleaseth thee and to do what thou willest. We have ordained to thee the good of the heaven and earth so that no good will be granted to anyone unless he enters thy shadow, as a command on the part of thy Lord, the learned, the informed. And we have given the rod of command and the divination of authority to enable thee to distinguish the wisdom of every question. We have shown forth from thy breast the seas of knowledge and revelation in the celebration of thy Lord, the Merciful, in order that thou shouldst praise and be of the thankful. We have chosen thee from among my creatures and made thee the Manifestation of my soul to whomsoever is in heaven and earth.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Surat'ul Hykl, p. 51.)

O people of the Son (Christians)! We have sent unto you John the Baptist (the Bab who was the precursor of Baha') another time. Verily, he crieth in the wilderness of The Beyan: "O creation of beings, make clear your eyes, the day of vision and meeting hath come nigh; and O people of the Gospel, prepare the way, for the day whereon the Lord of Glory shall come, hath drawn nigh. Prepare yourselves to enter into the Kingdom!" Thus was the matter decreed on the part of God, the cleaver of the dawn. Harken unto the strains which the dove of eternity hath sung upon the branches of the divine lote-tree and is vocal with the melody of, "O people of the earth! We have sent unto you him who was named John, to baptize you with water, that your bodies might be purified for the appearance of Christ, and that he (Christ) hath purified you with the fire of love and with the water of the Spirit, as preparation for these days whereon the Merciful hath willed to cleanse your bodies with the Water of Life by the hands of grace and bounty."

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for the Pope.)

His Holiness the Supreme (Bab)—May my life be a ransom for him!—is the promised one of the Koran, or in other words he is the Mahdi, the Kaem, the promised one, who was to appear after his holiness, Mohammed. The Bab was the radiant Morn of Guidance, the herald of the Beauty of Abha, the Blessed Perfection, the Sun of Reality—may my life be a sacrifice to him!

Baha'o'llah was his holiness, "Him-whom-God-shall-manifest," the promised one of all the books and epistles of his holiness, the Bab.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Tablet revealed for American believers; translated April 19, 1914.)

Here follow some prophecies of the Bab:

"Before the twentieth year the creation of The Beyan will be perfected, and then the new advent shall take place." —(From the Book of Names.)

"In the year nine you shall apprehend all the good." (This prophecy of the Bab's in The Beyan was fulfilled by the exile of Baha'o'llah from Teheran and his arrival in the ninth year of the Bab's advent.—Note by Mirza Ali Kuli Khan.)

"I swear by the most holy essence of God—glorious and mighty is he!—that in the day of the manifestation of 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest,' if one should hear a single verse from him and recite it, it is better than that he should recite The Beyan a thousand times."

"All the Baha (glory) of The Beyan is 'He-whom-God-shall-manifest.' All mercy be on him who believeth, and all chastisement on him who believeth not in him."

"Verily, I am the first one who worshipped him."

"O people of The Beyan! Let neither The Beyan and whatever is therein, nor its letters, veil you from 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest.' If he abolishes all The Beyan he is the true one, and if he appears with one single verse he is the truth."

"All the divine names and attributes revealed in The Beyan in their primary sense revolve around 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest;' and in their secondary sense around the 'Branch-extended-from-the-Ancient-Root (Abdul-Baha).'"

(Words of the Bab, quoted by Mirza Ali Kuli Khan from The Beyan, in an address at Washington, D. C., June, 1903.)

"Today, The Beyan is in the stage of seed, but at the beginning of the manifestation of 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest,' the ultimate perfection of The Beyan will become apparent, when he shall gather the fruits of the trees which have been planted." (p. 225.)

"The third chapter of the third Vahid. Concerning this, that The Beyan and whosoever is therein revolved around the saying of 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest,' even as the Alif (i. e., the Gospel) and whosoever was therein revolved around the saying of Mohammed the Messenger of God, and as that which God revealed unto him at first and whosoever was therein revolved around that which he said at the period of his later manifestation. The quintessence of this chapter is this, that the gaze of The Beyan is not extended save towards 'Him-whom-God-shall-manifest,' for none but he that raised or doth raise it up, even as none but he hath sent or doth send it down. And The Beyan and such as are believers therein yearn more after him than the yearning of any lover after his beloved." (p. 348.)

"Though the ocean of woe rageth on every side, and the bolts of fate follow in quick succession, and the darkness of griefs and afflictions invade soul and body, yet is my heart brightened by the remembrance of thy countenance and my soul is as a rose-garden from the perfume of thy nature." (p. 18.)

(Words of the Bab: Quoted from A Traveller's Narrative, pages indicated. Prof. E. G. Browne, author, Cambridge, Press, publishers.)

In this day the verses of the "Mother-Book" are shining and beaming like unto the sun, and cannot be confounded with former and latter words. Verily, this wronged one doth not desire to prove his Cause through that which has appeared from others. He (God) is the All-comprehending, and all else save him is comprehended (in him). Say, O people! Read what ye possess, and we will read what we possess. By the life of God! Neither the words of all the creatures, nor that which all nations possess, is worthy of mention before (our) utterance. Whereunto testifies the one who hath spoken in all grades. Verily, he is God, the King of the day of judgment, and the Lord of the great throne!

The station of this matter is far above the station of what hath appeared and what may appear. In this day were the Point of El-Beyan (the Bab) to be present, and were he—God forbid!—to delay in acknowledging (this Cause), he would himself be judged by the blessed Word which hath descended from the dawning-place of The Beyan of His Holiness. He hath said and his saying is truth: "'He-whom-God-shall-manifest' hath the right to reject even one who is highest upon the earth!"

The "Mother-Book" is indeed revealed, and the munificent one is in the "honorable station." The "Dawn" (refers to the prophecy in the Koran concerning the new day; i. e., this Manifestation) hath indeed risen, and the people understand not. The "verses" have indeed come, and their revealer is in manifest sadness.

Ye have deprived yourselves of the sea of divine verses for a single drop, and ye have withheld yourselves from the splendors of the light of the Sun of Truth for a single mote. Who but Baha' had the power to speak before all the world? Be just, and be not of those who oppress. Through him (Baha') seas have moved, mysteries appeared, and trees have uttered: "Verily the Kingdom and the earthly world belong to God, the revealer of signs (or verses), the day-spring of manifest proofs!"

Consider the Persian Beyan of his holiness, the Precursor, and look into it with the eye of justice. Verily, he will guide you into the path. He utters in this moment that which his tongue hath formerly uttered when he was established on the throne of his Name, the Most Great.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Words of Paradise, pp. 60-63.)

Verily, we turn our face toward the servants of God in that place, and we exhort them in the beginning of our speech (to observe) what the Point of El-Beyan hath revealed concerning this Manifestation whereby the nerves of names have quivered with fear, the idols of superstitions have fallen, and the Tongue of Grandeur hath uttered from his Supreme Horizon (saying): "In truth, the hidden treasury, the concealed mystery hath indeed appeared: he, at whom the lips of all that was and is have smiled (with gladness). He (the Bab) hath said, and his saying is truth: 'I have indeed written an essence of his description, and it is this: "He cannot be indicated by my allusions, nor by all that is mentioned in The Beyan."' "

In this day a great banquet is celebrated in the Supreme Concourse; for all that was promised in the divine books has appeared. This is the day of the most great rejoicing! All must direct themselves to the Court of Nearness with the utmost joy, happiness, exultation and gladness, and deliver themselves from the fire of remoteness.

O people of Teheran! Take ye the cups of knowledge through the power of my greatest Name; then drink therefrom, in spite of the people of the world who have violated the Covenant of God and his Testament, denied his proof and argument, and disputed his signs which have encompassed all in the heaven and earth The Cause is manifest and clear as the sun; but the people have become as veils to themselves.

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Words of Paradise; pp. 64-66.)

I have been preceded in this very thing by Mohammed, the Messenger of God, and before him by the Spirit (Christ), and before him by the Interlocutor (Moses.)

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Extract from Tablet revealed for Napoleon III.)

(Thou art he) who hath promised all in the earth, in thy books, epistles and scriptures, concerning the manifestation of thyself and the removal of the veils of glory from thy face. This thou didst reveal unto thy beloved one (Mohammed) by whom the orb of the command dawned from the horizon of Hijaz and the light of truth dawned among thy servants, in thy words, "The day whereon mankind shall arise before the Lord of the creatures." (Koran). And before him (i. e., Mohammed), thou didst announce this unto the Interlocutor (Moses) to "lead forth thy people from darkness into light and to remind them of the days of God." (Koran). And, again, thou didst speak of this (day) unto the Spirit (Christ) and unto all thy former and latter prophets and messengers. Were there to proceed from the treasuries of thy Supreme Pen all that thou hast revealed in the mention of this most great remembrance and this thy mighty message, all the denizens of the city of knowledge and wisdom would be stunned, except whomsoever thou hast delivered through thy potency and protected through thy bounty and grace.

I testify that verily thou hast fulfilled thy Covenant and sent forth him whose manifestation was announced by thy prophets, thy chosen ones and thy servants. Verily, he hath come from the horizon of might and power with the banners of thy signs (verses) and with the standards of thy evidences, and he hath arisen before the faces through thy power and potency and summoned all men unto the exalted apex and supreme horizon in such wise that the injustice of the learned and the majesty of princes have not withheld him. He hath arisen in the most mighty steadfastness and spoken in the loftiest voice (saying), "The Giver of gifts hath indeed come, riding on the cloud; advance, O ye people of the earth, with shining faces and illumined hearts!" Blessed is whosoever attains to thy meeting, drinks the choice wine of union from the hands of thy bestowal, discovers the fragrance of thy verses, speaks in thy praise, soars in thy atmosphere and is overcome by the attraction of thy utterance, and whom thou hast caused to enter thy supreme paradise—the station of revelation and vision—before the throne of thy grandeur!

(Words of Baha'o'llah: Tablet of Ishrakat, pp. 19-21.)

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!

(Isaiah 52:7.)

For thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory [Baha, means glory], saith the Lord of hosts.

(Haggai 2:6, 7.)

O noble friends and seekers for the Kingdom of God! About sixty years ago, in the time when the fire of war and bloodshed was considered an honor to mankind, in a time when the blood of thousands of human beings stained the earth, when children were fatherless, when fathers were without sons, and mothers were weeping bitterly, with burning hearts, the loss of their children, when the darkness of inter-racial hatred and animosity seemed to cover mankind, and the heavenly light was blotted out, when the wafting of the Holy Breath of God was cut off—in that time Baha'o'llah arose like a shining star from the horizon of Persia, with the message of the light of the oneness of mankind. He brought the effulgent light of guidance to the world; he kindled the fire of love and the great reality of the True Beloved appeared. He shook and destroyed the foundations of religious and racial prejudice and of political animosity. He likened the world of humanity to a tree, and all the nations to its branches, leaves, buds and fruits. He melted and destroyed ignorant fanaticism and laid down the foundation of universal love, established the basis of the oneness of humanity and brought about in practice the equality of mankind. He declared that all were equally under the mercy and bounty of God.

Then was the door of the kingdom opened wide and the lights of heaven appeared.

Yet the whole of his life was under extreme trouble and tyranny. In Persia he was thrown into chains and into prison; and he was under the threatening of the sword. He was derided and scourged. When he was about thirty years of age he was exiled to Bagdad, and then to Constantinople, and from Constantinople to Adrianople and lastly to the prison of Acca.

Yet in the prison and under chains, he availed to spread his Cause and uplifted the banner of the oneness of humanity. Now, God be praised! We see the light of love is shining in the East and in the West; the tent of intercourse is raised in the center of the world for the drawing together of hearts and souls. The call of the Kingdom has gone all over the world! The annunciation of the world's universal peace has enlightened the world's conscience!

My hope is that by the zeal and ardor of the pure-hearted, the darkness of hatred and differences will be entirely abolished and the light of love and unity will shine more brightly; this world become a new world; things material become the mirror of the Kingdom; human hearts meet and embrace each other; the whole world become as a man's native country, and different races be counted as one race. Then disputes and differences will vanish and the divine Beloved will be revealed in the society of mankind. It is because the East and the West are illumined by the one sun, all races, nations and creeds are the servants of the one God. The whole earth is one home, and all the people are bathed in the ocean of God's mercy.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Farewell address to English Bahais, October 1, 1911.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Talks by Abdul-Baha in the Holy Land

TRANSLATED BY DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI *

The following compilation of some of the blessed utterances of Abdul-Baha, after his return to the Holy Land from America, Europe and Egypt, tells some interesting news of that Holy Threshold.

IT WAS on December 5th, 1913, that Abdul-Baha arrived at his home in Haifa, Syria. His first words to the family and to the friends who flocked to see him were: "After the end of three years, again I return to the Holy Land. Were it not for the assistance and protection of the Blessed Beauty (Baha'o'llah) I would never have had any hope of returning from such a long journey. I went as far as Los Angeles, which is situated on the western coast of America and directly opposite the land of Acca. Should a person drill a hole through the earth in that land he would come out here. Everywhere I went, my thoughts were in Acca. I traveled in many countries. I saw deserts and valleys, but no place could equal this. Indeed, the views here are indescribable. There are many places in other countries, which are famous for their grandeur; but here the views are of divine delicacy and of the gentleness of the Creator."

On December 6th, Abdul-Baha, accompanied by a great number of pilgrims, went to the holy threshold, the tomb of the Bab, on Mt. Carmel. After praying, he said: "What a beautiful gathering! In all the places I went I did not see such a beautiful, live meeting. Pray, in my behalf, at this blessed spot, for all the friends and ask confirmation for them."

When Abdul-Baha was leaving, his honor Ibn-Asdak, one of the famous teachers in Persia, fell on his knees at Abdul-Baha's feet. Abdul-Baha said: "According to the blessed command, it is not permitted to fall on the knees and bow down except before the blessed home and the tombs of Baha'o'llah and the Bab. Beware of deviating from the divine commands."

In the evening, Abdul-Baha spoke in Arabic because of the good gathering of Syrian people with the Persian friends. First, he spoke of the difference between the God-made beauty of the Holy Land and the man-made or artificial development in the occident, saying that the spirituality and beauty of the Holy Land cannot be found in any of the European countries. Then he illustrated the length of his journey by the following story: "A certain Kurd was awakened in the morning to say his prayers. He arose and prayed five times successively. (The Mohammedan morning prayer consists of facing Mecca, reading a passage from the Koran, and bowing and kneeling twice in supplication.) The people said to him, 'What art thou doing? The morning prayer should be uttered only twice and thou art repeating it five times.' He replied, 'God bless you. I do not say my prayers often. When I do say them, why should I say them only twice? The more the better!' So it was with us. We had not traveled before, so when we started, we went on a long journey. Every day, we were in a town or a city. Indeed, the American cities are very large. I spoke of the validity of his holiness, Christ, and of the accepted Messenger (Mohammed) in most of the Christian churches and in the synagogues of the Jews. When I arrived there, I found that the proofs of the validity of the divine Manifestations had not been given, nor the spiritual questions explained in those churches and public gatherings. Therefore, I arose to explain and give proofs. My addresses comprise more than two volumes."

On December 9th, Abdul-Baha went to Acca. The train was filled with the friends, who were chanting poems with infinite joy, until they arrived in the Holy City. After dinner Abdul-Baha went to the holy tomb and prayed for all the believers. The inhabitants of Acca, who had been bitter enemies for more than two-score years received him with utmost joy, respect and humbleness. Abdul-Baha said: "I did not like to have such a big gathering on my arrival in Acca. I intended to go quietly to visit the tomb of Baha'o'llah and to stay for a few days. Now I have to return sooner to Haifa." And with the same joy and fragrance, they returned to Haifa.

As to the health and happiness of Abdul-Baha, he said many times: "My health and happiness are in this, when I see the friends of God engaged in spreading the divine fragrances, arising to serve the Cause of God, forgetting every thought save that of teaching, casting into the corner of forgetfulness every matter but that of unity and harmony. Consider in every age what confirmation and assistance were received by those souls who devoted their time to serving the Cause and spreading the divine fragrances. On the contrary, those who were absorbed by personal interests or political affairs degraded not only themselves but their associates. Thus, in this day, the friends of God should see that all glory lies in teaching the Cause of God and that every happiness is found in the shadow of the Word of God."

A talk by Abdul-Baha, on December 17th, in Acca: "How very unjust the people are! From the day of the appearance of his holiness, Christ, until now he has not been mentioned in the synagogues of the Jews. Now, the Bahais are proving in the Jewish synagogues that Christ is the Word of God and that Christ is the Spirit of God. In the Christian churches, the Bahais are proving that his holiness, Mohammed, the Messenger was a prophet of God. Notwithstanding this, the people are not pleased with us. Once, when I was on my way to speak in a church in New York city, a person from India, a man prominent in that city, met us accidentally. He was surprised and said to himself, 'I will go and see what all this is about.' He came to the church and saw me standing on the platform, proving the prophethood of his holiness the Messenger of God. Indeed, he became amazed. When we came out, his face was radiant beyond description. He said, 'In the name of God! What does this mean, that a person proves the prophethood of his holiness, Mohammed, in the presence of the Christian ministers!' He became much attracted to the Cause. In reality, the church was full of people. Afterwards, the minister, too, showed his appreciation, thankfulness and joy.

"Although we were in the utmost weakness and feebleness during this journey, yet the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty were like unto the surging sea. Wherever we went, just before beginning to speak, I saw the doors opening and the lights of the Sun of Reality confirming, beyond the power of description. Everywhere we went, in churches, synagogues and meetings, I turned first to the Kingdom of Abha, seeking, for a few minutes, the confirmations. Then, knowing that the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty were hovering over that assembly, I would begin to speak.”

Talk by Abdul-Baha in his home, December 20th:

“Today I came down here. It was a pleasant walk. Praise be to God, that, through the favor and bounty of the Blessed Beauty, I reached the holy threshold. I had no other desire but to reach here. Many nights I thought of this wish. I saw that I did not want any thing but this and for me there can never be a better climate than we have here. I traveled in many countries. I went to the world’s most famous climates, such as Dublin, New Hampshire, the summer resort of Washington’s government officials and statesmen. It is a place of high altitude with many forest trees; its climate is of the utmost delicacy. Also, we went to Denver, Colorado. Its climate is very good; it is a beautiful city. Again, we were in Switzerland, which is far famed, and in the summer people from all regions go there. Yet there is no climate like that of Haifa. The climate of Acca is better than that of Haifa, but these forts and arsenals are connected together and are very damp. If these are removed, its climate will become excellent.

“When we first came here we were put into the barracks. In ten or fifteen days we began to fall like leaves because of sickness. No one remained upon his feet except myself and the late Agha Riza. I used to cook a kettle of soup for them to eat in the daytime and a kettle of rice for the night. I saw Hadji Ali Asghar with his eyes closed, crying, ‘Neh-neh jan, neh-neh jan’ (Grandma dear, grandma dear). I passed by him; he opened his eyes and became very much ashamed. His wife, Hussein Agha’s mother, had fever and was saying, ‘What is the matter with me?’ On the other side, Hussein Agha (Zeenat Khanum’s father) was crying, ‘Oh, my heart is inflamed.’ Briefly, all were ill in bed. There was no one to give them water. This was the condition of Acca’s climate. Our guards were ten in number. I saw nine of them in bed. The wells of Acca were as bitter as poison. Now they are sweet. During the twenty-five years that the Blessed Beauty lived in Acca there was no illness. Four times there were epidemics of cholera all about Acca, even coming very near, but they did not get in. Four persons who left Acca fell victims at its outer gates. When the news came that the plague had reached Haifa the Christian gentlemen of Acca fled away. They went out to the villages. The plague went there, too, and they returned to Acca. The famous Austrian doctor was asked, ‘What happened that the plague did not reach Acca?’ At first, he did not reply; afterwards he said, that the forts and arsenals protected it. Thus no sickness occurred in Acca until the departure of Baha’o’llah. Then all places except Acca became free from the plague. All the Christians in Acca said, ‘The talisman of Acca is shattered.’

“The signs of power and greatness from the appearance of all the holy Manifestations of God—May my soul be a sacrifice to them!—were evident only to the believers. For example, in the days of his holiness, Moses, he was praised by those souls who were believers. In the days of the Spirit (Christ) the cause was evident to eleven persons. Likewise, in the days of his holiness the Messenger, the greatness of the cause was evident to the believers. But in this Blessed Manifestation everybody wrote incomparable poems during the (days after Baha’o’llah’s) departure. A certain Christian said: ‘Though I am not a believer in Baha’o’llah, yet I find his miracles like unto the sun.’

“In Bagdad, all the learned, sages, great and high personages, among them

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Letter from Secretary of Bahai Assembly of Chicago

To the Bahai Assemblies throughout America—Greeting:

“The Executive Board has voted to accept the invitation of the House of Spirituality on behalf of the Chicago Assembly to hold the Convention and the Congress in Chicago at the Auditorium Hotel. The first session of the convention will be at 10 a. m. of April 29th and will continue through the 30th.”
(Copy of telegram from Secretary of Bahai Temple Unity.)

Therefore, we address this letter to the friends in all the cities where the beloved Cause has been reflected and invite them to join us here, in the celebration of the glorious feast of Rizwan, on Saturday evening, April 27th, prior to the opening of this Tenth Annual Mashrak-el-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress, in order that the fragrances of that joyful gathering may become as an invocation to the momentous work to be undertaken on behalf of the erection of the Mashrak-el-Azkar by the delegates chosen for that purpose from the different cities.

Whether you can come or not, let us all pray that our coming together this year may yield such fruits as will gladden the heart of Abdul-Baha. Then let us work together in the protection of the Covenant so that not only the Mashrak-el-Azkar will be realized, but the Cause of God will be furthered to such an extent as has not been seen before.

We hope that as many as can will come. The Chicago Assembly is eagerly awaiting you and is planning to avail itself of the opportunity to be of service to the servants of Abdul-Baha.

With Bahai love and greeting,

BAHAI ASSEMBLY OF CHICAGO.

Carl Scheffler, Secretary.

Letter from Secretary of Bahai Temple Unity

To the Bahai Assemblies of North America and the Occident—Greetings:

Pursuant to the constitution and by-laws of the Bahai Temple Unity of Illinois and at the direction of the Executive Board, I hereby notify you that the Tenth Annual meeting of the Bahai Temple Unity will be held at Chicago, Monday, April 29th, and Tuesday, April 30th, 1918, at the Auditorium Hotel. The first session will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning of April 29th, followed by sessions in the afternoon and on Tuesday.

As a constituent member of the Unity, the assembly is entitled to send delegate to this Annual Meeting and Convention of the Corporation and your assembly is hereby called to meet forthwith to elect such delegate (also an alternate) who shall be the representative of your assembly, to serve for the term of one year in the National Body as provided by Article IV of the Constitution.

A certificate of election of both delegate and alternate, should be in the hands of the Secretary of the Bahai Temple Unity not later than April 20th.

For the purpose of guidance, the following words of Abdul-Baha are reproduced here, in order that your assembly may conform completely to the instructions and requirements of the Center of the Covenant. These instructions should be your standard in determining the qualifications necessary for one to be a delegate, an alternate, or an elector.

In 1912, shortly before the election of the House of Spirituality, of Chicago, Abdul-Baha was asked: "What are the qualifications necessary for the members of the House of Spirituality?" Abdul-Baha replied: "They must be souls, well known as Bahais, firm and steadfast in the Covenant. The greatest requirement is to be firm and steadfast in the Covenant."

Again he was asked: "If at the time of an election many are brought in who seldom attend the meetings, in order to cast their votes, what shall we do?" Abdul-Baha answered: "The members of the Spiritual Assembly must be well known and firm Bahais. Those souls who come once in a while to the meetings are not Bahais."

Some one suggested getting up a circular letter to be signed by those present at the election in which their beliefs are stated, especially regarding firmness in the Center of the Covenant. Abdul-Baha answered: "Some one might sign it falsely. These electors must be well known and qualified Bahais. . . ." (Notes taken by Mirza Mahmood.)

The object and aim of the Convention is the building of the Temple of God, the Mashrak-el-Azkar. All our energies must be sacrificed to the attainment of this great object in the inner and outer world in these days, while the beloved Abdul-Baha, is amongst us.

During the past year the Cause of God, and the world have witnessed events of the utmost importance. Praise be to God, the Bahais following the example of Abdul-Baha are engaged in supplicating to God, that all the heedless souls may be forgiven, and that through a wave of the divine mercy, the world of beings may attain capacity, and find rest and composure under the canopy of truth and faithfulness.

May the love of God, attract all hearts and the glory of God, become manifest in all our deliberations and may our deeds find divine acceptance at the holy threshold. The bounties of the Kingdom are outpouring, the fragrances of the divine garden are being inhaled by those whose spiritual nostrils are opened, a new consciousness and new life is quickening the hearts and souls.

May we all, revolving around the basis of unity, the Covenant of God, attain through purity of purpose and intention, such spiritual power that the world of man will become conscious of its spiritual Center.

Faithfully yours, in His love,

EXECUTIVE BOARD, BAHAI TEMPLE UNITY,

Harlan F. Ober, Secretary.

O friends, know that the believers of God must be the cause of union and love among all mankind, and until they attain to perfect harmony and agreement they will not become the remedy for the healing of this sick world. From the very beginning of the Mashrak-el-Azkar in Ishkabad, Russia, day by day, everything has been in perfect harmony, until the believers there accomplished their aim, and it was builded easily, for it was builded by love. Now I hope that in America it will be the same as in Russia, and the Mashrak-el-Azkar there be erected by the power of the union and love existing among the believers.

Talks by Abdul-Baha in the Holy Land

Seyed Daoud and Abdul-Rahman Ebfendi Alossy, were in the utmost humbleness." . . .

On December 22d, a great number of pilgrims from all parts of the world gathered in Haifa. The large home of Abdul-Baha was too small for them all, so two meetings were held on the same night. To the first gathering Abdul-Baha spoke as follows: "You are welcome, most welcome! We have divided the friends into two groups,' but the place is still too small—O my God, increase their number and bless them!

"When I was in Europe and America I saw that some people were saying, 'How can this Cause grow as these gray bearded Persians imagine it will? The present world has changed and the time when religion had influence has now passed away.' I knew that they were saying these things to themselves and so at the end of the conversation I explained that when Christ was crucified he had twelve disciples. One of them denied him three times and another sold him for a little money; notwithstanding this, consider now how important was his cause. But at the time of the departure of the Blessed Beauty there were at least a hundred-thousand souls who would sacrifice their lives for him. These same thoughts that you have now were also prevalent in Christ's time and so little did they care for him that it is not even known where he was buried. And three hundred years later, when St. Helen went to the Holy Land, some people, thinking of their own personal benefit, went to her and said, 'We dug the ground here and found the cross on which they crucified his holiness, Christ.' This was the foundation of the tomb of Christ. It is not even known where the tombs of Mary and the disciples are. The Catholics say that the tombs of Paul and Peter are in Rome. Others say that they are in Antioch. They were so unimportant that one of the philosophers of that time who wrote a book against Christ, said, 'This person Christ, never existed and there never was such a man. This is what Paul and Peter have made up. A criminal person was crucified in Jerusalem. These two came and made him the Christ, for their own interests.' Praise be to God! in the days of the Blessed Beauty, his Cause became famous in all regions and all of his signs and friends are known and manifest.

"The Persians used to ask, 'What is going to happen to Persia?' I said: 'The conditions existing now, are the causes of destruction. These dissensions, these parties, one democratic, another constitutional, are destroying Persia day by day. Compare the present conditions of Persia with those ten years ago. These dissensions have destroyed Persia and day by day, it is becoming worse.' They asked, 'What will be the future?' I answered, 'I will give you an example which illustrates the future of Persia. It is sufficient and complete and you should take it as a standard: Mecca is a piece of stony land, a non-cultivated valley, where even grass never grows. It is a dry, intensely hot desert and is not fitted to be inhabited. What would thrive in a rocky, arid land? But because it was the native land of his holiness the Messenger, this rocky and stony land became the center toward which people in all regions turn their faces and bow in prayer. From this, you should see the future of Persia. This is an illustration. An arid land, because it was the native land of his holiness, the Messenger, became the center of all the horizons. But Persia is green and verdant; it has beautiful roses; its climate is gentle and its water is sweet. From this you should measure what the future of Persia will be. This example is sufficient'."

"Welcome! How are you! No strength is left in me because I have talked so much, from morning until now. Sometimes it becomes a matter of duty to speak and if man fails to do so he is held responsible by God. This is one of these days. Although I was not feeling well, I spoke in detail, because it was a matter of duty to speak. Through the spreading and circulating of falsehoods in these regions the hearts of certain people have harbored them. I spoke of what I said in Europe and America and of what was spread in the papers. I explained to them that it was not as they understood it. For instance, they believed that we were the enemies of his holiness Mohammed, the Messenger, and yet, many addresses had been given in the Christian churches and in the synagogues of the Jews proving the validity of his holiness the Messenger. Some of these misunderstandings were removed. Today, the mofti (judicial lawyer who rules according to the laws in the Mohammedan religion) said to me, 'These talks which have appeared in the papers have indeed removed many superstitions.' What an injustice!

"Philosopher Vambéry, who was in Budapest, Austria, had never believed in any of the religions. For years and years he traveled in Constantinople, Afghanistan, Turkestan and Persia and learned the languages of these countries very well. He said to me: 'Because of this, I am amazed and surprised, that I, Vambéry have not the courage to and cannot mention the name of Christ with reverence in the churches of the Jews. But you have proved with such courage and power, in the synagogues of the Jews, that Jesus Christ was the Word and the Spirit of God.'

"In America certain people gave warnings that, 'This person is the enemy of Christ,' and upon our arrival there, they printed in the papers that 'The enemy of Christ has arrived.' Even when I was in Washington a bundle of pamphlets was thrown into my carriage as I was leaving a church in which I had just spoken to a very large gathering of people. The pamphlet contained several pages. They wrote that, 'These Bahais are the enemies of Christ and they are destroying his edifice. Is it permissible that we leave Christ, who has given his life for us for this person?' But no one listened to them and all showed their joy and appreciation. . . .

"The Jews in America, did not oppose us. They held very good meetings and invited me. I went and spoke to them and they became very happy and manifested infinite joy. In San Francisco, they all expressed their pleasure and happiness. . . . After these talks the Rabbi said, 'We used to believe that the orient was extinguished, but now it is evident that the East is East. These talks which we have just heard are like those of the prophets and our glorious ancestors in the past.' They were so touched and affected by the talks given in the synagogues that a letter came, saying that the Rabbi went to a minister and said to him, 'Your church is being remodeled and it will be a long time before you can use it again. Come to our synagogue and pray and supplicate in the way you desire. Saturday is our special day of worship and Sunday will be yours'."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Talks by Abdul-Baha in the Holy Land—Continued

TRANSLATED BY DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

The following compilation of some of the utterances of Abdul-Baha after his return to the Holy Land from America, Europe and Egypt, is the second published under this heading—the first appeared in issue No. 2 page 17

THE DEATH OF MIRZA ABUL-FAZL

TODAY very sad news has been received. He was indeed a very glorious personage. In every way he was unequalled. It is impossible for a person to be perfect in all things. His honor Agha Mirza Hayder Ali must write his life history.

In reality, he was in the utmost severance, in the utmost firmness and steadfastness in the Cause of God. He was detached from all things. From the day this person became a believer until this day, he was engaged in service in the Cause of God. He was engaged either in giving the Message or in writing. He was never attached to this world.

How learned he was and studious of books! He was familiar with every nation. With the precepts of all religions he was acquainted. He was my partner and participant in the servitude of the holy threshold.

During the days of sorrow, he was my consolation. I had perfect confidence in him. Every written criticism of the Cause I used to refer to him and he wrote the answer.

How humble and meek he was! No matter how much we insisted that this person take a servant for himself, he refused, that he might serve the friends and give them tea. All friends and strangers, when they went to his home, he used to serve. Although his body was weak, sick, feeble and feverish, he used to stand and make tea. All his thoughts were directed to making his visitors pleased and happy at any rate.

During all this time I did not hear from him the word—"I; I said or I wrote." He used to say, "I submitted to them; I submitted to the friends." Never a word was uttered by him, saying, "I have knowledge," or "I have experience." He was indeed effaced and selfless. He was self-sacrificing at the holy threshold. The odor of existence could not be inhaled from him.

A great wisdom necessitated his passing. There is nothing to do but to exercise patience. How many a man equals a thousand men!

All the friends of God should gather together and pray at the holy tomb of the Bab and I will pray here.

(Talk upon Mirza Abul-Fazl given by Abdul-Baha, in his home, at Haifa, January 21, 1914).

The calamity of his honor, Mirza Abul-Fazl is indeed great. No matter how much we want to console ourselves, we cannot be consoled. How good for man to be like this, so that the hearts of all the friends are attracted to him in every way. While in Alexandria, every time my heart was depressed, I used to go and meet him and at once my depression vanished. He was very truthful. He never harbored deceit and revenge.

He left wonderful writings in proving the blessed Cause. His thought, reference, pen and tongue all were used in proving the blessed Cause. His custom was to occupy his time from morning to noon in writing. He did not receive anyone. In the afternoon, he received everybody who went to him.

He used to have difficulties with the American and European women because of their numerous questions and persistence. Some of these ladies said, "We went there and knocked at his door. We heard no answer. We persisted in knocking, knowing that he was in. We knocked and we knocked. And finally, he said in English, 'Abul-Fazl not here.'" The ladies said, "We were convulsed with laughter. He himself, from the inside, laughed too. And then we departed."

Light flooded his face. How illumined he was! His heart was shining, radiant. The divine wisdom is wonderful. Man becomes amazed. Although such souls themselves are like unto a remedy for others, death is their utmost desire. It is the highest degree of existence and for him was life supreme. No greater bounty is there for man than to depart from the world of existence.

Those who associated with him and loved him have become sad. He was a sincere soul. There was nothing about him but sincerity. Never had he any superfluities about him. He was all sincerity. For example, if he loved a person, he used to love him more in his heart. If he attributed anything to a man, he used to attribute it more in his heart. And if he was in harmony with a man, he was more in harmony in his heart. He was sincere, not insincere. If he was angry at a man, he could not speak to him. He used to tremble at the sight of him.

Astonishing it is that one of the pashas of Egypt longed to meet him, but Abul-Fazl refused him. After that, a mediator went to him and asked, "Why don't you meet the pasha?" He replied, "I don't like him. His desire must be insincere, because if his desires were sincere, God would have created love in my heart for him. At any rate, I am unable to meet him with love and truthfulness. It is better that I do not see him."

He was not entangled with this world. He was not entangled with anything. His heart was not attached to life, nor anything else. He was entirely severed, refined, spiritual and of the Kingdom.

The sheikh of Islam, of Caucasia, wrote against the Cause. Some of the friends answered him. Sheikh of Islam wrote a second time a criticism. After that, Agha Mirza Abul-Fazl wrote a full, convincing answer. It surprised the sheikh.

It was amusing and the joke is here, that the Ezelis wanted Abul-Fazl's book very much. Finally, one of the friends asked, "Well, you are Babis; what is in this book that you want so much?" They replied, "For its good arguments in behalf of his highness, the Supreme (the Bab). And for these arguments, we want the book."

(Talk given by Abdul-Baha, in his home, Haifa, January 22, 1914.)

MISCELLANEOUS TOPICS

Meetings are held, in the home of Abdul-Baha, twice a week. One evening, Abdul-Baha spoke about the beauty and spirituality of Mt. Carmel. He spoke, also, of Elijah and of his arising to vivify the religion of Moses. Elijah cast out the statue of Baal (an idol) and reformed the Jews from harmful customs. When he had lead them to perfect spirituality and might, so that he had confidence in them he left them, instantly left them; because he saw that his work was finished. Man must be like this. At the time of difficulties and when his services are needed, he must answer the call of the hour and then, when his work is accomplished, he must hold aloof from leadership and power. This is the meaning of "the man of God" or "God's hero" and "service to God." After reading and chanting communes, the name of a Zoroastrian, who visited Abdul-Baha in London and who became very attracted, was mentioned. Abdul-Baha said, "As long as the love of God exists in a heart, there is progress, day by day, and vice-versa."

On February 9th, 1914, a young English traveler went to see Abdul-Baha in Haifa. He was interested in the economic problem and asked the following question: "When the time comes for the working people to become the partners of their employers, will they have their own representatives to consult with the company and will those who invest more capital receive more shares?" Abdul-Baha replied: "Certainly, when the working people become partners with the company, they will select their own representatives for consultation and those who have more capital will earn more money."

In the evening, Abdul-Baha called one of the pilgrims, known as Mirza Mahmood Forooghy, to him. (The translator knows this man personally. He is indeed one of God's heroes. One of his great works was this: When the first storm of tests blew in Acca and the fire of violation appeared, the eyes of most of the believers were closed to the truth; but his honor Mirza Mahmood Forooghy sounded the trumpet of firmness and their eyes became opened.) Abdul-Baha spoke to Mirza Mahmood Forooghy about the victory of the divine sovereignty over the material, saying that spiritual matters are promulgated by the inward and ideal power and not by outward conditions and circumstances.

At that moment, a group of Jewish Bahais, from Hamadan, Persia, came and Abdul-Baha answered all of their questions. The following is one of the answers: "The utterance of the Blessed Beauty that the descendants of Israel shall become dear, was made at a time when the people of Israel were still in the utmost degradation and before they had returned. He uttered these things in order that the glance of providence would surround them, so that they might progress, deliver themselves from humiliation and return to this holy land. That is why, day by day, they became dear and returned to the holy land. These things are all through the power of the blessed Word. They had been degraded for 1,600 years, but, after this blessed word was uttered, they became dear and progressed, although they had no soldiers, army nor government and although the other governments remained the same as before. But this blessed utterance is in behalf of the believers among the Israelites, that is, those who became believers. When the believers of the Israelites progressed and became dear, the non-believers progressed with them, like those, who go and eat at a feast, to which they are not invited. However, this progression is only as long as they are agreeable and friendly. Should they exercise enmity, they will not progress. Nay rather, they will destroy their own homes.”

On February 11th, Hadji Mussa, a Jewish Bahai, arrived from Azerbaijan, Persia. He went with the pilgrims to visit Abdul-Baha, who talked to them as follows: “Readiness is necessary in order to be a recipient of divine bounty. Souls who are prepared are like candles, coming in contact with fire. They become illumined. They are swayed by the wafting of a breeze. They become green and verdant from a drop of the sprinkling of the cloud of favor. They find merciful susceptibilities by hearing a word. But no fruits nor results can be obtained from the souls who are not ready. Thus the prepared souls, on hearing the divine call, respond, ‘Here we are!’ They turn to the Kingdom of Abha, investigate the realities of divine questions and arise to spread the fragrances of God. How many souls in the world have longed all of their lives to live in the days of one of the near servants of God and to reach the favor of being in the presence of one of the accepted servants in the threshold of the Truth, and yet it was impossible for them! Praise be to God, you have responded with ‘Aye!’ to the call of God, in the days of the Blessed Beauty. You are in the age of light and in the century of mysteries. God willing, you may be confirmed in services to the holy threshold and firm in the Covenant and Testament of God.”

On February 12th some of the friends went to see Abdul-Baha and heard him say the following: “We must execute the divine ordinances. The Blessed Beauty says, ‘If you have a word or a truth, which others are deprived of, present it with utmost compassion. If it is accepted, the aim is attained. If otherwise, you should not interfere. Leave him to himself, while advancing to God, the Mighty, the Self-subsisting.’ The duty of the friends, is this: To be kind to all nationalities and parties; to be all love; to be well-wishers and to associate with everyone, in the utmost unity. . . . They must always read the holy books, so that they may be familiar with their contents. . . . Do not write anything for the STAR OF THE WEST that might become the cause of repelling the souls. Nay, rather, write things that may become the cause of joy, advancement and hopefulness to the souls.”

In the afternoon, some of the German and British leaders went to visit Abdul-Baha and he talked to them about the holy land and Mount Carmel. He said: “The climate of Mount Carmel is peerless. Its sun is always shining, its moon, brilliant, its stars are gleaming and its lights are radiant. This holy land is the high land, wherein the prophets of God became manifest. Abraham, Ishmail, Isaac, Joseph, Moses, Aaron, Isaiah and the rest, were in the holy land. You must know the value of this land and love it. If a person travels in all of this holy land he will find all kinds of trees, those that grow in tropical as well as those of the temperate climates, such as pomegranate, dates, cypresses, walnut, etc. You must love this holy land very much. The Sun of Reality shone forth upon it and it is the dawning-point of the Manifestations of the Light of Divinity.” Then Abdul-Baha praised the climate and the inhabitants of Stuttgart, Germany, and spoke about the superstitions and imitations of the leaders of religion. He said: “They are promulgating matters which are not in accord with the divine books and which are contrary to sound minds. His holiness Christ says, ‘Sheath thou the sword,’ but they make the Krupp cannons. If you compare the deeds of the present nations with the behests of the holy books and with the deeds of the divine Manifestations, you will find that there is no relation whatever between them.”

In the evening, the general meeting for the friends and pilgrims was held in the blessed home. Abdul-Baha answered the question of one, who stood at his service, saying: "This cycle is the cycle of favor and not of justice. Therefore, those whose deeds are clean and pure, even though they are not believers, will not be deprived of the divine mercy; but perfection is in faith and deeds. Undoubtedly, a person, who is not a believer, but whose deeds and morals are good, is far better than one who claims his belief in words but, who, in actions, is a follower of satan. The Blessed Beauty says, 'My humiliation is not in my imprisonment, which, by my life, is an exaltation to me; nay rather, it is in the deeds of my friends, who attribute themselves to us and commit that which causes my heart and pen to weep!'"

In the afternoon of February 13th, the American pilgrims held a special memorial meeting, for the departure of Mirza Abul-Fazl, at the holy threshold of the Bab, on Mount Carmel. Abdul-Baha attended the meeting and spent that night at the home of Abbas Kuli, near the blessed tomb. In the morning of February 14th, Abdul-Baha went to the hospice (the home of the pilgrims) close to the tomb of the Bab and sat in the parlor, facing the tomb of Baha'o'llah. He said: "The view from this hospice is very beautiful, especially because it faces the tomb of the Blessed Beauty and Acca. In the future it will all be built up between Acca and Haifa. Acca and Haifa will be joined together and will take the first place in the world. Now, as I glance into the future, I see the greatest port in the world here. This semi-circular bay will be a large harbor for ships, so that the entering boats may be protected from the waves and winds of the storm. This harbor will be filled with ships of the nations. All of these regions will be decorated by buildings and lofty palaces. Many gardens and flower beds will be made. There will be electric lights and from here to Acca will be flooded with them. It will be a wonderful sight, especially at night, for those who come from the sea or who look from the summit of the mountains. From all of these regions, the cry of 'Ya-Baha-el-Abha!' (O Thou Glorious of the Most Glorious!) shall rise. All the souls will come in a state of supplication, imploring and chanting the communes. In every town, the melodies from the Mashrak-el-Azkar on this Mount Carmel, will be most pleasing to the ears.

"It is wonderful! Consider where this Cause was at first and where it is now! And where is Shiraz, Teheran, Bagdad, Roumelia, Constantinople and Acca! These events took place only for the fulfillment of the prophecies of the prophets. God's ways are wonderful. For 2,000 years, he has made the Cause travel here and there, until it reached the spot in which it would fulfill all the prophecies. God will, unquestionably, declare openly the Prince of Peace, of whom he spoke, through the prophets, and he will not erase a single letter."

In the morning of February 15th, a large number of American ladies, who were going to Jerusalem, visited Abdul-Baha. Afterwards, the governor of Damascus, the judge of Haifa and a number of statesmen went to see him, in his home. He spoke to them in detail about historical matters, scientific facts, the life histories of some of the doctors and sages of the past and of the requirements for this great century, the oneness of the world of humanity and universal peace.

In the afternoon, the president of Beirut College (Syrian Protestant College), the head of the hospital, and a large number of students, came to see Abdul-Baha and he spoke as follows:

"The schools should be free from all religious and racial prejudices, for these often prevent good results from being obtained. All schools and colleges should have these three foundations:

First—They should be sincere in the service of training the souls. They should discover the mysteries of nature and extend the circle of art, commerce, etc., so that ignorance and the lack of knowledge will pass away and the lights of science and knowledge shine forth from the horizon of the soul and heart. In all schools and universities, a general rule for training should be made.

Second—Training in morality is necessary, so that the pupils' good conduct may remain unchanged and so that they may progress in a most befitting manner, become possessed of lofty ideas, lovers of the world of humanity and so that they will hold fast to the spiritual perfections and to that which does not displease God.

Third—Service to the world of humanity should be obligatory. Every student should know, with perfect certainty, that he is the brother of the people of all religions and nations and that he should be without religious, racial, national, patriotic or political bias, so that he may find the thoughts of universal peace and the love of humankind firmly established in his heart. He should know himself as a servant of human society of all the countries in the world. He should see God as the heavenly father and all the servants, as his children, counting all of the nations, parties and sects as one family. The mothers in the homes, the teachers in the schools, the professors in the universities, and the leaders in the lofty gatherings, must cause these thoughts to be penetrative and effective, as the spirit, circulating in the veins and nerves of the children and pupils, so that the world of humanity may be delivered from the calamities of fanaticism, war, battle, hate and obstinacy, and so that the nether world may become the paradise of heaven."

In the evening, a group of Persian pilgrims came from Merv, Russia, and Abdul-Baha gave the following advices: "Never let the friends be separated from other people and nations. They must strive for unity and harmony, through good deeds and morals. They must be kind to all, tolerant with all and good in conduct. Day by day, may they become nearer to the threshold of the Blessed Beauty. May they engage in elevating the Word of God and arise in spreading the Cause of God. Day by day, may they become more attracted and more holy. Night and day, I supplicate and beseech the threshold of the Blessed Beauty, seeking confirmations and assistance for the friends of God. I have the greatest attachment for the friends of the Blessed Beauty and I never forget them."

On the morning of February 16th, the friends from Merv, Russia, left for their country and a party of nine, men and women, from Yezd, Nayreez (Persia) and Bombay (India), arrived in the holy land. Abdul-Baha was exceedingly glad to see them and showered his blessings upon them, saying: "In the beginning of the Cause, the friends in Nayreez and Serostan were surging in activity. The friends there are either of the old believers or of the children of the martyrs. They have indeed been of great service in the path of God. They were self-sacrificing and fell victims to severe tests, but all remained firm and steadfast. Now, also, they are busy, teaching the Cause of God. Today, confirmation is with those souls who arise to teach. The gardener is pleased with the flower that is diffusing its fragrance. The nostrils are perfumed by its sweet smell. The souls, who are engaged in teaching the Cause, resemble the full-blown flowers. Sweet fragrances are being diffused from the rose gardens of their hearts."

On February 17th, some of the believers, who had arrived the night before, from Khorassan (Persia), came to see Abdul-Baha and all bowed and fell at his feet. Abdul-Baha prevented them and said: "No, it is unlawful. It is unlawful, because, according to the blessed command, kneeling, kissing of the hands and bowing are prohibited. They are not accepted in the Cause of God. They belong to the holy tombs of Baha'o'llah, and the Bab and to the house of God." Estad Mohammed Riza of Ishkabad, asked if any of the great powers would become believers. Abdul-Baha replied: "All the people of the world will become believers. Should you compare the beginning of the Cause with it today, you would see what a quick influence the Word of God has and how the Cause of God has encompassed the horizons. At the time we left Teheran (Persia) for Bagdad, there was not a single believer in all the way. In all the cities there were none. In Bagdad, there were two or three persons, in a very deplorable condition. All of the people used to say, 'Now that the Blessed Beauty is gone, this Cause will be erased.' The elevation of the Word of God, which you see at present, is from the potency of the Cause of God. Is it possible to compare the present condition with that previous one? How many of the believers did they kill, tie up, and confiscate and rob their homes! Notwithstanding this, the Cause has reached its present degree because it is confirmed. The hosts of the Supreme Concourse assist it and the powers of the Kingdom of Abha confirm it. Unquestionably, all will come under the shadow of the Cause of God. Right there, in Ishkabad, had they ever before heard the name of the Cause? Now, praise be to God! the banner of the Cause of God is raised high. All the powers and nations are convinced that the aim of this community (the Bahais) is the harmony and unity of the world. They never join in corruption. They want to become the cause of the life of the world and the means of safety; awakening the souls and the cause of the spirituality of the creatures; life-givers and not life-takers. In the beginning of the Cause, the Babis (Ezelis) brought affairs to such a state that safety was utterly lost and they put the lives and property of all at stake. What a dilemma it was! What implications, vice and immorality took place! All of the people became assured that the Babis (Ezelis) were the enemies of the lives, property and the honor of humanity and that they were blood-thirsty, immoral and evil-doers. In Teheran, during the incident of the Shah (Nasser-el-Din Shah was shot by a boy), I remember hearing an akhond (Mohammedan priest) crying, 'O people! If you want to worship God and the prophet, if you want to protect your lives, property and honor, kill these Babis. They are the enemies of your possessions and of your honor. They are against the laws and religion.' All of these events took place, because Mirza Yahya (Ezel), Seyed Mohammed, Mullah Djaffar Naraki and such men, held disreputable gatherings every night and day. They were engaged in immorality and vice. This is why, in the history of the people, those calumnies were attributed to the origin of the Cause. They wrote that the Babis allowed each woman to have nine husbands. Therefore the Blessed Beauty arose, with a divine power and might. He removed all of those implications, unfurled the banner of holiness, pitched the tent of universal peace and called the people to faithfulness, good morals and peace. He said, 'If you are killed in God's service, it is better than for you to kill. Should you be in need of the very essentials of life, you must not raise your hand against anyone, not even a Jew. (In those days, the Jews were under great persecutions.) Be ye kind to all people, loyal to all the governments and deal fairly with all humanity. Be faithful, truthful, merci-

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

“And some of his signs”—Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha on the “signs” of Baha’o’llah

He Is God!

Praise be unto the One who created the world and made every existing thing wonderful!

He gave the sincere praise-worthy stations and made the invisible visible, but all others are groping in their deep sleep.

He laid the foundation in the erection of the lofty palace and the glorious light; created the new creatures in a manifest resurrection!—and still the people are heedless in their slumber.

He blew the horn; the (first) trumpet sounded; the drum was beaten; those in the world of existence were stunned!—and still the dead are dormant in the graves of their bodies.

Then the second trumpet sounded; it brought the breath of life to some of the dead; even the nursing mothers forgot their infants!—and still the people in their unconsciousness do not comprehend.

The day of judgment has come; the hour has struck; the path is extended; the balance (scale of justice) is set up; all the contingent beings are gathered (for judgment)!—and still the people are afflicted with blindness!

The light has shone forth; the Mount of Tôr became illumined; the soft breeze of the rose-gardens of the forgiving Lord blew gently; the fragrances of the Spirit were diffused; the dead were resurrected from the graves!—and still the heedless are asleep in their tombs.

The fires are blazing; heaven is nigh; the meadows are blooming; paradise has become a wonder!—and still the ignorant are wading in the stagnant pools of their imaginations.

The veil is removed; the curtain is lifted; the clouds are torn asunder; the Lord of Lords is manifest!—and still the criminally negligent are at loss.

He (Baha'o'llah) sounded forth the second trumpet and created for you the great Resurrection Day and gathered the holy souls in the Supreme Kingdom. Verily, therein are signs for the possessors of insight.

And some of his signs are the unfoldments of prophecies and glad tidings; the appearance of proofs and references; the expectations of the pure and devout—and they are of those who attain.

And some of his signs are his lights that are shining from the horizon of oneness; his rays that are beaming from the glorious dawning-point, and the declaration of the great glad tidings by his fore-runner (the Bab). Verily, therein is a clear evidence for those who reason.

And some of his signs are his manifestations and his appearance; his firmness and existence among the witnessing people in all the cities and among the tribes who attacked him from all sides like unto wolves.

And some of his signs are his steadfastness before the great nations and powerful governments, even before a host of enemies who shed blood and strive to wreck the divine edifice in every time and place. Verily, therein is a thought for those who reflect upon the signs of God.

And some of his signs are the wonders of his explanations; the eloquence of his utterances; the rapidity of revealing his words, verses, addresses, communes, interpretations of the symbols and illustrations of the parables. By thy life, the Cause is evident and clear to those who see with the eyes of justice!

And some of his signs are the rising of the sun of his knowledge; the ascending of the moon of his arts and the firmness of the perfections of his conditions. This is acknowledged by the well-informed and the learned of the nations.

And some of his signs are the preservation of his beauty, the protection of his human temple, the shining of his lights despite the attacks of his enemies with lances, swords and darting arrows from thousands of people. Verily, therein is an admonition to those who are just.

And some of his signs are his patience, calamities, ordeals, and sufferings under chains and fetters, while he was calling: "Come unto me, come unto me, O people of piety! Come unto me, come unto me, O party of goodness! Come unto me, come unto me, O rising points of light!" Verily, the door of mysteries is open—and still the wicked are wading in their mire.

And some of his signs are the revealing of his Book: his explicit messages as warnings to the kings; exhortations to the one who encircled the earth with a penetrating power and dominating force, whose great throne was destroyed within a few days (this refers to Napoleon III). This matter is well-known and obvious to the public.

And some of his signs are the sublimity of his greatness; the supremacy of his station; the immensity of his glory and the shining of his beauty in the horizon of the prison (Acca). Then the heads bowed, the voices were silenced and the faces were amazed at him. This is a proof that was not heard of in past centuries.

And some of his signs are the performing of miracles, the appearance of continuous and uninterrupted supernatural powers, like the bounty of his cloud and the acknowledgment by the heedless of the penetration of his light. By his life! the Cause is affirmed and clear to all who have come from all parties to the presence of the Living, the Self-subsisting.

And some of his signs are the shining of the sun of his century, the rising of the moon of his generation in the heaven of the ages—the supreme summit of the centuries, with exigencies, knowledge and arts that astonished the horizons, amazed the minds and became known and famous.

Verily, this is a complete matter!

ful, compassionate and serve the world of humanity. Consider the oneness of the world of humanity, because ye are all of one tree and the fruits of one branch.' Then it became evident to the governments and nations of the world that the Bahais are the essence of sanctity, lovers of peace and of safety, kind to all sects, faithful, truthful, harmless, patient, loyal and fruitful. Should poison be given to them (the Bahais) they will return honey. Should they be wounded, they will give in return a healing salve. If they hear curses and execrations, they send their prayers. In all of their aims, they only purpose the good of the creatures. They seek only the good pleasure of the Truth. They have no hope other than service and universal peace. Their happiness is only in the oneness of the world of humanity."

Afterwards, Abdul-Baha inquired about the health of the pilgrims, who came from Yezd, Persia, and gave the following utterances: "The friends of Yezd suffered great calamities. They experienced severe tests, the greatest tests possible. Notwithstanding the firmness and steadfastness of these friends, the people of violation and of instability, thought that they could promulgate doubt among these upright people. They believed that they could bring about corruption in the Cause, destroy the oneness and unity of the friends and bring humiliation to the Covenant of God, claiming, 'That the Blessed Beauty has favored us also.' They did not see that those favors were only in the relation of the souls to the Cause of God and that, when that relationship became severed and when the command was disobeyed, these favors vanished. Of what value, in itself, is the black stone (in Mecca)? But because it was given a relation to the Cause of God his holiness Mohammed, himself, bowed down to it. Why? Because it was related to God. It is likewise with the house of God. But these relationships are figurative and metaphoric. God is holy above these relationships. These are all bounties and not from merit. What relationship remains when they have turned from the good-pleasure of the Blessed Beauty and when they strive to wreck the edifice of God? Undoubtedly, every relationship becomes severed. However, I consider myself as a mosquito; nay, even weaker than that; but the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha, are unending. The bounties of the Blessed Beauty encompass us on all sides. What art thou to do? The Blessed Beauty says, 'We see you from my El-Abha (the Most Glorious) horizon. We shall assist those who arise to support my Cause with a host from the Supreme Concourse and a contingent from the near angels.' This is the field. Go forth and cry out! Raise the call! No one has confined nor prevented you. What will spending the nights and days in eating, sleeping, murmuring and finding fault result in, but loss? I do not prevent anyone from serving in the Cause of God. Nay rather, I always encourage and urge all to serve. I went myself and heralded the coming of the Kingdom. You, too, might have gone out, had you desired."

On February 18th, the pilgrims gathered to see Abdul-Baha, at his home in Haifa. In that meeting, news from Baku, Russia, was read, saying that Agha Mussa had held a wonderful memorial feast in the name of Mirza Abul-Fazl and that the friends had stopped their work, for three days and nights, because of their sorrow over his departure. In this meeting, the Persian consul gave a detailed address, telling of the unity and the harmony of the Bahais and of how they differ from the rest of the Persian communities, in that they are the cause of honor to the government and to the nation of Persia. On that day, explicit commands were revealed to the American and English friends teaching in India, which absolutely forbade them to interfere in political affairs or to speak a word in politics. They were commanded to occupy their time in spreading the spiritual fragrances and in elevating the Cause of the affectionate Lord.

It was mentioned in the presence of Abdul-Baha that Mr. Andrew Carnegie of America had given $2,000,000 for bringing about unity among the Christian sects. Abdul-Baha said: "His aim is good and a service to the world of humanity. O how I wish that all of the leaders of the people would spend their energy for unity and peace among all nations and sects!" At that moment, letters and newspapers arrived from the occident and Persia, bearing the glad tidings of the harmony and purpose of the believers in teaching the Cause. Abdul-Baha became exceedingly happy and prayed for confirmation from the Kingdom of Abha and for the protection of the believers. He said: "They must step with steadfast feet into this field and must think of naught else save the unity of the people and the elevation of the Word of God."

On the next day, February 19th, Abdul-Baha told the friends of the days of his childhood. He said: "In Teheran I spoke with a scholarly gentleman and gave him the divine Message. I talked to him about severance from all else save God, and I told him that the purpose of this life is not to attain high position, wealth and physical happiness; nor are eating, sleeping and enjoying the fellowship of the physical body, the only things to be desired. The purpose and end of the world of creation is spiritual life, knowledge of God, love of God, fear of disobedience to God and the perfections of the world of humanity. Should man characterize himself with these lofty qualities and virtues, the physical conditions will, undoubtedly, not seem interesting to him and he will detach himself from them. His heart will become illumined with the light of God; he will hear the call of the unseen joy and will become the center of the names and attributes of God. I conversed with him a great deal on these subjects and he became a very good believer.

"On another occasion, in the city of Bagdad, I talked with a learned man, Mullah Hassan, some of whose relatives were believers. No matter how hard they tried to give him the Message, he would not accept it. Once, they brought him to my house when I was just getting up from my sleep and combing my hair. They said, 'We have brought so-and-so here and we beg you to come and speak with him; perhaps, he will become a believer.' I said, 'Very well,' and then I turned to the Blessed Beauty and prayed: 'O Blessed Beauty, confirm me!' Afterwards, I talked to him, and in the same hour he became a believer. He became exceedingly good and was so enkindled that, although he was of high rank, he used to go into the kitchen and cook things with his own hand to entertain the friends."

That day news came of the spreading of the Cause and of the entrance into the Kingdom of some of the ministers in America. It made him very happy and he sent a number of tablets to America, saying: "My happiness is in these glad tidings and victories. Praise be to God! the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha are assisting. Although weary, weak and helpless, we are being assisted and supported by the bounties and confirmations of the Blessed Beauty. Who and what are we? These are the rays from the Sun of the Beauty of Abha and the light of the Supreme Horizon. How beautifully the poet says, 'The mosquito, to which thou givest power to fly, becomes a falcon.' Under the shadow of the Blessed Beauty, the atom becomes the sun; the ant becomes a Solomon;

the unpopular become popular, and the degraded find eternal glory."

In the afternoon, Abdul-Baha was very tired from speaking and writing, and so he went to his private place in his garden to rest a little. On the way, he jokingly told a story of a man whose wife had caused him such trouble and had kept him so busy that, when he was told to divorce her so as to get relief, he answered, "She does not give me a chance to find time to give her a divorce."

In the morning of February 20th, Abdul-Baha took a stroll in his garden and remarked on the beautiful weather, on the site and on the spirituality of Haifa and of Mount Carmel. Then, looking at the violets, carnations and other flowers, he said: "As long as a thing is rare and scarce, it seems more attractive and has greater value. In Bagdad there were few violets in our home and they were indescribably dear and attractive to our sight. But here none look at these violets and they are lost among so many flowers. As the quantity of a thing increases, its value decreases. And so it is in the beginning of the days of the Holy Manifestations; because the souls are so few, they are counted as the essences of existence in the estimation of God. They are always mentioned and considered in the holy threshold and the sacred court and they attain to everlasting life and eternal bounty because they are detached from all conditions and have lost themselves entirely in the good pleasure of God." After a while, Abdul-Baha quoted the following verse: "We are from thee and we wish for naught else save thee. Give thou the sweets to those who have not tasted the ecstasy of love."

In the afternoon, some of the people took their children to see Abdul-Baha. He received them with utmost kindness and generosity and even took off his own embroidered Persian shawl and with his blessed hands put it on the head of a little girl. In the evening he talked about the education of girls, saying: "In the past, they used to prevent girls from learning to read and write. In fact, these things were considered so sinful that should a woman know how to read or write she would not be desirable for marriage. But afterwards, through the influence of the teachings of the Blessed Beauty, the friends of God devoted most of their time to training their children. Now, they have established schools in Persia for teaching girls."

On the morning of February 21st, a number of Bahais, from Boshrowayh and Khorassan, Persia, and from Ishkabad, Russia, arrived in Haifa. Abdul-Baha spoke, in detail, about the steadfastness, sincerity and love of the believers, in those towns and countries. That afternoon a meeting and banquet were prepared, for all of the friends, at the tomb of the Bab. The men occupied one side of the holy threshold, the women the other. At the close of the meeting, Abdul-Baha told the friends to enter, one by one, inside the holy threshold and, last of all, he came and chanted with his wonderful, melodious voice, the Tablet of Visitation. He and the friends supplicated and prayed for all of God's children and besought confirmations and heavenly bounty for them. When the prayers were over, Abdul-Baha gave permission for a photograph to be taken of himself sitting in front of the friends [See issue No. 1, Vol. V, STAR OF THE WEST], who were standing in a group. But, after consenting to this, he refused to remain seated, saying, "I prefer to stand as one of the friends and as one of the beloved of the Blessed Beauty." After the picture was taken, all were served with tea, fruit and sweetmeats.

On February 22nd, a group of tourists from England visited Abdul-Baha. He spoke to them about the teachings and of the history of the Cause and they left with their hearts exceedingly touched and attracted. Afterwards, while he was answering some important letters from the occident, a professor from Beirut College came to see him. Abdul-Baha spoke to him about the importance of preventing all prejudices and superstitions and of bringing about unity and harmony among the different religions and sects. He said: "Everyone must do away with false prejudices and must even go to the other churches and mosques, for, in all of these worshiping places, the name of God is mentioned. Since all gather to worship God, what difference does it make? None of these worship satan. The Mohammedans must go to the churches of the Christians and of the Jews and vice-versa, the others must go to the Mohammedan mosques. They hold aloof from one another merely because of unfounded prejudices and dogmas. In America, I went to the Jewish synagogues, which are similar to the Christian churches, and I saw them worshiping God everywhere. In most of these places I spoke to them about the original foundations of the divine religions and I explained to them the proofs of the validity of the divine prophets and of the holy Manifestations. I encouraged them to do away with blind imitations. All of the leaders must, likewise, go to the churches of one another and speak of the foundation and of the fundamental principles of the divine religions. In the utmost unity and harmony, they must worship God, in the worshiping places of one another and they must abandon these false fanaticisms. Man must be possessed of sincerity and love and must be in a state of peace and safety. When you mention God to me, I must be pleased with you. The mention of God is good, no matter by what tongue." Abdul-Baha afterwards spoke of the prejudices and superstitions of the Jewish leaders and remarked in detail about the bitter persecutions inflicted by another Christian sect upon the Presbyterians in Paris, simply because of false prejudices.

(It is a fact that, in the oriental Christian Schools, all Mohammedans and followers of other religions, are compelled to attend the Christian chapels and churches. But the Christians do not go to the mosques or synagogues. In 1908, when the Turkish Empire was freed from the chains of absolute monarchy and the constitution was established by the Young Turks and the famous Society of Union and Progress, all of the students, who were not Christians, refused to attend any church by force. The college faculty, who were American Presbyterian missionaries, without making any exceptions, gave the students a choice of attending the church or of being expelled. The translator at that time, was just finishing his medical training in this university and this controversy was one of the causes for his leaving the orient and completing his studies in a Chicago university.)

Story told by Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, October 25, 1913

MY grandfather had many colored maids and servants. When the Blessed Perfection became the head of the family he liberated all of them, and gave them permission to leave or stay, but if they desired to remain it would, of course, be in a different manner. However, all of them, revelling in their new-found freedom preferred to leave, except Esfandayar, who remained in the household and continued to serve us with proverbial faithfulness and chastity. Then when Baha'o'llah became known as a Babi, and he was teaching many people, the populace rose against him, and with the tacit consent of the government, our house was pillaged and ransacked. My father was put into prison and we were persecuted on all sides. For days the rabble in their fanatical fury and rage threw stones into our house, broke the windows and damaged everything. At that time I was probably six or seven years old. Everybody had left us, and our family then consisted of my mother, my sister (the Greatest Holy Leaf) and Agha Mussa. Fearing that the stones thrown into the house might hit one of us, my mother set out and rented a small house in an entirely different quarter of the city, and for fear of recognition she carried us safely to our new, humble quarters by night.

On the other hand, the enemies of my father, who had poisoned the mind of the Shah by saying that he harbored secret plans against the throne, were convinced that Esfandayar was the guardian of all the secret plans of Baha'o'llah. Therefore, they imagined that if once they laid their hands on Esfandayar they would force out of him everything, and then be able to substantiate their vague accusations with these solid facts. Hence they commissioned one hundred and fifty policemen to find him and bring him before them. Esfandayar had a chum with whom he passed most of his time. At first they tried to get hold of his chum, thus he might divulge the hiding-place of Esfandayar, but they failed in their purpose.

One midnight we were roused out of our sleep by a loud knocking at the door. It was opened, and lo, and behold, it was Esfandayar. My mother said to him with anxiety: "How is it that thou art yet in the city? Dost thou not know that there are one hundred and fifty policemen after thee? Fly as quickly as thou canst. If they get hold of thee, thy life will be in danger." But he smiled and answered: "No, I will not leave

Teheran, even if an hundred or a thousand policemen are after me. I am not afraid. I have many debts in the bazaar. I owe money to many shopkeepers, and before I leave this city I must pay off all the debts. I do not want the people to say afterward that the negro servant of Baha'o'llah escaped without paying his debts." Then he left us, and for one month and a half he walked in broad daylight in the streets and bazaars, and finally succeeded in clearing off all his financial obligations. All this time the policemen were after him, but could not catch him. Then, one night he appeared again, and said: "I am now free. I have actually paid all my debts and will leave the city with a clear conscience." He went to Mazandaran, and the governor, who was not a Bahai, engaged him in his service, made him the chief of his equerry and protected him from the pursuit of his enemies. Years lapsed, and the governor, being a religious man, desired to make a pilgrimage to the holy city of Karbala. Naturally, he took with him Esfandayar, who by this time had grown so much in his favor that he could not bear to be separated from him. When they reached the city of Bagdad, Esfandayar was overjoyed to stand again in the presence of Baha'o'llah, because he loved him most intensely. He requested Baha'o'llah to keep him, saying that he would rather leave the governor and serve his old master. But Baha'o'llah said to him: "You must act in this matter in accord with the wish of the governor. You owe him a debt of deep gratitude, because at a time when your life was in danger, he gave you a position and stopped the persecution of your enemies. Now, if he is willing to have you remain with us, we will accept you; otherwise you must continue to serve him with the same zeal and sincerity that you have served us in the past."

Esfandayar went to the governor and explained his case. He answered: "It is impossible. I cannot find in this wide world another man as honest and faithful as thyself. Thou must continue to stay with me. I have grown to love thee and will do everything to add to thy comfort and happiness." Of course Esfandayar was heartbroken over this decision, but he had to abide by the decision of the Blessed Perfection. He in turn consoled him with his blessings showered upon him. Esfandayar returned to Mazandaran with the governor and stayed with him until his last day.

Such was the sterling faithfulness of Esfandayar that whenever I think of him, my eyes grow dim with tears. He was a king among men, a glorious star in the heaven of humanity. Although his face was black, his heart was white as the snow. He was peerless and had no equal. I cannot sufficiently praise him. I love him. He was a glory and a jewel on the crown of the colored race, for his life was a noble record of proud achievement, and the whole world may learn a lesson from it.

"My home is the home of laughter and exultation"

From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 26, 1914

WHILE Abdul-Baha was dictating tablets this morning, an Arab was announced and after a few minutes another one came in. Abdul-Baha instantly saw that these grown-up children of nature were not friendly with each other and as a subtle master of human nature, he started immediately to establish conciliation between them. Each of them sat there inwardly growling at his enemy. At first Abdul-Baha spoke to them in such a manner as to make them laugh. They did not want to laugh, neither did they want to look at each other, but they could not help doing both. Then with his deep insight into their hearts he said:

"Are not men really children? The life of men is but a few days; then death overtakes them. Is it not foolish to attach one's heart to the wordly love and hate? Why should we let envy and hatred separate us? The strange part of it is that they have no outward existence. Happiness is the king of our hearts. Let us not part from it. If the candle of happiness is ignited in the chamber of our heart, all the foreboding gloom of evil suggestions will be dispelled. My home is the home of peace. My home is the home of joy and delight. My home is the home of laughter and exultation. Whosoever enters through the portals of this home, must go out with gladsome heart. This is the home of light; whosoever enters here must become illumined. This is the home of knowledge: the one who enters it must receive knowledge. This is the home of love: those who come in must learn the lessons of love; thus may they know how to love each other. Whenever I see people exercise love and good-fellowship among themselves, my heart is exceedingly rejoiced. . . . God willing, you will always love one another. Praise be to God, that you are brothers in faith. You are the citizens of one country, the inhabitants of one town. The members of your families have known one another for years. Why then this feud? Why this ill-feeling? Why this mutual hatred?"

Then he related to them story after story, making them now laugh and now become serious. Finally when he observed the time had come, he got up from his seat and asked them to kiss one another and be true friends ever afterwards. "Is it not much better to be friends than enemies?" Abdul-Baha asked them. Then he went into another room and brought candy and two silk handkerchiefs for each one. "By this token you are plighted together forever."

"We are the slaves of Abbas Effendi. We will do thy holy bidding. It seems God directed our steps to your home this morning," they said. They left the house laughing and holding one another's hands.

The Power of the Holy Spirit

Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June, 1913.

IN Tiberias the missionaries have built a modern hospital and pharmacy. The doctor has been serving there for thirty-two years. At least every year one thousand Jews enter the hospital and go out healed, but none of them ever becomes a Christian. The doctor used to tell me: "I am at my wit's end in thinking out the reason of the success of the Bahais in the propagation of their teaching. Without any means at hand they succeed in making these Jews Bahais, but with all these hospitals and schools and charities we do not succeed. How is this?"

I replied: "Think for one moment of this singular fact. The Jews who became Christians in apostolic and post-apostolic times were not attracted to the Christian doctrine by hospitals, etc. On the contrary they were beaten, persecuted and killed. Notwithstanding these things they accepted Christianity. Why is this? Those early teachers possessed the heavenly power and with that power they were able to carry the gospel into distant lands. Now, in this day the Bahais are teaching people with the same divine power. They are baptized with the power of the Holy Spirit. They have forgotten the ego and are soaring toward the Kingdom of sanctity. The most efficient capital of the Bahai teacher is the divine power. With that alone he may conquer the cities of the hearts."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes, these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'OLLAH.

The Tenth Annual Convention of Bahai Temple Unity

BY HARLAN F. OBER

THE Tenth Annual Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity has passed into history. It will be remembered by those who were accorded the blessed privilege of attending it, as a most fragrant, a most united, and spiritually illumined Convention.

Many, many times in the past, Abdul-Baha has informed the friends that the growth of the Cause would bring tests and trials, but that these were like the storms of the winter and spring, the means of the descent of the divine bounties, and the greatest preparation for the summer and harvest time.

The tests of the past year have united the firm friends in a closer bond of fellowship and understanding, and in the Convention the traces of this greater union became manifest.

From the beginning, the work of the annual meeting and Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity has grown and broadened. It has become not only the great central meeting of consultation to give power and result to the plans for building the Mashrekol-azkar,* but it has become the time for the coming together of the friends to consult on every matter that affects the welfare and the growth of the Cause.

To this annual meeting come the friends from the north, the south, the east and the west, and in its deliberations all experiences are amalgamated. Our perspectives are broadened, and our hearts are rejoiced at the news of the progress of the Cause.

Is there any greater happiness than to meet face to face those souls who have been out spreading the divine seeds in the soil of human hearts, and have gathered into their own souls the heavenly bounties that come from such service, or again those who have been in the front ranks of the army of faithfulness, whose souls have mellowed and ripened through the tests and trials of God, through which the heavenly luminary has been shining brilliantly upon receptive, humble, fearless hearts?

Abdul-Baha has said that such souls are the fragrant blossoms and heavenly fruits of the gardens of the Kingdom.

No written statement or report can convey adequately the divine significances and the real meanings of such a gathering, for only the inner spiritual ear can hear these divine melodies. The Divine Bird was singing songs upon the highest branch, and one after another of the friends caught the heavenly strain and rejoiced our hearts with eloquent utterances of the spirit. Even through the more or less matter-of-fact transcript of the notes taken down, there will appear to the possessor of insight, the traces of these songs, for behind the words it is apparent that the standard of the Covenant is being raised in the hearts, a new standard of perfection being realized, a new flight being taken, a new obedience entralling the souls,

*Please note the revised spelling of this phrase. The change has been made to assist the pronunciation.—Editors.

a new love binding the hearts to the Center of the Covenant of God.

Personalities did not appear in this meeting because the importance of all the matters discussed was such that all lesser things were overwhelmed. No such frankness and directness of expression could appear except in a meeting consecrated to the most great servitude. In truth, the desire of all was servitude in the path of God. From the beginning to the end the friends were submerged in the most great sea of His protection. The waves of spiritual effort surged, and the depths revealed the certainty and steadfastness of God.

The Feast of El-Rizwan and the Bahai Congress

ON the night of the Feast of El-Rizwan, when the "beloved of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful" were gathered at the "supper of the Lord" to eat from the heavenly table, the life-giving food of His Word, the power and presence of the Holy Spirit hovered, with outstretched wings, over all. It was not the hour of consummation, because all were to first unite and stand together in the holy place, but that first hour, with its beauty, harmony and peace, was an exquisite prelude to the divine symphony of this Congress and Convention. As each one arose to contribute their share to the blessed gathering, they became for a moment imbued with a holy power, and from the opening of the Feast to the last hour of the Congress, each one became ever increasingly conscious of the presence of Abdul-Baha, conscious that the focal point present in our midst was the Center of the Covenant; and this divine musician played each instrument, and this one speaker spoke from every mouth, so that the overpowering impression, the deep realization borne away by each one to be diffused through all the assemblies of America, was of the spiritual presence of the Center of the Covenant. What pen could reveal the inner mystery of this divine Convention, the fire of his beauty burning in the hearts and faces, his all-pervading power—the sweetness, the fragrance, the joy and ecstasy of his love—his presence!

O FRIENDS, know that the believers of God must be the cause of union and love among all mankind, and until they attain to perfect harmony and agreement they will not become the remedy for the healing of this sick world. From the very beginning of the Mashrak-el-Azkar in Isfahan, Russia, day by day, everything has been in perfect harmony, until the believers there accomplished their aim, and it was builded easily, for it was builded by love. Now I hope that in America it will be the same as in Russia, and the Mashrak-el-Azkar there be erected by the power of the union and love existing among the believers.

Even the decorations typified the spirit of the occasion. The tables radiated from one center like rays from the sun, which the focal point of the decorative scheme represented, emblazoned with the Great-est Name.

Mr. Albert R. Windust gave the message with power and clearness; Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi presented a burning and poetic picture of the origin of the Feast of El-Rizwan in the sacred garden of Nadjib-Pasha, known as El-Rizwan, rose-garden, where the Blessed Beauty (Baha'o'llah) unveiled his adored face and lighted all the horizons of the world. Miss Agnes Alexander told of the divine seed sown in Japan, of the greatness of the "new" Beloved, and couched in the most touching language of the soul, of devotion, gratitude, longing, humility and aspiration.

At the first session of the Congress, Sunday afternoon, April 28th, the divine principles were not only expounded but became clearly revealed through their living expressions, the Bahais themselves. The speakers, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt and Mrs. May Maxwell, united in a oneness of purpose, a harmony of ideas in which each completed the voice of the other and their thoughts were blended in an absolute unity, thereby demonstrating that ray of the Sun of Truth which proclaims that man and woman are the two wings of the one bird of humanity. Mr. Lunt spoke of the Mashrekol-azkar its outer unifying purpose and many life-giving functions; he showed that the Mashrekol-azkars of the world will be the spiritual centres, from which all the divine Principles will flow to irrigate and nurture mankind. That they are the holy of holies from which point the law of God will go forth. The real eternal temple of God on earth is the law of God. In the time of Moses this law was symbolized by the sacrifice of animals, but today the law of God is the mystery of the sacrifice of the spirit. The inner holy of holies never changes but is the very altar of the human heart where all that is not of God is burned in the sacrificial fire of his love.

Mrs. Maxwell opened by saying: "Among the Bahais there are no speakers; in the world today there is but one speaker and He is God. In the presence of the Word of God the whole world is silent." She then unfolded the principles of The Most Great Peace toward which the evolutionary forces of the world are moving, but which in themselves are powerless to create peace. She said: "Peace is a divine reality, which the Manifestation of God, Baha'o'llah, brought to the world, but the world was slumbering and dead, 'was deaf to his call and blind to his beauty.' Nevertheless the new creation, the dawn of The Most Great Peace, has been breathed into the body of the world. After forty years imprisonment, Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant of God, has again raised the call, has by a miracle been liberated from prison and went forth to all the nations of Europe and America, journeying far and wide, warning the people of the impending disaster, of the 'world consuming fire' which would burst forth and wreak universal havoc and ruin. In stern, impassioned tones he implored mankind to awake and avert this 'most great calamity!' The world did not hear his call and the world was without excuse before the throne of God."

The speaker then stated that all this dire affliction, overpowering destruction and self-annihilation had come upon mankind as the result of not hearkening unto the voice of God. She said: "Not until mankind turns to the Sun of Truth, to the Ark of Deliverance, the Center of the Covenant of God, will the flood of calamities subside and the world find rest. The people of the world today have created for themselves a 'God.' They are worshippers of superstition and imagination, and know nothing of the divine Reality. God is kind, merciful and compassionate toward all mankind, in His sight there is no race, party or nation. He is the God of all, the Beloved of every heart."

Such was the spirit of the speakers at all of the Congress sessions. Lack of space forbids giving the addresses in detail, but we will state that at both the second and third sessions of the Congress, the principles of Baha'o'llah—as expounded by Abdul-Baha when in America—were further elucidated with power and eloquence of the Spirit, reaching a great climax in the masterly presentation by Dr. F. W. D'Evelyn, of San Francisco, on Tuesday evening.

The informal social meeting for the visiting delegates and friends under the auspices of the Chicago friends was a delightful hour of entertainment and relaxation. Dr. Wm. F. Slater acted as host, and Mrs. Maud Houser as hostess.

On Monday evening, Mr. Harlan F. Ober spoke in place of Mr. Hooper Harris, who could not attend the Congress. He was followed by Mr. Louis G. Gregory.

At the opening session of the Convention, Monday morning, Mr. Harry Randall rendered a splendid service. With humility and simplicity, but deep spiritual power and conviction, he struck the keynote of the Convention: absolute unswerving loyalty, singleness, and obedience to the Center of the Covenant, and the unity of all the friends in that immutable Center. He said that the believers of America are today offered the most supreme opportunity that has ever been given to any people in the history of mankind, that of establishing unity on this earth on its eternal foundation—the Center of the Covenant of God.

This Congress and Convention will surely go down in the history of the Cause as the Convention of the Covenant, the consummation of all our hopes and the fulfillment of the will of Abdul-Baha. After the cleansing of the sanctuary from the taint of violation, when the friends all united in the holy place of obedience to the Center of the Covenant, then the confirmation of the Spirit descended, the hearts were set ablaze with the fire of eternity, the mirror of unity reflected the face of the Beloved and the foundation of oneness was laid. From that hour everything moved with a supreme power toward its destined end. The mighty flow of spiritual events was like a deep river rushing onward to the bosom of the sea. When the representatives from all the assemblies in America and Canada met in that great gathering of the firm and steadfast ones, and took that decisive action, that “great step of the soul,” and united in the immutable power of the Center of the Covenant, a new day dawned in America and the reality of the Cause of Baha’o’llah became manifest. As a stone cast into the center of a body of water sends forth wave upon wave to the uttermost circumference, so when the power of the Covenant became fully established and firmly founded in the very heart and core of the Cause, this world-illuminating Orb sent forth mighty waves of divine energy and spiritual activity throughout the world.

Report of the Tenth Annual Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity

Held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, April 27th to 30th, 1918

MONDAY MORNING SESSION

Auditorium Hotel, ninth floor, Monday, April 29th.

THE Convention was called to order at 10:15 o’clock A. M., Mr. William H. Randall, President of the Executive Board, acting as Chairman, and Mr. Harlan Foster Ober, Secretary of the Executive Board, acting as Secretary of the meeting.

The meeting was opened by singing the “Benediction,” after which the Chairman welcomed the delegates to the Convention, and asked for the nomination of a temporary chairman.

On motion of Mrs. Rice-Wray, seconded by Mrs. Maxwell, Dr. F. W. D’Evelyn, of San Francisco, was elected temporary chairman of the meeting by unanimous consent.

Dr. D’Evelyn thereupon assumed the Chair and called upon Mr. Ober for a statement regarding the assemblies which had registered and those which had not registered, in accordance with the resolution passed at the 1917 Convention.

Mr. Ober: “Not all of the assemblies registered in accordance with the resolution passed at the 1917 Convention, so that in this preliminary part of the Convention only the delegates from the following assemblies have legally a right to take part: Chicago; Jersey City; Ithaca; Glenolden, Pa.; Worcester; Buffalo; Brooklyn; New York City; Bakersfield, Calif.; Cleveland; Atlantic City; Denver; Detroit; New Haven; Cambridge; Geyserville, Calif.; Muskegon, Mich.; St. John, New Brunswick; Peoria; Philadelphia; Portland, Oregon; Racine, Wis.; Washington, D. C.; Kenosha, Wis.; Riverton, N. J.; Spokane, Wash.; Seattle; Sandusky; Pittsburgh, Pa.; San Diego, Calif.

"The following is the list of the assemblies whose applications, in accordance with the by-laws, have been passed upon favorably by the Executive Board and are recommended by the Executive Board to the Convention: Memphis, Tenn.; Schenectady, N. Y.; Benton Sid-ing, British Columbia; Nutley, N. J.; Montclair, N. J.; Minneapolis Minn.; Fruitport, Mich.; St. Louis; Boston, Mass.; Urbana, Ill.; San Francisco, Calif.; Salem and Beverly, Mass.; Oswego, N. Y.; Berkeley, Calif.; Springfield, Mass.; Montreal, Canada; Eliot, Maine; Lakeland, Florida; Baltimore, Md.; Los Angeles, Calif.; St. Paul, Minn.

"One or two others have come in since but have not been passed upon by the Board."

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "These latter names just read by Mr. Ober are those who have overlooked the arrangements that were made at the Convention in Boston. It is, however, the privilege of the present Convention to endorse their applications and permit them to be considered as established delegates and members of the Unity. What is your pleasure?"

On motion of Mr. Lunt, seconded by Mrs. Ober, it was voted that this privilege be granted to these assemblies and that they be considered as members of the Unity.

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "The next matter for our consideration is the formation of a Committee on Credentials. Do you wish that committee to be appointed from the floor or by the Chair?"

On motion of Mrs. Cooper, seconded by Mrs. Ober, it was voted that the committee be appointed by the Chair.

The Chair appointed Mrs. Hoagg, Mr.

Remey and Mrs. True a committee to nominate a Committee on Credentials.

On motion of Mr. Randall, duly seconded, it was voted by unanimous agreement that the Chair appoint a committee to nominate officers for the permanent organization.

The Chair announced the appointment of the following as a committee to nominate officers for the permanent organization: Mrs. Ella G. Cooper, Mrs. Harlan F. Ober, Mr. Carl Scheffler.

The committee on the appointment of the Credentials Committee reported the names of the following: Mrs. Helen S. Goodall, Mr. Louis G. Gregory, and Mr. William H. Randall. The Chair endorsed the choice and appointed them as the Committee on Credentials.

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "Now we have to ask your indulgence again upon two other assemblies which we would be pleased to have you admit to the same standing as those you have already passed upon. These assemblies are Santa Paula, California, and New York Mills, Minnesota. If there is no objection, they will take the same course as the others."

Mr. Lunt: "Since it is improbable that the Committee on Credentials will be able to report before 12 or 12:30, could we not avail ourselves of the precedent established in previous years and hear informally, as a temporary organization, the reports of the officers of the Unity? And later on, after the permanent organization is formed, we can approve those reports."

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "You have anticipated our next movement, sir. Mrs. True will now give us a report."

Mrs. True: "This is the Financial Secretary's report. On account of the Convention coming in the middle or latter part of the month, the Executive Board last year voted that our accounts be closed on the last day of March or the first day of April. So my report is to the last day of March.

"On the last day of March there was in the bank $13,486.75 as a checking account. We hold in certificates of deposit which are renewed every four months and are at the rate of 3%, three certificates of deposit; the first certificate which is due May 19, 1918, $25,655.51; a second certificate due June 13, $36,552.84; a third certificate due June 15, $25,439.37; a total in certificates of deposit of $87,647.72.

"So that in all we had with the checking account and the certificates of deposit $101,134.47.

"Mr. Randall, who is the treasurer of the Building Fund Committee, will give you a report of other holdings beside money. Although this, in the world's history, has been the most frightful year that has ever been known on this planet, and although in our country financial conditions have been very difficult, yet it has been the most prosperous year in the Mashrekol-azkar work that we have ever had. During the year from April 1, 1917, to March 31, 1918, we have received $75,922.91 besides the other holdings which the Building Fund Committee will report to you."

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "You have heard Mrs. True's report and it is a very satisfactory and encouraging one. Mr. Randall will supplement it now."

Mr. Randall: "I know you would like to hear the results of the pledge system, as I am speaking now for the Building Fund Committee. The invitation for the Bahais to contribute to the Mashrekol-azkar Fund, brought 195 pledges, signed on the pledge cards. At the present time 95 have been paid in full, there are yet remaining 100 with certain amounts still to be paid. The total amount of the pledges was $67,534.50. The amount still due on pledges is $32,444.80. In addition to that there has been overpaid on pledges, that is, more than the pledge called for, $5,990.66. There has been turned in to the committee, without any pledges at all, merely as contributions, $7,638.10; and up to the 20th of April this money, as it has been paid in, has all been turned in to the financial secretary.

"Now in addition to these amounts in dollars and cents, there are in the custody of this committee, contributions as follows: 5 shares of American Can, preferred, worth about $450; 100 shares Pennsylvania Railroad stock, worth about $4,400; 4 $50 Liberty Bonds worth approximately $200; a beautiful piece of tapestry, appraised at $1,200.

"The amount of money that has been turned over to the financial secretary, by the Building Fund Committee and which is included in her report, is $42,819.45."

Mr. Randall further stated that he knew of certain substantial sums of money which the donors planned to turn into the temple treasury in the future.

Chairman D'Evelyn: "Mr. Hall will now make his report."

Mr. Albert H. Hall, the Treasurer, made the following report:

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "I think we might now have a report from Mr. Ober, the secretary, covering our other activities."

Mr. Ober: "The most important reports brought to the Convention are those which show the actual deeds and accomplishments in the way of raising this initial fund of from $200,000 to $300,000. At the most, the report of the Secretary merely outlines the meetings and the various consultations which were—no doubt, through the assistance of Abdul-Baha—permitted to stimulate this gathering. It appears that every one of us should be in the condition of utmost thankfulness and rejoicing over the tremendous response that has been made during the past year; for it shows, more than anything else, how deep down in the hearts of the believers is the longing irrespective of all outer conditions in the world of existence, in the Cause of God, to fulfill completely the exhortations of Abdul-Baha, and to raise the required fund so that this work may be done in his day, so that the cornerstone, the actual beginning of the wonderful edifice of God, the Mashrekol-azkar, can be completed here in Wilmette by the blessed hands of the Center of the Covenant himself. The response to the Building Fund Committee's letter in October was certainly wonderful and extraordinary; and it would appear that there needs to be one more really mighty effort in order to establish the treasury at the minimum that Abdul-Baha has required, in order that we may cable him, or send word to him, that we have fulfilled his requirements; and, when we do that, how do we know of the effect it will have upon the conditions of the entire universe?

"The proof, in the past, of steadfastness, was words, but today Baha'o'llah has said that it is by deeds. The great thing that will be remembered regarding the work of the Temple Unity and of the Executive Board is that it was obedient to the exhortations of Abdul-Baha, and that it really accomplished that which it undertook, under the suggestions and under the commands of Abdul-Baha.

"It is not impossible to conceive that before this Convention goes, before we separate within the next two days, we will be in a position to send word to Abdul-Baha, by messenger or by cable to Egypt, or by any way that is in the wisdom of the Convention to decide, that we are prepared now for his next command.

"Down underneath, in the midst of all the difficulties and trials which have beset the Cause, the yearning and longing of the sincere hearts of the members of the Executive Board have been to obey this exhortation and to serve this wonderful command.

"In the meetings which have been held in Chicago, in Boston, and in New York, the discussions and considerations were all revolving around this great central point. Shall we not arise and make this the great final effort? Shall not the wave of the love of God, shall not the wave of the obedience of the believers to the commands of God submerge this Convention so that we make a lasting, great sacrifice? From the treasurer, from the financial secretary, and from the treasurer of the building fund committee, we certainly have had reports that are most stimulating and most wonderful. It makes that goal so alluring and seem so near. So we need to come together and make up our minds that in this Convention, before it comes to an end, we shall enter upon a period of sacrifice that shall make the remaining pathway shorter. It depends upon our obedience to Abdul-Baha, upon the existence of the wonderful spiritual unity which comes alone from Abdul-Baha. It will come from our consciousness of the actual presence of Abdul-Baha in our midst, in these our deliberations and in our inspirational efforts, and in the steps that we take in accordance with the confirmations of the Holy Spirit."

Mrs. Coles: "Directly to the question, and directly to the statement of Mr. Ober, I want to speak about the radiant possibility of achievement. I stand here as one of the little group that in the early convention put 95 cents into the building fund. I remember so well how we went to Mrs. True and gave her 95 cents, one by one, and put it in her hand with faith, with love, with trust, with confidence and with absolute assurance that the prayer that went with that 95 cents put into Mrs. True's hands was the seed planted that would bring about this great growth. And to think that the $200,000 goal is so near, and that we so soon may be able to cable to Abdul-Baha that we have fulfilled his requirements—the thought makes for so much greater dynamic power, that we seem to see that temple built." (Applause.)

Mr. Hall: "There was one more thing that I wanted to report. There is a $500 note that is due May 1 and is good."

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn then called for reports from some of the delegates. Miss Agnes Alexander spoke for Japan, Mrs. Rice-Wray spoke for Detroit, Mrs. Kibby for Cleveland and Dr. Bagdadi for Chicago.

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "The secretary has an announcement to make."

Mr. Ober: "This is an announcement from the convention committee. The Committee on Convention has arranged for the holding of this afternoon's session at 5338 Kenmore Avenue, that is, at Mrs. True's home, when important questions will be taken up. The Tuesday sessions will be held in this hall unless otherwise ordered by the Convention."

Thereupon after the reading of the prayer by the Chairman the Convention adjourned until 2:30 o'clock P. M. of the same day to meet at Mrs. True's residence, 5338 Kenmore Ave., Chicago.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION

Residence of Mrs. Corinne True

On motion by Mr. Lunt, duly seconded, it was voted to accept the report of the Committee on Credentials in reference to the first class, that is, those whose credentials are entirely regular and who are qualified in the opinion of the Committee on Credentials.

Mr. Gregory: "The credentials of the following are irregular. These credentials were received by telegram and we have not been able as a committee to verify the persons who sent the telegrams from the assemblies. This is a matter to be left for the action of the Convention. The committee, I take it, is of the opinion that credentials received in this way are irregular and there is a question whether the persons who come this way as delegates should be seated; and it is not so much a matter of questioning the validity of the credentials as perhaps the establishment of a bad precedent. Things of that kind could be easily carried too far on occasions when it means more to the Convention than it does at the present time.

"The Santa Barbara, California; North Augusta, South Carolina; and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania assemblies, are in this list."

After full discussion on motion duly made and seconded it was voted not to accept the irregular applications, that is, all of those included in class two of the Committee on Credentials report.

Mr. Gregory: "Major Honore J. Jaxon and Frank H. Hoffman appeared before the Committee on Credentials and handed us credentials as delegate and alternate to this Convention, as representatives of 'The Chicago Bahai Assembly,' so called. They claimed and reserved any and all legal rights they claim, to seats in the Convention, denied violation of the Covenant and placed their claim to recognition on personal grounds, as the representatives of 'The Chicago Bahai Assembly' and as representatives of a third group known as 'The Assembled Bahais of Chicago.' They also asked in courtesy that if the Committee on Credentials should report adversely to their interests that the right to state their case on the floor of the Convention be granted. This statement, request and their credentials were considered.

"The Committee on Credentials agree with the recommendation of the Temple Unity Board, that the formation and registration of the so-called 'Chicago Bahai Assembly,' otherwise known as the Reading Room group, is irregular and that furthermore, violation of the Covenant of God has been proven to exist among persons connected with the said reading room, and that persons who attend the said meetings of the reading room group, are either violators or associated with violators.

"The Committee on Credentials therefore recommends that no representatives of the said group be admitted to this Convention, or seated therein as delegates.

(Signed) Helen S. Goodall,
Wm. H. Randall,
Louis G. Gregory."

Chairman Dr. D'Evelyn: "You have heard the recommendations of this committee in regard to action on Group 3. What is your pleasure?"

Mr. Lunt: "I move its adoption."

Mr. Ober: "I second it."

Motion carried.

Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, the permanent Chairman of the Convention, then assumed the Chair.

The Chairman: "I will not take any time for a lengthy speech but I will only pledge my efforts to the service of Abdul-Baha and this Convention. Because of the lateness of the hour if there is no objection we will close this session."

After the reading of prayer by the Chairman, the Convention adjourned at 5:40 p. m., to meet the following morning, Tuesday, April 30th, at 10 o'clock, at the Auditorium Hotel.

TUESDAY MORNING SESSION.

The Convention was called to order at 10:00 o'clock A. M.; Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Chairman; Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Secretary.

The meeting was opened by the singing of the "International Anthem," and by the reading of prayer by the Chairman; after which the following proceedings were had:

The Chairman: "Friends, we have a great deal of business to do in a very short time today, if we expect to finish our deliberations; so, without taking any preliminary time, I would suggest to you that it would be appropriate to name at this time an Auditing Committee to examine the reports of the financial officers, and be prepared to report to us a little later in the day on the books. Will you name the members of the committee?"

On motion by Mr. Ober duly seconded it was voted that the Chair name a committee of three.

The Chairman: "The Secretary will read the names of certain additional delegates that have come to our notice since yesterday."

Mr. Gregory: "This is a statement and a report of the Committee on Credentials. It happened that some of the papers in connection with the credentials certified by the Secretary of the Unity were mislaid. I have the following names—

The Chairman: "Now, shall we listen to the report of the Publications Committee? This committee, as you know, was one, perhaps the only committee which was authorized by Abdul-Baha to be named in the annual conventions. Therefore, it is appropriate that the committee should report to you each year; and then I suppose, in accordance with the tablet, you should renew the authority, or renew the committee, or otherwise arrange for a committee to continue the work. Miss Masson, Chairman of that committee, is here, and we would like to have her report."

Miss Masson: "The Committee on Publications has a very brief report. I think it might be interesting to recapitulate a little of the history of the appointment of this committee. I want to read first the tablet from Abdul-Baha to Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm in regard to the appointment of a Publications Committee. I will also read the letter from the Secretary of the 1917 Convention."

Miss Masson then read the tablet and letter above referred to, following with a statement about the high standard which should be raised for Bahai literature, in regard to truth, facts, literary excellence, etc. The literature should be an evidence of the perfection of the Cause.

Miss Masson then reported with some detail about the work of the committee stating that seven or eight manuscripts had been submitted, some poems and a letter. The committee suggested that it would be a wise thing to have on one of the first pages of any book or manuscript that was issued the statement "approved by the Publications Committee," also a further statement saying that "the sole authority for interpretation is Abdul-Baha."

There followed a discussion in which Mrs. Hoagg, Mr. Kinney, Mr. Gregory, Mrs. Rice-Wray, Miss Holmes and Mrs. Breed took part. The discussion revolved largely around the question of the scope of the work of the Publications Committee.

Mrs. Hoagg asked for information about the new edition of the Hidden Words.

Mr. Kinney desired to know if the Publications Committee was authorized to approve or disapprove of songs and hymns.

Mr. Gregory: "It has come to my notice that quite a number of the old publications have fundamental errors. Would the Publications Committee object to having its powers enlarged so as to revise such publications, where these errors are called to their attention? For instance, one of the books published at least ten or twelve years ago, although it is a very beautiful book, has statements in it which would justify any reader in assuming that the creatures could attain the station of the Manifestation of the Word; and one of the most popular of the books recently published has statements along that same line, which are very misleading.

"Now, it seems to me that if the Publications Committee could call the attention of the authors of the books to those errors, they would be very glad to correct them. One of them was written at a time when the station of the Center of the Covenant was not understood in America; and another one of them, although recent, has fallen into the same error. Now, it would seem very wise that if this committee could not have its powers enlarged, that a new committee should be appointed by this Convention to deal with matters of this kind, in order that our publications should attain the state of perfection which this committee indicates it desires."

The Chairman: "I would say that the authorizing tablet itself gives, it seems to me, the answer to all these matters. This committee first must revise and pass upon every manuscript, except certain exempted manuscripts, or accepted manuscripts mentioned in the tablet. Now, I have not the language absolutely in mind, but my belief is that in the words of Abdul-Baha which have been previously published, there are certain books which he mentioned which did not come within the scope of the Publications Committee's work; but everything else does. Now, it seems to me that Brother Gregory's question and suggestion is extremely important, and that the committee should take those publications under its consideration. . . . Now, we should all conform, and every Bahai who expects his books, or her books, to be placed on sale or circulated, should conform to the instructions of Abdul-Baha and should submit their manuscripts for final approval to the Publications Committee. I think the Convention should insist upon that."

Mrs. Rice-Wray brought up the matter of authenticating some of the prayers.

Miss Holmes reported that she had received a tablet from Abdul-Baha which read "collect the prayers and send them to me." They have been sent and that is as far as she knew.

The Chairman: "I would suggest that possibly Abdul-Baha intended that even the prayers should be for the present considered by that committee. I do not say that is so."

Mrs. Rice-Wray pointed out the fact that it would be the duty of the committee to get in touch with Abdul-Baha in order to learn which were the correct prayers.

Mr. Ober: "I think it is obvious that the foundation of all of this work is really in the tablet of Abdul-Baha. I know a great many of us feel that this committee has not been given any absolute powers by Abdul-Baha. I do not think we should consider it in that way at all. It is rather a protective committee. Abdul-Baha, undoubtedly knew that there was going to be a cutting of communications, and thus provided for our protection. In the past he has taken care personally of a great many manuscripts. Now, in order to protect the Cause against unwise statements, against the statements of people who come in and who are really inspired by the love of the Cause but perhaps are not really fundamentally established on the principles, he has placed this committee and the Convention as a sort of bulwark around us. I think the very fact that there is a committee has discouraged some people, who otherwise might have published things, if they were left to their own initiative. . . .

"Now, in regard to the prayer books; there are, I believe, one or two prayers that are questioned. I think Abdul-Baha has given certain definite instructions, and it has been the desire of the Publications Committee, and would be the desire of the Publications Committee, I know, if the question were raised in regard to those particular things, to find out what the instructions of Abdul-Baha were. This Convention is only the servant of Abdul-Baha, and one word from him would wipe out everything we would do. So the Publications Committee is merely the servant trying to protect the Cause from the issuance of unwise publications. And where there has been any real doubt, the Publications Committee has rather tended to advise against the publication. Of course, as a matter of fact, the Words of God are here—the Words of Baha'o'llah and the Words of Abdul-Baha—and if we had nothing else we would have enough. If the authors insisted upon the publication of a manuscript about which the Publications Committee had doubts, believing that it ought not to be published, the entire matter would come before the Convention to be finally passed upon in accordance with the instructions. I feel that has been the spirit of the Publications Committee, and I think it should be the spirit, as determined by the tablet itself."

Mr. Remy pointed out the necessities of assisting the libraries in the classification of Bahai books since in many libraries at the present time are books classed under the head of Bahai teachings some of which have been written by people who were studying the Cause and who were not accurate in their statements and others who have been actually opposing the Cause. He suggested the possibility of having the Publications Committee issue a statement indicating the authentic Bahai publications for the benefit of those who wish to get the Bahai point of view.

Mrs. Coles stated that she felt very strongly the necessity of filing a list of those things which were absolutely fully and purely the Bahai teachings as against a list of those things that are side by side on the shelves of the libraries and which actually contain false teachings. She told of her experience in buying a large number of books placed on the table with the Bahai books in one of the assemblies. Afterward it appeared that some of the teachings were false. Her point was that now from this day forth there should be in the heart of every Bahai in the country the consciousness that each book that goes forth with the stamp of approval of the Publications Committee has in it only the pure teachings of God in this day for the redemption of the world. That, it seemed to her, was one of the first steps in this great responsibility which is ours.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Report of the Tenth Annual Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity

The Chairman: "Just pardon me till I appoint this Auditing Committee, whose duties should begin immediately. I appoint the following committee: Edward D. Struven, Chairman, Mrs. Breed and Mrs. Ella G. Cooper.

Mr. Tate: "I would like to get some information in reference to the 'first commune.'"

Mr. Windust: "This question has been up for a number of years. I wrote to Abdul-Baha asking him the direct question, and he answered in a tablet,* I cannot quote it, but I can give you the substance of it, and it is this:

"In the past there have been many who took the words of Christ and the apostles and compiled them in such a manner as to make a new combination of words, thus creating certain ideas by that combination, which were in a measure more or less true. Therefore, do not be astonished if you find in this day some souls are doing likewise, that they are taking the words of the Blessed Beauty, and are combining them to present them as their own creation."

Dr. Harper: "While Abdul-Baha was here, I was riding on the same train with him to Washington, D. C., and I have here the prayer book in which he wrote his name, and this prayer is on page 35, and I asked him about it, and told him that there was a question in regard to its use. He said, 'While they are the words of Baha'o'llah yet they were compiled and put there by the nakeezen, and we will not use them.'"

The Chairman: "That is the 'first commune.'"

Mrs. Hoagg: "I was in Haifa when that question came through me to Abdul-Baha, and while, as I remember, he said they were probably the words taken from

*Tablet referred to is as follows:

To his honor, Mr. Albert Windust, Chicago, Ill.
Upon him be Baha'o'llah-El-Abha!
HE IS GOD!

O thou servant of God!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast written that the publication of the book of Mirza Abul Fazl (the Bahai Proofs) is commenced. This is very acceptable, for his books are written with the utmost sincerity. Likewise, the translation of the Hidden Words that you are just thinking to print another edition, this is also acceptable.

If Kheirollah claims that one of the communes is written by him, do not be astonished at this. For there is an ignorant, uneducated man in the United States, nay in Chicago itself, who has written a pamphlet, and after printing it, he is circulating it abroad. His aim is no other than the promotion of the superstitions of Mirza Yahya (Ezel). Amongst other things he alleges that the Book of Ighan, (Tablets of Tajalleyat and Ishrakat are written by Mirza Yahya. Consequently do not be astonished at the claims of others. There are and there may be found some souls who collect the supplications of the Blessed Perfection and take out of every supplication a phrase or a sentence and then attribute it to themselves. Such people are like unto the man who gathers out of the Gospel sundry sayings of Christ—that is, he selects from every page a few words, and as a result he composes phrases and sentences, and claims to be the original writer.

Be ye engaged with your own occupations. Do not trouble yourself with these statements. Such articles are like unto the mirage; they will vanish. That which is real will remain firm and established in the world of existence.

Upon thee be Baha'o'llah-El-Abba!

(Signed)

ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 13, 1914, home of Abdul-Baha, Mount Carmel, Haifa, Syria.)

Baha'o'llah, yet, as Dr. Harper said, they were of the nakeezen and should not be used."*

Mr. Kinney: "During the past winter there has been a so-called tablet circulated quite extensively amongst the believers with the idea that it came from Abdul-Baha; and I know there must have been a number of other alleged tablets that are sent around with the idea of deceiving the believers—I cannot imagine any other idea—as they are not authentic at all. Can there not be established some precedent to govern this matter? That alleged tablet made the statement—many of you must have seen it—that the believers were going to fail in their duty, and others would arise in their stead who would take the place of the believers and do the work."

Mrs. Rice-Wray: "That was not a tablet. That was a dream, written down and afterward spread as a tablet from Abdul-Baha."

The Chairman: "I feel that these matters are of the greatest importance, because often false teachings are based on one little piece of paper; and I think that the Committee on Publications, or the Convention, in some way, ought to take action to guard against further repetition of those things. If you feel that the Committee on Publications could properly handle that matter, I think you would have a right to add to their jurisdiction to that extent, or to ask them to give attention to that matter."

Mr. Hall: "I think we all recognize the direct authority of Abdul-Baha as the authority for the guidance and use of this Board; and this committee has very properly been doing the work that Abdul-Baha gave it to do. There never was a time when that work was more imperative than it is now. It should have been done long ago. You all know of a piece of literary work that has been thrust upon the public, and that draws all of its inspiration from the errors and misstatements of our enthusiastic friends who have written about this Cause, but they have been allowing their imagination to take the place of facts. That is unfortunate, and it is going to hurt. It will drive many sincere souls away from the Cause. Now, I think we have an excellent committee, and their love of good literature is splendid and fine; nobody has a finer ear for it than Miss Masson. I feel that while I rise to move the acceptance of that report, and to add our commendation to it, that there is something that I would like to direct your attention to, a suggestion I would like to make. Now, too much strictness and criticism might act as a damper upon some; and at the same time you should encourage literary expression among us. There ought to be a creative as well as a repressive movement going on. You will not do everything by censoring. Abdul-Baha has written about that, and he has said to get these voices among you cultivated; have a school of the writers.

"So, in moving a commendation, and a hearty one, of the action of the committee, I want to offer this suggestion of encouraging the creative force amongst us and let us either by enlarging the committee, or enlarging its duties, call their attention to that idea."

The Chairman: "The Chair understood Miss Masson to express that very idea, that the committee desired to encourage and stimulate writing; and, of course, the committee in so doing, is only endeavoring to obey the instruction of the Convention, to carry out in turn the instructions of Abdul-Baha. Brother Hall moves, I understand, the acceptance of the report of the committee, and that we also extend to them our commendation for their splendid work."

Mrs. Ober: "I second the motion."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "Now, what is your pleasure as to the personnel or makeup

* In regards to the "first commune," Abdul-Baha wrote to me the following: "It is not from me."—Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi.

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

of the committee for the coming year? I assume that you will wish to take some action on that."

Mrs. Rice-Wray: "I move that the President be authorized to appoint that committee, either the same, or such other number, as in his judgment would be best."

Motion seconded; motion carried.

Mrs. True: "Mr. Vail has gotten out a work for the Unitarian Sunday School, Chicago, and there are some things in it about the Bahai teachings. I think some of the clouds that have arisen concerning that should be cleared away and I think we might have a little statement from Mr. Vail, regarding the book. I have asked him if he would be willing to make a statement."

Mr. Vail: "I am willing to do this, because I want you to understand it, because nobody under heaven would have undertaken to write that book for any other purpose except to try to be of a little service to the Cause. It was a difficult work. My wife and I started to work on it, and we resigned once, and we felt so happy to think that we were free from it. We were not allowed to resign; and then we had to go back to it and fulfill our contract. We tried in every way we could to get out of it and not to write it. Well, strangely enough, we seemed compelled to do it. I just say that as a prelude.

"Then we decided that probably we were compelled to do it, because it would be of real service to children. In the religious education of children there are very few books on religion. It had to be written under the closest supervision, almost every step was supervised, the conditions stood there like adamant, and we had to write this book within those conditions. However, the other side of it is this, that it is a part of the Lincoln course, which is one of the few attempts ever made to have a progressive course in universal religion, and I think it is the only course known in literature upon universal religion."

Mr. Vail then stated that the object of the book was to present the lives of the great prophets of the world and their central teachings so as to give an idea to children eleven years old of what they are and also to assist older people in a study of comparative religion.

"Just as far as we knew we tried not to put a word in the book that was not in perfect accord with Abdul-Baha's teachings. The only difficulty is when you get to the end of the book. There was the question. We could have left Abdul-Baha out and just written about the others, but we would not have written a book on the prophets unless we had an opportunity to put Abdul-Baha in. We had the choice of leaving him out or putting him in with the others. It seemed to us, and we prayed about it a great deal, that it was better to put him in, put these prophets in, and give their life just as fully as we could make it, and try to show that they were absolutely perfect in character, that they were flawless in life; and to put in another chapter to endeavor to offset what Wilson* said. We felt that it could not but be of benefit to the Cause. We felt that anyone reading it could understand something of Abdul-Baha. So that was our endeavor.

"Now, of course, I am just saying this because perhaps some of our Bahais might like to use it for the education of their children. We felt that God was back of us, but it was hard work preparing it. We wondered if perhaps it might not be useful to all of our children, and the advantage it has is this: it will be circulated in all the Unitarian schools in this country, and by many libraries besides, and in that way it will reach many people."

Mrs. True: "Mrs. Harrison has a very valuable statement that she is timid about making."

Mrs. Harrison reported a talk given in Acca by Abdul-Baha in which he said: "I want you to tell the Americans that they must not put Abdul-Baha on the inside of a book but at the front or the back." The lesson, it became evident through further discussion, was that he stands singly and alone. We should not mix him with anyone else.

The Chairman: "Dr. Bagdadi may we hear from you?"

Dr. Bagdadi: "In the first place, Abdul-Baha always humbles himself, always humbles himself before the Blessed Beauty. He made it a rule with all the believers of the orient that they should never mix the tablets of Baha'o'llah with those of Abdul-Baha. We have a book, and in it we write the communes or the tablets of Baha'o'llah; when we come to the middle we leave one or more sheets white, blank, and then we begin with the tablets of Abdul-Baha. He always emphasizes that. He always wanted his tablets to be separate from those of the Blessed Beauty. I received a tablet, and I have it now, in the handwriting of Abdul-Baha, in regard to the printing of any book, whether from the holy utterances, or from the composition of the friends, it must be with the permission of the Center of the Covenant; otherwise it will produce great harm.*

* Note—Refers to a book by S. G. Wilson, criticizing the Bahai Revelation.

"The wisdom of this tablet is manifest. We may have either an ignorant writer, or an enemy, and who can prevent them from writing a book? No one can prevent them, unless with this command that it must be with his permission.

"But Abdul-Baha has repeatedly approved of all of the holy utterances that we have, such as the Ighan, the Hidden Words and all those that we have in print. He has approved of the writings of Mr. Remey, and he has approved of the pamphlets of Mr. Wilhelm. He approved of the writings and pamphlets of some others. But a tablet was received, without the signature of Abdul-Baha, saying that the Convention may pass on the writings of the friends, that is, if any one wants to write a book, a committee perhaps will be authorized by the Convention to look at and study that particular book, and if they approve of it, then it is good to print it. Now, I am not in a position to say whether that tablet is authentic or not. We can easily find out who received that tablet and how he received it and whether it is authentic or not. Now, that tablet was after Abdul-Baha left America."

* This is the statement referred to, written by the blessed hand of Abdul-Baha in a tablet sent to me from New York City, dated May 30, 1912: "With regard to the printing of any book that concerns the Cause, it is not permissible except with permission from the Center of the Covenant, whether that be of the blessed tablets or the composition of the friends, otherwise there is great danger."—Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi.

After a discussion it was moved by Dr. Woolson and seconded by Mrs. Ober that a committee be appointed to telegraph Roy C. Wilhelm in New York inquiring as to the actual attachment of Abdul-Baha's signature to the tablet authorizing the formation of the Publications Committee.

The Chairman appointed Dr. Woolson, Dr. Bagdadi and William H. Randall on the Committee.

Mr. Windust then gave a detailed and interesting statement illustrating the great care exercised by Abdul-Baha in publishing The Brilliant Proof.

The Chairman next called for a report from the committee authorized to gather together the tablets on the teaching of children and in the absence of Mrs. Pauline A. Hannen requested Mrs. Ober outline what had been accomplished.

Mrs. Ober reported that the committee had received responses from all over the country, had brought together a very wonderful compilation which it was understood would be printed shortly in the STAR OF THE WEST. The committee decided unanimously that no word should go into the compilation but the creative word, the creative utterances.

Mrs. Hoagg testified to the beauty of the compilation and the success of the method of teaching as carried forward by Mrs. Hannen.

On motion of Mrs. Rice-Wray duly seconded it was voted to accept the report of the committee and empower it to continue with the work.

The Chairman called upon Mrs. Struven, who spoke about the necessity of giving spiritual food to the little babies and children, because by the wonderful stories as well as by the words the thoughts are put into the little minds.

Mrs. Gillen spoke of the educational side of the Mashrekol-azkar.

The Chairman then called upon Mrs. Maxwell to report for Montreal.

Mrs. Maxwell gave a most interesting narrative of the experiences of the several Bahai teachers who have gone forth in Canada to spread the glad tidings.

The Chairman: "The Chair will now announce the committee on the compilation of tablets concerning The Most Great Peace. The names of the committee mentioned are as follows: Mrs. Claudia Coles, chairman, Mrs. May Maxwell, Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Mr. Albert R. Vail, Mrs. H. Emogene Hoagg, and Mrs. Ella G. Cooper; a committee of seven.

Mrs. Maxwell suggested that Miss Juliet Thompson's name be added to that committee.

The Chairman: "If there is no objection then the name of Miss Juliet Thompson may be added to the committee."

The Chairman then added the name of Mrs. Mary Rabb, making nine members.

Mrs. Cole as chairman of the committee appointed, asked for definite information relative to the stand taken by Miss Thompson in regard to the violation of the Covenant in Chicago.

The Chairman announced that he had received assurances from Mrs. Maxwell after Miss Thompson's name had been submitted stating that she abides by the decision of the committee and will not associate with the violators.

Mrs. Maxwell offered to telegraph Miss Thompson asking her to state her stand in order to clear up the matter.

The Chairman: "That will be very wise and helpful. . . . We can let the completion of this committee stand until the afternoon."

Mrs. Coles: "I think the words of Abdul-Bahai are the words of the Manifestation of God on earth today; and I feel that the answer or decision in regard to that is not a matter of opinion. It is a matter of obedience to the firm command. Therefore, I feel that unless a person recognizes and realizes the fact that violation is, as it were, pathological, like gangrene in the spiritual body of the world, as much as other things are in the physical body of the world; unless one can realize that, they do not understand what this violation means.”

Mrs. Struven related an experience which she had had in Acca in company with a friend who had received seventeen very wonderful tablets. She felt her unworthiness and asked Abdul-Baha how it was that these wonderful things had been penned to her when she felt she was so unworthy. He called her by a wonderful title, a station which she knew she had not attained, and the explanation which he gave to her may help us on deciding our position on certain questions. He said, “When Abdul-Baha writes tablets, he is calling the souls to a station which they are potentially able to attain. It does not mean that they have attained that station at the time of the writing.”

Mrs. Struven: “Now, it is possible for them to attain the station for which he calls them. When he says that we are his companions, or we are with him in all the worlds, it means, that we are with him, if we are Bahais. I just say that, because in this day when one person or another is brought to our attention, and this great question of their firmness in the Center of the Covenant is before us to decide, some say, ‘Why, they have had a wonderful tablet!’ ”

Mrs. Hoagg: “I was just thinking that Abdul-Baha has often said, ‘You are confirmed in love,’ or ‘you are confirmed in obedience,’ or ‘you are confirmed in this way,’ or ‘you are confirmed in that way.’ He has said to some ‘you are confirmed in this way’ and we know afterwards that they have lost that station. . . . It seems to me today that we have to have more than love, we have to have obedience and it is the call to obedience that Abdul-Baha is making today. Let us call for obedience and love will come.”

Dr. Bagdadi said in part: “Our purpose in coming here is to spread the light of Baha’o’llah through all regions. You who represent all the States of America have come here bringing your light and your joy, and taking also a light and a joy from the Manifestation of God, who today is speaking to us through the language of the spirit. There is no more important subject to the real Bahais than the matter of firmness in the Covenant. Firmness in the Covenant, Abdul-Baha says, means obedience to the commands of the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha. He said the American believers, praise be to God, are firm in the Covenant, but the firmer they are, the better they become, or the firmer they become, the better they are.

“We know a violator, Abdul-Baha says, as we know a donkey when we see him, because violation of the Covenant, he says, has a pungent odor, a pungent smell, a sickening smell, while firmness in the Covenant has a fragrant odor. We must use the nostril of the spirit or inhale with the nostrils of the spirit, then we can distinguish between violation and firmness.

“The Lord Christ, two thousand years ago, spoke of the importance of finding the lost sheep, so that you have even to leave ninety-nine sheep, in order to go and find the lost lamb, and the joy is greater in finding the little lost lamb than over the ninety-nine sheep. This is the truth. But we must know also that in the divine tests, changes always come; the great among us have to fall down, and the low ones have to rise. This has been shown in all the Manifestations of the past. In the Koran it says that when the great test comes, the high will fall low, and the low will rise high. . . .

“We are all apt to make mistakes. We make mistakes every day; and to speak about the Covenant and to speak about violation, is to remind us not to make such mistakes. This is important to all of us, and we must all be mindful always of Abdul-Baha’s words, that they have to be obeyed to the letter. That preserves the unity, and does away with all mistakes.”

After outlining the difficulties that had come to the Cause in Chicago through violation and, as a consequence, the dwindling of the numbers of the believers, Dr. Bagdadi said:

"We have tried many experiments. I have seen that. But now, friends, praise be to God, that cancer is cut out, and the body of the Cause is perfect. Many, on account of ignorance or self interest, tried to spoil the work. Many mistakes were made, but on the 12th of November, that great feast was held in perfect harmony, and the Committee of Investigation was elected, and they were efficient, and whenever communication is resumed, you will hear commendation from the Center of the Covenant, for always he recognizes, always he confirms those that stand for the Covenant; always he shuns those who oppose the Covenant. The members of that committee have sacrificed their time, their energy and their money, and they have received arrows of criticism from all parts and they have come here and finished their work.

"Criticisms were raised, and yet those souls who criticized the committee, never contributed any help in removing the conditions. That is, they did not remove the stagnation in Chicago, and they did not cut off any of the cancerous tissues. It is a very easy thing to sit down and criticize and find fault. It is characteristic of the violators to sit down and criticize, and do nothing else. The friends in Chicago are not tying the hands of anybody. Those who want to work in harmony are welcome. To those who want to work their own way, we say, 'work your own way.' Yet, some people think that we should mingle with those people. This cannot be done.

"There is not in all Persia one violator today, because the believers, when they hear of a suspicion, immediately look into it and find out whether it is true or not. . . . There is no compromise where violation is.

"Moreover, Baha'o'llah says, 'O God, confirm those who are firm in the Covenant, and condemn those who violate the Covenant.' He never said, 'Pray for the violators.' His only command was to shun them.

"Maybe the opinion of one is not to shun them, the opinion of another to be a little kind. But what is best? Shall we take Abdul-Baha's words, or some one's opinion? Undoubtedly every intelligent, faithful and loving Bahai will take the decision of Abdul-Baha, in order to protect the unity of the believers.

"The Committee of Investigation has done its part, and the Convention is here, and I beg of them to take the right stand now. If anyone did not receive the report, a copy can be had by asking for it; and if they wish, let them withhold judgment until an opportunity can be had to read it. But I beg of those who have read the report to stand with a rising vote and commend the committee for its work, and they may rest assured that the divine confirmation will surround them."

The Chairman: "I did not hear your closing remarks, Dr. Bagdadi."

Dr. Bagdadi: "May I repeat them?"

The Chairman: "Yes."

Dr. Bagdadi: "I said, let those of the friends here who have not yet received the report of the committee wait and read the entire report; but I beg of those who have received the report of the Committee of Investigation, if they find that it has done a great piece of work—in order to preserve the Cause, in order to stop the stagnation in this city—that they stand up and commend the committee."

Mrs. Maxwell: "May I make a motion that this report of the Committee of Investigation be accepted?"

Dr. Bagdadi: "That is what I mean, by a rising vote."

The Chairman: "The matter now before us is that the report of the Committee of Investigation on violation in America be accepted. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor will rise. The purpose of this, as I understand it,—if I am mistaken, Dr. Bagdadi will inform me—”

Dr. Bagdadi: “Delegate or non-delegate, all those who received the report.”

The Chairman: “The secretary will call the roll.”

The delegates arose and remained standing during the calling of the roll.

The Chairman: “It appears officially that the Convention has recorded its unanimous approval and acceptance of the report of the committee.”

Mr. Gregory: “I suggest that we let all the friends vote.”

The Chairman: “All right. Kindly sit down, you who are delegates. Now, for a general expression, which I know many of you wish to make, those who are not delegates, who are present, kindly rise, if you share this feeling.”

The remainder of the attendance at the meeting arose to their feet.

The Chairman: “Are there any who vote, no, on the motion? If so, please rise. It appears that by the unanimous vote of the entire body gathered here this morning, you have approved and ratified the report in full of the Committee of Investigation on violation in America. And I so declare it.”

Mrs. Partridge: “May I say a word? I want to say in regard to violation, that I straddled the fence on the Bahai Cause for several years. I believed in the teachings, as far as reasoning can make one believe, but I saw nothing in Baha’o’llah or Abdul-Baha but another great leader, the same as in other ‘isms’ that the world has offered. I don’t know that I could have been persuaded to wade through another. I was given the compilation of tablets on violation by a friend who knew that I would be just as firm in my convictions, if I were convinced, and she said to me, ‘Read these.’ I knew then that in my soul I felt there was only one autocrat, that is God; the whole spiritual realm is autocracy, and one who enters the spiritual realm must obey those commands and laws. One’s opinion is nothing. When I got that revelation I knew I had the truth; and I have not wavered one minute since.”

After the chanting of a prayer by Mr. Williams, the Convention adjourned to three o’clock P. M. of the same day.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION,

Auditorium Hotel, ninth floor.

The Convention was called to order at 3 o’clock P. M.

The Chairman: “Now, I feel that we saved some time before we recessed, with the very positive action that you took regarding the committee’s report, and that was one of the matters I thought might take more time this afternoon. Now, shall we devote the next hour to the reports of the delegates; bearing in mind the vital necessity of limiting these reports to five-minute talks? It is very important to save time and I know you will realize it. I am sure you will bring to us the message you have to bring, the spiritual message from the different assemblies. Let us hear first from Miss Alexander.”

Miss Alexander made an inspiring report of her experiences in teaching the Cause in Japan and read to the Convention translations of letters that had been sent by some of the Japanese believers.

Mrs. Hoagg: “I move that we immediately proceed to business.”

Motion seconded.

The Chairman: “The motion is that we take up items of specific business at this time. Are you ready for the question? In voting upon that have in mind that possibly the delegates may not be able to report formally to the Convention, but perhaps informally tomorrow. Those in favor say, aye.”

Motion carried.

The Chairman: “The Convention will proceed to business. What is your pleasure?”

Dr. Woolson: "I have an answer from Mr. Wilhelm to the telegram of the committee. It says: 'Tablet concerning publications dated April 11, 1916, through Ahmad, unsigned.'"

The Chairman: "You have heard the answer of Brother Wilhelm to the telegram sent by your committee, inquiring as to the genuineness, or shall we say the fact of signature to the original tablet? Last year you took action regarding the protection of publications in the Cause, based upon that tablet. We have again taken action this year. We know that it is impossible to obtain outer communication with Abdul-Baha, or has been, and may still be for some time. I would simply suggest to the Convention to have that in mind, and if you should deem it wise to rescind your action on this matter, to consider whether you would not have to take other action to protect the matter of publications pending the opening or re-establishment of communication with Abdul-Baha. What is your pleasure in the matter, if you desire to take any further action?"

Mrs. Hoagg: "Volume one of the Tablets of Abdul-Baha has been placed into my hands. In the introduction is a tablet revealed in 1906 stating that the Boards of Council in New York, Chicago, Washington and Kenosha, should take charge of publishing matters. Now, it seems to me, since he entrusted that into the hands of the friends at that time, that he showed a desire for us to shoulder that responsibility. Has he expressed any other desire since then to the contrary?"

The Chairman asked for suggestions from Dr. Bagdadi.

Dr. Bagdadi: "It would be very wise to investigate this further just as we investigated today and found that the tablet in regard to the printing of books was not signed by the handwriting of Abdul-Baha. Why not investigate further and find out if there is any other tablet that has come signed by Abdul-Baha? We will compare the tablets and we will follow the latest tablet and the latest instruction.

"Would it not be well if a committee were appointed to search for any tablet that has come in this manner? Would it not be right for the Chairman to appoint that committee, or the Convention? I leave it to the Chair."

The Chairman: "You mean to search between now and the time of adjournment so that we may be able to know what to do? Or do you mean to report another year?"

Dr. Bagdadi: "We could make a decision—if it is agreeable to the Convention we will make a decision now, namely, to follow the latest tablet that is strictly authentic and the latest date of instruction."

The Chairman: "That is concrete and right to the point."

Dr. Bagdadi: "I make that as a motion."

The Chairman: "I might suggest that Brother Gregory this morning said that he thinks in volume four of the STAR OF THE WEST is a later word on that point, which continues the idea expressed in the former tablet of leaving it to the gathering of the friends. If there is such a tablet, this committee should find it."

Dr. Bagdadi: "We should make a decision now to follow that tablet, and that tablet will be spread all over the country, after the Convention—after the investigation."

The Chairman: "Yes. The motion then is that the committee be appointed, or elected, as you prefer, to investigate the entire field of the tablets in this respect."

Dr. Bagdadi: "My idea is to be guided by the last authentic tablet in the matter, or by the consensus of all of them, if there appears to be any question on that."

Mrs. Coles: "Would it not be well to let the Publications Committee be that committee, to authenticate their own work?"

The Chairman: "You have heard the suggestion of Mrs. Coles. Is that your desire?"

Mrs. True: "Miss Jean Masson's tablet is here and signed by Abdul-Baha and it is as late as February, 1917. She has Abdul-Baha's signature at the bottom of that letter."

The Chairman: "Does that give any help on this?"

Mrs. Coles: "I do not know about that. There are tablets signed as late as 1917."

The Chairman: "Is there any objection to Mrs. Coles' suggestion that the Publications Committee as now constituted shall have the matter in charge, the subject of Brother Bagdadi's motion?"

Mrs. Hoagg: "Do I understand that you will appoint a committee, or the Publications Committee will do that?"

The Chairman: "Mr. Hall's motion this morning was to the effect that the present committee be continued unless it was desired to change. I do not think there is any desire to change it unless you want it changed. Is there any objection? If that is the consensus of the opinion, then I will record the motion as embodying and reconstituting that committee for this purpose. All those in favor of the motion say, aye; contrary, no."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "It is so recorded. What is the next item of business? Now, several of the friends have suggested the necessity of having something done about indexing. Mrs. Rice-Wray has a word on that."

Mrs. Rice-Wray, Mr. Remy, Mrs. Partridge and Mrs. Hoagg shared in the discussion relative to the importance, at this time, of having a complete index of all the authentic publications in the Bahai Cause.

Mrs. Rice-Wray: "I would like to make a motion that the Publications Committee, with the addition of Mr. Remy and Mrs. Partridge and Miss MacCutecheon, or any one else they think would be of help to them, take this matter up and look after the indexing."

Mrs. Coles: "I second the motion."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "The committee as named will please take the matter in hand; that is, the Publications Committee and Brother Remy, Mrs. Partridge and Miss MacCutecheon, and, I understand, any others they desire to call into the service. Now, do you wish to take up, at this time, the question of the Mashrekol-azkar grounds? Mrs. True is not here right now. She may be back by the time Dr. Bagdadi has given us an outline of it."

Dr. Bagdadi: "The greatest part of our Convention concerns the Mashrekol-azkar, concerns the temple, concerns the building of the temple. It concerns the grounds of the temple. At the present time we have the grounds; God willing the temple will be built.

"Those who have seen the grounds testify they are situated in the best place in Chicago, or a suburb of Chicago, Wilmette. Those grounds became sacred by the presence of Abdul-Baha. It is sacred because the believers of Chicago and outside, who go there, always pray there.

"It has been the custom in Chicago to hold the summer Sunday meetings on the temple grounds, on account of the heat. We meet at the Masonic Temple every Sunday, right in the heart of the city, but during the months of July, August and September, that hall is unbearable, and, therefore, we hold our Sunday meetings on the temple grounds.

"A few years ago the people of Chicago became accustomed to visit those grounds in order to escape the heat and to enjoy themselves. Many of them attended the meetings and some of them benefited by the meetings. They saw the harmony and the unity of the Bahais, how they associated and visited together. It touched the hearts of many. But many of the young folks thought it was nothing but a playgrounds. So baseball and other playing went on, to the extent that believers in Chicago became deprived of the use of the grounds; that is, they lost the best part of the grounds. Most of the grounds were occupied by the outside people who made it a playgrounds.

"Then the Executive Board took the matter into their hands, and after consultations they found that it would be necessary to have some one to take care of the grounds, to clean them and to protect the trees, and they appointed or permitted a fisherman to establish his quarters there, with a certain concession that Mrs. True, I am sure, is more able to tell you the details of than I. The idea was that the fisherman should keep the grounds clean, and keep the trees from being injured and cut down, and at the same time be allowed to sell gasoline and some refreshments. And there was no objection to that. The fisherman did his best to abide by the instructions of the Board; but in the last two or three years matters have become very bad. The fisherman established a place to sell dinners, fish dinners, and more refreshments; and the mind of the fisherman really became more occupied in selling things than in taking care of the property."

Dr. Bagdadi then outlined in detail certain abuses of the hospitality of the Unity in opening the ground to all the people, abuses of such a nature that the neighbors entered complaints and ultimately a special policeman was ordered to keep the Mashrekol-azkar grounds in order.

"We took the matter up with the assembly here and formulated a letter. I wrote the letter myself to the Executive Board, and explained to them—Mrs. True also did all she could in writing—that the solution for this problem was that the sacred grounds must be kept sacred, and the solution was to fence the property. Some of the members of the Board wrote back, 'We shrink from hearing the word "fence," because the Mashrekol-azkar is for all the nations and for all people. How can we fence it and close it in the face of any soul? It is contrary to the teachings.'

"I wrote to them another letter, and in that letter mentioned the following: That those who went to Acca, and those who did not go to Acca, but who have a book of the pictures of the sacred spots, testify that all the sacred spots in Acca and in Haifa are fenced. The tomb of Baha'o'llah is fenced. There is a fence, and the nails are sharp nails so no one could jump over the fence. The tomb of the Bab is surrounded by a fence; and the garden of Abdul-Baha is surrounded by a fence, and he himself built the fence. The fence is not to shut the people out; the fence is to keep the grounds in order. In all these sacred spots there is always a guard. He opens the door and permits everybody to come in and enjoy themselves; when the darkness comes and everybody is supposed to go to his home, the door is then closed. Nobody raised any objection when Abdul-Baha fenced the properties there, or the Mashrekol-azkar, which was fenced in Ishkabad. Nobody objected here except a few members of the Executive Board, and they could not see why it should be fenced.

"Moreover, the idea is that the temple grounds should have a fence and every Sunday a meeting be held on the temple grounds; then the door be open, because it is only on Sundays that people go there, on beautiful summer days, and the door be open all day until the night, and the Bahais would welcome them. If they want to attend the meetings, they can attend the meetings, and if they want to walk around, they can walk around; and if they want to use the trees and flowers or anything of that sort, with moderation, in the right way, they can use them and nobody will prohibit them. But when the night comes, then they will not be allowed to stay in there, because it is against the law of the country; it is against the will of the neighbors, and it is against the law of morality.”

Mr. Remy: “It occurs to me to suggest to the Chairman and the Convention that this matter be suspended for a few moments until we can elect our Board for the coming year, for there are several of our friends who are leaving, and who, I feel, ought to be allowed to participate in the election. If we can do that, this question can be taken up afterwards. I move that we now proceed to the election of the Executive Board.”

Motion seconded and carried.

The Chairman: “It is your duty now to elect a Board of nine for the ensuing year.”

Mr. Remy: “Mr. Chairman and friends, I would suggest that before we proceed with this election we have a few moments of prayer and supplication, that we may elect a Board, that we may entrust into the hands of those who are most fitted for it, the work of this Unity for the next year. We are up against many very, very vital problems. We have had some very vital problems to meet this last year, and we have met many in this gathering yesterday and today. And it occurs to me to make this suggestion of prayer, that we may be spiritually guided by our beloved Abdul-Baha, to make the choice he wishes.”

The Chairman: “The Chairman would like to read a prayer at this time, and then Dr. Bagdadi has a word to say.”

Prayer by the Chairman.

Chairman Mr. Lunt: “Dear friends, I believe that we have been sent here this year as no body of delegates has ever been sent in the history of the world. You have been sent here after hearing the divine injunctions towards firmness in the Covenant. You have been sent here because you are firm. You have been sent here because you love Abdul-Baha and have raised the standard of obedience to his command. Therefore, what cannot you accomplish in this Convention if you will realize your oneness, if you will realize the wonderful significance of this beautiful circle here* and what it has meant to us ever since we came into this room; because it seems to me to be the very burning glass of God through which the fire of his love is pouring, centering, concentrating to such a degree as to melt every heart into one heart, to show forth the guidance and the will of God in this Convention, and to render the blessings to this great nation which you are capable of bringing to the world; here in the midst of us is the Greatest Name of the Almighty; it is glory; it is not glory alone; it is love, it is majesty, it is generosity, it is sovereignty and power, and it is guidance. It is oneness. And, just as in the burning glass of the scientist, the central point in that glass is capable alone of exerting the greatest heat, the greatest power, the greatest amalgamating force, just so in the center of this divine burning glass of the Greatest Name reposes the heart and power of the Covenant of God, and if we will only come in line with that Center, of which this may be regarded as a symbol, will we not all become melted into one soul, one thought and one purpose, to choose those whom he desires chosen today to represent this Bahai Temple Unity of America? And not only to choose them, but to perform every act which this Convention has come here to perform. And, if we were united in that sense, in one hour, or half an hour, we could perform all the business of the Convention, and it would all come before us picture after picture, occasion after occasion until all would be accomplished. There would be no dragging.

* Pointing to a large gilded disc above the platform resembling the rising sun, bearing the Greatest Name.

So shall we not enter into this blessed flame of the love of God at this moment, and do his will?"

Dr. Bagdadi: "What more can I add to Mr. Lunt's remarks? Whatever you do under the roofs will be proclaimed from the house tops. That is a law. The whole world is looking towards America and towards this Mashrekol-azkar. One Mashrekol-azkar is to be built. It is the men of God, Abdul-Baha said, who will build the temple, the souls who are confirmed by God. All of you are confirmed; all of you are firm and steadfast believers; otherwise we would not be here.

"The time has come for the separation of violation from firmness. There is no doubt about the sincerity and firmness in this Cause of God on the part of all those who are here. If you become members of the Board, it means one, and if one becomes the Board it means all. You are all in one, and one in all. This oneness lasts as long as that fire of the love of Abdul-Baha is burning in the heart; and the main issue, the main thing, which is firmness in the Covenant, is the greatest qualification in all elections of committees.

"Abdul-Baha wants us to look in our hearts at this moment and see how we stand, and each one will be the cause of making others who are firm firmer. This is in obedience to Abdul-Baha, and I am going to do as we all must, think of that in this election. So far, my dear friends, we must not think of it as if he were my friend or my sweetheart, or my old friend, or my associate—the time has come when we are on a plane higher than that. To show that this Cause is the Cause of God, the Bab gave his life; Baha'o'llah spent his life in agony; Abdul-Baha has lived in prison; 24,000 or more gave their lives. We are to serve such a Cause. Who is going to be my friend, my wife, my child, when I look at the sacrifices that have taken place? Will it not be a shame, more than a shame, to put any name on this paper before I in my heart and soul hear Abdul-Baha say to me, 'Well done.' Because I am going to face him; you are going to face him sooner or later. We are facing him now in the spirit. He is watching and counting all these things we are doing now. What can I say more than these words of his, those who are to be elected must be well known Bahais; they must be known for their firmness in the Covenant. Can I make a statement stronger than that? Is it possible? Let us begin."

The Chairman thereupon named Mrs. Barbee, Mr. Scheffler, and Dr. D'Evelyn as a committee to distribute, collect and count ballots.

The delegates were brought together into the center section and the roll call of delegates and alternates was read.

While the ballots were being counted the Chairman called for the report of the Auditing Committee.

Mr. Struven reported for the Auditing Committee that they had gone over the books and found them correct. The committee recommended that in the future since the work has grown so large, arrangements be made to have regular certified public accountants do this work, because it takes so much time of the Auditing Committee and keeps them from sharing in the bounties of the Convention. It might be proper, of course, in the wisdom of the Convention to have some one or two of the friends go over the affairs after the regular official auditors, so that we may understand the books and have the matter fully explained to them.

On motion of Mr. Ober duly seconded the report of the Auditing Committee was accepted.

On motion of Mrs. Breed seconded by Mr. Ober it was voted that an expert accountant be engaged another year to take care of the books.

The Chairman called attention to the fact that whereas the temporary organization had listened to the reports of the officers of the Unity, not being then in permanent form, no motion was made to accept the reports.

On motion of Mrs. Rice-Wray duly seconded it was voted that the reports of the various officers listened to yesterday be accepted.

Mrs. True: "Has the Executive Board full authority to do anything that should be done on the temple grounds or do we have to have the Convention vote on the matter?"

Chairman Mr. Lunt: "I think the Executive Board has full authority; but the thing has been so troublesome, we wanted you all to know about it, that is all."

Mrs. True: "The only thing was that I wanted to know if the Executive Board had some authority, because it seems to me we will have to take some very drastic steps. That piece of ground is most attractive, and it has been used as an amusement grounds, without any control over it, and the people there are rather obstreperous. And another question, and a very serious question is, 'Are the Bahais of the world keeping up an amusement grounds, or are they keeping up a sacred piece of ground?' Therefore, I would like this Convention to instruct its Executive Board to take every measure possible to make that ground absolutely sacred, that the people of Chicago and the world may know that there is one spot on this continent that is dedicated to God and kept as such."

The Chairman: "I cannot think of any better form of words than our sister has used, in making a motion. You make a motion to that effect, Mrs. True?"

Mrs. True: "Yes."

Mr. Ober: "I second that motion."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "Are there any other matters that we can consider at this time while we are waiting for the counting of the ballots? The question was suggested to the Chair during the recess, that in a certain way the tablets relative to the reception of orientals in America and associating with them are somewhat allied to this question of violation, and that subject has been the cause of much difficulty to many of the friends, in different parts. It has given us a good deal of worry at Green Acre, for instance, where we attempt to open our doors to all nations and people. I do not know whether you would care to take that up at this time. I simply want to open the way for it, if anybody wants to take it up."

Mr. Ober: "Mr. Chairman, I think that it is increasingly evident to the Convention and the believers, all over the country, that these questions are never settled until they are settled right; and until we get the explicit, complete teachings of Abdul-Baha on any of these subjects, in application to all possible conditions,—we do not have the complete expression of his wisdom; we rather have only the partial expression of that wisdom.

"This question of the orientals has come up several times. It has not been settled yet,—I mean to the satisfaction of all.

"Now, since there are a number of tablets from various sources, I suggest, and for the purpose of bringing the matter to a head, I make it as a motion, that a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to make a compilation of all the instructions of Abdul-Baha on this subject, for the purpose of reporting later, for the guidance of the believers of the country; and issue them to the assemblies."

In the discussion that followed Mrs. Gillen outlined in detail some of the difficulties in Seattle and other parts of the Pacific coast relative to this question and ended by saying "I think we should stick absolutely to Abdul-Baha's command about letting no oriental come among us without Abdul-Baha's orders" because he knows who is safe and who is not."

The Chairman: "You have heard Brother Ober's motion that a committee of three be named to collect all the tablets on this subject of association with visiting orientals, and submit them and have them published and distributed to the assemblies and friends as soon as possible."

The question of the expense of carrying out the work of such a committee as proposed was raised.

The Chairman: "The question has been asked how we will pay for the expense. Now, the Conventions in past years have occasionally authorized certain minor expenses, and the Executive Board, in carrying out directions has felt justified in taking from the regular Mashrekol-azkar fund in the belief that that included those particular matters. Abdul-Baha has sent certain tablets here which indicate that the teachings are part of the work of the Mashrekol-azkar. This particular matter relates, perhaps, not directly to the teachings, but it relates to the protection of the friends; and if it is your wish it can be authorized to be taken from the regular treasury, or if you prefer to provide for it independently, this is the time to do so."

Mrs. Ober: "I move that it be taken from the regular fund, as it is to teach us in order that we may teach others; and that it should come from the Mashrekol-azkar."

Mr. Ober: "The expense ought not to be very great; $25 or $50 at the most."

The Chairman: "May that be added to the motion then?"

Mr. Ober: "Yes."

Motion carried.

Mr. Remy then made a supplementary report of the work of the Library Committee.

The Secretary read communications from absent delegates from Lakeland, Florida, and Buffalo, N. Y., and Mr. Gregory was authorized to write to these friends with messages of love from this Convention.

Mrs. Maxwell: "I have a message from Miss Thompson. Instead of wiring her I telephoned. Miss Thompson sends her cordial love and greetings to the Convention, says that she has already accepted the report of the Committee of Investigation, that she stands absolutely with the committee and is quit of the violators and she wishes to be with you in the power of the Covenant, in this Convention. . . . Now may I propose Miss Thompson's name on the committee for the compilation of tablets on The Most Great Peace?"

Mrs. Coles: "I second the motion."

The Chairman: "If there is no objection Miss Thompson's name will be recorded in addition to the names already given."

The Secretary, Mr. Gregory, then read the names of the Compilation Committee:

Mrs. Coles, chairman, Mrs. Maxwell, Mr. Remy, Mrs. Cooper, Dr. Bagdadi, Mr. Vail, Mrs. Hoagg, Miss Thompson, Mrs. Rabb.

The Chairman called upon Mrs. Diggett.

Mrs. Diggett read the following extract from a tablet written to her by Abdul-Baha when he was in Paris. "The winds of tests are so violent that they are liable to uproot the strongest trees. It is my hope that the believers in Chicago may withstand the tests with firmness and steadfastness."

Mr. Remy: "Friends, I have a motion that I would like to put before the Convention. I think we all feel that this compilation of the holy utterances upon the matter of our duty towards the government, or our duty in war and peace, is going to be of the greatest blessing right now at this time, for so much depends upon the stand and the work of the Bahais along this direction.

Therefore, it has occurred to me to suggest in the form of a motion, that when this Compilation Committee has finished its work, and when this compilation is completed and ready to send out, that the committee be empowered by this Convention to send a copy of this, together with a letter giving the Bahai principles, to the President of the United States. I put that in the form of a motion."

Motion seconded.

Dr. Bagdadi: "May I suggest that when the compilation is perfected we send it not only to the President but to every ruler in the world whom we can reach."

Mr. Remy accepted this suggestion.

In the discussion which followed relative to the method to be adopted by the committee in carrying on its work, it was agreed that the committee should, as a whole, be free to request the cooperation of any other committees or individuals whose assistance it desired.

The Chairman: "My understanding is that the Convention lays upon each member of this committee the responsibility of personally passing upon every bit of the manuscript and upon all of you the injunctions of Baha'o'llah rest, in reference to consultation."

Mrs. Coles: "On everything we do there should be perfect and complete consultation between members.

The Chairman: "I am quite sure that the committee will be guided aright."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "We are ready to listen to the report of the committee that has the ballots in charge."

Mr. Scheffler reported the result as follows: True 44, Bagdadi 40, Remy 36, Gregory 33, Lunt 33, Hoagg 32, Maxwell 30, Ober 28, Coles 18, Randall 18, Cooper 14, Rice-Wray 12, Windust 9. There were some scattering votes below this number.

On the basis of the committee's report the Chair declared eight persons elected, all of them having more than 24 votes which were necessary for election and one more to be elected who has not yet received the required number of votes. The committee was requested to distribute ballots for the election of the remaining member of the Executive Board.

Mr. Remy reported the receipt of two telegrams, one from Mr. and Mrs. Latimer in Portland, the other from George Latimer sent from Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia. Both regretted their inability to attend the Convention.

On motion duly made and seconded it was voted that the greetings of the Convention be extended to these friends.

Mr. Ober: "I have been requested by some of the friends here who are not delegates or alternates and, therefore felt they could not speak on this matter, to bring up again the subject of Mr. Vail's book, which was mentioned this morning; but nothing definite was done about it; and some of these friends feel that a wrong impression was given, because the conversation slid off into something else and was not completed. Now, of course, we realize that our attitude in all these things is purely a question of education. It is not a question of our sincerity, or anything of that sort. We are all earnest and sincere, but I know we are constantly making mistakes."

Mr. Ober then brought up some of the questions that had been mentioned to him in regard to the construction of the book and its use for Bahai children.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'U'LLAH.

Report of the Tenth Annual Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity

Held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, April 27th to 30th, 1918

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION—Concluded

The Chairman: "The Ballot Committee is ready to report."

Mr. Scheffler announced the results of the second ballot, 35 votes cast, Mr. Randall receiving 13, Mrs. Rice-Wray 11, the balance scattering.

The Chairman: "The Chair declares no election, therefore another ballot is necessary."

Mrs. Hoagg: "I move that we take the two names who have received the largest number of votes and select one of those two. This motion was seconded and carried."

The Chairman: "You will vote in this case for one person from the two names receiving the highest vote on this ballot, namely, Mr. Randall and Mrs. Rice-Wray."

There followed a discussion regarding Mr. Vail's book shared in by Mrs. Ober, Mrs. Gillen, Mr. Remey and Mrs. Hoagg.

It was moved by Mrs. Ober and seconded by Dr. Woolson that the Convention put itself on record as considering that Mr. Vail's book entitled Heroic Lives should not be recommended as a text book for Bahai children.

Mrs. Hoagg called attention to the existence of a very splendid compilation for use of the children that had been prepared by Mrs. Hannen who had been instructed by Abdul-Baha to carry on this work in the children's Sunday school.

Dr. Bagdadi pointed out that everything depended upon the authorization of Abdul-Baha. If Abdul-Baha has not authorized any publications then it is a mistake to write any books and to publish them.

The Chairman: "Suppose the committee finds that there is no authority to write then would this motion not still be necessary in order that the book should not be sold as a Bahai publication."

Dr. Bagdadi: "Yes, it should not be considered as a Bahai publication."

Mrs. Ober: "That is all we mean. We do not question the sincerity of the book. Our only idea is in relation to our own body, and the question is whether it should be accepted as a text book for our children."

The Chairman: "Is there any objection to this in your motion, that the motion should be subject to the determination of this committee which is to look into these tablets, and find out whether this book would be authorized?"

Mrs. Ober: "That is all right."

Mrs. Struven suggested taking the consensus of opinion of the Convention to the several assemblies and this would not necessitate a vote in the Convention.

The Chairman: "If the decision comes that the committee is not authorized you need something to authorize the committee to act."

Mrs. Coles in discussing the matter said in part: "There is quite a difference between appreciating a thing that is beautiful from a literary point of view and endorsing it as a Bahai book for the sowing of the seed of the revelation of God, as a piece of Bahai literature.

"There is a deep and wonderful appreciation of Mr. Vail's work and we know that through that pure spirit a great and wonderful bounty is falling. But it seems to me that the thing for us to have clear is that from the Bahai Cause, from the Publications Committee, only that which is of the Word of God and authorized as a message from that source, shall go forth."

The Chairman: "Are you now ready for the question? All in favor say aye, opposed no."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "Now Mr. Scheffler will announce the last ballot."

Mr. Scheffler: "The third ballot gives Mr. Randall 18 votes and Mrs. Rice-Wray 16 votes; 34 votes cast."

The Chairman: "The Chair declares Mr. Randall elected to complete the membership of the Board. Mr. Scheffler will now read the names of the Board."

Mr. Scheffler: "Mrs. True, Dr. Bagdadi, Mr. Remy, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Lunt, Mrs. Hoagg, Mrs. Maxwell, Mr. Ober and Mr. Randall."

Mr. Remy: "Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the point that Mrs. Harrison brought out this morning about Abdul-Baha standing singly and alone, solved this, and all other difficulties regarding this matter of these books. The Manifestations of God are unique. They are not to be classed with the creatures. When we are giving the message of the Covenant, the Manifestations, we are sowing a living seed, and when we are simply giving the message of a man, why, we are sowing a seed, but it is not a living seed. It seems to me that there is a class of literature coming up, much of which is on sale, and rightly so, on our Bahai tables, which is in the form of written books composed by friends who are sympathetic with the Cause, who discuss various subjects and lead up to the Bahai teachings. For instance, such a book as that is Mr. Holley's book Modern Social Religion. It discusses sociological questions and leads people up to the Bahai Cause as the solution for these various questions.

"I am sure as time goes on, we will have more of these books, and I think it would be very interesting to get an expression of opinion from the friends regarding these books, which are really sympathetic to the Bahai Cause."

Mr. Ober: "It seems to me the statement that Mr. Remy made in the beginning is the key to all of this. The Manifestations of God are unique and peerless; and it is the associating of their words with other words, the words of men, no matter how wise they are, that is the great defect of some of this literature. But, of course, the writing of articles of explanation from the economic point of view, from the philosophical point of view and from the religious point of view, which do not bring in a lot of indiscriminate things, will, I think in the Orient and undoubtedly here, be one of the means of spreading the Cause. I can see no harm in it myself. . . . It is simply a question of presenting the truth according to the capacity."

Dr. D'Evelyn: "Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the approval or recommendation or appreciation of this Convention on the desirability, owing to the present condition of affairs, of reading at our respective meetings, Abdul-Baha's prayer for the confirmation of the American government. I make the request that this Convention endorse the desirability of this prayer being used on such occasions."

Mrs. Breed: "I move, Mr. Chairman, that this Convention endorse the reading of this prayer for the confirmation of the United States in our meetings."

Mrs. Coles: "I second the motion."

A PRAYER FOR THE CONFIRMATION OF THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

REVEALED ABOUT THE YEAR 1900

O God—O thou who art the confirmer of every just power and equitable empire in eternal glory, everlasting power, continuance, steadfastness, firmness and greatness!—strengthen, by the abundance of thy mercy, every government which acts rightly towards its subjects and every dominion that protects the poor and weak by its flag.

I ask thee, by the abundance of thy holiness and that of thy bounty, to assist this just government which hath stretched out the ropes of its tent to far and wide countries; the justice of which hath manifested its proofs throughout the well inhabited, cultivated and flourishing regions belonging to such government.

O God, strengthen its soldiers and flag, give authority and influence to its word and utterance, protect its territories and dominions, guard its reputation, make its renown widely spread, divulge its traces and exalt its flag by thy conquering power and wonderful might in the kingdom of creation.

Thou are the confirmer of whomsoever thou willest.

Verily, thou are the powerful and the almighty!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

After a discussion it was agreed to change the word "endorse" to "suggest," to put in the date of the tablet, and to add the words "in America," so that the motion as finally made read as follows: "Resolved that this Convention suggest to all the assemblies in America the reading of the prayer revealed by Abdul-Baha in 1900 for the confirmation of the American government, in our meetings."

The Chairman: "Are you ready for the question?"

Motion carried.

Mr. Remy brought up the question of the circulation of Mr. Harmon's books entitled Divine Illumination and the Microcosm and the Macrocosm.

After a full discussion of this matter it was moved by Mrs. Cooper duly seconded that "We declare Mr. Harmon's books contraband and instruct the assemblies to keep them out of their libraries. After the action taken by this Convention in regard to violation it is the logical step to suppress the literature which has been the cause of that trouble.

Mr. Harmon has a perfect right to circulate his own books publicly but the assembly should have nothing to do with it."

Motion carried.

The Chairman: "Is there any further business?"

Mr. Ober: "I move we adjourn."

Motion was seconded.

The Chairman: "The motion is made that we adjourn. Is there any objection? With your permission I will ask Brother Kinney to play his beautiful hymn, which we will all sing in closing, and then just a word of prayer at the end; and this will be the last session of the Convention, unless you otherwise desire."

Thereupon, after song and prayer, the Tenth Annual Mashrekol-azkar Convention of the Bahai Temple Unity came to a close at twelve minutes after seven o'clock P. M., on Tuesday, April 30th, 1918.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

First Meeting of New Board of Bahai Temple Unity

Held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, April 30th, 1918

ONE of the greatest evidences of the unity and love of the Convention, was found in the first meeting of the Executive Board, which was held in the evening of April 30th, immediately after the Convention. The members of the Board gathered and began the meeting with prayer and chanting, which was followed by an indescribable quiet and peace. No one spoke, for it seemed that the doors of the Rizwan had opened, and the breath of the holy Abha spirit had encircled all. We found infinite rest and wonderful consolation beyond the capacity of words to describe.

It may have been a moment or many minutes, we could not tell, but with hearts overflowing we turned to each other, and from all lips came the words: "this is unity," "this is the mystery of unity."

In one of the first tablets revealed by Abdul-Baha, regarding the Mashrekol-azkar, are the following words, "Who-soever arises for the service of this building shall be assisted with great power from his supreme Kingdom and upon him spiritual and heavenly blessings shall descend, which shall fill his heart with wonderful consolation and enlighten his eyes by beholding the glorious and eternal God."

We were aware that we had received a wonderful bounty from Abdul-Baha, through his mercy and love.

Had it not been for the actual, legal necessities, the Board would not have organized. One spirit enthralled and controlled all, like a living, breathing organism. The existence of this spirit was and is essential, while all other matters were and are incidental.

The following officers were chosen:

PRESIDENT—Mr. Charles Mason Remy,
Washington, D. C.

VICE-PRESIDENT—Mrs. May Maxwell,
Montreal, Canada.

SECRETARY—Mr. Harlan Foster Ober,
Cambridge, Mass.

FINANCIAL SECRETARY—Mrs. Corinne True,
Chicago, Ill.

TREASURER—Mr. William H. Randall,
Boston, Mass.

Harlan Foster Ober.

Letter from Charles Mason Remey

Dear Bahai friends:

. . . . I have recently terminated the matter of the tombstone where the remains of our late Bahai brother, Thornton Chase, rest in Inglewood Cemetery, Los Angeles, which for some time had been pending and I am now happy to be able to tell you that the stone is in place. From the letters and photographs which have been sent me the monument appears to be most satisfactory.

An excavation was made and the casket was permanently enclosed in a concrete tomb which was built up to the level of the ground to form the foundation for the stone which is a single piece of granite one foot thick, six feet six inches in length and three feet wide, weighing one and three-quarters tons. The top is polished and upon this is inscribed the Greatest Name placed within a circle which is divided into nineteen segments, and the following lettering:

“THIS IS THE ILLUMINED RESTING PLACE OF THE HOLY SOUL

THORNTON CHASE

WHO IS SHINING IN THE HORIZON OF ETERNAL LIFE EVER LIKE A STAR.”

—ABDUL-BAHA.

1847-1912.

The matter of this stone was first taken up with Mrs. Chase who gave her consent; then through Mrs. Emogene Hoagg, who was at that time in the Holy Land, Abdul-Baha sent his word of approval. After this the work was begun.

The design of the stone is severely simple. The plainest kind of a moulding forms a base above which runs a series of small circular sunken panels, nine along each side of the stone, and three across each end, in all making twenty-four in number.

Since Abdul-Baha has made Mr. Chase's tomb a place of Bahai pilgrimage, in my imagination, I have seen erected there a mausoleum, possibly in the form of an open circular temple, the roof of which, supported by nine columns, would afford shelter to the many who will visit the spot.

In this stone, I had in view a monument for the present complete in itself, and one which eventually might serve as a tomb slab to form the central feature of a mausoleum which may be built.

Faithfully yours,

C. Mason Remey.

In Memoriam

THORNTON CHASE

FRIDAY, October 19th, 1917, was the fifth anniversary of the visit of our Beloved, the Center of the Covenant, to the "Illumined resting place of the holy soul, Thornton Chase, who is shining in the horizon of eternal life ever like a star."

Twenty-one of the friends in Los Angeles, including Mrs. Chase and a number of her personal friends, were privileged to gather in Inglewood at noon, the hour Abdul-Baha visited the same spot in 1912. The meeting was both a dedication of the stone recently placed there by Mr. C. Mason Remey and a celebration of the visit of Abdul-Baha, thus fulfilling his word to the friends to "visit this grave and on my behalf bring flowers, and seek the sublimity of the spiritual station for him."

The thoughts of those present were centered in the immortality of the soul, the reading being extracts from the words of Abdul-Baha on "Immortality" and his remarks regarding Mr. Chase uttered when in San Francisco. A prayer revealed by Abdul-Baha for Thornton Chase was read, as well as extracts from his various writings. Mrs. Chase then told us of incidents in the life of her husband, how he came into the Movement and something of what it meant to be a Bahai in the early days of the Cause in America. Frank B. Beckett.

MRS. SIDNEY ROBERTS

ON November 30th, 1917, Mrs. Sidney E. Roberts, one of the active Bahai workers in Denver, Colo., passed from this world. She was one of Denver's pioneers; always active in good works and faithful in visiting the sick and poor. Her home was blessed by the presence of Abdul-Baha when he was in America, who told her that she would be remembered throughout coming ages.

Mary B. Morrison.

CHARLES IOAS

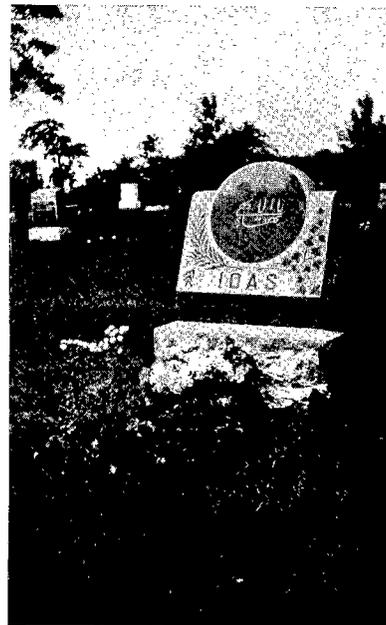

ON May 30th, 1917, Charles Ioas, of Chicago, ascended to the station given him by Abdul-Baha in the following tablet to him from his holy presence, in 1900:

"To the honorable Mr. C. Ioas—

O thou who hast advanced toward God!

By God, I rejoiced when reading thy letter which declares thy belief in the unity of God and thine acknowledgment of the appearance of the Kingdom of God. This is a matter whereby thy face shall brighten in the Supreme Concourse, and thy forehead shall sparkle among the people. Then know the worth of this gift, the lights of which shone forth unto all directions and indicate the attraction of the Concourse of El-Abha, the Most Glorious. Then be firm in this Cause, and thou wilt behold thyself in a lofty station, having all that is in earth under its shadow, because, this is verily that gift which is mentioned in the Gospel. O how good is this bounty in this day, when the commemoration of the true God is published and spread in all directions!

El-Baha be upon thee!"

Charles Ioas was born in Munich, Germany, on March 23rd, 1859. He passed through the regular elementary courses of study and graduated from the University of Munich in 1880. The same year he came to America, studied law, and thereafter followed that vocation. He received the glorious message of the appearance of Baha'o'llah and the Center of the Covenant, in 1898, and immediately dedicated his life and being to the Cause of God. He was one of the first members of the House of Spirituality and served thereon for many years.

His body rests in Mount Auburn Cemetery.

GEORGE LESCH

GEORGE LESCH, one of the best known servants in the Bahai Cause in America, passed from the world of the seen to the realm of the unseen, at Chicago, April 8th, 1918. He was one of the first in the occident to hear of and accept the message of the Kingdom, devoting his life in service to the Center of the Covenant.

In the minds and hearts of those who knew him, his name will ever be synonymous with trustworthiness, sincerity and faithfulness. He was the first secretary of the House of Spirituality, serving in that capacity for many years. It was upon his return home, about midnight, from a business meeting, to arrange for the recent Mashrekol-azkar Convention, that he was stricken with apoplexy and died soon after, with the Greatest Name upon his lips.

In the public meetings, when he spoke before the people, the two subjects which he was ever fond of presenting were "Prayer" and "The power of the Holy Spirit."

George Lesch was born at Chicago, December 27th, 1866. His body rests in Graceland Cemetery.

A TRIBUTE FROM HIS CO-WORKERS, THE HOUSE OF SPIRITUALITY.

Chicago, Illinois.

Miss Mary Lesch, Chicago.

Dear sister in El-Baha:

The members of the House of Spirituality, at a meeting held Thursday evening, April 11th, desired to express to you their sympathy in the passing of your dear brother and our respected co-worker, George Lesch.

We realize that no words of ours can eulogize him, and that any attempt to do so would be entirely inadequate. Recognizing the great love that existed between you, our love for you both gives us the privilege to share with you his memory and to keep it sacred in our hearts as it undoubtedly will be in the hearts of posterity.

His faithfulness, sincerity and sacrifice in the path of God were known to all. It is an honor to be associated with such an one whose whole life was one of faithful service, who was steadfast under the most severe tests and "endured until the end."

Our greatest hope is that we all may serve as devotedly as did he the blessed Cause that we all love.

Your sisters and brothers of

THE HOUSE OF SPIRITUALITY,

Carl Scheffler, Secretary.

A TRIBUTE FROM MRS. I. D. BRITTINGHAM.

San Diego, California.

Miss Mary Lesch, Chicago.

My dear sister in His love and presence:

I have waited until the Convention was over, to write you of my joy with you in the glorious and wondrous promotion of your beautiful brother to the spiritual heights of that home which contains "all of life that is life, and all of love that is love"; which is a permanent, endless home!

In a tablet revealed for a Bahai many years ago, Abdul-Baha said: "To the people of adoration, death is the ark of deliverance." Today when the earth is so storm tossed, how doubly true this is!

My memories of my dear spiritual brother, George Lesch, are all very beautiful memories! His was an earthly life of beautiful deeds of the spiritual world, and his record will be written in words which will never die. His firmness in the Covenant is now the key that opens many new paradises to him in that home of purest vision!

Blessed are you in the possession of a brother, so safely housed in the supreme Kingdom; so released from the bodily limitations, and so prepared by his life in this world for the larger service that now is bestowed upon him. From that home, his nearness to you will be an eternal nearness, knowing nothing of separation, and a service, invisible but sure, to you, which will never end; in which no abatement will exist but instead as he progresses an ever augmenting, spiritual service.

How great was his presence in the recent Convention, where "all banners were reversed save that of the Covenant."

In His love, your sister,

I. D. Brittingham.

ARTHUR PILLSBURY DODGE

(Tablet Revealed when learning of his death, at New York City, October 12, 1915.)

To Mrs. Dodge, and William, Wendell and Paul Dodge—May their lives be happy—

O ye afflicted ones!

A most terrible news reached my ears and that was the death of his honor, Mr. Dodge. Truly, this bereavement is unbearable and the hearts are afflicted with the utmost sorrow and grief that that divine personage hid his face from the world, hastened to the universe of God and left the friends in the remorse and regret of separation. In reality that honorable soul served the Cause of God and endured many hardships and vicissitudes. His services are registered in the everlasting book in the Kingdom of God and mentioned by the Supreme Concurrence. They shall never be forgotten. Ere long they will yield great results and will become the means of happiness to that household and conducive to the honor of its members. I will never forget him and supplicate for him graces and bounties from his highness the Almighty. Be ye not sorrow-stricken nor do ye lament or bemoan; for that drop joined the ocean, that ray returned to the sun, that thirsty one reached the fountain of eternal life and that fish swam in the sea of God's forgiveness. Although his star set in the horizon of this world yet he dawned with the utmost brilliancy from the horizon of eternity. You will find him in that divine universe. Consequently he is not counted among the lost ones.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Blessing be upon the spirit who departed from the body purified from the doubts and superstitions of the nations. Verily, it moves in the atmosphere of God's desire, and enters into the Supreme Paradise.

All the angels on the Supreme Paradise attend and surround it, and it will have fellowship with all the prophets of God and His saints, and speak with them and tell them what happened to it in the Cause of God, the Lord of the Universe. If any one could realize what hath been assigned for it in the Kingdoms of God, the Lord of the Throne and the dust, he would immediately yearn with a great longing for the Unmovable, Exalted, Holy and Abha station!

—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Bahai Methods of Education

A Compilation of the Words of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha to assist Parents and Teachers in the Education of Children

COMPILED BY PAULINE A. HANNEN

It is worthy of note that, in the development of the Bahai Cause in the occident, this is the first compilation to be made and published on this important subject. We believe far-reaching results will follow a serious consideration of its every phase. Mrs. Hannen has rendered a great service not only in its compilation, but in establishing a Bahai Sunday School in Washington, D. C.—The Editors.

Laws of Baha'o'llah

TEACH your children what hath been revealed through the Supreme Pen. Instruct them in what hath descended from the heaven of greatness and power. Let them memorize the tablets of the Merciful and chant them with the most melodious voices in the galleries built in the Temple of the Mashrekol-azkar. The prayers of the Lord shall be chanted in a manner to attract the hearts and souls.

Blessed is he who listeneth unto the River of Life!

(Words of Baha'o'llah.)

We have formerly commanded, in the tablets, that the trustees of the House of Justice must select one tongue out of the present languages, or a new language, and likewise select one among the various writings and teach them to children in the schools of the world, so that the whole world may thereby be considered as one native land and one part.

(Tablet of Ishrakat, p. 36.)

It is decreed that every father must educate his sons and daughters in learning and in writing and also in that which hath been ordained in the tablet. He who neglects that which hath been commanded (in this matter), if he is rich, it is incumbent on the trustees (of the House of Justice) to recover from him the amount required for the education of the children; otherwise (i. e., if the parent is not capable) the matter shall devolve on the House of Justice. Verily, We have made it (the House of Justice) an asylum for the poor and needy.

He who educates his son, or any other children, it is as though he hath educated one of My children.

(Tablet of Ishrakat, p. 36.)

Schools must first train the children in the principles of religion, so that the "promise" and the "threat," recorded in the Books of God, may prevent them from the things forbidden and adorn them with the mantle of commandments; but this in such a measure that it may not injure the children by resulting in ignorance, etc. The trustees of the House of Justice must consult upon the ordinances as they are outwardly revealed in the Book, then enforce, of these, whatever prove agreeable to them. Verily, God will inspire them with that which He willeth, and He is the Ruler, the Knower!

(Words of Paradise, p. 53.)

Men and woman must place a part of what they earn by trade, agriculture, or other business, in charge of a trustworthy person, to be spent in the education and instruction of the children. That deposit must be invested in the education of the children, under the advice of the trustees (or members) of the House of Justice.

(Tablet of the World, p. 29.)

Utterances of Abdul-Baha in Tablets and Talks

NEED OF EDUCATION, ITS IMPORTANCE

IT is most clear and manifest that national affairs will never revolve around their proper axis until the whole people have received instruction and public thought has been directed to a single end.

The most important of all the matters in question and that with which it is most specially necessary to deal effectively is the promotion of education.

No freedom or salvation could be imagined in the case of any nation which had not progressed in this greatest and most important matter; just as the greatest cause of degradation and decadence of every nation is bigotry and ignorance.

If necessary, make this even compulsory, for not until the veins and tendons of the nations stir with life will any study and adoption of improvements be of any avail; because the nation is like unto the body, zeal and resolution are like unto the soul, and the soulless body cannot move.

(Star of the West, Vol. 7, No. 15, p. 141.)

BAHAI HISTORY WHICH EVERY CHILD SHOULD KNOW

The holy, divine Manifestations are unique and peerless. They are the archetypes of celestial and spiritual virtues in their own age and cycle. They stand on the summit of the mount of vision, and they foreshadow the perfections of evolving humanity. For example, during the dispensation of his holiness Moses—peace be upon him!—there was not a single human soul similar or like unto him. He surpassed all the holy souls who came after him, even the hosts of the Israelitish prophets.

In a similar manner all the people who lived during the cycle of his holiness Christ—may my life be a sacrifice to him!—were under his spiritual authority. They had no will of their own. He was the sun, and the others were the lamps. He was unique and peerless, the center and the focal point of the mighty forces. Everyone else was under his shadow. He was the orb and the others were the stars. He was also unique and peerless. Everyone caught the rays of light from him, and was enkindled through his fire. In a like manner, was the epoch of his holiness the Bab—May the life of aught beside be a ransom to him! He was matchless and without a peer. All the rivers received their strength from that great sea.

Finally during this cycle of the Blessed Perfection—may my life be a sacrifice to his believers!—all are beneath his shadow. He is the unique and peerless one till the next Manifestation. It is, however, not definite that it will be one thousand years; it may be 2,000, or 10,000, or 20,000 years; but it is definite that, for the coming one thousand years there will appear no Manifestation, for one thousand years there shall arise no sun. All the appearances will be beneath the shade of this Most Great Appearance; they will be as stars of guidance. All of them shall gather around this fountain of life; all of them will become illumined by the rays of this sun; all of them will receive a share and a portion from this great sea; all of them will become vivified by this soul-imparting breeze and all of them will be under the downpour of this rain.

The aim is this: his holiness the Bab gave the glad-tidings concerning the appearance of the Manifestation of God, and his holiness the Blessed Perfection was the Promised One of all the nations and religions. The Bab was the morning star, the twilight heralding the glorious dawn of the sun of reality. Now all of us are under its shadow, and receive the refulgent bestowals from it. I am Abdul-Baha and no more. I am not pleased with whomsoever praises me with any other title. I am the Servant at the threshold of the Blessed Perfection, and I hope that this servitude of mine will become acceptable. Whosoever mentions any other name save this will not please me at all—Abdul-Baha, and no more. No person must praise me except by this name, Abdul-Baha.

The Blessed Perfection and the Bab are unique and peerless in this dispensation and until the next Manifestation. The belief, the opinion and the thoughts of all the believers must revolve around this common center. This oneness of belief must become fully realized, so that in the future there may arise no differences.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 17, 1914.)

CONCERNING EDUCATION

The prophets also acknowledge this opinion that education hath a great effect upon the human race, but they declare that minds and comprehensions are originally different. And this matter is self-evident; it cannot be refuted. We see that certain children of the same age, nativity and race, nay, from the same household, under the tutorship of one teacher, differ in their minds and comprehensions. One advanceth rapidly, another is slow in catching the rays of culture, still another remaineth in the lowest degree of stupidity.

No matter how much the shell is educated (or polished) it can never become the radiant pearl. The black stone will not become the world-illumining gem. The calocynth* and the thorny cactus can never by training and development become the blessed tree. That is to say, training doth not change the human gem (i. e., human nature or entity), but it produceth a marvelous effect. By this effective power all that is registered latent of virtues and capacities in the human reality will be revealed.

Cultivation by the farmer maketh of the grain the harvest, and the effort of the gardener maketh of the seed a noble tree. The gentle teacher promoteth the children of the school to a lofty altitude and the bestowal of the trainer placeth the little child upon the throne of ether. Therefore it is demonstrated and proven that minds are different in the original entity or nature and that education commandeth a decided and great influence. Were there no educator all souls would remain savage and were it not for the teacher, the children would be ignorant creatures.

It is for this reason that, in this new cycle, education and training are recorded in the Book of God as obligatory and not voluntary. That is, it is enjoined upon father and mother, as a duty, to strive with all effort to train the daughter and the son, to nurse them from the breast of knowledge and to rear them in the bosom of sciences and arts. Should they neglect this matter they shall be held responsible and worthy of reproach in the presence of the stern Lord.

This is a sin unpardonable, for they

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

have made that poor babe a wanderer in the Sahara of ignorance, unfortunate and tormented to remain during a lifetime a captive of ignorance and pride, negligent and without discernment. Verily, if that babe depart from this world at the age of infancy, it is sweeter and better. In this sense, death is better than life, deprivation than salvation, non-existence lovelier than existence, the grave better than the palace, and the narrow, dingy tomb better than the spacious, regal home, for in the sight of mankind that child is abased and degraded and in the sight of God weak and defective. In gatherings it is ashamed and humiliated and in the arena of examination subdued and defeated by young and old. What a mistake is this! What an everlasting humiliation!

Therefore, the beloved of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful must train their children with life and heart and teach them in the school of virtue and perfection. They must not be lax in this matter; they must not be inefficient. Truly, if a babe did not live at all it were better than to let it grow up ignorant, for that innocent babe, in later life, would become afflicted with innumerable defects, responsible to and questioned by God, reproached and rejected by the people. What a sin this would be and what an omission!

The first duty of the beloved of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful is this: they must strive by all possible means to educate both sexes, male and female; girls as well as boys; there is no difference whatsoever between them. The ignorance of both is blameworthy, and negligence in both cases is reprovable. "Are they who know and they who do not know equal?" (Koran).

The command is decisive concerning both. In reality, the training and culture of daughters is more necessary than that of sons, for these girls will come to the station of motherhood and will mould the lives of the children. The first trainer of the child is the mother. The babe, like unto a green tender branch will grow according to the way it is trained. If it is rightly trained, it will grow rightly; if it is wrongly trained the growth will be deformed and thus it will remain until the end of life.

Hence it is firmly established that an untrained and uneducated daughter on becoming a mother will be the prime factor in the deprivation, ignorance, negligence and the lack of training of many children.

O ye beloved of God and ye maid-servants of the Merciful! Teaching and learning, according to the decisive texts of the Blessed Beauty (Baha'o'llah), is a duty. Whosoever is indifferent therein depriveth himself of the great bounty.

Beware! Beware! that ye fail not in this matter. Endeavor with heart, with life to train your children, especially the daughters. No excuse is acceptable in this matter.

Thus may eternal glory and everlasting supremacy like unto the mid-day sun shine forth in the assemblage of the people of Baha and the heart of Abdul-Baha become happy and thankful.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Book of Tablets, Vol. III, page 577.)

EDUCATION OF WOMEN MORE IMPORTANT THAN THAT OF MEN

In this day there are certain women among the Bahais who far surpass men. They are wise, perfected, well informed, very progressive, most intelligent and the glory of men. They are far more courageous than men. When they speak in meetings the men listen to them with great respect. Furthermore, the education of women is much more important than the education of men, for these daughters will be mothers, and mothers rear the children. The first teachers of children are mothers. Therefore, they must be in a state of utmost perfection in order to be able to educate the sons. There are many provisions by Baha'o'llah in regard to this.

Therefore, Baha'o'llah promulgated oneness of education, that is the need of one curriculum for both men and women. Daughters and sons must follow the same form of study and the same education. Having one course of education promotes unity among mankind. When all mankind shall receive the same education and the equality of men and women be realized the foundations of warfare will be utterly destroyed.

(Star of the West, Vol. 5, No. 7, p. 101.)

THE TIE BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE

As to thy question concerning the husband and wife, the tie between them, and the children given to them by God, know thou, verily, the husband is one who has sincerely turned unto God, is awakened by the call of the Beauty of El-Baha and chants the verses of oneness in the great assemblies. The wife is a being who wishes to be overflowing with and seeks after the attributes of God and His names; and the tie between them is no other than the Word of God. Verily, it (the Word of God) causes the multitudes to assemble together, and the remote ones to be united. Thus the husband and wife are brought into affinity, are united and harmonized, even as though they were one person. Through their mutual union, companionship and love great results are produced in the world, both material and spiritual. The spiritual result is the appearance of divine bounties. The material result is the children who are born in the cradle of the love of God, who are nurtured by the breast of the knowledge of God, are brought up in the bosom of the gift of God and are fostered in the lap of the training of God. Such children are those of whom it was said by Christ: "Verily, they are the children of the Kingdom."

Consequently, O thou maid-servant of God, reach the maid-servants of the Merciful One, and tell them from the tongue of Abdul-Baha: O maid-servants of the Merciful! It is incumbent upon you to train the children from their earliest babyhood! It is incumbent upon you to beautify their morals! It is incumbent upon you to attend to them under all aspects and circumstances! Inasmuch as God—glorified and exalted is He!—hath ordained mothers as the primary trainers of children and infants; this is a great and important affair and a high and exalted position, and it is not allowable to slacken therein at all.

If thou walkest in this right path thou wilt become a real mother to the children, both spiritually and materially.

(Tablet to Mrs. H. H.)

As to thy question: "If the husband prevents his wife from entering into the Light, or the wife prevents the husband from entering into the Kingdom of God." In reality neither one of them prevents the other from entering into the Kingdom of God, unless when the husband has a great attachment to the wife, or the wife to the husband. When either one of the two adores the other instead of God, then each will prevent the other from entering into the Kingdom of God.

(Tablet.)

ADVICE TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS

As to thy question concerning the training of children: It is incumbent upon thee to nurture them from the breast of the love of God, to urge them towards spiritual matters, to turn unto God and to acquire good manners, best characteristics and praiseworthy virtues and qualities in the world of humanity, and to study sciences with the utmost diligence, so that they may become spiritual, heavenly and attracted to the fragrances of sanctity from their childhood and be reared in a religious, spiritual and heavenly training. Verily, I beg of God to confirm them therein.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha: Vol. 1, p. 87.)

I ask God to help thy children to gain knowledge, to attain virtues and morals, which are the refinements of the reality of man; and to strengthen thee to remain firm.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha: Vol. 1, p. 67.)

If a child is left to its own natural proclivities, without education, it will embody all human defects. Education makes of man a man. Religion is divine education. There are two pathways which have been pointed out by the heavenly educators. The first is divine guidance and reliance upon the Manifestations of God. The other is the road of materialism and reliance upon the senses. These roads lead in opposite directions. The first leads to the world of the Kingdom; the other ends in the world of human vices and is contrary to the cause of divine guidance. For example, consider a babe at the mother's breast, observe its natural aggressiveness, its instinctive antagonism. It claws and bites the mother, even attacks the fountain of life itself. A barbarous and savage country is a country which has been deprived of education, where men are utter materialists like animals. Such a nation embodies all human defects and vices. They even kill and eat one another. Divine education is the sum total of all development. It is the safeguard of humanity. The world of nature is a world of defects and incompleteness. The world of the Kingdom is reached by the highway of religion and is the heaven of all divine virtues.

(Star of the West, Vol. 4, No. 6, p. 105.)

Some one asked if such a solitary place (a summer resort in the mountains) was good for children if with companions of their age. Abdul-Baha answered, "It is very good for children. It is good for their eyes, thoughts, minds, etc. But sometimes it is necessary for them to be with other well brought up children. Consider—when a child becomes two years old it likes to associate with other children. Consider the birds how they gather and fly together. Do you remember when you were a child how pleased you were with the children who were of your age and how happy you were?"

All children should be educated, but if parents cannot educate both the boys and the girls, then it would be better to educate the girls, for they will be the mothers of the coming generation. This is a radical idea for the East, where I come from, but it is already taking effect there, for the Bahai women of Persia are being educated along with the men.

Is it not a fact that the females of many species of animals are stronger and more powerful than the males? The chief cause of the mental and physical inequalities of the sexes is due to custom and training, which for ages past have molded women into the ideal of the weaker vessel.

The world in the past has been ruled by force and man has dominated over woman by reason of his more forceful and aggressive qualities both of body and mind. But the scales are already shifting, force is losing its weight, and mental alertness, intuition, and the spiritual qualities of love and service, in which woman is strong, are gaining ascendancy. Hence the new age will be an age less masculine and more permeated with the feminine ideals, or, to speak more exactly, will be an age in which the masculine and feminine elements of civilization will be more properly balanced.

The fathers, and especially the mothers, must always think how they can best educate their children; not how to fondle and embrace them and thus spoil them. By every means at their disposal they must inculcate in their growing bodies, souls, minds and spirits the principles of sincerity, love, trustfulness, obedience, true democracy and kindness toward all the races; thus hereafter the world civilization may flow in one mighty current and the children of the next generation may make secure the foundations of human solidarity and good-will. From the tenderest childhood the children must be taught by their mothers the love of God and the love of humanity; not the love of the humanity of Asia, or the humanity of Europe, or the humanity of America, but the humanity of humankind. There are some mothers who have a strange, inexplicable love for their children. One may call it the inversion of love, or as we call it in Persia "bearish love." This kind of love does more injury to the child than good. When I was in Acca, during the life of Baha'ollah, I intrusted the son of one of the believers to a German carpenter. After a month, his mother went to Baha'ollah and lamented and bemoaned, "I want my son, because he is unhappy with this carpenter, who curses his religion."

Baha'ollah told her to "go to Agha (the Master) and whatever he says, act accordingly."

She came to me, and after she had told her side of the story I told her: "The Germans never curse anyone. They are not accustomed to it."

She went away, and after another month she came again to Baha'ollah with another complaint that this carpenter had forced her son to carry on his back a load of wheat. Again I told her that if he had done so it was for discipline. I quieted her, but she was murmuring inwardly. A few months rolled by, and she returned with another set of complaints, frankly confessing that she did not want her son to be away from her, that he was the apple of her eye. Realizing how selfish her love was for her son I told her at last that I would not take him away; that he must stay with the carpenter for eight years until his apprenticeship was over. Well, she yielded to the inexorable situation. After eight years of study he left his master, and his mother was very proud of him, everywhere praising his industry because his work was demanded on every hand. In short, the mothers must not think of themselves but of the progress of their children because upon the children of today—whether boys or girls—depends the molding of the civilization of tomorrow.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Sept. 2, 1913.)

Regarding the education of those two daughters D and M If thou givest true Bahai education to those two young trees in the garden of Abha know thou of a certainty that the highest glory, prosperity and success will become ready and prepared for them. This is the cause of everlasting honor.

(Excerpt from tablet to Miss J. M., Sept. 13, 1913.)

Let thy brother be trained according to the highest moral standard. In the tenderest years of their youth the pure hearts of boys and girls must be illumined with the light of the love of God. Then when they grow up most astonishing results will be produced because the map of their whole lives will be drawn with the hand of the spiritual educator. A Bahai child must be trained according to the moral precepts of Baha'o'llah, he must be taught daily of the love of God; the history of the Movement must be read to him, the love of humanity must be inculcated into every fiber of his being and the universal principles be explained to him in as easy a manner as can be devised. Then the power of great faith will take possession of his heart. But if these supreme precautions are not taken in the earliest stages of the child's growth, it will be most difficult to curb later on his growing manifest appetites. For then he will live according to the requirements of the world of nature and uncontrolled self. Once the lower and sensual habits of nature take hold of him it will be very hard to reform him by any human agencies. Hence children must be brought under the control of the love of God and under spiritual influence from their earliest youth. The lower appetites of nature are like kings over man; one must defeat their forces; otherwise he will be defeated by them.

DUTY TOWARDS ORPHANS

O thou happy and blessed one! In this holy Cause the question of the education and the maintenance of the orphans has the utmost importance. Towards the orphans the utmost consideration must be shown. They must be taught and instructed; especially the teachings of his holiness Baha'o'llah must be given freely to every orphan according to the means at hand. I beg of God that to the orphaned children thou mayst become a kind father and mother, to quicken them with the fragrances of the Holy Spirit; thus they may attain to the age of maturity and each one may become the real servant of the world of humanity, nay rather they may become as bright candles in the assemblages of mankind.

STATION OF THOSE WHO SERVE AND TEACH CHILDREN

O thou teacher of the children of the Kingdom! Thou hast undertaken such a service that shouldst thou glory over all the teachers of the world, thou art deserving. For the teachers of the world confer a material education, so that human faculties, physical and ideal, may grow and develop; but thou art bestowing heavenly instruction and the lessons of the Kingdom upon the new plants of the divine garden. The results of this education are to obtain the bestowals of the Most Glorious Lord and the appearance of the virtues of the world of humanity. Show firmness and steadfastness in this work. The outcome will be most important. From their childhood the children must be given a Bahai, spiritual and Godlike education. Should they be so instructed they will be protected and guarded from every test.

(Tablet to Mrs. H. L., Oct. 29, 1913.)

The children must receive divine and material education at the same time, and be protected from temptations and vices. How wonderful will it be when the teachers are faithful, attracted and assured, educated and refined Bahais, well grounded in the science of pedagogy and familiar with child psychology; thus they may train the children with the fragrances of God. In the scheme of human life the teacher and his system of teaching plays the most important role, carrying with it the heaviest responsibilities and most subtle influence. A teacher is like unto a gardener. Just as a gardener sows the seeds and watches carefully over their sprouting, looks after their growth and development—so also a teacher must watch over the education of the children and inculcate in their young lives the highest ideals of truth and justice, etc.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Oct. 18, 1914.)

A woman who is a good Bahai, working for the children in the school, came. She showed her hands to Abdul-Baha that he might see how she had scrubbed the floor. He kept her hands in his and said: "Hands which have labored in the cause of education are ever blessed. I am pleased with your hands. I love such hands very much because they have worked for the children. May you become a great educator and guide to humanity."

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, London, December, 1912.)

Praise be to God, that with your soul and with your heart you are striving to guide the children. Appreciate the importance of this favor, that you have been assisted to do such a work, for the result of the spreading of the Cause of God is eternal exaltation. It is as when a man sows a pure seed in pure soil and it grows through the showers from the clouds of mercy of the Educator. Consider what a blessing will be brought forth.

(Tablet to Mrs. F. G., 1914.)

TWO TYPES OF CHILDREN

Abdul-Baha said: "Baha'o'llah declared that children are of two kinds—the mature and the immature. The mature are the children of believers, and the immature, of unbelievers. Some attain to the highest station because they are so well prepared that they can enter the highest station without earthly preparation. When we see a child wise beyond his years, it is a sign of this preparation; so we cannot question the justice of this. All are created in the same station by the justice of God, but if some of these have become prophets and some teachers, this is from the favors and bounty of God."

"We must be guided entirely by the intelligence and development of the child as to how soon we should begin to teach it.

"A woman reaches her maturity at the age of twenty and must then certainly receive the full teaching.

"Many a child of ten is sufficiently developed and advanced to receive some teaching and some are ready for it at the age of eight or nine.

"The great thing that is necessary to teach children is to be characterized with the attributes of God and to be good. Their hearts and minds must be prepared to receive the truth as soon as they are old enough to be taught anything—but children should not be taught facts and details which they may not speak of openly to their fellows and companions. They must on no account allow their children to drink wine or alcoholic drinks."

Abdul-Baha spoke of the Druses, who never drank wine or smoked, and as a consequence were quite free from many diseases.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 7, No. 15, p. 142.)

BAHAI METHODS: TEACH THEM IN PLAY; THROUGH SPEECH, NOT BOOKS

Among these children many blessed souls will arise if they be trained according to the Bahai teaching. If a plant is carefully nurtured by a gardener it will become good and produce better fruit. These children should be given a good training from their earliest childhood. They should be given a systematic training which will further their development in order that they may receive greater insight, so that their spiritual receptivity may be broadened. Beginning in childhood, they should receive instruction. They cannot be taught through books. Many elementary sciences should be made clear to them in the nursery; they should learn them in play, in amusement. Most ideas must be taught them through speech, not by book-learning. One child should question the other concerning these things, and the other child should give the answer. In this way they will make great progress. For example, mathematical problems should be taught in the form of questions and answers. One of the children asks a question and the other should give the answer. Later on the children will of their own accord converse with one another on these subjects. The children who are at the head of their class should receive premiums. They should be encouraged and when any one of them shows good advancement for further development they should be praised and encouraged therein. Even so in God-like affairs. Oral questions should be asked and the answers should be given orally. They should discuss with one another in this manner.

(Star of the West, Vol. 7, No. 15, p. 142.)

A wise schoolmaster should send his scholars out to play or to practice gymnastics for an hour, so that their minds and bodies may be refreshed, and during the hour of the lesson they may learn it better. If the teacher proves that his scholars are advancing no on-looker has a right to object to his system, or to question his wisdom and say he wastes the boys' time. If a wise father plays with his children, who has a right to say it is not good for them? He calls them to come to him as the hen calls her chicks; he knows that they are little and must be coaxed along—coaxed along, because they are young and tiny.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: From leaflet The True Gardener.)

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN

Take away thy dear child from among the heedless ones, for they are fast after him in order that they may lead him astray from the right path. Keep him some time with thyself and train him as he ought and should be. Then send him to another school or another place.

(Tablet to P. A. H., March 27, 1906.)

Be thou kind to the "bantam chickens and their babies" and take good care of them; so that thou mayest learn how to train the living creatures. Teach and educate the "parrot" in order that she may be instructed with the heavenly words. Although the parrot may be unconscious of the meaning of the phrases, yet, God willing, thy heart will be inspired with such utterances, (the significance of which will be revealed to thee first and then the words will flow from thy tongue). Perfect thyself in the art of music; so that thou mayest be able to play on the harp most divinely.

(Tablet: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 31, 1914.)

DUTIES OF CHILDREN TOWARD PARENTS

There are also certain sacred duties of children toward parents; these duties are written in the Book of God, as belonging to God. The (children's) prosperity in this world and the Kingdom depends upon the good pleasure of parents, and without this they will be in manifest loss.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 2, p. 262.)

Father and mother are worthy of esteem and it is necessary to secure their good pleasure; but this on condition that they do not prevent one from nearness to the threshold of the Almighty and do not withhold one from walking in the path of the Kingdom. Nay, rather, parents should encourage and inspire one to walk in God's path.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 2, p. 463.)

O thou my dear son! Thy letter sweetened the heart and the spirit. Thy lovely face is engraved forever on the tablet of my heart. I am also longing to look into thy countenance. Say always the Greatest Name before beginning thy lessons. The confirmation and assistance of God shall encircle thee.

(Tablet: From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, May 26, 1914.)

Although thou art small, yet I hope thou wilt become great in the Kingdom. His Highness Christ, saith: "Happy is the condition of the children." God willing, thou art one of those children.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

No. 8

Be obedient and kind to thy father and mother, caressing brother and sister, and day by day adding to thy faith and assurance.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 3, p. 551.)

O thou dear one of Abdul-Baha! Be the son of thy father and be the fruit of that tree. Be a son that hath been born of his soul and heart and not only of the water and clay. A real son is such an one as hath branched from the spiritual part of a man. I ask God that thou mayest be at all times confirmed and strengthened.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 2, p. 342.)

DUTIES OF CHILDREN TOWARDS GOD

O ye dear children! Your Father is compassionate, clement and merciful unto you and desireth for you success, prosperity and eternal life in the Kingdom of God. Therefore, it is incumbent upon you, dear children, to seek His good pleasure, to be guided by His guidance, to be drawn by the magnet of the love of God and be brought up in the lap of the love of God, that ye may become beautiful branches in the garden of El-Abha, verdant and watered by the abundance of the gift of God.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 3, p. 622.)

Abdul-Baha's instructions to the Bahai Sunday School of Washington, D. C.

THE Sunday School for the children, in which Tablets are read, the teachings of His Holiness Baha'o'llah explained, and the Word of God read to the children, is exceedingly blessed. Undoubtedly meetings should be held regularly and invested with importance so that day unto day its circle may be enlarged and be quickened with the breaths of the Holy Spirit. If this meeting is organized befittingly and behoovingly, rest thou assured that it shall yield most great results; but firmness and steadfastness are necessary, that it may not continue for a few days and later on little by little be forgotten. Its continuation depends upon firmness. In every cause firmness and steadfastness undoubtedly lead to results; otherwise it will continue for some days and then will be disorganized.

(Tablet to P. A. H., July 28, 1913.)

In that hour you should make the children familiar with the prophecies in the Gospels and with the Name of God, and with this Revelation: that is to say, instruct them how to become teachers, so that the love of God may be established in their hearts while they are young children. They should develop spiritual feelings. You should explain to them or read to them the Ishrakat, Tarazat, Tajalleyat, the Words of Paradise, and the Tablet of the World. You should make them memorize some of these verses. By these means they will become enlightened and well educated, for they are like unto a young tree: you can train them in whatever manner you like.

(Spoken in February, 1909, to P. A. H. and J. H. H.)

Praise be to God! Thou art engaged in teaching and educating the children, for they have wonderfully memorized and read the manifest verses, the Glad-Tidings, the Communes, the Ishrakat and the Word. I hope that each one of them (those children) will become a peerless teacher and the cause of the guidance of the people. Praise be to God! All the members are illumined with the light of the Beauty of Abha!

(Tablet to P. A. H.)

Thou hast written regarding the spiritual education of the children. It is very acceptable and beloved. Undoubtedly these children will make ideal and physical advancement.

(Tablet to P. A. H., Nov. 21, 1913.)

Indeed the sweet melody of the pupils of Mrs. H. . . . gladdened the hearts of the people of the Supreme Concourse.

(To Mr. R., May, 1909.)

CHILDREN TO BE TAUGHT MUSIC

Abdul-Baha's Address to the children of the Washington Sunday School,
April 24, 1912.

The art of music is divine and effective. It is the food of the spirit and the soul. The spirit of man is exhilarated through the notes and charms of music. It exercises especially a wonderful sway over the hearts of children, for as their souls are pure, as their hearts are very pure, the music will produce in their hearts great effect. Music will become the cause of the expression of the latent talents in their hearts. You must exert yourselves so that you may teach the children the art of music; so that they may sing with greatest effect. It is incumbent upon each child to know something of the art of music, for unless he is acquainted with the art of music, he cannot enjoy the art of singing and melody. Likewise it is necessary that the schools teach the art of music to the pupils, so that they may enjoy life more thoroughly, so that their souls and hearts may become vivified and exhilarated.

Today illumined and spiritual children are gathered in this meeting. They are children of the Kingdom. The Kingdom of God is for these souls, for they are near to the Kingdom. They have pure hearts. They have spiritual faces. The effect of the teachings is manifest in their hearts, for their hearts are very pure. That is why His Highness Christ has addressed the world saying: "Be like unto the children." That is, men must become pure in heart. The teachings must have great effect. Spiritual souls; tender souls!

The hearts of all the children are pure, of the utmost purity. They have no dust. But this is on account of weakness, not on account of any strength. In the early period of childhood their hearts are pure. They cannot display any great intelligence. They have not hypocrisy nor stratagem. This is on account of weakness. But a man becomes pure through the power of strength. Through the power of intelligence and understanding he becomes simple, through the great power of reason. He becomes sincere through the great power of intelligence, not through the power of weakness. When man attains to the state of perfection he will receive these qualities; his heart will become pure, his spirit enlightened, his soul tender, and this through strength. This is the difference between the perfect man and the child. Both have the great, simple, underlying qualities; but the child through the power of weakness and the man through the power of strength. I pray in behalf of these children and beg confirmation and assistance for them from the Kingdom of Abha so that each of these children may be trained under the shadow of the protection of God; each one may become like an ignited candle in the world of humanity; each one may become like a tender and green plant in the rose-garden of Abha; that these children may be so trained and so educated that they will give life to the world of humanity; that they may receive insight; that they may bestow hearing to the people of the world; that they may plant life eternal and that they may be accepted at the threshold of God; that they may become so characterized with such virtues and such perfections and such qualities that their mothers may be proud; that their fathers may become well pleased; that their relatives may become hopeful. This is my hope. I give you my advice and it is this: You must train these children, you must give them divine exhortations. From their childhood you must put into their hearts the love of God, so that they may become the manifestors of the fear of God; so that they may have the fear of the Divine, and that they may become hopeful in the bestowals of God; so that day by day they may become free from the imperfections of humanity and acquire the perfections of the world of man. The life of man is useful if he acquires the perfections of man. If he becomes the center of the imperfections of the world of humanity death is better than life, non-existence is better than existence. Therefore, make ye an effort so that these children may be trained and educated and that each of them may become perfect in the world of humanity.

Now there is another meeting and I must go. I am very much pleased with these children. These are all my children. Know ye the value of these children, for they are my children.

(Star of the West, Vol. 3, No. 3, p. 19.)

SUNDAY CLASS IMPORTANT

Question: "Is it right that Mrs. H.... has given up the Sunday School work?"

He looked very much surprised and grieved and said: "Why? No! She must keep it up by all means. Why does she want to give it up?"

I answered that it was too far for most of the children and some were too delicate to walk.

He said: "If they cannot arrange to go every Sunday, they must go every other Sunday, if not every other Sunday then once a month. But they must come together and must keep up the Sunday School."

(Words of Abdul-Baha to Miss A. S. K. spoken in Stuttgart, Germany, April 2, 1913.)

Abdul-Baha listened very attentively to all that was said pertaining to the Sunday School, saying: "Kheli Khoob! Kheli Khoob! It is very necessary that the Sunday School be renewed again and be made active." Then Abdul-Baha asked: "The Sunday School is very important; then why did the parents become indifferent? It is very essential that the Sunday School be upheld, first, because the children are there taught the Words of Baha'o'llah. Second, because the morality taught there is the true Bahai morality. Third, because the children will there become firmly established in the precepts and truths of the Bahai Cause. Fourth, because the Sunday School is of great value: It is very good and they must attend it with joy and fragrance and with enthusiasm."

(To Miss F. A. K., Paris, May 20, 1913.)

Talks by Abdul-Baha to other Bahai children

ADDRESS TO THE CHILDREN OF THE BAHAIS AT CHICAGO, MAY 5, 1912.

You are the children of whom his holiness Christ has said, "You are the denizens of the Kingdom;" and according to the Words of Baha'o'llah you are the very lamps or candles of the world of humanity, for your hearts are exceedingly pure and your spirits are most delicate. You are near the source; you have not yet become contaminated. You are like lambs, or like a very finely polished mirror. My hope for you is that your parents may educate you spiritually, giving you the utmost ethical training. May your education be most perfect so that each one of you may be imbued with all the virtues of the human world. May you advance in all the degrees, be they material degrees or spiritual degrees. May you all become learned, acquire sciences and arts and crafts; may you be useful members of human society; may you aid the progress of human civilization; may you be a cause of the manifestation of the divine bestowals; may each one of you be a shining star, radiating the light of the oneness of humanity towards the East and West; may you further the unity of mankind; may you promote the love of the whole. May the reality deposited in the human entity become apparent through your efforts. I pray for all of you asking God's aid and confirmation in your behalf.

You are all my children, you are my spiritual children. The spiritual children are very dear, they are dearer than physical children, because it is possible for physical children to prove unspiritual but you are all spiritual children; therefore you are very dear; you are most beloved. I wish for you progress along all degrees. May God aid you. May you be surrounded by His gaze of kindness, and may you be nurtured and attain maturity under his protection. You are all blessed.

(Star of the West, Vol. 3, No. 4, p. 22.)

A TALK TO THE PUPILS OF THE BAHAI SCHOOL IN ACCA.

A Lesson in English by a Persian Boy.

How lucky I was and what good fortune I had yesterday in the morning. While all the scholars and I were assembled together in the school and reading our lessons suddenly our hearts were filled with joy by hearing our Master's voice blessing the believers; then he entered the school with shining face and smiling lips and began to walk very calmly through the room, addressing us and saying: "Endeavor and strive eagerly that you may progress and advance rapidly. You are born in this holy day, attaining this great privilege by the favor of God, therefore you must not waste or throw away this bounty and mercy. Try always to get more manliness and humbleness and to love one another. You are like a small plant newly sown. If the rays of the sun reflect on it and it is watered by showers of rain there is no doubt that it will by and by grow and become a very fruitful tree; but if cold winds blow and the plant be deprived of the shining of the sun and the rain it will certainly be withered and become a useless thing.

“Now, if you occupy yourselves, for instance, in affirming some reasons for the truth of this holy Cause and how to deliver the Word of God to everyone, these things will support and strengthen you and will prepare you for the good of this world and that which is to come; but if, God forbid, you lose your time in vain chattering and useless talk and running hither and thither, these things, be sure, will never lead you to the way of salvation.

“Never think whether you will have more or less wealth, for riches will never guide any man in the right way.

“O children,” continued our Master, “there is a matter which is very important and that is this, let none of you at any time be puffed up with pride or despise any other being. Never, never do this, this is worse than all things. Man is a sinful blunderer, therefore he must acknowledge his faults.

“His Holiness, the blessed Bab, mentions in his book that every one must consider at the end of each day what have been his actions. If he finds something which would please God, he must thank Him and pray to be strengthened to do this good act throughout his life; but if his actions have not been approvable or honest, he must earnestly ask God for strength to do better.

“And now,” said the Master, “the report of your weekly work is good and free from blunder and fault, therefore I am greatly pleased and very happy. I want you to work for the sake of God, and not for your own interest. Therefore I am advising you with the greatest love and kindness for your own benefit and comfort.”

These were our beloved Master's utterances yesterday in the morning.

(Abdul-Baha takes a great interest in the progress of these boys, and often gives them helpful little talks; this one I have reproduced here in the words of one of the pupils, which he wrote out in English for me and which I have but slightly altered.—The Teacher.)

“You must give your daughter a Bahai education so that she may become an excellent teacher of the Cause. She must receive a spiritual education. Then she will make extraordinary progress. Religious teachings are essential for the proper development of the mind and the spirit. If religious instruction is not given to the children they will grow heedless and lose their moral susceptibilities. They will laugh at all moral obligations. The children are like unto green branches. As long as the branch is green, you can train it in whatever way you think best; but once the branch is dried up you cannot do anything with it. If you want to straighten it it will break.”

Again he spoke with little Mona. “Do you love your parents?”

“Yes!”

“Which one do you love best? Your mother or father?”

“I love both equally.”

“Bravo! Well said! Now tell me, do you love Baha'o'llah or your mother best?”

This was a difficult question. She hesitated a moment, and then replied with much emphasis: “Baha'o'llah.”

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Oct. 16, 1914.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Bahai Methods of Education

A Compilation of the Words of Baha'o'llah and Abdul-Baha to assist Parents and Teachers in the Education of Children

COMPILED BY PAULINE A. HANNEN

MANUAL TRAINING ENDORSED

To a Bahai with two sons in a French school, Abdul-Baha said:

"Give your children a manual profession, something by which they may be able to support themselves and others. Let polite literature take care of itself; teach them a technical art or profession."

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Nov. 12, 1913.)

CAMP SCHOOL IN MOUNTAINS APPROVED

"When I was in Dublin," Abdul-Baha said, "the professor of the out-door school invited me to visit the pupils. The school is in the mountains of New Hampshire, built among the woods. All around there are green valleys, verdant palms and blue lakes. They have a large cabin and have pitched several tents. Their supreme object is to promote the art of beauty and gracefulness and the science of strength. For this reason they practice calisthenics and athletics and exercise bodily training. They are thinly clad and often sleep in the open air. They go bathing and during certain hours they study. Fresh air, outdoor exercise, wholesome food, clean sports, uplifting ideals and regular training of body, mind and spirit build up their constitutions and give them strong muscles, sterling characters and robust manhood. They have a school room and dining-room and except the hours of study and meals they spend their time entirely out in the open air, learning many excellent lessons from the book of nature. I saw there a very young lad who, I was told by the teacher, was very thin and emaciated when he was brought to the camp, but during his four weeks' stay he was completely changed, having gained flesh, health and color, so that he could take part in the vigorous exercises. The professor of this twentieth century school was one of the most refined and cultured men that it was my pleasure to meet in America, and he showed me much love, hospitality and affection. The boys were most polite and decorous and although some of them were very young yet they stayed through the talk and listened most attentively. I was very pleased with all of them. Resourcefulness and self-control are the two lessons taught to these boys through words and deeds—so that if in the course of their lives through an accident of checkered fortune they should be thrown on an uninhabited island in the midst of the sea, they would master the situation calmly, control themselves and provide through their own ingenuity and inventiveness the essential means of livelihood. After all, this is the greatest lesson that any highly-evolved civilization can teach us. They are so taught that when the proper time arrives, they will not shun the dangers and risks of life; that like unto the birds of the fields and the animals of the woods they may be able to procure their sustenance and protect themselves from the encroachments of the enemy.”

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 12, 1914.)

CARDINAL BAHAI PRINCIPLES OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

In this age the college which is dominated by a denominational spirit is an anomaly, and is engaged in a losing fight. It cannot long withstand the victorious forces of liberalism in education. The universities and colleges of the world must hold fast to three cardinal principles.

First: Whole-hearted service to the cause of education, the unfolding of the mysteries of nature, the extension of the boundaries of pure science, the elimination of the causes of ignorance and social evils, a standard universal system of instruction, and the diffusion of the lights of knowledge and reality.

Second: Service to the cause of morality, raising the moral tone of the students, inspiring them with the sublimest ideals of ethical refinement, teaching them altruism, inculcating in their lives the beauty of holiness and the excellency of virtue and animating them with the excellences and perfections of the religion of God.

Third: Service to the oneness of the world of humanity; so that each student may consciously realize that he is a brother to all mankind, irrespective of religion or race. The thoughts of universal peace must be instilled into the minds of all the scholars, in order that they may become the armies of peace, the real servants of the body politic—the world. God is the Father of all. Mankind are His children. This globe is one home. Nations are the members of one family. The mothers in their homes, the teachers in the schools, the professors in the college, the presidents in the universities, must teach these ideals to the young from the cradle up to the age of manhood.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Feb. 15, 1914.)

CHARACTERISTICS OF BAHAI COLLEGE STUDENTS

You must become the shining candles of moral precepts and spiritual ideals and be the means of the illumination of others. Clothe your bodies with the robes of virtues. Characterize yourselves with the characteristics of the people of divine morality. Shun all manner of vices as you shun a poisonous snake or a leper. Let the corps of professors and the students be impressed with the purity and holiness of your lives so that they may take you as paragons of worthiness, examples of nobility of nature, observers of the moral laws, holding in subordination the lower element by the higher spirit, the conquerors of self and the masters of wholesome, vital forces in all the avenues of life. Strive always to be at the head of your classes through hard study and true merit. Be always in a prayerful state and appreciate the value of everything. Entertain high ideals and stimulate your intellectual and constructive forces.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, April 17, 1914.)

I hope that while you are studying in this college you may so excel all other students in the various branches of knowledge taught therein that all of them may testify that the Bahai students have another power, are inspired with another effort, are imbued with a nobler ambition, are stimulated by higher motives and make wider and deeper exertions than others. If you do not surpass the others, then what distinction will there remain for you? Therefore, you must strive to be superior to them, so that everyone may bear testimony to this fact. You are now like the tender plants that are trained according to the knowledge and wisdom of the gardener. From now on, you must strive to beautify the moral aspect of your lives. Advise one another with utmost consideration, watch daily your words and deeds; thus from the very beginning you may characterize yourselves with divine ideals.

The divine ideals are humility, submissiveness, annihilation of self, perfect evanescence, charity and loving-kindness. You must die to self and live in God. You must be exceedingly compassionate to one another and to all the people of the world. Love and serve mankind just for the sake of God and not for anything else. The foundation of your love toward humanity must be spiritual faith and divine assurance.

Again: be ye most careful that, God forbid, not one single word contrary to truth issue from your mouths. One falsehood throws man from the highest station of honor to the lowest abyss of disgrace. Always guard yourselves against this enemy so that all you state may correspond with reality. Forever supplicate and entreat at the Court of Majesty and beg confirmation and assistance. Make ye an effort that ye may win the good pleasure of the Blessed Perfection. All the natural and supernatural advancements in the human world revolve around this one problem. If you attain to this supreme goal all the elements of the world of creation will be ready to serve you at your bidding, (i. e., they will find their highest attainment in you and through you), or in other words you will become the fruits of the world of existence. The evolution of the trunk, branches, leaves and blossoms of the tree is the fruit thereof. Exalt your thought. Reflect over all your affairs. Magnify your endeavors. Enlarge the circle of your ideals. Open the wings of spiritual wisdom. Let your hope be the accomplishment of most great deeds, the results of which may immortalize your names. All that the people are holding fast to is as the mirage and will not last. Praise be to God, that you are under the protection of Baha'o'llah and His bounties have encircled you. I will always pray for you, and with the utmost humility beg extraordinary progress for you.

TO THE BAHAI STUDENTS OF BEIRUT COLLEGE (SYRIA)

Praise be to God, that the Bahai students in Beirut are well known for the beauty of their character, the purity of their deeds, and the loftiness of their morality. From whomsoever one enquires about the Bahai students, one will hear unstinted praise. This is through the favors and bounties of the Blessed Beauty, who has assisted you to attain such a high station. For you have lived in a manner conducive to the glorification of the Cause of God. Baha'o'llah is pleased with you; all the people are pleased with you; I am pleased with you, and the friends of God are pleased with you. This is the special divine bounty, which is being realized at rare intervals. If one asks any person concerning the Bahai students, he will answer: "In reality they are intelligent, sober, industrious, diligent, displaying good manners and behavior and concentrating all their attention on their acquirement of knowledge. They do not spend their time in frivolous amusements and distracting recreations." Even the enemies testify to your spotless character. I hope that through the favor and bounty of the Blessed Beauty, his holiness the Bab, and the ineffable blessings which hallow this holy shrine,* the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha may encircle you, and that you may be characterized with the shining qualities and brilliant attributes of the Bahai life. May your morality become more defined day by day! May your faith and assurance be increased day by day! May your attraction to the kingdom of Abha be intensified day by day! May your attainment in sciences and arts become more universal day by day! Perchance, God willing, you may become perfect and accomplished from every standpoint and be the means of the enlightenment of Persia.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Oct. 12, 1914.)

God be praised! How wonderful are these students! † I am looking forward with great hope to their future! In reality they are beneath the shade of the Blessed Perfection, they are being animated with the spirit of the Holy Land. For this reason, they are superior to many students. Their mettle will become known in the future. They are now under the process of refining. When they come out of the crucible their brightness will become manifest. The Word of God is the refining which will polish them, suffering them to become pure as tested gold. Every single assured and firm believer will consider himself the servant of all the friends of God, nay rather the servant of the world of humanity. The honor of man depends upon this. The everlasting glory of mankind lies in this! For this reason His Holiness Christ says: "The last shall be first, the least among you in the Kingdom is the greatest." Who-soever desires to walk in the path of the Kingdom—so that he may reach the court of the Almighty—must be a true servant. The path of God cannot be compared with the paths of men. The humbler the man is in the path of God, the more exalted is he; the greater his meekness and submissiveness, the more beloved is he; the more he is surrounded with tests and trials, the vaster the tranquillity and composure of his spirit.

*The Students were visiting the tomb of the Bab.

†This is a talk to the believers visiting Abdul-Baha. The students were also present. These students visit the Holy Land during their vacations and most of them are permitted to live the whole summer near the tomb of the Bab on Mt. Carmel.—Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi.

Words of Abdul-Baha regarding infants before and after birth

TO AN EXPECTANT MOTHER

Your child will have extraordinary capacities. It will be a Bahai. Rear it in the teachings of Baha'o'llah. Rest assured your child will be assisted by the Divine Concourse, and through this assistance it will exhibit a universal consciousness. For this Cause encompasses the west and the east, and children born under these conditions in this day will have the advantages of the universal illumination. Today some children are called prodigies, but the inheritors of this Cause will attain to a degree that the others, even though educated in the best schools and with every advantage, know nothing of.

Children blessed in this way before they are born are of the new race. I was born in Persia, and while I nursed with my mother's milk I received truth. When a little child my first words were "Ya-Baha-El-Abha!"

SUPPLICATION FOR AN EXPECTANT MOTHER

My Lord! My Lord! I praise Thee and I thank Thee for that whereby Thou hast favored Thine humble maid-servant, Thy slave, beseeching and supplicating Thee—because Thou hast verily guided her to thine obvious Kingdom and caused her to hear Thine exalted call in the contingent world and to behold Thy signs, which prove Thy victorious reign over all things.

O my Lord! I dedicate that which is in my womb to Thee. Then cause it to be a praiseworthy child in Thy Kingdom and a fortunate one by Thy favor and generosity; to develop and grow up under the charge of Thine education.

Verily, Thou are the Generous! Verily, Thou art the Lord of Great Favor!

IMMORTALITY OF UNDEVELOPED INFANT SOULS

Question: "What becomes of an undeveloped infant's soul?"

Answer by Abdul-Baha: "It rests with the mercy of God and through the eternal bounty it will not be deprived of that mercy."

(Ten Days in the Light of Acca, page 4.)

STATION OF OPPRESSED INFANTS AND WEAK ONES

As to the subject of babes and infants and weak ones who are afflicted by the hands of oppressors: This contains great wisdom and this a subject of paramount importance. In brief, for those souls there is a recompense in another world and many details are connected with this matter. For those souls that suffering is the greatest mercy of God. Verily, that mercy of the Lord is far preferable to all the comfort of this world and the growth and development of this place of mortality.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 2, p. 337.)

Children of unbelievers and infidels who die before the age of responsibility are not punished, because they are under the favor of God.

(Mrs. L. M. G. Notes.)

Question: "What is the condition of children who die before attaining the age of discretion, or before the appointed time of birth?"

Answer: "These infants are under the shadow of the favor of God, and as they have not committed any sin, and are not soiled with the impurities of the world of nature, they are the centers of the manifestation of bounty, and the eye of compassion will be turned upon them.”

(Some Answered Questions, p. 278.)

ABDUL-BAHA'S INTERPRETATION OF A DREAM

“A young girl became evident to me as belonging with the family, but I could not make out who she was. She spoke of a horse that my son had had long ago, but I did not understand what she meant. After a time it became known that she was my daughter, and I felt grieved to think that I had not been conscious of her presence in all the past years. She seemed not hurt, but surprised that we did not understand her. Just as I was waking, I realized that she was our little baby who had passed away over twenty-one years ago, when nine months old.” (End of dream.)

Mrs. — added: “She was my idol, and because I loved her so much, I tried hard to put her out of my thought, and the dream made me feel that we should not do this.”

Abdul-Baha interpreted it thus:

“That child is your trust within the charge of God. She was a child when she went, but you shall find her full grown in the Kingdom of God. You shall find her mature. You shall not find her there as a child. You shall find her perfect and mature.

“As to the horse once belonging to your son, of which she spoke: Horse in the dream means a wish. It shows that your daughter has fulfilled her wish and her desire, and that shows the loftiness of her station. The wish is one in which your son shared, but she attained to it. It is my hope, God willing, that, he, too, will attain to it.”

Surprise was expressed that a child of only nine months could have a wish, and Abdul-Baha said: “The child was born with a wish.”

Mrs. — was crying, and Abdul-Baha continued: “Do not cry. Be happy because you saw her, and you saw her perfected. You must be happy. She is your trust with God. You have not lost her out of your hands. The only difference is this; that you gave her as a trust to God as a child, but you will take her back as a full grown person. I had a son who was four years old, and when he died I did not at all change my attitude. I gave my son to God as a trust, and so at his death I did not grieve.”

Mrs. — said: “But there is a difference, you gave your son to God, but God takes ours.”

Abdul-Baha replied: “It is the same thing. In both cases it is a trust of God.”

Abdul-Baha said: “The cause of her surprise is this—that you are crying; your daughter would say: ‘I have a good mother. She must be happy. Why does she cry? I am surprised.’ The cause of her surprise is the thought that you do not recognize her. She belongs to a realm in which everything becomes mature, and she expected you to see her in the state of perfection in which she manifested herself to you; but the fact that you looked at her in this way, and that now you are crying—is a proof of your not having recognized her. For had you recognized her in the dream, you would not be crying now.”

Relative to the comment of Mrs. — that she tried to put the child out of her thoughts, Abdul-Baha said: “It is not in man’s control when to forget one. It is not good for one to try to forget them. One must always remember them.”

(Notes by M. H. sent to Acca for approval and returned with the signature of Abdul-Baha as correct.)

CHRISTENING OR NAMING A BABE.

When thou wishest to name a babe, prepare a meeting therefor; chant the verses and communes, and supplicate and implore the Threshold of Oneness and beg the attainment of guidance for the babe and wish confirmed firmness and constancy; then give the name and enjoy beverage and sweetmeats. This is spiritual baptism.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 1, p. 49.)

Question: "Should we baptize infants?"

Abdul-Baha answered: "The people have not understood the meaning of baptism. In one place in the Gospels it is commanded that one must be baptized by water and spirit, and also by fire, and from these commands we can understand that the meaning is spiritual and not material. The baptism of Christians as practiced today is not the teachings of Christ! The Christians in the beginning used to baptize as a symbol of the purification of the spirit.

"When the time drew near for the Manifestation of Christ, John the Baptist appeared and called the people to repentance, and when they repented they were baptized as a symbol that their hearts were purified and ready to accept the truth and teachings which would soon appear, for John was declaring the coming of Jesus. But these people were not children; they were men and women. And Jesus himself was baptized by John, but he was thirty years old when he was baptized. After he was baptized he said: 'John has baptized you with water, but I shall baptize you with the Spirit!' Water symbolizes the knowledge of God which gives eternal life, because all forms of life had their beginning in the water. Fire is the symbol of love, and the baptism by fire means the love of God which descends in the hearts that are turned unto him! Now as fire is used to symbolize love, be sure that water is used also as a symbol, for would it be possible for one to be put into the fire as one is put into the water for baptism? Many who have not understood what Christ meant by baptism think if a child dies without passing through this ceremony its soul is lost! But this is not true, for the child has not sinned and goes from this world quite free from faults and defects! And oftentimes baptism of infants is attended by great danger to the child.

"One time I was invited in this very house to witness the baptism of a baby who was very young. They had put olive oil in the water and when they put the child into it, it shrieked and struggled, swallowing some of the oil and water, after which it, together with the shock to the nervous system, caused the child to be very ill, and it died. These are ceremonies which have a spiritual meaning but no spiritual effect upon the soul!"

(To Mrs. L. M. G., April 18, 1904.)

Words of Abdul-Baha regarding the importance of Prayer

The sweetest thing in this world is to obey strictly the commands of God and shun His prohibitions. Through this the attractions of the love of God will be created in human consciousness. . . . For example, there is nothing sweeter in the world of existence than prayer. Man must live in a state of prayerfulness. The most blessed condition is the condition of prayer and supplication. Prayer is "conversation with God." The greatest attainment or the sweetest state is no other than "conversation with God." It creates spirituality, generates mindfulness and celestial feelings, begets the attraction of the Kingdom and engenders the susceptibilities of the higher intelligence. The highest attribute given to His Holiness Moses is the following verse: "God carried on a conversation with Moses."

What is prayer? It is "conversation with God." While man prays he sees himself in the presence of God. If he concentrates his attention he will surely at the time of prayer realize that he is "conversing with God." Often at night I do not sleep, and the thoughts of this world weigh heavily on my mind. I toss uneasily in my bed. Then in the darkness of the night I get up and pray—"converse with God." It is most sweet and uplifting. Prayer and supplication are so effective as to inspire one's heart for the whole day with high ideals and supreme serenity and calmness. One's heart must be sensitive to the music of prayer. He must feel the effect of prayer. He must not be like an organ from which softest notes stream forth without having consciousness of sensation in itself.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 15, 1914.)

Mount Carmel is enveloped with the white mantle of spirituality. Its atmosphere is permeated with an indescribable peace and tranquillity. During these matchless moonlight nights, one's heart becomes tender and the mind wistful and meditative, pensive and musing. It is as though the trees, the brooks, the rocks, the sea, the grass, the stars hold communion with man and whisper into his ears the secrets of nature. It was mainly owing to this reason that the ancient prophets of God lived in the grottoes and caves of this mountain so that they might spend their time in quiet meditation. The divine, holy prophets have two stations. The first is the station of "abstraction." This is the station wherein they communicate with God, receive the graces of the Holy Spirit and become intimate with the fragrances of holiness. The second station is the station of "plurality." In this station they occupy themselves with the education of mankind. They have, as a result, to bear the enmity, persecution and calumny of the people. On account of their pride, haughtiness and conceit the people assail these divine temples of Truth; notwithstanding this they bring forward proofs and arguments, instruct them through the heavenly advices and exhortations and little by little cause them to ascend to the lofty height of beatific purity. This work is most exacting and difficult, yet they do not murmur. But the world of "abstraction" in which they quaff the chalice of immortality, is very pleasant and spiritual. It is a super-individual experience, commonly shared by all the elect of God. It is the light of the spirit and the spirit of the world. Its sweet delicacy is enjoyed by every class. For this reason, whenever the prophets of old desired to commune with God and enter the realm of "abstraction," they came to this holy mountain and prayed during the day and the night, thus strengthening in this manner the basis of their inspiration.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Sept. 6, 1914.)

Beg everything thou desirest from Baha'o'llah. If thou art asking faith, ask of Him. If thou art yearning after knowledge, He will grant it unto thee. If thou art longing for the love of God, He will bestow it upon thee. He will descend upon thee all His Blessings.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

TRANSLATED BY DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

The following compilation of some of the utterances of Abdul-Baha after his return to the Holy Land from America, Europe and Egypt, is the third published under this heading—the first appeared in issue No. 2, page 17; the second in issue No. 3, page 25.

HADJI ABBAS is the name of an old Bahai who lived in Acca and for more than thirty years was chosen by Abdul-Baha to be the lantern carrier. Almost every night, whether walking in the dark narrow streets of the prison city Acca or in the fields outside, he was the only one who accompanied Abdul-Baha. (The translator, and perhaps others, entertained the thought that this man, on account of his bravery, strength and courage, was chosen to be as a guard to Abdul-Baha. But in recent years, it became evident that Hadji Abbas, during all those years of apparently faithful service was concealing a deadly weapon for the purpose of betraying and murdering Abdul-Baha, whenever he could find an opportunity. This was because his mind was poisoned and his heart changed by the deceitful nakazeen and the bitter enemies with whom he had joined.) Abdul-Baha said regarding this person: "He was so sick and exhausted in Acca when he came to me for help and assistance, that I placed him in a hospital in Haifa and I loved him very much." Then Abdul-Baha turned to Agha Mohammed Kermani who was present and said to him:

"Tell me what is the voice that is calling loud in Kerman (Persia)? Is it the voice of the darvishes (tramps) or the moaning of shaykhis (a Mohammedan cult)? For the sake of the elevation of the call of God all these voices shall be silenced. When the call of God rises, all other calls become erased and forgotten. When the movement of the Supreme Pen (BAHA'O'LLAH) becomes audible, undoubtedly the buzzing of flies ceases. This is evident. May God give assistance and confirmation to the souls who serve the supreme word and elevate this call. The powers of the Kingdom of Abha and the divine confirmations will assist and reinforce every one who becomes engaged in teaching the Cause of God. There is no doubt about this."

February 23, 1914.

Abdul-Baha and a number of the friends took a walk outside the city of Haifa. He told them of the lofty degrees of severance and attraction of the old friends in the Cause, and when they passed by a cave he showed it to Mirza Sohrab and said: "We had a person by the name of Estad Esmail. Indeed, he was peerless. He suffered great calamities and ordeals in Teheran (Persia) and in Bagdad—they confiscated all his belongings and they took his wife, yet he was in the utmost joy and he used to say, 'Praise be to God! They have taken my wife and my belongings. God willing, a day cometh when I may sacrifice my life in the path of God!' When he reached Acca it was at a time when no one was allowed to enter the forts. When I heard this I managed to get him into the barracks. After one month I sent him to Haifa. He dwelt in this cave. He became a peddler in the daytime and in the nights he used to chant with attractive and indescribable sincerity the verses which the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) had sent to him."

In the afternoon of the same day Abdul-Baha gave the following utterances to the friends who gathered in his home:

"It is the duty of all the friends to help the families of the martyrs. They have become flesh of my flesh because the martyrs have sacrificed their lives for me. Whosoever renders a service to the families of the martyrs is serving the Blessed Beauty. Whosoever supports them is supporting the Blessed Beauty. Whosoever becomes a self-sacrifice in their behalf is a self-sacrifice in the path of the Beauty of Abha. The great martyrdom or the sacrifice of life is like unto a mirror and when turned toward the sun, the temple and the body of the mirror become utterly effaced; that is, the martyrs efface themselves in the love of God to such an extent that the bodies and mirrors no longer exist. They become the rays of the sun. Therefore, everything that is related or belongs to them belongs to God. Whosoever serves them serves God. Whosoever loves them, verily, he loves God. It is not a joke—when the time of test comes, for then the truth becomes known. Justice must be given. If a thorn enters our hand, we cry and become restless. If our head aches we become restless. But the sharp sword takes away one's life. The martyrs have tasted the sweetness of that cup. That is why His Holiness, the Messenger (Mohammed) said, 'The martyrs have stations that prophets are envious of.' Thus His Holiness the Supreme

(the Bab)—May my soul be a ransom to him!—when addressing the Blessed Beauty, in his book titled Ahsan-el-Kessas (The Best of all the Stories), said, 'O our great Lord! verily, everything in me I sacrifice to Thee and I desire only to be killed in Thy path.' To whom do these addresses in the Ahsan-el-Kessas refer? Undoubtedly to the One-Whom-God-Shall-Manifest, that is His Holiness BAHA'O'LLAH, and not to Mirza Yahya (Ezel). They used to attribute these references, before the declaration of the Manifestation to an imaginary person. Afterwards it became evident that the person was existing. But before investigation they believed that those references meant the Kayem himself, yet the Bab was the Kayem (Forerunner). Therefore, from these references, it becomes evident that the One-Whom-God-Shall-Manifest was existing. He (the Bab) says, moreover, 'By God, the Truth! I am an hooriet (girl of paradise) born from El-Baha, in a place of the red ruby, and by all those who are in heaven, I yearn for the soul that is killed in the path of God.'"

Afterwards, Abdul-Baha showed infinite kindness to Enayet'o'llah Khan, the son of Mullah Esmail, the martyr. Then he ordered the friends to be served with fruits and preserves. One of the Zoroastrian Bahais was present at that time and Abdul-Baha said the following to him about another believer: "Indeed, Mullah Bahram (a Zoroastrian Bahai) is a blessed being. He is active in the Cause of God and is never still. The station of such souls is not known now, but it will become evident in the future. During the first century of the holy Manifestations the beginning of the revelation is like the day, because the Sun of Reality is shining upon all the horizons, the stars are invisible. But in the second century, the station and the degree of the sincere ones will become evident. Their lights will become manifest and bright like unto the shining stars. The stations of the apostles of His Holiness Christ became known after three hundred years.”

In the evening there was a general meeting in the home of Abdul-Baha. Mr. Rothchild, a great financier, visited Haifa and Abdul-Baha talked about wealth. He said in part: “Unless the souls are believers in God and assured in the verses of God, wealth causes the hearts to be hardened and without light.” At the close of the meeting a supplication of repentance, confession and pleading written by Hadji Aly Yazdi, was read in the presence of Abdul-Baha and the hearts of those who were present became touched. They turned their faces to the Horizon of the Cause, and implored the Kingdom of the Covenant and of the Beauty of Abha for a new confirmation. (Hadji Aly Yazdi was at one time one of the nakeezen or violators of the Covenant and he lives in Acca.)

February 24, 1918.

Today, Abdul-Baha revealed tablets, concerning deeds. In one of them he says, “The deeds of man must be the cause of glory. Everything that is conducive to the honor of the religion of God is good. Every action that becomes the means of the elevation of the Word of God is accepted. This is the standard.”

Afterwards, a group of Arabs and a Durzi Shiekh (a priest or chief of a sect originally Mohammedan), went to see Abdul-Baha and he talked to them about the sublime qualities of the world of humanity. He said: “Generosity, courage, faithfulness, truthfulness, etc., are all shining stars and brilliant planets. They are the cause of the illumination of hearts, of the assurance of souls, of the honor and dignity of man in this world and in the Kingdom.”

Then Abdul-Baha spoke to the believers about the station of sanctity and severance. He said, “In this station, the souls are tested. This is what BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH said: ‘By the life of God! all shall be sifted just as the wheat is separated from the tares. In a sieve they shall be cleaned and purified from dust and chaff’. Likewise, those whose actions are good, will be distinguished from the others. Therefore, in every cycle when a sifting and a great testing occur, all (the violators) will fall away except the sincere souls, who come under the shadow of the Word of God. The sea does not accept the dead. The souls who come under the shadow of the Cause of God are holy and purified from all superstitions. Consider the blessed souls who were sent forth into Persia during the beginning of the Revelation. All have sacrificed their lives, given up their possessions and homes, in the path of God. But on the other hand, the deniers, who arose in opposition, became occupied in vain pursuits and, night and day, thought only of fame and easy life. Their hearts were not pure and their souls were waning in hopes and desires. This happens in every cycle. ‘Can light and darkness exist at the same time?’”

ABDUL-BAHA AT THE SEA OF GALILEE

June 6, 1914.

Abdul-Baha uttered the following words to a Persian family known as Falah, who went to visit him at Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee:

“In all the cities, the friends who are firm and steadfast, become the cause of guidance and illumination of the people. They endeavor to elevate the hearts and to enlighten the minds. For example, an arid valley, deserts of sand and waterless mountains which were near the equator and subject to intense heat, became the light of all the horizons and the pilgrimage of the people of the world, when it was illumined by the coming of His Highness the Messenger—May my soul be a ransom to him and his friends! How much it is advanced! In the beginning it was an insignificant village and now it is the mother of the cities (Mecca).’

June 8, 1914.

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab read to Abdul-Baha an article from the Christian Commonwealth, in which there was an appeal to Christianity to cease its useless ceremonies and to return to its original simplicity and spirituality. The article spoke also of a minister who courageously said to an assembly of ministers that “the time had now come for us to be ashamed of receiving high salaries and to be living in such comfort and luxury while the poor are left in such misery. We must leave the thoughts of our desires and become self-sacrificing.” Abdul-Baha then said:

“They talk of doing, but they do not act. They think it would be easy to do this. They do not understand the meaning of martyrdom or self-sacrifice. As soon as a needle pricks the hand, their cries reach the heavens. There is no comparison between these souls and the sanctity and the self-sacrifice of the disciples of His Holiness Christ. They do not even breathe alike. It is the Bahais who walk in the footsteps of Christ and his disciples. They endure such calamities, hardships of hunger and thirst, prison, murder, persecution and malice. They have endured all sufferings. These men of passion and desire—how can they do such things? There was an akhond (Mohammedan priest) who thought that one of his fingers had become unclean and could not be purified. He went to a butcher and said, ‘Come thou and cut off my finger. I do not want it.’ The butcher replied, ‘This is impossible. It is not easy to cut off a finger. The blood will flow like a fountain and there will be severe pain.’ The akhond replied, ‘No! there is only one way and that is that thou shouldst cut.’ When the butcher considered the akhond’s great persistence he replied, ‘Very well. Put thou thy hand on this block.’ Then with the back of his knife, he pressed upon the finger. Suddenly the akhond pulled away his hand and began to scream, ‘Ouch! thou hast cut my hand! What an oppressor and unjust man! How cruel and unmerciful thou art!’ Briefly, it is very easy to write and to speak upon these matters, but it is hard to put them into action. Twenty years ago, this thought, that they must go out to teach as the disciples of Christ had done, was widespread among the Christians. Three or four persons went forth, but they could not endure it for more than two or three months."

One of the believers asked Abdul-Baha to explain what is meant by the special indulgence (in the Kitab-el-Akdas) during the holidays. To this he replied: "Bad conduct or deeds are not allowed at any time and especially during the Feast. But those are the days of happiness, days of joy and gladness. This is from the verses that shall be known afterwards. For example, it is bad not to work on other days, but in these days of feasts, work must be abandoned. But it does not mean that it is permissible to drink liquor or commit immoral deeds. Those days are the days of forgiveness and pardon, days of cheer and enjoyment, days of affection and attraction, days of blessings. Such deeds as may become the cause of the illumination of the world of humanity must be manifested by man."

To some of the visitors who were leaving for Haifa, Abdul-Baha said: "God willing, ye shall be always under the protection of the Truth. In your behalf, I seek favor and bounty from the Blessed Beauty. Rest ye assured. I am happy that ye shall be confirmed in everything. I am pleased with ye and shall never forget ye. Convey the wonderful Abha greetings to every one of the friends of God. Call them to steadfastness and firmness in the Cause of God so that the calamities and hardships may not become the cause of their relaxation. Should the sea of tests become almost overwhelming, it must not have any effect upon them. Consider ye that after His Holiness the Spirit (Christ), the disciples did not stop for a moment nor did they choose rest for themselves. They strove night and day.

Then it is evident how much we must show self-sacrifice, service and steadfastness to the Most Holy Threshold! If the disciples had not been firm, after the departure of His Holiness the Christ, his Cause would have been utterly effaced and made non-existent. Now, the friends of God must be likewise firm and exercise effort and zeal in teaching the Cause of God. They may rest assured that the safety, protection, confirmation and assistance of the Blessed Beauty shall reach them. They must not be shaken by anything. Night and day, I pray in their behalf."

Mr. E. M. Newman, one of the best known and most eloquent American lecturers, who spends five months of the year traveling in different countries, collecting the moving picture photographs of famous people and places to accompany his talks, came to the Holy Land in 1914. He went to Acca to visit Abdul-Baha. Not finding him there, he proceeded to Tiberias, where he and his party of two men and one lady, met and talked with Abdul-Baha. They asked questions about the purpose of the Bahai Religion, to which Abdul-Baha replied: "The purpose of this Cause is the investigation of Reality and the oneness of all religions. BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH accepted fifty years of banishment, persecution and imprisonment for these divine principles. Now, praise be to God, His teachings have illumined the horizons of the East, delivered the souls and minds from worthless limitations, elevated the signs of guidance and united the East and the West with a spiritual power."

Among a number of Persian believers who came to see Abdul-Baha, was one from the city of Yezd, where (some years ago) a great number of Bahais had been martyred. Abdul-Baha inquired about the friends in Yezd and Teheran saying: "How are the friends of God? Are they enkindled and attracted? Those souls who arose against the Cause and brought about dissensions and corruptions, who brought hardships and afflictions upon the friends, think that they shall attain the greatest ease and happiness. But they have failed and lost all and their own households have been scattered to the winds. What have the people of Persia to say? All of this they have seen with their own eyes. With their ears, they have heard that no trace is left of a soul, who had enmity towards the friends of God. Are they not yet awakened? Have they not yet arisen from the sleep of heedlessness?"

After having talked on the subject of Socialism from a Bahai standpoint to a minister who had come to see him, Abdul-Baha said: "His Holiness the Christ came to spread the law of love. The appearance of the Messengers and the revelation of the Books were for the promulgation of the law of love. But the souls with self-interest have made religion the cause of hate and animosity. They have stirred up among mankind quarrels and strife. Why should we oppress or be unjust to other religions? Why should we not love one another? Why should we curse and execrate? Every one of us must be the center of love, the sun of love, the sea of love, the star of love, the light of love and the heaven of love. We must be kind to all, wish no evil to anyone and know that all humanity is from one progeny."

June 9, 1914.

The following tablet was revealed today for the friends in the Orient, at Tiberias, the Sea of Galilee:

HE IS GOD!

"With regard to the assembly, there must be spiritual consultation therein; discourses about the manifestation of the Greatest Orb, the effulgence of the Sun of Reality, the greatness of the blessed Cause, the power and penetration of the Word of God, the might of the divine Covenant and Testament must be mentioned. This will be conducive to the spirituality and illumination of the hearts. Every discussion besides this, will not give complete results. Therefore, you must have no secrets in your assembly and no word should be spoken that, were it made public, might be the cause of depression or sorrow to any soul.

"The utterances of all must be concentrated in consultations concerning teaching and the promulgation of the Cause of God. In this way, there will be no secrets that might be spread. We have nothing to conceal, thanks be to God. We are famous for our devotion and all of the creatures jeer at us for our love in the path of God. Besides this we have no aim. It is impossible to have a secret that will not spread. It has been tried many times, especially when among a number of souls. It is said that every secret going beyond two people will go farther, because every member of the assembly must have a confidant in whom he has perfect trust, and oneness of condition. That person also has a confidant and, unquestionably, will not keep it from him. Therefore, it is much better not to have among you privacy and secrecy. May all of our secrets be a sacrifice to the secret of BAHÁ', and all of our confidentials be a ransom to Him. The secrets of BAHÁ' are: The oneness of the world of humanity, universal love, mercy and compassion to the broken-hearted, sympathy to the suffering, peace and happiness to the world of humanity, merciful breath, attraction to the fragrance of God, severance of the heart from attachment to the transitory world, liberty, purity, relief from worries and anxieties of the earth, etc. Should such secrets spread they would become the cause of the life of the world."

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

June 11, 1914.

Abdul-Baha went to bid farewell to Mr. Newman and his companions. He said: "I pray that God may aid your journeys and that you may return to America with the utmost happiness and safety. May you be confirmed in a great service to the world of humanity. I shall think of you continually and I shall never forget this meeting at Tiberias."

In the afternoon, Abdul-Baha sat near the window at the hotel and revealed tablets for two of the friends who had departed from this mortal world. The following is for the family of an old believer known as Abdul-Razzak:

"O my Lord. confirm these Thy servants and maid-servants with Thy ever increasing mercy and complete bounty, ordain for all of them immersion in the seas of Thy mercy, attainment to Thy generosity and bestowal, fulfillment of Thy greatest hopes, possession of Thy grandest gifts and bounty in the beginning and in the end, so that the angels of Thy mercy may commune with them in the mornings and in the evenings. Verily, Thou art the Beloved, the Generous!"

The following is for Youssif (Joseph), the father of a believer known as Abdul-Ghany:

"O my God! O my God! Verily, Thy slave, Joseph, the faithful, ascended to Thy supreme heaven hoping for Thy innumerable favors. O Lord! reach him with Thy forgiveness and pardon, O my Lord, the Merciful! Usher him to the summit of paradise. Verily, Thou art the Kind, the Bestower, and verily, Thou art the Generous, the Forgiver."

Then Abdul-Baha spoke to the pilgrims about the days of Christ and how he walked alone near the animals on the shore of Lake Tiberias (Sea of Galilee); and concerning the people, how they were prevented from seeing and knowing the Manifestation of God through their blindness, in these days. Abdul-Baha said: "The Supreme Bab was the promised one of the Koran, with regard to the question of the Seal of the Prophets. Mohammed was known as the Seal of the Prophets. (The Mohammedans think this title means that no prophet will appear after Mohammed.) This belief is not only limited to the Moslems. The Jews believed that Moses was the Seal of the Prophets, that he sealed the prophethood of Laws. The Christians believe that after Christ, no prophet with Laws will come, but that Christ himself will descend from heaven. Yes, these creatures are not waiting for the manifestation of the Truth, they are waiting for the manifestation of their own superstitions. For example, the Moslems are waiting for the Dedjal (false Christ or anti-Christ) more than for the Kayem (the Forerunner or Precursor of the Manifestation). They do not associate the appearance of the anti-Christ with the Forerunner. Nay, rather they associate the appearance of the Forerunner with the appearance of the anti-Christ. This (the anti-Christ) is known to them as unlimited or independent, the Forerunner as limited and dependent."

June 12, 1914.

When speaking of readiness, capacity and purity of hearts, Abdul-Baha said: "Should a black stone be placed facing the light of the sun, the signs of brilliancy would not appear, but, in the pure mirror, the sun, with all of its attributes and perfections, becomes reflected instantly."

Some Zoroastrian friend brought fruits and vegetables for Abdul-Baha, but he ate only bread and hot milk. Then he sat on the balcony facing the Sea of Galilee. A long letter was read from Mrs. Lua M. Getsinger, saying that she was confirmed in giving the message to more than one thousand people at a meeting in India, that she answered all of the questions asked by Mohammedan and Zoroastrian nobles; also good news about the spreading of the Cause was received from Chicago, Washington, New York, London and Stuttgart, all of which became the cause of joy to his blessed heart.

June 13, 1914.

Abdul-Baha made the following statements concerning man's duty: "Man must be qualified with the attributes of the Kingdom. Man must characterize himself with the characteristics of the Merciful. Man must be the source of the perfections of God. Man must be good personified. Man must be the cause of comfort and ease to human society. Man must be the fountain of the signs (or verses) of guidance. Man must endeavor and strive for the progress and advancement of all of the people. Man must be self-sacrificing in serving the Cause of God and spreading the fragrances of God. Man must not think of himself, he must think of others."

Again Abdul-Baha sat, for about two hours, on the balcony of the hotel, speaking to the visitors on various subjects. The mayor, the judge and other eminent officials of Tiberias were present, and all were exhilarated by his utterances. Then, as the lake reflected the wonder of the rising moon and the stars—the beauty of the creator—Abdul-Baha spoke to the friends: "His Holiness Christ, used to walk most of the nights when in the region of this lake. He was all alone, thinking of the illumination of the world of humanity. He did not rest for one moment. He was not at liberty for even one day. He spent his days as a wanderer, and was shelterless in these deserts and mountains. The place where he called the disciples to enter the Kingdom of God is in this region. They were engaged in fishing. His Holiness Christ, used to walk alone on the shore. When he saw the signs of acceptance in their faces, he said, 'Come, so that I may make you the fishers of men,' and they at once left everything and followed that Light personified!

"God be exalted! Always, in the beginning of the Cause, common souls, who in the estimation of the people, were of no importance whatever, have advanced to the divine Manifestation. For example, these fishermen believed in His Holiness Christ. In the Koran it is revealed that the ignorant of the people would say to His Holiness the Messenger (Mohammed), 'None have followed thee except the most degraded of the people; the learned sages, the nobles and the high class count thee as a fool.' However, it cannot be said of this Cause, for everyone testifies that all of the learned philosophers and nobles of every nation were humble in the presence of the Blessed Beauty, and great numbers of these became believers."

June 14, 1914.

The following tablet was revealed by Abdul-Baha for one of the friends who had lost his daughter: "Beloved, the horrible and awful news of the departure of the daughter of that beloved became the cause of intense grief, because, undoubtedly, separation has a bitter taste; yet the people of the effulgences are happy by the favors of the Beloved of the Horizons, because the Lord of the Covenant has ordained eternal union, and everlasting unity for His friends. Therefore, this temporary separation, although it causes sorrow, yet, the infinite nearness and the heavenly union is the comfort for the hearts of the afflicted; although at present we are separated, confused, in anguish and helpless, yet, in the end, we will be His companions, His associates, joining in His melodious song and under His kind shelter. Therefore, thou shouldst not be grieved and saddened; comfort thyself with the infinite favor and the glad tidings of the heavenly life."

Abdul-Baha listened, for about two hours, to the reading of letters received

IN PRAYER.

Prayer and supplication are two wings whereby man soars toward the heavenly mansion of the True One. However, verbal repetition of prayer does not suffice. One must live in a perennial attitude of prayer. When man is spiritually free, his mind becomes the altar and his heart the sanctuary of prayer. Then the meaning of the verse "We will lift up from before his eyes the veil" will become fulfilled in him. Whenever I wanted to go to the Palace of Bahajee to meet the Blessed Perfection, I walked alone and on foot, in order to be in an attitude of prayer. In the Mosque of Acca for many years I had a simple room all to myself to which no one had any access. Now and then I would go there and stay one whole day, passing the time in quiet contemplation and prayer. But later on the affairs of the Cause became manifold, and I had to give practically all my time to their dispatch and management. Thus I could no longer enjoy those peaceful hours of spiritual reflection. How I would love to be able to arrange now so that I might go away alone and live in entire seclusion! For this reason I went to Tiberias, but it was not much of a seclusion.

(Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 18, 1914.)

In prayer one must turn his face towards the sanctified Reality of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH—that Reality which surrounds all the phenomena.

During the time of prayer His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH must be singly and alone the center towards whom all the faces are turned.

(Excerpt from Tablet. Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 30, 1914.)

PRAYERS FOR CHILDREN.

O God! Educate these children. These children are the plants of Thy orchard; they are the flowers of Thy meadow; they are the plants of Thy garden. Let Thy rain fall upon them; shine upon them with the heat of Thy Sun of Reality. Let Thy breezes refresh them, in order that they be trained, grow and develop, and appear in the utmost of beauty. Thou art the Giver! Thou art the Compassionate!

(Star of the West, Vol. 3, No. 10, p. 32.)

O God, rear this little babe in the bosom of Thy love and give it milk from the breast of Providence.

Cultivate this fresh plant in the rose-garden of Thy love and nurture it by showers from the clouds of Providence. Make it a child of the Kingdom and lead it to the divine world. Thou art powerful and kind! Thou art the Giver, the Bestower, whose blessings precede all else.

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 1, p. 50.)

Make thou this little maid-servant a brilliant-starred daughter of the Kingdom; endear her in the Threshold of Oneness and overflow her with the cup of Thy love, in order that she may raise the cries of joy and ecstasy and mix ambergris* with musk.

Verily, Thou art the Powerful and the Mighty, and Thou art the Wise, the Seer!

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 3, p. 551.)

*Ambergris—This metaphor means the state of spontaneous prayer and communion with God.

O my God! O my God! Thou seest these children, branches of the tree of life, birds of the garden of safety, pearls of the shells of the ocean of Thy mercy and roses of the rose-garden of Thy guidance.

O Lord! Verily we glorify Thy praise, sanctify Thee and supplicate to the Kingdom of Thy mercifulness to make us candles of guidance, stars of the horizon of the Eternal Majesty among the creatures; and teach us from Thy knowledge, O Glory of the Most Glorious!

(Tablet to Mrs. W., translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Feb. 23, 1911.)

PRAYERS TO MEMORIZE AND USE.

O Thou pure God! I am a little child; make Thou the bosom of Thy gift a dear resting place of comfort; suffer me to grow and be nurtured with the honey and milk of Thy love and train me under the breast of Thy knowledge. Bestow Thou freedom while in a state of childhood and grant Thou excellence.

O Thou Incomparable One! Make me the confidant of the Kingdom of the unseen! Verily, Thou art the Mighty and the Powerful!

(Little book of prayers.)

O unequalled Lord! For this helpless child be a protector! For this weak and sinful one be kind and forgiving.

O Creator! Although we are but useless grass, yet we are of Thy garden. Though we are but young trees, bare of leaves and blossoms, yet we are of Thy orchard.

Therefore nourish this grass with the rain of Thy bounty, refresh and vivify these young, languishing trees with the eternal springtime.

Awaken us, enlighten us, give us eternal life and accept us in Thy kingdom.

(Little book of prayers.)

O my Lord! O my Lord! I am a child of tender years; nourish me from the breast of Thy mercy, train me in the bosom of Thy love, educate me in the school of Thy guidance and develop me under the shadow of Thy bounty. Deliver me from darkness; make me a brilliant light. Free me from unhappiness; make me a flower of the rose-garden. Suffer me to become a servant of Thy threshold and confer upon me the disposition and nature of the righteous ones. Make me a cause of bounty to the human world and crown my head with the diadem of eternal life!

Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty, the Seer, the Hearer!

(Little book of prayers.)

O God! Guide me, protect me, illumine the lamp of my heart and make me a brilliant star.

Thou art the Mighty and Powerful.

(In Tablet to Mrs. E. C.)

O loving God! I am a young child, a suppliant, a captive. Be Thou my refuge, my support, my protector. I am in distress: give me the means of tranquillity. I am needy: bestow upon me the treasure of the Kingdom. I am dead: give me the spirit of life. I am weak: favor me with power and strength, so that I may be a maid-servant in Thy threshold, with perfect purity and sanctity; sacrifice myself unto Thee, be quit of myself and seek Thee, walk in the path of Thy good pleasure, speak Thy secret and witness the signs of Thy oneness wherever I look. O God! Make me ablaze, like unto the fire of Thy love, and make me free from attachment to this mortal world, until I find the peace of soul and the rest of conscience.

Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty!
Thou art the Hearer, the Seer!

(Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vol. 1, p. 196.)

O Thou kind God! I am a little babe; exalt me at the threshold of Thy Kingdom. I live on this earth; make me heavenly. I am of this world; make me of the world of the realm of might. I exist in this world of darkness; make me illumined. I am material; make me spiritual and suffer me to become the manifestor of infinite bounties. Thou art the Powerful, the Compassionate!

(Tablet.)

O God! Educate Thou this little child in the arm of Thy knowledge and nurse her at the breast of Thy providence. Plant Thou this fresh flower in the rose-garden of Thy love and refresh it by the showers from the clouds of Thy gifts. Make her one of the children of the Kingdom and guide her toward the realm of the Most High. Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Kind; Thou art the Giver, the Generous, the Bounteous.

from America, and other parts of the world. It was mentioned that three ministers happily invited the Bahais to speak and teach in their churches, concerning which Abdul-Baha said:

“Such incidents are so frequent now that they have lost their significance. There was a time when, if one heard a word of commendation from a minister, he was astonished. But now they come and invite the friends (Bahais). This is only through the confirmation of the Kingdom of Abha.”

June 15, 1914.

News of the marriage of Noory, son of Akkash Effendi, who lives in Aintab, Asia Minor, was received, and the following tablet was revealed by Abdul-Baha: “My illumined Noory! According to what is mentioned, with abundant joy through the bounty of the One whose favors are concealed, a wedding was celebrated in the utmost splendor; happiness and rejoicing were obtained. Although, outwardly, I was not present at that reception, yet with heart and soul I was in the companionship of that assembly, with equal pleasure and cheerfulness I was with the zealous friends. Therefore, I present congratulations and felicitations on the occurrence of such a blessed marriage. From the Ancient, the Living, my hope is that a happy family may be established, so that through ages and centuries it may become the cause of spreading the Light.”

Abdul-Baha then revealed the following tablet to an American believer regarding the care of the orphans: “In this blessed Cause, the matter of the orphans has a great importance. The orphans must be greatly cherished, trained, taught and educated, especially in the teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH. As much as possible, every orphan must be taught. I ask God that thou mayst become a kind father and mother to the orphan children. With the fragrances of the Holy Spirit thou may'st revive them so that they may reach maturity and that every one may become the real servant of the world of humanity, nay, rather, an illumined candle."

In the evening, Abdul-Baha spoke to the believers regarding Persia, as follows: "The Cause appeared in Persia. The blood of so many martyrs was shed in Persia that, unquestionably, signs will appear. The Persians, for the safety and progress of the nation, have experimented during late years in several forms of government. First, independence and despotism, which resulted in destruction and oppression; then the constitution was established, the only effect of which was devastation and helplessness. The next step was to organize parties such as democrat, union and others; from these, too, there were no results. The constitution is very good, but the Persians did not realize any fruit thereof. Now, there is no way left to save Persia except through this Revelation. This is a Cause that has set all of the horizons in motion, and has made all humble. This Cause will be the means of progress, elevation and education of Persia. If from the beginning when His Holiness the Supreme (the Bab) appeared, Hadji Mirza Aghasee (the prime minister of Persia, who caused the martyrdom of the Bab, and in the Orient is known as Dedjal, meaning anti-Christ or false Christ) and others, had not resisted this Cause, Persia would now have been the first country in the world and distinguished in every way."

ABDUL-BAHA AT HAIFA

June 16, 1914.

After staying a period of six weeks in Tiberias and other towns, Abdul-Baha decided to return to Haifa. For a few moments he spoke to the friends about the Persian government: "In the laws of God the constitutional government is the law, but the electors of the people must abide by the conditions of the constitution; if they do not, destruction and misery will be more prevalent than before. We advised them according to our knowledge, but they did not listen or accept. In Europe I have met many chiefs, princes and ministers, advised them extensively and have said to them all that should be said."

Abdul-Baha then boarded the train for Haifa. There were some military officers in his stateroom. When they learned who he was, they showed him the greatest consideration all the way through. As the train reached Haifa, all of the believers were waiting in the station with longing and yearning, and Abdul-Baha's arrival was like unto the return of the soul to the body!

In the evening the friends gathered in the blessed home and Abdul-Baha gave them the following talk: "I went to Tiberias; this time my going was very long. Tiberias is an isolated spot. It is a quiet place; there is not a noise or voice; it is as though man finds a dwelling in the desert. It is situated in a by-way, the place where His Holiness Christ—May my soul be a sacrifice to him!—was constantly traveling and moving. When man walks there, he thinks of those days when His Holiness Christ, was wont to walk there and teach the disciples. The place where he first proclaimed his Cause is near Tiberias, and is known as "the hill of home." There was a temple built where His Holiness Christ, entered and spoke. It is greatly esteemed by the Christians. During the days of the Crusaders it was destroyed, but its foundation remains, and it is a holy place. The effect of the word of Truth is so wonderful, but the Jews there are fanatical, selfish and filled with self-pride. The American Jews are very intelligent people. They listened to whatever was said to them, but these Jews never listened. One day I related the talk that I delivered in the synagogue of the Jews in America to a Rabbi in Tiberias. When I looked into his face, I saw no sign of intelligence. What a difference among the souls who comprehend and those who are utterly deprived of the bestowals of God!"

His honor Dr. Ardasheer, one of the Zoroastrian Bahais of India, went to visit Abdul-Baha before leaving the Orient for America. Abdul-Baha said, "Perchance, God willing, a new spirituality, a beautiful fragrance, zeal and stirring enthusiasm may become manifest in India. India is exceedingly ready, but the appearance of these is dependent upon the attraction and the enkindlement of the friends. In this day, the confirmation of God will reach everyone who arises to teach. Many instances of this are happening continuously. Indeed, the confirmation surrounding him will amaze man himself.

"The light of the love of God must be ignited in the hearts of the children, during their childhood. When a child is reared in the shadow of divine education, truth is mentioned to him day by day. The Blessed Beauty, the teachings, the history of this Cause and of the divine prophets are taught him and then faith finds its place in his heart. Therefore, from this moment you must bring your brother under the system of the divine education. Speak to him of the love and the knowledge of God. Should a child be left without training and remain in his original state, he becomes like unto an animal and is a slave of nature."

Abdul-Baha, welcoming Shah'o'llah Khan, who came from Afghanistan, said, "In ancient history, they have praised and lauded the city of Samarkand. It is the city of Prince Taymoor. But at present, it is entirely changed and transformed. This blessed Cause has such power and penetration that it will spread into all parts of the world. I am hopeful that in Afghanistan it will be of great effect. The gentlemen of Afghanistan are active. They are warm blooded. In their blood, there is power and heat. Therefore, you see that although the Mohammedan governments are in a state of chaos, Afghanistan is protecting itself as much as possible."

When someone mentioned the name of the late Hadji Mirza Hassan Khorassani of Cairo, Egypt, Abdul-Baha said, "In justice to him, he served the Cause very much. He helped the friends everywhere. He had zeal and enthusiasm. He assisted everybody."

On the subject of consultation, Abdul-Baha said, "Man must consult with a trustworthy and wise person. His Holiness the Messenger (Mohammed) says, 'The consulted is trusted.' Therefore, if man does not consult with a trustworthy, wise person, his own mind becomes confused. When man's thoughts are scattered, he falls into many troubles. But if he concentrates on one point, then he is relieved on all sides."

June 17, 1914.

A group of believers were strolling in the blessed garden. Abdul-Baha sent for them and when they came, he seated Mollah Abu Taleb, who was very advanced in years, in a chair close to him and said: "Father, how good it is for a man to be bent, to have bedimmed eyes and decrepit bones in the divine Cause." Then Abdul-Baha turned his face toward Agha Gholam'o'llah Ahamadoff, formerly from the city of Meelan, Russia, and said, "The friends in Meelan were self-sacrificing from the beginning of the Cause. They have always endured calamities and hardships in the divine path. They were always firm and steadfast. They were always the cause of the glory of the Cause of God. Never has anything that might cause harm in the Cause, appeared from them." After a while, Abdul-Baha said: "We are continually working hard, writing and writing, encouraging and urging so that the fire of the love of God may be ignited in the hearts. Then suddenly you see one come and put it out."

On the subject of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha said: "Endeavor ye night and day that the banner of the Covenant may wave as it should, in those regions. For in this day, the souls reverberate by the power of the Covenant. They become enlivened by the spirit of the Covenant. They move by the call of the Covenant, otherwise they become depressed and inactive as a body without a soul, a lamp without a light."

June 18, 1914.

The following is a tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha today, to the friends in Boston:

"If the tablets of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) such as the Hidden Words, Ishrakat, Tajelleyat, Glad Tidings, Tarazat and the Words are read and one of the divine exhortations lived up to man attains to the degree of perfection. He becomes the center of merciful susceptibilities, the source of human perfection and the lights of the Kingdom will shine from his face and character."

Then Abdul-Baha walked in his room and looking from the window, said, "During the days of youth, man sees the pictures of life in all things wherever he looks, but, as his age advances, he sees the picture of death in everything and that all things have an end. When he looks at the trees he sees that in the end they will dry up. When he looks at the buildings, he sees that finally they too, will be destroyed. If he sees a thickly populated place, he remembers that a time will come when it will be devastated. Briefly, all things inform man of an end."

Afterwards, Abdul-Baha spoke of the king-of-the-martyrs. He praised him very much and said, "During the lifetime of the king-of-the-martyrs, the heart of the Blessed Beauty was in tranquillity for Isfahan (a city in Persia)." Then he related a story, which briefly was this, "One day, one of the opposers hit a dog with a stone, cursed him and called him names, hoping that by so doing, he might bring sorrow to the heart of the king-of-the-martyrs. 'Write down in thy memorandum that half a mann (mann, in Persian weight, is seven and one-quarter pounds) must be sent daily to this dog, because he was hit by a stone and cursed for our sake,' commanded the king-of-the-martyrs to his servant. These are the souls who 'do not speak before He speaks and who do according to His commands.'"

Then Abdul-Baha summoned the pilgrims and spoke in detail about assemblies and gatherings in London and Paris. He said: "There was a great commotion in the souls upon hearing my addresses. A seed was sown. God shall make it grow. Undoubtedly, He will make it grow. After 300 years, the seed that was sown by the disciples (of Christ) brought forth its fruit. But, in this day the seeds that the friends of God plant, grow in a short time. This is because of the power of the Cause."

That afternoon, a feast was held at the home of Abdul-Baha for the marriage of Mirza Mooneer Zein with Essmat, daughter of Ebrahim Mashadi Fattah. These were all of the old believers in Acca. Abdul-Baha came in and after sitting in silence for a few minutes, he said: "It is one month and a half since I was in the assembly of the friends. Now, things are so arranged that I find myself again in the gathering of the friends. Praise be to God! In this day a double happiness is obtained for the friends of God. The first is that this meeting is held near the Supreme Threshold (at the tomb of the Bab) at the foot of Mt. Carmel, in the utmost joy and fragrance. Such a gathering, at such a place, in the neighborhood of the Supreme Threshold is a great bounty and the cause of great joy. Our hope is this, that from the favors of the Blessed Beauty, we may walk in His path and become confirmed in whatever the duty of servitude in the Holy Threshold might be. Although it is impossible for us to arise in servitude as we should—as the poet says, ‘How can I raise my head for shame that I cannot serve the Beloved in a fitting manner?’—and although we cannot attain it in full degree, yet we should strive. Our hope is this, that although the whole ocean fail to confirm us, we may, through His confirmation, assistance, favor and bounty, be confirmed with one drop. The second joy is this, that this is the wedding of Mirza Mooner. Praise be to God, this feast was prepared in the utmost joy, under the shadow of the bounties of the Blessed One. I beg of God that a blessed family may be established which will become hospitable and famous throughout centuries and ages, in servitude to the Holy Threshold. This is the fruit of existence. If the fruit of the existence of man is not the servitude of the Divine Threshold, by God—save whom there is no God!—life is death, existence is non-existence, happiness is ennui, joy is sorrow and regret is the end. If man will only lay his time at His Threshold, then whatsoever is befitting and worthy of this Threshold, will become evident and manifest. This is the fruit of life. This is the result of existence. This is the illumination of the human world. This is the eternal life. This is the everlasting exaltation. This is the heavenly glory.”

June 20, 1914.

Whenever news of teaching and spreading the Cause comes from various regions to Abdul-Baha, he becomes exceedingly happy. Today, after receiving good news from America, he revealed and sent the following tablet: “Thy letter was received. From its contents, it became evident that, Praise be to God! the lights of the Kingdom are spreading and the souls are listening to the Word. The heedless are being awakened and the blind are seeing. This news became the cause of happiness. In this day, the power of the Kingdom is assisting those who are standing forth in service and who are the cause of guiding the people. A person who is a herald of the Kingdom of Abha is like unto a lamp and the souls who possess high or lofty ideals are like unto butterflies. When the light is shining, undoubtedly the butterflies gather around it. Therefore, as many of ye as can, call ye to the Kingdom of Abha so that ye may become near to the Threshold of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and so that the heavenly hosts may assist ye. In this day, the power of the Covenant is the magnetic power in the apex of the horizon. This is the power that moves the world of humanity. This is the power that causes the penetration of the words in the hearts. This is the power that ignites the fire of the love of God. This is the power that brings joy and cheer to the souls.”

When Dr. Ardasheer was in the holy presence, Abdul-Baha said jokingly to Mirza Haydar Aly: “Dr. Ardasheer has learned osteopathy very well. He desires to give you a massage. Are you willing to have him give you a treatment? He claims that if a person is feeling ill, he will make him well; the powerless become powerful and the old will become young!”

Abdul-Baha praised the people of America because they are worshippers of reality. He said, “They investigate every question. They do not quarrel and dispute. They think mostly of the investigation of truth or reality. America needs teachers who know languages. If there were severed and attracted souls who know the English language and who were skilled in ethics, great results would have been brought about. Likewise, the teacher should know how to adjust his speech according to the exigency of the time and place. Now, if a person goes to Europe and someone asks him, 'What proofs have you concerning the prophethood of His Holiness the Messenger (Mohammed)?' and he replies, 'The Koran,' none would accept it. All the regions in the East and in the West are ready, but extraordinary souls who are highly developed in spirituality and refinement, are needed. If my health were good at present, I would not wait one day longer. I would go not only to America but to all parts of the world to cry and call out. Had I been free during the forty years of my imprisonment in Acca, I would have traveled to the East, West, North and South of the world. I would not have kept still for one minute and I would have illumined the horizons with the light of the Sun of Reality. And then you would have seen what great results had been obtained.

"There were three islands near the equator in the Indian (Pacific) Ocean. The weather there is very hot. The number of inhabitants was 4,000,000, all of whom were idolators, worshipping the sun and stars. In the ninth century of Islam, one blessed soul went there to serve God and God alone. He was alone and lonely. They inflicted upon him severe injuries, calamities and persecution, but he never ceased in his efforts until he had converted all the inhabitants of those three islands to Islam. Now if such souls could be found, in a short time all those regions (America) would become illumined."

The North Shore Review, dated May 2, 1914, reached Haifa and the friends rejoiced in reading the eloquent article on the Mashrekol-azkar written by the sincere maid-servant of God, Mrs. Isabel Fraser. In the morning Abdul-Baha spoke about the wicked nakezeen (violators of the Covenant). He said: "They go to self-interested strangers. They show unto them love and friendship; but they do not understand that these souls are the enemies of the Blessed Beauty. They go and show their love to the one who is an enemy to the Blessed Beauty. What ignorance! The Blessed Beauty said the following about such people, 'In every minute the wound of atheism and the arrows of infidelity come to me from them.' Also, He said, 'O Thou spirit of God, descend and see that my humiliation is more than Thy grandeur.'"

Then Abdul-Baha wrote the following tablet for a martyr from Ardakan, Persia:

HE IS GOD!

"Verily, those who quaffed the cup of the great martyrdom in the path of God, are favored from the bounty of Thy Lord, the Merciful, the Compassionate. They are the ones whose hearts God has chosen for His love. Their faces are shining with the light of God in the paradise of the rose-garden. The angels of mercy receive them and announce to them the glad tidings of holy resting places and of the canopy of sincerity in the Kingdom of their generous Lord. Their enemies will be repulsed and degraded to the lowest of the lowest as thou hast seen others in manifest loss. Verily, there is in this an example for those who are mindful. God shall do away with the helpers of the unjust.

"O my Lord, confirm the relatives of these martyrs in serving Thy Cause, elevating Thy Word, spreading Thy Religion, igniting Thy Love in the hearts of Thy servants and guide those who are lost in the wilderness of error. Verily, Thou art the Generous, the Dear, the Exalted!"

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

TRANSLATED BY DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

The following compilation of some of the utterances of Abdul-Baha after his return to the Holy Land from America, Europe and Egypt, is the fourth published under this heading—the first appeared in issue No. 2, the second in No. 3, the third in No. 10.

IN the evening Abdul-Baha spoke the following to the friends: "There were blessed souls during the early days of the Cause in the city of Narak, Persia, such as Hadji Kamal-el-Din and his brother Mirza Mahmood. They were the nephews of Hadji Mullah Mohammed Mujtahed (a Mohammedan high priest). Although their uncle was very influential and the Mujtahed of Kashan and although he was very bitter in his enmity and hatred, all of his efforts to drive them away from the Cause 'only increased their faith.

"Hadji Kamal-el-Din, a great personage, was severed, trusting and free from all imitations. He was the nephew of Mullah Ahmad Naraki and he was respected and esteemed in the city of Narak. Immediately after he became a believer, the enemies arose against him until he was compelled to leave Narak and go to Bagdad. Here at the edge of the bridge, where pilgrims pass, he opened a grocery store. He was so severed that he did not even give attention to the pilgrims who were going or coming from Kashan. He never gave thought to this idea, 'I am the nephew of Mullah Ahmad Naraki. I was honored, respected and dignified. It is not becoming that these people should see me now in the grocery business.' Nay, rather he was in the utmost joy. Later on the members of his household became very successful.

"When he heard that the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) had gone from Bagdad to Kazmin, although the distance was great, he traveled it on foot because he could not afford to pay the route-fare of a half abbasi (about half a cent). But his face was aglow with joy and happiness. He was indeed of the essence of existence. Such souls possess freedom and live in another world and condition. Their lives were not even for a moment in safety. Yet they lived in loving assurance. That is, although they expected any minute to be killed, they never thought of any fear. The majority of the friends in those days were waiting for martyrdom. They never thought of rest. They waited anxiously for the day when they could clasp the intoxicating cup of the wine of great martyrdom and for the hour when they would step forth into the arena of sacrifice, to lay their lives on the altar of love."

June 21, 1914.

The students of Beirut College, some of whom were graduates of the medical college and some from the high school, arrived in Haifa to spend their vacation. The next morning they went to the garden and met Abdul-Baha. With joy and praise he said to them: "The Bahai students in Beirut have so conducted themselves, both within and without the college, that even the Protestants and members of the faculty have testified to their superiority. He who is possessed of good behavior is always happy, always at ease and every soul becomes attracted to him. There is nothing better than good conduct. A few years ago some young men from Acca entered Beirut College and so conducted themselves that everyone complained of them. They accomplished nothing and were finally expelled."

This same afternoon there was a wedding feast for Esfandiar, a Zoroastrian believer from Bombay, India, and the daughter of Djemsheed, the gardener of Ferdows (the Garden of Paradise in Acca). In the afternoon there was a big meeting at which two American ladies were present. Abdul-Baha told of some of the difficulties encountered in the early days, speaking thus: "I remember when I was a child in Teheran, that if two of the friends desired to meet they had to do so at midnight. It was impossible to see one another in daylight. Even if they accidentally met on the street, they dared show no sign of recognition. They saw each other only under the cover of night, and then always with the greatest precaution in going to one another's house. They guarded very carefully against being observed by anyone. In those days, the people of Persia considered the Cause of God entirely wiped out, and that all of the Bahais had been killed and their homes destroyed. But, today, in spite of the deniers, and the opposers, under the shadow of the favors and bounties of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) in the neighborhood of the Supreme Threshold, at the foot of Mt. Carmel, such gatherings and meetings are being held, blessed verses are being chanted, engagements and weddings are being celebrated, and happiness and pleasure is abounding among the believers. Praise be to God, this is a gathering of utmost spirituality, the hearts are turning to the Blessed Beauty; the souls are rejoicing in the glad tidings of God. His mention is their only thought. He their only sign. All of the friends are His servants. What a great bounty! Such a gathering, such a place at such a time was inconceivable to any of those in the early days."

In describing the imprisonment of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH), Abdul-Baha added: "What days were those! They were days of great tests, self-sacrifice, absolute spirituality, severance, attraction and enkindlement. The physical conditions were insignificant. The friends were filled with the Spirit. They did not seem to be of this world, although they walked upon the earth, they were in the Supreme Concourse. They possessed another world. They were submerged in the ocean of severance. Souls could not be more attracted or enkindled than these. I hope that, God willing, this wedding will be happy and blessed through the infinite blessings of the Kingdom of Abha. May they be under the protection of the Blessed Beauty. May the heavenly blessing descend upon them, the light of the Kingdom shine upon them and may they establish a new spiritual home. This is my hope."

June 23, 1914.

Abdul-Baha spent the entire day in writing about fifteen tablets to Persia and America, receiving great numbers of friends and visitors. The military commanders of Damascus and Jerusalem came, too, and invited him to the old Holy City, Jerusalem. His answer to them was, "Inshallah" ("If God is willing").

June 24, 1914.

After the departure of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH), Abdul-Baha showed and proved to the Bahais throughout the world that teaching the Cause of God is the greatest of all services. Therefore, whenever he hears of the splendid work achieved by the active teachers his face radiates with eternal happiness, and the signs of perfect joy become manifest in his bearing. The following tablet revealed by him that day illustrates this fact:

“Thy letter was received. Praise be to God, it contained the glad tidings of the firmness and uprightness of the friends of God. Because all are self-sacrificing in the field of teaching, have unloosened their tongues in the glorification of the Beloved of the horizons, have become the cause of leading the misguided people, they have throbbing hearts and singing souls. Spiritual happiness was obtained by such joyful news. Thanks be to God, the friends in —— have become free from separation, all have become harmoniously united, and are sacrificing their souls in the path of the Blessed Beauty. This is the greatest attribute of the human world; this is the ultimate bestowal of the Merciful One; this is the magnet of assistance and protection of His Holiness, The Single; this is the attracting force of the reinforcement from the Kingdom of Majesty. Therefore, my hope is that, day by day, the light of guidance may flood the world, and the east and the west of Persia may become illumined and enlightened.”

June 25, 1914.

Abdul-Baha gave the following advice to the friends who visited him in the morning: “If the friends of God listen to my first word, they will find the success of this and of the next world therein. But there are some who prefer their own thoughts above mine, and when they fall they beg me to save them. Progress and prosperity are in the first word. For example, should I say to so and so, ‘Go thou to America,’ and should he reply, ‘I beg to remain a few days more,’ I give him permission to do as he wishes. But this is not my thought; it is his thought. All of the opinions in the world are useless for the believers. I am the one whose heart burns for them and who sympathizes with them. I wish for them absolute good. I desire for them ideal advancement.”

Then he turned to a young Bahai student who recently arrived from Egypt, where he had been studying, and said, “Thou shouldst strive day and night, so that the fire of the love of God may become more enkindled in thy heart, day by day thy servitude to the Holy Threshold become more increased, day by day thy attachment to the Kingdom of God become stronger. If thou dost this thou shalt obtain great results from all of the studies; otherwise thou shalt not see any benefit.”

June 26, 1914.

Abdul-Baha gave the following talk to the Persian believers: “Most of the Persian ulama (clergymen) became the cause of destruction and the casting of Persia to the winds. The ulama of every sect must act in accordance with the requirements of religion, the first of which is that they must believe in God, turn to God and be severed from all else save God. Such ulama are the illumined lamps of guidance and the stars of the heaven of mercy. But when some ulama enter a school their aim is leadership, to obtain fame, to gather luxuries and worldly possessions. They are like the disease, caboos (influenza), that attacks man with helplessness and heaviness, during sleep, as though a mountain had fallen upon him and he was unable to move. Now, these learned men are similar to the disease that is attacking the body of the people. The requirements for the ulama are mentioned in the traditions. It is said by the prophet Mohammed, ‘Let the public follow whomsoever of the learned controls himself, protects his religion, opposes his desire and obeys the command of his Lord’; that means the

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

HE IS GOD!

learned who controls himself from corruption and negligence, opposes his own desire and passion, protects religion and the divine commands, fulfills the requirements.' The souls must follow the judgment of such an one regarding laws and by-laws. Sheikh Murtaza, indeed, was strictly religious. Once at noontime prayer, a group of people were praying in the mosque at Kazmin, under the leadership of akhonds (Mohammedan priests). At such a time Sheikh Murtaza arrived. He spread his cloak in the front hall and began to pray. Suddenly, thousands of the people left the akhonds and swept from all directions, standing in rows to pray under the leadership of Sheikh Murtaza. He had to employ seven moazzins (men who call the people to prayer from the tower of the mosque). He was trusted and strongly religious. Indeed, he used to work with honesty. No matter how much the people questioned about this Revelation, he answered according to his belief, 'I have not yet investigated this Cause. Go and investigate for yourselves.' The Sheikh never said any unsuitable word. On one occasion the ulama united with the Persian consul in Bagdad and planned sedition. They sent for all of the ulama of Karbala and Nadjaf, also Sheikh Murtaza, perhaps he, too, would come to Bagdad. It happened that while on the road he fell and dislocated his shoulder. Although the leaders persisted in asking his opinion about the Cause, his only reply was, 'I do not think that it is my duty to interfere in this matter.'

"During those thrilling times, the Blessed Beauty, BAHA'O'LLAH, never changed his attitude. Every day, as usual, he went to the bank of the Tigris river, accompanied only by Agha Mirza Mohammed Kuli. No matter how much the friends tried to interfere, telling him that the multitudes were rising against him, he paid no attention. One day when BAHA'O'LLAH was walking in the reception room, two of the hypocrites who, at heart, were with the ulama, but who claimed to be sincere, went into the blessed presence. A number of the friends were there to whom BAHA'O'LLAH said: 'All of the ulama are urging others from Nadjaf and Karbala to wage a holy war upon us.' Then, facing the two hypocrites, he said, 'By God! There is no God but Him, I do not need to send more than two persons to chase them to Kazmin!' Sheikh Murtaza sent the following statement: 'I did not know anything about the aims of these people; I pray in your behalf.' He was such a religious man, he never gathered luxuries, enormous funds were sent him from India, but it was all spent on the poor; nothing was left after his death. How wonderful, indeed, were those days in Bagdad! Every one of the friends, through the favor and bounty of the Blessed Beauty, was in the utmost firmness and uprightness. How radiant were their faces! How merciful were their hearts! How severed and attracted they were!"

June 27, 1914.

Abdul-Baha sent for an illumined young man, named Mirza Habibo'llah who was one of the visitors from Turkestan, Russia, serving for about nine months in the house of the pilgrims. Upon his appearance, Abdul-Baha gave the young man permission to return to Merv and Ishkabad, with the following words of farewell: "Indeed, thou hast served all this time with thy heart and soul. Now, too, wherever thou may'st be thou shalt serve the Cause. The aim is to serve and to obtain the divine good pleasure, not a place or station. Praise be to God! Thou are confirmed and I am also pleased with thee."

In the afternoon, Abdul-Baha sent for the pilgrims. He talked to them concerning the spies of Sultan Abdul-Hamid, as follows: "The Sultan sent his spies in different guise in order that they might investigate. It was very strange. Although we were in prison, yet he was still troubled. Each time he placed a different guard and spy. . . . In past cycles the argument was complete, but in this Cause it is perfect. In the cycle of the Blessed Beauty, the events themselves are irrefutable proofs and complete arguments. For example, notwithstanding the hate and enmity of the Shah of Persia and the Sultan of Turkey, Nassir-el-Din and Abdul-Hamid, exile and severe imprisonment, yet the Blessed Beauty elevated his Cause. This may be likened to a blessed bird that remains protected even under the claws of a thousand birds of prey, or the safety of a lamb among a hundred-thousand wolves. Although BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH was physically a prisoner, yet all were humble and meek at the Most Holy Threshold, with a reverence indescribable."

The following is a tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha to friends in Paris, France:

"O ye friends of God and maid-servants of the Merciful! The congratulations for the anniversary of the declaration of His Holiness, the beauty of the First Point, the Bab, was received. I became exceedingly happy that such a great celebration occurred in Paris. All of the souls are either occupied in pleasure, play, or united in gathering worldly luxuries, and intoxicated with the melody of the world of nature. But the friends of God have held a heavenly feast and celebrated the anniversary of the appearance of the Dawn of Guidance, the Bab. How much this is the cause of happiness! You became engaged in the commemoration of God, sang the verses of singleness and praised the Sun of Reality with the anthem of the merciful Kingdom. Unquestionably, in the future, feasts will be held uninterruptedly and such a wonderful melody shall arise from Paris as to astonish other countries."

In these days, Mr. C. Mason Remy and Mr. George Latimer visited Paris, Germany and Holland. They attracted many people in Europe and strengthened the souls in the great Covenant.

After revealing over twenty-five tablets, Abdul-Baha gave the following talk on teaching: "In his days, the Blessed Beauty encouraged everyone whom he favored to teach. These were indications of his blessed bestowals. It was irrefutable evidence that whomsoever he encouraged to teach, either verbally or by writing, was surrounded by the glances of his bounty. The blessed tablets always were revealed in the names of the teachers. The mention of those who arose to teach with all their power, caused his blessed face to gleam with smiles. The appearance of the signs of happiness at the mention of a name was the greatest proof of his favor. He used to say, 'Teachers are the Israfil (Angels of Life) of God, they breathe the Spirit of Life to the people. One day, BAHÁ'O'LLÁH showed such extreme kindness to the teachers that, although I was in the prison, I decided that I, too, might, perhaps, become confirmed in teaching. Thus I entertained the thought of going to Kashghar, because, until then, no teacher had been sent there. I wanted to go singly and alone, without any burden. The only thing that I prepared was a small grip containing some of the blessed tablets, papers and pen. When I took my passport, the late mofty (lawyer who has religious jurisdiction) became my guarantor. I was about to begin my journey when the matassaref (mayor) Ibraheem Pasha announced that he would not be impolite or prevent my departure, but according to his responsibility and the discharging of his duty, he would be obliged to send a telegram to Constantinople as soon as I was aboard the boat. The meaning was, that we shall prevent you, but the message was nicely phrased. Therefore, I did not go.

"The purpose is this, that when I permit the pilgrims to return, they may go and teach. It is evident that to remain here one minute is equal to a thousand years elsewhere, but teaching is greater. Whosoever is confirmed in teaching the Cause of God is the servant of the Holy Threshold and he is here also. There is no importance attached to the duration of time here. How many souls had the privilege of paying only three visits during the blessed days of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, yet it seems that they are always present at the Most Holy Threshold. They received infinite bounty with the honor of one or two visits, and how many souls came and remained for a long time, yet returned as they came, the signs of their honor of visit to the Most Holy Threshold could not, in any way, be found in their faces. Some visit but once and become new souls.

"During the last days in Adrianopole, Agha Djamal* and Agha Mirza Abdul-Rahim Boroodjerdy, twice came to the Most Holy Threshold. After their first visit BAHÁ'O'LLÁH said: 'When Agha Mirza Abdul-Rahim entered he was a person, when he left he was transformed.'

"To visit the blessed tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, which is the sacred place of the Supreme Concourse, and the Sublime Threshold, the tomb of the Bab, is the greatest hope of the near ones, but in this day teaching and service in the Cause of God are greater and more important than all. Otherwise, it is my wish to have the friends always with me.

"Let all of your thoughts be thus: To render a service to the Glorious Abha Threshold, and be utterly selfless. This is the great bestowal! By God!—There is no God but Him!—should men rule the earth for a thousand years, with utmost power, it would not be equal to one moment of servitude at the Holy Threshold, because that sovereignty of a thousand years will perish and be effaced, while servitude in this Cause, though of only one moment's duration, is eternal!"

June 28, 1914.

Mirza Ali Akbar Nakh-Djavany gave a banquet feast for all of the believers in the blessed home of Abdul-Baha. To the western friends he is known as Mirza Ali Akbar. After having the honor of

*The translator personally knows Agha Djamal. He was one of the famous teachers in Persia, but later he followed the nakazeen. In a short time, his only son was accidentally killed by a horse. He lost all of his possessions. Although the believers left him to himself, yet he could not remain in any of the towns. Finally he became a wanderer and died of shame, regret, remorse and fear. Such is the end of those who violate the Covenant of God!—Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi.

being in the service of Abdul-Baha in America, Europe and the Holy Land, he was permitted to return to his home in Russia, accompanied by his bride, Fatmeh Khanom, sister of Zeenat Khanom.* On the occasion of the above mentioned feast, Abdul-Baha gave the following talk:

“During all the blessed days of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, my hope always was that a day would come, perhaps, God willing, when I might travel in a certain direction and, in proportion to my ability, make my utmost effort, as one in the last great struggle of death. But on account of our incarceration, as prisoners, all of that time passed with anguish—because the fruit of existence is, that spiritual motion or activity be obtained from man; that is, he should be moving and not still, flying and not resting. In all of the contingent beings, lack of motion is the cause of death, and motion is the cause of life. At that time I was very disheartened and depressed because I found myself unconfirmed and unassisted in service to the Holy Threshold—that is, hindered by the prison; but because I considered that hindrance was in the blessed path, therefore comfort could be obtained.

“When the ascension of BAHÁ'O'LLAH occurred, the severity of its effect and anguish was to such a degree that it cannot be described. That effect and anguish overcame all other feelings. It left in me no life, will or thought. For a long time I was in such a state of sorrow. Afterward, the fire of dissension became ablaze. (This refers to the nakazeen or violators of the Covenant.) All of you know that this, too, hindered me. Later, it was considered that the Cause of God had fallen into great danger. Notwithstanding this I intended to travel, but the government interfered. All of the enemies of the Blessed Beauty attacked from all regions. They believed that the ascension of BAHÁ'O'LLAH was an opportunity for them, and in the utmost power they attacked. In every corner there was an armed enemy. Hatred and fighting were in evidence, especially among the Yahyais (Ezelis), who had been always hiding in the holes, without a name, a sign, a voice or calling, and who now became hopeful because of the ascension of the Blessed Beauty, that perhaps they might corrupt the Blessed Cause. They arose with utmost power, especially when the news of dissension (violation) was received. Also, the ulama and mujtahedeen (Mohammedan priests) believed that it was their opportunity and they began to attack. Beside these, the government gave us trouble. Other very hard problems came in the midst, such as the tragedy of Yezd (this refers to the martyrdom of more than 150 of the Bahais in the city of Yezd in Persia). Indeed, on account of that incident my bones collapsed. Although I did not speak a word, yet night and day I did not have rest.

“It is quite evident what we suffered in those days. All of these hindrances became the cause of my disinclination to travel. When freedom was proclaimed (This refers to the freedom of the Turkish Empire from the absolute monarchy of Sultan Abdul-Hamid to the present constitutional government) and exile and prison were over, I thought the time had come to travel, no matter what might happen. Immediately, though I was ill, without the knowledge of any soul, I took the boat and went away, saying, ‘In the Name of God, who moves and stops the ship!’

“The known people of discord (nakazeen and enemies) in Acca circulated the report that I had run away, that I feared the Society of Union and Progress, that I was a traitor—I take refuge in God!—and fearfully, chose to escape. God be exalted! In the time of Abdul-Hamid the enemies of Abdul-Baha constantly wrote reports that I was in perfect accord with the lovers of liberty, that I had communicated with them and was working against the despotic government. But when liberty was proclaimed they changed the issue and arose with a different calumny. Thus in their report they have written that Abdul-Baha writes in his letters that Abdul-Hamid was oppressed, and says the same thing of the Sultan of Persia; that he encourages and urges the friends to take refuge among the Russians and the British. God be exalted! Abdul-Hamid imprisoned the Blessed Beauty for twenty-five years. He imprisoned me during all of his reign (Abdul-Hamid succeeded to the throne of the Turkish Empire in 1876 and was deposed in 1908). The Blessed Beauty in the Book of Akdas, clearly stated concerning him that he was an oppressor king, in these words, 'O thou point (Constantinople) situated between the two seas (the Black and Marmora seas), verily, the throne of oppression is set on thee.'

"The Society of Union and Progress became the cause of my liberation. With all of this, how could I say that Abdul-Hamid was oppressed? The truth is that the lovers of liberty became the cause of safety to thousands of souls. Problems of this kind arose because my intention was that, perhaps, God willing, I might become confirmed in service to the Holy Threshold. I did not pay any attention to those reports. I went to Europe and America, and traveled in all of the cities. Through the assistance and bounty of the Blessed Beauty, the call to the Kingdom of Abha was heralded, and the teachings publicly given. The blessed Cause was proclaimed in temples, churches, meetings and gatherings. No place was omitted. Although I was in the utmost weakness, yet the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty were continuous when I addressed the people and turned to the Kingdom of Abha. I often spoke for one or two hours without ceasing. Although all of us are like particles, the light of the Blessed Beauty is like unto the rays of the sun. Every particle that falls in sunshine, becomes radiant and grows. Our growth is like the growth of the particles in sunshine. The purpose is that the bounty of the Blessed Beauty is so extensive as to be indescribable."

Then, after reciting a beautiful poem of love for BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, Abdul-Baha continued:

"The breaths of the blessed confirmations were so effective that they melted the hearts and caused the souls to rejoice in the divine glad tidings. On our own part, it was only an activity similar to a death struggle. Thanks be to God! A seed was planted in the gardens of the hearts that is growing throughout eternity. Blessed souls became enkindled, attracted and arose to serve until we returned to the Holy Threshold in the utmost joy and happiness. Thanks be to God! The friends of God from all regions came to the Holy Threshold and we met and associated with them. From the light in their faces their hearts are reflected. Assurance is obtained that these souls are self-sacrificing in the path of the Blessed Beauty. They have no aim save His good pleasure; they have no thought save spreading His fragrances; in the utmost enkindlement they gathered around the circulating place of the Supreme Concourse; they touched the Thresholds of the Holy Spot (tomb of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH) and the Supreme Threshold (the tomb of the Bab) with their heads, and journeyed to their countries. I am hopeful that from their return, great results and glorious signs may be manifest. Now that you are going away (referring to Mirza Ali Akbar and others) you must go likewise with divine power, spiritual glad tidings and attractions.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Talks by Abdul-Baha in the Holy Land—Concluded

TRANSLATED BY DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

The following compilation of some of the utterances of Abdul-Baha after his return to the Holy Land from America, Europe and Egypt, is the fifth published under this heading—the first appeared in issue No. 2, the second in No. 3, the third in No. 10, the fourth in No. 11.

"While I was away, the people of discord (enemies and nakazeen) endeavored constantly to unite themselves with a group of people here, working secretly with some and openly with others. After my return they gathered again, and, as in the time of Abdul-Hamid, wrote reports and made calumnies and sent them to the Turkish government in Constantinople with the hope that they might cause me to go to prison, to be killed or to be exiled. This was their aim.

"The purpose is that the friends of God must not regard me. This Cause is a great Cause; it is the Cause of the Blessed Beauty. A thousand souls like me come and go; it is the same whether they exist or not. The importance is in the Blessed Cause. The friends of God must be firm, growing and steadfast. It is evident that I was and am constantly in danger, and, moreover, I am not always going to be in this world. The day is coming when I shall long to be in the neighborhood of the Great Mercy!

"The friends of God must be in the utmost uprightness; in their sight there must not be any differences, no wavering should occur. Nay, rather, day by day, their firmness and steadfastness must be increased. Consider the servants of His Holiness Jesus Christ, when all of them departed from this world after his martyrdom, others greater than they arose in service. They showed greater power until the light of guidance illumined the horizons. You, too, must be likewise, and know this as a certainty that the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty will come. By God!—There is no God but Him!—if today one of the weakest creatures begins to serve the Truth, divine confirmations and assistance will surround him. . . .

"May you be under the protection of the Blessed Beauty, confirmed and assisted, living in His holy fragrances, and may every one of you become a holy banner in His path. The purpose is that you should not look at me, whether I am present or absent, existing or lost. Be engaged in serving the Cause. Turn to the Blessed Beauty. He will make you independent of any soul. From Him ask reinforcement; be the servants at His door; be supplied from His bestowals; be illumined with His light. May you be protected, guarded and preserved, and rest assured under His shelter. BAHÁ'O'LLAH says, 'We shall help whosoever arises to assist My Cause, with a host from the Supreme Concurrence and a contingent from the near angels.' This is the real foundation. Consider Agha Mirza Abul-Fazl, how much he assisted the Cause. In every time and place he was confirmed. By God!—There is no God but Him!—should man become the king of the East and the West, it would not be a particle of benefit to him. The result is nothing but loss. Where is Nassir-el-Din Shah? Where is Mohammed Shah? Where is Abdul-Hamid? Where is Bonapart? Where is Wilhelm? No trace, no fruit! Although these were kings and in the utmost power, their end was manifest loss. This is what we see clearly, therefore strive that we may be upright in the servitude of the Holy Threshold. This is eternal glory, this is everlasting bounty. This is the cause of the illumination of existence of the Kingdom of Abha! This is the cause of progress to infinite sublimity! Upon you be El-Baha-el-Abha! (the Glory of God)”

In the morning Abdul-Baha gave the following advice and encouragement to those in his presence: “Today, the friends of God are the illumined candles of the world of humanity; unless the candle burns it will not bestow light. Man must endure if he would obtain treasure. Unless the friends are self-sacrificing, wonderful signs will not become manifest; unless the seed is planted it will not become a fruitful tree; unless the water flows gardens will not become verdant. These are the days of service and not the days of self-concealment. This day is for calling to the Kingdom of God and not for silence. This is the day of firmness and steadfastness, the day of loyalty, not disloyalty. The Blessed Beauty, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, was fifty years in hardships and afflictions. He quaffed from every cup of calamity and suffered every pain. Then it is evident what the friends should endure and in what manner they should raise the victorious banner of the Cause of God. Easy living is conducive to coldness, and tranquillity and comfort causes the light to be extinguished. Every one of the Bahais must be like unto a globe of fire, and as a blaze of light—dispell the darkness of ignorance with the lights of service, adorn the horizon of the world with brilliant stars, become the sweet-voiced nightingales of the Paradise of Abha and the holy doves of the Supreme Heaven. Today, the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty are with the soul who utterly forgets himself, constantly investigates his own faults and defects, loosens his tongue in mentioning the good qualities and sublime susceptibilities of others, does not see or hear or speak evil. Goodness personified shines as a sun and wafts as the morning breeze upon the earth. . . .

“We are fond of the light of justice from any horizon, and lovers of the beauty of the rose from any garden. His Holiness, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, has admonished the Bahais, in many tablets, that they should not have religious differences and racial or patriotic prejudices, that they must gather under the banner of the world of humanity. Addressing the world of humanity, BAHÁ'O'LLAH said, ‘O, people of the world! Ye are the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch. Glory is not for the one who loves his country, but for the one who loves the world.’ If thou desirest the gloom of the world of nature to pass away, thou shouldst illumine the candle of guidance, and if thou seekest a ripe harvest then plant thou a pure seed. If thou wouldst have delicious fruits, plant thou a blessed slip; that is, illumine the heart with the light of the love of God and act according to the exhortations of the Blessed Beauty.”

hara of Khorassan! Become diffused before the friends of God and His faithful ones. Perfume the nostrils of His chosen ones—those whose faces shone forth, whose stars became brilliant, whose feet stood firm, whose banners unfurled, whose hearts grew strong, whose roots and branches flourished, whose breasts dilated in the day of meeting, and who became loyal to the Covenant of God in the world of eternity. Then convey thou to the dwellers of those regions and hills, the greetings of thy Lord, the Supreme, and announce to them the glad tidings of the days of God.

“By my Lord! This is a bounty that was desired in the past centuries by the dawning points of lights and stars, and the recipients of the inspiration of thy Lord, the Dear, the Selfsubsisting. Their eyes were flooded, their tears flowed, their lamentations arose in yearning and longing for it. May you enjoy this table that has descended from the heaven of the favor of your Lord, the Merciful, the Compassionate!

“O breezes of longing and fragrances from the flowers of faithfulness! Stand in the courtyard of the friends, the rose-garden of whose hearts thrived by the flooding clouds of the love of God, and their faces shone with the light of the knowledge of God. Convey to them my longing, yearning and attachment; declare and announce to them my devotion, affection and fondness in their mention. Say to them:—

“Upon ye be BAHA'O'LLAH (The Glory of God) and His peace, His greeting and His praise! In your faces are His light and His effulgence. In your hearts are His Spirit and His faithfulness. In your bosoms are His love and His cure. O ye friends of the Merciful! Loosen your tongues in His thanks and praise, for He has confirmed you by the Cause, in the mention of which the Supreme Concourse warbled and the herald of glad tidings proclaimed in the books and tablets.

“Blessed are ye for this great bounty. Glad tidings be unto ye for this wondrous gift which is the full bestowal of God and the manifest light of God. May God make ye torches of His mention, centers of His secrets, dawning-points of His lights and rising points of His signs. Blind are the eyes that do not see the lights or His baha (splendor) and are not consoled by witnessing His marvelous signs, in the day of His Manifestation and His brilliant light. Deaf are the ears that do not hear His call and are not cheered by His wondrous utterances. Dumb are the tongues that are not loosened in His mention and His praise. Lost are the hearts that are portionless of His love and devotion. Cast away are the souls that do not walk in His good pleasure and quench their thirst at the fountain of His knowledge.

“O thou dove of faithfulness! Speak to the weak if thou findest that difficulties are intensifying, hardships extending, the earth quaking, the mountains shaking, the hurricanes of afflictions encircling, the sea of calamities surging, the winds of suffering blowing and the flood of tests surrounding the contingent beings. Have beautiful patience in the path of thy Glorious Lord. Beware! O servants of the Merciful, lest ye arouse the tumult when the blaze of the fire of trials become intense, and its crackling arises. Beware of crying and wailing in the path of your Glorious Lord. When the ocean of ordeals becomes stormy and its affairs become serious by the oppression of the rebellious people (this refers to the enemies, the nakazeen), do not consider them in a place free from torment, and do not fear their strength and their numbers. Verily, their likes passed before them. Read to them from the book (Koran), ‘A Certain Army of the People is Fleeing.’ Verily, those in past centuries were much stronger than these, their possessions were greater and their armies mightier.

“Even though, O lambs of God, ye

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

ALLAH'O'ABHA!

Momentous changes are taking place in the Holy Land.

The doors of communication between Abdul-Baha and the outer world, are opening. A few days ago the above telegram was received by the STAR OF THE WEST.

The full significance of these events cannot be grasped at this moment; only the future will reveal them. It is likened unto the appearance of the sun after long obscurity.

The dark clouds seem to be scattering.

A tumult of happiness and expectation reverberates in the hearts of the Bahais. "Ya-Baha-El-Abha!"

It is indeed a remarkable co-incidence that the "Talks by Abdul-Baha in the Holy Land", given when the doors of communication were closing, appear in this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST.

We are glad to send them forth at this time.

are between the claws of ferocious beasts and the nails of the carnivorous of the earth, do not be discouraged of the Spirit of God. The veil will be removed from the cause of the command of God. This ray will radiate in the horizons of the cities, the signals of oneness will be elevated, the banners of the signs (verses) of your Glorious Lord will wave upon the firm edifice, the structure of doubts will be shaken, the curtain of darkness will be torn asunder; the morn of proofs will dawn and the kingdoms of earth and heaven will shine with the lights of signs.

"You will see the banners of the sects lowered, and their flags reversed, their faces erased and transfixed, their eyes staring and sunken, their hearts palpitating and failing, their homes empty and vacant, their bodies weak and decayed, and the souls falling into hell!

"By the Life of God! Verily, in the people of Noah, Lot, Thamood (one of the first Arabian tribes) the Jews, the Tobbaas of Seba, (ancient kings of Yemen in Hedjaz, Arabia), the heroes of Bat-ha (Mecca), the kaisers of Fayhaa (Bassra), the Cyruses of Zora (Bagdad), and in the fables of the ancient centuries, there is an exhortation to the mindful, and persons of innersight who unfold the end of affairs by the beginning of signs. Verily, their planets were scattered, their processions have perished, their faces became dusty, their stars darkened, their roots torn up, their seed crushed, their thrones wrecked, their armies routed, their pillars quivered, their edifices in ruins, their palaces forsaken, their backs broken, their tombs collapsed, their faces ugly, their skin chilled, their shelter swept away and their traces effaced. Look thou at their towns and villages in the desert. When the might of thy Lord came it made them extinguished, arid and devastated. No voice or whisper could be heard. But those who took the neighborhood of the mercy of thy Lord El-Abha (the Most Glorious) as shelter, refuge, asylum and protection, are like the birds who take the twigs of the Sadrat-el-Montaha (the most distant tree in Paradise, according to the Mohammedan traditions, no angel or prophet can go beyond the limits of this Tree) as a nest and haunt. God established them in the earth. He made them good leaders, caused their signs to be famous and brought them from the horizon of singleness with lights radiating from their faces."

ABDUL-BAHA DISMISSES ALL PILGRIMS

The 29th day of June, 1914, was a day of great sorrow in Haifa because Abdul-Baha dismissed all of the pilgrims and bade them return to their countries.* In the morning he spoke to the visitors from Ishkabad, Turkestan, Russia: "Ishka-bad is now a good center. In the past, Merv was the center of Khorassan, which is such a vast country including the provinces of Afghanistan, Sistan and Belkh. Ishkabad also is near Merv. The Blessed Beauty often spoke of Khorassan in the tablets, saying that from this country would arise the first mention of God, which amazed the people. When Ishkabad came into existence and the Mashrekol-azkar was built, the hope of the Blessed Beauty became manifest, and this, the first temple of the Bahai world, has become a shelter and refuge to the friends of God. They are drawn hither from all directions and when in difficulty they go to Ishkabad. The friends made a tremendous effort to build this great edifice, they strove with heart and soul. At first it seemed impossible of accomplishment, but, thanks be to God, they were confirmed and assisted. Now, through this inspiration, the friends in all places are planning to build likewise, when it is possible. By founding the Mashrekol-azkar in the world the wonderful signs of God become manifest and evident. One must be built in every place, even though it be only a house or one rented room, if necessary, under the earth.

"It is very important to establish the Mashrekol-azkar of God, so that the friends may gather and become engaged in the commemoration of God. This has great importance. The confirmations of God will arrive, as to the friends in Ishkabad. It has dear young men, also old important souls. His honor Afnan (cousin of the Bab) and Agha Mirza Mahmood (son of Afnan) are there. My heart is exceedingly attached to them. I love Agha Mirza Abdul-Karim very much. He served constantly. His illness has a wisdom, later it will be manifest. I am hopeful that the districts of Turkestan, Russia, will become illumined, the cry of 'Ya-Bahael-Abha! (O thou Glorious of the Most Glorious!) will reach the Supreme Zone, and the melody of 'Ya-Rabb-el-Aala!'

(O my Lord, the Supreme!) will be carried to all horizons. The school of Ishkabad has great importance. You who are going there, strive that it may become orderly, so that the children may progress. May they reach such a degree in knowledge and sciences that the fame of this school may reach to the horizons. Great effort is necessary to accomplish this. Convey my greeting to every friend of God and become an evident book to everyone."

In the afternoon Abdul-Baha gave the following talk:

"This is the day of farewell and the time of leave-taking is very hard. The Arabian poet says, 'The days of my union with the beloved were so few that the greeting was the farewell.' Indeed, I am deeply grieved, but I do not say good-bye to you because there is a complete connection among the hearts, and among the souls there is unity and agreement. We never have a separation from one another. This nearness and remoteness concerns the world of bodies. In the world of spirits and souls there is union, never separation. The heart feels the union. The eye sees and carries the sight to the heart which becomes affected. When the heart is engaged with the friends there is no separation, especially if you go in service to the Cause of God. When a soldier leaves headquarters to battle and to conquer, though far away in person, his remoteness is conducive to the protection of the country. He cannot receive the glances of favor of the king, yet he is nearer and dearer than the soldier who dwells at headquarters.

"Just so the friends of God who go to far regions to serve the Cause are always holy friends and receive the manifestations of the favors of God. There is a special bounty from the Blessed Beauty surrounding them. Convey my greetings and longings to all of the friends. I am in the utmost longing and have the desire of meeting every one of them. I am engaged in thinking of ev-cry one. From the Blessed Beauty, I seek confirmation and assistance that all may be protected in His Kingdom, and under the shadow of His bounty. May He gather them and shelter them in His shelter, and in the assembly of splendor submerge them in the sea of light."

Thus all of the visitors returned to their own countries. From this it is evident that Abdul-Baha knows that which no one knows. Undoubtedly, he knew that the world war was nearing, therefore he dismissed the people.

June 30, 1914.

In the morning a young German from Stuttgart arrived (see STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. VII, No. 3, page 20), and in the evening Abdul-Baha made the following statement: "When I leave the world I want my heart to be assured that the Blessed Beauty has self-sacrificing servants who, in the utmost reverence, arose to serve the Cause of God. This is the cause of quieting my agitated heart."

July 1st, 1914, Abdul-Baha went from Haifa to Acca.

July 2, 1914.

Today, Abdul-Baha revealed the following tablet to a philosopher in India:

HE IS GOD!

"O thou lover of reality! His Highness, the Merciful, has manifested love and harmony to the world of humanity, so that all of the individuals may find a complete connection with each other and the lights of the Oneness of God may appear in the human world. For this He sent the Holy Manifestations; revealed the heavenly books; established the divine religions, so that these holy souls, these revealed books, and these divine religions may become the cause of unity, agreement, harmony and love in the world of humanity. When we consider the reality of divine religions, we see that reality is one because all of the divine religions are reality, and reality does not accept multiplicity or division. Alas, that the foundation of reality has disappeared and imitations, customs and ceremonies that are the foundation of dissension, the cause of obstinacy, the means of war and struggle have appeared. The original purpose of the appearance of the Holy Manifestations and the establishment of the divine teachings have passed away. When this black darkness, that is, the imitations of fathers and forefathers, surrounded the world and the original illumination of divine religions became obliterated, the Morn of Truth dawned and the Sun of Reality (Baha'o'llah) shone forth from the horizon of Persia and cast the rays of heavenly oneness upon the world of humanity. He brought down the edifice of the imitations of the ignorant, the human conduct and customs that emanate from the prejudices of the ancient. These divine teachings are established in the heart of the horizons like unto the penetration of the spirit in the bodies. Thus, at present in Persia, through the breathing of the Spirit of God, different people have torn asunder the curtain of superstitions, become free from the imitations of the ignorant, reached reality, and in the utmost harmony and love are associating with people of different religions. Great assemblies are being organized consisting of Moslems, Jews, Zoroastrians and sometimes Buddhists, including many races. Turks, Arabs, Persians, Kurds, English, French and Americans mingle together as kind and happy brothers. Like the lambs of God, they graze in the meadow of reality, under the shadow of the training of the heavenly Shepherd. When thou considerest truth or reality thou wilt see that these old and decayed limitations in religion become the cause of bloodshed among the people and the nations.

"As this age is a luminous age and this century the century of knowledge, new teachings are necessary, a new effulgence is essential and a new life is needed. The souls cannot accept the ancient ideas, a new thought and new teachings are necessary that shall be the spirit of this age and the light of this century. Investigate, make a great effort so that the Center of the Light of Reality may be seen in the assembly of the world as a witness of love, and arise with such a power and confirmation that thou may'st shake that country. Upon thee be greetings and praise!"

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

July 3, 1914.

The German battleship Gaeben arrived at Haifa. Its admiral and officers were invited by the Persian consul to land and have dinner in the village Nahr (river), which is about two hours' distance from Acca; also to visit the holy tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. It is said that they accepted the invitation chiefly to visit the holy tomb. They were accompanied by the Persian consul, the mayor of Acca and Turkish officers and statesmen. They entered the Holy Threshold and prayed with the utmost respect. The admiral remarked that he had been in many sacred places, but had never encountered one so filled with spirituality, or that had such a wonderfully beautiful site. As they went out they were served with tea, cakes, etc. While the military band played some of them also visited the Garden of Rizwan at Acca. They boarded the ship at Acca and sailed the same night.

July 4, 1914.

The following tablet was revealed by Abdul-Baha at Acca for a believer in America:

"According to the text of the Book of Akdas (the most Holy Book—BAHÁ'O'LLAH'S Book of Laws) and the explicit Book of Ahd (the Book of the Covenant), Abdul-Baha is the interpreter of all the words and books of the Blessed Beauty. This matter is evident and clear to those who are familiar with the epistle and the tablets. If it were not so each one would interpret according to his desire, prefer his interpretation to any other, and become the cause of dissension. However, if a soul explains one of the divine verses, and the sanction of Abdul-Baha is not upon it, it is discarded. This is not the time of interpretation, it is the time of teaching. All of the friends must employ their tongues in teaching, because teaching is the cause of guiding the ones of earth, of illumination of the world, of leading the world of humanity, of the confirmations of the breath of the Holy Spirit. This is the great Cause. However, if a soul attempts to give his own explanation of the blessed verses and it is not detrimental to the Cause, do not object to him if it is only verbal."

The following tablet was revealed for one of the Americans, an illumined minister who became a believer when Abdul-Bahá visited America:

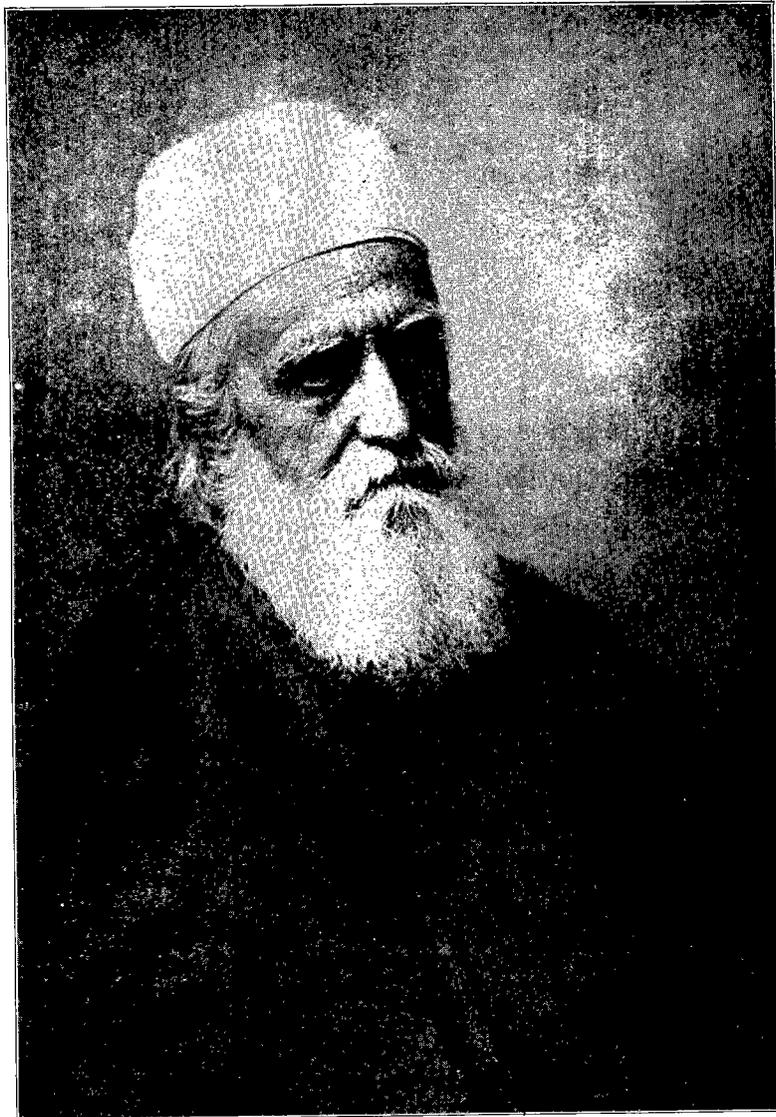

"O my revered! Thy letter that thou hast written in the utmost sincerity and love was the cause of perfect joy. Indeed, with soul and heart thou art striving in order that thou may'st be confirmed by the good pleasure of God. Undoubtedly, this blessed intention has a great effect. A good intention is like unto a brilliant candle, its light shines in all directions. Now, thanks be to God, thou hast risen with utmost effort to light a candle of guidance in that country, and to plant in the garden of the world of humanity a tree of love and gentleness, to herald to the Kingdom of God, to become the cause of awakening of the heedless, to give healing to the spiritually sick, to become the cause of broadening the thought, to train characters, to impart progress to the minds and souls, to bring the lost sheep to the shadow of the real Shepherd, and to guide the migrant birds of the rose-garden of reality. Rest thou assured that the confirmations of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH will come."

The Branch

And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears, but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. No. 13

[Following its usual custom at this time of the year, the STAR OF THE WEST emphasizes the "Center of the Covenant" in the person and function of ABDUL-BAHA, inasmuch as the Twenty-sixth of November is known and celebrated as the "Feast of the Appointment of the Center of the Covenant"—The Editors]

The Center of the Covenant, The Greatest Branch: Abdul-Baha Abbas.

IN ORDER to preserve the unity of the Cause and to spread the religion of God, BAHÁ'O'LLAH has established this Covenant and Testament. Were it not for the power of the Covenant you would have witnessed the dispersion of the believers and the total disappearance of the Cause of God. When I say the Covenant, I mean the power and authority of BAHÁ'O'LLAH given to me.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Extract from Diary Letter of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, to Miss Magee, Paris, May 10, 1913.)

Today, the most important affair is firmness in the Covenant, because firmness in the Covenant wards off differences.

In former cycles no distinct covenant was made in writing by the Supreme Pen; no distinct personage was appointed to be the standard of differentiating falsehood from truth, so that whatsoever he said was to stand as truth and that which he repudiated was to be known as falsehood. At most, His Holiness Jesus Christ gave only an intimation, a symbol, and that was but an indication of the solidity of Peter's faith. When he mentioned his faith, His Holiness said, "Thou art Peter"—which means rock—"and upon this rock will I build my church." This was a sanction of Peter's faith; it was not indicative of his [Peter] being the expounder of the Book, but was a confirmation of Peter's faith.

But in this dispensation of the Blessed Beauty [BAHÁ'O'LLAH] among its distinctions is that He did not leave people in perplexity. He entered into the Covenant and Testament with the people. He appointed a Center of the Covenant. He wrote with His own pen and revealed it in the Kitab-el-Akdas, the Book of Laws, and Kitab-el-Ah'd,* the Book of the Covenant, appointing him [Abdul-Baha] the Expounder of the Book. You must ask him [Abdul-Baha] regarding the meanings of the texts of the verses. Whatsoever he says is correct. Outside of this, in numerous Tablets He [BAHÁ'O'LLAH] has explicitly recorded it with clear, sufficient, valid and forceful statements. In the Tablet of The Branch† He explicitly states: Whatsoever The Branch says is right, or correct; and every person must obey The Branch with his life, with his heart, with his tongue. Without his will, not a word shall anyone utter. This is an explicit text of the Blessed Beauty. So there is no excuse left for anybody. No soul shall, of himself, speak anything. Whatsoever his [Abdul-Baha's] tongue utters, whatsoever his pen records, that is correct; according to the explicit text of BAHÁ'O'LLAH in the Tablet of The Branch.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

HE IS GOD!

Doors of the Holy Land open—Recent letters from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

LETTER TO THE BAHAIS IN AMERICA

Haifa, Palestine,
September 27, 1918.

Through the STAR OF THE WEST, to the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in America.

My dear Bahai brothers and sisters:

The dark heaven of Haifa—praise be to God—is at last cleared from the gloomy clouds of international contention and the brilliant orbs of the love of the friends may shine again upon our lives through the dawn of the STAR OF THE WEST. For years we have been deprived of its warm rays and its penetrating heat and thus we were left in cold indifference, falling step by step into a frozen state of forgetfulness.

Abdul-Baha and the members of the holy family, whose health is quite well, desire to hear about its progress.

The STAR OF THE WEST was a clear mirror which reflected to us the advanced activities of the believers of God in America and other parts of the world. It brought to us the fragrances of the flowers of love and stirred our hearts with the soft breezes of real affection. It was indeed a great affliction to all of us to be deprived of all these heavenly favors. You cannot realize how we have missed all along the dear messenger of truth which brought to us the glad tidings of the promulgation of the Cause and the promotion of the word of God. You were and are indeed most privileged to be so situated as to avail yourselves of the glad opportunities of service and mutual association, but how unhappy we were to be deprived of all these blessings during the past years of misery, monotony, tyranny and oppression.

Often we have expressed our utter weariness of the length of the war and the peculiar direction which it took in secluding us from the news of the friends and their meetings. How soul-harrowing and unbearable all this dreadful monotony was. No pen can describe it. No tongue can explain it. Only God knows what we have gone through. Weeks, months and years succeeded each other like so many white pages of a blank book without receiving a word from the believers either in the East or in the West and thus we were totally cut off from communicating with them. Even our hopes failed us and, like unto a mirage, would tantalize us to keep on hoping against hope without ever realizing them. We had begun to think that our condition was fixed and eternally unchangeable and thus to hope for a change or improvement of our environment was utter folly.

But God destined it otherwise. Our bonds had to be broken some day. Our limitations had to be done away with. Our misery and monotony had to be replaced by joy and new scenes and the cycles of sleep, which had passed over Palestine, had to be followed by years of civilization and culture. The prophecies of the Old Testament had to be come fulfilled and they could not be possibly fulfilled under the old corrupt regime of the Turks.

In short, dear friends, we are all free. . . . The years of silence have passed—the sun of a better day is dawning from the horizon of Palestine. All the people are rejoicing and praying for the speedy arrival of a general peace between all the nations of the world and the establishment of a closer bond of union among all the races. This is the wish of all the God-fearing men and women wherever they may be found.

Hoping to hear from you very soon so that we may know what you have been doing during the past three years, I am

Your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO MR. ALFRED E. LUNT

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

. . . . The enclosed words are from a letter just received by me from Mirza Alimad Sohrab. These are the words of Abdul-Baha expressed, as Mirza Ahmad says, many times during the last months. Certainly they are full of significance. . . . Faithfully yours, Alfred E. Lunt.

Recent Words of Abdul-Baha

The darkness of this gloomy night shall pass away. Again the Sun of Reality will dawn from the horizon of the hearts. Have patience—wait, but do not sit idle; work while you are waiting; smile while you are wearied with monotony; be firm while everything around you is being shaken; be joyous while the ugly face of despair grins at you; speak aloud while the malevolent forces of the nether world try to crush your mind; be valiant and courageous while men all around you are cringing with fear and cowardice. Do not yield to the overwhelming power of tyranny and despotism. Serve the cause of democracy and freedom. Continue your journey to the end. The bright day is coming. The nucleus of the new race is forming. The harbinger of the new ideals of international justice is appearing. The trees of hope will become verdant; the copper of scorn and derision will be transmuted into the gold of honor and praise; the arid desert of ignorance will be transformed into the luxuriant garden of knowledge, the threatening clouds shall be dispelled and the stars of faith and charity will again twinkle in the clear heaven of human consciousness.

LETTER TO MR. JOSEPH H. HANNEN.

Haifa, Palestine,
September 26, 1918.

To Mr. Joseph H. Hannen,
Washington, D. C., U. S. A.
My very dear brother in the holy Cause:
The most glorious news that I can just now impart to you is the perfect health of the beloved Abdul-Baha and his dear family. Details I can give you in future, but just now my heart is overflowing with a multitude of sentiments and a host of feelings, that I do not know where to begin and how to end. The last four years, the best of my life, were spent under the worst conditions imaginable, the Turkish rule, which was more venomous than a serpent and more deadly than a scorpion; but, praise be to God, a hundred-thousand times praise be to God, that we are at last free; all Palestine is free; the people are free to think as they like, to write as they like and to speak as they like. Palestine from now on is on the road to national life, virtuous achievements and unlimited progress.

The victorious British army came down from Nazareth like unto a mighty irresistible whirlwind on September 23, and at 3 p. m. took possession of our town, after a battle of twenty-four hours, the picture of which shall never be effaced from the page of my memory. The army that captured Haifa were all English and Indian cavalymen, and they showed courage, invincibility and heroism in the very jaws of death.

You have surely read the good news of the British victory in the papers, and your letters, newspapers, and magazines are on the way. We are yearning for the news of your health and the Cause. Surely there must have been many changes during this long interval that we could not communicate with each other. Personally, I had become like a man deaf, blind, and speechless. All the fair realities of my past happy life in America, England, and France had become like faint dreams, and these dreams also had begun to fade away from the page of my memory, when all of a sudden, as though out of the clear, blue sky, the booming of the cannons was heard across the mountains, heralding the glad news of the approach of our liberators and presaging the coming days of reunion, happiness and mutual association of the friends. Now again the world is mine. My happiness is boundless. I can breathe the fresh air of friendship. I am planning to leave for the United States as soon as possible. What joy, what real intoxication to see again the friends face to face!

Today I am sending the copy of a telegram to Ahmed Yazdi, to be cabled to you from Port Said.

As soon as I heard this morning that our new postal authorities would receive letters for the outside world, I was beside myself with joy and hastened to write you this note, so that you and the friends may know that we are all well, awaiting anxiously to receive your news of how things are going with you and the friends. . . .

Your sincere brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

LETTER AND TABLET TO MRS. GEORGIE RALSTON.

Haifa, Palestine,
October 8, 1918.

To Mrs. Georgie Ralston.

My dear sister in the holy Cause:

This letter was written to you nearly two years ago, but returned to me from Constantinople because war was declared between the United States and Germany. Because it contains the words of Abdul-Baha as well as the translation of his Tablet to you, I only change the envelope, add these few words of greeting and mail it again, hoping that this time it may reach you safely. During this long period of silence we have been waiting for this day, so that we might correspond with each other with the utmost freedom. Praise be to God, Abdul-Baha and all the friends are well and are longing to look on the faces of the believers. Please remember me to each and all.

I am your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

January 10, 1917.

My dear sister in the Cause:

This afternoon I spent, for more than two hours, in the presence of Abdul-Baha and quaffed the clear water of his holy words. He mentioned your name and Mr. Ralston's, and brought to mind when you used to take him in your electric car to the Golden Gate Park. He praised your devoted nature and your loyal disposition, and prayed for your success and prosperity, both in this world and in the Kingdom. The news about the progress of the Cause and the awakening of hearts in the United States has imparted to us life and happiness. Referring to this question, Abdul-Baha said today:

Words of Abdul-Baha

"I am like a man who has lost the most priceless jewel. He is seeking here and searching there, perchance he might find it and regain his old happiness and assurance in its possession. The Blessed Perfection knows that, day and night—nay rather, every hour—I am looking toward the East and toward the West, toward the North and toward the South, to see whether severed and attracted souls have arisen to teach the Cause of God, to behold whether divine beings, who are the jewels of the treasury of the Spirit, are living in accordance with the principles of this Revelation, to discern whether enkindled hearts are raising their clarion voices in the assemblages of mankind, calling them to the Dawning-place of Truth and the Fountain of Reality. These souls are my lost jewels. Whenever I find a trace of them or someone gives me a clue about them, I become infinitely happy and, adding to my zeal, I continue my indefatigable search. I pray to God that He may give me many such jewels in America. My hope is that every one of the believers may become a brilliant jewel of the mine of guidance and a shining star of the heaven of virtue. Whenever I hear that such a soul is found, I praise the Blessed Beauty for His favor and bounty and beg Him to encircle him with the angels of protection and the seraphs of preservation."

Your kind and welcome letter of June 25, 1916, enclosing a petition for Abdul-Baha, reached me, and I read to him the contents of both. He was most glad to receive the good news of your health and spirituality and that you have been in California, associating with dear Mrs. Goodall and her daughter. No doubt you are now back again in New York, co-operating with the friends in that city in the service of the Kingdom. The following is the translation of a Tablet dictated in your name:

Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Mrs. Ralston

O thou my daughter of the Kingdom!
Thy letter full of significances imparted spiritual joy and stirred the hearts into cheerfulness. It was an indication of thy inward illumination and a brilliant proof of the fact that thou art drawing the rays of Truth from the fount of Mercy. From the time of our separation up to this hour thou wert and art ever in my mind. I have not forgotten thee even for one day, similarly Mr. Ralston; for both of you are most dear to me. Praise be to God, that your eyes are seeing and your ears hearing and your hearts illumined with the Light of the Most Great Guidance. Your trip to New York was most seasonable and the means of the tranquillity of heart and soul. I hope that during this winter you may spend your time with the utmost rejoicing, but you must be present in the meetings of the believers and become the means of love and affinity of one toward another. Soul-cheering news reaches us from New York, that good-fellowship is realized amongst the friends and union and accord is perfect. I hope that Mr. Ralston and thyself may become the means of holding such meetings, the harvests of which may be abundant, day by day the believers may become more loving and kind toward each other and always good news may arrive from New York, granting joy and happiness to the hearts of the yearning ones. Convey on my behalf kindness and greeting to each and all the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Mashrekol-azkar

LETTER FROM EXECUTIVE BOARD OF BAHAI TEMPLE UNITY.

November 1, 1918.

Beloved friends in the Covenant of El-Abha:

In these hours, when the map of the whole world suffers transformation, and the political and geographic divisions of humanity are recreated, let us who have been informed of these events before their occurrence by the Pen of the Center of the Covenant, turn the realities of our spirits to Him of whom it is written, "In that Day, the heavens and the earth shall be but His handful."

These vast outer changes are among His signs and the outward preparation for the indwelling of the Kingdom. But the veritable sign of the Kingdom, as he says, "that which is to be in the inception of the organization of the Kingdom" is the founding of the Mashrekol-azkar. This heavenly edifice, Abdul-Baha says, "is an expression of the uprising of the evident Standard which is waving in the center of that continent, the results and effects of which will become manifest in the hearts and spirits"; "it will have a tremendous effect upon civilization"; "it contains divine wisdoms"; "this Mashrekol-azkar is the first Divine Institute in America"; "a place of spiritual gathering and of the manifestation of divine mysteries"; "though outwardly a material foundation is possessed of spiritual effect." These are the definitions of the Center of the Covenant. Read them as we will, are they not conclusive as to the present clear responsibility of the Bahais to establish this Point which must precede the organization of the Kingdom? Abdul-Baha said in a Tablet translated Sept. 23, 1911, "God said in the Koran, 'It is those who believed in God and the Last Day shall build the Temple of God' ". That Day is here and now. Where are those who believe, who "shall build the Temple"? Praise be to God, the pure hearts, the sincere believers have already given an earnest that from the Sea of Recognition they have drunk a cup whose living water melted away the veils, enabling them to become conscious that, veritably, "He is God," that this is the "Last Day", even His Day, and that it is they whom He now calls to build the greatest symbol of His Day, the Temple of God.

The Mashrekol-azkar treasury bears witness today to the genuine effort already made by the beloved of God, to fulfill the command. But there remains a further step before the goal is reached. We are as one, pausing after a great exertion, just without the Promised Land.

But he says, "Hasten! Hasten unto the great bounty! Press forward unto the abundant mercy! Speed! Speed unto the manifest light! Be urgent! Be urgent for the great attainment!" And with what tender mercies hath he recently encouraged us to take this final step so that we may announce to him the glad tidings of full obedience that the sum required is at hand, nay running over.

Consider that within a few weeks the outer communication with Abdul-Baha has been restored. Even as he has in his wisdom and favor chosen this freedom for himself, so also is the world in this hour attaining to freedom. Likewise may we attain to the spiritual freedom of service through full obedience. Vast events are impending; "for every hour there is a fate", for the Bahais there is an unfulfilled destiny, if these non-existent ones are perchance of that army of the Kingdom, and that destiny "to build the Temple of God". With what thanksgiving for the newly opened door in Haifa, can we now gird up our loins for the final effort!

Today, the treasury holds in bank and in certificates of deposit $105,322.68; in bonds $24,000; and in intangible or other securities or articles of value, of estimated value of $7,000; totalling $136,322.68. There are, besides, unpaid pledges in the vicinity of $30,000. To pass the $200,000 mark required, we need (counting the unpaid pledges) $33,677.32. Without unpaid pledges, we need approximately $63,677.32.* Any pledgors, with outstanding instalments thus far unpaid can readily see the situation. We know something of the spiritual difficulties and real reasons for the delay on some of these. Let us supplicate for the removal of these barriers and the glorious fulfillment of these promises.

But the great attainment lies a step beyond the pledges thus far made. We are now squarely facing the brilliant possibility of the laying of the cornerstone, God willing, by the hand of Abdul-Baha. A few thousand dollars stretch between us and that colossal event. In the face of perhaps the greatest material barriers yet confronting us, only the divine guidance and the heavenly confirmations can clear the path. But our action is nevertheless essential.

At its August meeting, the Executive Board of Bahai Temple Unity, after earnest supplication and consultation, voted to issue a letter to each one of the friends in the Cause, suggesting the use of the following prayer revealed by His Holiness The Bab,—during the period of Nov. 8-Nov. 26 inclusive—and that on the final day, the blessed anniversary of the Day of the Covenant, Nov. 26, each soul make his offering for the Mashrekol-Azkar, for the completion of the fund and as a means of assisting in the establishment of the Most Great Peace. All such offerings should be sent to Corinne True, the new Treasurer of the Building Fund Committee, and Financial Secretary of the Unity.

This blessed prayer, which was translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi at Green Acre, Eliot, Maine, August 18, 1918, is as follows:

"Say! God sufficeth everything above everything and nothing in the heavens or in the earth besides God sufficeth! Verily, He is in Himself, the Knower, the Sustainer, the Omnipotent."

Dr. Bagdadi stated that this prayer was revealed by His Holiness The Bab for the removal of great sufferings, to be said 314 times every morning for nineteen days.

In the over-shadowing spirit of this prayer may we bring this letter to a close, confident in His promise and bestowal, confident in you, the sincere servants of His Beauty, that the certainty of the establishment of the great Mashrekol-azkar is at hand, even in this hour.

Let us recall these glorious words of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH (in Lawh-el-Akdas):

"Blessed is he who fulfilled My Covenant, and whom the world prevented not from entering the Court of My Holiness."

"Blessed is he who was attracted by My Melodies, and rent the veils asunder by My Power."

In His love,

Charles Mason Remey,
for the Executive Board.

Alfred E. Lunt,
for the Building Fund Committee.

LIBERTY BONDS ACCEPTABLE

During the strenuous days just passed through, the necessity of investing in Liberty Bonds seemed paramount. The great desire of Abdul-Baha, as expressed in a recent Tablet, is the speedy erection of the Mashrekol-azkar. He writes, "For the building of this Temple is a most great triumph." The friends generally may not know that Liberty Bonds are an acceptable gift to the Building Fund. Many have already realized this and have sent Bonds to Bahai Temple Unity for the fund. May America arise with supernatural energy to achieve the "great triumph" of building the Temple and having Abdul-Baha come and lay its corner stone.

Corinne True,

Treasurer Building Fund Committee of Bahai Temple Unity.

His Holiness Abraham covenanted with regard to Moses. His Holiness Moses was the promised One of Abraham, and he, Moses, covenanted with regard to His Holiness Christ, saying that Christ was the promised One. His Holiness Christ covenanted with regard to His Holiness The Paraete—which means His Holiness Mohammed. His Holiness Mohammed covenanted as regards The Bab, whom he called "My promised One," His Holiness The Bab, in all his books, in all his epistles, explicitly covenanted with regard to the Blessed Beauty, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, that BAHÁ'O'LLAH was the promised One of His Holiness The Bab. His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH covenanted, not that I (Abdul-Baha) am the promised One, but that Abdul-Baha is the Expounder of the Book and the Center of His Covenant, and that the promised One of BAHÁ'O'LLAH will appear after one thousand or thousands of years. This is the Covenant which BAHÁ'O'LLAH made. If a person shall deviate, he is not acceptable at the Threshold of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. In case of difference, Abdul-Baha must be consulted. They must revolve around his good pleasure. After Abdul-Baha, whenever the Universal House of Justice is organized, it will ward off differences.

(Words of Abdul-Baha: Star of the West, Vol. 3, No. 14, p. 9.)

After His Holiness Christ, there were many who appeared who were instrumental in creating factions, dissensions. It was not known which one was pursuing the right way. For example, there appeared one among them whose name was Nestor who said that Jesus Christ was not a prophet of God.

Another division was created when the Catholics declared Jesus Christ to be the Son of God; they even pronounced him to be Divinity Himself. The Protestants claimed that Jesus Christ was possessed of two elements, a human element and a divine element. Thus another division was created. In short, the religion of Christ was divided and it was not known who was pursuing the right pathway, because there was no appointed Center to whom Christ referred, whose word was to be a gateway. If His Holiness Christ had taken a covenant with any soul, summoning all to cling to His word as correct, then it would have been evident as to what was veracity.

Because there was no appointed book, every one declared, saying: "We are the right pathway and the others are not." But the Blessed Perfection, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, to ward off dissensions, so that no interested person should create any division or belief, appointed a Central Personage, declaring him to be the Expounder of the Book. That is, people do not generally understand the meanings of the Book, but he does understand. "He is the Expounder of my Book and the Center of my Testament." In the last two verses of the Book are revealed explicit instructions, declaring that "after me, you should turn your attention to a distinct personage and whatsoever he says is correct." And in the Book of the Covenant, He said that by these two verses are meant such and such a person. In all His Tablets and Books He has praised the firm ones in the Covenant and He has anathematized those who are not firm in the Covenant, and in all His Tablets He said: "Verily, shun those who are shaken in the Covenant. Verily, God is the confirmer of the firm ones." In His prayers He has said: "O God! Render those who are firm in the Covenant as dear. Degrade those who are not firm in the Covenant, O God! Be the protector of him who protecteth him and confirm him who confirms the Center of the Covenant." Many are the utterances regarding the violators of the Covenant, so that in the blessed Cause there should be no dissensions. No one should say: "My opinion is this," or, "My thought is this." That they may know who is the Expounder and that whatsoever he says is correct. He has not left any room for dissensions—not at all. Of course it is certain that in the world there are those who are antagonistic; there are those who are followers of passion; there are those who follow their own thoughts; there are those who like to create dissension in the Cause. For example: Judas Iscariot was one of the disciples, but he betrayed Jesus Christ. Such things have happened in the past, but now the Blessed Beauty has explicitly declared: "This person is the Expounder of my Book and all must turn to him." And this is to ward off dissension. The purpose of the Blessed One is that no differences shall be created.

The "Tablet of the Branch"—By BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH.

[This has been revealed in Adrianople for Mirza Ali Riza in order that he may be nourished by the Favors of God.]

He is Eternal in His Abha Horizon!

Verily, the Cause of God hath come upon the Clouds of Utterances and the polytheists are in this Day in great torment! Verily, the Hosts of Revelation have descended with Banners of Inspiration from the Heaven of the Tablet in the Name of God, the Powerful, the Mighty! At this time the monotheists all rejoice in the victory of God and His dominion and the deniers will then be in manifest perplexity.

O ye people! Do ye flee from the Mercy of God after It has encompassed the existent things created between the heavens and earths? Beware lest ye prefer your own selves before the Mercy of God, and deprive not yourselves thereof! Verily, whosoever turneth away therefrom will be in great loss. Verily, Mercy is like unto Verses which have descended from the one heaven, and from them the monotheists drink the choice Wine of Life, whilst the polytheists drink from the fiery water [hameen]; and when the Verses of God are read unto them, the fire of hatred is enkindled within their breasts. Thus have they preferred their own selves before the Mercy of God, and are of those who are heedless.

Enter, O people, beneath the shelter of the Word! Then drink therefrom the choice wine of Inner Significances and Utterances; for therein is hidden the Kawther of the Glorious One—and it hath appeared from the horizon of the Will of your Lord, the Merciful, with wonderful lights.

Say: Verily, the Ocean of Pre-Existence hath branched forth from this Most Great Ocean. Blessed, therefore, is he who abides upon Its shores, and is of those who are established thereon. Verily, this Most Sacred Temple of Abha—the Branch of Holiness—hath branched forth from the Sadrat-et-Montaha. Blessed is whosoever sought shelter beneath It and is of those who rest therein.

Say: Verily, the Branch of Command hath sprung forth from this Root which God hath firmly planted in the ground of the Will, the Limb of which has been elevated to a station which encompasses all existence. Therefore, exalted be He for this Creation, the Lofty, the Blessed, the Inaccessible, the Mighty!

O ye people! Draw nigh unto It [The Branch referred to in this Tablet both as “It” and “His”], and taste the fruits of Its Knowledge and Wisdom on the part of the Mighty, the Knowing One. Whosoever will not taste thereof shall be deprived of the Bountly, even though he hath partaken of all that is in the earth—were ye of those who know.

Say: Verily, a Word hath gone forth in favor from the Most Great Tablet and God has adorned It with the Mantle of Himself, and made It Sovereign over all in the earth and a Sign of His Grandeur and Omnipotence among the creatures; in order that, through It, the people shall praise their Lord, the Mighty, the Powerful, the Wise; and that, through It, they shall glorify their Creator and sanctify the Self of God which standeth within all things. Verily, this is naught but a Revelation upon the part of the Wise, the Ancient One!

Say: O people, praise ye God, for Its Manifestation [the Branch], for verily It [the Branch] is the Most Great Favor upon you and the Most Perfect blessing upon you; and through Him every mouldering bone is quickened. Whosoever turns to Him hath surely turned unto God, and whosoever turneth away from Him hath turned away from My Beauty, denied My Proof and is of those who transgress. Verily, He is the Remembrance of God amongst you and His Trust within you, and His Manifestation unto you and His Appearance among the servants who are nigh. Thus have I been commanded to convey to you the Message of God, your Creator; and I have delivered to you that of which I was commanded. Whereupon, thereunto testifieth God, then His Angels, then His Messengers, and then His Holy Servants.

Inhale the fragrances of the Rizwan from His roses and be not of those who are deprived. Appreciate the Bounty of God upon you and be not veiled therefrom—and, verily, We have sent Him forth in the temple of man. Thus praise ye the Lord, the Originator of whatsoever He willeth through His wise and inviolable Command!

Verily, those who withhold themselves from the Shelter of the Branch are indeed lost in the wilderness of perplexity; and are consumed by the heat of self-desire, and are of those who perish.

Hasten, O people, unto the Shelter of God, in order that He may protect you from the heat of the Day whereon none shall find for himself any refuge or shelter except beneath the Shelter of His Name, the Clement, the Forgiving! Clothe yourselves, O people, with the garment of Assurance, in order that He may protect you from the dart of doubts and superstitions, and that ye may be of those who are assured in those days wherein none shall ever be assured and none shall be firmly established in the Cause, except by severing himself from all that is possessed by the people and turning unto the Holy and Radiant Outlook.

O ye people! Do ye take unto yourselves the Jebt* as a helper other than God, and do ye seek the Taghoot† as a Lord besides your Lord the Almighty, the Omnipotent? Forsake, O people, their mention, then hold the Chalice of Life in the Name of your Lord the Merciful. Verily, by God, the existent world is quickened through a drop thereof, were ye of those who know.

*An idol worshipped by the ancient Egyptians from which name Egypt was derived. †Another idol.

Say: In that Day there is no refuge for any one save the Command of God, and no salvation for any soul but God. Verily, this is the truth and there is naught after truth but manifest error.

Verily, God hath made it incumbent upon every soul to deliver His Cause [the Message] according to his ability. Thus hath the Command been recorded by the Finger of Might and Power upon the Tablet of Majesty and Greatness.

Whosoever quickens one soul in this Cause is like unto one quickening all the servants and the Lord shall bring him forth in the Day of Resurrection into the Rizwan of Oneness, adorned with the Mantle of Himself, the Protector, the Mighty, the Generous! Thus will ye assist your Lord, and naught else save this shall ever be mentioned in this Day before God, your Lord and the Lord of your forefathers.

As to thee, O servant, hearken unto the admonition given unto thee in the Tablet; then seek the Grace of thy Lord at all times. Then spread the Tablet among those who believe in God and in His Verses; so that they may follow that which is contained therein, and be of those who are praiseworthy.

Say: O people, cause no corruption in the earth and dispute not with men; for, verily, this is not worthy of those who have chosen in the shelter of their Lord a station which shall indeed remain secure.

If ye find one athirst, give him to drink from the Chalice of Kawtha and Tasneen; and if ye find one endowed with an attentive ear, read unto him the Verses of God, the Mighty, the Merciful, the Compassionate! Unloose the tongue with excellent utterance, then admonish the people if ye find them advancing unto the sanctuary of God; otherwise abandon them unto themselves and forsake them in the abyss of hell. Beware lest ye scatter the pearls of Inner Significance before every barren, dumb one. Verily, the blind are deprived of witnessing the Lights and are unable to distinguish between the stone and the holy, precious pearl.

Verily, wert thou to read the most mighty, wonderful Verses to the stone for a thousand years, will it understand, or will they take any effect therein? No! By thy Lord the Merciful, the Clement! If thou readest all the Verses of God unto the deaf, will he hear a single letter? No! Verily, by the Beauty, the Mighty, the Ancient!

Thus have We delivered unto thee some of the jewels of Wisdom and Utterance, in order that thou mayest gaze unto the direction of thy Lord and be severed from all the creatures. May the Spirit and Glory rest upon thee, and upon those who dwell upon the plain of Holiness and who remain in the Cause of their Lord in manifest steadfastness!

Kitab-el-Ah'd—The Book of the Covenant

The Will and Testament of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH.

Although the Supreme Horizon is devoid of the vanities of the world, yet in the Treasury of Trust and Resignation, We have placed a priceless and unequalled inheritance for the heirs. We have not placed (therein) a treasure, neither have We added to the pain.

By God! In wealth fear is concealed and peril is hidden. Behold and then reflect upon that which the Merciful One hath revealed in The Koran: "Woe unto every maligner and backbiter who heapeth up riches and counteth them over." There is no continuance in the riches of this world. That which is subject to mortality and undergoeth a change hath never been and is not worth regarding. But as is well known, the purpose of this Oppressed One in enduring these adversities and calamities, the revelation of the Verses and the manifestation of the Proofs, has been to quench the fire of hatred and animosity, so that perchance the horizons of the minds of the people of this world may shine with the light of concord and attain the real tranquillity. The sun of this explanation is shining and arising from the horizon of the Divine Tablet; all must look toward it.

O people of the world! I enjoin ye to that which is the means of the elevation of your station. Hold to the virtue of God and grasp the hem of that which is just. Verily, I say, the tongue is for mentioning that which is good; pollute it not with evil speech. God hath forgiven ye that which is past; hereafter ye must all speak that which is befitting. Avoid execration, reviling and that which is aggravating to man.

The station of man is high. A short while since, this exalted Word was revealed from the Repository of the Pen of ABHA: "This is a great and blessed Day, but that which has been hidden in man is and shall be disclosed (in this Day)." The station of man is great if he holds to Reality and Truth, and if he be firm and steadfast in the Commands. The true man appeareth before the Merciful One like unto the heavens; his sight and hearing are the sun and moon; his bright and shining qualities are the stars; his station is the highest one; his traces are the educators of the existence. Every believer who hath found the Perfume of the Garment in this Day and turneth with a pure heart toward the Supreme Horizon, he is mentioned as one of the followers of BAHA' upon the red Page.

Take the Chalice of My Favor in My Name; then drink from It to My Remembrance, the Dearest, the New!

O people of the world! The Creed of God is for love and union; make it not the cause of discord and disunion. In the sight of the men of discernment and those who are holding to the Manifestation, that which is the means of preservation and the cause of the ease and tranquillity of the servants is revealed from the Supreme Pen; but the ignorant of the earth who are fostered in ambition and lust are heedless of the matured Wisdom of the True Wise One and are speaking and working in imaginations and fancies.

O saints of God and His loyal ones! Kings are the appearances of power and the daysprings of the might and wealth of the True One. Pray in their behalf, for the government of the earth is ordained to those souls; but the hearts He hath appointed for Himself.

He hath forbidden dispute and strife with an absolute prohibition in the Book (Kitab-el-Akdas). This is the command of God in this Greatest Manifestation, and He hath preserved it from any order of annulment and hath adorned it with the ornament of confirmation. Verily, He is the All-Knowing and the All-Wise!

It is incumbent upon all to aid those souls who are the day-springs of authority and the drawing-points of command, and who are adorned with the ornament of equity and justice. Blessings be upon the princes and learned ones in BAHA.

These are My trusted ones amongst My servants; these are the rising-points of My commandments amongst My creatures. Upon them be My Glory, My Mercy and My Grace which have surrounded all existence!

It is revealed in the Kitab-el-Akdas concerning this, that which from the Horizons of its Words, the Lights of the Divine Bounties gleam, rise, and glitter.

O My Branches! In this Existent Being the greatest strength and the most perfect power is hidden and concealed; look towards It and gaze in the direction of Its union and not at Its seeming differences. This is the TESTAMENT OF GOD that the Branches [Aghsan], Twigs [Afnan], and Relations [Muntessabeen], must each and every one look to the Greatest Branch [Ghusn Azam]. Reflect upon that which is revealed in My Book, the Akdas: "When the Ocean of My Presence hath disappeared and the Book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces towards Him whom God hath purposed, Who hath branched from this Pre-Existent Root." The aim of this blessed verse hath been the Greatest Branch. We have likewise elucidated the Command as a favor from before Us; and I am the Generous, the All-Dispenser!

Verily, God hath ordained the station of the Greater Branch [Ghusn Akbar] after the station of the former. Verily, He is the Ordainer, the Wise. We have surely chosen the Greater [Akbar] after the Greatest [Azam] as a Command from the All-Knowing, the Omniscient!

The love of the Branches is incumbent upon all, but God hath not ordained to them any right from the properties of people.

O My Branches, My Twigs and My Relations! We enjoin ye to the virtue of God, to follow that which is just and benefiting, and that by which your station will be exalted. Truly I say, piety is the greatest commander for the assistance of the Divine Religion, and the hosts that befit this commander have been and are good, pure and pleasing qualities and deeds.

Say: O servants, make not the cause of order to be the cause of confusion, and make not the reason of union to be the occasion of discord! It is hoped that the people of BAHÁ' will look towards the blessed Word, "Say: All are from the Presence of God"—and this exalted Word resembles water for extinguishing the fire of hatred and animosity which is deposited in all minds and hearts. The different creeds will attain the light of real union through this simple Word. Verily, He sayeth the Truth and guideth in the Path, and He is the Powerful, the Mighty, and the Wonderful!

Respect and regard for the Branches is incumbent upon all for the honoring of the Religion and the exaltation of the Word; and this Command hath been both previously and afterwards recorded and mentioned in the Books of God. Blessed is he who attaineth to that which hath been commanded from the Presence of the Commander, the Pre-Existent!

Also respect (is enjoined) for the Ladies of the Household of God, and the Twigs and the Relations. I enjoin ye to the service of the nations and to the pacification of the world.

From the Kingdom of the Revelation of the Aim of the people of the world, is revealed that which is the Cause of the Life of the world and the Salvation of the nations. Harken to the admonitions of the Supreme Pen with the true ear. Verily, they are better unto ye than all that which is upon earth. To this beareth witness My Book, the Mighty, the Wonderful!

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. "Now is the time that the Teachings of His Highness
BAHA'O'LLAH be promulgated in that Continent"

FIRST TABLET REVEALED FOR AMERICAN BAHAI'S SINCE THE OPENING OF THE DOORS OF THE HOLY LAND.

To the maid-servants of the Merciful, Mrs. Helen S. Goodall and Mrs. Ella G. Cooper, San Francisco, California—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH-EL-ABHA!

HE IS GOD!

O ye two blessed, believing souls!

It is now some years that correspondence was interrupted and communication discontinued. Outwardly there has been no news, no letter and no greeting, but the ideal relations have been strong and unshakable.

From the rose-garden of the hearts of the friends we inhaled sweet and perfuming fragrances. This was indeed conducive to the consolation of the souls.

Now, praise be to God, the road of correspondence is already wide open and ere long the means of meeting will become available. Therefore, I engage myself in writing this epistle, addressing all the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful who are absent, though present spiritually.

All that has been explicitly recorded and embodied in the tablets of His Highness BAHA'O'LLAH more than fifty years ago, are in these days revealed and unfolded. Read those tablets, especially the Epistle of the Temple (Surat'ul Hykl) and the tablets to the kings and rulers of the earth!

Consider ye! What greater miracle is there than this!

Not a single individual could conceive that BAHĀ'O'LLĀH addressed on that day, kings and emperors whose fame had filled all the regions and who had raised themselves to the utmost height of autocracy, predicting in an unmistakable and clear tone the events and happenings of these days. Notwithstanding this the people are not awakened!

In brief, now is the time that the teachings of His Highness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH be promulgated in that continent, so that all the inhabitants may become ready for the establishment of universal peace, the flag of the oneness of the world of humanity be unfurled and all the nations and tribes may obtain tranquillity and composure under the shade of the tabernacle of unity.

Upon ye be greeting and Baha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

LETTER ACCOMPANYING ABOVE TABLET

Tomb of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, Bahje, Acca, Palestine,
October 31st, 1918.

To Mrs. Helen S. Goodall and Mrs. Ella G. Cooper, care of Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, Washington, D. C.

My two dear sisters in the Cause!

Just as the 23rd of September last was a marked day in the history of Haifa, in that the British forces overcame the Turks and freed the people, so the 31st of October will be a marked day in the history of Bahje, because on this day at noon hostilities ceased between the victorious and vanquished parties. Soon peace shall be established between England and what remains of the once great empire of the Turks—an insignificant spot compared with its former size and power, a petty principality indeed.

We hear also that Germany and Austria-Hungary are ready and willing to accept the protocols of the Allies for an armistice, so that altogether we are approaching the finale of this universal slaughter. Significant still is the fact that this afternoon, just an hour before the receipt of the above cheering news, Abdul-Baha dictated a Tablet for you. In a separate envelope I am mailing to you its original and translation, but in order to be sure that you will receive it, I copy the same herein. I may note in passing that this is the very first Tablet that goes to the United States.

Please give my sincere greeting to all the dear friends and let us hear from you as soon as possible. I am your sincere brother

Ahmad Sohrab.

Tablets revealed by Abdul-Baha in the winter of 1916-17, but just received in America.

TABLET TO MR. VAIL.

(Dated Haifa, Syria, December 27, 1916. Mailed on that date but returned to Haifa from Constantinople, and re-mailed October 9, 1918.)

To Mr. Albert Vail.

O thou heavenly youth! O thou herald of the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast written that the light of the Islamic world and the Holy Land is being spread in the West. This news imparts happiness to the hearts of the unitarians that, praise be to God, the reality of the Holy Manifestations is becoming manifest and evident. The divine outpourings are like unto the sun. The sun has many houses, different dawning-places. Whosoever loves the vision of the sun, his eyes will become illumined through its rays, no matter from what dawning-place it may arise.

Thou hast written regarding the program of the Green Acre Conferences in the past summer, that the believers were in the utmost attraction and from all parts the guests hastened to that spot saying that such radiant meetings had not been brought about in any of the former ages, the members of which associated with each other with perfect love and affinity. This was a most auspicious glad tidings to the unitarians. Wherever the blessed souls gather together the Beloved of that meeting is the love of God and the utmost joy and happiness is obtained. Should Green Acre follow firmly in this path and continue the annual holding of its impartial, universal Conferences, there is no doubt that that region will become illumined with the light of unity.

Praise be to God, that Dr. ——— rent asunder the veil of imagination and became enlightened with the effulgence of Unity. Mr. Urban Ledoux became lordly, heavenly and became instrumental in releasing Miss Farmer from that prison. Convey to him on my behalf the utmost kindness. Gladden thou the hearts of Mrs. ——— and Miss ——— with the divine favors and promise them the gain of a new confirmation. Say to Mr. ———, the Indian: "Render thou thanks unto the Lord, for the heart and the soul became luminous with the light of Guidance and in that gathering thou didst become enkindled like unto a candle and thou art realizing the value of the spiritual fraternity." Announce my greeting to Mr. Randall and say: "The love of the Word of God is the magnet of heavenly glory and beauty. I hope that thou mayst become a center for the emanation of the lights of love and a dawning-place of the sign of unity." Say to Miss Juliet Thompson: "Praise be to God, that in the midst of the whirling tempest of test thou didst remain firm and steadfast and like unto the pure gold in the fire of ordeal thou didst unveil thy happy and confident face." Give thou the glad tidings of the spiritual confirmation to Miss Martha Root and say: "During thy travel around the world the assistance of the Holy Spirit followed thee at all times; for this reason thou didst become able to fulfill its duties." Mr. Wilhelm, my son of the Kingdom, verily, verily, I say unto you, on his head he has a crown of everlasting glory and dignity with the utmost beauty and perfection. Convey on my behalf longing greetings to M. Eshte'al Ebn Kalanter. I am pleased with his lectures delivered with eloquence and fluency. Day and night I remember Mr. Hall and do not forget the days that I

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

ALLAH'O'ABHA!

The unparalleled demonstration upon the day the armistice terms of the world war were signed, is proof positive that mankind loves peace.

History will record that day, that hour.

According to the old reckoning it was the eleventh month, the eleventh day, the eleventh hour. [See reproduction of newspaper of that date on opposite page.] And the "eleventh hour," according to tradition, is a fateful hour.

To the Bahais, however, this event had happy significance, for within the same twenty-four hours—November twelfth—was celebrated the one-hundred-and-first anniversary of the Birthday of BAHAI'O'LLAH, the "Prince of Peace."

This issue of the STAR OF THE WEST was ready for press when a telegram from Mrs. Goodall, of San Francisco, informed us that the first Tablet revealed for the Bahais of America since the opening of the doors of communication, was on its way, and requested us to hold the issue for its arrival. We were glad to do this knowing all the friends were anxiously awaiting some word from Abdul-Baha.

The following editorial by Mr. Albert Vail voices the spirit of the hour. Many of the Bahais may not know that he has given up his position as minister of a church in Urbana, Ill., and moved to Chicago, where he is devoting his time to the Cause, teaching and traveling.

The Editors.

Editorial—The Dawn of the Most Great Peace.

BY ALBERT VAIL

THE greatest war in recorded human history is ending. The greatest war in all the ages is just beginning. The war with guns and shells is almost over. The universal war against the forces of darkness, of greed, of prejudice, of materialism has just begun. It is the war for universal brotherhood and justice, the League of Nations and the Most Great Peace. Now is the time, to use the words of President Wilson, for humanity to "rise to the clear heights of (God's) own justice and mercy."

We, the friends of God in many lands, if our minds be fortified with the universal principles of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and Abdul-Baha, if our "feet be firm," our "spirits" rejoiced, our "secret thoughts pure," our breasts aglow with love may become the angels of the world's recon-dramatic engagement. He commands us. Rush forward! Rush forward!" "Our swords are the words of love and life. Our armaments the invisible armaments of heaven." "Show the force of your arms. Ye shall scatter the forces of ignorance." "Your war is the cause of the illumination of all mankind." "Your efforts should be crowned with the diadem of eternal peace and brotherhood."

The first step in this sublime camstruction. "Now is the time; now is the accepted time" to arise "with superhuman energy" and declare the glad tidings of the coming of the Prince of Peace and the shining pathway to the universal City of God among the nations.

Abdul-Baha is calling to us, "O my soldiers, my beloved soldiers! Forward, forward! Have no fear of defeat; do not have failing hearts. Our supreme commander is BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. From the heights of glory he is directing this paign is to pray for illumination, radiance, conquering glory of mind and fire of love in the crystal of our hearts so that we may become the real soldiers of the most great reconstruction. In prayer if we concentrate our minds upon the Glory of God shining in the Center of the Covenant and if we make our minds like lenses pure of self, we can then turn the focusing power of our purified spirit upon the discord of the world. If we focus the holy rays of His love shining through our purified hearts upon the world's selfishness and materialism, who can compute the result! It may change many, many hearts from stone into love for the power of the Holy Spirit, shining through dedicated disciples, is irresistible.

Now is the time to pray that at the approaching peace conference the delegates of the many nations may be inspired with God's own love and wisdom and build quickly the foundation of His Most Great Peace. How beautiful if all the friends of God in all lands and races could pray morning and evening for the divine illumination of this, the greatest peace conference in human history, pray that they may establish in love and justice the foundation of international confederation and abiding peace.

The second step in the divine campaign is for each one who would be a soldier of God in this, the most crucial moment of history, to go forth, if the Holy Spirit confirms him, and proclaim with resonant voice, glowing enthusiasm, luminous logic and blazing heart the most great glad tidings of the coming of the Lord to restore His broken nations and wipe away every tear from their eyes.

Two years ago the divine Master sent five Tablets to America calling his "beloved soldiers" to rise and deliver the message of the oneness of humanity, the new spiritual democracy, the Kingdom of God among the nations in every state, province, city and village of this vast American continent. Go yourself, he said, if you can, into the deserts of materialism and agnosticism and plant the seeds of eternal life. If you cannot go send or help send someone in your stead.

Let every one join the great campaign for the building of the city that hath the foundations whose master-builders and architects are God and His holy Manifestations. "Now is the time; now is the accepted time" to fulfill the great teaching Tablets and illumine the entire continent with the glory of the Prince of Peace, of that city that "hath no need of the light of the sun neither of the moon to shine upon it, for the Glory of God did lighten it."

The spiritual attitude of the friends of God in the next few years will save the world. "I charge you all that each one of you," says Abdul-Baha, "concentrate all the thoughts of your heart upon love and unity. When a thought of war comes oppose it by a stronger thought of peace. A thought of hatred must be destroyed by a more powerful thought of love. . . . So may all the savagery of man disappear by the mercy of God working through the pure in heart and the sincere of soul.

"Do not think the peace of the world an ideal impossible to attain. Nothing is impossible to the divine benevolence of God.

"If you desire with all your heart friendship with every race on earth, your thought, spiritual and positive, will spread; it will become the desire of others growing stronger and stronger until it reaches the minds of all men.

"Do not despair; work steadily. Sincerity and love will conquer hate. How many seemingly impossible events are coming to pass in these days! Set your faces steadily towards the Light of the world. Show love to all. 'Love is the breath of the Holy Spirit in the heart of man.' Take courage. God never forsakes His children who strive and work and pray. Let your hearts be filled with the strenuous desire that tranquility and harmony may encircle all this warring world. So will success crown your efforts. And with the universal brotherhood will come the Kingdom of God in peace and good-will."

May we, God's little children be pure and sanctified and devoted enough to sacrifice ourselves for the Most Great Peace until it covers the world as the waters cover the sea.

Tablets calling Bahais of the United States and Canada to diffuse the fragrances of the Kingdom throughout America

RECEIVED TWO YEARS AGO

[Reprinted from STAR OF THE WEST, No. 10, Vol. VII]

TABLET TO THE NORTHEASTERN STATES

To the friends and maid-servants of God in the Northeastern States:

Upon them be greeting and praise!

O ye heavenly heralds!

These are the days of Naurooz. I am always thinking of those kind friends! I beg for each and all of you confirmations and assistance from the threshold of Oneness, so that those gatherings may become ignited like unto candles in the Republics of America, enkindling the light of the love of God in the hearts; thus the rays of the heavenly teachings may begem and brighten the states of America like the infinitude of immensity with the stars of the most great guidance.

The northeastern states on the shores of the Atlantic—Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York—in some of these states believers are found, but in some of the cities of these states up to this date people are not yet illumined with the lights of the Kingdom and are not aware of the heavenly teachings; therefore, whenever it is possible for each one of you, hasten ye to those cities and shine forth like unto the stars with the light of the Most Great Guidance. God says in the glorious Koran: "The soil was black and dried. Then we caused the rain to descend upon it and immediately it became green, verdant, and every kind of plant sprouted up luxuriantly." In other words, he says the earth and the soil is black, but when the spring showers descend upon it that black soil is quickened, and variegated flowers are pushed forth. This means the souls of humanity belonging to the world of nature are black like unto the soil. But when the heavenly outpourings descend and the radiant effulgences appear, the hearts are resuscitated, are liberated from the darkness of nature and the flowers of divine mysteries grow and become luxuriant. Consequently man must become the cause of the illumination of the world of humanity and propagate the holy teachings revealed in the sacred books through divine inspiration. It is stated in the blessed Gospel: "Travel ye toward the East and toward the West and enlighten the people with the light of the Most Great Guidance, so that they may take a portion and share of the eternal life." Praise be to God, that the northeastern states are in the utmost capacity. Because the ground is rich, the rain of the divine outpouring is descending. Now you must become heavenly farmers and scatter pure seeds in the prepared soil. The harvest of every other seed is limited, but the bounty and the blessing of the seed of the divine teachings are unlimited. Throughout the coming centuries and cycles many harvests will be gathered. Consider the work of former generations. During the lifetime of His Holiness Christ the believing, firm souls were few and numbered, but the heavenly benedictions descended so plentifully that in a number of years countless souls entered under the shade of the Gospel. God has said in the Koran: "One grain will bring forth seven sheaves, and every sheaf shall contain one hundred grains." In other words, one grain will become seven hundred; and if God so wills he will double these also. It has often happened that one blessed soul has become the cause of the guidance of a nation. Now we must not look at our own ability and capacity; nay, rather we must behold the favors and bounties of God in these days, who has made the drop to find the expression of the sea and the atom the importance of the sun.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

TABLET TO THE WESTERN STATES

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Western States:

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

Day and night I have no other occupation than the remembrance of the friends, praying from the depth of my heart in their behalf, begging for them confirmation from the Kingdom of God and supplicating the direct effect of the breaths of the Holy Spirit. I am hopeful from the favors of His Highness the Lord of bestowals, that the friends of God during such a time may become the secret cause of the illumination of the hearts of humanity, breathing the breath of life upon the spirits—whose praiseworthy results may become conducive to the glory and exaltation of humankind throughout all eternity. Although in some of the western states, like California, Oregon, Washington and Colorado, the fragrances of holiness are diffused, numerous souls have taken a share and a portion from the Fountain of Everlasting Life, they have obtained heavenly benediction, have drunk an overflowing cup from the wine of the love of God and have hearkened to the melody of the Supreme Concourse—yet in the states of New Mexico, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Arizona and Nevada, the lamp of the love of God is not ignited in a befitting and behooving manner, and the call of the Kingdom of God has not been raised. Now, if it is possible, show ye an effort in this direction. Either travel yourselves, personally, throughout those states or choose others and send them, so that they may teach the souls. For the present those states are like unto dead bodies; they must breathe into them the breath of life and bestow upon them a heavenly spirit. Like unto the stars they must shine in that horizon and thus the rays of the Sun of Reality may also illumine those states.

God says in the great Koran: "Verily, God is the helper of those who have believed. He will lead them from darkness into light." This means: God loves the believers, consequently he will deliver them from darkness and bring them into the world of light.

It is also recorded in the blessed Gospel: "Travel ye throughout the world and call ye the people to the Kingdom of God." Now this is the time that you may arise and perform this most great service and become the cause of the guidance of innumerable souls. Thus through this superhuman service the rays of peace and conciliation may illumine and enlighten all the regions and the world of humanity may find peace and composure.

During my stay in America I cried out in every meeting and summoned the people to the propagation of the ideals of universal peace. I said plainly that the continent of Europe had become like unto an arsenal and its conflagration was dependent upon one spark, and that in the coming years, or within two years, all that which is recorded in the Revelation of John and the Book of Daniel

Teach the Cause of God—The Most Important Work

A compilation of the Words of Abdul-Baha from Talks and Tablets—By Albert Vail

TEACH THE CAUSE OF GOD

Now the believers must engage their time in teaching the Cause of God and in the meetings no other discussion should be carried on save the Cause of God. The members of the Bahai assemblies must be infinitely kind towards each other and all their deliberations must be concerning the Kingdom of Abha. Promiscuous discussions must be discountenanced, for these things will become conducive to the lukewarmness and apathy of those who are present. The candles of all the meetings must be the mention of God, the propagation of the Cause of God, the exposition of divine proofs and the elucidation of the principles of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH. When this condition is obtained, the meeting will become heavenly, celestial, godlike and the means of the guidance of the erring ones. It will yield most great results. . . .

(From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 4, 1914.)

THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK

All the meetings must be for the teaching of the Cause and spreading the message and suffering the souls to enter the Kingdom of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH. Look at me. All my thoughts are centered around the proclamation of the Kingdom. I have a lamp in my hands, searching throughout lands and seas to find souls who can become the heralds of the Cause, who can raise their voices in meetings and assemblages, who can become the defenders of the Cause. Day and night I am engaged in this work. Any other deliberation in the meetings is futile and fruitless. Convey the message. Attract the hearts. Sow the seeds! Teach the Cause to those who do not know. . . . When the most important work is before our sight we must let go the important one.

If a meeting or spiritual assembly has any other occupation, the time is spent in futility. All the deliberations, all the consultations, all the talks and addresses must revolve around one focal centre and that is: Teach the Cause! Teach! Teach! Convey the message! Awake souls! Now is the time of laying the foundation. Now must we gather brick, stone, iron, wood and other building materials. Now is not the time of decoration. We must strive day and night and think and work. What can I say that may be effective. What can I do that may bring results? What can I write that may bring forth fruits? Nothing else will be useful today. The interests of such a glorious cause will not advance without our undivided attention. While we are carrying that load, we cannot carry any other load.

(From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 15 and 16, 1913.)

THE WORLD ILLUMINATING SUN —THE PROMOTION OF THE CAUSE OF GOD

To a Persian believer in Teheran he (Abdul-Baha) says: "Thou has longed for the power of teaching the Religion of God. This desire is the ultimate hope of the sincere ones. Unquestionably, a wise man strives to attain to the highest and greatest object in the world of creation. Today the world-illuminating Sun is the matter of the promotion of the Cause of God. Whosoever is assisted in this, he is favored at the Threshold of the Almighty. Therefore, do thou not behold thine own capacity and ability; nay, rather, during the hour that thou art teaching the Cause of God, turn thy face toward the Kingdom of Abha, beg for Divine Confirmations and with the utmost confidence and power open thy tongue and speak out boldly all that with which thy heart is inspired. . . . ”

(From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, August 16, 1914.)

CRY OUT THE MESSAGE OF THE KINGDOM

Today we are standing before the illimitable sea; let us not deprive ourselves. Let us heroically dive into the depths of the great ocean and gather the scintillating pearls of wisdom. Thou must teach the Cause and spread the Message. When thou art asked to talk at a meeting, turn thy heart to BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, begging confirmation from Him, and then speak; He will inspire you. Cry out the message of the Kingdom; do not be silent; be not quiet; teach the Cause.

(From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 19, 1913. Words of Abdul-Baha to a man who had become a Bahai since meeting him the previous year.)

THE BRILLIANT STARS OF THE EARLY DAWN

Pointing to the planet Venus which was shining in the horizon like a blazing torch, Abdul-Baha said, “Do you see that brilliant star?” “Yes, Master,” I answered, “it is most luminous.” He added, “I declare, by BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, that it is my fondest hope to see each one of the believers of God shining like unto this star. I wish for them this illumination. I desire for them this luminosity, so that they may rejoice the hearts and spiritualize the souls; but, alas! how often they let the cloud of self and ego becloud the horizon and thus prevent the stars of their divine verities from shining.” Looking intently at the star, he continued: “This star shines clearest at the early dawn; so, at this dawn of the Sun of Reality, the stars of our lives must glisten and gleam in the darkness of the world.”

(From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 8, 1918.)

BECOME LAMPS OF THE TRUE ONE

As to human souls, unless they acquire the lights they are unable to shine upon other individuals. But when a man arises to expound the arguments of God and invite people to enter into the Religion of God, and when he utters those arguments and advances consummate proofs concerning the appearance of the Great Kingdom—then intense love shall become manifest in his heart. This love causes the development of his spirit by the Grace of the Beneficent Lord. Consider the bearer who brought the garment of Joseph to Jacob; that messenger was the bearer of the garment, but he could not inhale the fragrance of Joseph. But Jacob, whose nostrils were pure, inhaled the fragrances of Joseph from a long distance.

It may be that a man can guide a blessed soul unto the Kingdom of God while he himself is deprived thereof. Consider Judas Iscariot; he invited others while he himself was deprived of the Kingdom of God. But in spiritual training it is impossible for an imperfect one to perfect another, or train another, unless he first conquer his own self and desire, and become purified from selfish iniquities in order to become capable of Merciful Splendors. When he acquires divine Bounties, then he is able to train another. An ignorant man has no power to teach a seeker, and a poor man has no power to succor a needy one. Consequently be thou assured that verily man needs to wish for Eternal Life and then confer the same upon another. The human perfections and Merciful Bounties are that Peace which was promised and spoken of by Christ.

Then know thou verily that the people of Baha must needs be distinguished from others in all respects, until they become the lamps of the True One among the creatures, and the stars of Guidance shining from the Supreme Concourse.

THE GREATEST OF THE GIFTS OF GOD

Through Mr. Thornton Chase, Thahbet—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLAH!—to the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Cecilia Harrison.

O thou maid-servant of the Kingdom!

Thy service in the Kingdom of God is known and thy troubles in serving the Cause of God are evident and apparent.

This is the greatest of the gifts of God, that in such a blessed age and holy century thou shouldst raise thy voice in the Kingdom of God and invite people to the holy mountain of the Lord of Hosts.

Soon thou shalt see that on account of the bounties of the Kingdom thou didst become the cause of guidance to others, and by the grace of the Lord Almighty thou hast surpassed the queens of the world. Thou shalt see eternal honor; thou shalt find everlasting life; thou shalt see the world illumined with the light of great guidance.

O dear maid-servant of God!

All the people, day and night, are working and striving and have no leisure at all; but in the end they will be disappointed and deprived; the effect of their efforts will be obliterated, and with the utmost loss and chagrin they depart from this world and do not receive any value for this life. But, on the other hand, the sons and daughters of the Kingdom will ultimately become burning lights and will be as shining stars in the horizon of eternal honor. Therefore, thank thou God that thou didst arrive at this station.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

WITH A RESOUNDING VOICE TEACH THE CAUSE

O thou herald of the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter was received. A thousand times, Bravo! for thy high magnanimity and exalted aim! Trusting in God and while turning thy face toward the Kingdom of Abha, unfurl thou the Divine Flag in Tokyo and cry at the top of thy voice: "O ye people! The Sun of Reality hath appeared and flooded all the regions with its glorious Lights; it has upraised the Standard of the Oneness of the World of Humanity and summoned all mankind to the refulgent Truth. The cloud of mercy is pouring; the zephyr of providence is wafting and the world of humanity is being stirred and moved. The Divine Spirit is conferring Eternal Life, the heavenly lights are illumining the hearts; the table of the sustenance of the Kingdom is spread and is adorned with all kinds of foods and victuals! O ye concourse of men! Awake! Awake! Become mindful! Become mindful! Open ye the seeing eyes, unstop the hearing ears. Hark! Hark! The soft notes of heavenly music are streaming down, ravishing the ears of the people of spiritual discernment. Ere long this transcendent Light will wholly enlighten the East and the West."

In short, with a resounding voice, with a miraculous power and with the magnetism of the Love of God, teach them the Cause of God, and rest thou assured that the Holy Spirit shall confirm thee. . . .

spent with him. This personage has rendered many services to this Cause. The value of his services must be appreciated. Mrs. True is one of the first maid-servants of the Kingdom of God. She is well known to and praised by the believers and the maid-servants of the Merciful both in the East and in the West. She has displayed and is displaying the utmost effort in the construction of the Mashrekol-azkar. I am most pleased with her. And I beg of God that she may become assisted to bring this service to an end. Likewise convey on my behalf to each and all the believers who have gathered together in Green Acre my love, kindness and spiritual greeting.

As to thee, O thou herald of the Kingdom! Rest thou assured. The favors and bounties of the Merciful One are all-encircling and likewise my love for thee is perfect. Every night from the divine Threshold I beg for thee confirmation and assistance, so that on the continent of America thou mayst become a brilliant proof, a shining light and a beaming star. Praise be to God, that in the publication and circulation of the STAR OF THE WEST thou art displaying the utmost effort.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TABLET TO MR. WILHELM

Haifa, Syria,
December 27, 1916.

Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm.

O thou my heavenly son!

Several letters and cards have been received from thee, and each one indicated thy firmness and steadfastness in the love of God. Praise be to God, that that illumined youth is like unto an enkindled candle and hast dedicated thy life in the service of the Kingdom of God, and day by day thou art adding to thy illumination and spirituality.

Thou hast written about the conferences of Green Acre. I became very happy that a number of sweet-singing birds were engaged by day and by night in the praise of His Highness the Almighty. Should, in the coming year also, a great conference be held in that meadow, a heavenly festival be organized with the utmost love and affinity and the jubilee of the oneness of the world of humanity be arranged, there is no doubt that each soul will become like a candle in that gathering and such joy and happiness will be unveiled that the continent of America will be moved and stirred. Day and night, with the utmost supplication and entreaty, I beseech and implore at the Threshold of divine servitude, and beg for those friends confirmation and assistance and read in your behalf this blessed verse of the Koran. He says: "The believing souls who are in the utmost sincerity and steadfastness will undoubtedly become confirmed and assisted." Now, praise be to God, that you are the manifestors of divine aid and are being helped to render services to the Kingdom of the Merciful.

You have given the glad news that the foundation of the Mashrekol-azkar will be laid next year. This is also my hope that this Temple may become fully constructed and the holy verse of the Koran, "We have given thee a great victory," become realized. For the building of this Temple is a most great triumph.

Convey to all the friends longing greetings. Praise be to God, we are all safe and guarded under the protection and preservation of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

TABLET TO MRS. TRUE

(Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha, and signed by him, for Mrs. Corinne True. Sent from Haifa, Syria, through Mizra Ahmad Sohrab, January 9, 1917, but returned to him owing to suspension of mail service in Syria during the war, and, with the opening of the mail service, was received in Chicago November 22, 1918.)

O thou beloved spiritual daughter!

Thy postal card of August 26, 1916, was received and its contents indicated that the believers of Detroit, Grand Rapids, Muskegon, Chicago and Fruitport have gathered together and have spent their time with perfect love, unity and joy.

In whatever place the believers of God hold a meeting, peruse the heavenly teachings and associate with each other with the utmost amity, affection and harmony, there is no doubt whatsoever that the Holy Spirit will become the Candle of that gathering; and the blessed souls participating in that meeting will feel spontaneously the confirmations of the Holy Spirit. Therefore, I became most happy over this news contained in thy card. With infinite kindness convey my longing and greeting to the believers of all these cities. I desire for all of them life eternal; beg for them heavenly outpourings, and seek for each the effulgences of the Sun of Reality.

I hope that in this year [1917] the solid and firm foundation of Mashrekol-azkar be laid. In reality, thou art displaying great effort. Praise be to God, that through thy endeavor and magnanimity useful results were produced. I hope the believers of God will become able to pay the $200,000.00 which they have pledged themselves to contribute. God says in the Koran: "Those who believe in God and in the Day of Judgment will become able to build the mosques of God." In other words: Divine Temples are built by holy souls who believe in God and in the Kingdom of God. I hope that the American believers may soon become able to accomplish this work.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TABLET TO MR. HANNEN

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Haifa, Syria, December 26, 1916. Received at Washington, D. C., November 20, 1918.)

To Joseph H. Hannen, Washington, D. C.

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Truly I say, thou art the servant of the Kingdom of God! And thou hast no other intention and aim save the promotion of the Word of God and the diffusion of the fragrances of God. The call of approbation and "Well done" descends from the Unknown World and the voice of "Happy is thy condition! Happy is thy condition!" reaches the ears of the spiritual ones without cessation. From the time that I have hastened from America to the East thou hast spent thy time in the service of the Cause. I bear testimony to this. Up to this time the divine confirmations and spiritual aids have descended upon thee uninterruptedly, and in the future you will be encircled with the same, more than before. Rest thou assured. Although we are as the weak ants, yet praise be to God, the "Great Power" is our helper; therefore with perfect strength arise thou in the service of the Cause and convey on my behalf respectful greeting to all the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

I hope that in the next year the foundations of the Mashrekol-azkar be laid and in the United States the dome of this heavenly building will be so raised that it may be viewed from long distances and the melody of thanksgiving and glorification ascend to the Kingdom of Glory. In the past the Eastern believers have sent a contribution, and at the present time international communication is at a standstill and Persia is ruined; otherwise they would have made still another effort and collected another contribution. I hope that the Mashrekol-azkar in Chicago may become the second Temple of God in the world of humanity, and, like the Mashrekol-azkar of Ishkabad, it may become the means of the promotion of the Cause.

Convey on my behalf infinite kindness to thy respected wife; likewise the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

would become fulfilled and come to pass. This matter, in all probability, was published in the San Francisco Bulletin, October 12, 1912. You may refer to it, so that the truth may become clear and manifest; thus ye may fully realize that this is the time for the diffusion of the fragrances.

The magnanimity of man must be heavenly—or, in other words, it must be assisted by the divine confirmation, so that he may become the cause of the illumination of the world of humanity.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

TABLET TO THE SOUTHERN STATES

To the friends and maid-servants of God in the Southern States:

Upon them be greeting and praise!

O ye heralds of the Kingdom of God!

A few days ago an epistle was written to those divine believers, but because these days are the days of Naurooz, therefore you have come to my mind, and I am sending you this greeting for this glorious feast. All the days are blessed, but this feast is the national fete of Persia. The Persians have been holding it for several thousand years past. In reality, every day which man passes in the mention of God and in the service of the Kingdom of God, that day is his feast. Praise be to God, that you are occupied in the service of the Kingdom by day and by night. Therefore all your days are feast days. There is no doubt that the assistance and bestowal of God shall descend upon you. In the southern states of the United States the friends are few, that is, in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. Consequently you must either go yourselves or send a number of blessed souls to those states, so that they may guide the people to the Kingdom of Heaven. His Holiness Mohammed, the messenger of God, says: "If a person becomes the cause of the illumination of one soul it is better than a boundless treasury." Again he says: "O Ali, if God guide, through thee, one soul it is better for thee than all the riches." Again he says: "Direct us to the straight path," that is show us the direct road. In brief, I hope you will display in this respect the greatest effort and magnanimity. It is assured that you will become assisted and confirmed.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, at Haifa, Syria, April 26, 1916. Original addressed to Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, Washington, D. C.)

TABLET TO THE CENTRAL STATES

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Central States:

O ye heavenly souls, O ye spiritual assemblies, O ye lordly meetings!

For some time past correspondence has been delayed, and this has been on account of the difficulty of mailing and receiving letters. But because at present a number of facilities are obtainable, therefore, I am engaged in writing you this brief epistle so that my heart and soul may obtain joy and fragrance through the remembrance of the friends. Continually this wanderer supplicates and entreats at the Threshold of His Holiness the One and begs assistance, bounty and heavenly confirmations in behalf of the believers. You are always in my thought. You are not nor shall you ever be forgotten. I hope by the favors of His Holiness the Almighty that day by day you may add to your faith assurance, firmness and steadfastness, and become instruments for the promotion of the holy fragrances. In the great book, the divine Koran, God, addressing His messenger, His Holiness Mohammed (Upon him be greeting and praise!) says: "Verily, thou dost guide the people to the straight path." In other words: Thou dost show mankind the direct road. Consider how guidance is a matter of infinite importance; for it points to the loftiness of the station of His Holiness the Messenger.

Although in the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan and Minnesota (Praise be to God!) believers are found, are associating with each other in the utmost firmness and steadfastness—day and night they have no other intention save the diffusion of the fragrances of God, they have no other hope except the promotion of the heavenly teachings, like the candles they are burning with the light of the love of God, and like thankful birds are singing songs, spirit-imparting, joy-creating, in the rose-garden of the knowledge of God—yet in the states of Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas few of the believers exist. So far, the summons of the Kingdom of God and the proclamation of the oneness of the world of humanity has not been made in these states systematically and enthusiastically. Blessed souls and detached teachers have not traveled through these parts repeatedly; therefore these states are still in a state of heedlessness. Through the effort of the friends of God souls must be likewise enkindled, in these states, with the fire of the love of God and attracted to the Kingdom of God, so that section may also become illumined and the soul-imparting breeze of the rose-garden of the Kingdom may perfume the nostrils of the inhabitants. Therefore, if it is possible, send to those parts teachers who are severed from all else save God, sanctified and pure. If these teachers be in the utmost state of attraction, in a short time great results will be forthcoming. The sons and daughters of the kingdom are like unto the real farmers. Through whichever state or country they pass they display self-sacrifice and sow divine seeds. From that seed harvests are produced. On this subject it is revealed in the glorious Gospel: "When the pure seeds are scattered in the good ground heavenly blessing and benediction is obtained." I hope that you may become assisted and confirmed, and never lose courage in the promotion of the divine teachings. Day by day may you add to your effort, exertion and magnanimity.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, at Haifa, Syria, April 26, 1916. Original addressed to Dr. Zia Bagdadi, Chicago, Ill., care J. H. Hannen, Washington, D. C. Received August 19, 1916.)

TABLET TO THE DOMINION OF CANADA

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada:

O ye daughters and sons of the Kingdom!

Although in most of the states and cities of the United States (Praise be to God!) the fragrances of God are diffused and innumerable souls are turning their faces and advancing toward the Kingdom of God, yet in some of the states the flag of oneness is not upraised as it ought to be and must be, and the mysteries of the Holy Books, like the Bible, the Gospel and the Koran, are not promulgated. Through the unanimous effort of the friends, the banner of oneness must be unfurled in those states, and the divine teachings be promoted, so that they may also receive a portion and a share of the heavenly bestowals and the Most Great Guidance. Likewise in the provinces of Canada, such as Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Ungava, Keewatin, Mackenzie, Yukon and the Franklin Islands in the Arctic Circle—the believers of God must become self-sacrificing and like unto the candles of guidance become ignited in the provinces of Canada. Should they show forth such a magnanimity, it is assured that they will obtain universal divine confirmations, the heavenly cohorts will reinforce them uninterruptedly, and a most great victory will be obtained. Perchance, God willing, the call of the Kingdom may reach the ears of the Eskimos, the inhabitants of the Islands of Franklin in the north of Canada, as well as Greenland. Should in Greenland the fire of the love of God be ignited, all the ices of that continent will be melted and its frigid climate will be changed into a temperate climate—that is, if the hearts will obtain the heat of the love of God, that country and continent will become a divine garden and a lordly orchard, and the souls, like unto the fruitful trees, will obtain the utmost freshness and delicacy. Magnanimity is necessary, heavenly exertion is called for. Should you display an effort, so that the fragrances of God be diffused amongst the Eskimos, its effect will be very great and far-reaching. God says in the great Koran: "A day will come wherein the lights of unity will enlighten all the world. The earth will be irradiated with the light of its Lord." In other words: "The earth will become illumined with the light of God. That light is the light of unity. . . . There is no God but God." The continent and the islands of Eskimos also are parts of this earth. They must similarly receive a portion of the bestowals of the Most Great Guidance.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

FIRST TABLET REVEALED FOR BAHAIS OF PERSIA SINCE OPENING OF DOORS OF HOLY LAND

To his honor Agha Sayad Nasrollah Bakeroff.—Upon him be BAHA'O'LLAH-EL-ABHA!

HE IS GOD!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

It was a long time since the thread of correspondence had been entirely broken, and the hearts were affected with sorrow and agitation. Now, praise be to God, that in these days, through divine favor, the black clouds are dispersed and the light of composure and tranquillity has enlightened this region; the tyrannous government is done away with and followed by a just administration. All the people are delivered from the most great hardship and the most difficult affliction. In this huge tempest and violent revolution, in which all nations of the world were caught and were involved in dire calamity, cities were destroyed, people were slaughtered, properties were pillaged and taken as booty, the cries and lamentations of the helpless ones were raised from every prominent spot and the tears falling from the eyes of the orphans like a flowing torrent in all the low countries—under all these conditions, praise be to God, that through the favor and bounty of the Blessed Perfection and because the believers of God have lived in accord with the lordly teachings, they have been protected and guarded. Not even a single particle of dust settled on the face of a believer. Verily, this is a most great miracle which cannot be denied except by every stiff-necked transgressor! It has meanwhile become evident and manifest that the holy teachings of His Highness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH are the cause of the comfort and illumination of the world of humanity. In the blessed Tablets * (of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH) the justice and the administrative sagacity of the Imperial government of England have been repeatedly dwelt upon, and now it has become clear that, in reality, the inhabitants of this country, after untold sufferings, have attained to composure and security.

This is the first letter that I write to Persia. God willing, I shall write others afterwards. Convey with the utmost longing to each and all the believers of God the wonderful Abha greeting, and give us the glad-tidings of the health and safety of all the believers. Although the tempest and the hurricane were intense and violent, yet, praise be to God, the Ark of Salvation reached the heaven of security, while protected and guarded. Announce greeting and salutation on behalf of Abdul-Baha with the utmost joy and fragrance "to the hands of the Cause of God," his honor Ameen and likewise the rulers of firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

LETTER ACCOMPANYING ABOVE TABLET

Tomb of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, Bahje,
Acca, October 16, 1918.

Through the STAR OF THE WEST to the believers and the maid-servants of the Merciful in America.

My dear brothers and sisters in the Cause of God!

The spiritual life of Bahje is not only contemplative but earnest and active, full of light and beauty, redolent with the fragrance of the Kingdom of Abha and adorned with the roses of high ideals and the violets of noble emotions. Since September 23d, I have written you a number of letters, reporting to you the good news of the health of Abdul-Baha, and giving some sidelights on recent events, so pregnant with far-reaching results for the future of this country. Now I would like to share with you the translation of the first Tablet revealed this afternoon for one of the believers in Teheran, Persia. I hope that ere long America will also receive such divine gifts after a long period of deprivation

Having now accomplished my pleasant duty I add to the above my heartfelt prayers for the wellbeing of all. Your sincere brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

TABLET TO JUANITA STORCH

(Revealed at Haifa, Syria, December 25, 1916, mailed but sent back from Constantinople. Retailed when doors of Holy Land were opened recently and received in California, November 25, 1918.)

To Juanita Storch.

O thou light of the love of God!

Thy detailed letter and also the second one received. Both of them reflected the luminous susceptibilities of a universal consciousness, indicating that (Praise be to God!) that beloved daughter has become like unto a clear mirror, upon the translucent surface of which is focussed the beaming rays of the shining Orb of this century and her heart and spirit is so set aglow with the fire of the love of God, that involuntarily and passionately she is raising the call of the Kingdom of God.

The darkness of the world of nature has encompassed the kingdom of creation. In these tenebrous darkneses tremendous calamities are hidden for mankind, except those souls who have drawn light from the Sun of Reality. These sanctified souls like unto the birds are always soaring, and in the rose-garden of Truth, ever singing songs and melodies. Praise be to God, thou hast a listening ear and didst hear the spiritual lay of the Covenant from a hundred-thousand miles! What a stirring anthem is raised from the Supreme Course!—for it imparts joy and exhilaration to the hearts. The attracted hearts are like unto harps and lyres from which continually issues forth a rich stream of harmonious colors, charming notes and divine airs!

O thou beloved daughter! Praise be to God, that thou hast capacity and worthiness, in order to become the maid-servant of the Kingdom of God and in the heavenly festival and spiritual society thou mayst decorate the meeting with the beauties of song and melody. In the world of humanity the "Commonwealth of the Kingdom" is being organized and from this "collective Center," merciful emotions and light-beaming rays are being diffused to all directions. The love of God is the attractive force of this "Ultra-Cosmic-Center."

O thou beloved daughter! At the time when the Light of Reality shone forth from the Mosaic dawning-place, the Mount of Sinai became luminous; but the hearts of the heedless ones remained in intense darkness and they reproached the blessed believing souls. Afterwards they perceived that it was themselves that merited contempt and censure. Likewise, when the Word of God, His Holiness Christ and His apostles upraised the flag of guidance and the Light of Reality dawned, all the people abused and scorned them, as the texts of the Gospel bear testimony to this fact; nay rather, they spat on the holy countenance of Jesus Christ and ridiculed, insulted and vilified Him. Later on, it became manifest that He was the Light of Truth and was bestowing the spirit of eternal life. When in the Arabian peninsula the light of prophethood shone forth and His Holiness Mohammed (Upon Him be peace) engaged His time in the guidance of those barbarous people, everyone reviled and calumniated Him. Their answer was given by divine revelation in the following Koranic verse:

"Woe unto the servants! No prophet cometh unto them, but they laugh him to scorn!" Afterwards it became evi-

ALLAH'O'ABHA!

Some years ago, Abdul-Baha gave the following principles or “points” in a Tablet to Mr. C. Mason Remey, dated March 5, 1914. They speak for themselves—

“In those public meetings, universal and not particular principles must be discussed; those principles which I have expounded in the public meetings. Only that identical program must be followed:

- (1) The oneness of the world of humanity.
- (2) The investigation of Reality.
- (3) The essential unity of the Religions of God.
- (4) The abandonment of religious, denominational, racial and patriotic prejudices.
- (5) The conformity of divine Religion with reason and science.
- (6) The Religion of God must become the cause of amity and love amongst mankind, otherwise it is better to forswear it.
- (7) Equality between man and woman.
- (8) The essential necessity of the confirmation of the Holy Spirit.
- (9) The demonstration of divinity and inspiration.
- (10) The power of the (spiritual) influence of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH.
- (11) The underlying unity of all existing faiths.
- (12) The dawn of the Sun of Reality from the horizon of Persia.
- (13) Universal peace.
- (14) Universal language: The education of the children of all the Religions, under a universal standard of instruction and a common curriculum.

“Questions of this nature must be propounded in the public meetings.”

Consequently, do thou not wonder at the ridicule of the ignorant ones and the blame of the witless. Those who are ignorant have always cast reproach upon those who are wise.

Convey longing greeting to all the believers of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TABLET TO MRS. PAGE

(A letter dated Haifa, Syria, Jan. 26, 1917, enclosing the following Tablet, was received recently from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, through Joseph H. Hannen.)

Mrs. Arthur Page.

O thou respected maid-servant of God!

Thou hast written that since two years the fragrance of the rose-garden of BAHÁ'U'LLAH is being diffused in Detroit, Michigan, and two ministers have invited Bahai speakers to their churches, so that they may speak about divine principles and cause the irradiation of the light of guidance. Praise be to God, the Bahais are characterized with such qualities and attributes that they are the object of the praise and commendation of all nations; they are the means of the proclamation of the oneness of the world of humanity and the promotion of the ideals of universal peace.

Today, the most great foundation of real civilization is this, and this is conducive to the tranquillity of the world of creation.

In this glorious century, this basis is most firm and strong. But there must needs be the power of the Kingdom in order to establish these principles. Because the believers of God are confirmed with the heavenly power, I hope they may enkindle the candles of the oneness of the world of humanity in all the societies of mankind, the anthem of universal peace may reach the East and the West, religion may become the means of good-fellowship amongst the people, justice and equity may unfurl their flags on the apex of the world, religion and science may correspond with each other and be conducive to the promotion of peace and salvation, ignorant prejudices may be dispelled and the lights of Reality be diffused.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TABLET TO ALBERTA HALL

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 19, 1916, and mailed, but returned from Constantinople. Remained upon the opening of the doors of the Holy Land and received recently in America.)

To Miss Alberta Hall.

O thou maid-servant of God!

Although in body thou art weak and ill and, like unto Job, the object of many trials, yet (Praise be to God!) thou art strong in spirit and in the utmost health and joyousness. The peculiarities of this physical world are illness and diseases, and the essences of the universe of God are health and vigor. The body is like unto the lamp and the spirit like unto the light. Praise be to God, that the light is in the utmost brilliancy no matter if the lamp is somewhat affected. May the illumination of the light remain eternal and undying. Thank thou God that the light of thy spirit is burning with the oil of the love of God and its flame is becoming brighter day by day.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

Chicago Assembly celebrates the Day of Abdul-Baha

BY JEAN MASSON.

ON the evening of November 26th, the Bahai Assembly of Chicago celebrated Abdul-Baha's Day, the Day of the Covenant, with a feast given in Grill Hall of the Stevens Building, on Wabash Avenue.

One hundred of the friends of Abdul-Baha participated in this Feast of the Appointment of the Covenant—friends of various nations and races.

It was a rememberable occasion—one to leave its ineffaceable impress. The armistice had been declared. It seemed as if the universal peace, so long and so faithfully anticipated by Bahais, were really established. The prophecies of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha were being swiftly and unerringly fulfilled. The world was a new world, a transformed world, and Bahais rejoiced.

A spirit of sweet communion, a spiritual fragrance, pervaded and dominated the feast. Its theme was the Covenant. Prayer—the compelling words of the Center of the Covenant—opened the meeting:

“Bring them together again, O Lord, by the power of Thy Covenant and gather their dispersion by the might of Thy promise and unite their hearts by the dominion of Thy love and make them love each other, so that they may sacrifice their spirits, expend their money, and scatter themselves for the love of one another.

“O Lord, cause to descend upon them quietness and tranquillity. Shower upon them the clouds of Thy mercy in great abundance and make them to characterize themselves with the characteristics of the spiritual.

“O Lord, make us firm in Thy noble command and bestow upon us Thy gifts, through Thy bounty, grace and munificence.

“Verily, Thou art the Generous, the Merciful and the Benevolent.”

There followed the wonderful, unforgettable, altogether impressive words of the Manifestation, read from the Kitab-el-Akdas, proclaiming the station of Abdul-Baha:

“When the ocean of My Presence and the Book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces toward ‘Him-Whom-God-hath-purposed,’ who hath branched from this Pre-Existent Root.

“When the Nightingale soareth from the grove of praise and repaireth to the furthestmost concealed destination, refer ye that which you understand not from the Book, to the Branch extended from this firm Root.”

There were other significant, prophetic, commemorative readings, in which the Revelation is so prolific—words familiar and thrilling to the heart of the whole Bahai world, once heard—never again to be forgotten.

Mr. Vail spoke upon the meaning of the Covenant, prefacing his address with a Tablet, revealed by BAHÁ'O'LLAH to Abdul-Baha:

“O thou my Greatest Branch, thy letter was surely presented before this oppressed one and We heard that which thou hast communed with God, the Lord of the worlds.

“Verily, We have ordained thee the guardian of all the creatures and a protection to all those in the heavens and earths and a fortress to those who believe in God, the One, the Omniscient.

“I beg of God to protect them by thee; to enrich them by thee; to nourish them by thee and reveal to them that which is the dawning point of riches to the people of creation and the ocean of generosity to those in the world and the rising point of favor to all nations. Verily, He is the Powerful, the All-Knowing and the Wise!

“I beg of Him to water the earth and all that is in it by thee, that there may spring up from it the flowers of wisdom and revelation and the hyacinths of science and knowledge. Verily, He is the friend to those who love Him, and an assistant to those who commune with Him.

“There is no God but Him, the Mighty and the Magnified!”

The passing of the old, the establishment of the new Covenant among men, which is but the completion of spiritual evolution in the human race—the establishment of the new civilization upon the earth—the supreme function of the Covenant in that establishment—all Mr. Vail eloquently dwelt upon in his approach of a subject, today so infinitely beyond our complete comprehension.

Dr. Bagdadi spoke effectively of the dynamic, unifying power of the Covenant and the absolute necessity of a Center toward which all can turn in unity and harmony and love. He cited the numerous sects of Christianity and other established religions, as a resultant of the absence of an authoritative Center after the passing of the founder.

In the Bahai Movement, no opportunity exists for schisms or disastrous counter movements, for he who turns his face from the Center of the Covenant is not a Bahai, has no place in the Bahai Movement. The true Bahai keeps his face fixed unalterably upon that radiant Center, from which there is no wavering, neither shadow of turning. So Dr. Bagdadi.

Today, when all Bahais are looking with fervent hope toward the East and the possibility of the coming of Abdul-Baha again to America and the possibility of his laying the corner-stone of the great Temple, the Mashrekol-azkar occupies much of the thought of Bahais.

And no meeting is complete without mention of this institution. Mrs. True presented the subject. Indeed, this seems to be the subject of subjects for Mrs. True's presentation, so long and so intimately has she dwelt with it, so deeply has she penetrated into its mysteries.

A feature of this Feast of the Covenant was the large contingent of our colored friends present, deeply moved by the pervasive spirit of good-fellowship, so typical of all Bahai meetings, where the different races unite in worship.

Musical numbers interspersed the readings. There was chanting by Zeenat Khanom. Dr. Bagdadi sang a Persian poem, composed several years ago by Bahai students at Beirut College, in praise and glorification of the Center of the Covenant. After each verse an Arabic refrain was taken up by a chorus of voices: “Fal-ya-ish Ghusnol-baka Hazraty Abdul-Baha!” (“Long live the Branch of Eternity, His Holiness Abdul-Baha!”)

Today, because of our childish and superficial understanding, inadequately, irreverently, perhaps, we pay homage before the shrine of the Covenant. And yet, in all sincerity we offer our allegiance. Adequately shall future generations worship, gathered under the dome of the great Mashrekol-azkar—monument to the glory of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH and the spiritual supremacy of His Covenant.

Future generations—shall they not remember, that we too worshipped, undeviatingly, before the Holy of Holies; that we sang, while our hearts thrilled with emotion, “Long live the Branch of Eternity, His Holiness Abdul-Baha?”

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Stories about Baha'o'llah

INCIDENT IN THE CHILDHOOD OF BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

Revealed by BAHÁ'O'LLAH in a Tablet.

WHEN this youth was a child and had not yet reached the age of maturity, one of my brothers intended to marry in Teheran and, according to the custom of that country, for seven days and nights they were engaged in feasting and banqueting.

The program for the last day of the entertainment for the guests was the play of the "Sultan Salim." The ministers, the grandees and officials of the city were there in a great throng, and this youth was sitting in one of the galleries of this building and was observing the scenes.

Then they raised a great tent in the midst of the court; representations of human forms, only a few inches in height, would come out of the tent and cry: "The king is coming, arrange the seats in order!" Then the other figures came out, sweeping the ground, while a number were sprinkling the streets with water; then another picture was presented, who was supposed to be the herald, acquainting the people to be ready for review for his majesty the sultan.

Then the ministers came, with hat and shawl, according to the Persian custom; others were present with clubs while a number of others were garbed as chamberlains, aides-de-camp, ferrashes and executioners with instruments of punishment. All these men were lined according to their stations and class. At last the king appeared, with sovereign power and shining diadem upon his head and with splendor and glory walked slowly and majestically, and with perfect calmness, tranquillity and composure, seated himself upon the throne. At that moment the noise of the guns and the music of the national anthem was raised, and the smoke surrounded the tent and the king. When the air was cleared, it was seen that the king was on his throne, and the ministers and magistrates and secretaries had taken their places according to their rank. Immediately a thief, captured by the police, was brought before the king, and a royal order was issued to behead him. Then the chief of the executioners took the captive and decapitated him, and a red fluid, which was like blood, was seen by all the spectators. While the sultan was seen consulting with some of his ministers, the news was brought in that a certain person had

A recent letter from the Holy Land

Haifa, Syria. Oct. 10, 1918.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago, U. S. A.

My dear Bahai brother:

It is very delightful indeed to be able to resume correspondence with you and other dear American sisters and brothers. By this time you have probably heard that Haifa was taken on the 23rd of September, and the poor inhabitants were freed from the oppressions to which they had been subject for more than four years.

Abdul-Baha also felt very happy through this change, for as you know it was the firm belief of the Turks that he was favoring the English. At the instigation and intrigue of the abominable Mohamad Ali, every now and then some new trouble would arise. You know perfectly well the old corrupted government. But at any time the power of BAHÁ'O'LLAH would surpass all their underhanded means of enmity and would help the Center of His Covenant to conquer all their mean efforts against him. For instance: Jamal Pasha, while marching towards the Suez Canal three years ago had said in Jerusalem, "The Christian Bahais consider Abdul-Baha as Christ. After my conquest of Egypt, I shall crucify him just as the former Christ was." But the shells from the English cannon did not give him time to reach his goal.

I do not want to speak against anybody, but simply to tell you that all the time inimical efforts have been directed against the Beloved of our hearts and always the power of the Holy Ghost has rendered their efforts null.

All members of your dear family are well at Adana, which we hope will be taken soon.

With the present circumstances, we hope that the international peace will, before long, be established, and the nations of the world will change their hostility to friendship and amity. For this we pray day and night.

I believe this terrible war will bring the thinkers of the nations to the consciousness of the value of the divine principles set forth by the Supreme Pen of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. One year before the outbreak of the war, Abdul-Baha traveled all over America and Europe and exclaimed in large assemblies and congregations, that Europe had become an arsenal, and it was waiting for a single spark to explode. If the civilized people had listened to this divine call and warning, humanity would not have suffered from all these unspeakable horrors.

But after the war, we hope that the Bahais, who love all the nations of the world and consider them as the leaves of one branch and fruits of one tree, will do their best, and through the divine force, will be able to remove the means of hostility among the nations. Strangers to the Cause of God probably disregard this divine force active in the Bahai Religion, but the Bahais cannot do so, for they have seen that within a period of about half a century, in spite of the despotic persecution of the Shah of Persia and Abdul Hamid, this divine force emanated from the prison walls of Acca and united approximately four millions of Persians, English, French, Germans, Americans, Indians, Japanese, et al., or in other words, four millions of Hindus, Mohammedans, Christians, Jews, Zoroastrians, etc., together as members of one family. This divine force has not been so active and effective in any previous religion. Ahmad will see you soon. Love to all dear ones,

 Your brother
Aziz.

“The war was not an act of God”

“I hope that the war may soon come to an end, so that I may again look in the faces of the believers. It will be a great joy to me. This war lasted very long, but it had to come. The corrupt world needed such a purification. The war was not an act of God, but rather the results of the accumulation of our own evil deeds. Because peoples and nations did not act in accordance with justice, and tyrannized innocent men, this war had to sweep away all remnants of autocracy, absolutism and militarism, and usher in an era of democracy, equality before the law, and international peace.”

Editorial—Let us build the Temple

BY ALBERT VAIL

TWO calls ring like a divine bell in this clear morning of universal peace. The one is: Teach the Cause, send forth teachers, awaken the souls, ignite the hearts and unite them into the Kingdom of God; the other is to build the Mashrekol-azkar. Both are the call of Him who is Most Glorious to build the temple of the oneness of humanity, and celebrate the jubilee of the oneness of humanity. The real stones of both temples are the radiant and united believers. "O Lord," prays the Master-BUILDER, "make these holy souls dawning-points of lights and the manifestations of signs. Make every one a leading corner-stone in this great edifice, a pillar of the pillars."

The Master-BUILDER is still in our midst waiting to lay the foundation of both temples, the temple of the oneness of humanity and the temple of stone that, like an evident standard, shall shine in the center of the continent of America proclaiming in words of concrete form and splendor the universal perfection, the practical applications, the divine reality of the Most Great Cause to all the multitudes who shall pass its gates or hear of its beauty. There is a mystery in the building of the Mashrekol-azkar, declares Abdul-Baha, which we do not comprehend. It will attract thousands of people to investigate the Cause. It will exert upon all our civilization a tremendous effect. It is on earth "the inception of the organization of the Kingdom," that Kingdom wherein all sects and religions and races shall march to the music of "Ya-Baha-el-Abha" down the nine avenues of the different religions into the Temple of God's oneness.

To be perfect, this first Mashrekol-azkar in America must be designed by the Master's own hand. He will not much longer be in this world. If he is to approve, complete, perfect the architectural plans, his children, his servants must act quickly. It is worth a great sacrifice if we may give the gift which will enable the Center of the Covenant to lay the foundation of this the mother, the model Mashrekol-azkar of the western world. Divine believers in the Orient, who will never worship under its shining dome, sold even their clothing to give money for its construction. May not an equal fire of sacrifice enkindle the hearts of the American friends until they raise the last hundred-thousand and invite the Master to come to our shores, prepare the plans and lay the foundation? Then will our hearts through all the ages of eternal life throb with joy that we sacrificed our money, our comforts, our time, our love to build the temple in the days of the Covenant.

Mashrekol-azkar Day—Receipts for November and December Building Fund

At the New York city Mashrekol-azkar Convention it was recommended "that upon selected days, to be fixed by the Executive Board, meetings be held by each local assembly at which all shall be welcome, and the endeavor be to acquaint the friends and all interested in the establishment of a universal spiritual Edifice, with the purpose, meaning and importance of the Mashrekol-azkar—provided, however, that His Holiness the Centre of the Covenant, shall first approve of the fixing of these uniform dates by the Executive Board." (STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 4, No. 8, p. 146.)

In reply to their supplication the following from Abdul-Baha was received:

"If you appoint a special day of every month—that is, the ninth day of every month—for consultations regarding the Mashrekol-azkar, it will be favorable." (STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 4, No. 9, p. 160.)

Recently such a fragrant meeting was held by the Chicago Assembly on that day, that the Financial-Secretary wishes to remind the readers of the STAR OF THE WEST of the above important facts, and urge the friends throughout America to commemorate the ninth day of each month as Mashrekol-azkar day, thus stimulating the great work for the erection of the Mashrekol-azkar.

The Teaching Campaign

The teachers are starting forth to scatter broadcast the seeds of the Kingdom. In the great progressive West, Mrs. Brittingham and Mrs. Killius and others have been spreading in new districts the divine seed ever since the five teaching Tablets reached America. So have Mrs. Maxwell, Miss Jack, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Tate, Mr. Remey, Mrs. Hoagg, Mother Beecher and others in the East and North and South. Miss Jack is soon to leave Chicago for Winnipeg. Mr. Vail is arranging a series of visits to new cities and districts in the Central West. Mr. Remey is soon to start for a long journey through the South. With great joy will the STAR OF THE WEST receive and publish news of the activities of the teachers in America and the world and the glad tidings of "the majestic onward march of the Cause of God" in these the dawning hours of the Kingdom of the Most Great Peace among all peoples and nations.

of prominence meet the beloved Abdul-Baha daily and converse with him on the problems of peace and war, the rights and duties of small nations, the advisability of the formation of the league of peoples and the necessity for the organization of a strong executive power which may be able to back up the ideals of universal brotherhood and peace. I may record herein the names of some of these officers—so that our friends in the West may get an idea of those with whom Abdul-Baha is meeting. Amongst others . . . [Here a number of lines were cut out by the Censor]eager to hear the constructive teachings of this movement and visit the Holy Tomb of the Blessed Beauty with the utmost reverence and respect. Many of them are more or less acquainted with the Cause and know and are informed of the broad outline of its history. When on September 23rd, the conquering General and his English and Indian Cavalry entered Haifa, one of the first questions that he asked of the President of Municipality was about the health of "His Excellency" Abdul-Baha, the head of the Bahai Movement and whether the Turks in any way had in the past few years molested his tranquillity and quiet life. Being assured that God has protected him and his followers, the General was satisfied and later in the afternoon of the same day, he sent his aid-de-camps to Abdul-Baha's home to meet him and make personal inquiries about his health. Next morning he called himself and had a pleasant interview. Three days later, Col. Stores, the Military Governor of Jerusalem, who was acquainted with Abdul-Baha when in Egypt, came to Haifa in his own automobile to meet him and after his warm reception informed the Cairo believers by cable that Abdul-Baha was enjoying good health.

In short, the atmosphere of Acca and Haifa is quite changed. It is more intellectual, more spiritual, more fraught with activity and freedom.

Your sincere brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

become a rebel. The sultan issued orders that several regiments of soldiers and artillery men be sent to the scene and quell the disturbance. After a few minutes the thunderous noise of guns and artillery was heard behind the tent and we were told they were engaged in battle.

This youth became astonished and bewildered at these affairs. Then the review ended and the curtain descended.

After twenty minutes a man came out from behind the tent with a box under his arm. I asked him, "What is this box? Where is the king and all the men?" He answered, that all these great things and manifest objects, such as kings, princes and ministers, glory, power, majesty and sovereignty that I beheld were inclosed in this box.

I declare by the Lord, Who hath created all things through His Word, that from that day all the conditions of this world and its greatness have been like that play before the eyes of this youth.

VISION OF BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH AT THE AGE OF SIX YEARS.

He saw himself fall into the sea. In the water his long hair became shining like the sun, and spread out around him like a golden net. All the fishes, large and small, came swimming towards him, holding to the strands of his hair. The fishes came closer and closer, following him as he swam through the waters which were shining like the sun. The fishes were countless in number. Abdul Karim, a wise man who interpreted visions for the kings, was told of this vision by the father of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH. Abdul Karim answered: "Your son will be a great man. The water is knowledge, the fishes swimming about him are the people of all nations who will come to be taught by his wisdom. He will be forced away and separated from earthly things, and will reflect the light of the Word of God."

(Words of Moneera Khanom, Wife of Abdul-Baha. From Ten Days in the Light of Acca, page 88.)

BAHĀ'O'LLĀH AS A DERVISH IN THE MOUNTAINS.

A boy, attending a village school, had been flogged and sent out for failure in his writing. While he was weeping outside the schoolroom, this holy man came by and asked the cause of his grief. When the lad had explained his trouble the dervish said: "Do not grieve, I will set you another copy, and teach you to write well." He then took the boy's slate and wrote some words in very beautiful characters. The boy was delighted, and showing his slate in pride at now having a better master than he had had in the school, the people were astonished, dervishes being commonly illiterate. They then began to follow the dervish who wishing to meditate and pray in solitude, left that place for another.

(Words of Behiah Khanum, sister of Abdul-Baha. From Abbas Effendi, His Life and Teachings, by Myron H. Phelps, p. 22.)

THE STORY OF THE PATROL.

As told by BAHĀ'O'LLĀH.

It is related that a lover was suffering for years in separation from his beloved and burning in the fire of absence from her. By the overwhelming strength of love his breast was void of patience and his body would fain shun the soul. He accounted life in separation as a sham and suffered intense burning on account of the world. Many were the days he found no rest in separation from her, and the nights that he slept not through grief for her. Through the languor of body he had become as a sigh, and by the heart's pain he was (in lament) as a woe. He would freely give a thousand lives for a single draught of her nearness, and yet this was not feasible! Physicians despaired of healing him, and companions kept far from his fellowship. Yea, physicians know no healing for the one diseased of love, except the favor of the beloved one come to his succor!

At length, the tree of his hope brought the fruit of despair, and the fire of his expectancy was quenched; until, one night, he was wearied of life and abandoned home for the streets. Suddenly a patrol pursued him. He was urging on at the front while the patrol sped in his chase. Finally, the patrols formed into a gathering and barred the way of flight for that afflicted one. He, helpless, groaned with all his heart and ran hither and thither, soliloquizing in these words: "This patrol is my angel of death, for he is seeking after me in such haste. Or, is he a tyrant of countries who is intent on oppressing men!" Thus, that one, pierced with the arrow of love, was running with the feet and lamenting in heart, until he reached the wall of a garden and climbed it with a thousand difficulties and afflictions, for it was found to be a very lofty wall. Then, regardless of his life, he threw himself down into the garden. But behold, there he found his beloved, with a light in her hand, searching for a ring she had lost! When that heart-surrendered lover saw his heart-ravishing beloved one, he heaved a sigh and stretched forth his hands in prayer: "O God! Bestow honor on this patrol, bless him with wealth, and preserve him; for this patrol was Gabriel, who became the guide of this infirm one. He was a Seraph who imparted life to this humble one!"

DESCRIPTION OF A BEAUTIFUL GARDEN.

As told by Abdul-Baha.

Outside of Teheran we had a great park planted by the father of the Blessed Perfection, BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH. This was a wonderful garden. It contained four gates, eastern, western, northern and southern. As you entered the eastern gate, the western gate was visible, and similarly from the northern gate you could see the southern gate. In the center of the garden a great throne was built, and four straight avenues branched off toward the gates, so that you could see all four gates as you sat on the throne. On both sides of these avenues poplar trees were planted, to the number of ten thousand. These trees arose erect and majestic toward the sky. Under the trees thousands of rose bushes were planted, the fragrance of which filled the air. Often we used to sleep at night on this throne. The moon, clear, full, silvery, shone upon us, the galaxies of stars shedding their rays, now faintly and again with a lustrous twinkle over the calm and mystic scene of the garden. Long before sunrise I would open my eyes, admiring with wonder this infinite universe of God. Then all at once the nightingales in sweet melodies would break into a concert of divine music, the gentle murmur of the rills flowing in from all sides reaching to the ears and the zephyrs would pass through the leaves making the noise of a soft sweeping hand-clap and applause. In the early mornings the Blessed Perfection would arise and prepare tea for all of us, and while the sun was dawning from the eastern horizon we would gather around Him, drinking tea and enjoying the heavenly scene all around us.

(Then Abdul-Baha started to walk through the rose-garden, now and then standing before a rosebush and deeply contemplating its construction and petals. Looking at a rose which was very like an American Beauty, he said:)

"When we arrived in Constantinople it was just at this season [September]. The garden of the house wherein we lived contained one rosebush, on every branch of which one rose blossomed forth after sunset. The believers not having seen roses at this season were overjoyed, and until late at night were gathered around it."

(Then he passed by, himself a unique rose in the garden of the world of humanity, the fragrance of which has filled all creation!)

POST CARD RECEIVED BY THE BAHAI ASSEMBLY OF CHICAGO

My dear brothers and sisters:

Haifa, Palestine, December 1, 1918.

Abdul-Baha calls us today to the solution of great world problems. We must not remain behind, but be in the vanguard of the forces of the new civilization. We must first renew ourselves from top to bottom and then induce others to do the same. All our past efforts in comparison to the efforts that we have to make in the near future have been pastimes. We must be ready and put our house in order, so that we may be able to undertake the great work that will be presented to us before long. "Vigilance and preparedness" must be our motto. Bahai greetings

Ahmad Sohrab.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Mount of Olives, Jerusalem,
November 16, 1918.

FROM my room in the great German Hospice on this Holy Hill, I have the most wonderful view that it has ever been my lot to gaze upon. There is a pillared arched balcony outside my windows which makes a superb frame for the picture.

In the foreground olive trees clothe the hill which slopes down toward a most fascinating middle distance, made up of rocky undulating desert plateaux. These lend themselves in some unexplained fashion to curiously beautiful sun and shadow effects, so that the view changes almost from minute to minute.

Beyond again lie the volcanic mountainous erections amongst which lie the (supposed) ruins of Sodom, while Gomorrah lies away to the west down the plain.

It is as if these hills had been "dancing together with joy" and in the midst of all the gayety and motion, they had become petrified suddenly without warning. They are fantastic yet beautiful, weird yet ever changing, although one never loses the feeling of eternal petrification, which is not only apparent, for it is a geological fact.

Beyond these crater-like erections, and far, far below them, lies the Dead Sea, green-blue, clear as crystal, reflecting the mountains of Moab which rise steeply from the water high up, until they form a skyline background for the whole picture.

Away to the left lies the Jordan valley, and one can trace the river wending its way northward like a blue ribbon among the foothills. But it is not the physical scenery that holds one spell bound, it is the atmosphere. It comes resistlessly up towards one until one is bathing in its strange magnetism.

Ancient majesty and strength flow out from the mountains of Moab, mystery rises from the waters of the Dead Sea, beauty flows forth and upwards from the Jordan river, tragedy and joy rise up together from the lonely solitudes of the desert, and the craters in the middle distance. All these seem to blend into one resistless wave of color and significance which sweeps up towards one through the olive groves to the Mount of Olives itself.

No photograph or picture or description can possibly convey one-thousandth part of the strange charm of that which lies before me as I write.

The past week has seemed like a dream. On the 11th of November, 1918, at 4 p. m., the news of the Armistice reached me as I was sitting in my office at the Savoy. . . . I gave a small dinner to my staff and having toasted those present, I spoke for awhile. The following is a partial summary:

"Many of you do not at present realize that we stand at perhaps the most remarkable point in the history of the world. One era has closed before our eyes; it is closed in the midst of carnage and tumult. We are now actually witnessing the birth of a New Day, a Day during which the human race will be enlightened, transformed, regenerated. Do not let this hour pass lightly; enjoy the outward triumph of the Armistice, but let your thoughts run deep as well. Reaction from this moment of exultation is inevitable. We have all lived the past few years under conditions of an ever growing strain. The strain has lifted. If an elastic band is held taut for some time, when released it will be found that its elasticity has vanished, it will hang limp and almost lifeless.

"Many years will pass before the racial mind will regain its inherent elasticity; meanwhile, many tests will come to you and me. The war is over, but we must look forward to many months filled with revolutions—volcanic eruptions both within the racial mind and in the earth's crust.

"Those of us who have looked death in the face during the past few years, and who realize something of the tragedy that war brings in its wake, have determined to carry out two resolutions: We will bring home to our children and to those around us some idea of what war really means. . . . We will create in the minds of the next generation such a detestation of human warfare, its horror, its uselessness, that the tradition of peace universal shall grow up firmly implanted in the human consciousness of the future, and war will become inconceivable. Secondly, we have determined that the world of our generation shall be lifted out of gloom and sorrow towards peace and steadfast happiness.

"Each one of us can do more than he realizes to bring joy into the lives of those around him, and joy spreads. This means that we must go deep down into our beings to find that joy which is the spiritual heritage of the whole race, which only waits to be tapped in order to release the waters of true happiness. Vast problems await solution, the world is upside down; revolutions, bloody and bloodless, lie immediately ahead. It is only for a time that this revolution is taking the place of evolution, for nothing can now stem the great waves of spiritual energy waiting to flood through the world of men. . . . After destruction, reconstruction! We can each in our humble sphere help forward the building of a new and better world upon the basis of sure foundations. Let us be very sure of our own foundations before we begin to build, either within or without, and all will be well."

I came up to Jerusalem on November 13, 1918.

The drive from Ludd (Lydda, birthplace of St. George) to Jerusalem is so splendid that I never grow tired of it, although I now know every inch of the road. . . .

Sunday, November 17, 1918.

Today I attended the Peace Celebration Service at St. George's Cathedral, Jerusalem.

The church was packed—half the congregation were officers and men. Col. Storrs read the lessons.

All the Religions whose headquarters are in Jerusalem were represented, and a Scotch army chaplain preached in English and Arabic. The Grand Rabbi arrived in rich furs and chain of office. The Grand Mufti (Moslem), with flowing beard and snow white head dress (a broad minded, fine old fellow); the Greek Patriarch in black vestments and jewelled cross upon his breast; the Armenian Patriarch, also in black with a mosaic in jewels hanging around his neck; the Russian Orthodox Arch Priest sat near the altar; the Coptic Bishop sat under the organ; the Roman Church was not represented, but Abyssinian priests put in an appearance and were evidently greatly puzzled by the organ strains. To have been present at such a service on Peace Sunday, here, in the religious centre of the world, was a never-to-be-forgotten privilege.

The Nunc Dimittis was sung for those who have yielded up their lives during the war.

Mount Carmel Hospice, Haifa.
November 18, 1918.

This morning I left Jerusalem traveling by car and train, arriving here at 8 p. m., having started at 7 a. m.

I have just sent word to Abdul-Baha, asking to be allowed to present myself tomorrow, and await his answer.

Prison House of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, Acca,
November 20, 1918.

How often have I pictured myself in these surroundings. I have longed to be here ever since those distant days in 1908 when I first heard of the Bahais and their Masters (The Bab, BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, and Abdul-Baha) when I was in Constantinople.

I arrived at Haifa at 8 p. m. Immediately on arrival I sent a messenger to Abdul-Baha's house further up the mountain, asking to be allowed to present myself.

Two of the younger Persian believers came down at once to see me, one was Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, one of the editors of the STAR OF THE WEST. They told me the Master was at Acca and was not expected back for several days. Next morning I hired a two-horse carriage and leaving my servant and the luggage at the hotel, set off for Acca. The journey has been described too often to bear repetition. It is perfectly fascinating. There is no road between Haifa and Acca, and the light railway has been torn up, so one drives for two and one-half hours around the bay on the hard sand close to the blue, blue sea. Half the time the carriage is in the sea, because the sand is harder where the waves lap over it.

From a distance the ancient walled city of the Crusades looks most picturesque, standing right up out of the water, and reminds one a little of a miniature Stambul. But Acca from the inside is an awful place, full of smells and slums and dirt.

Its one feature of beauty is the sweet and abundant water supply, brought into the city from the distant hills along a Roman aqueduct. At last we reach the Master's house, close to the sea wall, but shut in on all sides by slums and courts. A long stone stairway leads up to the living-room in this prison house where BAHĀ'O'LLĀH spent the last years of his life and where his son has lived on and off for forty years.

The Master was standing at the top waiting to greet me with that sweet smile and cheery welcome for which he is famous. For seventy-four long years Abdul-Baha has lived in the midst of tragedy and hardship, yet nothing has robbed or can rob him of his cheery optimism, spiritual insight and keen sense of humor.

He was looking little older than when I saw him seven years ago, and certainly more vigorous than when in England after the exhausting American trip. His voice is as strong as ever, his step virile, his hair and beard are (if possible) more silver-white than before.

He is delighted to welcome the change of regime, but I could detect the tragic note, for if the British occupation had taken place ten years ago, he would have been able to travel throughout the Near and Middle East spreading the glad tidings of his father's mission.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Recent Tablet revealed for Mirza Ahmad Sohrab granting permission to come to America

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

. . . I am just in receipt of a letter from Shogi Rabanni, in which he quotes the Tablet which Mirza Ahmad Sohrab will bring with him to America, the original being in the Master's hand. I think it would be well to publish this in the STAR as soon as possible, so that all may know of his coming with permission, as I have heard this question raised, not in a spirit of criticism, probably, but in view of the warnings about receiving Orientals. The Tablet reads as follows:

“His honor, Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, has been permitted to leave for America, that there, God willing, he may engage in service. I beg God that he may be assisted in Servitude to the Holy Threshold.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.”

With greetings and kindest regards, I am,

Cordially yours,

Jos. H. Hannen.

Letter from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab to the Editor of the Christian Commonwealth, London

(Also sent for publication to the STAR OF THE WEST.)

Haifa, Palestine, December 2, 1918.

Dear Sir:

Probably it is impossible to express in so many words the feeling of a man who has been compelled to live for years in a dark, wet and narrow cell, with no companion except the four walls and the occasional visits of the rude and cruel gaoler,—and then this man suddenly taken out to the top of a mountain, the sun shining in all its glory, the birds singing hymns of praise in the swaying branches, the green and luxuriant forest girdling the surrounding hills, all nature aglow with the first flush of spring and friends on every side pushing forward to shake his hands and inquire about his health. The man is astonished, is confused, he cannot believe himself, he rubs his eyes, looks around with wonder, tries to realize the change and thinks this is in all probability a trick, a deception of legerdemain which will soon vanish and then he has to go back to his cold, rayless, damp jail.

Such were our emotions when on the memorable day of September 23rd, at 3 p. m. the British and Indian Cavalry forces captured Haifa and Acca and freed us from the decadent and ignorant rule of Turkey. For years we had not seen an Englishman and we were forbidden to speak the language even in our homes. We had almost forgotten that there were countries like England, France and America, as no news reached us from those regions. Daily we were fed on so many falsehoods and lies that we could digest it no longer. When there was a glut in the market, the Agence Nationale had to mix its dishes of lies with some condiments of Mohammedan rising in India, Irish Rebellion, Afghan ranging herself against England and famine in London—thus these new spices might please the already satiated tastes of the worn and long-suffering public.

For years we had not seen a copy of the Christian Commonwealth, and it was only through the thoughtfulness and kindness of Mrs. Stannard in London and an educated Persian girl, Miss Morassa Khanom, in Port Said, that the other day we received two copies of Oct. 2d and 9th. After years of deprivation, again our eyes are brightened with the spiritual contents of that noble periodical, portraying in a vivid manner, week after week, month after month, year after year, the lofty ideals and social strivings of the age!

There was a time that we were not sure what would happen to us next day, distracted with anxiety and utterly hopeless as to our future. But the sudden and unexpected attack and capture of Haifa by the victorious British Army under the matchless leadership of General Allenby, threw an electric wave of joy through all parts of Syria, set at liberty hundreds of thousands of men and opened the doors of correspondence and communication with our friends abroad.

Abdul-Baha, after four years of silence and isolation, was again pleased to meet and speak with men who understand his ideas and respect his convictions. English officers of all ranks, Major General, Brigadier General, Colonels, Majors, Lieutenants, Captains and non-commissioned men and privates have called on him and drank tea with him and listened reverently to his words of wisdom. The military Governors of Acca and Haifa have often met him; the former being his guest at dinner. Once about eight members of the Australian Flying Corps, who have their aerodome at the foot of Mount Carmel, were his guests all day in Bahje, near Acca. They visited the tomb of BAHĀ'ŪLLĀH, listened to the lecture of Abdul-Baha on the history of this Cause and its principles, and left in the evening in their large auto with glad hearts and beaming faces. Never were they so royally received in Palestine! They were overwhelmed with the extreme kindness and attention of the Master. Surely they will never forget what they heard and saw, and they will write home about their unique experiences and relate the same to their friends.

Since the beginning of the war, Abdul-Baha has been subjected to manifest trials and difficulties, but through them his invincible spirit shone forth with greater brilliancy, his complete trust in God was a source of comfort to others, and his good-humor saved all of us from a bitter pessimism which was too prevalent at the time.

It has been my good luck not only to be with him during these dreadful years of the world war, but was constituted a member of his party when he was travelling through Europe and America, and thus I can say from my own experience that the Master teaches us to look on the bright side of life with intelligence and understanding, not to moan and grumble but bear our burden with a serene nature, to be firm and resolute, far-seeing and resourceful. His talks and advice imparted happiness to those who were laden with the burden of sorrow. He was ever ready to help the distressed and the needy; more than often he would deprive the members of his own family of the bare necessities of life that the hungry man be fed and the naked be clothed.

With unconquerable determination and wonderful resourcefulness, he was divinely assisted to protect and keep alive the almost 300 members of the Persian Bahai Colony in Haifa and Acca. For three years, he spent months in Tiberias and Adassieh, supervising extensive works of agriculture and raising wheat, corn and other foodstuffs for the maintenance of all of us, and more to distribute among the many starving Mohammedan and Christian families, many of whom gave eloquent testimony to his all-inclusive charity and philanthropy. I assure you that were it not for his provision and ceaseless attention to the works of agriculture, none of us would have survived the war, for with an awful famine raging in all cities and towns, one could not find bread and even in case a loaf of black, coarse barley was found, such a high price was asked for it that one could not find enough money to buy it.

Aside from the scarcity of food and famine, for two years all the harvests were eaten by the innumerable armies of locusts, the like of which were never witnessed by the old men of the community. At times like unto the dark clouds they covered the face of the sky for hours.

This condition, coupled with the unprecedented extortions and looting by the Turkish officers and the extensive buying of foodstuffs by the Germans to be shipped to the "Fatherland" brought about an awful famine. In Lebanon alone more than 100,000 people died from starvation. In the cities men, women and children became like mere skeletons and with gaunt faces, sunken eyes, yellowed skin and bent backs walked rather like ghosts through the half-deserted streets of Beirut and Damascus, while crying pitifully for a bit of bread. Thousands upon thousands lived for a few days on the peelings of oranges and bananas, the skin of watermelons and the grass of the country, and then died away with no one to mourn over them or bury their corpses, while other thousands who were a few steps higher were dragged down by the pitiless force of circumstances and followed the same course of inanition, starvation and death. Ah, my friends! My head burns and my eyes are wet with tears when I now think of those harrowing events. Can I ever forget them? It had become a usual sight to find every morning dead bodies of young girls and children along the public thoroughfare. People looked at them and passed by. Oh my God! Are all feelings of pity, sympathy and love dead in us, that at the sight of suffering children and dying old men and women we stand unmoved?

This unprecedented famine lowered the standard of life, killed the finer emotions and deadened the softer sentiments. Men become like wild beasts, fighting without kith and kin with cruel ferocity and elemental passions. Each, impelled by the instinct of self-preservation fought the fight to the finish, trampled on the strewn bodies of others, but none or only very few survived the beastly struggle to relate the gruesome tale. Hunger and need forced thousands of chaste, lovely, pure girls—girls who were destined to be the future mothers of the nation—into the degrading walks of prostitution, selling their honor for a few pence—thus for a time keeping the wolf away from the door. The awful increase in the number of prostitutes, brought down the edifice of morality, shame was banished, vice and corruption were enthroned and God totally forgotten.

Thousands of boys and girls who were as pure and beautiful as the young dawn a year ago, were now afflicted with horrible diseases, while the lack of proper nourishment, ignorance and inattention, undermined their power of resistance and carried hosts of them to an early grave. These contagious and communicable diseases became so prevalent that the intelligent members of the various communities took alarm and notwithstanding the severe censorship of the press, the editors wrote long articles, plainly stating that the future life of the nation was in jeopardy and the spring of the vitality of the race was being rapidly poisoned. These amazing revelations goaded the sluggish Government to open a few clinics and treat these unfortunate creatures free of charge.

With the transfer of the scene of war from the Dardanelles to Syria, the Turkish government subjected the already impoverished and depleted inhabitants to unbearable sufferings, exacting from them fines, requisitions and exorbitant taxes. Everything was taken away from them, horses, cows, camels, donkeys, sheep, even their household furniture, such as copper and brass vases and caldrons, iron railings, mattresses, clothing, wood and fencing wires. In fact, the majority of the shops and houses were swept clean of everything.

In brief, the past four years were unparalleled years of sufferings and hardships for the people of Syria and Palestine, and it will take a long time to remove the harsh traces of Turkish oppression, nevertheless all the people are nearly unanimous in their opinion that the chapter of lawlessness and retrogression in the Holy Land is forever closed and with the coming of the English the reign of law and the era of education and progress is inaugurated. The flag of England is hailed as the symbol of justice and equal opportunity for all. The Jews, the Christians and the Mohammedans wish England to remain here as their teacher and educator; so that they may be led by a process of evolution to the higher altitude of modern civilization, introducing new and practical methods of intensive farming and agriculture, establishing industrial plants, building railroads, founding public schools and technical institutions, developing the rich and hidden natural resources of the country and paving the way for the ultimate liberation of the soul from the narrow bounds of racial, religious and national prejudices.

For ages this sacred land of Palestine has been a battleground for the nations of the East and West. Here they fought their battles which decided the fate of the nations lying far to the North and to the South. The last government that controlled the political life of this country for over 500 years contributed not a blessed thing toward its internal improvements. Now there is a general feeling amongst all the classes of Palestine that all these destructive wars and deteriorating influences must be given up for good; so that under the equitable and just administration of Great Britain the people may advance along the line of general progress and contribute their share towards the up-building of a strong, noble and stable State.

I may be permitted to close this paper with the characteristic remark of a Mohammedan Sheikh, just a day after the British occupation of Haifa: "With the coming of the English we were led from darkness into light!" And in this short statement the feeling of the whole population was summed up.

Praying that the Christian Commonwealth may ever remain a torchbearer of truth, justice and righteousness and a harbinger of peace and conciliation amongst all nations and religions, I remain,

Your sincere servant,

Ahmad Sohrab.

LETTER ACCOMPANYING THIS ARTICLE

Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, Washington, D. C.

My dear brother Joseph:

The other day your cable to Ahmed Yazdi in which you kindly mentioned my name, was received from Port Said, and gave me real joy. I am now awaiting the arrival of your letters. I have just written a rather long letter to the Editor of the Christian Commonwealth (London), and herein I transcribe the same so that it may be published in the STAR OF THE WEST.

Ahmad Sohrab.

Extracts from the Diary of Major Wellesly Tudor-Pole

Teaching the Bahai Cause has never been allowed by Abdul-Baha in the Turkish Empire until now.

. He still, however, spends a few weeks now and again in the Acca prison house, that has now become his property.

After lunch Abdul-Baha drove me out to the Garden Tomb of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH about two miles from the city. He approached the Tomb in complete silence, praying with bent head—a wonderfully venerable figure in his white turban and flowing grey robe.

On reaching the portal to the Tomb itself, the Master prostrated himself at length, and kissed the steps leading to the inner chamber. There was a majestic humility about the action that baffles description.

Then we took tea in the garden, and Abdul-Baha told many stories about BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, his superhuman endurance and his wonderful teaching.

When we returned to Acca, the Persian Colony, consisting of perhaps thirty-five persons had assembled, and we sat around the room drinking tea whilst Abdul-Baha described his visit to Clifton [England—home of the writer] and the people he had met there.

. Then I went to pay my respects to the Military Governor, curious to discover what he knew of, and felt about the greatest religious personage in Asia today. The Governor was full of a demonstration he was arranging for the morrow in celebration of World Peace, A band was coming, the notables of Acca were to parade around the town, the Governor would answer cheers and make a little speech from the balcony of the Town Hall.

A notable occasion for Acca, freed after all these hundreds of years from the cruel Turkish yoke.

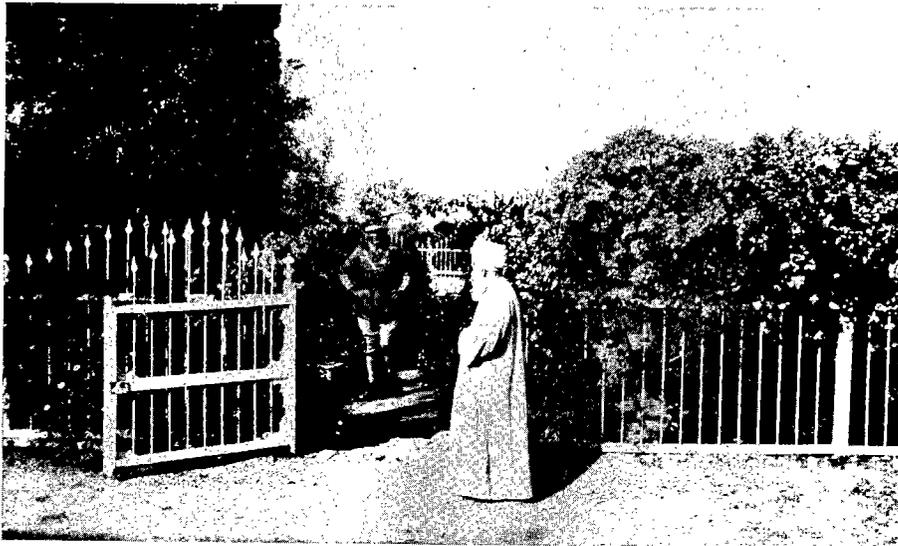

I enquired whether Abdul-Baha had been invited to the function. "Do you mean Abbas Effendi? Well, No, I don't think we've asked him. Perhaps he should have an invitation."

(He who has worked night and day for over fifty years to propagate the ideals of World Peace and Brotherhood,

I expressed surprise—the shock had driven indignation from me—and an invitation was duly dispatched. Then I returned to the Prison house and spent the evening with the Master, supping with him and answering his questions about the new administration.

Then I slept in the room next Abdul-Baha's (which was BAHÁ'O'LLÁH's before him)—simple attics with stone floors and practically no furniture. Abdul-

FIRST PHOTOGRAPH OF ABDUL-BAHA TAKEN AFTER THE WAR

*This photograph of Abdul-Baha was taken in the Garden of Bahjée in the latter part of the month of October, 1918, by Lieut. H. E. Eckersley. It is the first photograph of Abdul-Baha after the war. The account of his meeting was written to Mr. MacNutt.—Ahmad Sohrab.

whose devoted followers number millions, whose Cause is doing so much to lessen religious discord in the East—he had not even received an invitation to take part in the Peace celebrations of his native town, because, as it turned out, his name did not appear on the list of the local notables prepared by the municipal authorities for the guidance of the Governor. "A prophet in his own country" with a vengeance!)

* I have not received the account mentioned by Ahmad Sohrab. It must have miscarried; otherwise most happy to send it to STAR.—Howard MacNutt.

Baha still gives away all money, and lives the life of poverty himself.

Before breakfast the house was filled with believers who had come to receive the morning blessing.

I had brought Abdul-Baha letters from all parts of the world, and he spent the morning dictating replies for me to take away. I gave him the Persian camel-hair cloak, and it greatly pleased him, for the winter is here, and he had given away the only cloak he possessed. I made him promise to keep this one through the winter anyway, and I trust he does.

At lunch we had another long talk; then came the leave-taking and the Master's blessing. He sent greetings by me to all his friends in Egypt, Europe, England and America!

As I drove off on my return to Haifa, I caught a glimpse of the Master, staff in hand, wending his way through the awful Acca slums, on his way to attend the local Peace celebrations. He stands out a majestic figure.

And here I am again on Mount Carmel, writing this letter with the moonlit sea before me. I have paid my visit to the Governor of Haifa, and tomorrow am free to climb Mount Carmel, to visit the Tomb of the Bab, and to spend one night in the house of the Master among his devoted friends. He himself will not return here for another week.

He is helping to solve religious problems that have arisen in the Acca area as the result of the British occupation. Abdul-Baha is quite satisfied that an era of peace is immediately ahead, and that the vast outstanding problems left to us as an aftermath of war, will gradually be solved, so that the prophetic utterances of his father will become clearly manifest during the present generation.

Abdul-Baha looks to America as the nation which, being more disinterested than any European Power, will be able to help forward the realization of the world-wide unity and peace.

He anticipates a spiritual revival, not merely one of religion, but possibly one outside organized religion altogether.

It is hoped that we may shortly look for the publication of the complete works of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, and America will probably take the lead in this work. Meanwhile, it would seem absolutely essential that those interested in the matter should collect the authorized writings and should make every effort to see that a really accurate history of the Movement from the beginning of the last century to the present time should be published.

News of Abdul-Baha—Letters received by Lotfullah Hakim, from Shogi Effendi and Major W. Tudor-Pole

LETTER FROM SHOGI EFFENDI

Acca, Palestine,
November 19, 1918.

Dr. Lotfullah Hakim,
London, England.

My dear spiritual brother:

Captain* Tudor-Pole surprised and gladdened us with his unexpected arrival from Egypt. My grandfather, Abdul-Baha, was so glad to look at his radiant face and feel, from shaking his hands, the fresh fragrances of the ablazed Bahais of England. He inquired for you and was gratified to know you were all under God's protection throughout this great world war. The Beloved has been sojourning for a month and a half at Acca, visiting almost daily the Tomb of his father and offering his thanksgivings for the bounty, care and protection of the Blessed Perfection. Today Captain Tudor-Pole accompanied him to the Holy Shrine, and tomorrow the Beloved will drive with him to the Rizwan, the garden in which His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH spent many days and nights.

The Master is expecting, now that the communications are restored, to hear from you frequently and directly of the progress of the Cause and the spiritual gatherings and of the concord and harmony of the souls.

I am so glad and privileged to be able to attend to my Beloved's services after having completed my course of Arts and Sciences in the American University at Beirut. I am so anxious and expectant to hear from you and of your services to the Cause for by transmitting them to the Beloved I shall make him happy, glad and strong.

The past four years have been years of untold calamity, of unprecedented oppression, of indescribable misery, of severe famine and distress, of unparalleled bloodshed and strife, but now that the dove of peace has returned to its nest and abode a golden opportunity has arisen for the promulgation of the Word of God. This will be now promoted and the Message delivered in this liberated region without the least amount of restriction. This is indeed the Era of Service.

You have undoubtedly done a large amount of work in this respect and the Beloved is eagerly awaiting its fascinating and pleasing account.

Hoping I shall hear from you and from the dear friends,

I remain, your brother in the Cause, Shogi.

LETTER FROM W. TUDOR-POLE

Cairo, Egypt,
December 3, 1918.

Dear Lotfullah:

Very many thanks for your letter of November 3rd, contents of which I will pass on to Abdul-Baha in due course.

The cables you sent have been forwarded to Haifa, and I have just returned from a visit to the Master in Haifa and in Acca. I have written out a full report of this and it will be sent you from my sister probably soon after you receive this letter. This report will give you all the news, and I will write you further when less rushed.

I am very glad to hear of your present valuable and interesting work, and am sure that you could not be doing better things at the present time.

The postal mails are now open to Palestine and letters and cables may be sent direct from England and America to Haifa, and there is no longer need to post through Port Said. Please remember me very kindly to all friends. With best wishes, believe me,

Yours most sincerely,

W. Tudor-Pole.

P. S.—The Master is vigorous and more healthy than when he was in London. He sent his loving greetings to all friends in England and America. I hope he will come down here soon, as the weather is getting cold in Haifa (where there is no real want).....I took a warm Persian cloak to the Master, and am so glad I thought of it, because he had no cloak at all.

LETTER FROM SHOHI EFFENDI
FORWARDED BY W. TUDOR-POLE

(Letter addressed to Major W. Tudor-Pole, at Cairo, Egypt, by Shogi Effendi, the grandson of Abdul-Baha.)

Haifa, Palestine,
December 17, 1918.

My dear spiritual brother:

Your long-expected letter was heartily welcomed, so glad was the Beloved Abdul-Baha to hear from you and through you to know that the friends were all well. In fact, a few days ago, when the Beloved was paying a visit to Colonel Staunton, the Military Governor, Captain Kerr, being in his presence, was asked whether he had any news from you, to which he replied affirmatively. I conveyed your message of love and gratitude to the Master, and we all look forward to the time of meeting you in Haifa, this time we hope more fully. The Beloved's health is excellent, and he reveals these days different Tablets to Persia, Europe and America. Two Tablets have been revealed for England, the latter for Dr. Esslemont, whose supplication I translated yesterday for the Master. I quote fully this Tablet:

TABLET

To his honor Dr. Esslemont—Upon him be greeting and praise!

O thou lover of all mankind!

Verily, have I chanted thy verses of praise to God, inasmuch as He hath illumined thine eyes with the light of guidance, the light of the oneness of the world of humanity; so much so that thy heart overflowed with the love of God and thy spirit was attracted by the fragrance of God, and I supplicate divine Providence that thou mayest become a torch to that gathering, so that the light of knowledge might shine out from thee, that thou mayest be confirmed to act in accordance with the significances of the Hidden Words and strengthened by God under all circumstances.

Concerning the book you are editing, send me a copy thereof. * * * Convey my greetings to the respected maid-servant of God, M.

I pray the Lord to support thee in the service of all humankind, irrespective of race or religion. Nay rather, thou shouldst deal with all according to the teachings of BAHÁ'U'LLÁH, which are like unto life to this Glorious Age.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Beloved was very glad to hear from Miss Rosenberg, whose letter you had sent but without any supplication of yours enclosed. I wonder whether you enclosed any supplication or not.

The Master a few days ago was invited by Colonel Staunton to assist at a meeting of the different religious heads of Haifa, to institute a relief work for the poor of Haifa. The Beloved responded and then after many discussions, when the time of donation came, the Governor announced that although a poor man, yet he would give five English pounds for each of the three religious denominations. Major Nott followed with nine, then publicly and directly the Governor declared that he had the honor of announcing that His Excellency Abbas Effendi (Abdul-Baha) had kindly given the noble sum of fifty Egyptian pounds for the poor, at which all present clapped. Quite a high standard for the Mufti and the Archbishop of Haifa to follow.

The Master uttered the final word of prayer at a public and immense gathering just given to celebrate the end of the war. This is the text of the prayer:

PRAYER

O Omnipotent God! Verily, the pavilion of Justice has been raised in the Holy Land, extending from East to West. We thank Thee and we praise Thee for the establishment of this just and equitable Sovereignty, and this mighty Government which strives for the comfort of its people and the safety of its subjects. O Almighty God! Confirm the Greatest Emperor George V, through Thy divine confirmations, and strengthen him by Thy merciful power, and perpetuate his protecting shadow upon this noble land. This we ask through Thy help, assistance and protection. Verily, Thou art the Omnipotent, the Exalted, the Omniscient and the Generous!

Space forces me to stop, awaiting your news.

Yours very faithfully,

Shogi Rabbani.

Cairo, December 22, 1918.

Dear Lotfullah:

Above will interest you. . . . I have been able to secure the sympathetic support of the British Governors of Haifa and Acca for the Master, and as you will see he is now treated with due respect and asked to take part in the life of the country. . . .

Letter from J. E. Esslemont

West Southbourne, Nr. Bournemouth,
England, January 9, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

I was delighted to receive a copy of the translation of a Tablet which Abdul-Baha has written for me. The translation is by Shogi, a grandson of the Master, and was received on January 3d. The original of the Tablet has not yet arrived. I enclose a copy, which you are at liberty to reproduce in the STAR OF THE WEST, or make any other use if you like. [See page 196.]

Major Tudor-Pole has written a very interesting account of his visit to Acca and Haifa in November last. He reports the Master as exceedingly well and much more vigorous than on the occasion of his last visit to England. He says: "His voice is as strong as ever, his eyes clear, his step virile; his hair and beard are (if possible) more silver white than before. He is delighted to welcome the change of regime. . . ." [See page 187.]

We are delighted to welcome your President (Woodrow Wilson) to Europe and hope that great good will result from his visit. There will be much unrest and fermentation in Europe for years yet, I expect, but unrest is better than the placid acquiescence with vile conditions—with slums, drunkenness, prostitution, sweated labor and profligate extravagance; and it seems to me that on the whole, things are moving towards a better state of affairs—towards the Most Great Peace. There must be destruction before reconstruction, and the old structure of society in Europe had to be thrown on the scrap-heap. The transition will be trying, but now is the time for people with advanced ideas and with the love of humanity in their hearts, to be up and doing. The world is now in a plastic state, and new and better ideals must be deeply imprinted before it becomes rigid again. The Bahai Movement, the Esperanto Movement, and the spirit of peace and brotherhood have glorious opportunities now. As our Scots poet says:

"Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will, for a' that,
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth
Shall bear the gree an' a' that.

For a' that and a' that It's comin' yet for a' that
That man to man, the world o'er,
Shall brithers be, for a' that."

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

J. E. Esslemont.

Tablets revealed by Abdul-Baha in the winter of 1916-17, but just received in America

TABLET TO MRS. ADDISON

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, December 18, 1916. Mailed at that time but returned. Remaild November 11, 1918.)

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Juliet P. Addison—Upon her be greeting and praise!

O thou who art enkindled with the fire of the love of God!

Thy letter was received on November

24, 1916. Thou hast written concerning the trip of the daughter of the Kingdom, Mrs. Ford. That heavenly speaker delivered the divine glad tidings through whichever city she passed and occupied herself in the promotion of spiritual teachings. She suffered the ears to hearken to this heavenly melody. Infinite results and heavenly illumination will appear out of this endeavor and service. It is hoped that other souls will walk in her footsteps, so that they may become the cause of the illumination of the world of humanity. Consider, when the confirmations of God have encircled a soul, how it is assisted to render great services! I hope that this unlimited bounty may encompass one and all.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

TABLET TO MRS. WAITE

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, January 29, 1917. Mailed at that time but returned on account of the war conditions. Remailed October 8, 1918.)

O thou sweet singing bird!

Thy letter was received. From its contents it became evident that thou hast moved from Chicago to Los Angeles. Praise be to God, that thou art engaged and confirmed in the services of the Kingdom of God. With a sweet melody thou art imparting joy and exhilaration to the souls; in the meetings stir and move the audiences through the heavenly call. Arise thou in offering due thanks for this bounty, because thou art assisted in such a Great Cause. The results of thy services thou shalt find in the divine world—the limitless universe of the True One. Their fruits will likewise become apparent ere long in this world.

I perused the article thou hast written concerning the Mashrekol-azkar. Thou hast taken much trouble in the correspondence of Numbers. The digit 9 is the perfect number, and other high numbers are the mere repetition of number 1 to 9. For example: Number 10 is the repetition of number 1; 20 is the repetition of number 2; 100 is the repetition of number 10; 1000 is the repetition of 100, ad infinitum. Consequently the most perfect and greatest number is 9. Extract as far as thou canst the hidden significances from number 5 and 9. Thy reasoning and the power of thy thought are very penetrating. The poem, "Sons of God," that thou hast forwarded was in reality wonderful, sweet, eloquent, and fluent, and its meanings most thrilling. Strive thou in the composition of such pieces, so that at all times the river of pure poesy may flow from thy tongue. The maid-servant of God, who ascended to the divine Kingdom, Taere, made matchless translations of thy poems; she always translated them into Persian poetry, which made them very attractive. Keep the letters which thou hast with thyself; for many letters now mailed from America do not reach us. Praise be to God, that the meetings in Los Angeles are in the utmost state of unity and concord—this news brought to us great happiness. Convey on my behalf to each and all of the believers my loving greetings and kindness. Thou hast written about Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox. This respected lady has infinite capabilities. She is like a lamp filled with oil which no sooner comes in contact with fire than it is set aglow. Now it is thus hoped that she may become enkindled with the fire of the love of God, and her torch become so illumined, so luminous, as to illumine all directions. A letter is written in her name; deliver it to her.

Upon thee be greetings and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

TABLET TO MISS ANNIE BOYLAN

(Translated about two years ago by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, but owing to the war was held in Palestine. Mailed October 12, 1918).

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy postal card received. It indicated thy firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament. Thank thou God that thou art holding fast and art a promulgator of the Covenant of God, art suffering the thirsty ones to drink from the spring of guidance and inviting the hungry ones to the heavenly table. This is one of the greatest bestowals of the Almighty. Thank thou God for it, because thou art confirmed therein. Convey my utmost kindness to the attracted maid-servant of God, Mrs. Krug. It is a long time that we have heard no news from her. Of late, we received the news that her daughter has the intention of marriage. We hope that this marriage will be a blessed one!

In brief, that dear daughter is always remembered. I pray in thy behalf, that day by day thou mayest become more illumined and draw more nigh unto the Kingdom of God.

Convey longing greeting to all the believers and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Two post cards from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

POST CARD TO DENVER

Haifa, Palestine,
December 2, 1918.

Dear brothers and sisters:

The friends in Colorado are especially remembered by the Beloved, and to them he conveys his noble Abha greeting. He desires them to be the promoters of good-fellowship amongst all the nations of the world and the torch bearers of unity between the disunited children of men. Like unto the Rocky Mountains they must raise their heads above the low plains of human thought. They must be the cause of the descent of the rain of mercy upon the dark and barren desert of humanity, suffering the hard hearts to be covered with verdure, blossoms and fruits.

Are you able to render this service to the Cause of your Master?

Ahmad Sohrab.

POST CARD TO ST. LOUIS

Haifa, Palestine,
December 8, 1918.

My dear brothers and sisters:

The Bahais are members of one universal community and the children of the Beloved. He is the kind father to all and he sends you his noble Abha greeting hoping that you may so purify your hearts as to receive the more subtle and spiritual emotions of the Kingdom of Abha. You must become very sensitive to the sufferings and woes of humanity and then find proper ways of their alleviation. Like unto the clear mirror your hearts must reflect the higher and nobler sentiments of this new age and your ears be so attuned as to listen to the music of the invisible choir. Then you are the true servants and maid-servants of the Lord of Lords.

Ahmad Sohrab.

Recent Tablets revealed for Bahais of Egypt and Persia

TABLET TO EGYPT

O ye who are enkindled with the fire of the love of God!

Ever do I inhale the fragrance of faithfulness from the rose-garden of the hearts of the believers and I was filled with joy at the receipt of the good news of the prosperity and success of that merciful community and their humility and submission towards the Cause of God.

Verily, I received a letter from his honor Aga Mohamad Taki, giving the glad-tidings that the friends are in the utmost of joy and fragrance. Spiritual emotions are ever stirred in my heart and the rays of their remembrance and the heat of their love are continually reflected in my soul. I supplicate at the threshold of the Supreme Lord to make them the signs of guidance amongst mankind and as brilliant lamps scattering their lights to all the regions.....

TABLET TO PERSIA

O thou kind friend and spreader of truth!

The eloquent letter of your honor received and its contents imparted the utmost joy, that, praise be to God, this unique newspaper is still being published, showing firmness and steadfastness and during the past years of revolution and commotion it failed not nor was it discontinued. It is hoped that it may become a center through which great and general services may be rendered to the world of humanity. Praise be to God, that although in the past few years many newspapers stopped their publication, this newspaper, which is a well-wisher, remained firm and its issue was not brought to a close.

Should you inquire concerning the conditions of these exiled ones, praise be to God, that notwithstanding thousands of afflictions we are kept safe and guarded in the Fortress of Divine Protection. Verily, this is a most miraculous matter!

Although the booming of cannons and the terrific noises of machine guns had thrown the world into utter commotion and earthquake in Europe and America, the voices of the members of this community were raised, encouraging men to the ideal of universal peace. Many articles were published in the newspapers that the great, final result of this war would not be bad for Persia. The various political parties in Persia, such as the party of Liberty, the Revolutionary party, the Democratic party, the Unionist party, in brief, all these and other parties brought ruin upon that country. But, God willing, ere long these exiled ones will be assisted to render a most great service to Persia and the Persians, because we are taking hold of every effective means and are connected with important personages.

LETTER ACCOMPANYING THESE TABLETS

Haifa, Palestine,
December 16, 1918.

Mr. Joseph H. Hannen,
Washington, D. C.

My dear brother Joseph:

Lately two Tablets have been revealed from the pen of the Center of the Covenant, the translations of which I would like to share with you and the friends. The first is addressed to the believers in Cairo and Port Said, and the second is written to the Editor of a Persian newspaper.....

I am,

Ever your faithful brother,
Ahmad Sohrab.

"Unloose the tongue in teaching the Cause of God"

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

As much as you are able, unloose the tongue in teaching the Cause of God and demonstrate ye extraordinary effort in the guidance of the souls. The Cause of God will advance only through the effect of teaching and the friends will achieve victory through the holy fragrances. I declare by the mystery of existence that were there a number of souls to arise, opening their tongues and delivering the Message with the utmost severance, sanctification, holiness and power of attraction the powers of the world would not withstand them and the hosts of the earth would not prevent them from accomplishing their tasks.

(From the Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, June 25, 1914.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Incidents in the Childhood of Abdul-Baha

IT is good to be a spreader of the Teachings of God in childhood. I was a teacher in this Cause at the age of this child (eight or nine years). This reminds me of a story. There was a man, highly educated, but not a Bahai. I, but a child, was to make of him a believer. The brother of this man brought him to me. I stayed with him, to teach him. He said, "I am not convinced, I am not satisfied." I answered, "If water were offered to a thirsty one, he would drink and be satisfied. He would take the glass. But you are not thirsty. Were you thirsty, then you too would be satisfied. A man with seeing eyes sees. I can speak of the sun to every seeing one, and say it is a sign of the day; but a blind person would not be convinced because he cannot see the sun. If I say to a man with good hearing, listen to the beautiful music, he would then listen and be made happy thereby. But if you play the most beautiful music in the presence of a deaf man, he would hear nothing. Now go and receive seeing eyes and hearing ears, then I will speak further with you on this subject." He went; but later he returned. Then he understood and became a good Bahai. This happened when I was very young.

(Told in Stuttgart, Germany, April 4, 1913.)

When I was a little boy in Teheran I was followed and beaten by the boys and the people because I was a Babi, but my own people were very glad of this, for they knew that the power of God is manifested in persecution. If the tree is watered by the rain and the sun shines upon it, is it any worse for it if a little dust falls upon its leaves? If the father is pleased with his child what does it care about the neighbor's opinion?

(From Book of Miscellany, etc., p. 54.)

I cared more for hearing the Tablets of the Bab recited than anything else. I used to commit them to memory and repeat them. This was the greatest pleasure I knew in my childhood—my play and amusement. I was not fond of study, nor did I care for books.

At Bagdad I rode on horse back; at one time I had an idea that I would like to hunt. So on a certain occasion I joined a party of hunters and went with them to the chase. But when I saw them killing birds and animals, I thought this could not be right. Then it occurred to me that better than hunting for animals, to kill them, was hunting for souls of men to bring them to God. I then resolved that I would be a hunter of this sort. This was my first and last experience in the chase.

At the time when all the inhabitants of Teheran had arisen against the Cause, and the Blessed Perfection was arrested and thrown into a prison, I was a very young child. The jail wherein BAHÁ'O'LLAH was imprisoned was a dark and gloomy cell, underground, and had no aperture, no window save a small door. When the door was unlocked one had to descend many rickety steps before reaching the gloomy, stuffy ground floor. The name of the jailer was Agha Bozorg, and he was an inhabitant of the city of Gazwin. As in the past he had received many favors, bounties and kindnesses from the beloved hands of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, he came one day to our house and took me with him to see my father. Descending half the stairs of the cell, I peered through the darkness to try and see someone. Everything was pitch darkness. Suddenly, I heard the wonderful, resonant voice of the Blessed Perfection: "Take this child away! Do not let him come in!" Obeying the words of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, the jailer took me out and said: "Sit down here and be patient. About noon the prisoners are taken out, and then you can see your father." I sat there. A little after twelve o'clock they brought the prisoners out and among them I saw the Blessed Perfection. A thick heavy chain called, gare kahar, the heaviest and thickest chain of the time, was placed about his holy feet, the end of which dragged along the ground. His neck was also chained with heavy fetters and his hands manacled. Mirza Mahmoud, a most wonderful Bahai, was the fellow prisoner of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. They were chained together. A common, ordinary felt hat, the top of which was worn out and the fringe torn and soiled, was on his blessed head. I cannot describe to you the pain and anguish that attacked and tortured me by this sight of the Manifestation.

When BAHÁ'O'LLAH was imprisoned and chains were around his neck, Abdul-Baha, then eight years old, was with some of the believers in another place. The people finally captured him also. The boys of this place gathered together and began to beat him; about two or three hundred children surrounded him. They beat him severely on the head, cursed him and otherwise persecuted him.

(Notes of three pilgrims to Acca, September, 1901.)

We found Abbas Effendi (Abdul-Baha) surrounded by a band of boys who had undertaken personally to molest him. He was standing in their midst as straight as an arrow—a little fellow, the youngest and smallest of the group—firmly but quietly commanding them not to lay their hands upon him, which, strange to say, they seemed unable to do.

(Words of Beheyah Khanom, sister of Abdul-Baha. From Abbas Effendi, His Life and Teachings, page 14.)

Although he (Abdul-Baha) had not studied in any school, yet, from his youth, fountains of knowledge flowed in his fluent explanations. The first trace which emanated from his holy being in the world of knowledge was the treatise he wrote in his early youth at Bagdad. This was a commentary upon the holy tradition: "I was an invisible Treasury; as I loved to be known, therefore I created men to know Me." He wrote this commentary in answer to the request of one of the Pashas. The author (Abul Fazl) was present at a meeting when some one asked Haji Seyd-Jawad Taba-Tabay of Kerbela concerning the life of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. The great Seyd answered: "That holy being must be a shining light whose great son hath written such a treatise during his childhood."

(Words of Mirza Abul Fazl. From The Bahai Proofs.)

In Bagdad I was a child nine years old. There and then he, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, announced to me the Word, and I believed him. As soon as he proclaimed to me the Word I threw myself at his holy feet and implored and supplicated him to accept this one drop of blood as a sacrifice in his pathway.

(Words of Abdul-Baha. From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Jan. 13, 1914.)

Stories told by Abdul-Baha

THE BOX OF JEWELS.

Once upon a time, there was a king who went out to hunt with all the members of his cabinet, the diplomats, the officials of the court and a large number of important personages, especially invited for this occasion. As the king intended to stay in the country all summer he ordered the master of ceremonies to take the imperial tent which was a wonderful work of art, for the king on important occasions had ordered the inside walls and the ceiling of this royal tent to be decorated with hundreds of precious jewels, the price of which could not be measured by dollars and cents. This year also he asked the minister of finance to take with him the large box of jewels. Finally after many days of preparation the imperial caravan, which was more than a mile long, started out. The king headed the procession. After him came the cabinet ministers, the diplomatic corps, the courtiers and the guests. They had to travel six days before they could reach the hunting ground. On the fourth day of traveling it so happened that the horse carrying the box of jewels was toward the end of the caravan. After three hours' march the king looked around and to his apparent surprise, found no one with him but Ayas and he observed the caravan more than half a mile away from him surrounded with dust and in great confusion. "What is this?" asked the king. "Half an hour ago," Ayas humbly answered, "the box with the jewels fell from the back of the horse and all of the precious stones were scattered on the ground. Then I saw that a wild scramble followed, everyone forgot his duty and each one tried to collect those jewels." The king did not move nor show that an extraordinary event had happened. "Ayas!" the king said after a few moments of reflection, "Why did you not join them and get a portion of the spoil? Are they not precious jewels?" "Yes, my lord! Those jewels are good for them, I preferred to be with thee. Thou art the greatest jewel of my life."

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

HE IS GOD!

French or English?" he asked. Being shy, she did not answer. "If the people ask you whether you are English or French, tell them you are a Bahai. Once upon a time there was a shepherd who tended the sheep of Hossein Ali (BAHA'O'LLAH). He was a very simple man. He could neither read nor write. His neighbors would come and ask him: 'Art thou a Mussulman, a Jew or a Christian?' He did not know how to answer them, but after a moment of reflection he would say, 'I don't really understand your question, but all that I know is that I am the shepherd of Hossein Ali.' . . . Thou art my daughter, my dear little daughter. I want to slap you!" and with great gentleness he patted her cheeks and back.

THE WORLDLY KING'S LAMENT.

It is related that Saboktakeen, one of the renowned ancient kings of Persia, lived in the utmost grandeur and splendor. His palace was like unto the delectable paradise, and his table was provided with royal bounty and his life was like unto a stream of milk and honey. His treasuries were full and his riches unlimited. He was in the utmost joy and happiness. Suddenly he was attacked with a malady and was burning away like unto a candle, and with Jeremiads of disappointments he was singing the most mournful tunes. When he became hopeless of this life, three days before his death, he commanded all his chamberlains, wearing golden girdles, to form a long line, and ordered all the ladies-in-waiting to present themselves before him. His treasures and all his precious jewels were on display before his eyes, and his accumulated wealth was arrayed in dazzling fashion. Then he invited his ministers, courtiers and statesmen to be present in the throne room on a certain hour, and asked his immense army to be engaged in the manoeuvres of victory and triumph in the military square in front of the palace. While sitting on his throne, he looked regretfully, now on this scene, now on another, and again on all this matchless array of grandeur and magnificence and wept most bitterly, crying aloud: "O! Why must I be deprived of this imperial sovereignty and these royal prerogatives? Why should I not enjoy this life? Why bid farewell to all these things? How can I leave them behind and hasten empty-handed from this world to another world?" He wept and wept till he drew his last breath.

KINDNESS TO BIRDS AND ANIMALS.

Did you hear the cooing of the doves? Just now some one fired a gun and they all became silent. How sweetly they coo. How lovely it is to see them enjoying their unrestricted freedom! Is it not cruel to kill these sweet little birds? How much better to see them tamed through the gentleness of man! In many countries of the West, laws are enacted to restrict the cruelty of man toward animals, and in some states they can be hunted only at certain seasons. When I was in America, I went through several large Zoological Gardens, some of which covered many acres. In these gardens hunting is strictly prohibited. There are other large National Parks in Western America which I have not seen, where I have been told, gazelle and deer roam at will and man is not allowed to interfere with their freedom. In these places the animals become so tame that they associate with men. How ideal this is; how perfect, how good!

One day when we were in Bagdad, a company of small birds took refuge in a tree, because they were chased by a hawk. Someone took a gun and fired at the hawk. It fell to the ground dead. The birds became very happy and flew away, circling in the air and singing songs of joy.

Another day we went from Bagdad to Salmani Park, a village several miles from Bagdad. On the way I saw a large bush of thistle, under which numerous sparrows had gathered and over which perched a hawk. The poor sparrows, having seen the hawk, had sought shelter under the clump of thistle and the hawk had followed them. However, fate was against it, for one of the thorns had pierced its breast, causing its death. The sparrows, unaware of this fact, continued to remain there until they died of starvation.

Another day the Blessed Beauty, BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, desired to go to Salmani Park. This village was a country place and its climate being fine, BAHĀ'O'LLĀH liked to go there. A fine white donkey was brought, upon which he rode while several of us followed on foot. When we reached the place, we asked the keeper of the Mohammedan shrine, whether he had anything for us to eat. He had nothing, but told us there was a little hamlet six miles away, where one could buy eggs. At this moment the Blessed Beauty heard our voices and came out of the room. He said: "Tonight, I will cook for you a nice dish." When the time arrived, he said to us: "Bring some dates and butter and I will cook for you a Kurdish dish. Put the butter in the pan, let it be boiled, then pit the dates and put them in. Then stir all with a spoon until they are well mixed." We followed his advice, and the dish turned out to be very delicious. Up to the present time the taste of that dish is in my mouth.

THE INNOCENT BIRDS.

There was a man by the name of Haji Mohammed Taki Shirazi, who had joined our company. He was a great hunter. He was such a fine marksman that while his horse was galloping he could shoot birds on the wing. Riding on his horse, with his gun, he followed us. "Don't kill these innocent birds!" BAHĀ'O'LLĀH said. But the man paid no attention. Without exaggeration, he fired on that day five or six hundred shots but without killing one bird. On our return trip we saw a crane. It was very large. This bird rises very slowly from the ground, but once in the air it flies very rapidly.

When Haji Mohammed Taki saw this crane, he became elated, because he thought he could show his skill here. The bird had just risen from the ground, when he fired the first shot and missed. He fired four more times without success. By this time the bird was high in the air, and he thought now he would surely bring it to the ground and again fired two shots and missed. Because he disobeyed BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, he did not succeed and not a single bullet found its mark.

OBEDIENCE:

During the war against a foreign nation one of the soldiers was stricken with a severe sickness. The military doctor, observing his case, recommended him to the sentry. "Do as I tell you," he said. "This man will not sleep tonight. It is the crucial night of his sickness, but tomorrow morning he will feel much better. Nurse him very carefully and watch over him all night." The doctor went and after sunset the sentry came around to take his position. After an hour or two, he saw the sick man was getting worse, bemoaning and lamenting loudly. In order to alleviate his pain, he gave him an opium pill. As a result of this, he slept soundly all night. In the morning, the doctor came and saw that the condition of the patient was worse than the day before. Not being able to explain this relapse, he sent for the sentry. "What did you give him last night?" "Oh! he was so frantic with pain that I gave him only a pill of opium, after which he slept quietly, all night." "Did you think, that I, a doctor, didn't know this remedy just as well, but I did not give it to him because it would have made him worse?" "What could I do? On my watch-night I wanted to sleep, and this patient disturbed my sleep. I gave him an opium pill and it served its purpose. Tonight there will be another watchman. If the patient is getting worse, it does not trouble me in the least."

INFLUENCE OF MOHAMMED.

When the Mohammedans came and conquered Persia, the chief of the Zoroastrian high priests went to drink wine. Wine is unlawful according to the Mohammedan religion. Whosoever drinks wine is, according to the Mohammedan law, to be punished by eighty-one strokes of the whip. As the chief of the Zoroastrian high priests did drink wine, the Moslems arrested him, tied, struck and whipped him. The Arabs were looked upon as very low by the Persians, and as His Holiness Mohammed was an Arab, the Persians shunned him very much; that is, the Persians would not even count the Arabs as human beings. But when the high priest saw such a power coming forth from the Arabs, whom they had always looked upon as being not even human beings, he began to cry out, saying, "O thou Arabian Mohammed! What hast thou done? What hast thou done which has made thy people arrest the chief, the high priest of the Zoroastrians because he has committed something that is unlawful in thy religion?" Thus was the cause overcome which had caused the Zoroastrian high priest to shun the Mohammedan religion. For he said: "What a great influence Mohammed is exercising!"

REAL CONTENTMENT.

Once upon a time, Salman called on Abouzar. When the lunch time came around, the host brought two loaves of bread and some salt. There was nothing else in the house. Salman, as though talking to himself, said: "I wish there were a little cheese!" Abouzar, feeling ashamed, went out, sold his only goat, bought the cheese and brought it to the table. The guest helped himself generously, and when he was quite satisfied, he raised his hands towards heaven and prayed: "Blessed are those who are satisfied with very little, and are contented." Abouzar, feeling the superfluity of such a prayer, said to his friend: "If thou wert really satisfied, and contented I would now have my goat in the house!"

INSINCERITY.

Once a Mohammedan mullah thought that one of his fingers had become impure, because he had touched an unclean article, and consequently he thought that it must be cut off. Passing by the butcher's shop, he stopped and asked the butcher to cut off his finger. The butcher was astonished, and refused. The mullah explained his reason, and persisted in his extraordinary demand. "All right," said the butcher at last, "put thy hand on this block of wood and I will cut off thy finger." Then taking his large cutting knife, he brought down, with apparent force, its blunt side on the hand of the mullah. No sooner had the mullah felt the harmless pain, than he pulled away his hand, while crying out and cursing the butcher for his merciless, cruel heart: "O thou tyrant! What have I done to thee that thou wilt thus cut my hand?" he bemoaned. The butcher, realizing the utter weakness of the mullah, laughingly said: "Go to; I did not harm thy hand. Thou coward, I just tested thee to see whether thou art made of heroic stuff." Many people think it is easy to walk in the footsteps of the Apostles, but it is most difficult, it is the task of the superman. Only those are able to do this who are awakened with the outpourings of the new spiritual consciousness in this age.

A THANKFUL SUBJECT AND HIS KING.

A great king walking in his garden one day noticed a man, about ninety years old, planting some trees. The king asked what he was doing and the old man answered that he was planting date seeds. "How long before they will bear fruit?" asked the king. "Twenty years," the old man answered. "But you will not live to enjoy the fruit, why then should you plant these trees?" said the king. The man answered: "The last generation planted trees that bore fruit for my benefit, so it is now my duty to plant for the benefit of the next generation."

The king was pleased at this answer so gave the man a piece of money. The gardener fell on his knees and thanked him. The king asked, "Why do you kneel before me?" "Because, your majesty, not only have I had the pleasure or gift of planting these seeds but they have already borne fruit, since you gave me this money." This so pleased the king he gave the man another piece of money.

Again the old gardener knelt, saying, "Again I kneel to thank your majesty. Most trees will bear fruit only once, while these trees of mine have already borne two crops—since you give me two pieces of money."

The king smiled and asked, "How old are you?" The man answered, "I am twelve years old." "How can that be, you are surely a very old man?" The gardener answered, "In the days of the king your predecessor, the people were in a most unhappy state of constant warfare and trouble, so I cannot include that as a part of my life. But since your majesty came to rule, the people are happy, contented and at peace. Therefore, as it is but twelve years since your gracious reign began, I am only twelve years old." This pleased the king so very much that, perforce, he gave the old man another piece of money, saying, "I shall have to leave you now, for your words please me so greatly that if I listen to you longer I shall become a pauper!"

A THIEF.

There is a Persian story of a thief who, in order to rob a certain house, went to work to undermine the foundation. The owner of the house happened to be on the roof and looking down discovered the thief and asked what he was doing. The man replied, "I am trumpeting." "Trumpeting!" exclaimed the owner, "Why you are not making any noise." "Oh no," answered the thief, "you will hear the noise tomorrow!"

Lesson: You are shouting although you are silent; but your words will be heard in the future. The Words of Christ were not heard until three hundred years after his death.

THE BITTER MELON.

A master had a slave who was completely devoted to him. One day he gave the slave a melon which when cut open looked most ripe and delicious. The slave ate one piece, then another and another with great relish (the day being warm) until nearly the whole melon had disappeared. The master, picking up the last slice, tasted it and found it exceedingly bitter and unpalatable. "Why, it is bitter! Did you not find it so?" he asked the servant. "Yes, my Master," the slave replied, "it was bitter and unpleasant, but I have tasted so much sweetness from thy hand that one bitter melon was not worth mentioning."

LEST WE FORGET.

A certain king had a subject who having by a heroic action rescued the king from a great peril, was raised to a position of honor in the royal court. Here he continued to please the king and finally came to occupy an apartment in the palace close to the imperial chambers. The other courtiers of the king naturally became very jealous and lost no opportunity of carrying tales to the king, seeking to lower his opinion of the fortunate subject. One day they reported to the king that this man was unfaithful and dishonorable; that each night after everything was quiet in the palace, it was his custom to go stealthily to a room in a remote corner of the palace carrying a bundle of stolen valuables which he hid there. The curiosity of the king was aroused. He watched and found the report true. Thereupon, he summoned his retinue and next evening when the subject had gone to the room as usual, the king quickly followed, knocked upon the door and demanded entrance. When the door opened, nothing was seen in the room but a dilapidated bed, some old clothes and the suspected servant. "What does this mean?" demanded the king, "Why do you come here like a thief every night and what do you bring in the bundle you carry?" "O King!" replied the subject, "Thou hast blessed me with every gift and kindness, far more indeed than I can ever deserve. By thee I have been raised from poverty and lowliness to greatness and honor. Knowing this and fearing I may grow negligent and fail to appreciate thy bounty and love, I come here each night to pray God that I shall ever remain grateful to thee for thy goodness; bringing with me my old peasant clothes, which I put on and then sleep in the humble bed in which I slept when thy love and mercy first lifted me up from my lowly state. Thus am I taught gratitude and appreciation of thy loving kindness."

A MIRACLE OF BAHĀ'O'LLĀH IN BAGDAD.

There was a man in Bagdad who was the chief of a thousand warriors. These men were not in the regular army, but the Government gave the chief $2,000 a month to divide amongst them with the stipulation that whenever war broke out, this chief with his one thousand strong warriors would join the army. But instead of paying two dollars to his men monthly, he would give them each one dollar and pocket the balance. He abused his soldiers continually. He had also ten colored men in his personal service, but treated them shamefully. He would say: "As the colored people are more faithful, therefore I employ them." One day this man with his evil reputation came to see BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, and afterward came frequently. He gave ear to all his advices and exhortations. Little by little the magical change was wrought; and one day he called together his thousand men and told them that for several years past he had been depriving them every month of half their pay, but that now he had realized his mistake and sought their pardon. From now on they were to receive their full pay of two dollars a month. His men were wild with joy and from that moment they nicknamed him, "The-darling-of-our-heart." Then he went to his home and called together his ten negro servants and told them he was extremely sorry for his treatment of them, that he now knew better; that he would try to amend the past by being kind to them and would treat them as if they were his real sons. Often I called upon him and enjoyed the intimate relation which existed between this man and his "negro sons." They adored him. Then, before his death, he incorporated a clause in his will that his "negro sons" should be free, and bequeathed to them a quarter of all his possessions.

By relating to you this story I want to impress upon your minds what miracles the love of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH can accomplish. This man was not a Bahai—he did not believe in BAHĀ'O'LLĀH—he simply loved him. We who believe in him must most naturally do a hundred times more than this simple man. We must be ever ready to sacrifice our lives through the power of faith.

USELESS MEDITATION.

Once there was a man who had a negro servant. His name was Kafour. Having decided to make a journey, he bought a horse, and took Kafour with him. After traveling all day, they reached a small ruined caravanserai, and realizing how tired they were they resolved to pass the night here, and refresh with sleep their weary bodies and continue their journey the next morning. As that locality was lately infested with robbers, they decided that the master should sleep until midnight, while Kafour kept guard over the horse. Then he (Kafour) would sleep in turn and the master would sit awake. After their supper the master slept, but after an hour he awoke and asked: "Kafour, what are you doing?" He (Kafour) answered: "I am meditating!" "On what are you meditating?" "I am meditating on the subject of—Why God has fashioned the edges of these thistles so sharp and cutting." "Very good!" the master chuckled to himself as he drew his head under the blanket, "continue to meditate. That is a good subject."

Again he awoke half an hour before midnight and asked Kafour pleasantly: "On what are you meditating now?" "O Master! I am meditating as to who is going to carry on his back tomorrow morning the saddle and the bridle."

SELFISH PRAYER.

It is said that once a Mohammedan, a Christian and a Jew were rowing in a boat. Suddenly a tempest arose and the boat was tossed on the crest of the waves and their lives were in danger. The Mohammedan began to pray: "O God! Drown this infidel of a Christian!" The Christian supplicated the Almighty: "O Father! Send to the bottom of the deep this Moslem!" They observed the Jew was not offering any prayer, and therefore asked him: "Why do you not pray for relief?" He answered, "I am praying. I am asking the Lord to answer the prayers of both of you!"

HOW THE FARMER SAVED HIS COTTON.

Once upon a time, there was a poor fellah (farmer) who cultivated a patch of ground with cotton. His neighboring farmers were all rich landlords and Pashas, and so they prevented in a high-handed manner this poor farmer from receiving his just share of water wherewith to irrigate his parched farm. He appealed several times to their sense of justice, but they laughed him out of their presence. Finally, realizing that his cotton would dry and his labors fail of result, he went one midnight and changed the current of the stream toward his own farm, and irrigated it most thoroughly. When in the morning the landlords saw what their neighbor had done so daringly, they sent for him and rebuked him severely. Not being satisfied with this, they bastinadoed him very hard. While he was undergoing this cruel punishment, he cried out: "O ye men! I have already irrigated my farm. This will do you no good. I have saved the crop from destruction by the drought! Why do you inflict upon me such a useless torture? The earth is watered!"

THE THEOLOGIAN AT SEA.

Once there was a theologian who took a sea trip. While he was walking on the deck and watching the calm sea, the captain passed by and inquired about his health. Our friend was so full of his theology that he asked the captain: "Do you know theology?" He answered: "No." "Then," our student declared with much pompous dignity, "half of your life is lost." The captain did not answer him, but continued his walk. Another day the sea became very stormy and the ship was in danger of being wrecked. The captain called on the theologian and found him prostrated with sickness. "Do you know how to swim?" he asked. "No." "Then, all your life is lost!" the captain roared at him.

THE CAMEL AND THE CANNON.

Mohammed Ali Pasha had a big, fat camel. When the Hajis started on their long pilgrimage to Mecca through the desert, he ordered a rapid-fire gun to be mounted on the back of the camel and fired each time that they halted. The ear of the camel was so accustomed to the thundering noise of the cannon that although it was fired on its back, it never moved. Because this camel performed such an important service and carried such a heavy load, the Pasha had ordered that it could graze through anybody's farm without any hindrance. Having reached a station, the camel entered the farm of a poor farmer. In his absence he had left a young boy to drive away the animals. On seeing the camel the boy started to scare it away by firing in the air with a small revolver. "What are you doing, my boy?" a Haji asked. "I want to scare away this camel." "O, don't trouble yourself. On the back of this camel a cannon is fired twice daily, and it does not move. Do not expect to scare him away with the sound of a small revolver."

THE DEAD DOG.

The disciples of Jesus passing along the road and seeing a dead dog, remarked how offensive and disgusting a spectacle it was. The Christ turning to them said, "Yes, but see how white and beautiful are its teeth!" Thus teaching that there is some good in everything.

THE CLAY BIRD.

In the Koran are many things referring to Christ not mentioned in the Gospel. For instance: It is said that Christ took a bit of clay and shaped it into the form of a bird. Then he blew upon it, and it flew away.

The interpretation of this is that the bird symbolizes an earthly man, who received spiritual education through the Christ. The story says: "He blew upon it, and it flew away." This means that the man received the breath of Life

Eternal, and through this enlightenment, soared into the Heaven of Knowledge.

THE NEED OF ONE LANGUAGE.

At the city gate four travelers sat, a Persian, a Turk, an Arab and a Greek. They were hungry and wanted their evening meal. So one was selected to buy for them all. But among them they could not agree as to what should be bought. The Persian said angoor, the Turk uzum, the Arab wanted aneb and the Greek clamored for staphylion green and black. They quarrelled and wrangled and almost came to blows in trying to prove that the particular desire of each was the right food. When all of a sudden there passed a donkey laden with grapes. Each man sprang to his feet and with eager hands pointed out: "See uzum!" said the Turk. "See aneb!" said the Arab. "See angoor!" said the Persian. And the Greek said, "See staphylion!" Then they bought their grapes and were at peace.

THE ARAB AND THE KING.

It is said that at one time a king went out traveling incognito. He put on an humble suit of clothes and started on his way in a scorching desert and finally reached the door of an Arab tent. The Arab finding the man exhausted from heat and hunger dragged him under the shade. When the king was revived he asked the Arab what he had to eat and drink. "I have a goat skin of wine and a little goat," the Arab answered. "Very well, bring the wine and kill the goat to be cooked," he said. The wine was brought. When the king drank one cup of wine he looked at the Arab and said: "Do you know who I am?" "No." "Then you must know that I am a soldier in the king's army." The Arab was glad to entertain a brave man. The king drank another cup of wine. "Do you know who I am?" "Who are you?" "I am a minister in the king's council chamber." "I am delighted to receive such a distinguished statesman." A third cup was taken. "Do you know who I am?" "Well!" "I am the king himself." The Arab could not stand it any longer. He arose and took the goat-skin of wine from him. "Why do you do this?" the guest asked astonished. "Because I believe if you drank another cup you would be the Prophet of God, and a fifth cup would raise you to the station of God, so it is better for you to stop."

STORY OF JESUS AND THE POOR MAN WHO WANTED TO MARRY A PRINCESS.

It is said that Jesus entered a village. In those days many houses were broken into and everything carried away by the robbers; hence the authorities had issued an order that none of the inhabitants should entertain strangers in their homes, fearing that they might be in alliance with the robbers outside. Jesus stopped before the house of a very poor old woman, and knocked at the door. The old woman opened the door, and saw that Jesus was seeking a shelter. Looking into the face of Jesus, and beholding his gentleness, humility and spirituality, she did not have the heart to refuse him and send him away. Therefore with the utmost respect she invited him to enter the house. From his speech and conduct, the old woman intuitively felt that she was entertaining more than an ordinary mortal. She came forward and kissing his hand said: "Save my son, I have no one else in this world. Up to a short time ago he has been sober, intelligent and industrious, and his income is our sole support. But now he has become moody, morose and irritable. Where as formerly ours was a home of joy and happiness, now it is changed into a home of mourning and sadness. He works all day, but when he comes home he does not speak, and moves restlessly all night in his bed. To all my pleading questions, he turns away his face and does not answer."

Jesus said: "Send him to me. I will speak with him!" After sunset, the son returned to the house. His mother went to him and said, "We have a guest tonight who is noble and spiritual. If you have any trouble go and tell it to him. I feel sure he can help you." At first he did not want to go, but the solicitous mother persuaded him to do so. At last he consented. Entering the room, he found Jesus sitting on the floor. Immediately Jesus was on his feet, welcoming the wayward son. After a few moments of intimate talk, Jesus asked the boy: "Well, my son, tell me, what troubles you? What is the cause of your worry?" He replied: "Nothing." "You are not telling the truth. I know you are laboring under the weight of a great pain, my son. Tell me the cause of your trouble. I am interested in your welfare and my heart is full of sympathy for you. Rest assured that I will not divulge your secret to any human being. I will keep it to myself and will do my utmost to lighten the burden. Am I not your kind father and you my beloved son?" "My pain is irremediable!" the boy said, softening the tone of his answer somewhat under the loving gaze of Jesus. "I will find a remedy for it," Jesus answered. "Oh! I know so well that no one is able to take away this load from my heart." "I am able!" "But you are powerless. You are a poor man like us. You have no remedy for my malady." "I am powerful, and I am a physician for all manner of diseases!" "This is impossible. There is no man living who can claim so much," he said, yet impressed by the gentle authoritative tone of Jesus. "Come! Come! Tell me the secret of your heart!" "But I feel ashamed to confess it to you." "Did I not tell you that you are my son? And why should there be anything but perfect trust between the son and the father?" "But I feel it is not proper to speak about these things. Beside, I cannot find words to adequately express my inmost feelings and then I am afraid I shall be misunderstood." "No! No! You are my real son! I will surely understand you. Be not afraid. Be frank!" After a moment of silence he said: "In the neighborhood of this village there is the summer palace of the king. Once I saw his daughter walking in the meadows. I loved her at first sight. She is the daughter of a mighty king, and I am a poor, miserable thorn-picker. I cannot say more!" And he began to weep. His Holiness consoled him and said: "Rest assured, God willing, your hope will be realized."

In brief, after awhile Jesus so arranged everything that the king consented to give his daughter to the poor thorn-picker. For days the royal preparations went on, and the date for the marriage was fixed. All the time the boy was very happy: he thought he was in a fairy dreamland; he could not believe that this was all real. When he entered the marriage room, and saw all around the exquisite decorations and furnishings, and then looked into the face of the beautiful bride—suddenly a thought sprang up in his mind: "This man (Jesus) has been the instrument of giving to me this undreamed of felicity, this wonderful bride for whom I was pining in my solitude in the wilderness; he has made it possible for me to enjoy all this luxury and comfort. If he were so powerful to prepare all these things for me, a poor peasant boy, why should he not have done the same for himself? If he could spread such a banquet of rejoicing for me, he could do it for himself a hundred times better. Notwithstanding this ideal power, he is still walking in the wilderness, eating the grass, sleeping on the ground, sitting in the darkness and living altogether a life of poverty." No sooner had this thought come to his mind than he turned his face to his bride, and said: "Stay where you are; I have important business to attend to. I shall return as soon as I have finished my work." This said, he ran out of the room and hastened toward the wilderness.

After much search, he found Jesus sitting on a rock. Impetuously he prostrated on the ground, and kissed his feet and hands. "O my Lord! Thou wert not just towards me. Thou hast not treated me fairly." "How is that? Why so? Have I not realized for thee the highest desire of your heart?" "Yes, yes! But you have desired for me that which you would not desire for yourself. Surely, surely, you must possess something by far greater and more important than that which you bestowed upon me. If these things were acceptable and worthy of possession, you would have chosen them for yourself. Therefore, it is self-evident that you have something more valuable and precious than all these things. Oh! I feel so sad and ashamed, because you have granted me those things which are not worthy of your own consideration!"

His Holiness smiled and said: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, thou art telling the truth. But hast thou the capability and worthiness to possess that pearl of Great Price?" "O my Lord and my hope! I will strive and pray to become worthy!" "Art thou able to leave all these things behind?" "Yes." "Then verily I declare unto thee, I possess the mysteries of the Kingdom, which are the Knowledge of God, the Love of God and the Guidance of God. These are greater than all worldly possessions. Now if thou art willing to possess the jewels of the Kingdom, follow me." He followed Christ till they joined the apostles. Then addressing his disciples, he introduced to them his new follower: "I have had a treasure which was hidden in this village. I have just now unearthed it. Here is my treasure."

(Told by Abdul-Baha. From Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, July 3, 1914.)

JUSTICE.

A certain ruler wished to appoint one of his subjects to a high office, so in order to train him, the ruler cast him into prison and caused him to suffer much. The man was surprised at this for he expected great favors. The ruler had him taken from prison and beaten with sticks. This greatly astonished the man for he thought the ruler loved him. After this he was hanged on the gallows until he was nearly dead. After he recovered he asked the ruler: "If you love me, why did you do all this?" The ruler replied: "I wish to make you Prime Minister. By having gone through these ordeals you are better fitted for that office. I wish you to know how it is yourself. When you are obliged to punish, you will know how it feels to endure these things. I love you so that I wish you to become perfect."

God sometimes causes us to suffer much and to have many misfortunes that we may become strong in His Cause.

(Words of Abdul-Baha, Oct. 10, 1912.)

Story told by Mirza Abul Fazl—An incident in his prison life

LONGING FOR MARTYRDOM.

When he was imprisoned in Teheran with eleven others, there was an old man among them by the name of Mirza Mohammed Reza. He was well known for three rare qualities, firmness, fearlessness and truthfulness. He defied all the prison authorities by his courage; awed all the enemies by his firmness and set at naught the intrigues of all the foes through his truthfulness. "Whenever," Mirza Abul Fazl said, "one of the ministers of the court, Hajeb-Ed-Dowleh, came to the prison to investigate the conditions of some one, Mirza Mohammed Reza would run to him and keep on talking into his ears for a few minutes with great earnestness. Finally Hajeb-Ed-Dowleh would turn to him and with a despairing look say: "Sir, this is impossible. I cannot do it. Why did you not ask the Prince Naye-Os-Sultaneh about it? He can do it. He is the one in authority." At last one day we asked him, "What is this you are constantly asking the Hajeb-Ed-Dowleh whenever he comes to the prison, and which he so emphatically refuses you?" He said: "I ask and plead with him to sentence me to death. I tell him I am an old man; I am of no good to the world. I want to bathe my body in blood for the sake of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH. Please! Please! I beg of you to do something for me. Is this too much of a favor that I ask of you? Are you not kind enough to fulfill this last wish of an old man? Praise be to God, that you are an influential man—but he does not listen to me, and answers me loudly the way you have all heard." At another time the chief of the jailers passed by him and scornfully pointed out his long hair. "Why do you keep your hair so long? What for?" he asked, and laughed. Mirza Mohammed Reza asked him: "What is that insignia on thy breast?" "It is the sign of my office," he answered, with great flourish. "So is this"—and he pointed to his hair—"the sign of a Bahai!"

A LETTER FROM MANDALAY.

Mandalay, December 3, 1918.

To William H. Randall, Esq.,

Boston, U. S. A.

Dear Bahai brother:

We are extremely thankful to you for your esteemed favour of the 5th of September, 1918, received only last week, contents of which delighted the hearts and uplifted the spirits. It was read and explained in our spiritual congregation held on the celebration of the Holy Fete day of our Beloved Master Abdul-Baha on the 26th of November, 1918, also passed over to other assemblies in Burma.

Oh dear brother! You know well how we must have felt through its effects, our hearts were filled with the thrills of joy and happiness as its contents were evidently proving the pure love of God, His Unity and Oneness. No matter how far we live there is no distance in the spiritual realm. We can easily communicate with each other in our spiritual Kingdom without the obstruction of all things in the world; as the hearts are clear and pure like a mirror we could freely behold the brilliant faces of our dear brothers and sisters in America.

We earnestly pray for physical fulfillment of the same after the expected World-Peace, which will prove materially also the unity and oneness of the East and West.

We thank you again for your kind acknowledgement of the receipt of the draft for $273.36, and further we note that Mrs. Corinne True will be pleased to send us the actual receipt for the said amount, for which we express our thanks in anticipation.

As the above sum of remittance was contributed from the various sources and different assemblies, we beg to move the Exalted Board that its Honorable members will kindly record the following account for the future references.

Contributions from the following Bahai Assemblies:

Mandalay (Burma)	374	rupees
Chittagong (Bengal).....	49	“
Rangoon (Burma).....	137	“
Kungyangon (Burma)	200	“

In conveying you and to all our beloved friends in America our best Bahai loving-greetings, we express our deepest affection from all friends in Burma to the dear friends in America, and praying earnestly with you at the Holy Threshold, that the Divine Will may speedily become realized and that composure and happiness may penetrate the affairs of the nations.

Although your kind note was addressed to our beloved brother and teacher, Mr. Syed Mustafa, we sought this privilege to communicate to you through him, as the object is one and the spirit of love, unity and oneness is the same. We hope that you will always write to us, for which we thank you and all beloved friends in anticipation.

We are your humble brothers and sisters in the Holy Covenant,

Syed Mustafa

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Letter from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, at Cairo, Egypt, to the Bahai friends in America

Cairo, Egypt,
January 1, 1919.

To the friends in the United States of America!

My dear brothers and sisters in the Cause!

It is with great pleasure that I take up the pen to write you these few words about our experiences since our departure from the presence of Abdul-Baha. Before everything else I wish you a very happy new year, a new year full of joy and prosperity and pregnant with peace and brotherhood.

Praise be to God, that from the hour that I left Haifa with my travelling companion, Dr. Aflatoon, who is on his way to Bagdad, the confirmation of the Beloved has been descending upon us uninterruptedly.

On December 23d, in the morning, I came down from the Mountain of God for the last time. I was introduced into the presence of the Master, and up to 11 a. m. I was with him, receiving his sacred instructions. He assured me that he will pray for my help in the middle of nights and with this heavenly promise he embraced me and kissed both my cheeks, sending me into the world with a heart full of desire to serve him. At 11:30 we left Haifa on the officers' train and on our way to Toul-Karem we made friends with a number of military men, talked with them about the Cause and gave them to read Major Tudor-Pole's article published in the Palestine News of Dec. 19th, on "Abdul-Baha." They became very much interested, and we left them to themselves, either to continue their investigation or drop it out of their lives. In Toul-Karem, the black soldiers of the West Indian Islands were most kind to us, and gave us shelter from rain and bad weather. With them we had a most profitable talk. I got the addresses of some of them, so that when I am in the United States, either Mr. Gregory or myself may travel to those islands and diffuse the fragrance of the Paradise of Abha. In the evening we slept in a train and became good friends with the two English engineers. We spoke to them a little about the Cause, and as they were working on Haifa-Toul-Karem road, we gave them the address of the Beloved to call on him.

On December 24th we were obliged to stay in Toul-Karem till afternoon, and continued our spiritual talks with our black, polite friends. One of them, Mr. Jardine from _____ was very illumined, had a good heart and knew a great deal from the Bible. The interchange of our ideas was most helpful to both of us. At 3 p. m. we left in open cars with hundreds of Indian soldiers returning home, while the rain was pouring on our heads. Those who were in our car were Mohammedans, and their treatment of us was kindly and considerate. Much we talked together about Islam and its modern aspect, leading its adherents to a higher plane of thought. At 7 p. m. we reached Ludd, and in the midst of a great confusion, God assisted us, through the kindness of some officers, to take another train for Kantara at 10 p. m. On the train we befriended a Persian Jew from Jerusalem, who spoke our language fluently, and our talk with him was about the fulfillment of the prophecies in this great day. He became interested, and we enjoyed his orthodox views on this fascinating subject.

On December 25th, being Christmas, the soldiers had a general holiday. Our train was flying through the untrodden wilderness of sands, the wilderness in which Moses and his people lived for forty years. It is indeed a most wonderful testimony to the engineering feat and skilfulness of England, that during the war she was thus enabled to construct this double-track, broad-gauge railroad from Cairo to Toul-Karem, and now it has reached Haifa and Acca, so that a person may now travel from Haifa to Cairo in less than twenty-four hours.

A long time before our train reached Kantara, we could see the British soldiers engaged in various games. In Kantara, which is no other than a vast and populous city of tents, our baggage was carefully examined by the authorities, and through the divine confirmation we were excused from six days of long, weary quarantine. With a joyful heart we took the train for Cairo a little after 12 o'clock, and about 5:30 p. m. we entered the great station. All along the way, the crowds of people, the prosperous looking men and women, the hustle and bustle, the green, fertile fields, astonished and delighted us in turn. Indeed Egypt has not known the evils and sufferings of this devastating war. People are laughing, making lots of money, and have generally a good time. Mokat-tam, the Arabic daily, says that the people of Egypt have profited during this war at least £35,000,000. This is a good deal of money, and the inhabitants of Egypt have never been so prosperous in the course of their long and ancient history. Although we had sent a telegram to Agha Mohamad Taki about our arrival, yet he did not receive it in time to meet us at the station, so we went to Eden Palace Hotel to spend the evening. Here we rested awhile and because I had nothing particular to do, I strolled along the brilliantly lighted and crowded thoroughfares. After five years of calm and quiet life in Haifa, I find myself in a seething center of humanity. Everything strikes my eyes with wonder and astonishment, and I walk along the avenues like a dazed man. At last I found myself in Avenue Boulac, and at the door of Minerva Hotel. Here I called on Miss Hiscox. Her meeting gave me much pleasure. She is well, firm in the Covenant, and happy in her chosen work. Till 10 p. m. I sat with her, and our conversation was naturally about Abdul-Baha, his health and the recital of the sad events of the last four years of war.

On December 26th, so soon as we got up we hired a carriage and called on Mohamad Taki. Here we met a number of old and tried friends, such as Haji Niaz, whose eyes have become very, very dim, and Sheikh Mohyeddin, a great teacher. They were all delighted to talk with us, as we are practically the first persons coming out of Palestine and bringing the tidings of the Beloved. At noon, Mirza Abul Cassim Galestane invited us to lunch with him in a Persian restaurant. Strangely coinciding with our arrival, on this day happened the death of the 16-year-old talented daughter of Agha Sayad Ali, her name being Malakoutieh. For the last two years she was suffering from consumption, and all the resources of medicine could not stop the slow progress of the disease. In the afternoon we called on the afflicted family. The father was sad and weeping. All the members of the family were in a great anguish.

Here we met many of the friends and delivered to them Tablets and messages brought from Haifa. Then we were called upon to deliver short talks, suitable to the occasion. As they were all preparing the ways and means of her burial, Haji Niaz took us back to our hotel, and in the evening Agha Mohamad Taki invited us to a thoroughly Persian dinner. All the friends are extremely kind and are anxious to hear the news of the good health of the Beloved, the holy family and the friends.

The morning of December 27th was spent in calling at the passport offices and the preliminary arrangement of my trip to the United States, and I called on Major Tudor-Pole in Savoy Hotel, both in the morning and the evening. He is well, happy and very devoted to the Cause. His article in the Palestine News has made acquainted with the Cause many officers, and has called forth another short article by a Major, published in copy of December 26th, on "The Bahai Cause and Esperanto." Major Tudor-Pole gave me a hearty welcome and expressed his readiness to help me through the maze of officialdom in acquiring my traveling passport. All day we were entertained by a young Bahai who took us to a typically Egyptian restaurant, made us ride in a carriage and drove us through the many beautiful public parks, scattered here and there. In the evening there was a general meeting of all the believers in the Mashrekol-azkar. Detailed speeches were delivered by Doctor Aflatoon and myself. As many young Egyptian friends were present, our talks were translated into Arabic for their benefit. All of them listened with shining eyes and happy hearts. As the location of our hotel was remote from the friends, we moved to another one, near to them, called The Egyptian Club. This evening also we were entertained to dinner by Agha Mohamad Taki.

On December 28th I called on the Persian Consul General in order to get a new passport. He met the Master before the war, and knows a great deal about the Cause. He is an enthusiastic lover of Persia, and free from the narrow prejudices of many bigoted Persians. He praised the Bahais very fervently, especially Agha Mohamad Taki. "Although he is a Bahai," he said, "yet I believe as truth all that he tells me, because I know that he is essentially a good and righteous man; but there are many important Persians in this city who are Moslems, still I cannot trust them because their lives are not straight and their aims are selfish." He desired the Bahais to render a most concrete and practical service to Persia. He related to us the harrowing details of the sufferings of the Persian people during the past years of war, of the devastation and cruel havoc wrought by the great war, the laying waste and burning of villages, the hanging of many prominent citizens and the death caused by famine and starvation. He said now that the English and Americans have gained a complete victory, they are doing their utmost to relieve this dire situation. In turn I spoke about analogous subjects. He asked about the health of the Beloved and requested me to send him his sincere greeting. During the day, in all my peregrinations, Mirza Abdol Hossein, the son of Mohamad Taki, was my guide, and we called on some of the friends who have prosperous businesses in various parts of the town.

On December 29th, accompanied by my dear brother Abdol Hossein, I took my snapshot photo for the Persian and American passports, which I have to get before starting westward. In the afternoon, we called at the office of Agha Zeinel Abedin and had tea with him, and later on with Haji Niaz we visited the Persian Editor of Tchere Nama. For

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA.

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Nearly one hundred Tablets revealed for the Bahai friends in America

PARVENE
Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Bagdadi

WORD FROM SHOGLHI EFFENDI, GRANDSON OF ABDUL-BAHA

Haifa, Palestine,
January 29, 1919.

To Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago.

Dear brother in El-Abha:

Greetings and salutations! Your supplications are arriving; the news of the friends of God noted. A Tablet has been revealed for you; a telegram dispatched. So far, the Beloved (Abdul-Baha) has revealed nearly one hundred Tablets for the friends in the United States of America. Some of them have been dispatched and others will be. Convey the glad-tidings to the friends. Beloved in perfect health. Supplications and cables are pouring in constantly from morn till eve; life-giving words are revealed. From Persia, India, Japan, France, England and Switzerland, letters and telegrams are showering. The friends are ablaze and serve heartily. In the Tablets revealed, ninety-five per cent strike the chord of union and the note of absolute harmony among the friends. The Beloved declares that if the union and concord among the friends of the Merciful is strengthened and fortified, it shall, like unto a lodestone, attract Abdul-Baha to their shores. Abha greetings.

Shoghi

P. S.—Your daughter is named Parvene by the Master.

Letter from Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, at Cairo, Egypt

about two hours we talked about the conditions of Persia, and the possibility of its future progress, and how and in what manner and by whom the vital interests of that ancient country will be represented at the Great Conference of Nations in Paris. In his newspaper, a long article will appear by me on the internal conditions of Syria during the war. In the evening a meeting was held at the house of Agha Mohamad Taki. It was rather a memorial service in honor of the deceased Agha Sayad Javad. The Visiting Tablet revealed by the Beloved some time ago was chanted, other Tablets were read and appropriate speeches delivered. All the friends were submerged in the sea of divine grace. After this beautiful meeting, we were the guests of Agha Zeinel Abedin for dinner. About twelve other believers were also invited, and a royal feast of many delicacies (Persian dishes) was spread before us. Indeed our kind host made us ashamed of ourselves by the attention and kindness he showered upon these unworthy servants. It is of course because we come direct from the Master at this psychological moment that they surround us with so much hospitality. Otherwise we would have been alone and friendless in this great city. We are now most happy in associating day and night with these firm friends of God. They do not let us alone for one hour.

We live hardly in our hotel except during the few hours of sleep. They are set aglow with the fire of the love of God, full of firmness in the Covenant, resolving to arise in teaching the Cause and spreading the sweet fragrances. There are so many young, educated Egyptian Bahais, filled with noble ideals and intent on serving the Cause of brotherhood and peace. Mahmoud Fahmy is one of them. He speaks English fluently and is a teacher in the Government school. These young, enthusiastic friends will become greatly assisted to teach the Cause in the immediate future, and I am most happy to come in contact with them and receive their inspiration in my work. We are all under the protecting shade of the Beloved. He will surely assist us to be firm in the Covenant of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and to call others to this high station of spirituality. All that we have to do is to trust him and live in accord with his will. This is the crown of success and the supreme aim of every Bahai. For the present I may stay in Cairo for about two weeks. The believers do not want us to leave the city sooner.

In the full expectation that I will have the joy of seeing you before long, I am, as ever,

Your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

Bring them together again, O Lord, by the Power of Thy Covenant, and gather their dispersion by the might of Thy Promise, and unite their hearts by the dominion of Thy Love; and make them love each other so that they may sacrifice their spirits, expend their money, and scatter themselves for the love of one another.

O Lord, cause to descend upon them quietness and tranquillity! Shower upon them the clouds of Thy Mercy in great abundance, and make them to characterize themselves with the characteristics of the spiritual!

O Lord, make us firm in Thy noble command, and bestow upon us Thy Gifts through Thy Bounty, Grace and Munificence.

Verily, Thou are the Generous, the Merciful, and the Benevolent.

—ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“Blessed is the one who has believed on Thee”

Extracts from The Visiting Tablet which all pilgrims chant in the Tomb of
BAHA'O'LLAH

THE praise that appeared from Thy supreme soul and the glory (El-Baha) that dawned from Thy most glorious (El-Abha) Beauty be upon Thee, O Thou Manifestation of the Almighty, King of Immortality and Lord of whomsoever is in earth and heaven.

I testify that, by Thee was revealed the Sovereignty of God and His dominion and the greatness of God and His might, and by Thee arose the suns of eternity in the heaven of destiny and dawned the invisible Beauty from the horizon of Baha. And I testify that by a movement of Thy pen appeared the order of Kaf and Nun* (be and it is) the hidden mystery of God was manifested, creation commenced and the manifestations (prophets) were sent.

And I testify that by Thy Beauty appeared the Beauty which is worshipped and by Thy face was revealed the Face of the Desired One, and by a word of Thine a separation (differentiation) affected the creation; the sincere advanced to the lofty summit and the polytheists descended to the lowest state.

And I testify that whosoever knows Thee verily knows God, and whosoever attains Thy meeting has verily attained the meeting of God.

Therefore, blessed is the one who has believed on Thee, attained Thy good pleasure, walked about Thine abode and presented himself before Thy throne.

*Kaf (English) is the first letter of the Arabic word “Kun” which signifies, be. Nun (English) is the last letter of the Arabic word “fayakun” which signifies, it is.—Translator.

Intercession, a special teaching of this Religion

The following was sent by Miss Ethel Rosenberg from her notes while in Acca 1904. (Extract from the Teachings of Abdul-Baha.)

THE Master said that by the mercy of God, not through His justice, the condition of those who have died in sin and unbelief can be changed. We are commanded to pray that their condition may be changed. As we have the power to pray for those souls here, so we shall have the same power in the after-life in the Kingdom. The power of this prayer of intercession is a special teaching of this religion. To pray for the dead was not given as a special religious command (of the divine Teachers) until this day of the Blessed Perfection (BAHA'O'LLAH). The grace of effective intercession is one of the perfections belonging to perfect and advanced souls, as well as to the Manifestations of God. Jesus Christ had the power of interceding for the forgiveness of his enemies when on earth, and he certainly has this power now!

Abdul-Baha never mentions the name of a dead person without saying, “May God forgive him!” or words to that effect. He says, “Followers of the prophets have also this power of praying for the forgiveness of souls; therefore we may not think that any soul is condemned to a stationary condition of suffering or loss, arising from their absolute ignorance of God. The power of effective intercession for them always exists. All the people in the other world, are they not the creatures of God? Therefore, they can progress in the other world. As they can receive light from supplication here, there they can also receive light from supplication. The rich in the other world can help the poor, as the rich can help the poor here. In every world all are the creatures of God. They are always dependent upon Him, not independent, nor can they ever be so. While they are needful of God, the more they supplicate, the richer they become. What is their merchandise?

What is their wealth? In the other world what is the means of help and assistance? It is intercession. First, undeveloped souls must gain progress through the supplications of the spiritually rich; afterwards, they can progress through their own supplications."

In Memoriam

DR. JAMES F. CARMICHAEL

Dr. James F. Carmichael passed to his true home, December 6th, 1918, at 9:00 p. m. at the home of his sister, Mrs. (Colonel) D. Spence at Brantford, Canada, after three years suffering with neuritis. While suffering terrible pains he would exclaim with a smile: "BAHA'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha will take care of me." The Most Great Name always brought relief.

The moment he heard of the Revelation—May, 1899—he accepted and remained a firm believer under the most severe tests. The heavenly light that spread over his face as his soul took its upward flight was startling and seen by all. Strangers and friends exclaimed alike: "O see the light!" His widow and four sisters survive. He received several wonderful Tablets from Abdul-Baha. The following is an extract from a recent Tablet received by Mrs. Carmichael in answer to a supplication written by her prior to Dr. Carmichael's passing, but which was revealed after his ascension:

"Concerning what you have written about your dear husband, be thou not grieved for, praise be to God, he has attained unto everlasting life and has reaped the fruit of his existence on earth, and this is faith and the complete turning of the face toward the Kingdom of God. This is verily everlasting health; this is eternal comfort; this is heavenly exaltation and this is merciful bounty."

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, January 9, 1919, home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

Dr. Carmichael was a B. A. of Queens University, also a graduate of Osgood Hall, Toronto, Canada, as barrister and solicitor, and a graduate of Bennett's Medical College, Chicago, Ill. He was a member of the Chicago and American Medical Societies, also an I. O. O. F. and Rebekah of Chicago, Ill.

GEORGE P. PARMERTON

On April 26, 1918, Mr. Parmerton of Cincinnati, Ohio, passed from this world. He had been in poor health for several years and the last year was one of great suffering endured with heroic patience. His love for the Center of the Covenant and the Greatest Name sustained him. On Sunday evening, the Bahai friends assembled at the home and the Bahai service for the dead was beautifully conducted in all simplicity; on Monday, in Spring Grove Chapel, the Presbyterian service was given and all that was mortal laid to rest in that beautiful cemetery.

Abdul-Baha revealed the following to him:

"O thou revered beloved!

Glad tidings be unto thee for thy firmness in the strong Covenant. With uprightness thou shalt obtain great victory. Verily, thy Lord confirmeth the firm ones in attaining to sublime stations in His Glorious Kingdom."

JAMES HANBY

"James Hanby died on board ship June 16, 1918." This brief word was received in Chicago some weeks later. We understand he was enroute to Europe enlisted to serve the Canadian overseas forces.

Mr. Hanby served the Bahai Cause in Chicago. Those who attended the Centennial Celebration of the Birth of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH in this city will remember him especially for his activity at the banquet in the Auditorium Hotel. This was a distinctive characteristic he possessed, so much so, that before he heard of the Bahai Movement—when a press agent for well-known turf men—he was called "Busy Jimmy." He was known from coast to coast in those days, and we believe he will be long remembered for his brief but energetic service among the Bahais in Chicago.

DR. CLAUDE F. LATHROP AND GEORGE LUTHER.

Seattle, Washington,
February 7, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

The hosts of the Supreme Concourse were stirred by the ascension of two devoted Bahai souls, Dr. Claude F. Lathrop and Mr. George Luther, on the night of December 18, 1918.

Contracting pneumonia following influenza about the same day, they passed out within a few hours of each other.

Dr. Lathrop had served the Cause of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH with tireless devotion for ten years, half of that time withstanding the keenest physical suffering. He gloried in his tests feeling that he was greatly blessed. He worked over the sick until the last, literally treading the path of martyrdom to aid suffering humanity.

His loss is keenly felt by the Seattle believers and his wife and two children have the love and sympathy of all in this sad but exalted hour.

Mr. George Luther, husband of Mrs. Laura Luther, and brother-in-law to Mrs. Mabel Geary of Seattle, and Mrs. Effie Snyder of Spokane, was an earnest, firm believer, living the life quietly but faithfully. He, with his wife, had lived for eleven years on their ranch at Omak, Wash., and were the only lights in that region. Their perseverance in sowing the seed was beautiful. His new birth into the higher Kingdom was attended by chanting and offering praises to God, raising the call of "Ya-Baha-el-Abha," till all were illumined by the presence of the spirit.

A unity funeral was held and the two brothers in El-Abha were laid side by side.

Impressive passages from the Hidden Words were read by a maid-servant and prayers were offered by one of the servants.

Real unity of the friends was attained through this double sorrow, for spiritual uplift and exultation attended the occasion, robbing it of the usual gloom. Thus "death" was made a glad tidings for all.

Charlotte Z. Gillen.

MRS. PAUL K. DEALY

On February 27th, 1919, dear, devoted, brave Mrs. Dealy was set free from the cage of her body, her blindness, and allowed to fly like a divine bird into the Kingdom of light. She and her husband were pioneer teachers of the heavenly Cause in America. In early days their home was a center of radiance in Chicago where many first heard the divine proclamation in its majesty and splendor. Mr. Albert Windust told at Mrs. Dealy's radiant funeral how, one ever-memorable evening, he heard at their home that the promised Prince of Peace had come "in His glory," and how he went home scarcely knowing whether he was walking on earth or not. There kept ringing through his mind the thrilling new meanings the Dealys had given to the old prophetic verse: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Mrs. Dealy became blind a number of years ago. When she met Abdul-Baha in America in 1912 he asked her what he could do for her. She said, "Oh, that I might receive my sight." The Master answered, "Your physical or spiritual sight? You can't have both." She replied: "My spiritual sight." In that one, momentous choice she revealed the heavenly desires which the Bahai teaching had brought to birth in her soul. Abdul-Baha told her the rest of her life she would see visions of the Kingdom and live ever in the unseen light. And she says it was true.

In one vision Abdul-Baha appeared at her door and offered her a basket. She ran forward, thinking to find it full of flowers. When she received it, behold it was full of stones. Abdul-Baha seeing her crestfallen face said: "Open one of the stones." She obeyed and lo, out of the opened stone there arose a ruby cup on which was engraved in letters of light the Greatest Name. "Drink the cup," the loving Master said; and then the vision vanished.

In that vision was revealed the history of her later life. She expected the Master to give her a basket of roses. He in his love gave her a basket of stones, the stones of blindness, loneliness, poverty and sorrow. But when she opened the stony grief, lo, it contained a cup as beautiful as the Holy Grail. And when she drank that cup in the Greatest Name of God, lo, it was overflowing with the water of life-eternal. Drinking from that cup of calamity she drank from a river of light. Her blindness endured for a day. That cup has given her a spiritual sight, we may believe, which will behold and proclaim the Glory of God through all the ages of eternal life.

ERWIN HARRIS

Son of Hooper and Gertrude Harris

Newspaper clipping:

Corp. Erwin Harris, of 157 W. 103d St., New York City, made the supreme sacrifice on October 7, 1918. Harris, who was 18, enlisted in the old 7th Regt. two years ago and saw service at the border.

Last May he left Spartansburg to go overseas with Co. D, of the 107th Inf. Last October he led his squad "over the top" in what is known as a "combat group." Harris had traveled some 1,000 yards when he was brought down by a machine gun.

He was sent to a base hospital in France suffering from wounds in the leg and back. He wrote his last letter from there on October 4th, but was removed to Base Hospital 3, Berkshire, Eng., where he died October 7th.

[The following letters, beginning with his mother's brief note to the STAR OF THE WEST and ending with the words of Abdul-Baha in a Tablet just received, are more than a memorial to Erwin Harris, for they epitomize the supreme sacrifices of just such mothers and sons everywhere, as well as the divine comfort which goes out unto all from the Great Heart of humanity.—The Editors.]

Note from his mother:

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

Your kind letter just reached me; many thanks. I don't know what to write, so will enclose these letters and you can use your judgment. He was a sweet, wonderful boy and gave his life willingly for what he thought was right and we are very proud of him. I saved all of his letters and they bear witness that he was spiritually awakened. He would be 19 years old, April 25th, 1919. . . . The physical separation was hard, but Abdul-Baha has healed the wound.

Hastily,

Gertrude Harris.

His letter just before embarking:

Camp Wadsworth, Spartansburg, S. C.
April 24, 1918.

My dear Mother:

Received your letter tonight, and was very glad to hear from you. I am very sorry that you do not feel well. Dear Mother, you know how to look on death. It is not as bad as it is painted. I am not afraid of death and I know that you are not. Even if you leave us, I know that you will always be with me, and some day I will be a credit to you and to the rest of them. This may sound a little hard-hearted and cold, but I do not mean it to be, it is straight from the heart. Today is your birthday, and I have not forgotten it. I can't send you anything but my love. I really hope that some day I may understand the Bahai faith and that I will be able to make the rest of the world believe in it. . . .

I have learned a lot since I have been in the army and I have met men from all walks of life. I have not gone down. I have gone up, both mentally and physically, and I believe that later on in life this will all be a great help to me. I don't drink nor smoke, and believe me, Mother, I never will, so don't worry about that (something is in me, Mother, and some day it will pop out), and you will see it whether you are on this earth or not.

We are going to leave here very soon. I think we will either go to Camp Merritt or Camp Mills and we will be there within ten days, and I will see you Mother, before I go over. . . .

I have not an enemy in the company and few Corporals can say that. The men in my squad will do anything for me, and that is the way it will have to be later. People will have to believe in me. I will have to make them love me. Unless they love you, you can't do anything with them, you can't make them believe in you till you make them love you, can you? I don't understand just what it is all about but I know something tells me that it is all for something wonderful.

Write to me soon.

With love,

Erwin.

His last letter to his mother:

October 4, 1918.

Dear Mother:

My last letter to you was written in a rest camp, but now I am writing from a much different place. Soon after my letter we went back up the line, and I guess by this time you have read what we did. However, I did not do as much as I thought I would, as a machine gun got me in both my legs and in my back; each wound is marked slight; and I feel fine. Of course, I am not running around playing tag but I feel as though I could. I am at present in a hospital in France but I will soon leave here for England. I am well taken care of and want for nothing. I hope you will be able to read this poor writing

Tell Papa this: When we went over the top we went over in what they now call "line of combat groups", which is the same as our old squad column which, as he will remember, was the Corporal in the lead and the rest of his squad in single file behind him. We followed very close to our barrage. When I was hit we had gone about ten hundred yards.

You will read more in the paper than I can tell you, so I will close.

With love to all,

Erwin.

Letter from Matron of the Hospital:

No. 3, War Hospital Wilson Road,
Reading, Berkshire, England,
Oct. 8, 1918.

Dear Mrs. Harris:

Your dear son, Erwin Harris, died in this Hospital at 1:50 p. m. today.

I think this news will have reached you by telegram before you get my letter, but naturally you will want to know all I can tell you of his illness and death.

He was admitted with the men who came on Sunday last (Oct. 6th) in a convoy of wounded from France. He seemed the most ill of them all, was wounded in both legs and had a great deal of pain in the left knee. It was at once attended to by the Medical Officer, but the laddie's temperature was 105°, the knee swollen and very painful so after consultation with the senior surgeon it was decided to have him under an anaesthetic that same evening and open the swelling. This was done and a good deal of pus which had collected in the joint was freed. His leg was put up on a more comfortable splint, he had a small injection of morphine, and said the next morning that it was a more comfortable sleep that night than he had had since being wounded.

He looked very ill all yesterday and his temperature kept above 103°. In the evening the thigh swelled rapidly and after consulting together the surgeons decided to amputate the leg early the next morning. They seemed sure that the boy had gas gangrene in the leg and this is a very deadly infection to any wound.

He spoke of you in the night and asked night Sister to write to you. This morning a little before 11 o'clock he asked me to be sure you were told all about him having to lose his leg, for by that time he knew that he was for operation. He was very bright and even looking forward to the relief it would be.

He teased Sister a little and said the other fellows would be envious that he had all her attention, whispered again to me would I be "very sure to let my Mother know." He died within an hour after returning to the ward. I feel sure nothing more could have been done here. We did all possible in the way of inter-venous and inter-muscular infusion, he had pituitary extract and all the remedies to combat shock but the poison in his blood depressed the heart's action so hopelessly. The only thing that might have helped would have been an amputation before he was sent over from France. I feel so very sorry for you in this. It must be dreadfully hard to lose such a son. His companions in the ward were so fond of him—even the very seriously-ill ones would ask after "the boy from America" before telling their own troubles.

Please write and ask if there is anything more you wish to know.

With much sympathy,

Yours sincerely,

E. Hodges, Matron.

Words of Abdul-Baha

To the maid-servant of God, Sarah Gertrude Harris, New York City.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH-EL-ABHÁ!

HE IS GOD!

O thou my beloved daughter!

Your letter dated November 13th was received. Its contents occasioned infinite grief, for it spoke of the ascension of that illumined youth. Indeed in the rose-garden of God that young man was like unto a shrub in its utmost freshness and promising good fruits. Whoever has seen him or heard him has undoubtedly been shocked and grieved at the news of his passing away.

However, although that peerless shrub has sought separation from the woods of the nether world, yet, it has appeared fully adorned and resplendent in the rose-garden of the world on-high in the Abha Paradise. That divine bird has flown away from this mortal and earthly nest, has ascended to the Kingdom of God and has been engaged in singing the sweet melodies of praise and thanksgiving on the lordly branches in the rose-garden of the Merciful. Happy is he and blessed in his abode! He has reaped the result of life and has become a fruitful tree. Grieve not therefore for his death and be not depressed.

With regard to his life insurance, act in accordance with his will. I have perused his letter and have supplicated for him from the Threshold of Oneness an exalted station

The relatives who are here all convey to you their longing greeting.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH-EL-ABHÁ!

SUPPLICATION FOR LUA GETSINGER

Haifa, December 18, 1918.

My dear brother Joseph:

This is copy of a letter and translation of Tablet about Lua. I am afraid you have not received it. Please make copies of the same and forward to various Assemblies and ask the STAR OF THE WEST to publish it in its columns.

Your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

Home of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, Acca, Syria,
February 8, 1917.

My dear brothers and sisters in the Cause:

It was one afternoon of the month of September, 1916, when the Master was sojourning along the shore of the Sea of Galilee, that we received the sad news of the death of the beloved Lua. No one could believe it. When the Center of the Covenant heard about it he was deeply affected and felt more than any one of us her great loss. Since that day I have heard him more than a hundred times exclaiming with a moving voice: "What a loss! What a loss! What a loss!" In this short letter I cannot reproduce all the words he uttered about her, but I can say that all the believers mourned for her and regretted her departure most sincerely. We know full well that her purified spirit freed from the fetters of water and clay soared to the Kingdom of Glory and received the reward of her services to the Cause of God! In a Tablet revealed years ago, the Master gave her to me as a mother, and from that time on I tried always to fulfill this heavenly pledge of sonship. She always directed my sentiments and deeds towards the heights of nobility and truthfulness. She was a source of inspiration and consolation in all my affairs. If I desired to do something, I consulted with her, and she never failed in giving me good, elevating advice or when she travelled or I was away we corresponded together. And now that she is living in the Supreme Concourse, I feel every day her supporting mother-love and her solicitude about my welfare. From many standpoints she was a unique teacher.

Firstly, she was one of the earliest believers in America who, enkindled with the fire of God's love, travelled extensively and called the people to the Kingdom.

Secondly, she was amongst the very first pilgrims who came to Acca and received the blessings of the Master. Her verbal account of that first glorious pilgrimage was enough to convince anyone of the validity of this dispensation.

Thirdly, she was strictly speaking a disciple of the Master, taught by him and educated by him and sent out by him as an ordained teacher.

Fourthly, she travelled throughout the continents of America, Europe, Asia and Africa to spread the Word of God and diffuse the fragrances of the flowers of truth.

Fifthly, in this Cause we have two kinds of teachers. The first are those who teach new souls and spread the Cause in new environments, the second are those who work amongst the believers. Lua belonged to the first order of teachers.

Sixthly, she taught many important souls, and her pupils, both men and women, in the United States and Canada, are numerous—pupils who are zealous and active, carrying along her work of spiritual illumination with intelligence and enthusiasm.

Seventhly, she was one of the very few souls who visited the Holy Land seven or eight times, lived in the blessed household for months at a time, and was considered as one of the members of the holy family, one of the daughters of Abdul-Baha.

Eighthly, she was the one living believer who visited the Shah of Persia years ago in Paris and interceded in behalf of the friends of his kingdom.

Ninthly, her faith in this Revelation was perfect, her heart was a treasure of the jewels of the Kingdom, her tongue was eloquent in the praise of the Lord, her consciousness mirrored forth the rays of the Sun of Reality and her aim and object was for no other than the teaching of the Cause and the glorification of truth.

On the evening of December 21st, when the believers were in the presence of the Beloved in Haifa, I begged him to reveal a Tablet of Visitation in her honor, as a celestial token of her services. A translation of it is enclosed herewith.

Hoping that all may be inspired through her self-sacrificing example, I am,

Your sincere servant,

Ahmad Sohrab.

Words of Abdul-Baha

Supplication for the attracted maid-servant of God, Lua, who ascended to the Supreme Concourse,—Upon her be greeting and praise!

HE IS GOD!

O Lord! O Lord! Verily Thy maid-servant who was attracted with the fragrances of Thy Holiness, enkindled with the fire of Thy Love, the herald of Thy Name, the spreader of Thy Signs amongst Thy people,—ascended to Thee with humility and lowliness, trusting in Thee with all her heart, liberated from all worldly ties and attractions, hoping for Thy Universal Favor and Mercy, desiring to enter Thy radiant Presence, supplicating Thy all-encircling Bounty, and begging for the descent of Thy glorious Bestowals!

O Lord! Exalt her station, submerge her in the ocean of Thy Compassion and establish her in the midst of the Paradise of Immortality,—in the Universe of Lights, the Center of the Beatific Mysteries.

O Lord! She believed in Thee, chanted Thy verses, turned her face toward Thee with all her heart; her spirit was rejoiced through Thy glad-tidings and her soul was purified through the fire of Thy Love. Then amidst the concourse of humanity, she arose in the promotion of Thy Word, suffered every thirsty one to drink from the goblet of Thy Guidance and healed every sick one with the antidote of Thy Knowledge. In Thy Path she travelled to distant countries and remote regions and gave the good-news of Thy Kingdom throughout vast and spacious continents—until through the difficulties that she endured in Thy Path, her very flesh and bones were melted, diseases and sicknesses attacked her, her frail body failed her, her nerves and muscles weakened their functions and her heart became the target of conflicting ailments. Then while hoping for the immortal life, the eternal existence, she abandoned this mortal, ephemeral world.

O Lord! Grant her a palace in the neighborhood of Thy Most Great Mercy; cause her to dwell in the gardens of Thy paradise, the Most High; illumine her countenance with the effulgence of Thy Good-pleasure, in the Kingdom of Thy Glory; usher her into the heaven of Thy Meeting and suffer her to live everlastingly in the assemblage of transfiguration, whose refulgent lights are shining upon the world of hearts and the realm of consciousness.

Verily, Thou art the Forgiving, verily Thou art the Pardoner and verily Thou art the Merciful of the Most Merciful!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

CORRECTION

Shanghai, China, January 7, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

Please allow me to draw your attention to the following matter. I was reading the Talk of Abdul-Baha of 26th of June, 1914, in No. 11, page 123. I refer to these phrases: "But when some Ulama enter a school their aim is leadership, to obtain fame, to gather luxuries and worldly possession. They are like the disease 'caboos' (influenza)."

As far as I know the word "caboos" means, nightmare, not influenza. So if you find it necessary, please correct it.

With Bahai love and greeting, I am faithfully yours,

Mirza Hossein Touty.

A BAHAI LIBRARY.

He who today is searching for the Abha Truth hardly realizes what a remarkable collection of Abdul-Baha's addresses, American and European, of his talks in Palestine, of stirring incidents in the history of the Cause, of compilations, there exists in print, until he has before him the bound volumes of the STAR OF THE WEST.

Volume I is a little jewel with its records of the early days of the Cause in the West and the journeys of teachers around the world.

Volume II presents glowing accounts of Abdul-Baha's first journey to Europe, the places where he spoke, the people he met, the dynamic words he uttered.

Volume III is a volume of American addresses, so comprehensive, so glorious with Abha light, that it reveals the full-orbed splendor of the Master's message to western civilization.

Volumes IV, V and VI continue publication of American and European addresses.

Volumes VII and VIII can be bound together. They contain the glorious compilations on "The Divine Art of Living" and "The Covenant of God" and a wealth of dynamic, life-giving extracts and Tablets. They form a wonderful volume for the attainment of that supreme goal, "pure and sanctified living," which alone, as the Master says, can spread the truth in this the dawn of the Day of God.

Volume IX contains the remarkable and exhaustive compilation of Mrs. Hannen on "Bahai Methods of Education" and that casket of jewels, the "Stories Children Should Know." It is also full of the latest news and Tablets from the Holy Land since the great war has ended.

The editors of the STAR OF THE WEST will be glad to prepare these volumes for the friends or have bound the copies sent in to them. Volume I comes at $2 each, Volumes II, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX at $2.50 apiece. If volumes VII and VIII are bound together they will cost $4.00 for the two. If copies are sent in they will be bound for $1.—all the bindings in three-fourths leather. Postage added to these prices.

YOUR CO-OPERATION PLEASE

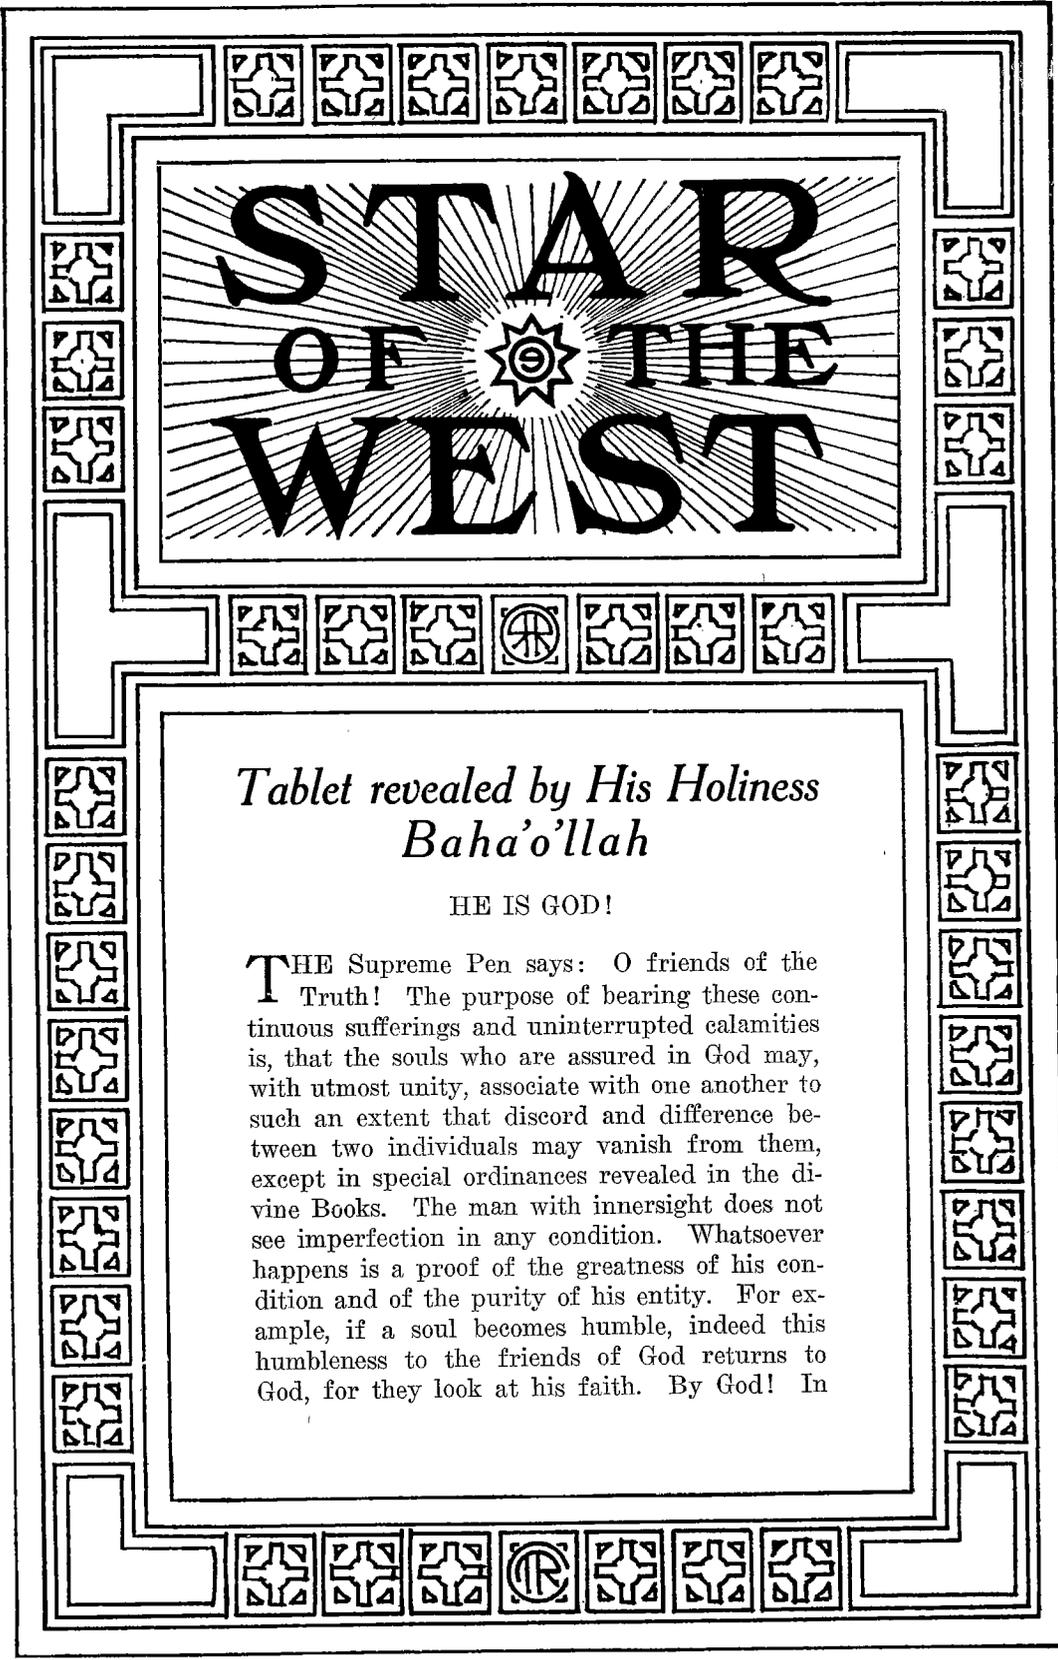

It would be a great service if the friends would send in their renewal subscriptions to the STAR OF THE WEST without a notice being sent them as that would save our devoted sister, Miss Buikema hours of labor, and the labor though a boundless joy to her, must be done on holidays or late in the evenings after her business day is over.

STAR OF THE WEST

*Tablet revealed by His Holiness
Baha'o'llah*

HE IS GOD!

THE Supreme Pen says: O friends of the Truth! The purpose of bearing these continuous sufferings and uninterrupted calamities is, that the souls who are assured in God may, with utmost unity, associate with one another to such an extent that discord and difference between two individuals may vanish from them, except in special ordinances revealed in the divine Books. The man with innersight does not see imperfection in any condition. Whatsoever happens is a proof of the greatness of his condition and of the purity of his entity. For example, if a soul becomes humble, indeed this humbleness to the friends of God returns to God, for they look at his faith. By God! In this case, if the opponents do not act similarly, or if arrogance is shown by them, the person with insight (and humbleness) is in his own sublime deed and has already received and will receive recompense. The harm of the action of the opponents will return to them. Likewise if a soul becomes arrogant this arrogance returns to God—We take refuge in God from that!

O people of comprehension! I declare by the Greatest Name that it is a pity for you to consider incidental conditions. Arise for the Cause of God and with one another affiliate in the utmost love and sincerity, for the sake of the Face of the Beloved. Burn the veils of self with the fire of oneness and with bright and cheerful faces associate with one another. All of you have seen with your own eyes the qualities of the Truth. It was never approved that a single night should pass and any of the friends of God be away from this Slave. The heart of the world is ablaze by the Word of God. It is a pity that you do not become ablaze by this fire. God willing, we are hopeful that this blessed night you may call "The night of unity." Become united with one another and adorned with the embroidery of goodness and praiseworthy conduct. Your efforts should be to guide a strayed, perishing soul to the laws of eternity and among the creatures conduct yourselves in such manner that the sign of Truth may become manifest in you; for you are the first of existence, the first worshipers, the first who bowed and the first to encircle the Holy Threshold. By the one who caused me to utter that which He desired, your names in the Supreme Kingdom are more famous than they are to you. Do not think this utterance is imagination. I wish that you could behold what your Lord, the Merciful, sees of the sublimity of your condition, the greatness of your degrees and the supremacy of your stations. We ask God that your desires may not prevent you from that which was ordained for you. We are hopeful that in the utmost harmony, love and friendship you may deal with one another in such a manner that the banner of oneness may be raised. Surpass ye one another in good affairs and in showing contentment.

His is the right to command! He doeth whatsoever He wisheth and ruleth whomsoever He desireth, and verily He is the Powerful, the Dear, the Mighty!

(Translated by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago, July 9, 1918.)

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

He Is God!

O ye who are firm in the Covenant!

Verily, your letter was the third of those received from America subsequent to the extinction of the fire of war. I was indeed gladdened to peruse it for it was indicative of a pure purpose and a lofty ideal, to wit: the service of the world of humanity.

The most advisable thing, therefore, is to gather every Sunday in order to discuss "Pure and Sanctified Living," "Universal Brotherhood," and the "Philosophy of Universal Religion."

As to the promulgation of Truth, verily it is divine and heavenly character, action in accordance with the divine and merciful instructions and the propagation among men of lordly behests and exhortations.

I pray God that He may therein confirm ye.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

GEORGE LATIMER

To his honor, George Latimer, France—Upon him be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

Your letter dated November 13, 1918, was received. Praise be to God, throughout this terrible war, you have been kept safe and protected and have endured every sort of trouble for the sake of your favored land.

I have written a letter to thy father and have forwarded it directly, and now, too, I am engaged in writing thee, begging for thee a soul gladdened by divine glad-tidings and an illumined heart that thou mayest be ever enkindled and illumined.

When thou shalt be released from military service thou hast permission to present thyself at the Holy Land.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Vol. 10

Baha' 1, 75 (March 21, 1919)

No. 1

ALLAH'O'ABHA!

Nine years ago a little sixteen-page pamphlet, made to fit an ordinary business envelope, calling itself the BAHAI NEWS, was printed and distributed among the Bahai friends in the Western World. Its word of introduction read as follows: "The need for a Bahai News Service is apparent to those who are in touch with the progress of the Bahai Movement throughout the Occident. To meet this need this humble publication has stepped forth from non-existence into the court of existence. Whether it shall remain and grow into a distinct department of service in this Glorious Day, we cannot foretell, knowing that 'God doeth whatsoever He willeth.'"

With issue No. 8 of the BAHAI NEWS was inaugurated a section in Persian, and in issue No. 13 is recorded that it had "taken the Orient by storm" and that Abdul-Baha requested one of the friends to read the latest copy before a large gathering of the Bahais (in Port Said), and while it was being read, he was smiling and commenting upon it. A Tablet received at that time by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab stated: "Truly, I say, in this publication you have written instructive articles. May God assist and confirm you! Unquestionably, confirmations shall descend upon the workers of this paper!"

A letter from Esphahan to the editor of the Persian section, beginning: "A star shone forth from the West and became the sun of the heaven of Truth in the East," together with a suggestion from Abdul-Baha to change the name of the Persian section from Payam Bare Baktar (Occidental Messenger), suggested the title: STAR OF THE WEST—which was adopted for the English section beginning with No. 1, Vol. II.

In issue No. 17 of the BAHAI NEWS the confirmation promised by Abdul-Baha descended in the form of a glorious Tablet which has ever since been a source of joy, inspiration and help, and which has been incorporated as a permanent feature of the editorial heading of the magazine, beginning: "O thou Star of the West! Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. . . ."

Then came the great privilege of serving the Cause in publishing the Addresses of Abdul-Baha during his sojourn in America in 1912.

Nine years of service have been completed. Those who have rendered it did so in weakness and difficulty, and had not the sustaining power of God protected and assisted it could not have been accomplished. Those who undertook this labor of love have lived to see another nine years begin. "Ya-Baha-el-Abha!"

A new era dawns for the Cause. The doors of the Holy Land are open wide and Abdul-Baha is flooding the West with the Glorious Light of the Kingdom through Tablets recently revealed; an ocean of love is submerging the souls, uniting them with that power which only the Covenant possesses. Soon will His wondrous words have effect and great will be the results therefrom. We are happy in presenting many of these Tablets in this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST.

The Teaching Campaign

BY ALBERT VAIL

WORD is coming of new journeys for teaching. Mr. Remey and Mr. John Basset, Mr. Louis Gregory and Mr. Roy Williams are all starting for the Southland to present the divine Glad Tidings in all the states mentioned in the Master's great Tablet to the South. Mr. Stanwood Cobb is starting a new circle in Annapolis. Mr. Remey gave there on February 5th at St. John's (the State University) an illustrated lecture on the Mashrekol-azkar. The hall was crowded and great interest was manifest. Mr. Remey's lectures on "The Universal Temple of the Future" are one of the most attractive ways of presenting to a new community in terms of concrete beauty the universal glory of the Bahai Cause.

Mr. Randall and Mrs. Maxwell are speaking to new centers in the East. Miss Jack and Mrs. Greenleaf are starting north with the breaking of the spring into the great Canadian West. Mr. Vail visited Omaha and Kansas City in December and is making a teaching journey into Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri in March and April. Mrs. Ford has been serving the Cause in Kansas City this winter and gave a series of talks to a deeply interested group of people in Topeka, Kansas.

Mrs. Pamerton is beginning a journey into Missouri and Kansas and the Central West.

In the far West Mr. Gunn, Mr. and Mrs. Killius have been traveling and teaching.

For two years Mrs. Brittingham has been giving her time to seed sowing with beautiful devotion. When asked for some words concerning her work, she writes: "I feel I have never done anything and the page of report must be empty. Every new year I realize with deepened awakening my sense of nothingness in trying to advance in that Path." But she adds: "Since January 1917, I have raised the call of the Kingdom in Arizona, Southern California, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, Utah and very briefly in Reno, Nevada. I have given the Message in one church in Arizona and three in California, to employees of the lunch room of the Great Northern Shipping Dock, Seattle, to army boys at Fort Wright, Spokane, in the State Prison, Salt Lake City, and to Metaphysical, Theosophical and many other gatherings in halls and homes, having thus addressed up to January 1, 1919, one hundred and thirty-three assemblages."

Mr. and Mrs. Killius recently held a stirring meeting in the Unitarian Church in Helena, Montana. Mr. Fred Mortensen has been working there telling the good news to those he met. A paper in Helena kindly published a fine article by Miss Jean Masson on "The Bahai Movement—Is it the Coming Universal Religion?" Mr. and Mrs. Killius have been travelling and teaching in Montana with splendid energy.

Without this "superhuman energy," as the Master so often tells us, we cannot lay the foundation of the divine and universal city. But those who do arise and go forth into the new regions, God assists with a perfect glory of confirmation. Doors of opportunity to proclaim the heavenly glad tidings open as by a divine hand, radiant faces appear at the meetings as though sent there by the angels, the fire of the spirit often descends like ancient Pentecost and the Glory of God is revealed and many see it together. Such is the testimony of the teachers in this most wonderful springtime of God. The teachers seem to go to the new city alone; but verily a cohort of the Supreme Concourse have gone before them and when they speak the angels of confirmation stand around them, give words to the lips, fire to the heart and victory to the teacher's persuasions.

"In the Name of God, the Victor of the most victorious," cries the Bab, "proclaim: 'God will help all those who arise to serve Him! No one is able to deprive Him of His Majesty, His Dominion, His Sovereignty for in the heaven and the earth and in all the realms of God He is the Victorious and the Conqueror.'"

Idea of the League of Nations given by Abdul-Baha in 1875

From "The People's Forum" in the Montana Record-Herald, February 18, 1919.

To the Record-Herald:

In your issue of Saturday the 15th you have an article headed, "Taft is treading path blazed by French King." It also stated that "the idea of a League of Nations peacefully reposed under the dust of ages until after the great war broke out; that the league idea was first broached anew in 1915 by some New York gentlemen; that Taft was approached and indorsed it; that the first public meeting was held June 17, 1915," etc.

This is an evident error and the credit should be given to whom it is due. The truth is that BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, undoubtedly the greatest figure of this age, over sixty years ago laid down twelve basic Bahai principles, the eighth being Universal Peace and the twelfth an International Tribunal.

BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, more than fifty years ago addressed epistles to all the kings and rulers of the earth, calling their attention to the Will of God, and predicting in an unmistakable and clear tone the events and happenings of these days.

BAHÁ'O'LLÁH addressed Professor Browne of Cambridge University, England, April 14th, 1890, saying: "These fruitless strifes and ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come. Is not this that which Christ foretold? Yet do we see your kings and rulers lavishing their treasures more freely on means for the destruction of the human race than on that which would conduce to the happiness of mankind: these strifes and this bloodshed and discord must cease, and all men be as one kindred and one family."

Abdul-Baha, the eldest son of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH, and the present leader of the Baháí Movement, who has millions of followers throughout the world in Asia, Africa, Europe and America, traveled in this country in 1912. He constantly exhorted the people of the world to think peace, to talk peace, for, he said, in a talk given to the students of Stanford University, California, "Europe is like unto a powder magazine and one little spark shall set all the world aflame, and the time is two years hence."

Abdul-Baha, in 1875, wrote a book entitled, The Mysterious Forces of Civilization, in which he states: "Yes, the true civilization will raise its banner in the center of the world, when some noble kings of high ambitions, the bright suns of the world of humanitarian enthusiasm, shall, for the good and happiness of all the human race, step forth with firm resolution and keen, powerful minds and hold a conference on the question of Universal Peace . . . establish a union of the states of the world and conclude a definite treaty . . . which, verily, would be a treaty of universal peace and would be accounted sacred by all peoples of the earth. It would be the duty of the united powers of the world to see that this great treaty be strengthened and should endure. In such a universal treaty the limits of the borders and boundaries of every state should be fixed and the customs and the laws of every government; all the agreements and the affairs of state and the arrangements between the various governments should be propounded and settled in due form; the size of the armaments for each government should likewise be definitely agreed upon, at any rate the basis of this powerful alliance should be so fixed that if one of the states afterwards broke any of the articles of it the rest of the nations of the world would rise up and destroy it. Yes, the whole human race would band its forces together to exterminate that nation."

The nations would require but a few soldiers as a means of assuring the safety of the state, punishing the wicked and rebellious and preventing the growth of civil sedition.

I have been asked by the friends of Abdul-Baha in Helena to write you asking this correction and have the truth known.

Fred Mortensen,

MARION JACK

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Jack, Chicago, Ill.—Upon her be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

O thou who art the well-wisher of mankind!

Thy letter was received and was perused most attentively; its contents were exceedingly pleasing. Thy wish, as well as that of the friends of America, is that I may undertake a voyage to that land; but my heart is there and I am always thinking of them; and as they associate and affiliate in the utmost of love and union therein, my heart and spirit reside. Entertain no doubts whatever for I am linked with you spiritually even though separate in body. We are all under the shade of the unicolor pavilion of the world of humanity, but heedlessness forms a veil and an obstacle. When it is removed the veil will be rent asunder and we shall see one another gathered up together and present.

Thou hast written of thy wish to use the money of the Mashrekol-azkar to aid some of the dear sisters to get well: If you have gathered the sum from your own money, spend half of it for the sisters, and the other half, spend it for the Mashrekol-azkar; and if the sum is from other people, refer to them (i. e., the contributors) and act according to their wish.

Convey on my behalf greetings and the utmost of respect to the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Eva Cooper, (of Fruitport, Mich.).

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

AMY WILKINSON

To the maid-servant of God, Amy K. Wilkinson, Boston, Mass.—Upon her be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art enkindled with the fire of the love of God!

Your letter dated November 26th, 1918, was received. Those souls that, in this day, enter into the divine Kingdom and attain everlasting life, although they materially dwell on earth, yet in reality they soar in the realm of heaven. Their body may linger on earth but their spirit travels in the immensity of space. For as thoughts widen and become illumined, they acquire the power of flight and transport man to the Kingdom of God.

I beg of God that Mr. Randall and thyself may both become two lofty soaring birds; that ye may nestle and abide in the loftiest summits of the Kingdom; that ye may behold the glorious signs and may perfume the nostrils with the fragrances of the Abha Paradise.

Upon ye be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

ELLA GOODALL COOPER

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Ella Goodall Cooper, California—Upon her be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

O thou respected maid-servant of God!

Your letter, dated October 22nd, 1918, was received. Although for four years communication between us has been interrupted, yet the spiritual messenger was heartily and continually engaged. At all times I implored from the divine Kingdom, begging for the maid-servants of God and the friends of the Merciful divine assistance and confirmation.

At present, praise be to God, your detailed letter is at hand, and its news of the health and safety of the believers of God imparted a joy unlimited. From the unity of the friends of that land we have felt greatly happy and glad. I pray God that this union, firmness, steadfastness and spiritual consultation may become day by day more pronounced, and this rose-garden which has been planted in that continent may bestow perfume, through the scent of its flowers and blossoms, upon the nostrils of the people of the world.

How beautifully thou hast expressed the thought, namely: "We hope that the love and unity of the friends may soon become the magnet of attraction which will draw thee again to our shores." This is evident and sure—that if the light of love among the friends will be as resplendent as it ought to be and like unto a candle will illumine that gathering, it will surely exert the effect of a magnet.

Convey on my behalf the utmost longing and love to all the assemblies.
Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

SHAHNAZ KHANUM

To the maid-servant of God, Shahnaz Khanum, Los Angeles, Calif.—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou revered maid-servant of God!

Thy letter from Los Angeles was received. Thank divine Providence that thou hast been assisted in service and hast been the cause of the promulgation of the oneness of the world of humanity.

Not until the darkness of differences among men is dissipated will the pavilion of unity of races cast its shadow over all regions; otherwise rest and comfort, peace and universal reconciliation are unachievable. This illumined age requires and necessitates its fulfillment. Every century has its ideal which in accordance with that century is confirmed. In this illumined era that which is confirmed is the oneness of the world of humanity. Every soul who serves this oneness will undoubtedly be assisted.

I hope that in the assemblies thou mayest sing praises with a sweet melody and thus become the cause of joy and gladness to all.

Convey on my behalf greetings and respect to thy revered husband.
Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

ROY C. WILHELM

To his honor, Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, New York.—Upon him be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy letter was received and its contents imparted the utmost of gladness. Thou hast inquired about our health. Notwithstanding the great agitation in the East, thanks to Divine grace and bounty, we have passed these years of war in joy and gladness under the care and protection of Divine Providence. Now, praise be to God, the darkness of oppression has passed away and the light of justice has dawned and a just government has been ministering to this land.

O thou who are firm! What glad-tiding better than the one which thou hast imparted, to wit: that misunderstanding from among the friends has been eliminated and harmony and concord established! This good news has made everybody hopeful that soon the torch of the Oneness of the World of Humanity may be enkindled in New York.

As to my voyage to India, it is not yet decided. In case it is settled we shall inform you.

Convey the utmost love and attachment of Abdul-Baha's heart to the favored and respected maid-servant of God, Mrs. Parsons, Mr. Randall, Mr. Mills, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Hall. I hope from the bounties of the Kingdom these souls may enlighten the world of humanity, may promulgate the oneness of the world of existence and like unto stars may shine upon men by the light of union and concord from the horizon of the world.

I always remember your mother as well as your father. Convey to both my respect and love.

I ever remember Mr. Bourgeois, particularly the night I was his guest, a night that we passed in joy and fragrance. Send to me the design of the Mashrekol-azkar as produced by him. I pray God that this year the construction of the Mashrekol-azkar will be started.

Convey greeting and respect to Miss Lloyd.

Concerning communication with the Holy Land, that is to say, Haifa, communicate directly for the hinderances and obstacles have been eliminated.

Convey to each and all the believers of God the utmost longing and greeting.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

P. S.: The enclosed booklets* have been perused. Send for us one hundred copies of each for they are exceedingly praiseworthy. Verily, you are engaged in serving the Cause and thus His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH is well pleased with you and I am also satisfied and content.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

CORINNE TRUE

To the maid-servant of God, Corinne True, Chicago, Ill.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou firm in the Covenant!

Your letter dated November 23rd, 1918, was received. Its contents indicated that, praise be to God, you were engaged in the service of Mashrekol-azkar; that this Universal Edifice may be erected. Indeed you spare no effort in this respect, and I entertain the hope that this endeavor may grow day by day. Deeds are like unto trees, for to plant a shrub is no difficult matter, while the care necessary for its growth and yielding fruit is hard and difficult. So far, effort was expended to lay the foundations of the Temple, but now its erection and completion is a difficult matter, and my hope is that the friends of God may be therein assisted.

The second question which is of vital importance is that the friends of God must strive with heart and soul and promulgate heavenly teachings and spread far and wide the Light of the Kingdom; for the world of humanity has acquired, as a result of this great carnage, a great capacity for the propagation of universal peace. Ears are longing to hearken to the call of the oneness of the world of humanity, to universal reconciliation, and to the abandonment of ignorant prejudices.

In fine, if all the friends of God engage in the promulgation of heavenly teachings, the establishment of universal peace shall be a foregone conclusion.

Praise be to God, whatever has been explicitly recorded in the divine Tablets has been fully realized, and all the warnings and appeals of Abdul-Baha in the temples and gatherings of America have come to pass. At present we hope all will engage in the service of the Kingdom and will promulgate whatever is the will of God.

The teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH are today the spirit of life, the means of peace and reconciliation, the cause of amity and union, and the promoter of the oneness of mankind. One should engage in such a service.

Thy eldest and respected daughter, having striven hard and cared for the wounded, is permitted to present herself whenever she has the opportunity. Praise be to God, the condition of your youngest daughter has ameliorated.

As to Mr. Fugeta; He is permitted to present himself, but he must first go to California to meet the maid-servants of God, Mrs. Goodall and Mrs. Cooper, and thence start for the Holy Land. . . .

Convey longing greeting to all the friends of God.

Upon all be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

BEATRICE OWENS

To the maid-servant of God, Beatrice Owens.—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art serving the world of humanity.

Thy letter was received and from its contents we felt exceedingly glad. It was a decisive proof and a brilliant evidence. It is appropriate and befitting that in this illumined age—the age of the progress of the world of humanity—man should be self-sacrificing and should serve the world of mankind. Every universal cause is divine and every particular one is temporal. The principles of the divine Manifestations of God were, therefore, all-universal and all-inclusive. Every imperfect soul is self-conceited and thinks of his own good. But as his thoughts expand a little he will begin to think of the welfare and comfort of his family. If his ideas still more widen his concern will be the felicity of his fellow citizens; and if still they widen he will be thinking of the glory of his land and of his race. But when ideas and views reach the utmost degree of expansion and attain the stage of perfection then will he be interested in the exaltation of humankind. He will be then the well-wisher of all men and the seeker of the weal and prosperity of all lands. This is indicative of perfection.

Thus, the divine Manifestations of God had a universal and all-inclusive conception. They endeavored for the sake of everyone's life and engaged in the service of universal education. The area of their aims was not limited—nay, rather, it was all-inclusive and all-wide.

Therefore, ye must also be thinking of every one, so that mankind may be educated, character moderated and this world may turn into a Paradise of Eden.

Love ye all religions and all races with a love that is true and sincere and show that love through deeds and not through the tongue; for the latter has not importance as the majority of men are, in speech, well-wishers, while action is the best.

Convey to each of the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful greeting and praise. The pictures you have sent, you did very well to enclose them. I attentively looked at each one of them and found in those faces the light of the love of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Haifa, Palestine, December 27, 1918.)

DR. ZIA BAGDADI

To his honor, Dr. Zia Bagdadi, Chicago—Upon his be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou favored servant at the Threshold of the Almighty!

The letter thou hast written on September 25th, 1918, has been received. Praise be to God, thou hast remained safe and protected throughout these years of disturbance and commotion. Thou wert guarded by the eye of Bounty and wert the recipient of infinite blessings. Now that disturbance and commotion have abated, you must more than ever before endeavor in teaching and promulgating the divine teachings. Today the promulgation of the foundation of the divine teachings, which has been explicitly recorded in the blessed Tablets, is the cause of the life of the world. Emphasize and attach importance to this great cause. Arise in teaching. These are the days of seed-sowing. One's time must be occupied continually in sowing so that the station of the divine gardener may be attained and great harvests be prepared.

As soon as the way of communication has been opened I have taken up correspondence with thee.

Convey on my behalf to the maid-servant of God, Zeenat, my greetings. . .

Embrace and show utmost affection in my behalf to thy little daughter.

Upon thee be El-Bahá-el-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

To his honor, Dr. Zia Bagdadi, Chicago.—Upon him be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

Thy letter dated December 21, 1918, reached us. . . .

Concerning the House of Spirituality: I pray God to assist them in all conditions and confirm them for the elevation of the Word of God and the promulgation of the divine teachings, so that they become the cause of the establishment of the oneness of humanity and the diffusion of the Merciful fragrances, in order that the prejudice among the religions, the sects and the races may not remain and all together take hold of the rope of God, the misunderstandings among all the parties may vanish and the human world may become the mirror of the Kingdom of God on which the lights of consciousness shine. Convey thou my greeting and longings to the House of Spirituality. . .

JESSIE REVELL

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Jessie Revell, Philadelphia, Pa.—Upon her be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

O thou beloved maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast wished and asked for help and assistance. As thy purpose is right and thy aim service to the world of humanity, the propagation of the light of truth and the abandonment of the superstitions of the nether world, undoubtedly divine confirmations shall encompass thee and thou shalt be assisted and confirmed.

Convey my love and my kindness to thy respected mother and likewise to thy brothers and sisters. Present my considerable respects to Mrs. Isabella D. Brittingham and similarly to Mr. Paine, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bowen and their children.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Haifa, Palestine, December 30, 1918.)

ISABEL CHAMBERLAIN

To the maid-servant of God, Isabel Chamberlain, Boston, Mass.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou beloved maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received and its contents revealed the fact that the friends, in perfect energy and vitality are engaged in the propagation of heavenly teachings. This news has caused intense joy and gladness, for to every era is a spirit; the spirit of this illumined era is the body of the teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. For these lay the foundation of the Oneness of the world of humanity and promulgate universal brotherhood. They are founded upon the unity of science and religion and upon the investigation of Truth. They uphold the principle that religion must be the cause of amity, union and harmony among men. They establish the equality of both sexes and propound economic principles, i. e., the felicity of individual beings. They diffuse universal education that every soul may as much as possible have a share of knowledge and abrogate and nullify religious, racial, political, patriotic and economic prejudices, and so on and so forth. Those teachings that are disseminated throughout the Epistles and Tablets are the cause of the illumination and the life of the world of humanity. Whoever promulgates them he will verily be assisted by the Kingdom of God.

His Eminence, the President of the Republic, His Honor Dr. Wilson is indeed serving the Kingdom of God for he is restless and strives day and night that the rights of all men may be kept safe and secure, that even small nationalities, like unto big nations may dwell in peace and comfort, under the protection of right and justice. This purpose is indeed a lofty one. I trust that the incomparable Providence will assist and confirm such souls under all conditions.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

Strikes

Abdul-Baha's Words to Mme. Dreyfus-Barney

From American edition Some Answered Questions. Copyrighted by Laura Dreyfus-Barney. Published and distributed by the Bahai Publishing Society, Chicago.

YOU have questioned me about strikes. This question is and will be for a long time the subject of great difficulties. Strikes are due to two causes. One is the extreme sharpness and rapacity of the capitalists and manufacturers; the other, the excesses, the avidity and ill-will of the workmen and artisans. It is therefore necessary to remedy these two causes.

But the principal cause of these difficulties lies in the laws of the present civilization; for they lead to a small number of individuals accumulating incomparable fortunes, beyond their needs, whilst the greater number remains destitute, stripped and in the greatest misery. This is contrary to justice, to humanity, to equity; it is the height of iniquity, the opposite to what causes divine satisfaction.

This contrast is peculiar to the world of man: with other creatures, that is to say with nearly all animals, there is a kind of justice and equality. Thus in a shepherd's flock of sheep, in a troop of deer in the country, among the birds of the prairie, of the plain, of the hill or of the orchard, almost every animal receives a just share based on equality. With them such a difference in the means of existence is not to be found; so they live in the most complete peace and joy.

It is quite otherwise with the human species, which persists in the greatest error, and in absolute iniquity. Consider an individual who has amassed treasures by colonizing a country for his profit; he has obtained an incomparable fortune, and has secured profits and incomes which flow like a river, whilst a hundred thousand unfortunate people, weak and powerless, are in need of a mouthful of bread. There is neither equality nor brotherhood. So you see that general peace and joy are destroyed, the welfare of humanity is partially annihilated, and that collective life is fruitless. Indeed, fortune, honors, commerce, industry are in the hands of some industrials, whilst other people are submitted to quite a series of difficulties and to limitless troubles; they have neither advantages nor profits, nor comforts, nor peace.

Then rules and laws should be established to regulate the excessive fortunes of certain private individuals, and limit the misery of millions of the poor masses; thus a certain moderation would be obtained. However, absolute equality is just as impossible, for absolute equality in fortunes, honors, commerce, agriculture, industry would end in a want of comfort, in discouragement, in disorganization of the means of existence, and in universal disappointment; the order of the community would be quite destroyed. Thus, there is a great wisdom in the fact that equality is not imposed by law; it is, therefore, preferable for moderation to do its work. The main point is, by means of laws and regulations to hinder the constitution of the excessive fortunes of certain individuals, and to protect the essential needs of the masses. For instance, the manufacturers and the industrials heap up a treasure each day, and the poor artisans do not gain their daily sustenance; that is the height of iniquity, and no just man can accept it. Therefore, laws and regulations should be established which would permit the workmen to receive from the factory owner their wages and a share in the fourth or the fifth part of the profits, according to the want of the factory; or in some other way the body of workmen and the manufacturers should share equitably the profits and advantages. Indeed, the direction and administration of affairs comes from the owner of the factory, and the work and labor from the body of the workmen.

In other words, the workmen should receive wages which assure them an adequate support, and when they cease work, becoming feeble or helpless, they should receive from the owner of the factory sufficient pension. The wages should be high enough to satisfy the workmen with the amount they receive, so that they may be able to put a little aside for days of want and helplessness.

When matters will be thus fixed, the owner of the factory will no longer put aside daily a treasure which he has absolutely no need of (without taking into consideration that if the fortune is disproportionate, the capitalist succumbs under a formidable burden, and gets into the greatest difficulties and troubles; the administration of an excessive fortune is very difficult, and exhausts man's natural strength). And the workmen and artisans will no longer be in the greatest misery and want. They will no longer be submitted to the worst privations at the end of their life.

It is, then, clear and evident that the repartition of excessive fortunes amongst a small number of individuals, while the masses are in misery, is an iniquity and an injustice. In the same way, absolute equality would be an obstacle to life, to welfare, to order and to the peace of humanity. In such a question a just medium is preferable. It lies in the capitalists being moderate in the acquisition of their profits, and in their having a consideration for the welfare of the poor and needy; that is to say, that the workmen and artisans receive a fixed and established daily wage, and have a share in the general profits of the factory.

It would be well, with regard to the social rights of manufacturers, workmen and artisans, that laws be established, giving moderate profits to manufacturers, and to workmen the necessary means of existence and security for the future. Thus, when they become feeble and cease working, get old and helpless, and die leaving children under age, these children will not be annihilated by excess of poverty. And it is from the income of the factory itself, to which they have a right, that they will derive a little of the means of existence.

In the same way, the workmen should no longer rebel and revolt, nor demand beyond their rights; they should no longer go out on strike, they should be obedient and submissive, and not ask for impudent wages. But the mutual rights of both associated parties will be fixed and established according to custom by just and impartial laws. In case one of the two parties should transgress, the courts of justice would have to give judgment, and by an efficacious fine put an end to the transgression; thus order will be re-established, and the difficulties settled. The interference of courts of justice and of the government in difficulties pending between manufacturers and workmen is legal, for the reason that current affairs between workmen and manufacturers cannot be compared with ordinary affairs between private persons, which do not concern the public, and with which the Government should not occupy itself. In reality, although they appear to be matters between private persons, these difficulties between patrons and workmen produce a general detriment; for commerce, industry, agriculture and the general affairs of the country are all intimately linked together. If one of these suffers an abuse, the detriment affects the mass. Thus the difficulties between workmen and manufacturers become a cause of general detriment.

The court of justice and the Government have therefore the right of interference. When a difficulty occurs between two individuals with reference to private rights, it is necessary for a third to settle the question; this is the part of the Government; then the question of strikes—which cause troubles in the country and are often connected with the excessive vexations of the workmen, as well as with the rapacity of manufacturers—how could it remain neglected?

Good God! is it possible that, seeing one of his fellow-creatures starving, destitute of everything, a man can rest and live comfortably in his luxurious mansion? He who meets another in the greatest misery, can he enjoy his fortune? That is why, in the Religion of God, it is prescribed and established that wealthy men each year give over a certain part of their fortune for the maintenance of the poor and unfortunate. That is the foundation of the Religion of God, and the most essential of the Commandments.

As now man is not forced nor obliged by the Government, if by the natural tendency of his good heart, with the greatest spirituality, he goes to this expense for the poor, this will be a thing very much praised, approved and pleasing.

Such is the meaning of the good works in the Divine Books and Tablets.

Salutations.

Three kinds of martyrdom

Martyrdom has many explanations, of which the first is to stand bravely and meet death unflinchingly in the path of God, as those wonderful souls have recently done in Persia without wavering for an instant in constancy, nor, under the hands of torture, denying for a single moment their faith.

The second is to, little by little, detach one's heart entirely from this world, laying aside, deliberately and voluntarily, all vanities, worldly seductions, and devoting one's self to the Vineyard of God in whatsoever capacity he is fitted to serve, letting every action, word and deed become a telling monument, a fitting praise and an everlasting glory for His Holy Name!

The third consists in doing the hardest and most difficult things with such willingness and self-sacrifice that all behold it as your pleasure. To seek and accept poverty with the same smile as you seek and receive fortune. To make the sad and sorrowful your associates, instead of frequenting the society of the careless and gay. To dress in such a simple, plain manner that your appearance becomes a comfort to the poor and an example to the rich. "To yield to the decree of God and to be rejoiced at the most violent calamities, even when the suffering is beyond endurance." And he who can fulfill these last conditions becomes a martyr indeed. Then your good deeds will be your garments, your words of praise to God will be your jewels, and your purity of spirit will be your riches.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

AGNES ALEXANDER

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Agnes Alexander.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH-El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Although your letter has not yet been received, yet we do answer it. Praise be to God, that in Japan thou hast been assisted in the accomplishment of a distinguished service. Thou hast raised the Call of the divine Kingdom and hast led the people to an illumined world and a heavenly Cause; thou hast become the cause of enlightenment and the wisher for the education of human souls. For those regions are in a sheer need of divine teachings and are endowed with sufficient capability. Those souls must be emancipated from the obscurity of blind imitations and be illumined by the light of heavenly instructions. Whoever arises for such a work, divine confirmations shall assist him and the power of the Kingdom shall be made manifest.

Effort must be exerted that the East and West may be reconciled, that the darkness of bigotry may vanish, that the unity of mankind may be made manifest and that East and West, like unto two longing souls, may embrace each other in the utmost of love. For all are the sheep of God and God is the Real Shepherd and is kind to everyone.

In accordance with the wish of the attracted maid-servant of God to the love of God, Mrs. Maxwell, go thou to Canada and stay there for a time and then hasten back to Japan for in Japan you will be assisted and exalted.

Some letters are enclosed for the friends in Japan. Forward them. Upon thee be greeting and praise!

TOKUJIRO TORII

To his honor, Mr. Tokujiro Torii, Toyko, Japan. (Care of Miss Agnes Alexander.)

He Is God!

O thou possessor of a seeing heart!

Although, materially speaking, thou art destitute of the physical sight, yet, praise be to God, spiritual insight is thy possession. Thy heart seeth and thy spirit heareth. Bodily sight is subject to a thousand maladies and ultimately and assuredly will be obscured. Thus no importance may be attached to it. But the sight of the heart is illumined, it discerns and discovers the divine Kingdom and is everlasting and eternal. Praise be to God, therefore, that the sight of thy heart is illumined, and the hearing of thy wit responsive.

The meetings you have organized, wherein ye feel heavenly emotions and comprehend realities and significances,—that meeting is like unto the firmament with those souls as resplendent stars shining with the light of guidance.

Happy is the soul that seeks, in this brilliant era, heavenly teachings, and blessed is the heart which is stirred and attracted by the love of God.

At present the Sun of Truth has dawned upon the land of Japan and the hope is that it may be illumined by heavenly teachings.

Convey on my behalf utmost love and longing to Mr. D. Inouye and similarly to Mr. S. Saiki.* My hope is that those two blessed souls may shine like unto two heavenly stars from the horizon of Japan and may be the cause of its enlightenment.

That land has acquired material civilization and ephemeral advancement; we hope that it may acquire heavenly civilization.

Convey to thy respected wife my greeting and my message and the same to the young babe†, Akira, whose name may be ever blessed for it is quite an appropriate one.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

*A poet and a Buddhist priest.

†The child of Mr. and Mrs. Torii. The first child to be born in a Bahai home in Japan. The name "Akira" means in Japanese, "shining light", which the mother saw before the birth of the babe who was born on March 11, 1918.

FUYO MUCHIZUKI

To the maid-servant of God, Fuyo Muchizuki, Tokyo, Japan.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha. (Care Miss Agnes Alexander.)

He Is God!

O thou beloved daughter!

Thy letter was received and was perused in the utmost of joy, that, praise be to God, in the land of Japan, the light of the love of God has appeared resplendently and a torch, such as thee, has been enkindled. For thy heart overflows with the wine of the love of God and thy spirit is ablaze. Like unto a shrub, thou art fresh and tender, growing and flourishing through the outpourings of the cloud of Bounty. My hope is that thou mayest soon bloom and blossom and bring forth delectable fruits.

The Real Shepherd is undoubtedly kind unto His flock and is in the utmost of attachment, mercy and solicitude. This is only a natural fact. Rest thou assured, therefore, that thou art always within sight and art encompassed by tender cares.

The people of Japan are like unto a soil that has been deprived of rain for cycles and generations and has had no share of the outpourings of rain and even of dew. Certainly it is quite a thirst. Now you should become the divine gardener and should satisfy that thirsty soil with the water of divine teachings, so that heavenly bounties may be poured out and the flowers of reality and the fragrant herbs of human perfections spring forth and that land may turn into a paradise of Eden.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

CHARLES MASON REMEY

To his honor, Mr. Charles Mason Remy, Washington, D. C.—Upon him be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Since the extinction of the fire of war four successive letters have been received from you. The utmost happiness they brought for they carried with them the glad-tidings of the health and welfare of the friends of God.

Praise be unto God, that throughout this violent storm the Ark of the Covenant hath attained unto the shore of Salvation. The danger was imminent and the occasion for fear and apprehension prepared. The friends in all regions remained safe and preserved under the shade of divine protection, particularly in the Holy Land where the danger and calamities were infinite and limitless. Every day brought a new trial and every hour carried with it a special difficulty. In brief, had not divine protection been extended, existence for a single day would have been absolutely impossible. This, verily, is one of the miracles of God that I and the friends in the Holy Land should remain safe and protected while being held in the strong grip of a group of sanguinary persons.

Prior to the war, numerous letters were dispatched to America wherein it was manifestly recorded that a severe commotion was ahead and a great agitation lay in the near future; that the people of the world would be involved in crucial danger and affliction, and trying tests would come to pass; that the pillars of comfort would quake from the intensity of commotion and that blessed souls would shine resplendently like unto the stars of the Supreme Horizon.

Praise be to God, the showers of the blessings of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) are abundantly pouring and the grace and bounty of the loving Lord are complete. At present these gloomy clouds are in the process of dissipation from the horizon of the world. The friends of God must, in accordance with the prescribed directions which have formerly been sent, forget everything, hasten to different lands and regions and promulgate the divine teachings. For this blood-thirsty war has made the world of mankind tired of life, all ears eager to hearken to the call of universal peace, to the declaration of the oneness of the world of humanity, to full understanding, to the annihilation of estrangement and the hoisting of the standard of affection. The majority of the people are ready to listen to the divine teachings. Opportunity must not be let slip away for at another occasion such a capacity will not be found and endeavor and effort shall be in vain. Today is the day of teaching, for all men are athirst and divine teachings are as the refreshing water. Later on, the thirst shall not remain so severe. Hence one should seize the opportunity so that possibly all races and creeds shall unite and this enmity and rancor may vanish from among men.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou Star of the West!

HE IS GOD!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Eleventh Bahai Convention and Congress

To be held in New York City, April 26th to 30th — Letter sent forth by the Bahai Temple Unity

April 9, 1919.

Dear friend in the love of the Most Glorious:

The Eleventh Bahai Convention and Congress will be held at the Hotel McAlpin, Broadway and 34th St., New York City. It is probable that the combined sessions will extend over five days, that is from April 26th to April 30th, inclusive.

Everyone who has attended the Conventions of the past has received a great divine bestowal. Those who traveled across the continent to the Convention and Congress which were held at the Panama-Pacific Exposition will always remember it with the greatest thankfulness and joy. All the past Conventions have been a preparation for this gathering which is now being made ready in New York, and it is the desire of Abdul-Baha that the largest possible number shall attend.

This attendance should not be limited to delegates or alternates, but should include everyone who is attracted to the universality of the divine teachings.

The doors are flung open to the lovers of Truth everywhere. The greatest possible publicity should be given in each city so that the largest number of souls who are attracted may attend.

The world is in a ferment. During the days and the nights it is crying out in pain and agony. Some remedies which are being applied give temporary relief, but others increase the suffering of the patient. One physician succeeds another with bewildering rapidity, while the patient steadily grows weaker.

Mirza Ahmad has brought the story of the terrible sufferings of the people in Syria during the war. He tells us that during the days and in the middle of the nights, one could hear the cries of the starving, lifting their voices hopelessly, as they became steadily weaker, crying, "hungry, hungry, hungry." With the spiritual ear do we not hear the same cry being uttered by the hungry, starving souls of men?

During the long weary days of the war, while cut off from all outward communication with his friends, Abdul-Baha was engaged in providing spiritual sustenance for the world. Now the doors are opened and through the protection of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH a messenger has reached the shores of America. Abdul-Baha said to Mirza Ahmad that he wished him to arrive in time for the Convention and that he should do this at any cost. Every difficulty was removed and Mirza Ahmad has arrived and is in Washington translating the great messages of Abdul-Baha. These are to be given out at the Convention and Congress meetings in accordance with the instructions of Abdul-Baha.

To a degree never before known these gatherings are being planned and carried forward under the direct guidance of Abdul-Baha. In a more wonderful sense than ever before realized it is the Convention of Abdul-Baha. The program for the Convention and Congress will revolve around these great messages which will be brought forward in nine presentations.

It is sufficient to suggest that everyone who attends these meetings will be astonished at the import and significance of these messages. No words can describe them, for they are the Creative Word, itself. They are the illumination of the world of humanity, the essence of hope to every despondent one, the full explanation, the radiant, powerful traces of the brilliant Sun of Truth. Wonderful constructive days are now beginning of which these messages are the pivot.

Come all ye people, all ye worshippers of the Sun of Reality, and hear with the outer and inner ear the melodies of the Heavenly Singer! Can ye discern behind the veil of words that this is the Call of God, in His Manifest Grandeur? Come ye with hearts pure, radiant, thankful, open, and with your beings clear, like a white page upon which will be written the traces of the Godly instructions!

This is an epoch-making gathering, not alone to the Bahais, but to the entire world. All are in His Assembly.

A number of the friends called into consultation with Mirza Ahmad, who have been permitted to obtain only a glimpse of Abdul-Baha's messages, found themselves submerged in the sea of forgiveness, and swept into the realm of his presence and his all surrounding love. Their breasts were dilated and their minds were quickened at the contemplation of the manifest gifts of God, and with our hearts and souls we longed for everyone to share in this heavenly table.

In these gatherings the heavenly feast will be spread and all who long for this sustenance are invited, from the highways and byways of the world of existence.

In the name of Abdul-Baha, we bid ye welcome, all ye who are thirsty, all ye who are hungry, all ye who are confused, all ye who are longing, all ye who are hopeless, for He has come. The doors are open, the call is raised, the sacrificing hearts are yearning for servitude. Will ye come?

In the love of the Spirit,

CONVENTION AND CONGRESS COMMITTEE OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

By Harlan Foster Ober, Secretary.

[The following letters addressed to all the friends by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab were included in this communication:]

Washington, D. C.,
March 30, 1919.

My dear brothers and sisters in the Cause!

It is indeed a great joy to be back in America and feel the warmth and heat of the love of Abdul-Baha in the hearts of the friends! The greatest happiness in this life is to associate with the believers and see in their faces the light of Truth, in their hearts the jewels of wisdom and in their souls the fragrance of constancy.

Six years have rolled on, and I have been absent from your midst; but although absent in body, yet all of you were often remembered at the Threshold of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and in the presence of the Center of the Covenant. I have brought for you his boundless love and greeting, his heavenly spirit and his devotion to the Cause, his beauty and loveliness of spirit, his majesty and humility, his earnestness and enthusiasm to serve the Cause and promote love and unity amongst the friends.

Aside from these ideal gifts, I have carried with me from his presence some most wonderful, world-wide, heavenly instructions, the unfoldment of which will give the vision of the future humanity, perfected and beatified. I am now busily engaged in the translation of these instructions, and I hope they will all be ready to be presented to the Bahais at the coming Convention, in New York City, April 26-29.

As this occasion will be more or less unique in the history of the Bahai Movement, and as these instructions belong to all the friends in the United States and Canada, it is certain that all those who can attend the sessions of the Convention without injury to their business will receive a great spiritual blessing.

The coming Bahai Convention and Congress will be like a magnet, attracting the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha and encircling the friends with the white light of joy and happiness. Its object will be creative, its aim constructive, its desire the promotion of the oneness of the world of humanity, its hope to unite all hearts in the love of God, and the servitude in the Holy Threshold, its longing to draw all minds to the source of all good, and its keynote to unfold the mysteries of the Kingdom of God. It will be the realization of the dream of that seer and poet, Lord Tennyson, who in his "Memoriam" says:

"One God, one law, one element
 "And one far-off Divine Event
 "To which the whole creation moves."

I am,

Your faithful brother,

Ahmad Sohrab.

Washington, D. C.

April 7, 1919.

Dear Bahai brothers and sisters:

We are on the eve of a great Bahai Convention, which will be held in New York the latter part of this month.

From every standpoint the coming Bahai gathering will be unique in the history of the Bahai Movement.

Our beloved Abdul-Baha has promised me that he would be present in our midst. Now it depends upon us to create that heavenly atmosphere of divine love and unity to make him happy and rejoiced as he looks upon us from his celestial station.

Many of us have felt strongly that with the inauguration of this convention a new era of spiritual activity will be opened before the faces of the friends and the universal vision of Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant, will so uplift the souls that they may find themselves in his presence.

Once Abdul-Baha said: The Arabs before the day of Mohammed had a custom that during eleven months of the year they quarreled, pillaged and ransacked the goods of the caravans, killed and carried lawlessness into every corner of Arabia. But during the sacred month they set aside all their strife and contention. People traveled from one end of Arabia to the other in perfect security, no one molesting or robbing them of their property.

Now let us all realize that the four or five days of the Convention are sacred and holy. Let us come to the Convention with nothing but love in our hearts and with nothing but the light of service in our faces and with nothing but humility and submission at the Threshold of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Let the spirit of peace and brotherhood, unity and amity be spread from that Convention, with hearts dedicated to the service of humanity, with souls ablaze with the fire of the love of God and with minds ready to receive the eternal impression of the words of the Beloved of our life.

Let us all meanwhile pray day and night that we may be fully prepared to be submerged in the sea of divine love and let the glorious song of "Ya-Baha-el-Abha!" be raised from all the hearts intoxicated with this new wine which Abdul-Baha has prepared for us and which will be offered to us through his divine instructions at this Convention.

The whole world, now weary with war and bloodshed, must receive great spiritual blessing from the Bahai Movement, and now is the time for us to show and demonstrate whether we can rise to the heights of this golden opportunity; whether we can serve our fellow-men unitedly and with one accord; whether we can forget the past and grasping in our hands the imperial sceptre of light, walk in the pathway of the Kingdom of Abha and raise a great acclamation of rejoicing through the hearts of the people of the earth.

Hoping that we will all meet in that sacred Convention, receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit and go forth into the world with a new power, a new vision, a new strength, and dedicate anew at the Convention our service to the world of humanity through the divine teachings of the Center of the Covenant.

Your sincere brother in the Cause, grances of God may be diffused to other parts. That was the purpose of this Servant.

Ahmad.

All the governments and the nations of the world have fallen in painful torture from the mischief of this universal war; the edifice of mankind quaked and the world of humanity fell into a great crisis. All the sects have become targets for the arrows of calamities; but through the infinite bestowals of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) this oppressed party (the Bahais) in all countries remained safe and protected. This is from the blessings of the divine teachings. All the nations and governments are assured that the party of God has no other purpose and desire save peace, reconciliation, the oneness of the world of humanity, harmony and kindness. Even all the enemies give testimony to this. For this world-consuming war has become the cause of the fulfillment of that which had been explicitly recorded in the divine Tablets and like unto the sun in the setting horizon, has become manifest and evident. There remains no room of denial for any soul. The evidence is complete. Some of the enemies who composed books merely for corruption and to ignite the fire of hate, have recorded in their own books these divine behests which had emanated from the Supreme Pen and were printed and distributed more than thirty years ago. They have even interpreted and explained some of the words that were slightly obscure so as to agitate the authorities of the enemy to strike and uproot the Blessed Tree! Even the well-known Mirza Mahdy Khan, wrote in the book of his delusion* these divine records. For example, he put in parenthesis the word "Constantinople" for "O thou point that art situated between the two seas" in order to disturb the celebrated personage* and to make him understand that "verily, upon thee hath been established the throne of oppression" meant himself—the Sultan. These enemies were indeed the heralds. Now that these divine behests have, after fifty years, become fulfilled, there remains no room for denial for any soul, because as above written, these were recorded and printed in the writings of the enemies. Every one who denies may refer to them.

Undoubtedly, you have perused the European papers. This Servant in all gatherings, assemblies, synagogues and churches, declared at the top of his voice: "O ye who are present! O ye who are hearing! The continent of Europe is like unto hell! Below the surface the earth is filled with combustible materials. It is an arsenal and a storehouse for ammunition and it depends only upon a spark to have its flames suddenly reach the zenith of heaven! The fire of war will envelop the horizon and assuredly this shall come to pass! O ye people, strive and make great efforts, perchance this world-consuming fire may become suppressed and extinguished. Otherwise, countries shall be overturned, the world from the east to the west will become devastated, the human edifice shall be upset and in the world of His creation the structure of rest and happiness shall fall!"

These explicit talks were spread in the papers of the year 1912. Now, according to the divine texts the susceptibilities of Universal Peace are emanating from the hearts. The wise among the people who considered this great Cause as an impossibility and thought of it as superstitions, have now arisen in its promotion. The divine texts are being used by the mouths of the well-wishers in different expressions.

Unquestionably, you have heard of the splendid addresses delivered by His Highness the President (Woodrow Wilson) in great gatherings and you have read them. His Highness the President, explained his fourteen points in these great meetings, that they are the cause of progress and prosperity of the world of humanity. Twelve of these fourteen points were recorded in the divine Tablets fifty years ago. They were printed and most of them were translated and distributed. Consider how the law of God is being spread by ideal forces.

The ascension of some of the friends to the infinite realm was the cause of sorrow to these wandering ones. Yet for those blessed souls, their departure was the cause of joy and happiness. The prisoner became free and the victim of deprivation hastened to the meeting-place of manifestation in the invisible world.

In regard to the book of the illiterate Jawad* there is no significance to it whatsoever, because every just one who reads such writings will instantly know the truth and will understand that these statements emanate from the world of doubts. This book is not from the composition of the illiterate Jawad, it was published in his name according to instructions from the center of violation. Likewise, other books that have been distributed are composed by the center of violation but known in the name of different persons. Let us leave aside this hearsay; become rejoiced in the fragrances of God and act according to the blessed commands. In the Epistle of the Kings, (BAHA'O'LLAH) quoted the following verse: "My heart is depressed by men of weak elements! My hands desire to reach the Lion of God* and Rostem".†

Thanks be unto God! Their honors Khans‡ are safe and guarded under the shadow of divine protection and engaged in completing their studies. When the way becomes open and traveling facilitated, they will return to those regions with utmost longings.

Convey on my behalf, the greeting of the yearning one unto all the friends and unto each individually.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha.

Convey on my behalf to the two respected personages, Mr. Richard Mayer and Mrs. Ledyard the utmost love and kindness. I beg and supplicate to the divine Kingdom and beseech for these two purified souls limitless favor that they may sprout in the Paradise of Abha on the banks of the Water of Life and grow and flourish by the outpouring of the Cloud of Bounty.

The designs of the Mashrekol-azkar have been perused. All are good. That which is chosen by the Committee of the Temple is best. The report which thou hadst written of thy travel with Mr. Latimer to the various parts of the world, to Honolulu, Hawaii, and other regions has been noted. Praise be to God, thou has been assisted in such a great service.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

GENEVIEVE COY

To the maid-servant of God, Genevieve L. Coy, Columbus, Ohio.—Upon her be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou who hast sought guidance from the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter, dated October 24, 1918, was received. The purport was conducive to happiness. Praise be unto God, thou hast been freed from the fetter of agnosticism (I know nothing) which is indicative of utter ignorance, and hast hastened to the Realm of "Verily, I know everything!" For heavenly souls acquire the power of perception and ultimately reach unto a station at which they comprehended the realities of things. Formerly they were agnostics; later on they became true and firm believers. My hope is that thou mayest attain such a station.

In that city, although the fire of the love of God has not yet been set ablaze, soon it shall become aflame; blessed souls shall enter the divine Kingdom, shall arise with righteous aim and chaste deeds in the service of the world of humanity, shall raise the call of the Kingdom and shall ignite a candle in every heart.

I pray in behalf of the inhabitants of that city and beg for them the light of supreme guidance, that spirits may be illumined and hearts may be gladdened by the glad-tidings of God.

Upon thee be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

ANNA VAN BLARCOM

To the maid-servant of God, Anna Van Blarcom, Montclair, New Jersey.—Upon her be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art encompassed with the blessings of God!

Thy letter was received. Praise be to God, it contained good news, namely that a group of colored men have become illumined and have acquired a new zeal and ardor. When I was in America, I exerted a great deal of effort in order to promote a great harmony and union among the white and the colored, for men are like unto doves which associate in perfect concord and amity whether white, black, yellow or red in color. My hope is that this may happen among men. Consider ye, that color has been obliterated among birds, among whom distinction in color does not prevent intimate association. The same applies to animals which give no importance to color, but rather take into consideration the species.

How then can man, who is the highest type in the world of creation, attach importance to unimportant matters and make difference in color the cause of alienation and enmity?

Endeavor ye, therefore, to bring about absolute affiliation between the white and the colored. This variety in color is indeed an ornament. If in a rose-garden all the flowers are unicolorized, what beauty may be found therein?

Whereas if thou beholdest a garden wherein multicolored flowers bloom, infinite grace and beauty will appear therefrom.

Likewise if the world of mankind were of one color what preference would it have? Whereas multiplicity of color is an emblem of the Power of the Merciful.

Convey to Mrs. Beede the utmost kindness on my behalf and to Mr. Randall the glad-tiding of the Kingdom and my utmost love to the Edsalls and Reids. Upon thee be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

EMMA CARMICHAEL

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Emma Carmichael, Brantford, Ontario, Canada.—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

Your letter dated November 14, 1918, was received. From its contents it became known that you are in Canada, and are turning your face, with a clean and pure purpose to the Kingdom of God.

Among the inhabitants of Canada, the attracted maid-servant of God, Mrs. Maxwell, is in reality in the utmost attraction and enkindlement. Convey my greeting to her. I hope that, having joined hands together, you may strive for the promulgation of divine teachings and thus be the cause of the enlightenment of that region. Those souls of the Kingdom who are attracted in these days are like unto a gardener, are ceaselessly sowing seeds, are bestowing growth through the outpourings of the cloud of guidance and are heaping up piles of crops and harvest. My prayer to God is that you may also act similarly.

Concerning what you had written about your husband, be thou not grieved for, praise be to God, he has attained unto everlasting life and has reaped the fruit of his existence on earth, and this is faith and the complete turning of the face toward the Kingdom of God. This is verily everlasting health, this is eternal comfort, this is heavenly exaltation and this is merciful bounty.

Convey on my behalf greeting and kindness to the maid-servants of God, Mrs. Mabel Davis Reley and Mrs. Emma Reasner. Although their two supplications have not materially arrived, yet the heart from their contents is indeed gladdened.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

MARTHA ROOT

To the maid-servant of God, Martha L. Root, Cambridge Springs, Pa.—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He is God!

O thou enkindled with the fire of the love of God!

Your detailed letter dated November 7, 1918, was in these days received. The contents produced great joy, for they indicated a benevolent purpose, an untiring effort and an extended tour around the different parts of the globe.

Today the promulgation of the ideal principles of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH, which are manifestly recorded in the Books, is the spirit of this age and the cause of the realization of assistance and confirmation. Assuredly whenever thou holdest fast to it, in whatever enterprise thou mayest engage, thou shalt find the doors of might and power flung open to thy face. My hope from the blessings of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH is that thou mayest become self-sacrificing in His path, that thou mayest forget rest and composure and like unto a swift-flying bird, thou mayest cover long distances and in whatever land thou tarriest thou mayest reproduce the melody of the Kingdom and engage in songs and music in the best of tunes.

At present the whole world is prepared for the call of the Kingdom. The past war has given rise to a wonderful capacity among men, for the underlying foundation of the teachings of God rests upon the comfort and the well-being of the denizens of the world and upon the establishment of Universal Peace.

As ears are awaiting the summons for Universal Peace, it is therefore advisable for thee to travel, in case comfortable journey is possible, to the different parts of the globe and roar like unto a lion in the Kingdom of God. Wide-reaching consequences thou shalt witness and extraordinary confirmations shall be exhibited unto thee. His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH has said: "Verily, We gaze upon ye from My Abha Horizon and shall come to the assistance of him who has risen to the service of My Cause with the phalanxes of the Supreme Concourse and with a legion of chosen and favored angels." Thus the diffusion of divine fragrances is above all the most important matter.

I very much desire that thou shouldst visit the Holy Land and thus to meet thee, but teaching stands above everything else and if thou deemest it advisable, engage thou in the spreading of it throughout the regions of the world.

His honor Mr. Harry Randall is indeed the herald of the Kingdom of God, serves His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH and the friends of God beyond his own endurance and is the cause of the extension of the sphere of teaching.

His honor Mr. Roy Wilhelm is in reality a true servant. He has no thought save service to the Kingdom of Abha and is therein engaged day and night.

Mr. Richard Mayer is self-sacrificing in service to the world of humanity and is the cause of the diffusion of Divine fragrances. His efforts are accepted at the Kingdom of Abha.

As to Green Acre, it is indeed an important spot. Far-reaching consequences shall result from the gathering at that spot. May the spirit of (her honor) Miss Farmer rejoice and rest in peace and may her reality be glorified in the Kingdom of Abha! I always beg assistance and confirmations for the friends in Green Acre.

His honor Agha Abbas Ali is indeed the Abbas of Baha, i. e. the lion of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, for he roars and proclaims the call of "Ya-Baha-el-Abha!" on mountains and in jungles.

Concerning the Esperanto language, numerous letters have been written by the friends and have been spread over all the world. My hope is that the Esperantists may become attracted by these epistles, may consider the magnitude of confirmation bestowed upon some of the important Tablets of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH and propagate them all around. I trust they may turn their faces towards the Abha Kingdom and may solicit assistance and confirmation in this noble undertaking.

O thou beloved maid-servant of God! I presently implore and entreat at the Kingdom of God and beg for thy late mother unbounded forgiveness that her chaste and pure essence may become sanctified from the pollutions of sins and may turn out bright and resplendent by the glorious Light in the limitless Kingdom.

Convey, on my behalf, the wonderful Abha greetings to all the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

MABEL NICKERSON

To the maid-servant of God, Mabel A. Nickerson, Chicago, Ill.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O maid-servant of His Holiness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH!

Thy letter dated September 25, 1918, was received. Thou hadst solicited confirmation. Know thou verily that the magnet of confirmation is the promulgation of divine teachings. Whosoever arises for the diffusion of the fragrances of God, the confirmation of the Kingdom will assuredly surround him to such an extent that he will himself remain confounded.

However, this is conditioned upon the conformity of words with deeds. The people of Baha must strive to diffuse the fragrances through deeds more than through words, for a single deed, motivated by the Essence of Sanctity, so promulgates (The Word) that its sweet-scented fragrances are transmitted to all the regions of the world. My hope is that thou mayest be confirmed and assisted.

Thou hast asked for permission to attain the court of presence. Whenever travel in comfort and ease is made possible, then thou art granted permission.

Convey to all the friends and maid-servants of God respectful greetings. Upon thee be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated Haifa, Palestine, January 10, 1919.)

GERALDINE LUXMORE

To the maid-servant of God, Geraldine Luxmore, Akron, Ohio.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou who hast sought illumination from the light of guidance!

Praise thou God, that He hath directed thee to the Light of Truth and hath invited thee to enter the Kingdom of Abha. Sight has been illumined and heart has been turned into a rose-garden. I pray for thee that thou mayest ever grow in faith and assurance, shine like unto a torch in the assemblies and bestow thereupon the light of guidance.

Whenever an illumined gathering of the friends of God is instituted, Abdul-Baha, although bodily absent, is yet present in spirit and in soul. I am always a traveler to America and am assuredly associating with Godlike and illumined friends. Distance is annihilated and prevents not the close and intimate association of two souls that are closely attached in heart even though they may be in two different countries. I am therefore thy mate in association in songs and melodies!

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EI-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

BELLE LUXMORE

To the maid-servant of God, Belle B. Luxmore.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EI-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou respected one!

Praise God and be grateful that thou hast become the recipient of divine bounty, has illumined thy sight and heart with the light of guidance, hast responded to the call of the Herald of the Kingdom and hast turned thy face to the Most Exalted Summit.

Appreciate thou the value of this supreme bounty and praise and thank the Lord day and night.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EI-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani. January 10, 1919. Home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

HENRIETTA WAGNER

To the maid-servant of God, Henrietta Clark Wagner, Akron, Ohio.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EI-Abhá!

He is God!

O thou firm in the Covenant!

Thy letter dated October 24, 1918, was received. Praise be to God that, like unto the shower of bounty, thou hast caused every soil to be fertile and every plantation luxuriant.

Thou wert only complaining of Cleveland. The reason why this inactivity prevails is because some heedless and thoughtless ones are corresponding with some of the people of that city. But this depression and inactivity is like unto a mist which the Sun of Truth shall eventually dissipate through the heat of its rays. Thus the obscurity of error shall give way to the morn of guidance.

Praise be to God, thou art engaged in service and art occupied in promulgating the Divine Teachings.

Appreciate thou the merit of such confirmed deed and thank thy Lord for it day and night. The gratitude for this favor consists in thy adoption of divine morals, thy teaching the Cause of God and thy holding fast to His Covenant.

I beg for thee the Bounty, the Favor and the Blessings of God.

Forward the enclosed letters.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EI-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Bahai Movement—Is it the coming Universal Religion?

By JEAN MASSON.

[The Bahai Movement has a number of converts throughout Montana, of whom there is a small group in Helena. It is a world movement, which is spreading rapidly in Asia and in parts of eastern Europe. Whatever the religious viewpoint of the reader, it will not be denied that the prophecies of the leaders of the Bahais have been fulfilled in marvelous manner.—Editor.]

THE Holy Land had just been released from the grip of the Turk. Communication was made possible between Palestine and the west after many months of interrupted intercourse. And then through the British embassy came the message over the cable to America:

"I have much pleasure in informing you that I have received a telegram from my government stating that His Eminence Abdul-Baha Abbas is in Haifa and that he is in good health and is well cared for."

Press notices in early October were sent out over the country, through the British Bureau of Information, that British troops came upon Abdul-Baha in Haifa.

Who is Abdul-Baha, that he should be the subject of telegraphic and press information immediately upon the complete defeat of the Turks and the establishment of communication?

At Leland Stanford university, in October, 1912, this same Abdul-Baha predicted the great war:

"We are on the eve of the battle of Armageddon, referred to in the 16th chapter of Revelation. The time is two years hence, when only a spark will set aflame the whole of Europe.

"The social unrest in all countries, the growing religious skepticism, antecedent to the millennium, are already here. Only a spark will set aflame the whole of Europe, as prophesied in the verses of Daniel and in the Book of John.

"Before 1917 kingdoms will be annihilated, cataclysms will rock the earth. Then all nations shall be as one faith and all men as brothers and these fruitless strifes and ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come, and man shall not glory in this, that he loves his country, but rather in that he loves his kind."

On Sunday, May 12, 1912, in Grace Methodist Episcopal church, New York city, this same Abdul-Baha gave utterance to this momentous warning:

"Just now you can say Europe is a battlefield; like ammunition ready for a spark. And one spark can set aflame the whole world.

"Before these complications and colossal events happen, take a step and prevent it."

Who is this Abdul-Baha, with the vision of the seer, who so unerringly could prophesy world events?

Fifty years ago his father before him, the great BAHÁ'O'LLAH, out of a prison in the Holy Land, sent letters to the kings of Europe, calling upon them to establish universal peace and righteousness among men. He warned them of approaching calamity. He predicted the downfall of Napoleon III, then at the zenith of his power; of the emperor of Austria; of the sultan of Turkey.

To the emperor of Germany he wrote:

"O banks of the river Rhine! We have seen you drenched in gore, because the swords of retribution were drawn against you; and ye shall have another trouble. And we hear the lamentation of Berlin, though it be today in manifest glory."

Neither England, nor Russia, nor Persia, nor America was ignored by the prophetic and mandatory pen of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

To England he wrote through England's queen, Victoria:

"Verily, we see you increasing your expenditures every year and placing the burden thereof upon your subjects. This is naught but manifest injustice. Fear the sighs of the oppressed and his tears and do not burden your subjects above that which they can bear, neither ruin them to build your palaces. Choose for them that which ye choose for yourselves. Thus do we expound unto you that which will profit you, if ye are of those who enquire. They are your treasurers. Beware lest ye exercise over them that which God hath never done, and entrust such treasuries into the hands of thieves. By them ye eat, rule and conquer, and still you make yourselves great against them. Verily, this is naught but an astonishment.

"O assembly of rulers! Improve the accordance among you; then you will need neither many soldiers, nor their accoutrements, but to a certain degree, whereby ye will protect your empires and countries."

To America this authoritative pen wrote:

"Assist with the hands of justice the broken-hearted (oppressed) and crush the great oppressors with the scourges of the commands of your Lord, the powerful, the wise."

And the rulers—some of them responded to BAHÁ'O'LLAH, and some of them have fallen, in unerring fulfilment, apparently, of the utterances of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha?

You will hear their names around the world today, if your ear is sensitive to spiritual verities. To know them you must first know the Bahai Movement, of which they and the great Bab are the central vivid figures.

And you cannot investigate the Bahai Movement without immediate association with the Mashrekol-azkar, the great Bahai temple, that shall rival in beauty and perfection all other temples of historical import.

Recently there has been on exhibition at the National Museum in Washington a series of architectural designs of the Mashrekol-azkar, executed by Charles Mason Remey.

Other architects from the east and middle west, from Canada, have submitted designs embodying their conception of this great institution, the Mashrekol-azkar—an institution unparalleled in religious and architectural history.

An institution that commands the attention of noted American architects; that has inspired one of them to make nine different studies of the same subject; an institution known in the orient as well as the occident; that shall take visible material form on Lake Michigan, in the very heart of the continent—the Mashrekol-azkar—what is its significance? What does it mean today to a world searching, searching as never before for the reality of life; seeking after God, if haply we may find Him?

Mashrekol-azkar, translated from the Arabic into English, means the dawning point of praises (to God). It is a creational idea that marks the beginning of a new historical era—an era of mutuality of service to God and man, of cooperation, the end of destructive competition, the beginning of the realization of the Christ teachings.

No appreciation of the Mashrekol-azkar can be had without knowledge first of the Bahai Movement, for its history is inextricably interwoven in the development of the great structure. You will hear today of the Bahai Movement in every part of the world. Representatives of all races and nations are its adherents. If you are a Bahai, the name is open sesame around the world, even to the jungles of India. You will hear of the Movement, not only in every civilized country of the world, but in the outlying posts of civilization, in unexpected islands of the sea, up in Alaska, down in uttermost Africa, so universal is its diffusion—a dynamic movement that penetrates, by virtue of its tremendous truth and vitalness, silently, ceaselessly, resistlessly, into the great heart of humanity.

The Bahai Movement had its origin in 1844, when, on the 23d day of May, a Persian youth, calling himself the Bab or Gate, arose among his countrymen and proclaimed the coming of the universal Teacher of Men, the Great One, whose appearance had been anticipated and prophesied by all the Scriptures of the world, who would lead humanity into all truth. He called men to prepare themselves by self-purification for the recognition of the Great One, when He should appear among them.

It was a skeptical Moslem world that greeted the proclamation of the Bab, for his teachings meant assuredly the overthrow of ancient Islamic institutions. And so, after a mission of six years, having lived a blameless, unsullied life, the Bab was martyred in the public square of Tabriz. To the end he held tenaciously to his faith in his own personal mission as herald of the Mighty One, soon to stand forth, revealed to the world as the Manifestation of God. His very name, indicative of His station, the Bab announced—BAHA'O'LLAH, Arabic for the Glory of God.

In 1852, Mirza Husein Ali of Nur, a man of ancient, distinguished Persian lineage, began an exile of forty years from his native land. Persecution and imprisonment had been his portion at the hands of his government. For, where the Bab ended his work, Mirza Husein Ali assumed the responsibility for the spiritual guidance of humanity. Today, throughout the world, he is known as BAHA'O'LLAH, "Him whom God should manifest," in fulfilment of the prophetic utterances of the Bab. And the message he has given to the world, out of the depths of his spiritual consciousness, is known as the Bahai Revelation.

The Holy Land was the scene of the last exile and imprisonment of BAHA'O'LLAH. At the instigation of the merciless Islamic government, with his family and a few followers, he had been ruthlessly sent forth, divested of all his estates, first to Bagdad, then to Constantinople and Adrianople, and, finally, in 1868, to the Turkish penal colony of Acca, nine miles north of Mt. Carmel, on the Mediterranean coast—"the most desolate of the cities of the world."

The horrors of the Turkish prison, the tragic sufferings of the exiles are historical facts—horrors and sufferings that would have dissuaded ordinary men from pursuing their spiritual mission to the world. Yet, in the midst of it all, as throughout the life of the brilliant protagonists of the Bahai Movement, those marvelous souls manifested only

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

HE IS GOD!

O thou Star of the West!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

News from the Holy Land

LETTER FROM SHOGHI RABBANI

Haifa, Palestine,
March 17, 1919.

Mrs. Corinne True, Chicago.
My dear sister in El-Abha:

Although the recollection of your face and of your visit to the Holy Land is thoroughly effaced from my memory, yet what enkindles the fire of interest within me and impels me to drop you these lines is the glorious mention I hear of your services at the Threshold of Abha. Your supplications, your keen interest in the Bahai Temple and the remarks and comments of the Beloved upon your work offer ample justification. I am so glad to correspond with you and write to you on a card, trusting it will reach you sooner.

Your kind letter, dated January 27, 1919, was received and imparted intense joy. Your supplication since the last Tablet (the first revealed for you since the liberation of Haifa), dated February 7th, has been received and will soon secure for you another Tablet. I hope you will soon receive your Tablet of February 7th.

The members of the household ever remember you and pray for you and convey to you their most wonderful Abha greeting.

The doors of communication with Persia and India are open and supplications are constantly pouring in. The Beloved from morn till eve, even at midnight is engaged in revealing Tablets, in sending forth his constructive, dynamic thoughts of love and principles to a sad and distracted world. In most of the Tablets he lays great stress upon unity, love and firmness in the Covenant.

Awaiting your good news,
Yours in El-Abha,

Shoghi.

LETTER FROM MAJOR W. TUDOR-POLE

Cairo, Egypt,
April 8, 1919.

Dear Mrs. True:

I was pleased to receive your kind note of March 6, 1919, and I am only too glad to have been of service to the Master during trying and critical times. You will have seen an account of my February visit to Haifa, since when I spent a few days there on my return from Damascus, and am pleased to report that all is well.

I issued passes for Mons. and Mme. Dreyfus-Barney to visit Haifa and they are there now for a few weeks.

I am going to Haifa on a British cruiser with Lord Incheape next week and expect that this will be my last visit before returning to Paris and London.

The Master is in splendid health and spirits and he looks beyond the present gloom and chaos to the New Dawn now so fast approaching. The Master looks to America. Let your people hold to the true vision in complete serenity of faith and joy!

With best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

W. Tudor-Pole.

News from Persia

Portion of a letter written from Teheran Persia by Miss Elizabeth H. Stewart to Mrs. Isabella D. Brittingham, Santa Barbara, California.

Dated November 25, 1918.

FOR many months no post in or out of Persia, and since August, 1917, no word direct from you. In September (1918) the way was open for a few letters to sift through, bearing dates of March and April previous. I am now sending this letter by Mr. de Lambert, brother of the wife of the American Minister who is soon returning to America.

We are now in a state of rejoicing over the news of peace, and seeing the fulfilment of the Words of BAHÁ'U'LLÁH and Abdul-Baha, from day to day, witnessing the new order of things. O, what a mercy that we are alive and awakened and trying to serve in the Kingdom of Abha!

We have had some wonderfully beautiful meetings lately, of both men and women, many of them meetings for teaching. We have one of men, for teaching, every Saturday night, and on every Tuesday afternoon one for women. Dr. Clock has one for men every Monday night. Several different sections have opened in the city, until now on every night there is a meeting for teaching.

We have been enjoying meeting with the American Commission sent here for the purpose of investigating everything about the conditions in Persia. Dr. Judson of the University of Chicago, Dr. Jackson of Columbia University (and his wife) and several others compose it. They are all staying up at the American Legation.

Dr. Jackson said he saw Abdul-Baha when he was in America. Dr. Jackson was himself at the Hotel Ansonia making an address at the time Abdul-Baha was there.

Bahman Mirza, a Bahai and a Persian prince, gave the Commission a lunch at his house and it was made a freedom meeting where every Persian man brought his wife. A long table was arranged. About twenty sat around it—Persian men and women Bahais, we four Americans, Mr. Caldwell the Minister (his wife could not be present), Mr. Bader the Consul, Mr. de Lambert and the members of the Commission.

This was the very first time such a thing had ever occurred and we felt so happy to be there, helping to carry forward the work of freeing the women. Of course it was not possible to have servants coming into the room, so, real Persian style, the host, Bahman Mirza, waited on the table, and I asked him to give me the privilege of helping him, which he did. I was very happy to be able to serve at such a notable gathering. Dr. Moody wrote a speech in English, which one of the Persian ladies committed to memory and gave, stating how our beloved Abdul-Baha had said the time would come when many Americans would come to Persia, and many Persians would go to America, and today we had seen these words being fulfilled.

It was a most beautiful meeting. After lunch many more couples of men and women came, and for the first time in history a photograph was taken of all who were there. The hearts of all of us were so happy.

Today a men's committee from the Mahfal Rouhani (Spiritual Assembly) went to make a call on the Commission and appointed Dr. Moody to go with them. We expect to meet them tomorrow at the home of another Bahai. They have also made addresses at the Parliament, Chamber of Commerce, State University and other places.

Their talks have been published in the Persian papers and have been much commented upon. It cannot be otherwise than that they are doing the will of the most supreme BAHĀ'O'LLĀH!

We are longing for the way to be opened to receive letters and goods and medicines and every thing from America. We are nearly at the end of everything. Dr. Moody wishes me to tell you that since America entered the war the schools have received no financial help from America, and are feeling the straitened condition; that they have dropped many pupils and are struggling to keep others on, free of charge. All things are very high in price, as they are with you.

Those who could afford it have had to pay sixty and seventy cents for a quarter of a pound of butter (we have not had any for a long time); eggs have been six cents apiece, bread very poor and so high that I have made it for a long time, under very difficult conditions. The ways of cooking are so primitive that I do not see how so many delicious things to eat are turned out.

AGNES PARSONS

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Agnes Parsons, Washington, D. C.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou beloved daughter!

Formerly a cable through the British Government was received from you but it was misrepresented and vague. Although it could not be understood yet an answer was dispatched through the same Government. Your letter dated October 21, 1918, has just been received. Infinite gratitude have I tendered for the blessings of His Holiness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH and have laid my head on His Sanctified Threshold and have offered my praise and thanks that, praise be to God, that beloved daughter has remained firm and steadfast throughout this violent storm and has wished and purposed nothing save service to His Holiness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH and the promulgation of Divine Teachings. Rest thou assured that assistance and confirmations shall encompass thee.

Thou hast written concerning organization. The divine teachings and the admonitions and exhortations of His Holiness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH are manifestly evident. These constitute the organization of the Kingdom and their enforcement is obligatory. The least deviation from them is absolute error.

Thou has written concerning my travel to America. If thou couldst see how the waves of constant occupation are surging thou wouldst have considered that time for travel is absolutely lacking; in times of fixed residence partial rest is even impossible. God willing, I trust, through the bounty of BAHÁ'O'LLAH that as soon as means for the composure of mind and of heart are provided, I shall determine to journey and shall inform thee about it.

Convey on my behalf utmost kindness to thy beloved son and in perfect love kiss thou his two cheeks. My prayer to God is that he may grow to be the cause of thy happiness and satisfaction.

The maid-servant of God, Edna Ballora, has been struck with a great affliction. She is deeply grieved and sad. Assuredly extend thou thy care upon her and be thou her stay and solace.

Convey to the two enlightened souls, Leona Barnitz and Mrs. Finch, my love and kindness, and tell them: "Praise ye God, that assistance has been extended and ye have turned your faces to the Supreme Horizon:—the bounty and guidance of which the mass of people are unaware, ye have found, and have adorned your head with a crown of supreme guidance, the glittering gems of which gleam and glisten throughout ages and generations. Do not look at the present condition, contemplate the future. The Apostles of Christ were fishermen, were destitute of fame and position and enjoyed no grade and rank. They were, as it is intimated in the Gospel, insignificant persons, yea, they were low in the sight of the people. At present consider ye, what change has taken place—how great they have become! Nay rather, they have been the sovereigns of the Kingdom. The bounties of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH to His servants shall in the future be made evident and manifest."

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

ALICE IVES BREED

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Alice Ives Breed, New York.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou respected maid-servant of God!

Thy letter dated November 17th, 1918, was received. Its contents was an exposition of truth.

Indeed, had the world of women wielded sufficient prestige, the conflagration of this war would not have set the world aflame.

If the mass of women in Europe and all those of America had been enfranchised throughout all the states, undoubtedly they would not agree to war. At present, this war has made millions of children fatherless and millions of fathers and mothers destitute of sons; this war has snatched from pitiable sisters their brethren; this war has turned millions of women widows and destitute of husbands; this war has made cities desolate; this war has brought confusion and chaos in millions of villages; this war has made the very foundations of mankind quake and quiver.

If, in the future, women like unto men are given the franchise, assuredly they shall prevent the occurrence of war, whereas otherwise the matter will be difficult. Man is sanguinary and even worse than devouring beasts. Of what use is exhortation and to what amounts admonition? A mighty power is necessary in order to make an effective opposition—otherwise it will be exceedingly difficult. I pray God that the world of women may be assisted and confirmed for their purpose is Universal Peace.

At present the friends of God must lay aside all thoughts and preoccupations and concentrate their energies upon the proclamation of the Cause of God and the divine teachings which lay the foundation of Universal Peace.

I supplicate and pray to the Divine Kingdom and beg for the friends of New York assistance and confirmation that they may, day by day, fortify the bonds of amity and union and may become the cause of the spreading of the Word of God.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

SARAH GERTRUDE HARRIS

To the maid-servant of God, Sarah Gertrude Harris, New York City.—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou my beloved daughter!

Your letter dated November 13th was received. Its contents occasioned infinite grief, for it spoke of the ascension of that illumined youth. Indeed in the rose garden of God that young man was like unto a shrub in its utmost freshness and promising good fruits. Whoever has seen him or heard him has undoubtedly been shocked and grieved at the news of his passing away.

However, although that peerless shrub has sought separation from the woods of the nether world, yet, it has appeared fully adorned and resplendent in the rose garden of the world on-high in the Abha Paradise. That divine bird has flown away from this mortal and earthly nest, has ascended to the Kingdom of God and has been engaged in singing the sweet melodies of praise and thanksgiving on the lordly branches in the rose-garden of the Merciful. Happy is he and blessed in his abode! He has reaped the result of life and has become a fruitful tree. Grieve not therefore for his death and be not depressed.

With regard to his life insurance, act in accordance with his will. I have perused his letter and have supplicated for him, from the threshold of Oneness, an exalted station.

As to my presence in America for the laying of the corner-stone of the Mashrekol-azkar, this depends upon the unity and harmony among all the friends of God. For their union is like unto a lodestone which draws me to their shores.

I have been gladdened by the news you have conveyed of the gathering of the friends and their union and affiliation.

Convey the utmost kindness on my behalf to Bahaya. I hope that Mr. Harris will fully recover, and engage as it ought to be in the service of the Lord.

The relatives who are here all convey to you their longing greeting.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

ISABELLA D. BRITTINGHAM

To the maid-servant of God, Isabella D. Brittingham, San Francisco, California.
—Upon her be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O dear maid-servant of God!

Indeed, what thou hadst written is true. Communication and connection between the sons and daughters of the Kingdom are not conditioned upon material links. Spiritual means have ever existed and will continue to exist. As, for instance, throughout all these years of commotion, when ways were barred and the doors of communication closed, notwithstanding this, hearts were attracted and gladdened by the fragrances of God.

This was because the bond of connection was firm and the link of association was strong.

The letters which thou hadst enclosed in thy letter have been received. Praise be to God, thou hast acquired a long and spiritual lineage, and this is by far the most blessed of all lines. For material lines of descent may either be greatly praiseworthy or mean in character, while spiritual lineage is the offspring of heart and of soul and is in every respect praiseworthy.

Ye had celebrated the Feast of the Covenant. It was very proper. Mr. and Mrs. Zim have served the Kingdom of God and on that day called a meeting in their home and celebrated the Feast.

I have been very pleased with the service of Mr. Milton who has supported the government, for according to the explicit command of His Holiness BAHA-O'LLAH, all Bahais are ordered to serve, to obey and to be faithful to their government. Convey my greetings to Mr. Herbert.

The respected maid-servant of God Mrs. Goodall and the attracted maid-servant of God Mrs. Cooper are indeed two candles illumined by the light of the love of God.

Thou shalt in future reap the fruits of thy tour to the southern states.

All the family and the Holy Leaves convey to you their salutation and their longing.

Upon thee be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

VITULA EDITH WHITTON

To Mrs. Vitula Edith Whitton, Geyserville, California.—Upon her be BAHA-O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou maid-servant of God!

The letter thou hadst written November 23, 1918, was received. Its context indicated that—praise be to God!—thou art intoxicated with the wine of the Covenant and art aloof and away from all else save God; that thou hast a truthful heart and a firm step.

Although thou hast a small meeting, yet, as thou art firm and resolute, in future this gathering shall greatly expand and shall become elaborate, for the souls that are firm in the Covenant are ever assisted and confirmed. Rest assured of the divine confirmation which strengthens all who are feeble and energizes all who are frail.

Convey on my behalf the utmost love and kindness to the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful.

Upon thee be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EI-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, February 3, 1919. Home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

ELIZABETH P. HACKLEY

To the maid-servant of God, Elizabeth P. Hackley, Urbana, Ill.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Its contents indicated the turning of thy face to the Kingdom of God, thy freedom from the obscurity of the world of nature, thy illumination with the light of guidance, thy acquisition of spirituality and thy seeking to draw nearer to God.

My prayer to the Almighty God is that, day unto day, thou mayst increase in spirituality and attain to an ideal advancement.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, February 1, 1919. Home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

DAVID BUCHANAN

To his honor, David Buchanan, Portland, Oregon.—Upon him be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art turning thy face to the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter dated December 2nd, 1918, was received. Although the representatives of various governments are assembled in Paris in order to lay the foundations of Universal Peace and thus bestow rest and comfort upon the world of humanity, yet misunderstanding among some individuals is still predominant and self-interest still prevails. In such an atmosphere, Universal Peace will not be practicable, nay rather, fresh difficulties will arise. This is because interests are conflicting and aims are at variance.

We pray and beseech at the divine Kingdom and beg for the world of humanity rest and composure. For Universal Peace will not be brought about through human power and shall not shine in full splendor unless this weighty and important matter will be realized through the Word of God and be made to shine forth through the influence of the Kingdom of God.

Eventually it shall be thoroughly established through the power of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH!

Verily, His Honor President Wilson is self-sacrificing in this path and is striving with heart and soul, with perfect good-will, in the world of humanity. Similarly the equitable government of Great Britain is expending a great deal of effort. Undoubtedly the general condition of the people and the state of small oppressed nationalities will not remain as before. Justice and Right shall be fortified but the establishment of Universal Peace will be realized fully through the power of the Word of God.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHÁ ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, January 10, 1919. Home of Abdul-Bahá, Haifa, Palestine.)

CLAUDIA STUART COLES

To the maid-servant of God, Claudia Stuart Coles, Washington, D. C.

He Is God!

O thou beloved maid-servant of God!

Thy letter dated October 4, 1918, was received. It was not a letter but rather a bouquet of flowers diffusing the sweet scent of firmness and steadfastness and so it gave pleasure to the nostrils of the soul.

Praise be to God, the test proved to be the cause of the firmness and the steadfastness of the people of faith.

Throughout these years of disturbance and commotion, when the world of humanity was physically and spiritually afflicted, the friends of God passed the day in rest, ease and comfort. In the western countries only a few shared in the hardship and affliction of other souls while the mass of the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful, of whom Mrs. Coles is one, have been living quietly and peacefully. In the orient every nation became distracted and every gathering dispersed save the friends of God who remained all protected and sheltered from every trouble and calamity in the fort of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH'S protection. Verily, this is a divine miracle—that we helpless, friendless, unprotected, unsupported wanderers in these regions should be saved amidst the fire of oppression and tyranny. This is God's miracle.

In fine, praise be to God, yourself and the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful have, like unto an immovable rock, remained firm and resolute in the Cause of God.

Organize ye meetings and strive day and night that ye may be the cause of the diffusion of divine fragrances and the exaltation of the Word of God.

Concerning the book* that thou hadst written about; it has been written on political affairs so that justice and equity may be promoted and the comfort of the world of mankind may be realized.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHÁ ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, January 28, 1919. Home of Abdul-Bahá, Haifa, Palestine.)

JEAN MASSON

To her honor, Miss Jean Masson—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He is God!

O thou herald of the Kingdom!

The detailed letter thou hadst written was perused. Its text was conducive to joy and it embodied refreshing news. Praise thou the Lord, that thou hast become the means of the promulgation of heavenly teachings and hast served the oneness of the world of humanity that all denominational, sectarian, racial, political, economic and even patriotic prejudices may be removed and the illumination of the love of God may enlighten the courtyard of hearts.

My hope is that day by day thou mayest be more confirmed and may serve to the best the world of humanity; that thou mayest adore mankind and ignite in every heart the lamp of guidance, may serve the world of morality so that human realities may be freed from the gloom of the world of nature which, in essence, is purely animal in character, and may be illumined with the light of the divine realm.

What service is there nobler than this and what gift more precious than this; what exaltation is higher than this and what sovereignty mightier than this? I hope that therein thou mayest be confirmed.

As to Margaret Nelson, she has been emancipated from this gloomy dungeon of the world of dust and has hastened to the sanctified realm. I pray on her behalf and beg for her the forgiveness and the pardon of the Lord of Creation, that she may secure rest and comfort in the realm of the Kingdom.

The article that thou hadst edited in the *Helena Daily Independent was received and was perused. Happy art thou that the Lord hath assisted thee in such a distinguished service.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, March 17, 1919. Home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

DOROTHY NELSON

To the maid-servant of God, Dorothy Nelson.—Upon her be Baha-el-Abha!

He is God!

O dear maid-servant of God!

At the divine threshold address this prayer and beg forgiveness for thy sister. That prayer is the following:—

“O forgiving and kind God! My beloved sister Margaret has hastened from this world to Thy realm and has abandoned the nether world to soar in the realm on high. She was like unto a shelterless bird but has yearned for a rest and shelter in the celestial realm. She was a thirsty fish and longed to be immersed in the sea of light.

“O God! We are captives to innumerable sins, but need Thy pardon and Thy forgiveness. We have lost the way but have hastened to Thee. We suffer deprivation, but seek Thy rich treasury. We are disabled and broken-winged, but are treading Thy path. O God! Forgive us and bestow upon us Thy pardon.

“Verily, Thou art the Refuge and Shelter of sinners and Thou art the Bestower, the Radiant One in the realm of heaven!”

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Bahai Movement—Is it the coming Universal Religion?

an amazing patience and sweetness of spirit. No resentment against their keepers! No resentment against their government!

Two years of imprisonment in the barracks of Acca were followed by nine years of close confinement for BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, within the town in an abode, the threshold of which the great prisoner was not permitted to cross. This was the external life of him whom today multitudes of people believe to have been the most extraordinary figure of any age.

Before his death, in 1892, there were a few years of somewhat greater freedom, within a radius of fifteen miles, which included Carmel and the village of Behje, his final resting-place.

No less extraordinary a figure than BAHĀ'O'LLĀH is his son, Abbas Effendi, known to the world as Abdul-Baha, Arabic again for the Servant of Baha. He was born on the very day of the Bab's proclamation. And, at the age of eight, he began, with the exile of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, his long, remarkable career of persecution, banishment, imprisonment, which ended only in 1908, when, by the overthrow of the Turkish government, he was granted his freedom. Fifty-six years an exile from his native land! Forty years a prisoner in the "most great prison" of Acca!

By the death of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, Abdul-Baha became the leader of the Bahai Movement. To this station he had been accredited by his father, both verbally and by written document. His peculiar function in the movement is interpreter of the Revelation of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH and exemplar for the world of the Bahai life.

In 1911-1912, you will remember, Abdul-Baha, at the age of sixty-eight, journeyed to Europe and America, to spread the message of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH in the occident—that tremendous message of internationalism and religious unity, a basic principle of the Mashrekol-azkar. Statesmen, scholars, people of every degree of intellectual and spiritual attainment recognized his greatness and power.

Back in 1892, before the passing of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, wrote Edward Granville Browne of Cambridge university, concerning Abdul-Baha: "About the greatness of this man no one who had seen him could entertain a doubt."

And since that date Abdul-Baha has been the subject of many interviews and many articles. But no journalistic analysis has been able to penetrate the mystery of a life martyrdom for a spiritual ideal, a conscious spiritual mission to all the world.

When, in 1914, the European war burst forth in all its fury, friends of Abdul-Baha, anxious for his safety, urged him to leave his home on Mt. Carmel and accept the greater security of America—a hospitality which he refused to accept, for the people of Palestine had need of him. And there, on the mountain of God, in a war-ravaged land, he dwells, sending forth dynamic thoughts of love to a suffering humanity and a devastated world.

It is difficult to write dispassionately of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH and Abdul-Baha, who sacrificed their lives, political and social freedom, all physical comfort, for the propagation of ideals, the establishment of principles, which are the common talk of men today. Easily do we inherit them from these great souls. Our statesmen today are interpreting government and social reconstruction in terms of the universal. In the middle of the last century, BAHĀ'O'LLĀH gave the creative impulse to the new order of civilization that should include all humanity, and the new order is upon us. The old is swiftly passing.

BAHA'O'LLAH from the prison of Acca, proclaimed his great revolutionary principles of world government and social readjustment to the crowned heads of Europe and to the common people.

These principles include the oneness of the religions of the world; the oneness of humanity; the universal brotherhood of man; universal peace; the harmony of religion and science; the search for truth and the abolition of all prejudices, religious, national, racial, social; the equality of the sexes; equal educational advantages for both; equalization of the means of livelihood; social, industrial, economic reorganization; the establishment of justice among men. He urged the creation of a universal language. He emphasized the necessity of a parliament of man, a universal tribunal of justice or arbitration to adjust international affairs.

He taught purity of life, selflessness, personal sacrifice and service to humanity.

There is inherent in the utterances of BAHA'O'LLAH, as there is in the words Abdul-Baha, a vitality, a power that compels attention, a creative quality that somehow makes them the effective, dominating influence in human hearts. Tyrannical, mediaeval efforts of enemies to suppress the Cause, to destroy its leaders, have been futile. And we have, today, millions of Bahais who believe, with an indissuadable faith, that in the Bahai Movement only will the world find relief from its tragedy. Has it not recreated them, transformed their individual lives? Does it not make of every Bahai Assembly of the world an international group in itself—people of all races and nations? The extension of such a group to include the world, how easy a matter, how logical a consummation.

Of this supreme unity of nations and races, this oneness of humanity and religion, the Mashrekol-azkar is symbolic. It is the Bahai Movement in action, in service.

Commanded BAHA'O'LLAH, in his book of laws for the world, the Kitab-el-Akdas:

“O concourse of creation! O people! Construct homes (or houses) in the most beautiful fashion possible in every city, in every land, in the name of the Lord of Religions. Adorn them with that which beseemeth them—not with pictures or paintings. Then commemorate the Lord, the Merciful, the Clement, in spirit and fragrance. Verily, by this mention, by this commemoration, the breasts shall be dilated, the eyes illuminated, the hearts gladdened, and thus shall you pray the Orient of Praises, in the Mashrekol-azkar. (i. e., the Source of Praises).

“Teach your children what hath been revealed through the Supreme Pen. Instruct them in what hath descended from the heaven of Greatness and Power. Let them memorize the Tablets of the Merciful, and chant them with the most melodious voices in the galleries built in the Temple of the Mashrekol-azkar. The prayers of the Lord shall be chanted in a manner to attract the hearts and souls.

“Blessed is he who listens unto the River of Life!”

In response to this command, the first Mashrekol-azkar of the world was built in Ishkabad, Russian Turkestan. The second will be established on the shores of Lake Michigan, just north of Chicago. And every Mashrekol-azkar convention has for its impelling motive the construction of this great, impressive institution.

It is not a local, not a national, but a world proposition, this building of the first Mashrekol-azkar of the occident. Bahais of every race and nation have contributed to the purchase of the site and the creation of the initial fund for the erection of the central building, the House of Worship, the Bahai Temple.

A significant place, in the history of the Bahai Movement, the first Mashrekol-azkar of America will hold. Says Abdul-Baha:

“This organization of the Mashrekol-azkar will be a type for the coming centuries, and will hold the station of the mother.”

Several years ago, the Bahais of Chicago set up a sign on the Temple grounds explanatory of the institution, whose walls would soon begin to rise upon the site. Wayfarers read and wayfarers understood somewhat of the exalted purpose of the Mashrekol-azkar:

“These grounds are the site of an edifice to be erected as an ‘evident standard’ in America of the oneness of humanity.

“Its doors will be open to all nations, races and religions.

“Its charities will be dispensed without regard to race or color. ‘Prejudice toward none—love for all.’

“Here, for the first time in history, religion and science will become harmonious, each the handmaid of the other, both showering their spiritual gifts on all humanity.

“Until the erection of this great edifice, all are welcome to this beautiful spot and, in its enjoyment, we ask you to keep it pure and sacred.”

Service to humanity, hospitality—slogans of the Bahai Movement. Hospitality which, as to the Temple grounds, has been overwhelmingly accepted.

When, in the future, the Mashrekol-azkar stands before the world, in all its completeness, it will comprise the Temple of Worship with numerous accessories for service—the externalization of the great principles, so emphatically, so insistently proclaimed by BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH—a college for the higher scientific education, a school for orphan children and the poor, a hospital and medical dispensary, a home for cripples, a hospice, and other institutions, where art and music and science and truth shall find their highest, most brilliant, freest, most perfect expression.

The Mashrekol-azkar will be more than a university, more than an institution conceived by men, established by men. From it shall emanate the most advanced scientific knowledge, which shall harmonize in its entirety with our developing religious consciousness, our heritage from the teachings of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and Abdul-Baha. There is not empirical knowledge.

The Mashrekol-azkar shall be the standard for human achievement. Here art and music and literature shall have their beginning and their glorious fruition. And, under its powerful influence, life shall be forever changed, forever glorified.

“When the Mashrekol-azkar, with its accessories, is established in the world, aside from its religious, or spiritual, influence, it shall have a tremendous effect upon civilization.” (Abdul-Baha.)

The building of the Mashrekol-azkar is a colossal undertaking. The central house of worship is concentrating the attention and the energies today of the followers of Abdul-Baha. No decision as yet has been reached as to architectural design. The ultimate may be a composite, achieved by the spiritual consecration of the architects of the orient and of the occident. The Taj Mahal of India has been suggested as a model for the Mashrekol-azkar, because of its beauty and perfection of architecture.

Whatever architectural plan will be chosen for the Bahai Temple, it will emphasize, in its structure, essential features of the Bahai Faith. Great beauty of design, the expression of nine, the perfect number, throughout the structure. Nine entrances will distinguish the Bahai Temple from all other temples of the world, symbolic of the religious paths by which the Bahais of the world have come into the realization that religion is one, that humanity is one, that God is One, Father of all. Beautiful flower gardens shall adorn the grounds and fountains of pure water. Beauty and majesty of outward expression. The whole surmounted by a towering dome, it, too, a symbol of the great unity, as conceived by BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

The Bahai Temple will carry its message far. Far up and down the shore of Lake Michigan, far out upon the lake, its dome will be visible, the first landmark sighted by sailors coming into port, the last seen by them forthfaring. And from afar, inland, will rise upon the vision this lofty monument to the greatness and glory of God, manifested through BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

Into the Bahai Temple, this Holy of Holies, this Sanctuary of the living God, the Bahai will go for prayer, for worship, for spiritual refreshment. This is the first requirement. He comes forth renewed and strengthened, and stimulated to greater service for humanity, through the various accessories of the Mashrekol-azkar.

"The Mashrekol-azkar of Chicago is of the greatest importance. This is a Bahai Temple, a supreme house of worship, a place of spiritual gathering, and the manifestation of divine mysteries." (Abdul-Baha.)

The relentless forces of freedom and justice and truth are at work in the world. The spiritual currents of the new cycle submerge us. Political and religious formulas of the past have failed of effectiveness. Out of the old the virtue has gone. We demand a new interpretation of life, of God, of service; a new religious statement, that shall demolish antiquated dogmas and superstition. In the perpetual presence of God would we dwell, face to face with the great Reality.

Heretofore, in our quest for light and truth, we have stumbled and groped blindly. Today the scales have fallen from our eyes. We are clear of vision, dauntless of soul. Destruction all about us. Yet do we feel the infusion of new vivid life blood into the dead body of the world.

Destruction all about us—to make way for the brilliant era of reconstruction before us.

"A new era of divine consciousness is upon us. The world of humanity is going through a process of transformation. A new race is being developed. The thoughts of human brotherhood are permeating the depths of hearts and a new spirit of universal consciousness is being profoundly felt by all men." (Abdul-Baha.)

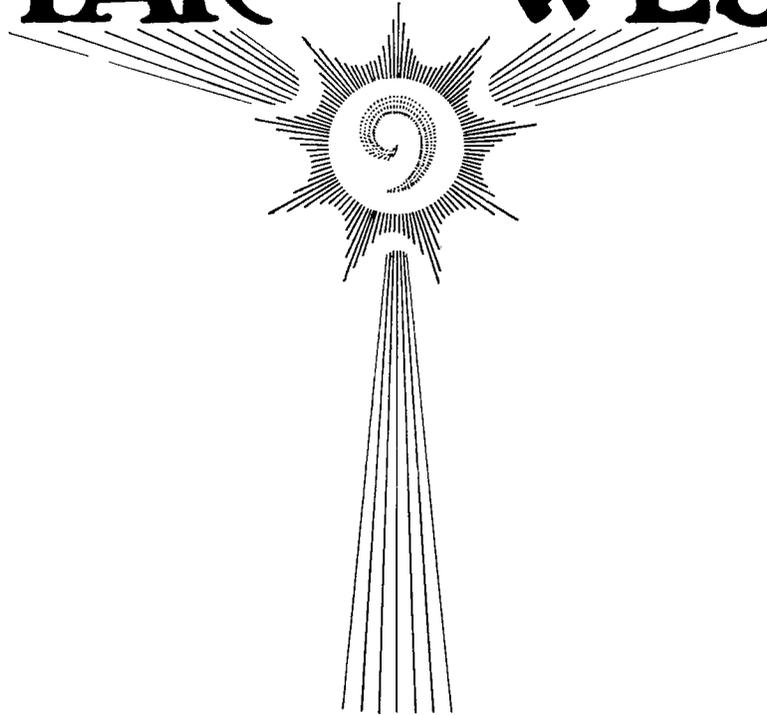

The new statement of truth and life, the new interpretation, is made with tremendous, overwhelming, irrefutable power by BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha.

In the Bahai Movement lies the hope of the future. "It is the essence of all the highest ideals of this century." (Abdul-Baha). Ideals that are not mere abstractions, but the impelling force of dynamic action in human life.

The Mashkerol-azkar, the first institution of the new age, is the expression of Reality—reality of worship, reality of service, reality of brotherhood, reality of internationalism.

"Just as the external world is a place where various peoples of different hues and colors, of various faiths and denominations, meet; just as they are submerged in the same sea of favors, likewise all may meet under the dome of the Mashrekol-azkar and adore the one God in the same spirit of truth, for the ages of darkness have passed away and the century of light has arrived." (Abdul-Baha.)

STAR of the WEST

—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Call

Written for the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress held in New York City, April 26-30th, 1919.

BY JOSEPH H. HANNEN

O waiting world, Behold! The Master stands,
With healing for thy wounds within His Hands;
For every problem a solution brings—
Glad-tidings herald from the King of Kings!

O weary world! The Master brings thee rest,
Freedom for every captive long oppressed.
The Way of Truth again is opened wide,
That all may happily in God abide.

O world perplexed, embittered, sick of strife!
The Master brings a Message of New Life;
The wondrous news that war henceforth shall cease;
The Promise of a Thousand Years of Peace!

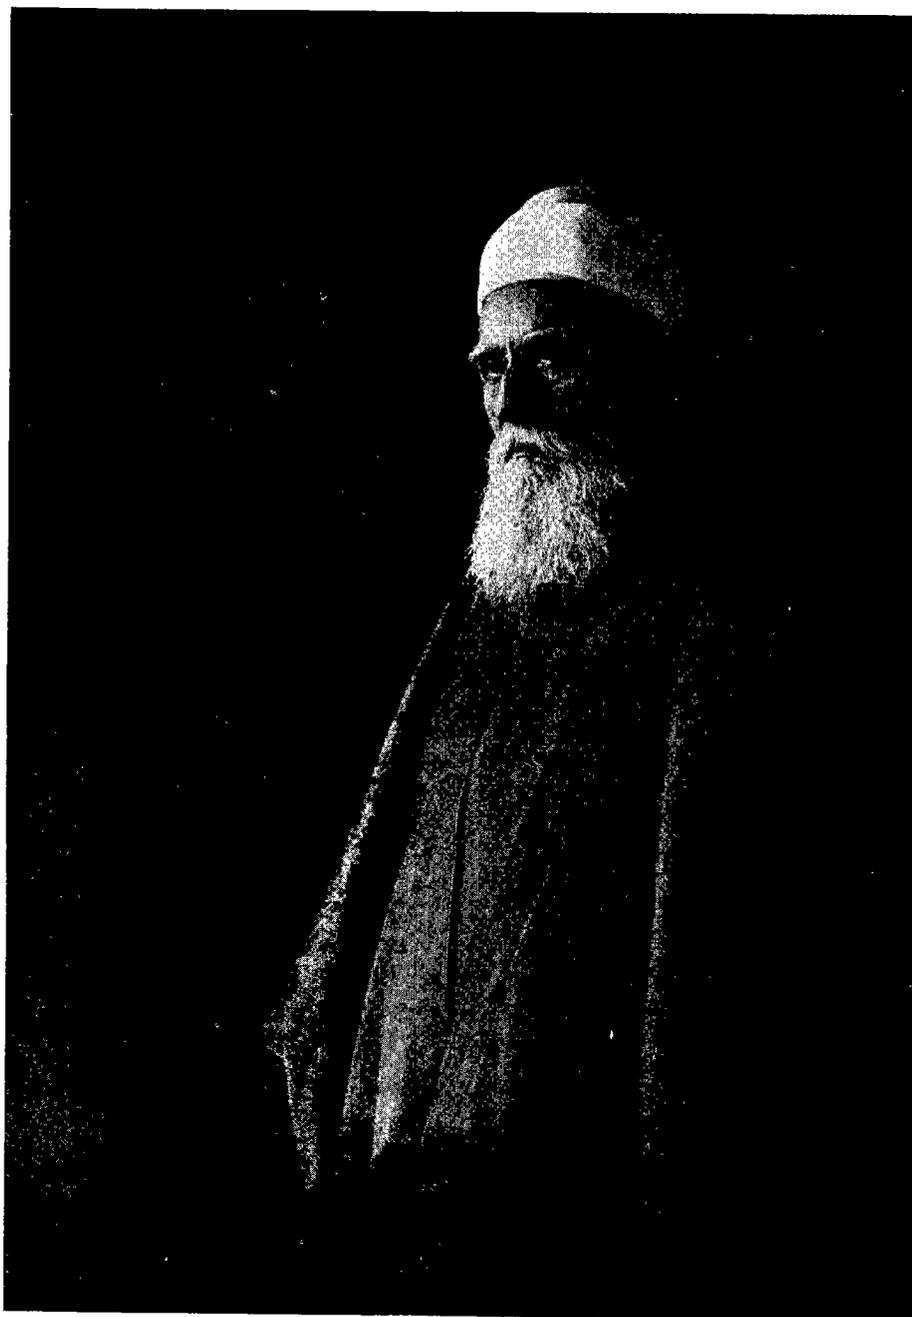

And O, ye heralds of the Golden Age!
Promise of Prophets, dream of every sage,—
The Master calls ye. Rise ye up and go To spread the news, that all the world may know!

From East to West—from Maine to Golden Gate,
Throughout this land, O hasten! Do not wait!
And to the southland, to old Mexico,
To Central, South America He bids ye go!

O islands of the east and western sea,
Thou too rejoice! The Truth shall come to thee.
A host of heralds from the Lord of Lords,
Thy glad deliverance from bonds affords!

And thou—the Mother-Continent of ours—
So sorely pressed by grisly war's dark powers—
To Europe comes the message of release,
The one assurance of a lasting Peace!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

He Is God!

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Althou for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

ALLAH'O'ABHA!

The dark clouds of outer separation between the Orb of the Covenant and the Bahais in the west have been entirely scattered through the appearance of nine new Tablets brought by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab from the presence of Abdul-Baha.

The messenger proclaimed them: The Divine Plan and Charter of the New Age.

The far-reaching significance and the power of these Tablets unveiled at the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress dazzled the spiritual sight of all who attended those never-to-be-forgotten meetings..

Abdul-Baha cabled: "Let this be the Convention of the Covenant." It was.

It is the hope and intention of the STAR OF THE WEST to reflect, insofar as possible, the brilliancy of that epoch-making event.

In this issue we publish the first of the new Tablets, together with talks given at the first session.

We are also happy in presenting as a title page to this issue a cover design created by Carl Scheffler, and a poem by Joseph H. Hannen entitled "The Call" both prompted by the spirit of this new hour.

The Call

O Eastern land! Vast China and Japan!
 Thy pride returneth, as of ancient man!
 Thy Great Redeemer standeth at the door,
 His heralds hasten—joy forevermore!

O eager world, Thy waited Lord is here!
 Fill hearts with hope, abandon every fear.
 Forgotten hate, let love reign all-supreme.
 And lo accomplished is the Golden Dream!

O ye who know, the Master calleth ye
 To rise and serve, that all the world be free!
 As millions rose, a few brief moons ago—
 To offer life to vanquish threat'ning foe—

So shalt ye rally to the Heavenly King,
 And life and all to His Cause gladly bring;
 Content and happy if it be to die
 Or live in exile if but He be nigh.

Count not the cost, ye Army of our God,
 Thine is the noblest field man ever trod.
 Thy victory is certain as the sun,
 Thy fame eternal when the conflict is won!

O Heav'nly world! The Kingdom soon to be,
 Where God shall reign o'er all, from sea to sea;
 Where men of every race shall do His will,
 And love of everyman each heart shall fill.

O Lordly host, Abdul-Baha commands!
 Advance ye, conquer near and distant lands.
 "Allah'o'Abha!" is the battle-cry—
 Eternal life to those who else must die!

The great new charters of the world are read!
 The Word hath spoken—now thy feet must tread,
 From north to south, from east to west, the world,
 Till far and near His banner is unfurled!

The Convention of Abdul-Baha

By JOSEPH H. HANNEN

THE convocation of the friends held in New York City, April 26-May 1, 1919, stands out as a unique event in the history of the Bahai Cause and one which will be forever memorable. When one realizes the lapse of time, weeks and months growing into years, during

Bahai annals. Added to that, several cablegrams, received during the progress of the sessions, attested the presence of the Beloved with us, in spirit—a presence which was most manifest to all. "Let this be the Convention of the Covenant!"—these words, flashed across the which communication on the material plane had been interrupted, the absolute joy of receiving the Words of Life, not only in single messages but literally in a volume of general Tablets and advices, explanations and exhortations, will be better understood. The presence at this Convention of our dear brother, Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, who was with Abdul-Baha from 1912 to the end of 1918, when he was sent direct to America, the bearer of precious documents and wonderful, epoch-making instructions, in itself made the occasion historic in the oceans, burned into the hearts of all, and the response was perfect. As day by day the general Tablets were read, and the words given in connection with each presented to us, the plan unfolded before our delighted spiritual eyes and all present were literally swept onward and forward upon the gales of spirituality which proceeded from the Center of spiritual power in the world.

The attendance at this Convention was larger than ever before. The immense banquet hall of the McAlpin Hotel was filled to overflowing at the Feast of Riz-wan and hundreds were unable to gain admission. The assembly hall was crowded at each of the sessions of the Congress, nine in number, while the same hall was well filled at the meetings of the Convention.

The fact that while we were gathered, discussing plans for spiritual union and harmony throughout the world, the delegates at Paris, in the Peace Conference, were meeting to establish the new world ically portrayed by BAHÁ'O'LLAH and emphasized by Abdul-Baha, would come to such a rapid culmination! It is within the ready recollection of many of us, that the Bahai teachings were called "ahead of the times" and termed a dream philosophy, perhaps adapted to some future age of the world. And now, how rapidly "the times" have caught up with The Message, so that today men talk the world over in terms of inter-conditions politically, economically and socially, lent a peculiar power and significance to the gathering of the friends in the metropolis of the new world. Since the last Convention, the thunder of the cannon and the rattle of musketry had been stilled, and the nations of the world, under the terms of the armistice, await the verdict of their representatives, gathered in solemn conclave. Who would have dreamed, ten years ago, when the First Bahai Temple Unity Convention was held in Chicago, that the events of the world drama, so graph-nationalism and world unity, strange to their minds and tongues, but familiar to the Bahais.

A striking feature of the Feast of Rizwan was the presence and participation of several clergymen and leaders in other broad lines of thought,—chiefly those who had been reached and touched by Abdul-Baha when he was in America in 1912. Their words were akin to our teachings, and they—happily privileged to stand upon a higher plane than that of orthodoxy—sensed the need of what the Bahai teachings offer. The highest notes of jubilation and the strongest messages of hope were given by the Bahai speakers. Truly, the world has had no more significant gathering in its history. And as the Tablets were read which represent the Charter of the New Age, and which outline in no uncertain terms the part America is to play in the spiritualization of the world,—there was joy abundant and hope unbounded, to offset all the doubt and uncertainty which the epoch of reconstruction brings to those lacking the spiritual insight and the hope of the age.

Verily, the Convention of the Covenant was and is unique, like the Center of the Covenant, who was with us as surely as the heart of each auditor—unseen, yet filling the body spiritual with the very life-blood of the Spirit,—to be translated into deeds and actions, the effect of which shall never die!

Opening of the Convention and Congress— The Feast of El-Rizwan

BY LOUIS G. GREGORY

THE conditions which marked the opening of the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention were in every way favorable to ideal happiness. This season of bounty began with a reception in Congress Hall of the Mc-Alpin Hotel. Those receiving were the members of the Executive Board of Bahai Temple Unity, the Board of Nine of the New York Assembly and representatives of all group meetings in New York City and the vicinity. The exchange of greetings and handshakes were all so hearty and sincere as to show traces of the eternal bond of unity. All differences seemed so remote as to belong to a past age.

"Forget strangeness; gaze toward oneness!" This divine exhortation seemed to be in the thought, manners and conduct of each and all.

The reception over, the friends entered the Banquet Hall, led by Mrs. Alice Ives Breed of New York. She was immediately followed by a brilliant array of speakers who were to adorn the Feast of El-Rizwan (Paradise), commemorating the Declaration of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. A dinner was served to the assembled spirit of the occasion, its deep significance being the great tie which binds all the assemblies together in the Center of the Covenant.

Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford showed clearly how the birth of a great spirit in the world marks the dawn of a new era. The whole world will later realize the comradeship and love, the capacity for which is created by BAHÁ'O'LLAH. All battles must cease and all discord

This phenomenal world will not remain in an unchanging condition even for a short while. Second after second it undergoes change and transformation. Every foundation will finally become collapsed; every glory and splendor will at last vanish and disappear, but the Kingdom of God is eternal and the heavenly Sovereignty and Majesty will stand firm everlastingly. Hence in the estimation of a wise man the seat in the Kingdom of God is preferable to the throne of the government of the world.—Abdul Baha Abbas.

When the foundation of the Mashrekol-Azkar is laid in America, and that divine Edifice is completed, a most wonderful and thrilling action will appear in the world of existence. The Mashrekol-Azkar will become the center around which all these universal Bahai activities will be clustered. From that point of light, the spirit of teaching, spreading the Cause of God and promoting the Teachings of God will permeate to all parts of the world. I hope that ere long the foundation of this celestial Temple will be laid—thus it may become conducive to the happiness of the heart of Abdul Baha.—Abdul Baha Abbas.

Both BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha endured countless sufferings in order to create the happy faces seen at this feast." Abdul-Baha is now looking toward America as that nation which is the hope of the nations whose principles of ideal justice and freedom will prevail. The Bahai teachings reveal the means of tranquillity for each and all. The league of nations for which the statesmen are now striving, was provided for in the Book of the Manifestation sixty years ago. In his wonderful Tablets to the President of the United States and to the Emperor of Germany, he overturned slavery and oppression. Abdul-Baha has praised President Wil-

Through His knowledge and Inspiration they were enabled to transform the waste deserts of the minds and souls into the luxuriant gardens in which the rivers of light are flowing from the inaccessible Mountains of God.

Learn ye perseverance from your Universal Teacher, Baha'o'llah, who was not disheartened by any obstacle from irrigating the hearts of humanity. Mr. Topakyan, acting Consul General for Persia, expressed deep reverence for Abdul-Baha whom he referred to as "our beloved Master." He hoped God would sustain his every effort to spread teachings fraught with so much good to humanity. Such teachings are the real property of all peoples.

Certainly we ought always welcome any reinforcements. We are of one kin. The world needs spiritual outlook. Therefore the Bahai Movement has a work to do and a place to fill. Introspection and communion marked its beginning in a garden. But it could not stay in a garden. It became the religion of a prison. The outcome of religion is to carry the spirit of the garden to the life of a crowd.

It must solve the problem of economics and carry divine healing, sympathy into mills, factories and crowded streets. Good hearts are most essential. If favored but unloving hearts remain heedless the structure of the world will be destroyed. It is hoped that the Bahai Movement will renew and rear the structure of the divine civilization.

New York branch of the Ethical Society, responded in a speech replete with brilliant epigrams. He took great pleasure, he said, in his personal friendship with the Bahais and has been a grateful student of the teachings for twenty-seven years. He said that some people regarded tolerance as the acme of spiritual perfection. But the Bahais had a higher virtue than tolerance; they showed appreciation. Their spirit and attitude was eclectic not polemic. They approve of everything that enriches spiritual life. It is the universal aspiration of faith. Man should ever seek the upper zone gives a home to the Bahais for a weekly meeting, was the next speaker. He felt that the Bahais would be interested to know about a statement recently made in a book written by a prominent Presbyterian, Loring Brown, who wonders at the mystery of the unknown God. He expresses amazement that a man so learned and wise as the Roman philosopher Seneca, could have spoken of Christianity only with bitter contempt. Therefore he questions, "How can we in our day know that we have seen the end of all the revelations of God?" Dr. Guthrie thought that such reflections would make the orthodox quite uncomfortable. While he expected to live and die a Christian, he could not be narrow. He was not interested in sources but joined the river where it enters the sea, where all unite. He said, "We are all getting mixed up. We must all be decent or perish. The religion that makes people decent is preferred. To convert a decent Buddhist into an indecent Christian is absurd. But to change an indecent man ing closer together we get nearer to God, richer in His knowledge. Those who think that the fighting spirit and success in arms alone make a first class people have yet much to learn. The universal note of harmony is the music of the spheres."

Rev. Albert R. Vail, the last speaker, gave an address which in loftiness of thought and beauty of expression, was a fitting climax to the speeches of the

It is the hope of Abdul Baha that just as ye are confirmed and assisted on the Continent of America, ye may also be confirmed and assisted in other Continents of the globe—that is, ye may carry the fame of the Cause of God to the East and to the West and spread the Glad-tiding of the appearance of the Kingdom of the Lord of Hosts throughout the five Continents of the world.—Abdul Baha Abbas.

In the matters of this world, however much man may strive and work to the point of death, he will be unable to earn the abundance, the freedom and the independent life of a small bird. This proves and establishes the fact that man is not created for the life of this ephemeral world—nay, rather, he is created for the acquirement of infinite perfections, for the attainment to the sublimity of the world of humanity, to be drawn nigh unto the Divine Threshold, and to sit on the throne of Everlasting Sovereignty!

The Power of the Covenant will protect the Cause of Baha'o'llah from the doubts of the people of error. It is the fortified fortress of the Cause of God and the firm pillar of the religion of God. and greater. Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, the trusted messenger who came directly from the holy presence of Abdul-Baha, bringing the Tablets to America, spoke at every session, giving evidence of a new power which astonished as well as pleased his friends of long ago. It was a happy thought, too, on the part of the program committee to have among the speakers at the opening, some great souls who have not outwardly identified themselves with the Cause, but whose expressions so clearly showed the divine fire which consumes the veils.

He can raise up children unto Abraham" and out the dust has He chosen instruments for His mention and praise!

The first session of the Congress on the same evening followed the Feast of El-Rizwan. Mr. Mountford Mills, of New York, presided. Mr. Harlan Foster Ober, of Boston, was introduced. In beautiful words which seemed to flow as a limpid stream, Mr. Ober impressed upon all the greatness of the occasion when the Divine Plan for teaching the whole world the lessons of peace and righteousness was to be revealed. He referred to the cycle of Christ and showed what wonderful results had been accomplished by those earnest souls who were his disciples and who took up the responsibility of enlightening the world by conveying his message. Even greater results are to be accomplished in this the Day of God and all are to be moved to a greater efficiency in service.

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab followed with his first address, after which, to the soulful and sweet music of the harp and amid surroundings of beauty and fragrance, the Tablets to the Northeastern States were unveiled. Margaret P. Randall and Bertha Holley drew aside the curtains showing the Tablet in Persian beautifully embossed and framed. Beneath the Tablet was seen a colored map of the Northeastern States, the section addressed. The reading of the commune at the end of the Tablet and its chanting in Persian by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab concluded, brought to a close an evening of sustained interest and great impressiveness.

Address by Mr. Alfred Martin, of New York

Delivered at the Feast of El-Rizwan, Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Saturday evening, April 26th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

MEMBERS and fellow friends of the Bahai Movement: I want, at the outset, to express the very genuine pleasure it gives me to be here tonight. Among the many reasons that I might cite for the feeling of that pleasure is not only the personal friendship I have enjoyed with the men to whom your presiding officer has just referred, but also because I have been for the last twenty-seven years a very sympathetic and grateful student of the Bahai teaching.

If you were to ask me what there is in this Movement that has drawn me to it, that makes such a peculiarly powerful appeal, I should say, in the first place, that it stands for appreciation, the noblest word in the vocabulary of the human soul, a word which represents something far nobler than even tolerance, though in the judgment of so many people this is still regarded as the very acme of spiritual attainment. Tolerance is "the willing consent to have other people hold opinions different from your own." I quote the definition as given by the lamented Phillips Brooks. Tolerance always seems to me to have a certain measure of concession about it. We tolerate what we cannot help and would put out of the way if we could. Tolerance always implies a certain measure of patronizing condescension. The man who tolerates is very apt to assume an air of spiritual conceit, or superiority, which is inevitably and irresistibly spurned. I cannot agree with those who think that tolerance is the loveliest flower on the rose-bush of liberalism. Rather should I say that that loveliest flower is described only by the word appreciation, for that is the spirit which is dissatisfied with tolerance, which is altogether out of patience with mere forbearance and which blushes at persecution.

Appreciation is the spirit which takes the eclectic rather than the polemical attitude toward every great teacher and it is this characteristic in your Bahai Movement, I say, that primarily drew me toward it and caused it to make so strong an appeal. You bow before every master be he Zoroaster, Jesus, the Buddha, Mohammed, or any other that may be named. If I understand you aright, you go to these great teachers, not in a controversial but in a teachable spirit, asking of each one, "What have you to offer that we can borrow toward the enrichment and enhancement of the spiritual life?"

I take it that you in your Movement look upon the 137 sects into which the Christian religion has been divided as though they were the stops and pedals of some great organ, some emphasizing the essential notes, others stressing the merely ornamental notes, but no one of itself giving forth the full-orbed music, but the harmonious blending of the individual melodies producing the symphony of universal aspiration and faith. That same spirit of appreciation causes you to recognize the fact that differences of climate, of racial origin, differences of environment, have given rise to varying expressions of one and the same spiritual sentiments, wonder, awe, reverence, aspiration, worship; so that whether it be the Aztec, bowing before his feathered god, or whether it be the New Zealander, bowing before his shapeless block; or whether it be the Mohammedan, prostrate in front of his mosque; or, again, the Christian, praying to his Father in heaven; or whether it be the cosmic theist, communing with "the infinite and eternal Energy," it is everywhere one and the same spiritual hunger, one and the same manifestation of passion to make progress in the upper zones of his being that is disclosed.

And then, perhaps, as a further ground for the powerful appeal that your Movement has made to me, I would mention the emphasis that you lay so persistently upon unity,—the masterword of the hour. And if I may dare to say it,—precisely as the first Hague Conference foreshadowed the coming of a successful League of Nations, so the World's Parliament of Religions, at Chicago, foreshadowed the coming fulfillment of the Bahai dream. Of that dream of religious fellowship I can say only that in my judgment it is nothing less than sublime, for its horizon expands far beyond any sectarian boundaries.

Just now we are witnessing a most interesting experiment fathered by our friends of the Episcopal Church,—a "World-Conference on faith and order," the preparations for which I have been following very closely for the past nine years. It may be that the immediate purpose of that world-conference will fall short of its sublime ambition, but whether it falls short of it or not, that conference is destined to produce a marked increase of mutual tolerance, mutual charity, mutual understanding and mutual teachableness. As such, it is certain to mark one forward step toward that larger unity that cannot be embraced by even the word "Christian." For, I take it, friends, that it is not enough for us to be brothers and sisters in Christ, or in Moses, or in the Buddha, or in Zoroaster; we must be brothers and sisters in Humanity, with all the rest of mankind. I trust you will not misunderstand me. I will be second to no man in my reverence and admiration for the person and life of Jesus, but Christian exclusiveness is no more warranted than any other. And, if human brotherhood is ever going to be anything other than the grim caricature that we see today, with the rival religions and their conflicting systems and claims, then it is eminently desirable and important that there should exist in the world one movement at least that stands for the ideal of genuine brotherhood in the sphere of religion.

Just one word more. I am drawn to this Movement because it is not a sect but a fellowship, and because it is not a sect, it is in a position to appeal to all sects. What is a sect? A sect, as its sect at all, but a Fellowship because it lives not for a sectarian end but rather for the purpose of serving as a leaven through which the world shall be helped to live up to the level of its own highest and noblest ends. May I express my very fervent hope that you of the Bahai Movement will remain true to your present distrust of organization and see to it that you organize only to such a degree as shall prove absolutely essential derivation suggests—from the Latin sectum—is a part of humanity that has cut itself off from all the rest in order to live for itself and convert all the rest of the world into material for its own growth. But, friends, a part of humanity that lives not only for itself but for all the world beside, in one universal aim, is not a sect at all, but a fellowship. Whether the part be many or few, it is not sectarian if it lives for no sectarian end. Consequently, while the vast Christian Church is only a sect, and the vaster Buddhist Church is but a sect, the little Bahai Movement is no to the performance of that great leavening work which is yours.

Just as fast as men and women everywhere grow to care more for spiritual freedom than they care for enslaving tradition and creed, just as fast as men and women everywhere come to care more for the triumph of Truth than they care for the triumph of their sect, so fast will the world witness that religious fellowship which rises far above the level of all distinctions of class, color, race and creed and unites men in that ideal Fellowship that was the dream of BAHÁ'U'LLAH and which is the inspiration of all his followers today.

Purposes and Hopes of the Congress

Address by MR. HARLAN FOSTER OBER, of Boston, delivered at the opening of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Saturday evening, April 26th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

MEMBERS and friends of this great universal, penetrative and powerful Bahai Movement: Because this is the most epoch-making time that we who have known of this Cause for years is the divine solvent. There is no other. The Word of God is the solution for the vexing problems which are facing the globe today.

The Bahai Cause, among the movehave ever beheld, it was deemed pertinent that we should suggest to you in a general way in the very beginning something of the great things which are coming out one by one during the coming days.

From the vantage point of that high mountain, Carmel, Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant of God, has turned his eyes and is looking towards this group of people to see to what extent they will respond to this tremendous call which has come through, from out of the heart of the war, yes, further than that, from the heart of peace and love and spirituality. The Word of God in the world, is not limited, it is universal, it is not exclusive, it is inclusive of every soul in the universe. At this time, because the conditions of the world justify it and require it, because the firmness and steadfastness of the friends of God have created a certain capacity and because of the mercy of God as expressed through the Covenant, great plans are now to be unveiled which are to energize and spiritualize this Cause as never before. It is important that in coming to and approaching these great times our hearts and minds should be as a blank page. We should be prepared to receive the indelible imprints of the Spirit. We should discover in ourselves, each and every one of us, a new ideal capacity, for without this new capacity, this new insight, it will be impossible to perceive this new note which is struck in these wonderful Tablets which are to be unveiled during these coming days.

Everything in this Congress revolves around these divine instructions. Can you imagine what it would have meant if in the days of Jesus Christ tremendous Tablets, revelations from Christ, had been presented to the body of the Christian people? How great that would appear in our history of the Gospel and in our history of those things which transpired at that time. Yet through the progress of the world and through the bounty of God and through the requirement of this illumined day and through the greatness of the problems themselves just exactly that thing has happened.

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab has been chosen by Abdul-Baha to bring these Tablets to us. Coming through every difficulty, and finally arriving in time for this Convention, he brings these divine instructions: more than that, he brings that close and intimate spiritual connection with Abdul-Baha.

We revolve, we move around Abdul-Baha. We find in him the universalization of all the great truths of the past, lived in such a way that it is an inspiration to every group of people. We are speaking not only to the Bahai body, which in numbers are few but which in power is great, but we are speaking through you to all the inhabitants of the globe. This plan is not a plan which relates to New York City. This plan is not a plan which relates merely to this country. These plans, as you will see by referring to the brief outlines in the program, refer to the entire globe. Tremendous possibilities are before us and tremendous responsibilities. Do we not hear the voice of Abdul-Baha calling to us and calling through us to all the people of the globe? "O people, awake! Awake, and from your deep slumbers arise! Arise and know those divine realities which are deposited within you! Uncover this treasure which God has placed there as a means of beautifying and illumining this civilization. Let us turn away from material thoughts. Let us turn away from limited things and soar toward the limitless, the empyrean realms of vision!"

This is the call. We are speaking to every one who finds within himself the traces of that heavenly glory and who desires confirmation, who desires assistance, and who, free and severed from all save God, is following this great eternal journey along this broad highway. We are calling for those souls who perhaps wandering a little bit in one by-way or another yet have in their hearts the jewels of the utmost beauty. This is the time when we are the discoverers, if we are true Bahais, of all the divine qualities in the world.

Let us, therefore, as we approach these great unveilings, turn our hearts to God and know that we are living, through the mercy of God, at a time in the history of the world, which is absolutely epoch-making. In no past age or cycle of which we have record did such great events transpire. Realizing this, let us in our minds and hearts prepare that at the end we shall not go away from these sessions without a definite plan of action which shall spread the bounties of God to every last individual on the face of the globe.

Allah'o'Abha!

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Northeastern States

First talk by MIRZA AHMAD SOHRAB at the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress, held in McAlpin Hotel, New York City, April 26th-30th, 1919.

BAHA'O'LLAH in the Tablet to the Pope of Rome says: "Arise in the Name of thy Lord the Merciful, amidst the assembly of beings, and take the Cup of Life in the hand of assurance; drink thou therefrom first, then give to drink to those who advance of the people of different religions."

Dear friends!

It is indeed a great joy to be present at this great gathering and a blessed privilege indeed to offer to you the Cup of Life prepared for you by our Beloved Abdul-Baha. So that you may drink of these Life-giving Words and then go forth—offering it to all the religionists of the world.

I bring you the greeting and love of Abdul-Baha and his hope and prayers for your spiritual advancement and illumination. During the last four years the Beloved has often spoken of your faithfulness and sincerity in the Cause, and of your yearning to serve and teach and help to further the cause of the oneness of the world of humanity.

There are many meetings held in this world. Each having a certain object in view, that object may be commercial, educational or economic, but I am sure that the object of this great Convention is to draw the hearts nearer together, to spread the knowledge of Truth, to uphold the ideals of God, to proclaim the Revelation of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and to express our devotion and adherence to the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha, and carry out his instructions regarding the building of the Mashrekol-Azkar—the Temple, under the dome of which people of all nations and religions may worship God.

I come to you from the East, the land from the horizon of which all the Suns of Reality have arisen in the past. The land which has been the birthplace of His Holiness Abraham, Moses, Jesus Christ and Mohammed and—in this Day—the Bab, BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha.

I bring to you not worldly gifts which perish after a few years, but the jewels of the Kingdom of BAHÁ'O'LLAH—the universal instructions.

The great events of the last four years have changed the minds of men, producing a mental and spiritual revolution which cannot be healed without the power of the Holy Spirit.

Most every one feels that we are today standing on the threshold of an age of material, intellectual and spiritual regeneration. All the hidden forces of humanity are being stirred; political, social and economic principles of the last two generations are more or less set at naught and the wise men of every nation are thinking to reconstruct the body politic from top to bottom. There is not a man or woman in the remotest corners of Asia and Africa who has not felt the thrill of the coming change, and the spirit of transformation sweeping all over the world, has brought about tremendous unrest and upheaval. This great war and its perfect machinery for the destruction of men and property have appalled the ideal conscience of mankind and have made them realize more than anything else that war is death, while peace is life; war is hate, peace is love; war is darkness, peace is light; war is destructive, peace is constructive. All the beneficent forces of society have sprung up through the interplay of the forces of love, peace and association, and thus the vision of a better state of being has taken hold of the minds of men all over the world, without exception. They long and pray for a more national religion, they work for a higher standard of truth, they pray for a nobler state of existence, they aspire toward a loftier plane of consciousness, and they dream of the perfections of humanity. They aim to eliminate the poverty of body and soul, and through the laws of a social religion recover the lost vision of beauty and love. . . .

It is this divine optimism, this dream of the perfectibility of mankind, that characterizes more than anything the Bahai Movement. It is the dynamic spirit of the age, the up-rushing breeze of the Garden of Truth, the ideal picture of the oneness of humanity, that inspires our hearts and swells our breasts with bright hopes and eager expectations to behold the countenance of brotherhood, to unfurl the banner of international solidarity and to co-operate for the realization and perfection of a League of Nations based upon justice and righteousness. Our great spiritual leader, Abdul-Baha, has been teaching and upholding these universal principles all through his life and has shown in his daily life and deeds that it is possible for men to live with their neighbors peacefully and without quarreling, and it is also possible to manifest the divine life in our material world, suffering it to become the prototype of the heavenly realm. I believe that from every standpoint Abdul-Baha is portraying to us the ideal perfections of God and humanity, and therefore his instructions are all based upon spiritual wisdom and celestial sagacity. Whatever he says or writes is for the good of humanity and the progress of social and divine order.

During the last few years, while the war was raging all over the earth and the doors of communication were closed with the outside world, Abdul-Baha was not only praying for the friends of God and suffering humanity, but he was also drawing a wonderful Plan, a great Law, a Bill of Rights for the spiritual guidance and regeneration of the world.

When the thunder-cloud of war broke over our heads in Palestine and the wheels of social and religious activities became clogged, Abdul-Baha divided his time between Haifa, Acca, Bahjee, Tiberias and Adasyah. Often for months he would stop in an adjoining building in the sacred Tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. . . .

It was during the months of March and April of 1916 that I had the greatest joy of my life—to live with Abdul-Baha in Bahjee. I may claim without grave apprehension of contradiction that in the future those two months will be considered as the most significant, the most fruitful months in the Bahai history, and this, our Convention, as the most constructive Convention ever held in America.

The life of Abdul-Baha in Bahjee during those two months was not only prayerful and calm as the surface of a pure river but active and earnest, full of life and beauty; the highest ideals of the Kingdom, like jewels, were falling from his lips; the garden of his heart was adorned, as it is always adorned, with the imperishable roses of Truth and the Elysian field of his mind was begemmed with violets of spiritual emotions and hyacinths of divine wisdom.

On Monday morning, March 26, 1916, he was sitting peacefully in his room in Bahjee, now and then looking out of the window over the olive grove, beyond the sea and far it seemed into the infinitude. Suddenly he turned his wonderful, penetrating eyes upon me and asked me to chant one of the prayers of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. As I continued my chant I felt a strange consciousness coming over me—a realization of my unworthiness in being permitted to live so long and so near the divine presence of Abdul-Baha. When I finished the prayer he looked at me with charming sweetness, that soft, dancing light in his eyes and said: "Thou must be infinitely grateful to BAHÁ'O'LLÁH that He has chosen thee to be with me for so long a time. Surely it must be for a great purpose that is not apparent at the present time. It will become clear in the future. Now bring pen, paper and ink and I will dictate a Tablet for America."

[Here followed the reading of the Tablet received in America before the doors of communication closed. It was published in the STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 7 No. 10 and Vol. 9 No. 14.]

Nearly ten months passed. Meanwhile this Tablet had been forwarded to America and its circulation among the friends of that section had created a great deal of active interest in the promotion of the Cause. But during the month following, the talks of Abdul-Baha on various occasions pointed to the fact that that Tablet was not final and that when the proper time came he would reveal another and more wonderful Tablet for the guidance of the friends.

This lordly promise was fulfilled on Friday morning, February 2nd, 1917. While he was walking in a small room in his house at Haifa he dictated the following spiritual firman for the believers of the Northeastern States, ending with a supplication to be read by the teachers going into the field of activity spreading the light:

TABLET

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful of the Northeastern States of the United States of America—Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York.

He Is God!

O ye real friends!

All the regions in the estimation of the True One are one region and all the cities and villages are ideally equal and similar to each other. Neither holds distinction over another. All of them are the fields of God and the habitation of the souls of men. But through faith and assurance and the precedence of one part over another the dweller imparts holiness and sanctification to the dwelling and some of the countries becoming exceptional, attain to the most great distinction.

For example, notwithstanding that some of the countries of Europe and America are distinguished for the purity of the air, the wholesomeness of water, and the charm of mountains, plains and prairies and are preferred above all the rest, yet Palestine became an honor to all other regions of the world because all the holy divine Manifestations, from the time of His Holiness Abraham to the time of the appearance of the Seal of the Prophets, have been either living in this region or emigrated to or travelled through here.

Likewise Yathroh and Batha attained to the most great bounty and the light of the Prophets have shown from that horizon. For this reason Palestine and Hedjaz are distinguished above all other regions.

Likewise as the Continent of America in the estimation of the True One is the field of the effulgence of lights, the Kingdom of the Manifestation of Mysteries, the home of the righteous ones and the gathering place of the free; therefore every section thereof is blessed; but because these nine states have been favored in faith and assurance, hence through this precedence they have obtained spiritual privilege. They must realize the value of this bounty; because they have obtained such a favor and in order to render thanksgiving for this most great bestowal, they must arise in the diffusion of divine fragrances, so that the blessed verse of the Koran:

“God is the light of heaven and earth; the similitude of His light is a niche in a wall, wherein a lamp is placed, and the lamp enclosed in a case of glass; the glass appears as if it were a shining star. It is lighted with the oil of a blessed tree, an olive neither of the East, nor of the West; it wanteth little but that the oil thereof would give light, although no fire touched it. This is the light added unto light. God will direct unto His light whom He pleaseth.”

—may be realized.

He says: “The world of nature is the world of darkness, because it is the origin of a thousand depravities, nay rather, it is darkness upon darkness.” The illumination of the world of nature is dependent upon the splendor of the Sun of Reality. The grace of guidance is like unto the candle which is enkindled in the glass of knowledge and wisdom and that glass of knowledge and wisdom is the mirror of the heart of humanity. The oil of that luminous lamp is from the fruits of the Blessed Tree and that oil is so refined that it will burn without light. When the intensity of the light and the translucency of the glass and the purity of the mirror are brought together, it will become light upon light.

In brief, in these nine blessed states Abdul-Baha journeyed and traveled from place to place, explained the wisdom of the heavenly book and diffused the fragrances. In most of these states he founded the divine edifice and opened the door of teaching. In those states he sowed pure seeds and planted blessed trees.

Now the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful must irrigate those fields and with the utmost power engage themselves in the cultivation of these heavenly plantations so that the seeds may grow and develop, prosperity and blessing be realized and many rich and great harvests be gathered in.

The Kingdom of God is like unto a farmer who comes into possession of a piece of pure and virgin soil. Heavenly seeds are scattered therein, the clouds of divine Providence pour down and the rays of the Sun of Reality shine forth.

Now all these bounties exist and appear in full in these nine states. The divine Gardener passed by that holy ground and scattered pure seeds from the lordly teachings in that field, the rain of the bounties of God poured down and the heat of the Sun of Reality, that is,—the Merciful confirmations—shone with the utmost splendor. It is my hope that each one of those blessed souls may become a peerless and unique irrigator and the East and the West of America may become like unto a delectable paradise—so that all of you may hear from the Supreme Concourse the cry of “Blessed are ye, and again blessed are ye!”

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

The following supplication is to be read by the teachers and friends daily:

COMMUNE.

O Thou kind Lord! Praise be unto Thee that Thou hast shown unto us the highway of guidance, opened the doors of the Kingdom and manifested Thyself through the Sun of Reality. To the blind Thou hast given sight; to the deaf Thou hast granted hearing; Thou hast resuscitated the dead; Thou hast shown the way to those who have gone astray; Thou hast led those with parched lips to the Fountain of Guidance; Thou hast suffered the thirsty fish to reach the Ocean of Reality and Thou hast invited the wandering birds to the rose-garden of Grace.

O Thou Almighty! We people are Thy servants and Thy poor ones! We are remote, we yearn for Thy presence; we are thirsty for the water of Thy fountain; we are ill, longing for Thy medicine. We are walking in Thy path and have no aim or hope save the diffusion of Thy fragrances—so that the souls may raise the cry of: “O God! Guide us to the straight path!” May they open their eyes by beholding the lights and become freed from the darkness of ignorance! May they walk around the Lamp of Guidance! May the portionless receive a share! And may the deprived ones become the confidants of the mysteries!

O Almighty! Look upon us with the glance of mercifulness! Grant us heavenly confirmation! Bestow upon us the breaths of the Holy Spirit! So that we may become assisted in service and like unto brilliant stars we may shine in these regions with the light of guidance! Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty and Thou art the Wise and the Seeing!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Washington, D. C., March 23, 1919.)

The next morning when I took the transcription of it to him for correction, he took it in his hands, read it slowly and added a few words here and there. Then raising his head, said: “Come and take this, Mirza Ahmad. Let me see what you can do. Let me see what the friends of God in these states will do. Will they arise with a superhuman energy and spread the lights of the Sun of Reality in all those great cities, towns, villages and hamlets? I have pointed out to them the highway of service. Will they walk in it? I have drawn for them the Plan of God, will they, like experienced generals, lead the attack from all sides? Come! Take it and let us see the results. And what are you going to do? Are you going to take a hand in this divine campaign? Now you are witnessing its birth. The time will soon come when you will have to work for its realization with all the power and energy that God has given thee."

These words were uttered over two years ago and on that day little did I realize that I would be here, standing before you and talking, taking an humble part in the inauguration of this great campaign of our Supreme General.

On another occasion he said:

"The believers must arise in perfect unity in teaching the Cause of God and grasping each other's hands be engaged in the diffusion of the fragrances of God, and know of a certainty that the confirmations of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH shall descend upon them.

"I hope that the Northeastern States, especially New York, may attain to the utmost state of perfection in the Cause of God, and in the matter of teaching and the promotion of the Word of God they may precede the friends of other parts. New York is the first and greatest city of the western hemisphere and the numberless passengers who come to America, come or pass through this city. Therefore, its important position is quite secure and must be taken into consideration. The friends of this city must be in the utmost love and amity, so that their unity may serve as an example to the other states.

"When thou art standing in their midst, tell them:

"The bounties of the Kingdom of God are great. The glances and favors of the Blessed Perfection are with you; the invisible cohorts are your support. Now step forward in this field of teaching. Then shall you see the greatness of results. Do not turn your faces away because of any difficulties and oppositions. The greater the difficulties the greater must be your firmness and steadfastness. Then you shall observe that the fame of the Cause will be more widely spread and the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha appearing with greater effulgence. Hence, you must, first of all, arise in teaching the Cause and calling the people to the manifestation of the Kingdom, so that God's assistance may encircle you from all sides. Should you not render this service and should you not win this goal in the field of action, others coming after you will accomplish this work. Yet it is my hope that in this age you may become assisted in rendering these great services."

It is hoped that the delegates and friends from these parts will realize their great responsibility, for they have a great task before them. It is not the work of one or two or ten or twenty years but for a long stretch of years. It is indeed a divine responsibility to be called upon to reach a population of more than twenty-one millions or nearly one-fourth of the inhabitants of the United States. Think of New York and its five millions, Philadelphia one million and a half, Boston with its seven-hundred thousand, adding to this the thrifty inhabitants of hundreds of New England towns, Pittsburgh with its half-million, Rochester two hundred and fifty thousand—thus I may go on enumerating all the important centers of industries in these nine states. How are you going to teach these millions of people about the principles of the oneness of humanity, the brotherhood of the races, and the love of God as revealed in the writings of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha?

Recent Tablet to the Bahais of Egypt

Translation of the blessed Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha and sent by him for publication in the STAR OF THE WEST.

Haifa, Palestine, March 17, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

Dear Sir:—I herewith enclose a copy of a Tablet recently revealed for the friends and maid-servants of the Merciful in the country of Egypt, which the Beloved wishes you to publish in the columns of your well-known STAR OF THE WEST.

Shoghi Rabbani.

To the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the country of Egypt —Upon them be El-Baha-el-Abha!

He is God!

O ye who are sincere! O ye who are attracted! O ye who are of the new creation!

God, the Praised and the Exalted, hath said: "Are these the same as the old creatures? Nay rather, they are clothed in garments of a new creation!" Then know ye that in the estimation of God, the example of the creatures is like unto a pure, blessed tree of a wonderful trunk and strong seeds. He causes it to grow gracefully, then its roots become firm, its twigs spring forth, its leaves become verdant, its flowers bloom and its fruits appear. Then its shade expands over all the regions, until it reaches its ultimate evolution and growth, attains to its development and height, its significances become perfect and its branches extend over the East and the West of the earth. Then its creation is completed, its evolution is accomplished, its hopes become evident, it obtains its desire, it attains to its utmost perfection and its beauty becomes manifest. Then its withering begins, its leaves turn yellow, its flowers become scattered, its fruits fall down and its earthly elements return to the layers of its soil. No fruits remain upon it, no leaves, no attractiveness, no beauty, no sweetness and no freshness, until it becomes like unto an old hollow palm tree.

Then a new tree grows from its seeds, green, verdant and freshened by the divine outpouring, the merciful breeze, the heat from the Sun of Reality, the heavy rain from the clouds of the abundant mercy and the blowing wind from the wafting place of Providence. "Whatever verse we abolish or forget we replace by a better one." This is the example of the new creation, the miraculous cycle and the second resurrection, which is in conformity with the first creation.

Then thank ye God, the Praised and the Exalted, for the light of guidance, this complete bounty and this great bestowal. "He chooseth for His mercy whomsoever He wisheth." Then it is incumbent upon ye to cry out with most wonderful melodies:

Praise be to the One who created this marvelous dispensation!

Praise be to the One who made this new creation wonderful!

Praise be to the One who ordained this great outpouring!

Praise be to the One who shone forth with this evident light!

Praise be to the One who renewed this wonderful springtime!

Praise be to the One who perfumed the nostrils of the people of oneness with the merciful fragrance which is diffused in all the countries! "And thou didst see that the land which was barren and lifeless when we caused the water to descend upon it, moved and grew and brought forth a beautiful pair of all things."

Praise be to the One through the outpouring of Whose clouds these countries became verdant!

Praise be to the One through the heavy rain of Whose compassion these rose gardens became beautified!

Praise be to the one through the current of Whose stream, these reservoirs became overflowing!

Praise be to the One who has chosen the sincere ones to spread His teachings in the countries!

Praise be to the One who selected for His mercy pure souls; through the fragrance of whose love and perfumed breaths the hearts of the pious throb!

Praise be to the One who made the stars of guidance to smite the wicked!

Praise be to the One who guided the chosen community to the upright way and straight path!

SANTA BARBARA ASSEMBLY

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, Santa Barbara, California.—Upon them be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He is God!

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

Praise ye God for having entered into this Great Cause which is the illumination of the universe and the promulgator of the Oneness of the world of humanity. Ye have been freed from every prejudice and are exercising the utmost love and kindness to all religions. Ye love all men and seek service to the world of humanity.

Santa Barbara was an ordinary girl, but as she sacrificed her life and her soul for Christ, consider ye how resplendently, like unto a star, she shines from the horizon of the world.

Even until the present day her light is still resplendent.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

CLEVELAND ASSEMBLY

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, Cleveland, Ohio.—Upon them be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He is God!

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

Your letter was received. From its contents it was known that, praise be to God, your hearts are in the utmost purity and your souls are gladdened by the glad-tidings of God. The mass of the people are occupied with self and worldly desire, are immersed in the ocean of the nether world and are captives of the world of nature, save those souls who have been freed from the chains and fetters of the material world and like unto swift-flying birds are soaring in this unbounded realm. They are awake and vigilant, they shun the obscurity of the world of nature, their highest wish centers around the eradication of the struggle for existence, the shining forth of the spirituality and the love of the realm on high, the exercise of utmost kindness among men, the realization of an intimate and close connection among religions and the practice of the ideal of self-sacrifice. Then will the world of humanity be transformed into the Kingdom of God.

In fine, O ye friends, exert ye an effort. Every expenditure is in need of an income. This day, in the world of humanity, men are all the time expending, for war is nothing but the consummation of men and of wealth. At least engage ye in a deed of profit to the world of humanity that ye may partially compensate that loss. Perchance, through the divine confirmations, ye may be assisted in promulgating amity and concord among men, in substituting love for enmity, in causing universal peace to result from universal war and in converting the loss and rancor into profit and love. This wish is realized through the power of the Kingdom.

Convey my greeting to the grieving family of him who has ascended to the Kingdom of God, Mr. Dick Potter, and tell them not to be disconsolate, not to wail and not to cry, for that heavenly bird has flown to the Infinite Realm and has stepped out from the dust-heap of the world to the rose-garden of immortality! Happy is he and blessed is his abode!

Upon ye be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Abha!

AKRON ASSEMBLY

The friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, Akron, Ohio.

—Upon them be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

Your letter was received. From its contents the truth of the saying of His Holiness Christ was realized when He says: "From all parts and regions they flock and enter into the Kingdom, while the sons of the Kingdom depart from it." Now ye who belong to the distant and outlying regions of the world,—almost half the globe standing between us;—yet notwithstanding this remoteness, have been awakened by the Call of the Kingdom, have been made aware and, thanks be to God, ye have become attracted to the splendors of the Sun of Truth.

My hope is that ye may raise high the standard of the oneness of the world of humanity and that ye may become the cause of union and harmony among all the races and religions, so that mankind may unite, may fling away the garb of indifference and engage in affection, that the fire of religious, racial, political and patriotic prejudices may be quenched and the burning flame of the enkindled fire in the Mount of Sinai may illuminate the world.

The blessed pictures of those illumined souls have been noted. Praise be to God, the light of God's love shines brilliantly in your faces.

Upon ye be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Abha!

URBANA ASSEMBLY

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, Urbana, Illinois.—

Upon them be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Abha!

He is God!

O ye friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful!

Your detailed letter was a full exposition of firmness and steadfastness. Although throughout these days of abundant trials the maintenance of perseverance and firmness was difficult yet the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, praise be to God, have remained like unto an immovable rock, firm and steadfast. Nay, rather, they have added to their stability. It is customary and as a rule in times of trial the feeble souls waver and turn away and the firm souls who are endowed with the power of the Spirit double in energy and strength. Adulterated copper turns totally black when thrown into the fire of test while pure gold increases in lustre and brilliancy.

His honor, Mr. Vail, is indeed an ignited candle and likewise his respected wife. They have no thought and no concern save the good of mankind and entertain no wish save the guidance of men. Day and night they strive with heart and soul, they labor arduously and endeavor heartily that this mortal world may reflect the splendor of the sanctified Realm and these disturbed souls may become the embodiment of faith and assurance.

As to the meeting with the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful it is undoubtedly possible. Praise be to God, the way will be leveled and the doors will be opened and traffic and travel will become easy. But they must take into consideration the comfort of the journey so that no hardships may be endured on the way.

Concerning my travel to America, it is conditioned upon the harmony and the unity of the friends of God. They must be so united as to have the effect of one soul so that like unto a magnet which draws to itself the iron they may attract me to America.

Upon ye be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

ALBERT VAIL

To his honor Mr. Albert Vail, Chicago, Illinois.—Upon him be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abba!

He is God!

O thou revered personage!

Your second letter dated December 19, 1918, has been received. It was the cause of much joy and happiness because it indicated that thou art firm and steadfast in the Covenant and Testament and that thou hast a longing to herald the Kingdom. Today heralding the Kingdom is the magnetic force of the world of humanity because there is great readiness in the souls. The Divine teachings are the spirit of this age; nay, rather, the sun of this age. Every soul must endeavor, in order that the veils may be torn away from the eyes; then instantly they see the sun, and the heart and the eyes become illumined thereby.

Now through the assistance and favor of God this power of guidance and merciful bestowal are found in thee. Therefore with the utmost power go forward so that to the mouldering bones thou impartest life, to those born blind givest sight, quickenest souls that are depressed and discouraged and bestowest serenity and freshness. Every lamp will finally be extinguished except the lamp of the Kingdom which day unto day grows brighter. Every call will in the end become weak except the call to the Kingdom of God which day by day grows louder. Every road will in the end become crooked except the road of the Kingdom which day by day becomes straighter. Unquestionably the heavenly melody cannot be measured by the melody of earth and the artificial lamps cannot be compared to the heavenly Sun. Therefore one must strive for whatsoever is eternal and everlasting in order day by day to become more illumined, day by day to grow stronger and day by day find new life.

If you are thinking of traveling to the west or the south with thy revered wife, it is very acceptable. I am hoping that thou mayest find such a confirmation that thou thyself becomest amazed.

Regarding the book that thou hast written it has been received and we are engaged in perusing it. God willing, thou shalt be confirmed in a second edition.

Convey my utmost love and tenderness to thy revered wife, likewise to . . .

I supplicate and implore to the Kingdom of God that thy father, mother and brother may, through the light of guidance, enter the Kingdom of God.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(February 10, 1919, Haifa, Palestine. Translated by Dr. Bagdadi, Chicago, March 27, 1919.)

LOUISE D. BOYLE

To the maid-servant of God, Louise D. Boyle, Miami, Florida.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Your letter dated December 1918, was received. Thou hast written that in these days, in view of these terrible battles and the extinction of the fire of war, a new capability has sprung in men.

It is evident that not until rain, snow, cold, storm and hurricane come to pass will the capacity for spring be attained. In winter divine Providence prepares for the advent of the life-giving spring.

Similarly this terrible war has awakened people's minds and has given rise to sentiments of Universal Peace so that the divine teachings may exert an effect upon the peoples of all races.

At a time when I was in Europe and America, I raised high my voice in all temples and gatherings and it was published and circulated in the papers that—“O ye concourse of listeners! An imminent danger lies ahead. The whole of Europe has turned into a huge arsenal which a single spark will set ablaze. The flame of war shall attain supreme height and Europe shall be convulsed and this Balkan strife shall lead to universal war; the foundations of the world of humanity shall quake, cities shall be demolished and villages shall be razed to the ground; fathers shall lose their sons and sons shall lose their fathers; mothers shall wail and children shall cry and lament. O ye listeners! Endeavor perchance, God willing, ye may prevent this fire from spreading and this storm from raging!”

Whatever was explicitly recorded in the epistles and Tablets of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH concerning future events was mentioned, but these exhortations were not accepted until this conflagration was set up.

At present all people have realized that war destroys the foundations of mankind and that men are in need of universal peace and similarly of the rest of the divine teachings.

Strive, therefore, that the light of the oneness of the world of humanity may be made resplendent, that misunderstanding among the religions and races of the world may be eliminated, that the nether world may reflect the realm on high and the Sun of Truth may shine over all regions.

Upon thee be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Abha!

“Praise be to God! In New York the divine believers are united and agreed.”

TABLET TO JULIET THOMPSON

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Juliet Thompson—Upon her be greeting and praise!

He is God!

O thou beloved daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. It contained the most great glad tidings,—that is, praise be to God, in New York the divine believers are united and agreed. For my heart there is no greater happiness than the unity and concord of the friends. The progress of the world of humanity and the illumination of the hearts and lives of the people are realized through unity and agreement and the promotion of the Word of God. Difference destroys the foundation of the divine edifice, causing coldness amongst the souls and the lethargy of all the active members. I hope that, day by day, this bounty may become more revealed in New York. Truly, I say, if the believers of God become united together with heart and soul, in a short while they will shine forth like unto the sun; they will obtain a joy and happiness the splendor of which will be cast upon all the regions of America.

Thou hast written that Mr. Vail, Mr. Ives and Mr. Horace Holley have loosened eloquent tongues and in the explanation of the divine teachings they deliver fluent speeches. This news also gave the utmost pleasure and delight.

Convey my longing greeting to the reverend minister whose name you mention in the letter and deliver to him this my message:

O thou dear friend! A wise farmer scatters his seeds in rich, productive soil. Those pure seeds are no other than the new, heavenly teachings and the rich soil is the hearts of the chosen ones. Become thou a heavenly farmer. Do not sow the seeds in barren soil. These variant and confusing thoughts have no results and produce no fruit. The time is spent without a crowning glory. Consider that millions of leaders of thought have come to this world and have dedicated their lives to the propagation of different schools of ideas, yet they obtained no result but the Apostles of His Holiness Christ scattered such seeds that up to this date they are gathering many harvests. There is no greater example than this.

Convey longing greeting on my behalf to each and all the friends.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Sacred Fire

Address by Chairman HOWARD MACNUTT, of Brooklyn, N. Y., delivered at the opening of Second Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Sunday afternoon, April 27th, 1919.
Stenographically reported.

ALLAH'O'ABHA! "Like unto the cup-bearers of eternity, turn ye round in the assemblages of mankind the overflowing goblets of guidance, and intoxicate them with the wine of the Love of God." (Words of Abdul-Baha Abbas.)

In the Words of Paradise, the Blessed Perfection, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, has said: "In this day a great banquet is celebrated in the Supreme Concourse, for all that was promised in the divine Books hath appeared. This is the day of the most great rejoicing!"

Every Manifestation of God, who appeared in the world, saw this day in spiritual vision and perspective, announcing what he saw in the symbolical language of prophecy; for mankind could not bear the full proclamation of the reality. That which we are now witnessing and what is yet to come, appeared to his inner sight in complete clearness. After his ascension to the supreme world, his followers and believers crystallized his teachings and ceremonials in a temple of worship which became the expression and reflection of the divine religion in that age and cycle. And now we see by the eye of heavenly illumination that the temple itself was but a symbol and prophetic sign; that the intended expression of divine purpose and goal of divine revelation was the conscious heart of man, the true and ultimate temple of the living God. Therefore what we are witnessing in this day is the consummation of the plan and Covenant of God and the reality of His promised presence in the purified heart of humanity.

Furthermore, the most central symbol within the temple of worship was the altar of sacred fire which was always kept burning. This pentecostal flame, this fire from heaven, this fire of the love of God appeared with each Manifestation of the Word; the holy spiritual flame perpetually burning. When that fire waned and grew dim, the religion of God became obscured and disintegrated; a change came; another Manifestation of God descended into the world from the Supreme Kingdom and with him the heavenly flame was lighted anew in the temple of its incarnation in human hearts.

Today we know and realize in the lovable personality and spiritual perfection of the glorious Servant of God, Abdul-Baha, that this sacred fire has come again into the world to glorify the heart of humanity, to purify, sanctify and illumine the universal heart of the nations. This is the sacred fire of the heavenly Books and teachings, fulfilled and interpreted in its outer, inner and complete meaning. We have clear evidence and definition of that sacred fire today in the words of Abdul-Baha, in the great principles set forth by him in this country and throughout the world. We have explanation of it in his teaching that the fire from heaven is the fire of the Holy Spirit; that the Holy Spirit is the divine beneficence and grace, the heavenly bestowal, the bounty of God, the generosity and confirmation of God; and that it descends upon those who are sincere and humble recipients.

Each one of these great Conventions we have held during the last ten years has seemed to me a manifestation of the sacred fire of divine love. A heavenly flame, a heavenly power, the Holy Spirit of God has come down upon us at these Conventions. Each time, each year, more and more we renew this bounty. It comes stronger and lasts longer; the interim is not so great as the years increase. And now spiritually attuned with the Center of the Covenant we are awaiting its descent in the glorious meetings of this 1919 Convention.

The splendid brother who is to speak to you now, is from Washington. He has for his subject the "Power of the Holy Spirit;" how it is to convert and unify the hearts of humanity by its divine breath and fragrance. The blessed Abdul-Baha has zoned our country. Last night we heard his messages to the Northeastern States and today we are standing and waiting to hear his Tablet of command on the work to be done in the South. Our speakers are those who have done loyal and noble service in the Cause of God in the Southern States; who have been filled and animated by the Holy Spirit of God. The first one of these speakers is Louis G. Gregory of Washington, D. C.

The Power of the Holy Spirit

Address by LOUIS G. GREGORY, of Washington, D. C., delivered at the Second Session of the Bahai Congress, Sunday afternoon, April 27th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

THE finite cannot grasp the Infinite nor can the creature comprehend the Creator. So we approach this subject, "The Power of the Holy Spirit," in a spirit of meekness and reverence, with a desire for evanescence in the path of God and to testify only to what He has revealed to us in the day of His appearance. As "one of the journeys in the pathway of love is from the creatures to the creatures," the testimony of our companions on the ideal pathway confirms our happiness.

Truly we are living in a great and wonderful day, when the bounty of God's Holy Spirit is felt in all parts of the supreme world and the hearts of all humanity are quickened with this divine power. A new consciousness of life, freedom, happiness and power is reaching all races, classes and conditions of men. As is suggested by our learned brother, testimony of the Holy Spirit has been, from time immemorial, given in all the Holy Books. This divine power has been the reality of all the messengers and prophets, the creative Word by which, as mighty speakers of God, they addressed themselves to the creatures.

The Holy Spirit is compared in some of the sacred writings to the air, because it covers the whole earth. We are told that "the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind." The outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of pentecost is symbolized by "the rushing of a mighty wind." BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH says: "I was asleep on my couch, the gales of my Lord, the All-Glorious, passed over me and taught me the knowledge of what was and is." These are the symbols of an unwearied and irresistible power, the supreme might of God which creates and transforms the face of His universe.

Oftimes the Holy Spirit is symbolized by water, oftimes by fire. The water and the fire are one. The hearts become aflame with the divine fire. They are purified by this fire from the dross of ignorance, superstition and imaginations. Then they can quaff the water of knowledge; then they are initiated into the mysteries of God; then they can look upon all the created beings with a divine eye. Yes, through the divine favor it becomes possible for the creatures to look upon the other created beings with the eye of God. By seeing with the eye of God we mean the universal vision, for the divine gifts and bounties are universal in their adaptability to human needs. The air we breathe cannot be confined to any household. Shall anyone say: "This air shall exist in my house but not in that of others?" Or: "This atmosphere shall be breathed by the people of my country and not by those of other nations?" The air is universal because it is the bounty of God.

In like manner the radiance of the sun is a universal light. We cannot limit the effulgence of that sun. It shines for all the created beings. It lights, cheers and warms the universe. So it is when the Holy Spirit, the Sun of Truth, arises. This healing influence penetrates to the utmost parts of the earth. This bounty flows forth with a mighty power. It conveys, with the greatest illumination, the most marvelous happiness, giving to the creatures the consciousness of the divine. In our humble acceptance of this bounty we draw near to God, the Supreme. It is reflected from the mirror of the hearts.

But in order to know this glorious Reality—which is the life of the world and the healing of the nations—we must know the mystery of God and His appearance in this world of ours. We are told by Abdul-Baha that, "The Holy Spirit is the bounty of God and the luminous rays from His Manifestation." It is a light which is not extinguished; it is a duration that never ends; it is a life that is never swallowed up by death; it is an honor which is not followed by abasement and shame.

Great is the opportunity of the people of earth in this marvelous day in which we are living, to see a new source of that wonderful power of attraction, guidance and supreme happiness. In order to know the mystery of greatness and the secret of might it is necessary to draw near to the divine Messenger at the time of his appearance. Shall we not accept the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Holy Books and realize that the day has come which is the sun of all the days of past centuries and ages? The appearance of God Himself, His light in the world, His Tabernacle among men, this is the life of mankind, the true wealth of nations, the healing of all the people and their drawing together under the tent of the oneness of God and the oneness of all humanity.

When the Bab arose in Persia, creating in that far-off country, by the fire of his word, a moral and spiritual awakening, the power of that word or spirit was illustrated and proved by its attracting energy in the lives of the people whom he trained and educated. When that Word went forth the query was asked, "Am I not your Lord?" Wonderful souls arose who answered this call. Prominent among these was Kurat'ul Ayn, a woman beautiful, clever, accomplished. Yet with all her fair fame and good character, had she continued to live the conventional life, it is most improbable that she would have been known outside of the narrow limits of her environment. But because she heard and heeded that wonderful voice, she was exalted to a supreme station. She shone forth with a marvelous radiance. She traveled through that country with a flaming sword, dividing truth from error. The elevation of her character guided souls to the divine pathway. She had discerned in the divine call the duty and privilege of serving God. She embraced the opportunity to serve her country, to exalt her fellow creatures, especially to help those in the sphere of women, who in that country were for the most part in a most benighted condition, owing to the prevalence of superstition and the want of elevation and knowledge. And because she heard this voice and at the call of her Lord arose to teach and guide the people, we find that her fame is spreading throughout the world. Although she lived and wrought in the Orient, her traces now appear in the Occident. Whenever the cause of freedom for women is advanced we find traces of this illustrious woman who answered the call of her Lord and sacrificed her life for the freedom of humanity. The power of the great Bab was demonstrated in the training of this soul by the power of the Holy Spirit. But he trained not only one, but many thousands. He was not only the herald of the new day but the divine Messenger, the First Point of Revelation. He upturned the soil and planted the seeds of God. He opened wide the gate for the appearance of God Himself in His greatest Manifestation to all the created beings.

The Bab finished his work and the splendor of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH arose like a brilliant sun enlightening the world. And again the spiritual power was proved upon a more magnificent plane than men have ever known. The spiritual power and the divine teachings of this Manifestation brighten the mind and gladden the heart. Not only do they lend themselves to the peculiar needs of the individual, unfolding the divine plan for each of His children, but they are conducive to the needs of the world of humanity, unfolding those universal principles which enlighten, vivify and regenerate the world.

It is related that in the time of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH there was a boy in Persia who was not noted for his wit or intelligence and yet within him was a soul which responded to the universal call. Thus he became one of the chosen and was entrusted by BAHÁ'O'LLÁH with a difficult and perilous mission. At the appearance of the Manifestation of God it is necessary that the people shall know. It is the divine wisdom that the kings and rulers of the people shall be informed of so marvelous an event. As an instrument for carrying the Tablet of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH to the ruling power of Persia, the mighty Shah, surrounded by his great soldiers and his elegant and dignified court, this simple, humble boy was selected. We know the human limitations of this boy. But what happened to him, the mighty transformation that was wrought when he was entrusted with this wonderful mission, is told by BAHÁ'O'LLÁH in the Tablet of Badi. He was called into the holy presence of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and such a power was breathed upon him that he would have overcome the Supreme Concourse! Then he was no longer Badi the ignorant. Then he became Badi the wonderful! Badi the mighty! Then he became a new creation, because his heart was illumined by the Spirit of Truth, the Word of God, the Light of Guidance. He felt the vibrations of that mighty love, the presence of God standing within him, "powerful, mighty and supreme!" His mission was executed in a way that will compel admiration as long as men pay a tribute to virtue and fidelity. And again, through this spiritual outpouring scientific discoveries were increased and spiritual sacrifices were multiplied as the earth became more and more illumined by the face of God.

Now again that great power, the supreme Word, the manifest light goes forth to heal the nations and quicken the dead. This time it descends upon the created beings from the Center of the Covenant of God. BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, speaking of Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant of God, says, "He is the east of my Cause, the shining-place of my identity, the sea of my bounty, the heaven of my will, the lamp of my guidance, the path of my justice, the standard of my laws. Whoever hath turned to him hath turned to me." So if we want now to know that mysterious force which is the source of life and power, we must turn with severed hearts to the Center of the Covenant of God. This is the dawning-place of righteousness and peace. This is the mystery of God which is the mystery of divine love.

Love is the cause of the creation of all the beings. It is the power of unity in all the universe of God. Through His love for His creatures, through His will to be known, God created man. We can only realize the divine image and likeness as we draw near to God in loving, sacrificial service to our fellow beings. Thus the limitations of man depart, and his horizon is widened. The distinctions of race and creed and religion no longer exist and the oneness of creation reflects the oneness of God. But such a vision is impossible without the bounty of the Holy Spirit. Through this ideal gift man is enabled to look over the created universe, as Abdul-Baha says, with "the glorified vision of a seer and a prophet."

One way to become receptive to this heavenly visitation, which no one of the creatures can of himself merit, is to carry this message of unity to the people of the earth. God wills to be known, and happy are those souls who respond to the desire of God! The divine Message creates human unity, ideal brotherhood, heavenly harmony and universal peace. It is also necessary to humble ourselves before the True One, knowing well that His ways are not our ways and His thoughts are not our thoughts. Whenever a Messenger of God appeared in past cycles and ages, those who drew near to him with a desire for knowledge and in a spirit of loving service and humble submission, found their stations exalted by that Supreme Power and Manifest Light. It is even so today. The God whose manifest Word and Holy Spirit create us is not a God of poverty or of limitations. He is the Lord of wealth, of affluence, of inexhaustible power. He does not create us poor. He creates us rich. He desires that we shall be wealthy through the divine affluence. He wills us to be strong through the divine strength; to be wise through the divine knowledge; to be illumined through the divine radiance. Shall not our minds and hearts expand and grow through the great spiritual bounty which is the life of all the beings?

There are those who seem to rest contentedly in the thought that there is nothing new under the sun. There are others who in their desire for the expansion of the soul and the ideal freedom, are ever striving for something new. The savage may look upon the sun and find satisfaction in the thought that it is the same that shone upon his forefathers and ancestors for many generations. He has the same light and warmth and wants nothing more. But how different it is with the scientist, who regards the same sun! Although he cannot know the essence of that sun, yet one by one he discovers more of its qualities and attributes. He invents the solar spectrum and with its aid discovers the identity of the elements of the sun and of this earth, although the proportion and composition of these elements differ in different worlds. He discovers the sun spots, those great apertures through which myriads of worlds might pass. To the astonished vision of the scientist is revealed the great coats of the sun, the great spheres of radiance and the sources of the light. He perceives the great masses of radium which are the dawning-places of its radiance and illumination. As the poet says, "That which is, is but earnest of the things which are to be."

Who knows but that in the future,

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

He Is God!

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness, firmness, firmness!

Editorial—The Southern States contributes a General Outline

By JOSEPH H. HANNEN

Careful study of the Tablets to America on Teaching, old and new, develops an increasing sense of the responsibility and opportunity of every Bahai. It is indeed the trumpet call to action. A new campaign is being waged against ignorance, lack of spirituality, prejudice and sectarianism. Its divine object is unity through love, and the formation of a republic of religions, in which all men shall be brothers, with God the Father of all, and His will shall "be done on earth as it is in heaven."

It is our desire and effort to enlist the co-operation of every friend in the Southern territory, bending a united effort toward the accomplishment of the task set before us. The large delegation which attended the New York Convention from Washington and other points in the Southern field, returned filled with enthusiasm and inspiration, and plans are being made to systematically spread the glad-tidings of the Kingdom. As in this work we have had the benefit of the personal co-operation of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, who spent much of his time before and shortly after the Convention in Washington, the plans which he outlined, and which are naturally based on a very thorough comprehension of Abdul-Baha's wishes, may be of general interest to the friends everywhere.

The objects to be attained are such as to require the best effort of everyone. There is no one connected with the Cause of God who has not a part in this great plan. With a view of facilitating the general work, and co-ordinating the efforts of the friends, an outline has been drawn up by Mirza Sohrab, which the Southern section submits to the friends as its contribution to the general outline, and with a constant supplication for guidance and bounty.

The outline is as follows:

1. A Central Bureau to be organized in Washington for the South.
2. Teachers traveling in the South to send addresses of those to whom they have spoken, to this Bureau and all details of their work.

3. Teachers to send the names and addresses of all the liberal organizations, clubs and churches who would be willing to have Bahai lecturers.

4. Bahai books to be placed in the libraries of all the important centers and teachers to visit the different libraries and see how many books they have and if we can supply them with more.

5. Provision to be made for the publication of literature and books to be widely circulated in the Southern states.

6. Teachers to send the names of one or two large newspapers in each city that would be willing to publish Bahai articles when sent to them.

7. Monthly reports of the work in the South to be published and circulated in the STAR OF THE WEST and other channels.

8. Monthly articles containing interesting news about the Cause to be sent to important newspapers for publication.

9. Bahai writers in the South to be encouraged to write Bahai stories for magazines and press. These stories to be permeated with the transforming power of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH and Abdul-Baha. In this manner we can reach hundreds and thousands that could not be reached otherwise.

10. The follow-up system be developed so that if a teacher has visited a number of towns for a few months past another teacher may follow him up and refresh those talks with those already interested.

11. All the larger towns to be visited and effort be displayed to interesting one or two in each city to open their homes for weekly meetings and study, thus the work may continue without interruption, for unless we try to establish such small centers all public work will bear no fruit—even the birds have nests—thus when some one makes his home the nest of the birds of paradise, people will know where to go and how to get Bahai teachings.

12. The Central Bureau for the South to keep a card index system of all the friends in this section and send all the vital information regularly to the National Bureau, thus working in unity with that board and receiving inspiration from one another.

13. There should be a school for the training of the youth to be sent out as teachers.

14. A Publicity Bureau to be established.

News and Notes from the Southern Field

Charles Mason Remey and John B. Bassett visited a number of points in the South, prior to the New York Convention, returning to be in attendance there. Subsequently they returned to Washington and spent some time in local work, visiting a number of nearby points where addresses were given to interested groups. They report a wonderful spirit in the South and receptivity which is most encouraging.

Louis G. Gregory and Roy Williams have also been touring the Southern territory and are still in that section. They have visited Richmond, Virginia; Charleston, West Virginia; Huntington, West Virginia, and a number of other points en route. They are sending in lists of those interested, showing splendid results, and are most happy in the work. The following extract from Mr. Gregory's letter describing an incident of their trip to one of the places visited, exhibits the spirit encountered and shows the opportunities to be found: "This morning we visited the Ministerial Union here, which, oddly enough in a Southern community, combines all denominations, save Catholic, and both races. We listened with intense interest to their discussion centering around the question of unity, and growing out of a proposition to have unity meetings of the various denominations for the summer months. The presiding officer, a Congregational minister, had a clear vision and spoke like a Bahai! He spoke of the efforts to prevent overlapping in missionary fields, and thought the same thing should apply at home. He believed that a hundred, even fifty years would witness the end of all denominations. . . . Near the close they gave us a brief audience, which made it possible to read the teachings of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and mention the twelve principles. They showed keen interest, and the effect was almost electrical upon the advanced thinkers among them. They eagerly took the booklets (Big Ben's) that were offered them, and warmly shook our hands. . . . Next Sunday we are to speak in the church of Dr. H., one who attended the World's Parliament of Religions in 1893. When he agreed to open his pulpit, I asked him if he wanted a 'Methodist sermon.' 'I want your message, whatever it is,' he answered, and said he was very happy that liberal and progressive ideals in religion were being advocated."

The Washington Assembly has called a meeting to consider plans for the work, and will appoint committees and take other practical steps to get the campaign under way, with great unity of purpose and steadfastness of action.

It is earnestly requested that any of the friends who may be sojourning temporarily in the states covered by the Tablets to the Southeastern states, will communicate with the Washington Assembly, so that they may become a part of the active forces while with us. Also all friends in the states mentioned, who are not members of assemblies, are asked to send their names and addresses to the Secretary of the Washington Assembly, to be registered. Furthermore all those who have friends in the Southern territory who have been or should be interested, are urged to send the names and addresses of such friends, with such additional information as will enable us to serve them to best advantage. Address in all such correspondence, "Secretary, Bahai Assembly, P. O. Box 1319, Washington, D. C."

The Power of the Holy Spirit

through the evolution of science and religion and when the thoughts of all the world are concentrated upon peaceful and constructive measures, we may communicate with the inhabitants of that glorious sun, may respond to their vibrations of understanding and light and may quicken them to ours, so our hearts and minds are fixed upon noble, exalted and altruistic ideals! Immobility is ever the cause of stagnation and death. Motion is ever the cause of progress and life. Man should ever strive to grow and develop along lines of both material and spiritual evolution. Thus he may discover the mysteries of his own being and come to know himself, which we are told, on the highest authority, is identical with knowing God.

The Kingdom of God has descended, in accordance with the promises of past centuries and ages. The invitation to be citizens of that great and glorious Kingdom is extended to each and all. The light of God which is shining forth from His greatest Manifestation, BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH, and the Center of His Covenant, Abdul-Baha, is veiled only by its intensity of splendor. There have been numberless appearances of the divine Logos, the "Word made flesh," in past cycles and ages. For these appearances have been the divine wisdom and mercy to the people of the world. These lordly splendors have been the educators of the peoples and nations as they laid the foundations for all past civilizations. The glories of the past, wonderful as they have been, are veiled to us by the imitations, forms, interpretations and divisions that have crept in after the lapse of ages. But now the supreme joy and the glorious knowledge of the appearance of God is ours. The brief span of our lives upon earth is contemporaneous with the most marvelous event that has ever happened in all the ages. This event has been the dream and promise of wise men, prophets and seers, in past centuries and ages. How glorious to be living in the day of its fulfillment, when the whole earth is illumined by the face of its Lord! By obedience to the divine commands we become conscious of the divine power. It is the privilege of all who hear this Message to become instruments in the hands of God of quickening flesh with the spiritual power and of receiving the peace, harmony and security of the world of existence.

“To souls of fire He gives more fire and to those who are manful, a might that is more than man’s!”

Truly if a man lived upon this earth one hundred thousand years, no higher hope, no brighter destiny could be his, than to be an instrument in the hands of God of bringing universal happiness to man. The greatest souls of past ages, were it possible, would hasten to such an attainment and the kings of the earth, could they but know, would abandon their crowns for affinity with God in the day when His Kingdom is glorified by His greatest Manifestation and the Center of His Covenant is living, moving and vibrating among men!

The gift of God is to be quickened by His Holy Spirit, to know His oneness, to realize His singleness, to be mindful of His appearance and to characterize our reality with His attributes. This is drawing near to God, this is being illumined by His light; this is looking upon the face of His beauty. This is the attainment of the station of man. “This is eternal life and heavenly honor.”

Words of Baha’o’llah

Recited by MRS. AGNES S. PARSONS, of Washington, D. C., at the Second Session of the Bahai Congress, Sunday afternoon, April 27th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

IT has been our aim to uplift men through exalted words unto the Supreme Horizon and to prepare them to hearken unto that which conduces to the sanctifying and purifying of the peoples of the world from the strife and discord resulting from differences in religions or sects.”

“O friends! In this day the door of heaven is opened by the key of the Godly name, the ocean of generosity is manifested and is rolling before your faces and the Sun of Providence is shining and gleaming. Do not be exclusive nor destroy your most precious time through the speech of this or that person. Gird up the loins of endeavor and do your best in training the people of the world. Do not imagine that the Cause of God is a cause of opposition, hatred and wrath.”

“The Son of Greatness hath said that which is revealed from the heaven of Will in this Supreme Manifestation is to unite the people in love and friendship toward all. The people of Baha who have drunk the pure wine of reality must associate with all the world with a perfect spirit of joy and fragrance and remind them of that which is for the benefit of all. This is the commandment of the wronged one to his saints and sincere ones.”

“O people of the earth! Make not the religion of God a cause of variance among you. Verily of a truth, it was revealed for the unifying of the whole world.”

“Blessed is he who loves the world simply for the sake of the face of his generous Lord. With perfect compassion and mercy have we guided and directed the people of the world to that whereby their souls shall be profited.”

“I declare by the Sun of Truth, which has shone forth from the highest horizon of the world, that the people of Baha had not and have not any aim save the prosperity and reformation of the world and the purifying of the nations.”

Religion must be the Cause of Amity and Friendship

Address by JOSEPH H. HANNEN, of Washington, D. C., delivered at the Second Session of the Bahai Congress, Sunday Afternoon, April 27th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

IN the great principles laid down by BAHÁ'O'LLÁH for the government of the world in the new age that is to come, the third is that religion must be the cause of friendship and amity.

First let me quote to you from some of the sayings of Abdul-Baha upon this subject: “The basis of the teaching of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH is the unity of mankind and his greatest desire was that love and good will should live in the hearts of men. As he exhorted the people to do away with strife and discord, so I wish to explain to you the principal reason of the unrest among nations. The chief cause is the misrepresentation of religion by the leaders and teachers of religion. They teach their followers to believe that their own form of religion is the only one pleasing to God, and that followers of any other persuasion are condemned by the all-loving Father and deprived of His mercy and grace; hence arise among the peoples disapproval, contempt, disputes and hatred. If these religious prejudices could be swept away the nations would soon enjoy peace and concord. . . .

“If only the whole world would acknowledge the greatness of all the heaven-sent teachers, strife and discord would soon vanish from the face of the earth and God’s Kingdom would come among men. . . . If men could only learn the lesson of mutual tolerance, understanding and brotherly love, the unity of the world would soon be an established fact.” (From Paris Talks.)

The Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha, has explained to us the principal reason of the unrest so apparent among the various religious groups of mankind: The followers of each religious Teacher, Manifestation, Prophet—call him what you will—regard themselves as the chosen people of God, and all others as merely tolerated beings.

Now, in promulgating his great principles for the government of the world in the new age, BAHÁ'O'LLÁH has declared in the third, that religion must be the cause of amity and friendship. All religion, like all love, is universal in its inception. The child that loves its home, tenderly and unselfishly, is potentially the man who expresses much love. The little girl who mothers her doll will make, we know, the best mother; and the mother is the heart of the nation; of the world. But man is not content to continue upon the unselfish basis which marked all beginnings of real religion. He would circumscribe the divine revelation of love—regarding himself and those of his persuasion as the children of God, and all others as being outside the love and care of an all-loving Father! What a misapprehension! And yet as an unselfish community, filled with the spirit of co-operation and brotherhood, is developed by binding together many families rich in family love, so God, today, having trained His people in the principles of spirituality, is bringing them together on a basis of amity and concord. All the past is but a preparation for this day, which is truly one of coming together, of unity—the promised day of all the ages, of all the cycles, of all dispensations. This is the day of which Jesus, the Christ, spoke, when He said: “Other sheep I have which are not of this fold. Them also I must bring, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd.”

Let us think of the people of the world from a spiritual standpoint; they are as several flocks, each under a different shepherd. They are each gathered into different pastures, separated by walls—walls made not by God, but by man. Gradually the existence of these walls breeds the selfish thought in the heart of each flock. Each believes its pasture the only pasture; its shepherd the only shepherd. At last, when selfishness through separation has reached its climax the mighty blast of the same all-powerful Spirit at whose command a trumpet blast destroyed the walls of Jericho, levels all walls of separation, and lo!—the One Great Shepherd appears, and the sheep, passing over lines where walls once stood, realize His presence, and know themselves every one as the sheep of God, knowing the Voice of One Shepherd!

Fancy the possibilities of unity, the possibilities of friendship, whereas before there existed suspicion and enmity. This is the message of the divine Shepherd who has appeared today. He has spoken—aye, He is speaking; and in the hearts of those capable of understanding the voice they have heard, the basis of a great unity has been practically established. This is no idle dream, millions with understanding hearts have already heard the voice of Him who has joined them together in a bond which shall last forever! For those of us who have had the privilege of seeing people of many races, many languages and different religions, meet as brothers, loving each other—recognizing points of contact and forgetting differences—in the home of Abdul-Baha, there can be no question. We are indeed living in the great day of unity—the great promised day of God.

Studying over this question, it seems to me that one of the great causes of dissension among religions is the loss of the dynamic element which rouses to action and lifts men from the lowest depths to the greatest heights. In the early days of Christianity, for example, men were filled with the divine enthusiasm that spurred them to marvelous action. Today we hear in the pulpits fervent prayers that God will raise His people to greater heights. Aye, therein lies the weak point, that God shall raise them. For as long as religion is passive and people depend upon something outside of themselves to elevate them, just so long will there be the selfish desire to be in the highest place; just so long will there be the personal creed, the thought that my way is the most direct way, the only way, and that those who do not follow after my way are lost. But the religion that is dynamic, the religion that is active, is that of which our Lord Christ spoke when he said, “He who drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, but out of him shall proceed streams of living water,” and so today the call is a call to action, the call is that through the power of the Holy Spirit as exemplified and given to us by the Center of the Covenant we are to raise ourselves to the sublime, divine heights. The way we do this is by raising others. As we raise others to these higher thoughts, these higher ideals, we shall indeed raise ourselves and in this active conception of religion there can be no selfishness, there can be no enmity, there can be no prejudice, for we are all striving, perhaps through different paths, toward the same goal, and animated by the great unselfish conceptions which have been given to us today in the precepts of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, and the teachings and example of Abdul-Baha, we shall find our greatest happiness in giving, giving, giving to others.

This is the day of the divine harmony. Goethe compared the world's great religions to the strings of a harp, each of which gives forth a peculiar note of its own, while the harmonious blending of all produces a symphony of music. Each of the seven great religions has its dominant note, its distinctive feature, a doctrine which differentiates it from all the rest. The several melodies constitute, when blended, a symphony of universal religion. The dominant note of Hinduism is the divine presence; the permeating note of Buddhism, renunciation; of Parseism, purity; of Confucianism, reverence for the past; of Judaism, righteousness; of Christianity, love, and of Mohammedanism, submission.

Have you ever stopped to realize that seven major notes with variations and the demi-semi-tones and combinations make up all of the harmony of the world? And so we have here outlined before us seven dominant notes representing the seven great religious systems of the world. The creeds and the sects are many, and yet they are but variations of these seven primal notes. These notes, these great divine strings are sadly out of tune. There comes One then, the Author and Creator of all, and by the wonderful power of His Word attunes anew these strings, these seven great notes, and lo, when played upon by the master hand we have again sweeping from East to West, from continent to continent, from ocean to ocean, aye from world to world in this vast universe of ours, the divine harmony, the harmony of the new day. There is no spot so remote but what that divine harmony may be heard by those whose ears are attuned to the Infinite; and so today it is our privilege to stand, to listen, and to make ourselves as reeds through which the divine breath may blow, as strings upon which the divine hand may play, and thus the world shall become one great symphony of love, of peace, of unity, of all the blessings of God's new day, the day of harmony, the day of unity through love.

"Concerning the matter of receiving Orientals"

RECENT TABLET TO JOSEPH H. HANNEN

To his honor, Mr. Hannen, Washington, D. C.—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abha!

He is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Your detailed letter dated March 10th, 1919, was perused. It imparted great joy and happiness that, praise be to God, the friends in Washington are in the utmost joy and fragrance and are acting and conducting themselves in accordance with the Covenant and the Testament. They are kind to one another and are ready to sacrifice themselves for the promulgation of heavenly teachings.

Assuredly, invisible confirmation shall come to their aid and assistance and manifest light shall illumine their sight.

Concerning the matter of receiving Orientals regarding which you had inquired, affiliate and associate and exercise the utmost kindness to the Hindus, Chinese and Japanese Orientals for they have no bad intentions and are not ill-natured; but assuredly do not receive and associate with any Persian or Arab who may come to those regions without having an autographic letter of recommendation from me and bearing my signature. He may perhaps go to those regions in order to intrigue, to sow the seeds of sedition and to create difference and enmity. The blessed souls, however, will undoubtedly carry with them a letter of recommendation from me.

I pray God that thy respected wife and the children may, under the shadow of the Covenant, be confirmed in the realization of their highest wish.

His honor Mirza Ahmad Sohrab has undoubtedly reached that country by this time and is associating with you in the utmost love. Convey to him, on my behalf, greeting and kindness.

Concerning thy mother, Mineola, Misses Fanny and Alma Knobloch, I supplicate for them the assistance and the favor of God. Convey to them on my behalf the utmost kindness.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

Signed ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“The Covenant of God shall remain stable and secure”

RECENT TABLET TO ROY C. WILHELM

To his honor Mr. Roy Wilhelm, New York City.—Upon him be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant.

Your numerous letters have been received and their contents noted. In every age and cycle, in the time of Moses, of His Holiness Christ and of His Holiness Mohammed as well as after these sacred Manifestations, some people of evil intention have been found and have sown the seeds of discord and of sedition. Even after Christ, Arius, the well-known patriarch, was the cause of a widespread schism in the Cause of God and intense agitation among the believers. His followers numbered even three million, and he as well as his successors exerted the utmost effort in order to produce a great split and a widespread commotion in the religion of God. But eventually the power of Christ exterminated and utterly destroyed them all to the extent that no trace (of them) has been left. These people are like the froth that gathers on the surface of the sea; a wave surges from the ocean of the Covenant and through the power of the Abha Kingdom will cast these foams ashore. In the Koran it is mentioned: “As to the foam, it is quickly gone; and as to what is useful to man, it remaineth on the earth.” These corrupt thoughts that emanate from personal and evil intentions will all vanish, whereas the Covenant of God shall remain stable and secure.

The design that Mr. Bourgeois has prepared and has indeed striven hard therein has been received. Blessedness awaiteth him and a goodly home.

Convey, on my behalf the utmost love and kindness to thy respected parents. As it has been previously wired, communicate directly with Haifa.

Convey to Miss Lloyd my greeting and my kindness. I have the utmost longing for Mr. Bourgeois. In reality, this respected personage is worthy of praise.

You had written concerning the Wednesday evening gathering which was in the utmost spirituality. From this distant region I felt the fragrance of that meeting. Attach great importance to the Japanese people. Mrs. Magee should continually communicate with them. As to Miss Rude and the aunt of Mr. Edsall, convey to them my greeting. . . .

Thou hadst written that the health of thy father and mother has improved; this news has made me very glad. . . .

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“The ocean of the Covenant shall send forth a wave”

RECENT TABLET TO LOUISE R. WAITE

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Louise Waite, Los Angeles, California—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou dear maid-servant of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH!

The letter thou hadst written to his honor Mr. Tudor-Pole was perused. It is just what thou hadst written, namely, that the question of supreme importance centers around the promulgation of divine teachings. This is conducive to amity among all denominations and races that dwell on earth, nay rather it links together the East and the West, binds closely together the North and the South, pitches the pavilion of the oneness of the world of humanity, lays the foundation of universal peace, emancipates mankind from the gloom of the world of nature and elevates it to the illumination of the Kingdom, secures freedom for all the hearts and gladdens the souls with the glad tidings of God.

As to the question of reincarnation which thou hast inquired: It is better for thee to refer to the Book of Certainty (Ighan) revealed through the Supreme Pen, wherein the question is fully treated. This is the explicit text of the divine utterance and therein thou shalt find that it has been manifestly declared that by “Return” is meant the return of human perfections and divine illumination. The Book of Ighan has been translated and possesses the decisive verdict. Consider and peruse it with the utmost carefulness.

Concerning the childish activities of some (violators) which thou hadst written about: Praise be to God, thou hast been able to fulfill admirably thy mission. Thou hast, armed with the power of the Covenant, resisted and surmounted these unwise and foolish attempts; thou hast protected the Cause of God and hast striven to expose and reveal the Truth to the people of that region. These people are like unto children—at every hour they exhibit a fresh and puerile attempt, but all that is likened to a ripple on the surface of water. Ere long thou shalt consider that no sign and no trace shall remain therefrom. The ocean of the Covenant shall send forth a wave and shall disperse and throw out these foams. Consider thou, at the time of Christ and after Him, how many childish attempts were made by different persons! What claims they have advanced and what a multitude have they gathered around themselves! Even Arius attracted to himself a million and a half followers and strove and endeavored to sow the seeds of sedition in the Cause of Christ. But eventually the sea of Christ surged and cast out all the gathering froth and nothing was left behind save everlasting malediction.

In fine, engage in the promulgation of divine teachings, that ye may serve in a distinguished manner the oneness of the world of humanity, may be the means of the propagation of universal peace, that the world of mankind may reflect, like unto a mirror, the divine Kingdom and that the lights of the realm on high may shine in the nether world.

Convey, on my behalf, to all the friends and particularly to thy respected husband, Mr. Waite, the utmost love and kindness.

Upon thee be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EI-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Southern States

Second talk by MIRZA AHMAD SOHRAB at the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress held in McAlpin Hotel, New York City, April 26th-30th, 1919.

BAHA'O'LLAH says in the Book of Akdas:

"It behooveth the one who hath drunk today the Elixir of Life from the hand of his Lord, the Merciful, to be pulsating like unto an artery in the body of the universe; thus the world may be moved through him and every mouldering bone be clothed with flesh."

Today the world of humanity is hungry for the Bread of Life and thirsty for the Water of Truth. Now that men have realized more than ever before that all their former institutions have been based upon a foundation of sand, they are trying to do away with all the past evils and build, on the solid rock of the Word of God, a palace of human prosperity which shall last forever. No doubt this new structure will not be built by a single man or by a single nation. It is only through the co-operation and mutual assistance of all men and of all races and all climes that this divine edifice will be raised. Its foundation must be laid in the hearts, and its walls rise to the seventh heaven of human consciousness. It is only through the power of God and the love of humanity that the builders will be inspired to set aside their national prejudices and traditions, merging them in the strong white light of internationalism and brotherhood. For has it not been said of old: "Love conquers everything." Without love nothing succeeds, nothing goes forward. When altruism and the love of God join hands, then we have really a dynamic and divine civilization. And it is only through the establishment of this divine civilization, that humanity shall enter through the portals of regeneration into the garden of Truth.

It is evident that every institution, both religious and social, has been subjected in the past to the law of change and modification. Most of the former movements, because they could not adapt themselves to a new environment, became little by little static, lost their pliability and elasticity, became lifeless and died from inanition. But in this age the law of religious truth and social energy has taught us a new lesson, i. e., a movement cannot survive the cataclysm of the ages unless it is permeated with a strong telic policy.

Now I believe from what you have seen and experienced of the Bahai Movement—have felt the effects of its ethical and practical laws and its religious and scientific aspects—we may assert that of all other movements of the last age, this Movement is endowed with an extraordinary amount of telic energy and the power of adaptation. The unveiling of the great Tablets to the believers of the Northeastern States must have demonstrated to you, in a striking manner, what this power of adaptation and telic energy must mean to the Bahais in the future. It is only through the constant application of these two fundamental laws and the assistance of the Holy Spirit that we shall be enabled to teach the Cause of God and the brotherhood of races to all these millions of men.

At this session we will take another step, and bring within the range of our human vision the larger divine vision of Abdul-Baha by reading to you the translation of the two Tablets revealed to the Southern States. The first Tablet was revealed on Wednesday morning, March 27th, 1916. The Beloved of our hearts was sitting on a chair in the midst of the fresh wild flowers, looking at them and admiring their color and beauty. After a few minutes of silence, he began to dictate.

[Here followed the reading of the Tablet received in America before the doors of communication closed. It was published in the STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 7, No. 10, and Vol. 9, No. 14.]

The second Tablet for the Southern States, which is now given to the world for the first time, was dictated by Abdul-Baha on Monday morning, February 3d, 1917, in his little cottage at his home in Haifa. It is as follows:

TABLET

To the believers of God and the maid-servant of the Merciful of the Southern States.—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O ye blessed, respected souls!

The philosophers of the ancients, the thinkers of the middle ages and the scientists of this and the future centuries have all agreed upon the fact that the best and the most ideal region for the habitation of man is the temperate zone, for in this belt the intellects and thoughts rise to the highest stage of maturity and the capability and ability of civilization manifest themselves in full efflorescence. When you read history critically and with a penetrating eye, it becomes evident that the majority of the famous men have been born, reared and have done their work in the temperate zone, while very, very few have appeared from the torrid and frigid zones.

Now these sixteen Southern States of the United States are situated in the temperate zone, and in these regions the perfections of the world of nature have been fully revealed. For the moderation of the weather, the beauty of the scenery and the geographical configuration of the country display a great effect in the world of minds and thoughts. This fact is well demonstrated through observation and experience.

Even the holy, divine Manifestations have had a nature in the utmost equilibrium, the health and wholesomeness of their bodies most perfect, their constitutions endowed with physical vigor, their powers functioning in perfect order, and the outward sensations linked with the inward perceptions, working together with extraordinary momentum and co-ordination.

Therefore in these sixteen states, because they are contiguous to other states and their climate being in the utmost of moderation, unquestionably the divine teachings must reveal themselves with a brighter effulgence, the breaths of the Holy Spirit must display a penetrating intensity, the ocean of the love of God must be stirred with higher waves, the breeze of the rose-garden of the divine love be wafted with higher velocity, and the fragrance of holiness be diffused with swiftness and rapidity.

Praise be to God, that the divine outpourings are infinite, the melody of the Lordly principles is in the utmost efficacy, the most great Orb is shining with perfect splendor, the cohorts of the Supreme Concourse are attacking with invincible power, the tongues are sharper than the swords, the hearts are more brilliant than the light of electricity, the magnanimity of the friends precedes all the magnanimities of the former and subsequent generations, the souls are divinely attracted, and the fire of the love of God is enkindled.

At this time and at this period we must avail ourselves of this most great opportunity. We must not sit inactive for one moment; we must sever ourselves from composure, rest, tranquillity, goods, property, life and attachment to material things. We must sacrifice everything to His Highness the Possessor of Existence, so that the powers of the Kingdom may show greater penetration and the brilliant effulgence in this new cycle may illumine the worlds of minds and ideals.

It is about twenty-three years that the fragrances of God have been diffused in America, but no adequate and befitting motion has been realized, and no great acclamation and acceleration has been witnessed. Now it is my hope that through the heavenly power, the fragrances of the Merciful, the attraction of consciousness, the celestial outpourings, the heavenly cohorts and the gushing forth of the fountain of divine love, the believers of God may arise and in a short time the greatest good may unveil her countenance, the Sun of Reality may shine forth with such intensity that the darkness of the world of nature may become entirely dispelled and driven away; from every corner a most wonderful melody may be raised, the morning birds may break into such a song that the world of humanity may be quickened and moved, the solid bodies may become liquified and the souls who are like unto adamantine rocks may open their wings and through the heat of the love of God fly heavenward.

Nearly 2,000 years ago, Armenia was enveloped with impenetrable darkness. One blessed soul from among the disciples of Christ hastened to that part, and through his effort, ere long that province became illumined. Thus it has become evident how the power of the Kingdom works!

Therefore, rest ye assured in the confirmations of the Merciful and the assistances of the Most High, become ye sanctified above and purified from this world and the inhabitants thereof, suffer your intention to become for the good of all, cut your attachment to the earth and like unto the essence of the spirit become ye light and delicate. Then with a firm resolution, a pure heart, a rejoiced spirit, and an eloquent tongue, engage your time in the promulgation of the divine principles; so that the oneness of the world of humanity may pitch her canopy in the apex of America and all the nations of the world may follow the divine policy. This is certain that the divine policy is justice and kindness toward all mankind. For all the nations of the world are the sheep of God, and God is the kind Shepherd. He has created these sheep. He has protected them, sustained and trained them. What greater kindness than this? And every moment we must render a hundred thousand thanksgivings that, praise be to God, we are freed from all the ignorant prejudices, are kind to all the sheep of God, and our utmost hope is to serve each and all, and like unto a benevolent father educate every one.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

Every soul who travels through the cities, villages and hamlets of these states and is engaged in the diffusion of the fragrances of God, must peruse this Commune every morning:

COMMUNE

O God! O God! Behold me! Notwithstanding my lowliness and my lack of capability and ability, I am bent upon the accomplishment of the greatest works, aiming to promote Thy Word amongst the republics and resolved to spread Thy teachings amongst all mankind. Far be it from me to become confirmed in this work save Thou mayst assist me with the breaths of the Holy Spirit! Make me victorious through the armies of Thy supreme Kingdom and encircle me with Thy confirmations, which shall make the moth the eagle, the drop the river and the seas, and the scintillas the suns and the moons!

O Lord! Confirm me with Thy insuperable power and Thy penetrating potency, so that my tongue may speak out Thy praises and glorifications amongst Thy creatures, and my heart become over-flowed with the wine of Thy love and knowledge. Verily, Thou art the Powerful to do that which Thou wilt, and Thou art Mighty over all things!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 27th, 1919, Washington, D. C.)

It is significant to observe that Abdul-Baha, in writing to the Southern States, takes the example of farming, and applies it to the spiritual farming, for as we know most of these states are primarily agricultural. The world looks to the South for its cotton, and thousands of factories would be closed in case of a bad harvest. Now the desire of Abdul-Baha is that just as the Southern people are clothing the bodies of millions of men with finely woven textures out of their cotton, they may also clothe the spiritual body of mankind with the heavenly characteristics and divine attributes. Just as they sweeten the tongues with the sugar cane of Louisiana, Texas, and Georgia, they may sweeten the lives of men and women who have lost their bright hopes of a better state.

The sixteen Southern States have more than five times the area of the Northeastern States, and we can get an idea of the vastness of this section when we realize that Texas alone is larger than the entire group of the Northeastern States; nevertheless the population is only about twenty-three millions; not much more than that of the Northeastern States. The problem of how to reach this great mass of humanity, and how to spread the Message of the Kingdom in all parts of the South, is a subject that only time, knowledge and discretion will disclose to us. It is not a matter to be decided upon in a decade or two. Once we are inspired with this glorious vision of man's spiritualization, and once there is a telic policy guiding all our aims and hopes, I am sure we will go on advancing from step to step till the final goal is achieved. We may not see that goal, but still ours will be the greatest satisfaction to have laid the foundation of this work, not on the crumbling rocks of human policies, but in the pure hearts of men and women gathered here in this meeting. Look on the map for a moment, and the whole South is dotted with large, thriving cities, the inhabitants intelligent and hard workers. Here we have Washington, with a population of nearly 500,000, the Capital of the United States, the seat of the National Government, with the President and the Congress; here also we have the representatives of the nations of the earth. Then Baltimore, with more than 500,000; New Orleans with about 350,000; Nashville with 120,000; San Antonio with 100,000; Richmond with 130,000; Memphis with 140,000; then Birmingham, Augusta, Charleston, Chattanooga, Covington, Fort Worth, Houston, Mobile, Oklahoma City, Savannah, Wilmington, and many others with large populations and prosperous agricultural and industrial communities.

The Bahai Cause, whose basic spiritual principles are the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, must permeate every stratum of society in the South; so that this section may become the paradise of glory, the nest of the nightingale of Truth, the haven of security and the land of joy and happiness, flowing with milk and honey. All the racial and religious prejudices must be wiped away, that every face may shine with the light of the Kingdom. This, I can assure you, is the supreme desire of Abdul-Baha, and the sooner this ideal condition is brought about, the nearer we will be to the Golden Age of Universal Peace.

And now I must bring this second talk to a close by quoting to you two short talks of Abdul-Baha. Here is the first. Having looked over and corrected the second Tablet to the South, he handed it to me, saying:

"Come, my son, take it. I have corrected it. The importance of this Tablet will be revealed in the future. In these vast sixteen states the lights of the Sun of Reality shall shine with great power and the dark clouds of ignorance and human prejudices will be dispelled from its horizon. Mr. Gregory must demonstrate a self-sacrificing spirit in teaching the Cause amongst the black race, diffuse the fragrances of God in every part of the South, and let his cry of 'Ya-Baha-el-Abha!' reach to the apex of heaven, in their meetings, gatherings, churches, colleges and schools. The believers of God with the utmost firmness and steadfastness must go forth and teach the heavenly institutes to the inhabitants of the South. They must not turn their faces from any difficulty. Like unto a waving sea they must be tumultuous and full of divine acclamation, and similar unto the thankful birds they must be always singing the songs of love, light and life. Every person in accordance with his capability and ability must engage in teaching the Cause of God and show an effort in the illumination of the souls, so that praiseworthy results may appear and become manifest from him. I desire nothing else from the believers of those States save teaching the Cause of His Highness, the Almighty. See with what love, with what attraction, with what exhilaration I wrote this Tablet for them. One of

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Althou for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

Letter from SHOGHI RABBANI—Also containing recent Tablet revealed for a well-known Bahai of Teheran.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago.

My dear brother in the love of God:

As there has been a lull and decrease of activity in Abdul-Baha's ever-widening correspondence these days, I find ample time at my disposal to write you this letter acknowledging the receipt of your letters that have been sent to me and those supplications which you have forwarded to the beloved Master. I profit moreover by the occasion to give you the news of the Beloved's health and safety and a summary of the news of the Holy Land. Since the dispatch of your last Tablet dated January 10th, 1919, four supplications, enclosing other supplications from the friends, have been received from you as well as two letters addressed to me and dated February 28th and March 6th. The contents of all these letters have been fully exposed to the Beloved and have received his due and full consideration, a detailed Tablet in answer to all your questions has been revealed for you this afternoon and will be duly dispatched. The second (or middle) name granted to your dear daughter is Habibeh, after the name of her respected grandmother. Convey my greetings and my best wishes to your dear wife who, I hope, is enjoying good health and is collaborating with you in your indefatigable services to the Cause of God.

As to the news of the Holy Land, many and varied they are in these significant, memorable days. Friends from France, as M. and Mme. Dreyfus-Barney; from England, as Major Tudor-Pole; from Cairo, as Mohammed Taghi Esphahani and others; from Adana, as Hossein Ikbali, your dear and charming brother with his family—all these are daily flocking in and are being privileged to gaze at the Master's radiant face after this unprecedented period of separation.

News, refreshing and inspiring, is being daily received from all over the world, from the far west in the United States of America to the middle east in Persia and the far east, Japan and India, and still beyond from the Hawaiian Islands in the mid-Pacific ocean. From New Zealand even the glad tidings of the Kingdom are breaking upon us and indicate the brilliant future that is stored for the far-off continent of Australia.

In Persia and particularly in Teheran, the Cause is advancing by leaps and bounds, the number of the friends is prodigiously multiplying, their gatherings and assemblies are open to the public, an intense and widespread interest is being aroused, many an important, responsible position is taken up by wise and firm Bahais, Bahai literature is being printed, published and widely circulated, the seed of knowledge and of faith is being sown broadcast by intelligent and well-directed hands and the influence of the friends of God is being felt everywhere. Throughout this period of ceaseless activity of reconstruction and of service—at a time when the whole world was in confusion and commotion and when human blood was being so profusely spilt, the friends in Persia were wonderfully protected and saved. Civil war, pestilence and famine ravaged and devastated Persia and although the death rate on one day had reached the unprecedented number of 1172, the friends of God were miraculously preserved, not a single one fell victim of this great calamity.

From what was once an integral part of the vast Russian Empire, from the distracted region of Turkestan a letter has been received from a friend of God residing in the city of Ishkabad. Praise be to God, that dear spot which has the first Mashrekol-Azkar erected within its walls and which has of late been shrouded with a heavy mist is now again unveiling itself and appears in its full light and splendor.

What strikes us most vividly is the good news of the welfare and safety of the friends of God. All throughout the years of war, civil as well as national, of loot and of riot and rebellion and of bloodshed, the friends have been continuously engaged in service to the Cause of God. Their meetings have not been discontinued, their fervor has not decreased and their energy has not relaxed.

This news from such a part of the world, together with the letters that have been received from Alma Knobloch and Consul Schwarz, have opened up all the closed channels of correspondence which the war had sealed with the Holy Land. The Beloved is in perfect health, strong and vigorous, happy and joyous and often does he wake up at midnight in order to peruse the contents that are being received from the East as well as the West.

With best greetings to all the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, I am

Your brother in the Cause,

Shoghi Rabbani.

May I end this letter of mine with the translation of one of the most important Tablets that have been recently revealed to a well-known friend in Teheran?—

TABLET

O thou honorable martyr and the pioneer of the Cause of God!

The letter which you had written on the 19th of December 1918, arrived the 5th of February 1919. In spite of lack of time it was read with the utmost attention together with the enclosed letters. It gave us the glad tidings of the good health, safety, joy and fragrance of the friends of the Merciful. In this day one cannot conceive of greater news, for in these years of agitation hearts were in anxiety and affliction. This universal storm was so bewildering, so terrific, so frightful that reason could not conceive that this oppressed people would be protected and safe in all countries. This is only from the decisive and extraordinary power of His Highness the Desired One—May the spirit of existence be sacrificed to the feet of His friends!

Consider that in all countries these oppressed people were in the hands of tyrants; in the days of peace and concord, of general tranquillity and comfort they were without help and support, subject to every tyrant, and inflicted with every calamity. Now, thanks to the assistance and favor of the Eternal Beauty, such a great miracle has become manifest and clear. During the years when all the peoples of the world were in infinite trouble and torment, in the utmost distress, commanded, subjugated, deprived and devoid of reason, these oppressed ones, through the power of the divine teachings and of everlasting confirmation, were everywhere in the utmost tranquillity and composure.

What miracle greater than this? If any one stops to think one instant, he will not find a greater proof.

Although Abdul-Baha had striven to the utmost of his power in this praiseworthy Cause prior to the declaration of the war, and so much have we said and spoken in connection with the lines of conduct, but without the favor of God we are nothing, absolutely nothing. This brilliant victory and this remarkable protection are exclusively ascribed to the blessings of the Eternal Beauty—May my spirit be a sacrifice to His friends!—otherwise human power is absolutely impotent. The tastes and inclinations of the people of Persia have decidedly changed; religious habits have disappeared and eventually unworthy habits may prevail in Persia. But rest assured the power of the Cause of God shall conquer and waves from this infinite sea shall surge and shall roll away, casting out upon the shore these foams, and verily our legions shall have the victory.

This is what He says in explicit terms in the Ishrakat: “Religion is a brilliant light and a strong fortress for the protection and comfort of the people of the world. If the lamp of religion remains veiled, chaos will take place, the luminary of justice and of equity, and the sun of rest and security, will be deprived of light. Any one who knows will ever bear witness.”

Reflect what has been perpetrated by the miserable party in Russia! How they have destroyed this imposing empire and caused this mighty edifice to crumble into dust, and at present they are in a hopeless state. The state of affairs has become so acute that the pure and chaste women of Russia have brought their complaint before the great powers of the League of Nations, saying that this unprincipled party is forcing us to become public property. High and low, everyone has been villified. The veil of shame has been entirely rent asunder and the mass of the people have attained a stage of savagery.

Consider, that fifty years ago the Supreme Pen foretold these events: “Verily, our armies will have the victory.” Soon they will find themselves disappointed and at a loss and they will have to follow the commands.

In Persia we see now the beginning of heedlessness and the first manifestations of neglecting religion. If this state of things is not stopped by the power of the divine teachings, it will soon be chaos and distress, eternal vileness and shame. I take refuge in God in this impossible assumption.

The sacred Manifestations were not known in the first cycles and the fruit of their mission had not been discovered. But in this spiritual age, in this divine time the exaltation and the luminosity, the truth and the greatness of the Cause of God have become manifest and evident as the sun in all regions. All wise men witness that these divine teachings are the very spirit of this age, and the light of this cycle; humanity will never find peace and tranquillity without the spreading of these teachings, nor will it attain perfect civilization.

In all temples, gatherings, assemblies of the West Abdul-Baha has spread these teachings most forcibly. Not a single person could oppose him, nobody raised an objection. Everyone listened, and with great applause and in the utmost respect manifested their approval. No one was found who said: "This is only the legends of the past." Even in a meeting of atheists a detailed address was delivered. Everybody approved of it and it was published in the American papers. Likewise in Oxford (England) an address was given, and also at the University of California in San Francisco [Leland Stanford, Jr. University, Palo Alto] were explained a part of the divine teachings. Everywhere I met with approval, but the Persians are still asleep. So great a blessing has been manifested in Persia, such a bejeweled crown has been set on its head—but a thousand times alas! that the Persians do not appreciate it and are suffering from neglecting religion. May God end it well. Praise be to God! All future events were clearly, openly and explicitly revealed in previous Tablets, some fifty years ago, others thirty years ago. All have come to pass, and yet the Persians are negligent!

The Eternal Beauty—Glory be to His Greatest Name!—proclaimed this Supreme Cause under fetters, hoisted this remarkable standard in the midst of prison and has given rise to such commotion! Yet the Persians are slumbering! The people of the West consider the East as inhabited by wild tribes and refer to it as a vile race, low and unfavored; now the power of the Greatest Name has had this deep effect in the hearts of the people of the West and in all the countries of the world there are groups respecting Persia.

Notwithstanding the manifestations of this great power, the Persians are still unaware and are immersed in heedlessness. Be admonished, ye people of light! The one to whom God has refused the light, he is deprived thereof.

In brief, we hope that the friends of God will be confirmed in the path of guidance and will remain and abide at the threshold of the Eternal Beauty.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

“Every latest (new) order should be acted upon because the general conditions vary and change”

RECENT TABLETS TO DR. BAGDADI

To his honor Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago, Ill.—Upon him be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy numerous and successive letters have been perused in their meanings, and now we answer thee these general inquiries which thou hast asked. This is of my love for thee and tenderness toward thee. I ask God to confirm all in spirit and fragrance, to change every darkness into light that will illumine the universe; to make the hearts united and combined as the mixing of water and wine, so that all may arise for the elevation of the Word of God and the diffusion of the teachings of God; the abandonment of every mention that does not inherit a gift from God.

As to Dr. Barton-Peeke: I ask God to make her the sign of firmness in the horizons.

As to Mr. George Lesch: Verily, he has attained to the meeting of his Lord in the Kingdom of Abha, and he is saying, "I wish my people knew how my Lord has forgiven me, and made me the sign of mercy in the world of light.”

As to the turning of the colored race to the praise-worthy station: This is a matter that was promised in the Scriptures and the Tablets by the affectionate Lord. Therefore, we have rejoiced in the great glad tidings and we desire that the unity may be increased between the white and the black and the difficulties vanish, so that they may become intimates, strong in faithfulness, and as brothers reclining on the couches face to face, attracted to the manifest light.

As to your gentle daughter Parvene: We have given her the middle name of Habibeh. It is the name of her grandmother.

Concerning the book of his honor Mirza Mahmood Zargani: It is acceptable if you translate and distribute it, especially among the friends.

As to the Chinese, Japanese and Hindu students: It is acceptable to receive them into your gatherings.

Concerning the printing of the Tablets and the Epistles: It is conditioned and depends upon the opinion of the Executive Board of the Convention, so that it may not be the cause of disturbing the minds.

Every latest order (new) should be acted upon because the general conditions vary and change; therefore, a new order is issued to readjust the old order.

As to the STAR OF THE WEST: It is better if the English is mixed with the Persian. His honor Mirza Ahmad Sohrab has acquired skilfulness in the Persian in these later days.

As to all the epistles and the books pertaining to the Cause: They must be under the management of the Executive Board of the Convention. But have ye consideration for Miss Mary Lesch.

As to the souls whose consciences are clarified, whose secrets are sweetened, who have become assured in the mention of their Lord, who have sincerely turned their faces to God and who have traveled in the East of the earth and its West, its South and its North for the diffusion of the fragrances of God, unquestionably the merciful confirmations, the divine assistance shall reach them under all conditions and circumstances. Joy be unto the souls who help this illumined group and spiritual party.

As to the Epistles, The Mysterious Forces of Civilization and the Traveler's Narrative: Verily, they are the important epistles which vivify and civilize the souls and educate them with the best virtues and the best of politics. Therefore, attach ye to them great importance, and ye, O ye who are noble, do not waste your time in discussions that are useless and from which no benefit can be obtained; it is incumbent upon ye to elevate the Word of God and to spread the fragrances of God.

In these days a letter was received from his honor Ibn Asdak, saying that he had sent you articles in order that they be published in the STAR OF THE WEST; their distribution is acceptable.

•Convey my greetings and my longing to all the friends in that country of the vast regions.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(April 25th, 1919.)

As to thy inquiry about traveling to nearby towns out of Chicago for the promulgation of the divine teachings: It is acceptable if thou dost continue in this work.

As to the House of Spirituality: It is the name for the group, the committee, and it is the best of all the names.

Convey my greeting and praise to the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Grace Anderson, and say unto her: “Verily, I bury my face in the dust of supplication and invocation and I pray for thee to God to make thee free from every hindrance and attachment in the life of this world, so that thou mayest be clothed with the garment of holiness in the Kingdom of Abha, and become sanctified from the darkness of the world of nature and its limitations, enkindled with the fire of the love of God and attracted to the fragrances of God.

“The economic teachings shall, henceforth, be written in detail”

RECENT TABLET TO JULIET THOMPSON

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Juliet Thompson, New York City—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH EI-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Numerous letters have been received from you and their contents noted. At present the presentation of a letter to the Presidents is not advisable, for they are occupied.

Convey my respectful greeting to Mrs. Barbee of St. Louis and say: “I hope that in this nether world thou shalt attain unto a heavenly light, thou wilt free the souls from the gloom of nature, which is the animal world, and cause them to reach the lofty stations in the human world. Today all the people of the world, except a small number of souls, are immersed in the world of nature. That is why thou dost witness jealousy, greed, struggle for existence, deception, hypocrisy, tyranny, oppression, dispute, strife, bloodshed, loot and pillage, all of which emanate from the world of nature. But few are those who have been freed from this darkness, who have ascended from the world of nature to the world of man, who have followed the divine teachings, have served the world of humanity, who are resplendent, merciful, like unto a rose-garden and illumined. Strive as much as possible in order to become God-like, Lordly, illumined and merciful, that thou mayest be freed from every bond and become attached at heart to the Kingdom of the incomparable Lord. This is Bahai bounty and this is heavenly light.”

Convey to the maid-servant of God . . . greeting and kindness. On her behalf

I supplicate and entreat at the Kingdom of Abhá, in the utmost humility and lowliness, that she may be assisted to conduct herself in accordance with the divine teachings.

Convey my greeting and kindness to Mark Tobey, Howard Ives, Agnes Alexander and Frances Fales.

Convey my message to Mrs. Lehmann and say: “Service to the friends is service to the Kingdom of God, and the consideration shown to the poor is one of the greatest instructions of God.”

Convey on my behalf the utmost kindness to Mr. Comfort (Will Livingston Comfort) and say: “When in the midnight hour the eye is awakened, affectionate sentiments are felt.”

O thou Juliet! Endeavor in thy profession that thou mayest secure comfort for thy respected mother.

Convey to Marjory Morten my greeting and my message.

Say unto . . . and . . . “Strive as much as you can to turn wholly toward the Kingdom, that ye may acquire innate courage and an ideal power.”

Convey longing greeting to Chaplain Purser.

Convey on my behalf the utmost respect to Rev. Van Kirk and say: “Reflect upon the past events during the time of Christ; present events shall become clear and manifest.”

Convey my message to . . . and say: “I also pray that your dear friend may be illumined with the light of everlasting life.”

Convey my message to Frieda Bullinger and say: “If until eternity thou remainest grateful to Mrs. Grace, thou shalt not acquit thyself, for she has caused thee to harken to the divine call and to turn thy face to the divine Kingdom. I hope that thou shalt acquire health and prosperity."

The economic teachings shall, henceforth, be written in detail.

On behalf of thy aunt, forgiveness has been solicited from the Threshold of Oneness.

Convey my greeting to Dr. Guthrie and Mr. Ledoux. From the bounties of God I ask that these two souls may be the cause of the promulgation of divine teachings, may proclaim the oneness of the world of humanity, may spread the cause of universal peace, that ignorant, religious, racial, political and even patriotic prejudices may vanish and the earth may become one home and all peoples be unified; and the same with the other divine teachings which are recorded in the Tablets and Epistles.

Convey my greeting to Dr. Guthrie and Kalil Gibran and say: "In the future some Tablets will be sent that ye may translate them, and, having translated them, print them."

To Mr. Bouek White say: "If thou seekest real liberty, thou shalt find it in the Bahai Movement."

I hope thy respected mother will grow better in health and Mrs. Maxwell may attain unto perfect health.

A letter will be written to Mrs. Krug and Miss Boylan, and being enclosed, deliver it to them.

Convey to each and all the friends the most wonderful Abba greeting. . . .

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

"Undoubtedly, the Standard of Universal Peace shall be unfurled"

RECENT TABLET TO MRS. J. STANNARD

(Copy of Tablet revealed for Mrs. J. Stannard of London, Eng.)

O thou who art attracted to the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter dated December 26th was received. I praised the Lord for having protected the friends all throughout the war that has now subsided. All mankind was held in the grip of anguish, and calamities afflicted every soul, while the safety of the friends constituted one of the greatest gifts. For that we thank God and pray that He may confer upon every one that which will illumine the hearts, refresh the souls, bestow light to the eyes and brighten the visions; and that is the dawn of the Sun of Truth upon all regions, from the horizon of universal peace.

Praise be to God, whatever was recorded fifty years ago in the Tablets and Epistles, has in these days been fully realized. Undoubtedly the standard of universal peace shall be unfurled, its legions shall conquer, its call shall be raised, its rays shall beam forth upon all lands. At present it is only the dawn of its morn, for its sun shall shine in full splendor upon all regions. As to thee, rest thou assured in the bounty of thy Lord, and if possible travel thou to the Holy Land and thence to Egypt or Europe as thou choosest.

Convey greetings and praise to the friends and maid-servants of the Merciful. In the utmost humility and lowliness I entreat the powerful, and the Omnipotent God that He may confirm them with that which pleases Him; that He may draw the hearts together, cause displeasure to vanish in the twinkling of the eye, and that thou mayest be the cause of joy and fragrance among the servants of the Merciful.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Southern States

the wisdoms of this universal war is no other than the writing of these Epistles, so that the believers may realize that the Cause of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH must ultimately encircle the globe. Having thus clearly perceived their duty they will spare no effort to hasten its consummation.

“The prominent believers of the South, like Mr. Remy, Mr. Hannen, Mrs. Parsons, Mr. Gregory and others must come together, hold meetings of consultation and devise efficient ways and means for the teaching of the people of this great section and promote amongst the inhabitants the spirit of brotherhood, unity and the love of His Holiness Christ and BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Do thou present thyself in their meetings, and through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit make them realize and feel how this question of teaching is one of the utmost importance in the Cause. Tell them: ‘Do not let your thoughts and ideals be crystallized around particular matters. Close your eyes to outward differences and look upon each other with the eye of universal oneness. Like unto the cup-bearers of eternity turn ye round in the assemblages of mankind the overflowing goblets of guidance and intoxicate them with the wine of the love of God. Walk ye always in the pathway of lights and let the pillars of shining Bahai inspiration lead and direct you to your glorious destination. Let your thoughts be of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, your mention be of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, and fill all hearts with the truth of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Like unto the sanctified souls, associate ye with the people of the world and show ye that which ye have. Do ye not hide the precious jewels of the Kingdom under the earth. This day is the day of revelation! This Manifestation is the manifestation of knowledge and understanding’.”

The second talk was given one morning in February, 1918, while he was walking in his lovely garden. The names of the Southern States were brought to his attention, and his face was suddenly brightened with the light of inspiration. Then, as he continued his walk, he uttered the following poetic message, redolent with the fragrance of the garden of Abha:—

“Praise be to God, that the dark ages have passed away and the century of light has come. Praise be to God, that the traces of prejudices and superstitions are effaced, and the horizon of the minds and the hearts of humanity are broadened. Praise be to God, that the seas of the idle fancies of the religionists are calmed down and the oceans of the realities and significances of the Blessed Perfection are set in motion. Praise be to God, that the gloomy nights of ignorance have flitted away across the receding ages, and the bright dawn of intelligence and wisdom is becoming visible. Praise be to God, that the cold winter of fanaticism and bigotry, with its chilling hand and irrational heterodoxy has come to an end, and the soul-refreshing springtime of the imperishable flowers and hyacinths of universal love and toleration, has dawned, perfuming all the nostrils with the sweet odors of trust and confidence. Praise be to God, that the black clouds of human limitations and man-made restrictions are dispelled, and the world-enlightening Sun of the Kingdom hath dawned from the horizon of the hearts! Praise be to God that the chains of injustice and the fetters of the oppression of the Pharaohs of the earth and the despotic rulers of men have crumbled to dust, and the age of justice, equity, brotherhood and real democracy is inaugurated. Praise be to God that the crowns of the despots have fallen to the earth, and the thrones of the absolutists are shaken to the foundation. But the real diadems of glory and power and the royal seats of just governments and democratic institutions were raised high. Praise be to God, that the period of satanic suggestions hath come to a close, and the cycle of angelic ideals and seraphic thoughts hath opened before the eyes of men.

“The past age was an age of wondrous achievements. All the inventions were perfected, new discoveries created, new fields of human activities, new undertakings gave deeper significance to the law of co-operation; new arts helped to make life more beautiful and new international laws are now in the process of formation to bind all nations of the earth together. The international tribunal of justice will soon be organized in accordance with the principles of BAHÁ'U'LLÁH, and then all the differences will be adjusted before the members of that impartial tribunal.

“Therefore, as a result of these changes in the outward world, it has become part of the heavenly wisdom in the inner world to create a new spiritual plan for the propagation of the religion of God; thus the divine believers may obtain a new joy and a new happiness and display an extraordinary effort in the promotion of the reality of the religions of God; to deliver the nations from old, superannuated prejudices and diffuse the fragrances of the flowers of the primal truth; to unfurl the flag of the love, amity and the oneness of the world of humanity and remove the international misunderstandings from amongst the nations of the world. From their hearts and souls they must cry out: [Here followed the proclamation on page 98, beginning: “Glad Tidings! Glad Tidings! That the Sun of Reality hath shone forth!”]

“The lights of the oneness of the world of humanity are scintillating like unto precious jewels; scatter their rays to all parts! Upraise ye the banner of unity, fraternity, co-operation and reciprocity amongst all the people; so that there may not be left from prejudice aught save a name and from ignorance not even a shadow; the religion of God may pitch its tent over the East and the West, the light of the Kingdom may illumine all hearts, perfect agreement and association may be realized between races, religions and nationalities, and the world of creation may find composure and tranquillity.”

On another occasion, he said: “Give my greeting to the friends in Washington and say: ‘O ye believers of God! I am always thinking of the days that I associated with you. Never will I forget you and the spiritual meetings held in your city. I beg from the favors of the Blessed Perfection that ye may become assisted to promote the Cause of God and promulgate the Word of God in the Southern States, that just as Washington is the political center of the American Republic, she may become the dawning-place of merciful susceptibilities and celestial feelings. Arise ye without any fear in the promulgation of the religion of God! Become ye firmly rooted in this great aim, send ye teachers to all directions, and become ye not apprehensive that ye meet strong opposition. The contradiction of others is more conducive to the strength of the Cause of God. Ever do I beg for you divine confirmation. My spirit is with each one of you. Do ye not look upon your own capacities. Rest ye assured in the bounties of the Blessed Perfection. He shall change the drop into an ocean and the moth into an eagle. He changes the stone into the precious ruby and the scintilla into the world-illuminating sun. Open ye the eloquent tongues and day and night consult with each other regarding the promotion of the Cause of God, so that in the end you may crown your heads with this diadem and carrying in your hands the swords of light, ye may conquer the kingdoms of the hearts’.”

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The Heart

Lesson by MIRZA ABUL FAZL given to Mrs. Corinne True, summer of 1904.
Interpreted by M. Eshte'al-Ebn Kalanter. Read at the Second Bahai Teaching Convention of the Central States, May 23rd-25th, 1919.

THE likeness of the world is like the body of man; the likeness of God is like the spirit in the body. As the spirit pervades and controls the whole body, so likewise God pervades and controls the whole universe. As none of the limbs on the body of man are in communication with the spirit in the body of man and not one of the five senses can ever feel the spirit, therefore, God has created the heart in man to be the central ruler and has endowed it with two phases, spiritual and material. Through its spiritual phase the heart absorbs the commandments of the spirit, and then through its material phase it transmits them to all parts of the body through the agency of the organs, veins, arteries, muscles, etc.

Likewise all the different particles of the universe are beyond having any communication with God, but God, the Supreme Ruler, chooses one man from among the world and makes him to be the heart to the body of the universe and calls him the Word of God. This man or center is Moses, Jesus, BAHÁ'O'LLAH—according to the different cycles or ages—and is endowed with two phases, spiritual and material. Through his spiritual faculty he receives the teachings and bounties of the Almighty God and then imparts them to the world through material means in which he shares with other men. This Center is, ac-ording to the spirit, the recipient of the divine names and attributes, while in regard to his material side he is no other than a man and shares their material requirements such as eating, sleeping, etc., and it is for this reason that you Christians always testify to the fact that Jesus Christ was both a perfect God and a perfect man. Your testimony of Christ being a perfect God proves his being the manifestation of divine power, glory, grandeur and might, and your testimony to his being a perfect man proves that he should be perfectly endowed with material requirements such as eating, sleeping, etc., inasmuch as if any of such requirements are not perfect in him, it would be as a flaw in his perfection.

It is not possible for the body of man to be established without its being fortified by the heart, so likewise the body of the universe can never continue in a perfect establishment unless it is enlightened by the Word of God. The likeness of the Word of God in the body of the universe is like the heart in the body of man. Therefore this primal Word is always in the universe, but the difference is that sometimes it manifests itself to the people while at some other time it is concealed and people are veiled from its presence. For instance, Moses was the Word of God and in manifestation, and Joshua was also the Word in concealment. But had Joshua manifested himself in this name he would have to bring new laws and ordinances. All the Israelitish prophets have been the manifestation of the Word of God in concealment. Jeremiah 1:10: "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out and to pull down and to destroy and to throw down, to build and to plant," proves that these prophets were the Word. In that day God appointed Jeremiah to do those things and gave him the power, and those who denied Jeremiah denied God himself. The same was said to Peter, and had men denied Peter, they would in reality have denied Jesus.

Likewise BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH appointed Abdul-Baha to be the Center of his Covenant and endowed him with great power, and those who deny him in this day have denied God and His Cause.

In every age and dispensation the distinction between a believer and a denier would become manifest by his belief in or denying the appointed successor of the Word of God. For instance, if among the followers of Moses one denied David, Jeremiah, et. al., this would be a proof of his lack of faith in Moses.

As it is proved that not one part of the body can ever move unless the heart is cognizant thereof, so likewise no one of the people of the world can do anything anywhere unless the Manifestation of God, the Word, is cognizant of it.

The Mysterious Forces of Civilization

Address by ALBERT R. WINDUST, delivered at the Third Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Sunday evening, April 27th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

WHEN we look out upon this phenomenal existence of which we are a part, we find distinctive planes which the mind of man has classified and named: The mineral kingdom, the vegetable kingdom, the animal kingdom, the human kingdom.

If we investigate any one of these planes we find a great force or urge for unity dominating each group or species. For instance: In the mineral kingdom, the atoms of a lump of iron are held together by a force which unites them. In the vegetable kingdom the same force is manifest in the grouping of the various kinds of vegetation—the grasses assembling so thickly upon the meadow that it has the appearance of a carpet, and the trees of like kind making a grove or forest. In the animal kingdom it is the same—the flocks of birds and herds of cattle manifest this force or urge. So also on the human plane. Everywhere we behold this uniting force:

"Like seeks like and has affinity with its own kind."

On the human plane this force manifests in all degrees and we speak of some of them familiarly as: Fellowship, the family, the tribe, the city, the state, the nation, the empire—such as the Egyptian, the Assyrian, the Medo-Per-sian, the Grecian, the Roman.

This uniting force or urge is natural to all the kingdoms mentioned and the combinations produced by it on the human plane are, therefore, natural.

But this force is not the mysterious force of civilization referred to in the subject assigned to me this evening. Rather we are to consider a force above the natural. It is often termed mysterious because not generally recognized and understood.

In brief: Natural civilizations are racial, political, philosophical, commercial, etc.

Furthermore, when we examine carefully the individuals constituting a group or species in any of the kingdoms, we find no two alike. Among all the grains of sand no two alike, no two blades of grass alike, no two shrubs or trees alike, no two animals alike, no two human beings alike.

Observe also the varying degrees in addition to the diversity in every kingdom. In the mineral kingdom, from the dull grain of sand to the sparkling diamond; in the vegetable kingdom, from the lowly blade of grass to the tall cedar; in the animal kingdom, from the weakest creeping thing to the strong lion, and in the human kingdom we find all the degrees from the humble peasant to the powerful king, wise philosopher, or diplomatic statesman.

There is another plane, a higher kingdom, to which the Bahais direct particular attention. It is the *super-natural plane or divine Kingdom. This plane becomes manifest through a supernatural type of men who make known or reveal in their lives and words this higher Kingdom. History recognizes them as prophets. Manifestations of God, the Bahais term the highest of such men. Their force or power, they say, is of the Holy Spirit and they come to lead mankind from a material outlook upon life unto a spiritual outlook. They come as guides, as teachers to lift men up from the natural to the supernatural, from the human to the divine. Such men were Moses, Jesus Christ, Mohammed, BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH.

History shows that they manifested an attractive force a power which drew men and women to them while in the body and after leaving it, which was above racial, political, philosophical and commercial interests.

Consider: Moses, a humble man, meek, after years of exile in the wilderness of Canaan, returning to Egypt, Note—Abdul-Baha even terms the inventive faculty supernatural because inventions make it possible for men to overcome the natural.—Editors.

leading and teaching the slaves of the Egyptians in such a manner, with such force that within a few centuries they became the dominant spiritual civilization of the world and the philosophers of Greece and Rome went to sit at the feet of the Hebrew sages to learn from them.

Christ: His influence we are all familiar with. Consider how he changed civilization after his advent; for through his teachings he united Romans, Greeks, Chaldeans, Assyrians and finally Europeans and Americans, revealing more than any previous Manifestation the power of the Holy Spirit—the mysterious force of civilization.

Mohammed, six hundred years after Christ, astounded the world with this wondrous force. Consider a people who were surrounded by the civilizations of Egypt and Palestine, and near to Greece and Rome—wild tribes roving the plain of Arabia untouched by these civilizations—changed in a few hundred years to become the wonder of history; even the Christians of Europe sending their sons and daughters to Mohammedan universities in Spain to be educated by those who but a few generations before were the wild tribesmen of the desert!

This is indeed the mysterious force of civilization.

But even these supernatural or divine civilizations arose and fell as well as the natural or racial and political civilizations of old. The Jews fell away from the teachings of Moses into such a condition that at the time of the appearance of Christ they were ruled by Rome, and soon after were scattered over the world. Mohammedanism today has degenerated from what it was, and the Christian world is witnessing the fall of its civilization through the great war and the attending horrors in Europe.

Students of the sacred Books recognize that up to the time of the fall of Jerusalem it was the "Jewish age" and from the scattering of the Jews until recently, it was a period known as the "times of the Gentiles." And now the Gentile age has ended.

It would seem then that the civilizations founded by such great Manifestations on the supernatural or divine plane have birth and death. But they foresaw, as well as the prophets and disciples who carried on their teachings, that a time would come when the spiritual Kingdom they had helped to prepare mankind for would become manifest in its fullness. They foresaw a time when the spiritual Kingdom set up would not fall.

Isaiah gave word pictures of that promised age. Daniel said, "In the days of these kings, the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed," and "it would stand forever." Jesus holds forth this same promise in his teachings and in the Lord's prayer—wherein his disciples and followers pray for the coming of the Father and His Kingdom on earth, that the Father's will should be done on earth, and that His Kingdom should have the power and the glory forever.

In reality, the civilizations of Moses, Christ and Mohammed did not die, but were rather the different phases of preparation for the final accomplishment by "Him whose right it is," for these great Manifestations of the Will and Word of God in this phenomenal world, were bound together by a Covenant. Each spoke of the other. Moses spoke of Christ, not mentioning the name, but telling of his coming; Christ spoke of Mohammed, not mentioning the name, but telling of his coming. And all spoke of the coming of the Great One who should appear in the latter time, "King of Kings and Lord of Lords." This Covenant is the bond between this Great One and those who prepared the way for His coming. This is the mysterious force that binds the religionists of the former Manifestations to the Great Manifestation today, BAHĀ'O'LLĀH.

That Covenant has been fulfilled and its door of bounty opened to all on earth through the appearance of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, the Glory of God. As Isaiah said, "the Glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together"—that is, universally.

This is the Day of the Lord. This is the day when the Kingdom of heaven has been established on earth. Its power is here. Its mysterious force is creating a new civilization, a divine civilization that shall not be overthrown and it shall stand forever. That mysterious force has drawn us here from all parts of the continent to be present at this meeting, and that same force is uniting the hearts of men everywhere. This force is reconstructing civilization.

When Abdul-Baha, the son of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH, was in America in 1912, he saw the particular phases necessary for the spiritual reconstruction of this western world. Most of us are familiar with the principles he laid down, expounded, elaborated, made clear to the minds of the peoples of the West. Other speakers will undoubtedly elaborate them here in this Congress before it closes. I will just outline them:

BAHĀ'O'LLĀH taught the actual oneness of the religions of the world, the oneness of all humanity, the universal brotherhood of man, universal peace; the perfect harmony of religion and science. He enjoined men to search diligently for truth and to abolish all prejudices, religious, national, racial, social. He proclaimed the equality of the sexes, commanded equal educational advantages for both, besides vast equitable social readjustments, the equalization of the means of livelihood and the complete establishment of justice among men. He proclaimed the urgency of a universal language to bring men into closer fellowship and mutual understanding. He emphasized the incumbency of a Parliament of Man—a universal tribunal of justice or arbitration for the adjustment of international affairs. And, unequivocally, he taught the power of the Holy Spirit in the life of humanity.

In brief: The Holy Spirit revealed by the Manifestation of God, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, is the mysterious force of civilization in this new age.

Abdul-Baha has revealed a prayer vibrant with this force. I will read it:

"Bring them together again, O Lord, by the power of Thy Covenant and gather their dispersion by the might of Thy promise, and unite their hearts by the dominion of Thy love; and make them love each other so that they may sacrifice their spirits, expend their money, and sacrifice themselves for the love of one another. O Lord, cause to descend upon them quietness and tranquillity. Shower upon them the clouds of Thy mercy in great abundance and make them to characterize themselves with the characteristics of the spiritual. O Lord, make us firm in Thy noble command and bestow upon us Thy gifts through Thy bounty, grace and munificence. Verily, Thou art the Generous, the Merciful and the Benevolent!"

Today, on earth—according to the Will of BAHÁ'O'LLAH—Abdul-Baha is establishing the new civilization through this mysterious force.

Allah'o'Abha!

The Universal House of Worship

Address by MRS. CORINNE TRUE of Chicago, at the Third Session of the Bahai Congress, held at New York City, Sunday evening, April 27th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

MR. Windust has so beautifully led up to the present subject of the Mashrekol-Azkar; and the Mashrekol-Azkar is one of the greatest proofs of the working of this mysterious force of civilization. It is the first outward symbol, the first divine institution, under the teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, to be erected in the West. I will read you BAHÁ'O'LLAH'S own Words about the construction of this house of worship. In the Book, Kitab-cl-Akdas, BAHÁ'O'LLAH says:

"O concourse of creation! O people, construct homes or houses, in the most beautiful fashion possible, in every city and every land. In the Name of the Lord of religion, adorn them with that which beseemeth them, not with pictures or paintings. Then commemorate the Lord, the Merciful, the Clement, in spirit and fragrance. Verily, by His mention, by this commemoration, the breasts shall be dilated, the eyes illumined, and hearts gladdened, and thus shall you pray the Orient of Praises in the Mashrekol-Azkar."

When the Executive Board or Committee on Program asked me what I would speak upon, they suggested the Mashrekol-Azkar, or any subject I wished. I telegraphed them this subject, "The Universal House of Worship for the New Age".

In Chicago we had a peace meeting not a great while ago. Mr. Taft came and held a conference regarding the League of Nations; the different religious denominations met and worked together as hard as they could, and on the last afternoon of that conference, someone arose and suggested that the League of Nations was a Christian institution. A Jewish rabbi, who had worked equally as hard as the Christian, insisted that it could not be limited to a Christian institution.

And so today in all walks you will find the same thing, because we are in a new day. You cannot put wine into old bottles when it is new wine. It will ferment. It will burst your old bottles. You must put your new wine into new bottles. Abdul-Baha says "The gift of God to this enlightened age is knowledge of the oneness of the world of humanity" and the Mashrekol-Azkar is the great outward symbol to humanity of this oneness of the world of humanity. Abdul-Baha sent us word and he has written in his own handwriting that in Ishkabad, the believers of God made the erection of the temple conducive to affinity and unity, so that it really became the cause of the oneness of the world. He also makes the erection of the temple in America conducive to the unity and oneness of the believers, of the maid-servants and servants of the Merciful, so that in one thought, one aim, they engage themselves in the building of the temple.

The work of this mysterious force of civilization brought to us by the Manifestation of this age, is to establish upon the earth a divine civilization. We have been living under the material civilization, but the day has come when the divine civilization must be established—the spiritual brotherhood of man. The reason we have wars and strife is because the people are not serving one aim, one purpose. Each one has his own thought, his own self-interest—each person, each nation—and this leads to separation and division. We will always have wars until some great power comes into the world and inspires and fills us with one great aim and one great purpose and we sacrifice our lesser aims to this great, this enormous aim; so that we forget our individual interests and the interest of all becomes our interest.

The great Mashrekol-Azkar stands for that sacrifice of self, that sacrifice of the personal, so that we may come into this knowledge of the oneness of humanity. We must find out that we are a part of this one great body of humanity and the working for the Mashrekol-Azkar will bring humanity into this knowledge. Abdul-Baha sent Tablets to the orient as well as to the occident, and encouraged the believers all over the world to arise and take part in the contributions for this tremendous work. He said that every soul in the orient, whether he was rich or poor, should give something. We received letters telling how they would go out and sell a little article of clothing, perhaps a tin pan from the kitchen, because they had not the ready money to send us. One of the most touching contributions we have had for the Mashrekol-Azkar came during this last year from India. The different assemblies of India collected a contribution for the Mashrekol-Azkar and sent it in a lump sum in September and a letter from one of the prominent believers in India itemizes what each assembly had sent. In 1910, when Mr. Remey and Mr. Howard Struven made their wonderful trip around the world and visited India, we had a most interesting letter published about the junglemen of India, how perfectly wonderful was their hospitality. That letter was printed in the little Bahai News, the beginning of the STAR OF THE WEST. It would really do you good to read that letter and see the fire and spirit that was among those junglemen when they received Mr. Remey and Mr. Struven. When Miss Martha Root was in India, she was to have visited that assembly but could not do it, and one of the believers, I think, made three hundred buttons with the face of Miss Root on it, and sent them up to the junglemen in order that they might all have a visit from Miss Root. Well, those junglemen have sent a contribution to the Mashrekol-Azkar, and the same spirit came with that contribution of the junglemen that comes from the men and women from the centers of civilization and cultivation, from Paris, or London or New York, or any other part of the world; the one spirit, the one fire, of the love of God, emanates from the letters which bring these contributions to the Mashrekol-Azkar.

When such a dynamic force as that is working in the world, surely great changes are imminent. It cannot help but make great changes. From all the various religions of the world these contributions come. From all the various continents. One year I was very much embarrassed because in giving my report I had to say that all of the continents had contributed to the Mashrekol-Azkar except South America, and just before I left for San Francisco that year, South America arose with a contribution, the wife of the owner of a large coffee plantation in Brazil, sending a contribution to the Mashrekol-Azkar, so that with the greatest joy I could say at that convention that all of the continents had contributed to the Mashrekol-Azkar.

I want to give you the Bahai definition of the house of worship or church; so that you may see why we call this the Universal House of Worship. Abdul-Baha has so beautifully defined these things. There was a believer who wrote to Abdul-Baha, because she was a member of the church, and this is what Abdul-Baha wrote to her:

“O maid-servant of God, what thou hast written has been perused and its contents became manifest. Thou hast questioned, how thou canst accept this divine Cause. Thou art a member of the church. Know thou that in the day of the manifestation of Christ many souls became portionless or deprived from the favor of God because they were the members of the holy of holies in Jerusalem. According to that membership they became veiled from that brilliant Beauty. Therefore, turn thy face to the Church of God which consists of divine instructions and merciful exhortations, for what similitude is there between the church of stone and cement and the celestial Holy of Holies? Endeavor that thou mayest enter in this Church of God.”

Abdul-Baha gave a marvelous talk in the Church of the Ascension here in New York, giving definition of the church, of what the Bahais mean by the church. He says the church is a place where people of differing sorts and divergent tendencies, where all races and nations, may come together in a covenant of permanent fellowship. In a temple of the Lord, in the house of God, man must be submissive to God. He must enter into a covenant with his Lord in order that he shall obey his commands and become unified with his fellow man. He must not consider divergence of races nor differences of nationalities. He must not view variation in denomination and creed. He should look upon all mankind and realize that all must become united and agreed; he must recognize all as one family, one race, one nativity, all the servants of one God, dwelling beneath the shelter of the mercy of one God.

When we really and truly arise and fulfill the building of such a church as that we will not relegate certain nationalities to the Chinese section, other nationalities to the Ghetto section; we will not separate our brothers and sisters into these divisions; we will recognize the oneness of all humanity. And so this Mashrekol-Azkar is the universal house of worship because it is the only house of worship in the world except the one at Ishkabad, Russia, that does really carry out these teachings.

Regarding the Mashrekol-Azkar and its accessories, Abdul-Baha said to Mr. and Mrs. Holbach, of London, England: “When these institutions, college, hospital, hospice, and establishments for the incurables, the university for the study of the higher sciences and giving post-graduate courses, and other philanthropic buildings, are built, its doors will be open to all the nations and to all religions. There will be drawn absolutely no line of demarcation. Its charities will be dispensed irrespective of color and race. Its gates will be flung to mankind, prejudice toward none, love for all; the central building will be devoted to the purpose of prayer and worship. Thus for the first time religion will become harmonized with science and science will be the hand-maid of religion, both showering their material and spiritual gifts on all humanity. In this way the people will be lifted out of the quagmires of slothfulness and bigotries."

I must tell you of one of the last contributions which we have had. We owe everything to Persia. It is the birthplace of the Bab. It is the birthplace of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. It is the birthplace of Abdul-Baha, and there is an emanation from Persia that you do not get from any other place. A traveler came through Chicago the other day bringing a contribution from the believers in Teheran, Persia, to me, and he told his sister of the dreadful conditions that they had been suffering under in Persia. He said he had paid $400 for a small sack of sugar. In certain parts the people were becoming cannibals, they were so hungry—it was reducing them to that—and yet, with all the suffering and denial, those friends sent a good contribution for the Mashrekol-Azkar. There was pure, unadulterated sacrifice.

When we can follow the example of Persia, it will not take us very long to build the Mashrekol-Azkar; because America is not suffering from the same things that Persia is. May this great example from Persia inspire our hearts so that very quickly—to make the heart of Abdul-Baha happy—we may complete the sum he has requested us to raise in order that we may actually start the building of this Universal House of Worship, the Mashrekol-Azkar.

Allah'o'Abha!

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Central States

Third talk by MIRZA AHMAD SOHRAB delivered at the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress, held in McAlpin Hotel, New York City, Sunday evening, April 27th, 1919.

"I S THIS day the day of rest? No, by the Lord of the worlds. Is this day the day of silence? No, by Myself, the True One, were ye of those who know. Verily, all things are stirred with the fragrance of revelation. Are ye resting on your seats and ye call yourselves the sincere ones?"—BAHÁ'O'LLAH, from Appendix to Surat El-Hykl.

In the above stirring appeal BAHÁ'O'LLAH calls his followers to a high station of service and action. From it we gather the idea that those who call themselves Bahais must not sit idle, nor must they remain silent. Through their words and deeds they must show their love for all humanity and from their faces there must appear the joy of heaven. In their minds must center the loftiest ideals of this age, and in their hearts must dwell the sweetest sentiments of sympathy and kindness towards all creatures. In their search for truth they must be impartial, and in their march along the path of right they must show fearlessness and courage. Enthusiasm must be their watchword and broad-mindedness their ultimate aim. Perseverance in the investigation of reality must be their guide, and conviction of the final victory of the cause of brotherhood their inspiration. They must work day and night, so that the satanic world may become angelic, the darkened hearts may be illumined, confidence may replace distrust and the sweetness of love may remove the bitterness of hate.

It is a well known fact that the power of love leads men to work together and co-operate with each other in all the undertakings of modern civilization. In all the transactions of human society, in the harmonious adjustment of the relation of capital and labor, in the balancing of the law of supply and demand, in the working out of the principle of production and consumption, and in the practice of the theories of exchange and distribution, we must invariably use the universal solvent of the love of God and the love of man, if we are desirous of avoiding any future social disorganization. The law of love opens on all sides the innumerable avenues of human and divine progress. For example, let us consider the history of the twelve Central States, how over a century ago, there were scarcely any souls living there excepting Indians and a few scattered trappers. Now there are about twenty-seven millions living peacefully in those States; large cities are built, giant factories founded, thousands of schools established, agriculture and industries advancing by leaps and bounds. For example, the site of Chicago, which today is the second city in size in the New World, in 1804 was nothing but a great bog, and probably at that time no one would have dreamed that a century later such a magnificent city would rise over that piece of marshy ground. In 1830 it boasted of only twelve families of poor people; in 1840 it had about 4470 inhabitants, but now it has the huge population of more than two million and a half! This single example shows us in a concrete and clear manner how the power of love and co-operation changed the desert and wilderness of these States into blooming gardens and prosperous communities. Now if the sphere of this human love be widened, so as to include the various aspects of the divine love; if the people would realize that the security and permanence of the national progress is dependent upon international progress—then we could feel sure that our advancement would not be hindered by racial or religious fanaticism which surges now and then from the unknown depths of the animal man.

The pioneer discoverers of the Central West have demonstrated to us, through their lives and actions, that if we are zealous in the promotion of the divine principles, and do not turn back when confronted with opposition, we shall at last gather many harvests. Consider the lives of Joliet and Father Marquette, who in 1673 braved all dangers, set out from Mackinaw to find the source of the Mississippi River. Day after day they kept on their silent journey on the bosom of the Mississippi, now gliding by castle-shaped cliffs, now coming into the sunlight of open prairies, now entering the long shadows cast by miles of unbroken forests, past the muddy torrent of the Missouri, past the lovely mouth of the Ohio, and finally reached the mouth of the Arkansas. From there they returned, patiently paddling their way back. It was indeed a tremendous piece of uphill work, battling for more than a thousand miles against powerful currents. . . .

These examples go far to show us that if there were men in the past—and there are men and women in our days—who were and are ready to give up even life for material reward or fame, how much more we who call ourselves Bahais must be prepared to sacrifice everything, to undergo every danger, so that the knowledge of God may increase, the brotherhood of man may be proclaimed, and the noble ideals of life be shared by all men, irrespective of race and color.

Having now proven that nothing must daunt us when the line of our duty is quite plain, I take pleasure in reading to you the translation of the first Tablet revealed to the friends in the Central States, on Wednesday morning, March 29, 1916. Picture in your mind the patriarchal presence of Abdul-Baha, with his long, flowing robe, walking in the beautiful Garden of Bahjee, and dictating these words of wisdom to his followers across oceans and continents, directing them to arise with all their hearts and souls in the promulgation of the Word of God and the proclamation of the Manifestation of God.

[Here followed the reading of the Tablet received in America before the doors of communication closed. It was published in the STAR OF THE WEST Vol. 7 No. 10 and Vol. 9 No. 14.]

This first general order for the mobilization of the forces of the Kingdom was mailed in April of the same year. I have understood since my arrival in this country that a good deal of pioneer work of teaching has been done in these States, and that many souls have gone forth into new fields, so that they might sow the seeds of the new divine knowledge. I am sure that Abdul-Baha will be most pleased to hear that the friends are at least trying to carry out his behest.

And now I would like to read to you for the first time the translation of the Second Tablet revealed to the friends of the Central States on Thursday morning, February 8th, 1917, when he was staying in Acca. He was then living in the very room where BAHÁ'O'LLÁH passed his last years in the prison city, and so the atmosphere of the place brought to one's mind sweet memories of other spiritual and significant events transpiring in the same spot:

TABLET

To the believers and the maid-servants of God in the Central States—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abha!

He is God!

God says in the great Koran:—"He specializes for His Mercy whomsoever He willeth."

O ye old believers and intimate friends!

These twelve Central States of the United States are like unto the heart of America, and the heart is connected with all the organs and parts of man. If the heart is strengthened, all the organs of the body are reinforced, and if the heart is weak all the physical structures are subjected to feebleness.

Now, praise be to God, that Chicago and its environs from the beginning of the diffusion of the fragrances of God have been a strong heart. Therefore, through divine bounty and providence it has become confirmed in certain great matters.

First: The Call of the Kingdom was in the very beginning raised from Chicago. This is indeed a great privilege, for in future centuries and cycles, it will be as an axis around which the honor of Chicago will revolve.

Second: A number of souls with the utmost firmness and steadfastness arose in that blessed spot in the promotion of the Word of God and even to the present moment, having purified and sanctified the heart from every thought, they are occupied with the promulgation of the teachings of God. Hence the call of praise is raised uninterruptedly from the Supreme Concourse.

Third: During the American journey Abdul-Baha several times passed through Chicago and associated with the friends of God. For some time he sojourned in that city. Day and night he was occupied with the mention of the True One and summoned the people to the Kingdom of God.

Fourth: Up to the present time, every movement initiated in Chicago, its effect was spread to all parts and to all directions; just as everything that appears in and manifests from the heart influences all the organs and structures of the body.

Fifth: The first Mashrekol-Azkar in America was instituted in Chicago, and this honor and distinction is infinite in value. Undoubtedly out of this Mashrekol-Azkar thousands of other Mashrekol-Azkars will be born.

Likewise the General Annual Conventions; the foundation of the STAR OF THE WEST; the Publishing Society, for the publication of books and Tablets and their circulation in all parts of America, and the preparations now under way for the celebration of the Golden Centenary Anniversary of the Kingdom of God. I hope that this jubilee and this exhibition may be celebrated in the utmost perfection; so that the call to the Word of Unity: "There is no God but One God, and all the Messengers, from the beginning to the Seal of the Prophets (Mohammed), were sent on the part of the True one!" may be raised; the flag of the oneness of the world of humanity be unfurled, the melody of universal peace may reach the ears of the East and the West; all the paths may be cleared and straightened, all the hearts may be attracted to the Kingdom of God, the tabernacle of unity be pitched on the apex of America, the song of the love of God may exhilarate and rejoice all the nations and peoples, the surface of the earth may become the eternal paradise, the dark clouds may be dispelled and the Sun of Truth may shine forth with the utmost intensity.

O ye friends of God! Exert ye with heart and soul, so that association, love, unity and agreement be obtained between the hearts, all the aims may be merged into one aim, all the songs become one song and the power of the Holy Spirit may become so overwhelmingly victorious as to overcome all the forces of the world of nature. Work! This is the great work, should ye become assisted therein. Thus America may become the fulcrum of merciful susceptibilities, and the throne of the Kingdom of God be established upon earth with the greatest joy and majesty.

This phenomenal world will not remain in an unchanging condition even for a short while. Second after second it undergoes change and transformation. Every foundation will finally become collapsed; every glory and splendor will at last vanish and disappear; but the Kingdom of God is eternal and the heavenly Sovereignty and Majesty will stand firm everlastingly. Hence in the estimation of a wise man the mat in the Kingdom of God is preferable to the throne of the government of the world.

Continually my ear and eye are turned toward the Central States; perchance a melody from some blessed souls may reach my ears, souls who are the dawning-places of the love of God, the stars of the horizon of sanctification and holiness—souls who will illumine this dark universe and quicken to life this dead world. The joy of Abdul-Baha depends upon this! I hope that you may become confirmed therein.

Consequently, those souls who are in a condition of the utmost severance, purified from the defects of the world of nature, sanctified from attachment to this earth, vivified with the breaths of Eternal Life—with luminous hearts, with heavenly spirit, with attraction of consciousness, with celestial magnanimity, with eloquent tongues and with clear explanations—such souls must hasten and travel through all parts of the Central States. In every city and village they must occupy themselves with the diffusion of the divine exhortations and advices, guide the souls and promote the oneness of the world of humanity. They must play the melody of international conciliation with such power that every deaf one may become hearing, every extinct person may be set aglow, every dead one may obtain new life and every indifferent soul may find ecstasy. It is certain that such will be the consummation.

The spreaders of the fragrances of God may peruse this Commune every morning:

COMMUNE

O Lord! O Lord! Praise and thanksgiving be unto Thee for Thou hast guided me to the highway of the Kingdom, suffered me to walk in this straight and far-reaching path, illumined my eye by beholding the lights, made me listen to the melodies of the birds of holiness from the Kingdom of Mysteries and attracted my heart with Thy love among the righteous ones.

O Lord! Confirm me with the Holy Spirit, so that I may call in Thy Name among the nations and give back the glad-tidings to the manifestation of Thy Kingdom amongst mankind.

O Lord! I am weak, strengthen me with Thy power and potency. My tongue falters, suffer me to utter Thy commemoration and praise. I am lonely, endear me through my entrance in Thy Kingdom. I am remote, cause me to approach to the threshold of Thy mercifulness.

O Lord! Make me a brilliant lamp, a shining star and a blessed tree, adorned with fruits, its branches overshadowing all these regions! Verily, Thou art the Mighty, the Powerful and Unconstrained!

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, March 30, 1919, Washington, D. C.)

Having revealed the above wonderful Tablet for the Central States, the Center of the Covenant spoke often about the future work of the friends of God, and I have gathered his scattered words into one heavenly rosary.

He said: "In reality the geographical position of the Central States has great importance, for just as I dictated to you now, it is like the heart of America. Passengers going east or west, north or south pass through that section. Similarly, it is a point of connection for the friends of God. The believers in Chicago must be so enkindled with the fire of the love of God and must be so characterized with the characteristics of unity and agreement, that other states may learn from them this all-important lesson; that their pure lives and holy words, their selfless services and deeds may affect the hearts of all the outsiders.

"Just as the earth attracts everything to the center of gravity and every object thrown upward into space will come down; so also material ideas and wordly thoughts attract man to the center of self. Anger, passion, ignorance, prejudice, greed, envy, covetousness, jealousy and suspicion prevent man from ascending to the Realms of Holiness, imprisoning him in the claws of self and the jail of egotism. The physical man, unassisted by divine power, trying to escape from one of these invisible enemies, will fall unconsciously into the hands of another. No sooner does he attempt to soar upward than the density of the love of self, like the power of gravity, draws him to the earth. But the only power that is capable of delivering man from this captivity, is the power of the breaths of the Holy Spirit.

“The believers in the Central States must, through this all-conquering power, free the inhabitants from the claws of self, negligence, lust and imagination. The attraction of the power of the Holy Spirit is so effective that it keeps men ever on the path of upward ascension. The malevolent forces of no enemy will touch those sanctified souls who have made this universal power their guide. With tranquil heart and assured spirit they are flying upward day and night and are journeying through the illimitable space of the teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.

“The believers in America must be like lighthouses, lightships and searchlights, so that in the tempestuous sea of the world the arks of lives may reach the haven of security. Each individual Bahai must be a life-saver who, facing the rough waves of the sea, may plunge into the whirlpool and save the souls from drowning. To sit, to talk, to listen—there is no virtue in that. To rise, to act, to help—that is a Bahai life.

“The sincerity and earnestness of the friends in the Central States must appear through deeds. Deeds are the standards! I have done all that is necessary. I have drawn for them the Plan of God which must guide them through all the coming years. I have explained to them the principles of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Now the promotion of those principles depends upon their co-operation with each other and their turning their faces to the Kingdom of Abha. Without walking, a traveler will not reach his destination. Without working, a poor man will not obtain wealth. Without diving to the bottom of the sea, a diver will not gather pearls and corals, and without going through the lower classes, a student will not be able to take up the higher courses in sciences and literature.

“The believers of God, in reality, display much effort; but this effort must be expended in the right direction. A sagacious thinker will always perceive the end before he takes up a certain kind of work. A youth desiring to prepare himself for a medical career must study those courses which are directly or indirectly connected with his profession, so that he may become efficient and skillful. Consequently, the friends of God must themselves become the fountain heads of divine characteristics and attributes, and then call others to this exalted station. They must first be attracted and enkindled, then try to attract and enkindle others. Let them cleanse their own hearts like unto clear mirrors, then strive in the purification of the hearts of mankind.

“In brief, I hope that the friends in the Central States may become assisted in rendering these great services. May they become centers of merciful susceptibilities and spiritual guides to the Kingdom of Abha! From every standpoint, ways and means for the teaching of the Cause of God must be prepared. The question of teaching, like any other question, is evolutionary and not revolutionary. This matter must become very plain to everyone, so that all the friends, like so many spirits in one temple, may arise in the accomplishment of this great service.

“When the foundation of the Mashrekol-Azkar is laid in America, and that divine edifice is completed, a most wonderful and thrilling motion will appear in the world of existence. The Mashrekol-Azkar will become the center around which all these universal Bahai activities will be clustered. From that point of light, the spirit of teaching, spreading the Cause of God and promoting the teachings of God will permeate to all parts of the world. I hope that ere long the foundation of this celestial temple will be laid—thus it may become conducive to the happiness of the heart of Abdul-Baha. All the inhabitants of the world are in these days engaged in warfare and strife, but the friends of God are striving with heart and soul to lay the basis of this palace of the Kingdom;

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

Allah'o'Abha!

The STAR OF THE WEST has “a place in the Sun” amid the galaxy of Bahai institutions founded in the center of America.

The cry of “Ya-Baha-el-Abha!” arises from the hearts of those who were instrumental in founding it.

For nine years, it has been like a small tree in the garden of the Cause, more or less overshadowed by other important institutions. But today—through the sustaining power of God and the bounty of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH descending in the Tablets and Words of Abdul-Baha unveiled at the recent Convention and Congress—it is illumined by the Orb of the Covenant.

Stunned by this sudden blaze of light, we are slowly responding to its radiance.

It will be noted that the first expression of development is found in the endeavor to arrange the cover and first part of the issue to interest strangers, the middle to interest teachers and friends, and the latter part to be for the Persian section as formerly.

At the Second Bahai Teaching Convention of the Central States, held at Chicago, May 23rd-25th, 1919, the STAR OF THE WEST offered certain suggestions regarding its development. Among them was, that a representative from every section of the American continent be invited to become a member of its foundation for enlargement. It was deemed advisable by the editors and publishers that nine Bahais constitute this foundation: Five to be in the Central States at Chicago, because published there—the three constituting the present staff to be augmented by two more—and four to represent the other sections. The following friends were invited by word and telegram to become members of this foundation—subject, of course, to the approval of Abdul-Baha and the ratification of their respective sections: Northeastern States, Hooper Harris; Southern States, Joseph H. Hannen; Central States, Albert Vail, Carl Scheffler; Western States, Helen S. Goodall; Dominion of Canada, May Maxwell; Editorial Staff, Albert R. Windust, Gertrude Buikema, Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi; Honorary Member, Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. A stirring appeal from “Mother” Beecher (see following editorial) was read. The delegates from Michigan were the first to respond. The Convention endorsed the suggestions.

The Words of Abdul-Baha quoted from Unveiling of the Divine Plan, published on the first page of this issue, is an invitation to all to prepare such articles as Abdul-Baha desires. Those who have photographs of interest, data of value, historical facts, etc., are invited to send them in. Limitations of space may withhold their publication for a time.

One word more: In addition to the bounty revealed for the STAR OF THE WEST in the General Tablets, Abdul-Baha has caused the treasury of the Kingdom to descend through an appeal to all the Bahais of Persia (see page 131) to subscribe for “this growing magazine only for service to the Cause of God.”

Many emotions sweep over us as we read it. It would seem that the first phase of its development has been completed, namely, “although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable” (see Tablet in editorial heading); that we have entered upon the next phase, namely, “become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant”—and that, in due time, the remaining promise will become manifest.

—The Editors.

Editorial—An Edict from Abdul-Baha

BY (“MOTHER”) E. V. BEECHER.

Many times the STAR OF THE WEST has been pronounced the official organ of the Bahai Cause by Abdul-Baha, and each decree comes with added force and authority as one of the ordinances of the latter day dispensation.

If a decree should be sent forth by an earthly potentate it must be enforced at any cost. Such an appointment would be respected by all of his subjects and every effort put forth to honor his royalty by perfect obedience and acquiescence with the command.

Have we, as the followers of Abdul-Baha, fully realized the fact that he is the Center on the earth today to which we are expected to turn for light and guidance?

Again, have we considered the import of that wonderful paragraph at the top of the editorial page of our little magazine which stands there as an ensign, year after year lest we forget its importance and neglect our responsibility in relation to it? Were those wonderful words of assurance and promise intended only for the Editors? Can those faithful and well-tried workers continue to stand unaided in a large degree and still be expected to bring the above words to pass? Shall they continue to be asked to make bricks with straw? Can the STAR OF THE WEST become "the first paper of the world of humanity" without a hearty co-operation of all believers of this Faith? Can it live and grow and become a power in the world without sacrifice on the part of us all?

Other magazines may come into existence which are really worth while, but that does not constitute them official organs of this Cause.

Our little nineteen-day messenger is far too limited in space. Each issue should be rich in the inspirational utterances of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and Abdul-Baha with plenty of space allowed for the glad news coming from all parts of the world and the various Bahai assemblies. The teachers going abroad to sow the seeds of truth should send in their live reports knowing that there will be room for them in the very next number.

Every now and then we hear such expressions from those who are real seekers for Truth, as the following: "What mines of wealth one finds in looking over the back numbers of the STAR OF THE WEST;" or, "I came across such a wonderful compilation of the words of Abdul-Baha on a certain subject which I had read long ago but did not grasp its meaning or make it mine before;" again, "a wonderful confirmation has come to me by the reading of such and such an article in the STAR OF THE WEST."

Yes, this little publication has become an archive of many hidden jewels which may be discovered by all who search for them.

When we look over the news-stands of today found on every hand we are amazed to see the immense sales going on every day in the year. And what are the contents of the larger part of these periodicals? Only fictitious stories written to feed the sense life and cater to morbid imaginations. We have become a nation of novel readers until the sciences and realities of life are largely lost sight of and the minds of the people have become too blunted by this overdose of fiction to relish the real drama of life about us.

When shall we awake from our lethargy? When shall we determine to make our official organ a living power in the East and the West and so cause it to become a phenomenal success?

Beloved readers, let us hasten to honor the official organ of our great Leader and Teacher before, perchance, its sun shall set behind the clouds of negligence and lack of faith.

Let us arise without delay and surprise the world by our breadth and bigness of vision and be able to place our magazine on the news-stands of America to be sold to the busy passerby who may never catch the rays of the rising sun of this great day of God from any other source.

May God speed the efforts to radiate this light while the opportunity is at hand.

“Strive ye in the promulgation of this growing magazine only for service to the Cause of God.”

RECENT TABLET TO THE BAHAIS OF PERSIA

To the members of the Spiritual Committee, Teheran—Upon them be BAHÁ'U'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O friends of God!

The magazine of the STAR OF THE WEST, notwithstanding great difficulties during the days of the war, has continued until these days of quietness and tranquillity which have come. Although it had been cut off entirely from Persia, yet it managed to exist itself. Therefore financial hardships obtained.

But now that war has ended in peace, there must be given regularity to the STAR OF THE WEST, so that it may circulate throughout the East and the West. And this is conditioned upon the increase in number of the subscribers. Therefore, the friends in all the provinces of Persia must subscribe to this blessed matter. Strive ye in the promulgation of this growing magazine only for service to the Cause of God, in order that it may become the means of the stimulation of its editors and for the best regularity of the institution.

Likewise, if possible, some of the friends may subscribe to the newspaper Chehreh Nema in Egypt and pay the subscriptions in advance.

Upon ye be El-Baha-el-Abha!

The Central States Second Bahai Teaching Convention

Chicago, May 23rd to 25th, 1919.

BY ALBERT VAIL.

ON May twenty-third, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Bab, that glorious gateway to the Kingdom of God, the friends of the Central States gathered in Chicago to make plans for the proclamation of the glad tidings of this new day. The fourteen great teaching Tablets have brought to the beloved in America a call clear as the bell of the voice of God. The friends of the Central States felt that they must not delay a moment but must rise for "instant, exact and complete obedience."

Friday morning, May 23rd, the friends met at the home of Mrs. True and ratified the business of the sublime New York Convention. In the afternoon they assembled on the temple grounds in Wilmette and later gathered for a heavenly feast in a nearby room overlooking the shining lake. Dr. Bagdadi, Mirza Ahmad and many others spoke of the new era now dawning on earth. Mr. Harlan Ober presided. Love and joy shone like beams of light from the faces. Mrs. Marie Hopper told of the spiritual experience of her husband when he first met Abdul-Baha—a story which kindled all the hearts with joy and wonder. Mr. Hopper went to Acca in the days when the Master was closely confined in the prison city. He came a critical, skeptical man who was proud never to be swept by an emotional experience. He was suddenly ushered into Abdul-Baha's prison room. Before he knew what had happened he saw a blaze of white light and like Paul on the road to Damascus, fell down in wonder, overwhelmed by the spiritual glory which shone through and around his Beloved. The next moment Abdul-Baha, with infinitely tender love was lifting him to his arms. The Master had opened to him the doors of the unseen kingdom of Glory; then gently he closed them again.

On Saturday friends from practically all the assemblies in the Central States gathered in order that through consultation they might turn the new "river of glory" flowing in their hearts into channels of united and systematic teaching. Mr. Windust read the divine words to the Central States. Reports were given of the work already accomplished, of the meetings in Indianapolis and St. Louis, Sioux City and Davenport, of the new and joyous groups started this winter in Keokuk, Kansas City, Topeka and Omaha. Mr. William H. Randall spoke of the work of the general teaching committee of nineteen, how it had been formed not to direct but to serve, to offer itself in humble love as a clearing house for the helping of those teachers whom the Holy Spirit bade arise for the sublime campaign of spreading God's message into every city and hamlet of this continent and of the world. Mirza Ahmad Sohrab presented a series of comprehensive suggestions recently framed by friends in Washington for the Southern States. Mrs. May Maxwell spoke of the need of absolute severance, utter self-sacrifice if we are to succeed in walking this heavenly pathway. We must lay down our money, even our principle—our strength, our time, our opinions, our selves, our spirits, all for Him, if we are to be baptized with that holy spirit, that white flame of love which alone can teach His Cause and melt the hearts of stone into amity and unity.

Practical suggestions were brought forward of how important it was that all who know of Bahais living in isolated districts or of openings for Bahai speakers anywhere in the Central States should send word to the Secretary of the Central States Committee, Mr. Carl Scheffler, 56 East Congress St., Chicago. This Central States Committee consists of one member from each of the assemblies in the Central States. In a few for the teaching fund. In these boxes contributions might be placed.

Toward the close of the session Mr. Windust spoke of the STAR OF THE WEST, the need of a broader foundajoyous moments of divine enthusiasm for the new campaign of teaching over two hundred dollars was contributed for the traveling expenses of teachers, with the thought that much more would follow. It was suggested that two boxes be placed in the meetings of each assembly, one for the Maskrekol-Azkar, one tion, and the longings of its editors to make it rise to the exalted and universal service which the Master has destined for this happy-starred messenger of the West. It was suggested that contributions from the friends would help it expand its horizon. If the believers could subscribe to two or more subscription, one or more for distribution, one for bound copies, that would help the editors increase the number of pages. The Convention unanimously endorsed Mr. Windust's suggestions.

The Saturday session closed with a reunion of the Chicago friends which filled many eyes with tears and every heart with joy. They adjourned to celebrate that divinest blessing "the night of unity." And now that this unity is re-established they pray that they may be worthy to become, as the Master says, "the heart of America."

Eighth Annual Feast of Commemoration

BY MARTHA L. ROOT

THE Mystery of God, Abdul-Baha, the living Center of the Covenant on earth today, filled and thrilled all hearts at the eighth annual feast held in West Englewood, N. J., June 28th, 1919. Bahais know Abdul-Baha as "The Branch" foretold in our Bible. On this feast day of his commemoration it was significant that the peace of the world was signed. New York's bells and whistles rang wild with demonstrations of joy.

Rain and cold had prevailed in the morning, but the sun shone out gloriously warm and bright as some 150 pilgrims assembled. This Eden-like pine grove where Abdul-Baha in 1912 gave his first feast to eastern believers, is a natural, living temple of forest charm and woody fragrance. Thrushes fearlessly sung there in the heavenly atmosphere. Joyous Bahais brought food for themselves and others, for both dinner and supper. It was a holy feast. Rays of the Holy Spirit reflected the light and love of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and Abdul-Baha upon the polished mirrors of hearts. Faces were full of light; the happiness of everybody made the woods vibrant.

Just as in the days of pentacost there was spoken the one tongue—love.

Certainly it was a cosmopolitan feast. They were gathered from nearly every "kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." English, French and Germans were represented. A professor of the Imperial University of Tokyo, sojourning in this country, gave a splendid talk on spiritual advancement in his land. A Serbian writer, in his speech explained that although he spoke eight European languages fluently, it was only through Esperanto he could communicate with his brothers in Japan and China. He advocated Esperanto as the universal language and said that Abdul-Baha's life was well known in 107 Esperanto periodicals because Abdul-Baha stood for a universal language, urging the adoption of Esperanto as the universal tongue. A Scandinavian scholar present has since translated the blue booklet descriptive of the Cause into Danish. A Jewish woman spoke eloquently of the uplift to womanhood this Bahai Movement had brought. Several Bahais on their way to other states and countries to teach the Cause were guests.

Friends were also present from River-ton, New Haven, Bridgeport, Boston, Pittsburgh and Chicago. One hundred friends attended the evening meeting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Wilhelm. Roy C. Wilhelm presided at both meetings.

Abdul-Baha said of his feast in 1912: "This gathering has no peer or likeness upon the surface of the earth. This outward meeting is a prototype of the inner and complete spiritual meeting. Hundreds of thousands of meetings shall be held to commemorate such an assembly as this and the very words I utter to you on this occasion shall be reiterated by them in the ages to come."

Friends in the afternoon, visited the Bourgeois home near the grove where they were inspired by the marvelously beautiful model of the Mashrekol-Azkar temple which Mr. Bourgeois has designed. This model is full of a new splendor which is brought by the using of curves. It is the geometrical line of the starry heavens and the wonderful combinations of line create a living tracery as the pictures of life in activity.

It also gives the impression of fire flame, which is the symbol of the greatest aspiration. No one has attempted to describe this great new art which gives the essence of all religious art of the past, uniting it harmoniously with a new light which symbolizes well the Bahai teachings. All are impressed with awe and reverence when they behold this model. Some who do not know the teachings when they see the temple model instinctively exclaim, "I am on holy ground."

An artist attended the feast a few moments and the next day was so inspired by the spirit of the place she came again to paint it. Without knowing much about the Revelation and nothing of the temple with its circles and curves, she instinctively started painting her picture in circles, something she had never done before. The principal feature of her beautiful canvas is its pathway of light. She did not know that Abdul-Baha had walked this path but she said: "I do not know why, I feel I must make this a pathway of light and glorious sunshine."

Proposed world tour of Abdul-Baha

Letter from Shoghi Rabbani—Tablet recently revealed for the Bahais of the British Isles—Tablet to Lotfullah Hakim, London.

LETTER FROM SHOGHI RABBANI TO LOTFULLH HAKIM.

Haifa, Palestine,
May 8, 1919.

My dear brother in the love of El-Baha:

This long silence that I have assumed lately and this interruption of correspondence with you on my part has been solely due to a great pressure of work in connection with the dictation and translation of Tablets. This, however, has not by any means prevented me from remembering you all this time, particularly during the blessed days of Rizwan which Abdul-Baha passed with his friends on Mount Carmel in the utmost fragrance and spirituality. I have received your kind letter dated April 17th, enclosing the poem of Rudyard Kipling, for which I heartily thank you. The packages you have sent to the Master, enclosing supplications from the friends in England, dated January 24th and April 17th, have been received as well as the pictorial paper you have been sending every week.

The Master has been quite busy of late and has revealed many, many Tablets to the friends in America, England, France, Switzerland, Corsica, Germany, Persia, India, Japan, New Zealand and Egypt. Notwithstanding that he has carefully perused your letters and will in due course reveal Tablets in answer.

From India refreshing and encouraging news is being received. The Bahai work is assuming great proportions, is being centralized and is receiving a great impetus from the unceasing and well-directed activities of friends. An annual consultative Bahai Convention for the friends of India (including Burma) is to be convened this coming Christmas and many pamphlets have been edited, compiled and distributed as an introduction and preliminary step for this great representative assemblage. In short, the friends are stirred and active and are convinced that an increase of energy on their part, a fresh outburst of zeal and ardor and efficient service to the Cause of God will draw Abdul-Baha to their shores. What is significant and alluring is the intimation of the Beloved himself that he is planning and thinking of such a journey across the Indian Ocean. He even declared that, God willing, he wishes to undertake a voyage to India, and thence to Indo-China, Japan and the Hawaii Islands, from there across the American continent to your beloved city of London, to France, Germany and Egypt.

Oh! how fervent, how deep and how sincere is our hope that such a great journey which he himself has fixed its duration to be four or five years, will be undertaken. Let us hope and prepare for it. Extreme pressure of work obliges me to stop abruptly. I hope I shall receive your good news and see you in body very soon.

May I announce to you that your two supplications with the enclosed letters have been considered by the Beloved this afternoon. The whole afternoon has been spent in translating for him only the contents of a part of the supplications from London. A Tablet has been revealed for you opening with loving and affectionate sentences.

I enclose, out of my Bahai and particular affection for you, two photographs taken recently in April in the vicinity of the Tomb of the Bab. They are the latest pictures of the Beloved.

Requesting you to acknowledge their receipt, I remain

Your Bahai brother,
Shoghi.

RECENT TABLET REVEALED FOR BAHAIS OF THE BRITISH ISLES.

Through his honor Mr. Tudor-Pole, Egypt—Upon him be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!—To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful, British Isles.—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

Your joint letter was received. Its contents made us exceedingly glad, for it indicated that, praise be to God, during those days of trial these blessed souls have withstood every test in the utmost steadfastness and perseverance. Like unto pure and unadulterated gold they shone with infinite brilliancy in the flaming fire of tests. Verily, this is the bounty of divine Providence. For the gift of guidance is great, it illumines the soul, converts the court of the heart into a rose-garden and gladdens the spirit with the good-tidings of God.

But all this is dependent upon firmness and steadfastness throughout all trials. Not until the tree is rooted and firmly planted can it give forth fruit; no matter how fresh and graceful it may appear, eventually it will wither, fade away, and only be fit for the fire.

At present, praise be to God, these sons and daughters of the Kingdom have, like unto blessed trees, strengthened their roots, are unaffected by the blowing of violent winds, and they are like unto a building resting on a solid foundation.

This world-war has come to an end. We trust that at least it will lead to the preliminaries of universal peace, just as it is plainly foretold in the blessed Tablets.

The greatest means for its realization is in the entreaty and supplication of the friends to the Kingdom of God. Ye should all implore and pray, supplicate and beseech that, through the grace of God, this world-consuming war may be changed into a world-illuminating peace. It is certain that the entreaty and supplication of these servants will be acceptable at the divine threshold, for we wish nought save the tranquillity of the world of existence; purpose nothing but unity among men and aim at nothing save the eradication of ignorant prejudices, so that all religions and races, embracing one another, may gather under the shade of the pavilion of the oneness of God.

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom! The most pressing need today is harmony and union among the friends of God. Strive your utmost for this. Not until this intimate unity is realized can universal harmony be established. Therein lies the reason of Christ's saying: "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted." Exert ye a great deal of effort on this momentous question.

RECENT TABLET TO LOTFULLAH HAKIM.

His honor Mirza Lotfullah Hakim, London—Upon him be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH EL-Abhá!

He is God!

The letter which thou hadst written on December 16, 1918, was received.

Praise be to God, it was an evidence of the comfort and the spirituality of the friends of God and therefore infinite joy and satisfaction ensued.

Concerning the gathering on the 30th of November at the house of the maid-servant of God, Roseh, at which ye composed and prepared a letter; as the contents of the letter are known and noted, its despatch at present is unnecessary. Postpone the time of its forwarding.

Praise ye God, that He hath assisted ye in calling a meeting in the utmost of union and love, in endeavoring to promote rest and comfort for the world of mankind, in doing away with dispute and wrangling and in converting misunderstanding among religions to full understanding and good will; so that all races and nations may affiliate in the utmost love.

Convey, on my behalf, the utmost regard and respect to Setareh Khanom and her daughters, Parvin and Noori, and present my utmost respect and greeting to the respected maid-servant of God, Mrs. Cropper, and similarly to the maid-servant of God, Roseh, who indeed continually and uninterruptedly is engaged in service to the world of mankind; and to Mrs. Stannard, who is the true maid-servant of the Kingdom and who is restless day and night.

Mr. George Latimer, of America, who is in active service, is an illumined, God-like youth. When released from military service he is permitted to present himself.

Convey, on behalf of Abdul-Baha, infinite longing to Dr. Esslemont. Through translating the Hidden Words into Esperanto, a copy of which he has sent, he has in reality served the Kingdom of God and has likewise rendered a distinguished service to the Esperanto language. May God confirm him!

Send Professor Browne's book. Neither object to nor correspond with this person. Leave him to himself.

His honor, the beloved Daniel (Jenkyn) addresses you from the hidden Kingdom as follows: "O ye friends of God! Be not grieved because of my separation, for I am abiding in a realm wherein all my wishes are realized!"

When Dr. Esslemont has finished his book, send a copy thereof.

I have felt deeply sad at the passing away of Professor Cheyne at Oxford. Send a copy of his book, which is (partly) on the Cause.

Praise be to God, in these regions, due to the establishment of an equitable government, security and comfort have been realized for everybody, and all denominations are safe and protected from all calamities and are engaged in providing the means of their welfare and prosperity.

The hope is entertained that, through the blessings of Providence, the standard of universal peace may be raised and the pavilion of the oneness of the world of humanity may be pitched upon the apex of the contingent world; that the different races may be fused into one, and the surface of the globe may become one native land; so that the divine Kingdom may be fully represented and gloriously shine in the nether world.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Central States

so that the call of prayers and supplications may ascend to the heights of heaven. The flowers of material and divine civilization shall grow in the Mashrekol-Azkar, perfuming the nostrils with the fragrance of truth. Its doors will be open before the faces of all races, nations and religions. Whosoever enters therein is welcomed. BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH is the universal Shepherd. All mankind are His sheep, and the adherents of all religions are welcomed in the Mashrekol-Azkar to worship the Father of all humanity with perfect freedom and reverence and obedience.

"Likewise, great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world.

"In a similar manner, the scope of the Bahai Publishing Society must be greatly enlarged, so that books and pamphlets may be translated into different languages and published. These short pamphlets and historical reviews, giving the proofs and arguments of the Cause, must be written in accordance with the intellectual and spiritual capacity of each people.

"In short, for the diffusion of the fragrances of God the friends must think of detailed ways and means and year by year add to their efficiency, practicality and thoroughness. They must organize classes for teaching the young and preparing teachers to go to all parts of America. God willing, the believers like unto bright candles will illumine the assemblage of the world of humanity with the light of truth."

News from India

All-India Bahai Convention to be held in December—New Bahai paper to be established in India.

LETTER FROM ABBASALI

Madras, India,
May 23, 1919.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdad', Chicago.

My dearly-beloved brother:

You will no doubt be pleased to know that we are going to start a Bahai paper in India and I have taken the liberty to write this letter to you in connection with the same. We have a column in the said paper entitled "From Our Contemporaries," in which we intend to insert cullings from the Najm-i-Bakhtar (STAR OF THE WEST) and Khurshid-i-Khawar. May I, therefore, ask your indulgence to mail me the latest number of Najm-i-Bakhtar to my Rangoon address, and to continue sending the same every month. We shall, of course, send you our paper in exchange and shall further beg you to extend a helping hand to us in our efforts to keep this paper going. The paper will be printed in three languages—English, Urdu* and Persian—all in one issue and every effort is being made to make it as artistic and instructive as possible.

Further, may I beg you to kindly furnish me with the addresses of all the American assemblies and individual friends to whom the paper should be sent. In case of assemblies, you will please let me know the number of copies to be sent to them. I trust you will kindly give an early reply to this request, so that you may be in time to guide us from the very first issue. A few days ago when on a visit to Bombay, I heard from brother Aga Mirza Mahmood that the translation done by me of the Book of Wonderful Signs was sent to sisters Goodall and Cooper in California for correction and polishing. This translation was done by me under very trying circumstances, yet I am confident it shall not give much trouble to my brothers and sisters sitting in committee for its correction. If any further information regarding the translation is wanted, I shall ever feel esteemed to correspond with you or any other brother or sister.

You are perhaps aware that we are going to hold an All-India Bahai Convention during the coming Christmas season. We are confident that through the inexorable will of the Blessed Beauty and ever-effective prayers of Abdul-Baha, we will be able to move the dormant population of India. We are expecting the arrival among us of Mr. Remy and the other young brothers of whom you spoke in your last letter to dear Mirza Mahmood.

Kindly convey my humblest Bahai love to all the friends and sisters in Chicago. Please send my sincere love to Mirza Ahmad Sohrab and Mr. Joseph Hannan when next you write him. Kindly convey my best Bahai love to Miss Root.

Yours affectionately,
At the feet of Abdul-Baha, Abbasali.

LETTER FROM MIRZA MAHMOOD

Bombay, India,

June 1, 1919.

Dear friends:

Your letter of April 9th has filled us with great delight and rejoicing. We rejoice in the divine fatherly care of Abdul-Baha who while he sent you Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, also favored us with a messenger, Mr. Aflatoon, bringing Tablets for the devoted servants in India. We have perused with greatest pleasure your letters and program of the Annual Convention and Congress which we hope has been carried out with complete success and great results. The Bahais in India have also proposed to hold an Annual Conference during the Christmas season when we earnestly wish some of the American friends will be present among us to add to the success of the gathering and the joy of the friends in India.

We are very thankful to you for sending us your literature and keeping us in touch with all the earnest doings of the friends in America.

We have submitted a request to his blessed Presence, Abdul-Baha, to permit us to hold the Annual Conference. We hope he will graciously accord his approval to our request. We therefore learn with special pleasure from Dr. Zia Bagdadi's letter that a Japanese Bahai is coming to Acca and Mr. Remy with some other American friends to India. This latter news is of greatest interest to the friends in India, all of whom long to see Mr. Remy and hear his vigorous, inspiring addresses. His presence among us is sure to add a special charm to the Conference and in our opinion will be productive of important results.

Mrs. Goodall and Dr. Zia Bagdadi have asked me for the English translation of my book Safar Namai Mobaraka, i. e., An Account of Abdul-Baha's Visit to America. I sent a typed copy of the translation to Mrs. Goodall and Mrs. Cooper for correction and improvement. I have not yet heard whether they have received the work. I had sent it by registered post and a copy of the original Persian also accompanied it. I hope it has reached them and that they will be pleased to expedite the work of correction, revision and improvement so that it may soon be published.

With prayers for the happiness of our western brothers and Bahai greetings to all of them, on behalf of the Assembly, I am

Your brother,
Mirza Mahmood.

LETTER FROM SYED MUSTAFA

Rangoon, Burma,
May 16, 1919.

Mrs. Corinne True,

Dear Bahai sister in the supreme service of His great Cause.

Your kind letter dated February 7th, 1919, detailing the progress of the Mashrekol-Azkar has given me immense pleasure. The receipts enclosed therein have been forwarded to the respective Secretaries.

We eagerly look forward, and pray day and night for divine assistance for the speedy completion of this historic edifice which shall proclaim to the world at large the marvelous fusion of the East and West—the wonderful result of the harmonizing influence of the teachings of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH. This is indeed an achievement which will ever redound to the everlasting credit of the American people. May God crown with effulgent success the noble efforts of our American brothers and sisters in this direction!

I am confident before the world fully recovers from the shock of the terrible convulsion that it has just passed through, the Mashrekol-Azkar building in the United States will unfurl from the summit of its high domé the flag of universal peace, love, and unity.

The news of Mr. Remy's ensuing visit to India, as announced in your letter under reply has caused a great rejoicing among the friends here. The fragrance of his kind disposition and cheerful manners is still redolent in India and Burma. That brother has a very loving personality and a heart well illumined with love and faith. We all, young and old, welcome this opportunity of enjoying his pleasant company once more.

It is always a great pleasure with us to render service to our occidental brethren and co-operate with them as far as circumstances permit in the establishment of His Kingdom on earth, and in the solidarity of the union of the East and West.

The recent Tablets received from Abdul-Baha show that direct communication has been restored, and they gave us great joy, as they brought the happy news of the Master's good health. They are in reality blessings to the friends, and all glory to those who had the honor to receive the privilege.

The friends here are all doing well and have most devotedly engaged themselves in the service of His Covenant. All are animated with the same feeling, the same sentiments and the same aspirations, namely: To hold aloft the sacred ensign of His mighty command.

With Bahai love and greetings I beg to remain,

Ever your devoted co-worker in the service of the Holy Covenant.

Syed Mustafa.

How the door of communication was opened

Letter from Mirza Azizollah Shirazi, Haifa, to Mirza Mahmood Baghir Khan Shirazi, Teheran, Persia—The first Tablet received in Egypt.

Haifa, Palestine,
Sept. 25, 1918.

Greetings:

The believers here were more at rest than any one else, because all the troubles were upon the shoulders of the holy Person.

It is impossible to tell the troubles borne by the Beloved during the past four years. The Commander-in-Chief the Turkish oppressor, Jamal Pasha, after a written complaint from the naked, said: "After I am through fighting and conquer on the Suez canal, and return to Jerusalem, in the same place where Christ was crucified I will crucify Abdul-Baha." Praise be to God, he had not reached the canal when the English army poured missiles like rain upon his camp. He could do nothing but flee like a deer.

Thank God, after he was overcome God gave him no opportunity to carry out his evil design, for on the 23rd of September, while we were looking out from the Travelers' Rest near the Tomb of the Bab, we saw English and Indian horsemen coming from the eastern side of Haifa, attacking the Turkish cannons and coming into and taking the city. The remaining Turks who were fighting and had no chance to escape were taken prisoners. The General of the attacking army, the conqueror of Haifa, reached Khezzr. And between Khezzr and the German colony, the mayor of the city and the prominent men went out to meet him. The first question he asked was this: "Is Abdul-Baha in this city and is he safe?"

Later, he, himself, and his chief officers were often visiting the Beloved, going and coming, and receiving spiritual nourishment. The name of the conqueror and captor of Haifa, who asked the question concerning the welfare of the Beloved, is General Andrew Allenby.

Last night also, Colonel Storrs, the Governor of Jerusalem, who speaks Arabic correctly and fluently, rode in his own automobile to Haifa and immediately came to the house and visited the Beloved. He said: "I have come on the part of the government which I serve, namely, Britannia. I am a messenger, and came especially to inquire about the health of the Master, and send the glad tidings." This morning he came with another General and visited the Beloved. Soon after taking leave, he returned to Jerusalem.

The health of the Beloved, thank God, is good and he is joyful and free from trouble.

You will kindly spread the news in Shiraz and thereabouts. Our venerable spiritual father, Aga Hadji Mirza Heydar Ali—May I be sacrificed for him—is well, light-hearted and happy, and sends especial greetings and love to all.

Azizollah.

(Translated by Dr. S. I. Moody and Mirza Farajollah Khan, Teheran, Persia, February, 1919.)

The first Tablet received in Egypt after the opening of the doors of communication.

He is God!

To the believers of Egypt:

O true friends! Separation from the friends causes the burning of heart and soul. Separation, distance and foreignness are the cause of injury and loss, especially as no fragrant messages, nor a faithful messenger, nor courier, nor post, nor information, nor news from any source have been received, and the mind has been deprived of comfort. Life and spirit were in the utmost sadness and grief until the conquering army arrived in the Holy Land and seized the reins of government from the cruel ones, and overthrew the authority of the tyrants, and quietness and safety were assured. The leaders of the country and the army showed sympathy and kindness, soothing every oppressed one; the black cloud was dispersed and the horizon of the political situation cleared. Believers and unbelievers were at rest, and acquaintances and strangers were playing cheerful melodies. Verily, the darkness of injury and error was uncovered by the light of equity and justice, and the government put on the garment of probity.

Praise be to God! By the bounty and favor of the Blessed Perfection, amid such great confusion and severe whirlwind of calamities and severe oppression, these distressed ones were in safety and rest. No distress came upon any one. There was no trouble or suffering nor pain, until the Ark of the Cause of God reached the shore of rescue from the whirlpool of danger. Now the ruling government was overcome and all the people of the country of every nationality and tribe were made comfortable on the couch of rest and safety.

His honor Mr. (Colonel) Storrs came from Egypt and gave tidings of the health and safety of all the believers. I became very happy and grateful that, praise be to God, the friends in Egypt were also preserved and guarded.

Night and day we are remembering you and sincerely praying for you and the hope that we may meet. With heart and soul I am longing for all the friends.

Upon them be the Glory of God!

ALFRED E. LUNT

To his honor, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Boston, Mass.—Upon him be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He is God!

O thou firm in the Covenant!

Your last letter dated October 28, 1918, was received. Its contents caused joy and gladness for they indicated the firmness and steadfastness of the friends in the Cause of God.

Praise be to God, the gloomy clouds of war have been partly dissipated from the horizon of the world. The hope is entertained that gradually they will utterly vanish and rest and comfort will be established. Grasp therefore the present opportunity, for a wonderful capacity for the hearing of divine teachings has been manifested among men. Concentrate, therefore, at present your whole effort in spreading the Message. It is time for the diffusion of fragrances and the promulgation of divine teachings and for nothing more. The world of humanity is athirst and these divine teachings are pure and limpid water. Exert effort in teaching and if blessed souls undertake to travel through all the states of America, complete and thorough confirmations from the Kingdom of Abha shall be witnessed by them, so much so that they shall be bewildered. Verily, this is an exceedingly momentous question.

You had inquired about the despatched and unsigned letter. That letter is authentic and its original copy is safely kept and signed. Whenever an unsigned letter arrives, inquire before putting it into action and wait until an answer is given.

Convey respectful greeting to all the friends. The question of the Mashrekol-Azkar is of great importance. The friends accordingly must exert a great deal of effort and must be self-sacrificing so that its construction may begin.

As to appeal and encouragement for the Mashrekol-Azkar, in view of the glory and eminence of the Cause, it must be made orally or through private personal letters.

Your children who indeed are mine, embrace each of them and show them on my behalf utmost kindness and amiability.

Upon thee be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!
(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

EDNA TRUE

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Edna True, Paris, France—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou respected one!

Your letter dated February 2nd, 1919, has been received, and thy service to the world of humanity, during these days of terrible war, acceptable at the Kingdom of God. Verily, thou hast magnificently engaged in service; hast given up thy rest and comfort in America and hast hastened to Europe so that thou mayest be of service to the world of humanity.

Praise thou God for having been therein assisted. At present continue these services until the end in the same department and whenever it has been made possible for thee to undertake a trip to the Holy Land in the utmost joy and fragrance, thou art permitted to present thyself.

Convey in writing to thy respected mother greeting on my behalf.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, March 30th, 1919. House of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

ELLA AND ELLAH A. RICE-WRAY

To the maid-servants of God, Ella and Ellah A. Rice-Wray, Detroit, Michigan—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He is God!

O ye two dear maid-servants of God!

Your letter dated December 4th, 1918, was received. Praise be to God, His Holiness BAHA'O'LLAH—May my life be a sacrifice to his friends—hath expounded and fully explained everything in the manifest Book, hath not given any soul the chance to be confounded, hath designated the Expounder of the Book that he may fully explain and expose the manifest teachings of God; and hath devolved the ordinances which are not literally recorded in the Book, upon the Universal House of Justice which, whenever it is organized, will engage in the service of promulgating those ordinances which are not manifestly mentioned.

Indeed, as thou hast written, the trials are severe. I, however, entertain the hope that as the winds of tests wax more severe, the friends of God will exhibit and assert more firmness and steadfastness; that souls will be assisted through the confirmation of the Abha Kingdom and will conquer and quench the uproar of self and worldly desire which is nothing but the world of nature to which man is enslaved and from which he can be emancipated only through the power of God.

Concerning the effect of translation, it is evident that it is not as effective as the original. For instance, the Tablets of His Holiness BAHA'O'LLAH which have been translated from Persian or Arabic, the original text exerts a wonderful power, while translation may produce certain effect but cannot be measured with the original. The delicacy, smoothness and sweetness of the Words of His Holiness BAHA'O'LLAH are beyond any human conception. It is, however, conditioned upon one's knowledge of Persian and Arabic.

Convey greetings to all the friends.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, January 26th, 1919. Home of Abdul-Baha, Haifa, Palestine.)

C. MASON REMEY

To his honor Mr. Remy, care of his honor Mr. Roy Wilhelm, New York City—Upon him be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O my dear son!

Numerous letters have been received from you and their contents have all been conducive to happiness. Praise be to God, thou art confirmed in service to the Kingdom art promulgating divine teachings, art raising the call of the oneness of mankind, art detaching the souls from ignorant racial prejudices, art summoning them to the investigation of truth, art showing forth unto them the light of guidance and art offering them the chalice of the wine of the love of God. This blessed purpose of thine is the magnet of the confirmations of the Abha Kingdom.

Rest thou assured and engage with Mr. John Bassett in service to the Kingdom of God throughout the same southern states. This is what is required at present. Later on, undertake a tour to the north of America and after that thy course of action and that of Mr. John Bassett shall be determined.

Convey, on my behalf, the utmost love and kindness to Miss Margaret Klebbs and say: "The people of the Supreme admire your work that, praise be to God, you are firm in the Covenant and Testament, and are serving the Kingdom of God."

Upon thee be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

TODAY, all the peoples of the world are indulging in self-interest and exert the utmost effort and endeavor to promote their own material interests. They are worshipping themselves and not the Divine Reality nor the world of mankind. They seek diligently their own benefit and not the common weal. This is because they are captives of the world of nature and unaware of the divine teachings, of the bounty of the Kingdom and of the Sun of Truth. But ye, praise be to God, are at present especially favored with this bounty, have become of the chosen, have been informed of the heavenly instructions, have gained admittance into the Kingdom of God, have become the recipients of unbounded blessings, and have been baptized with the Water of Life, with the fire of the Love of God and with the Holy Spirit.

What is Truth?

By STANWOOD COBB.

"WHAT is truth?" So asked a Roman governor and jurist in a time when the moral and spiritual horizon of the world was undergoing a tremendous expansion; when the old values were changing, and the new had not yet been established; when a great Manifestation of God was upon earth, and men knew it not. Yes, and it was to this very Manifestation that the stern Roman governor addressed himself. Christ had already said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Pilate had the earnestness to inquire, but not the capacity to receive, the truth.

"What is the truth?" This question is asked today as eagerly as in the days of Imperial Rome. Again there is a vital shifting of values; a running to and fro; a falling away from the old and an earnest search for the new. What must one believe? Where pin one's faith?

Is truth to be found in the old denominationalism? If so, it is a very divided truth, a truth in rebellion against itself; and that cannot be, for truth is harmonious, catholic, whole. Is it to be found in any one of the existing world religions to the exclusion of all others? So once thought the adherents of each great world religion. But truth as the exclusive possession of one race, of one religion, is as illogical as that truth should be confined to one sect.

Is truth then relative? God forbid. It is neither fractional, nor formless. Truth is one for the whole world; one and indivisible, for the whole universe.

In 1867 BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, in Adrianople, on his way to years of exile and imprisonment in the Holy Land, declared himself to be "The Promised One;" and of his inspired words he says, "This is that which descended from the Source of Majesty, through the tongue of power and strength upon the prophets of the past. We have taken its essences and clothed them with the garment of brevity as a favor to the beloved, that they may fulfill the Covenant of God."

What is the truth which BAHÁ'O'LLÁH taught? That God exists. That He can be known only through His Manifestations. That He has manifested Himself to the world at different epochs and in different lands. That He is again manifesting Himself to the world, to fulfill His promise; and to satisfy the expectation of every religion and every race for a great Leader, who should lead mankind into the Promised Land; who should initiate the movement which should not end until all had become children of the Kingdom; who should lay down the principles of a spiritualized humanity, exemplifying them in his own character and life.

What are those principles which BAHÁ'O'LLÁH laid down for the guidance of humanity? But first let us ask ourselves what, if one had the opportunity and the choice to create an ideal religion answering to all the needs of humanity, —what, we question, would be its nature?

Such a religion must in the first place be universal. It must unite all races in one sublime Truth.

Secondly, it must wipe out war, the greatest handicap under which humanity now labors.

Thirdly, it must solve the vast problem of labor and capital, a problem which lies at the very roots of human progress and of joy upon earth. For it must guide the habits and regulate the lives of men in such a way as to enable all to exist in happiness, health, and nearness to God.

Last, and most important, and as a means to all the foregoing, it must fill the hearts of men with love for God and love for humanity, so their faces shine and the whole being is radiant of joy.

And all these things the true seeker will find in the Bahai Movement. It not only preaches universal brotherhood and universal religion, but it demonstrates these things in practice. It is the only religious movement which has united, in the thousands, Jews, Protestants of every denomination, Catholics, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Brahmans, Zoroastrians and Confucianists. It is the only movement which amalgamates men of every race and caste and joins the orient and occident in loving partnership of progress. No other movement has ever done this,—even Christianity has never spread east of its birthplace; it became and has remained an occidental religion.

As to war, the Bahai Movement condemns it as a crime against man and God. Only one kind of war it permits, a war of justice, a war against war—but the aim even of such a war is universal peace—peace based not upon politics and selfish interests, but upon tolerance, internationalism, justice—and a humanitarianism that is not confined to nationality. Only the power of a great religion can perform this task of welding together the hearts and lives of men of every race. Christianity once did it; Buddhism and Mohammedanism have done it; and the Bahai Movement once and for all will do it in a lasting and world-wide way.

The Bahai Movement is not an other-worldly, an ascetic, or an esoteric religion. Its teachings are for all, and apply to this life as well as to the next. Its aim is to make this life happy, just and perfect—to establish on earth the Kingdom of heaven. It does not say to the poor man, "Submit to your poverty and degradation, for greater will be your glory in heaven." It says: "Poverty is a social crime. It must not exist. Every man has the right to secure work and by it the sufficient means to meet his daily needs. There cannot continue to exist the vast extremes of wealth and poverty."

To the capitalist it does not say, "The Church accepts your support and condones your ill-gotten wealth," but it says: "Share your profits with your workmen. Divide up your estates at death so that the many and not the few shall enjoy them." And the Bahai laws will enforce, where capitalism will hesitate, the greater sharing of its profits with labor, a wider distribution of wealth by bequest, and the abolition of poverty.

Thus and thus only can material conditions upon earth make possible a spiritualized humanity. For while all strive madly after wealth and but a few attain it, the hearts of men are too bitter to listen to the voice of God. But the combined results of confiscatory taxation beyond a certain income, and of spiritual love and humanitarianism on the part of the rich, will turn our great achievers from greedy competition unto deeds of more human value. And the satisfaction of the daily needs and the feeling of justice in the distribution of wealth will change the jealous attitude of labor into one of co-operation and happy industry. For every producer, in the Bahai state, will receive not only wages, but a share in his profits.

The Bahai Movement is the only religion that has ever made work equivalent to prayer. It is not necessary to flee from the world in order to be near to God; nor need one retire from the work-bench in order to pray. For by BAHÁ'O'LLÁH'S command, work done in the spirit of service is equivalent to prayer. Service done in love is the key to the Kingdom. Of this there is potent witness in the personality of Abdul-Baha, the Servant of God, who has made his life a perpetual and joyous sacrifice,—first to BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, his father, and then to the whole world. He is the personification of service; and his words and actions are the inspiration which spur on others to give their time and strength and money to the Cause of humanity and of God.

No one must be idle. In the Bahai state there will be neither tramp nor monied loafer—beggar nor remittance man. All will contribute some service to the state—else they sin in the eyes of God. But work will then be far more joyous than it is now—because it will be done in the spirit of love, done under divine inspiration—and the task-like quality of work will yield to a happy creativeness such as now characterizes only the artist's productions.

“Thou shalt earn thy living by the sweat of thy brow”—is supplanted by, “God cares for all his creatures.”

Liberty of government—equality before the law—has been achieved by the advanced members of the human race; but nowhere is there real equality of opportunity. Poverty is a handicap too great for all but the most powerful wills to overcome; while property and privilege raise to eminence men worthy only of the workshop or the prison bench.

Education,—free, thorough, practical,—is the key to equal opportunity. By this means are the talented brought forward, the great achievers of the human race discovered and aided in their work. Not equality of position, but equality of opportunity, is the standard of the Bahai state. Let the great enjoy a position and a wealth commensurate with their abilities and service. But let all have an equal chance to achieve.

So BAHÁ'O'LLÁH lays great stress on education. To give one's children the best education possible is a spiritual duty—and daughters must receive an equal education with the sons, because they are to be the mothers of the coming generation. These commands for universal education, less needed in the occident, are absolutely essential to oriental progress; for the great weight which keeps the orient down is the ignorance of its masses.

The Bahai Movement brings a message of inspiration and freedom to women. They are in all things potentially the equals of men—and their training and education is to be as broad and far-reaching as that given to their brother-men. Humanity cannot fly on one wing only. Woman's power must be added to man's power, woman's vision and ideals to man's vision and ideals for the achievement of a perfect humanity. The vanity and domination of the masculine element must yield to a greater harmony of sex, in which sympathy, understanding, and co-operation will enable man and woman to march abreast toward the victory of 'spirit.

In the Bahai Movement, the antagonism between science and religion is abolished. There can be no quarrel between the truth of science and the truth of religion, because truth is one. If there is an apparent divergence, it is due to partial error. For religion to deny the truths of science is folly. By so doing it becomes mere superstition. Religion must comport with science, BAHÁ'O'LLÁH declared.

But there is a limitation in the science of today which must be overcome before it is worthy of sharing truth with religion.

For science to deny God, is for it to deny the very ground work and substance of existence. Such a science is no-science. There can be no harmony between contemporaneous religion and contemporaneous science, for both are dogmatic. The religion of today is mentally wrapped in the swaddling clothes of an infant humanity, while science, in bursting free from this oppression, is lost in an anarchy of materialism. When scientists live as close to God as the prophets of the past, a new and spiritual civilization will pervade the earth.

In the Bahai Movement, it will be no man's duty to preach unto his neighbors. All will have the Word of God at their disposal—its meaning to be sought in their own hearts and from the heart of God. There will be no paid profession of the spiritual teacher. This function will be absorbed by the educator, the scholar, and the scientific investigator.

In the Bahai teachings we find a platform so wide, so universal, that it meets every need of man: one that appeals to both the intellectual and to the emotional; to the humanitarian and to the mystic; to the oriental and to the occidental.

These teachings are for all humanity, nor is there in them fault either of omission or commission. Herein lies the outline of a perfect world-religion; the pattern to which humanity may weave its future destiny; the foundation stone for the building of the Temple.

Yet were the Bahai Movement a mere platform it would soon pass, as have passed all other platforms made by man. It is not because of its platform that it is spreading over all the world, but because of its inner spirit, its cohesive force. It is a religion, not an ethical or philosophic cult. It moves men to great and lofty deeds; purifies their hearts; leads them to God. It is the Water of Life, bringing rejuvenation to a thirsty age. To one man it may appeal first through the intellect, to another through the heart; but in time it unifies these two sides of man into a perfect harmony of spirit. The oriental, mystically inclined, it makes more practical. The occidental, inclined toward materialism, it wakens to the existence of spirit. And upon all it enjoins deeds.

This is not a religion of words, of lip service, of inherited tradition. It is a religion of action, appealing to the virile, the pioneer, the heroic in man. It points the way to a new and glorious civilization, the keynote of which is social love. And not only does it point the way, but it gives also the impetus, the motive, and the power toward this better life. For many have the eyes to see, the heart to yearn, but few the power to achieve. And the friends of God must be distinguished, not by fine words merely and ideals, but by spiritual achievement. When the Bahais in any community stand out perceptibly as the sweetest, the noblest and the most powerful personalities of them all, then will the Bahai Movement win its adherents by the thousands and the Bahai State come to realization.

Much as it may so be thought, man is not, however, made for living, but life for man. Not a perfect world is the goal of humanity, but a perfected soul. This world is but the battle ground, upon which victory is to be attained of spirit over sense. Hence, of far more importance, in any religion, than the means of a happy civilization, are the means of an individual salvation. "What shall I do to be saved?"—is the eternal quest.

Salvation is a term in obloquy among trained minds. Modern cultured man has deemed himself the peer of existence, needless of salvation, beyond good and evil. If this attitude brings happiness, let the years 1914-1918 bear witness.

If salvation means anything, it means the ushering of the soul into immortal joy; it means the freeing of the soul from sorrow. There is only one way of freedom. It is the way of love. In that predestined union of the soul with God, happiness is found. In separation, only sorrow—no matter how the soul may seek to shield itself against misfortune. "Grieve not save when thou art far from us; and rejoice not save when thou art near and returning unto us."

To overcome self is the task set for humanity; the earth-task, in which beads of blood oftentimes perspire. The task is great, and many shrink therefrom. Yet, sooner or later, it must be faced by all. There is no escape. For the finite life can never become infinite, nor can mortal put on immortality, until this task is done. Severance from self, this is salvation.

To achieve this goal, but one means is given to man—that of love. That which as duty is difficult, with love becomes a thing of joy. The Friend awaits eternally the first pledging of friendship. He never wearies of the quest—forsakes no seeker, answers love with love. But those who love Him not can never know His love, how infinite, how joy-giving it is. His heart of infinity yearns after all finite beings, draws them as a magnet. But freedom of will gives opportunity for resistance. Man may, but will not, seek this goal; for self-love is a force compelling on the soul of man a long and weary journey, a pilgrimage through sorrow till the peaks of gold are reached.

When will humanity overcome this terrible egoism, this vast conceit in its own powers? When learn that there is no safety save in God; no guidance but the Friend's; no deliverance from evil except by aid of the Holy Spirit? If nothing but universal disaster, and the resulting conviction of human frailty, could avail to turn men to Him who is Mighty,—would it not be a favor on the part of destiny to send affliction over all the earth?

And so woes shall increase, that evil may decrease; complacency shall fail in order that yearning may be aroused; happiness shall wane, that spirituality may grow. But in all trials, in all difficulties, love is the clue, the guidance. In love is deliverance from all evil.

Love in its highest aspect means union, harmony, evanescence before God. But man is too proud to seek this road. He will not submit his heart,—but by foolish imaginings seeks salvation in empty abstractions, in a hollow eclecticism, in a vain endeavor to reach the Divine Essence without accepting the guidance and infinite love of the Divine Friend. It may not be. Those who would enter by any other way are thieves and they shall be rejected. One gate, one way, one path,—not many to salvation.

Such are the teachings of the Bahai Movement. They are not new—they have existed in the world before, in essence, but not in full expression. This, their new and epochal arrangement, is the destined avenue of Truth to the world today. The power of God is behind it, the power of holy spirits in the celestial Kingdom, the power of all good. And nothing can stay its progress, because it is harmonious, catholic, and whole.

Allah'o'Abha!

After four and one-half years, the Persian section of the STAR OF THE WEST, has been re-established in this issue, through the bounty of the Center of the Covenant.

Again the East and West are united.

All the Bahais of America send Abha greetings to the Bahais of Persia, and rejoice with them over this event.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi has written this Persian section, which revolves around the recent Tablet Abdul-Baha revealed for the American friends. Mirza Ahmad Sohrab will write the following issues.

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase; thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O ye apostles of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH—May my life be a ransom to you!

Similarly, the Magazine, the STAR OF THE WEST, must be edited in the utmost regularity, but its contents must be the promulgator of the Cause of God—so that both in the East and the West they may become informed of the most important events.

Editorial—“But as the days of Noe were”

(St. Matt. xxiv: 37-39.)

Nineteen hundred years ago, the Word of God—speaking through the mouth of Jesus—uttered, concerning these days in which we live:

“But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.”

Seven hundred years before, the Word of God—speaking through the mouth of Isaiah—proclaimed, concerning these days: “Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill made low.”

Today, the Word of God—speaking through the mouth of Abdul-Baha—as recorded in the Great Tablet published in this issue of the STAR OF THE WEST, declares:

“Consider: Eminent personages whose fame has spread throughout the world, shall, ere long, be exterminated as the result of their deprivation of this heavenly bounty; no name and no fame shall they leave behind, and of them no fruit and trace shall survive.”

In the days of Noe, those who entered the Ark of the Covenant were saved from the rising "waters" which submerged the highest "mountains."

In these days of the Son of Man, those who enter into His Ark and are firm in the Covenant, are saved.

"The Covenant of God is like unto a vast and fathomless ocean"

RECENT TABLET TO HOWARD MACNUTT

To his honor Mr. Howard MacNutt, Brooklyn, New York.—Upon him be BAHA'O'LLAH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou old friend!

A month ago a letter was written to the favored maid-servant of God, Mrs. MacNutt, and at present two letters from you dated February 18th and 21st, 1919, have been received. Their text indicated firmness and perseverance in the Kingdom of the exalted Lord.

Today, every wise, vigilant and fore-sighted person is awakened, and to him are unveiled the mysteries of the future, that nothing save the power of the Covenant is able to stir and move the heart of humanity; just as the new and the old Testaments have propounded throughout all regions the Cause of His Holiness Christ—a Cause that has been the pulsating power in the body of the human world. A tree that has a root shall bear fruit, while the tree which is devoid of it, no matter how high and hardy it may be, will eventually wither, perish, and like unto a log be fit for fire.

The Covenant of God is like unto a vast and fathomless ocean. A billow shall rise and surge therefrom and shall cast ashore all accumulated foam.

In brief, praise be to God, that the highest wish entertained by heedful souls is the exaltation of the Word of God and the propagation of divine fragrances. This is, verily, the secure and firm foundation.

At present, like unto the morn, the lights of the Sun of Truth have been shed around. Effort must be made that slumbering souls may be awakened, the heedless become vigilant, and the divine instructions, which constitute the spirit of this age, may reach the ears of the people of the world, may be propagated in papers and enunciated in meetings with the utmost brilliancy and eloquence.

One's conduct must be like the conduct of Paul, and one's faith similar to that of Peter. This musk-scented breeze shall perfume the nostrils of the people of the world, and this spirit shall resuscitate the dead.

The offensive odor of violation has temporarily arrested the onward movement of the Cause, for otherwise, the divine teachings, like unto the rays of the sun, would immediately spread and radiate throughout all regions.

The addresses of Abdul-Baha which thou has compiled and which thou intendest to print and publish is indeed very advisable. This service shall cause thee to acquire an effulgent face in the Abha Kingdom, and shall make thee the object of the praise and gratitude of the friends in the East as well as the West. But this is to be undertaken with the utmost carefulness, so that the exact text may be reproduced and will exclude all deviations and corruptions committed by previous interpreters.

Convey on my behalf the utmost kindness and respect to the respected maid-servant of God, Mrs. MacNutt.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

Recent General Tablet from Abdul-Baha to the American friends

(See pages 167-166 for fac-simile of original)

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful throughout the United States of America and Canada, care of their honors Mr. and Mrs. Scheffler—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye who are firm in the Covenant and the Testament!

Your letter was received and your blessed names were one by one perused. The contents of the letter were divine inspirations and ascertained bounties because they were indicative of the union of the friends and the harmony of all hearts.

Today the most remarkable favor of God centers around union and harmony among the friends; so that this unity and concord may be the cause of the promulgation of the oneness of the world of humanity, may emancipate the world from this intense darkness of enmity and rancor, and that the Sun of Truth may shine in full and perfect effulgence.

Today, all the peoples of the world are indulging in self-interest and exert the utmost effort and endeavor to promote their own material interests. They are worshipping themselves and not the divine reality, nor the world of mankind. They seek diligently their own benefit and not the common weal. This is because they are captives of the world of nature and unaware of the divine teachings, of the bounty of the Kingdom and of the Sun of Truth. But ye, praise be to God, are at present especially favored with this bounty, have become of the chosen, have been informed of the heavenly instructions, have gained admittance into the Kingdom of God, have become the recipients of unbounded blessings and have been baptized with the Water of Life, with the fire of the love of God and with the Holy Spirit.

Strive, therefore, with heart and soul that ye become ignited candles in the assemblage of the world, glittering stars on the horizon of Truth and may become the cause of the propagation of the light of the Kingdom; in order that the world of humanity may be converted into a divine realm, the nether world may become the world of on high, the love of God and the mercy of the Lord may raise their canopy upon the apex of the world, human souls may become the waves of the ocean of truth, the world of humanity may grow into one blessed tree, the verses of oneness may be chanted and the melodies of sanctity may reach the Supreme Concourse.

Day and night I entreat and supplicate to the Kingdom of God and beg for ye infinite assistance and confirmation. Do not take into consideration your own aptitudes and capacities, but fix your gaze on the consummate bounty, the divine bestowal and the power of the Holy Spirit—the power that converts the drop into a sea and the star into a sun.

Praise be to God, the hosts of the Supreme Concourse secure the victory and the power of the Kingdom is ready to assist and to support. Should ye at every instant unloosen the tongue in thanksgiving and gratitude, ye will not be able to discharge yourselves of the obligation of gratitude for these bestowals.

Consider: Eminent personages whose fame has spread all over the world shall, ere long, be exterminated as the result of their deprivation of this heavenly bounty; no name and no fame shall they leave behind, and of them no fruit and trace shall survive. But as the effulgences of the Sun of Truth have dawned forth upon ye and ye have attained everlasting life, ye shall shine and glitter forevermore from the horizon of existence.

His honor Peter was a fisherman and Mary Magdalene a peasant, but as they were specially favored with the blessings of His Holiness Christ, the horizon of their faith became illumined and down to the present day they are shining from the horizon of everlasting glory. At this station, merit and capacity are not to be considered; nay rather, the resplendent rays of the Sun of Truth, which have illumined these mirrors, must be taken into account.

Ye are inviting me to America. I am likewise longing to gaze at those illumined faces and converse and associate with those real friends. But the magnetic power which shall draw me to those shores is the union and harmony of the friends, their behavior and conduct in accordance with the teachings of God and the firmness of all in the Covenant and the Testament.

O Divine Providence! This assemblage is composed of Thy friends who are attracted to Thy beauty and are set ablaze by the fire of Thy love. Turn these souls into heavenly angels, resuscitate them through the breath of Thy Holy Spirit, grant them eloquent tongues and resolute hearts, bestow upon them heavenly power and merciful susceptibilities, cause them to become the promulgators of the oneness of mankind and the cause of love and concord in the world of humanity, so that the perilous darkness of ignorant prejudice may vanish through the light of the Sun of Truth, this dreary world may become illumined, this material realm may absorb the rays of the world of spirit, these different colors may merge into one color and the melody of praise may rise to the Kingdom of Thy sanctity.

Verily, Thou art the Omnipotent and the Almighty!

Upon ye be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

Supplication to Abdul-Baha from the American friends

To our Beloved Abdul-Baha:—

We, thy humble servants in America, rejoice that the door of communication is at last open and we beg of God that it may ever remain so.

Unworthy are we, yet we supplicate thee, we beseech thee, if it be God's will, to turn thy blessed countenance toward us, that all the regions of the West, even as the East, may be quickened by thy glorious presence.

In the past thou didst promise us, in words creative of fulfillment, that, when the hearts of the friends were united, then again thou wouldst visit America.

Our hearts are united in incessant longing for thee, in complete dependence upon thy love and thy veriest command. May our overwhelming need of thee draw thee speedily to the West and to us, who greet thee in the sacred, wondrous name of El-Abha.

Post Card from Shoghi Rabbani

Acca, Palestine,
June 11, 1919.

To Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago,

Dear brother:

. . . . A general Tablet, remarkable and detailed, has been revealed for the friends and maid-servants of God throughout the United States and Canada. It has been dispatched. I am enclosing the supplication of over 1000 American friends. Their names have been sent with the Tablet. Abdul-Baha ordered me to write to you concerning this important, momentous question. Publish in the Persian and English columns of the STAR OF THE WEST the Persian and English texts of the enclosed supplication. Then publish all the names one by one and after that publish the general Tablet in Persian as well as in English, all in the same copy of the STAR, no matter how voluminous it may become. Then send at least a couple of copies to every province in Persia, addressed to Bahai Assemblies or individuals. Also send at least one copy of the convention photo to each province of Persia, that all Persian Bahais may see what miracles have been wrought, what achievements have been made, what victories have been won, what a universal, a simultaneous response to the trumpet call of service has taken hold of the western friends. This is the Beloved's command, fulfill it. . . .

Ever yours affectionately,

Shoghi.

Outline of how Supplication was drafted

BY CARL SCHEFFLER

The greatest difficulty and hardship endured by the Bahais of America during the great war was their deprivation of means of communication with their beloved Abdul-Baha. Notwithstanding the keen realization by the firm believers of his spiritual presence in our midst to guide and protect, this physical cutting off was a really terrible experience in the work of the Cause, so that when the first wonderful reports about His Excellency came to us—the word cabled by the British Government to the Embassy here in America, telling us of him,—it was as though all clouds of trouble were rolling away and the warmth of the sunlight was again quickening our poor bodies. One heard immediately on all sides the hope expressed that we might once again be blessed by his holy presence in our midst. At the Feast held October 16, 1918, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Perron, Chicago, this hope expressed itself in action. It was decided to write a supplication to Abdul-Baha asking him to come, and at the next meeting of the House of Spirituality the members suggested that all of the friends in the country surely would join us in this great matter, and the secretary was instructed to address all the assemblies and lay the matter before them. The supplication was drafted by Miss Jean Masson, assisted by a committee from the House. All of the signatures were not received until several weeks had passed, so that in the early part of January the whole document was sent to Acca.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Power of the Influence of Baha'o'llah

Address by DR. FREDERICK W. D'EVELYN of San Francisco, delivered at the Fourth Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Monday afternoon, April 28th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

"HE IS GOD!" The Chairman has referred to the fact that I am from the West, and I am pleasantly reminded of that by the presence of our veteran and esteemed colleague, Mrs. Ford. The last time that we sat together upon the same platform was that never-to-be-forgotten, morning when, under the auspices of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, as the morning sun was driving away the clouds and the mists from the portals of the Golden Gate, heralding the advent of a new dawn, so the Nazareth, the Bethlehem of the old dispensation, gave place to the Sun of today, the City of Noor, of the new Covenant, on that morning quickened into being and into existence under the guidance of Abdul-Baha. In magnifying his commands he had revealed to us a secret of greatness and the first Bahai Congress became a reality, an instrument of God's purpose. Its potency will be measured only in eternity. To the man in the street the culminating success of the modern newspaper is the headlines, and in the few minutes that have been allotted to me I am going to talk to you in headlines, and lest I be misunderstood, I am going to tell you the things that you know.

Today, we are told, the world of humanity is inadvertent. We realize it is at variance. Today no nation, no people are confident and at ease, because confidence and security have passed away from the world of humanity. Presidents, kings, labor, capital, subjects—are all in danger. The need of a collective center, where these differences may be annulled and the oneness of unity be established, is as urgent as it is evident. In the world of divinity, quality and identity are inseparable. No duality; absolute oneness. The power and influence of BAHAI'O'LLAH are divine entities, inseparable, the perfection of unity. The perfection of unity vocalized, materialized, is the Bahai Massage, and the Bahai Message is the need of the world today. When you hear this acclaim for the first time it would be very human, it would be pardonable, if a certain measure of unbidden resentment arose within you, born into being by the very assurance of the statement and by the alleged comprehensiveness of the claim. That claim is specific rather than elaborate; it is centripetal rather than diffuse. It at one and the same time breaks down barriers, for to it they are non-existent, and overcomes difficulties; because in the onward progress of its triumph they are non-retarding. In its appeal to humanity it concedes a universality that makes all the world kin. If we were asked to classify, to align the Bahai Message with some of the great historical pronouncements of the world, we should speak of it as the Declaration of Independence.

Today in the school houses, in the halls of council, in the chambers of congress, rarely indeed are the echoes of the utterances of the great father of our country silent. Today if you pick up a dozen of the leading newspapers, the possibility is that ten of them would be again repeating his wonderful warnings against "entangling alliances." Thus contrasted, thus aligned, the Bahai Message becomes an ordinance of the most supreme inner significance, for its pronouncement is "Take ye heed, beware ye of entangling limitations."

Think, think of a God's message so curtailed, so foreshortened, that any of His entities fall outside of its boundaries unreached, unsurrounded, uninclosed. Such a message would not be comforting, would not be assuring. It would not be Godlike. It would not be glorious, and it could not be Bahai.

A few days ago I read in one of the London newspapers an article on literature, written by a special writer, in which he said, amongst other things, "The most read of the recent books is the Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, a work of twelve volumes, ten already published." A holy father just returned from Rome, was present at the interview, and he added: "Yes, and there is no book today more frequently consulted in the Vatican than the one you have just mentioned." If I were permitted to write into that, "the greatest recent book," a definition of the Bahai Message, I think I would write, "The Most Great Consummation of all God's relationship, plans and purposes bestowed upon humanity since that day when in the beginning the Word was God." Thus is it the Alpha and the Omega.

A few moments ago we spoke about the world being at variance. It might seem a disconnected sequel to claim these are victorious days, these are triumphant days. This is the cycle of deeds,—not of words, and deeds proclaim the station of the doer. Abdul-Baha says: "Yes, these are great days, the time of the end has come, the doors of the Kingdom are open, the Supreme Concourse is descending to assist all." Yes, these are great days, for back to memory, back to recognition, back to acceptance, is coming the fact that man is not merely the output of a system, nor the by-product of a community, but is a God-created, a God-claimed entity. The Bahai teachings say, the honor and the glory of man consists in the fact that amongst the beings he is the dawning place of righteousness, and adds Yes, and with divine assistance, the peace, welfare and prosperity of the world of humanity are in his hands. The Bahai Message does not tell us that all men are equal, but it tells us that the crown of humanity rests upon all alike. This Message, the incarnate power and influence of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, affirms that the birthmark, the reality of man is the Throne of Divinity. The Manifestation of today is not an accident; is not a coincidence; is not merely history;—it is the voice and the will of God, the meaning and the entity of God. Ethically it is the spiritual complement to the material development of mankind today. I say it with the conviction of every fibre of my being, that it is a normal thing, that it is a logical thing, that it is a fair-play thing, and with all the awe and the veneration that my soul is capable of, I say God could not, God would not, God dare not, deny to that thing which He says is "the dawning place of righteousness," nay, would not deny to him the opportunity of ascending to a spiritual height complementary and coequal with his permitted material development. The power and the influence of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH will make this mundane sphere of ours the great arena in which this chosen thing of God, this thing man,—all other teachings, all other dogmas, all other predictions or doubts to the contrary,—in station become the dawning place of righteousness, will attain to the victory over the city of the hearts, and will confirm and conform to the created innateness of his birthmark, his inseparable possession of "reality." The clear judgment must consider the obligation for the fulfillment of these promises. Mankind of necessity must reach the loftiest destination, the exalted grade, the supreme station—chosen for him by his Creator "in whose grasp is the kingdom of destiny and the power of execution." This is the cycle of that confirmation, the uncompromising consummation of the oneness of the world of humanity.

Look at these times and seasons. Years are no longer of equal measure. A day may mean more than a year and a flash more than a day. It is not exaggerated to say that anything can take place in the spiritual life of man today. Consider for a moment the important values attached to material speed and nearness, the physical values of speed and nearness today. Our God is marching on,—and, the question is where is humanity, ahead, abreast or in the rear? That is the most vital question for whom? For you, as an individual; for you as individuals coalesced into the masses. Our God is marching on. Where is humanity? That supreme guidance which our teachers are looking for, our guides seeking after, our congressmen yearning for, that Supreme guidance which in their limitation they term "statesmanship." Statesmanship, the greatest good for the greatest number. What is statesmanship in its essence, in its final analysis? What is it? Is it not merely the harmonizing of the spiritual movement of the age? If that movement, that spirit, is unknown, is uninterpreted, unreceived, where can be the statesmanship, where can be the efficiency, where can be the standardization? Our God is marching on, while mankind is standing afar off, aloof, because our guides have not interpreted the spiritual movement of this age. The power and the influence of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, the Bahai Message, in its potency, in its universality, in its domination, is the ally of the God that is marching on, the God that is doing great things. Yes, the Bahai Message, the power and the influence of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, the manifestation of today, is just this, it is God's ways, God's means, whereby humanity can come abreast with a God that is marching on, with a God who is fulfilling His promises, with a God who is completing His purposes. Therefore, we ask you, acquaint yourself with its teachings. Investigate its principles, exchange your ignorance for its knowledge, your weakness for its strength, your invalidism for its potency, your blindness for its illumination. You see that beautiful invention (pointing to a light filter installed upon the platform)—an unique thing, a helpful thing, but its sun, its rays, will not put the gold on the wheat, the red on the cherry, or the blush on the peach. It is a mere twilight,—twilight even as the twilight of orthodoxy, the reflection of a sun that is not. The power and the influence of BAHÁ'O'LLAH is the full orbed sun of today that gives to the seasons their quickening and to mankind his fruitage. There is no power, no power, save the power and influence of BAHÁ'O'LLAH concentered into the Bahai Message, the will and the Word of God; there is no power today save that power that can bring together beneath the same tree the hearts and the minds of the world of humanity. It is the motive power in all things; it is the mover of souls; it is the governor and the controller of the world of humanity. Be ye illumined with the light of today, don't put light filters over your soul and be shaded by the nether gloom of yesterday.

The power and influence of BAHÁ'O'LLAH is the zenith sun of today, the consummation of all God's relationships, from way back when the Word was in the beginning, when the Word was God, until this hour, the time of the end. The glory and the honor of man consists in the fact that amongst the beings he is the dawning place of righteousness. The power and the influence of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH has come to the world in this most great cycle, asking you to come back and claim your birthright, the birthright God gave you, the birthright man cannot take from you. Come back! Be illumined with the light of today and turn your sight into yourself and see that claimant standing within you, glorious, mighty and supreme!

The power and the influence of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, the Bahai Message, are just God's ways and God's means whereby humanity today can come abreast with a God who is marching on. "Blessed are those who attain."

To Live the Life

Address by MARY HANFORD FORD, at the Fourth Session of the Bahai Congress, at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Monday afternoon, April 28, 1919. Stenographically reported.

I FEEL very happy to be here this afternoon, and very humble in following the eloquent words of Dr. D'Evelyn, and as I stand here, it seems to me that perhaps it is my mission today, a very simple thing and yet a necessary thing, to follow very slightly and very superficially some of those lines in which Abdul-Baha has, we might say, taught us how we can catch up with God. Dr. D'Evelyn has been telling us of the supreme message which has been given to us, of its grandeur, of its magnificence, of its supremacy, and it seems as if ever since Abdul-Baha had begun to talk to us, he has been trying to tell us how we can catch up with that message, what we can do to lift ourselves out of personalities and into entity, out of animalism and into spirituality, out of that self-indulgence which is the curse of the natural man and into that superb effort which is the acme and attainment of the spiritual man.

And so, if I can tell you, very simply, this afternoon, just a few of the lines which Abdul-Baha has pointed out to us in that way, I shall be very happy. And one of them it makes me very glad to speak because it gives me the opportunity to say to you just a bit of some of those wonderful words which Abdul-Baha has recently been sending across the continent and across the ocean. You know, we are living in such an astounding day of tumult and endeavor, a day when all the old world is so absolutely falling to pieces that sometimes we are in despair, sometimes we say how can any great edifice ever lift its head out of this ruin and catch the light of the sun once more? Now and again these words of Abdul-Baha come to us across the ocean and across the continent and give us hope because they always practically point out a direct pathway which we must follow to attain this end. It is a pathway always along certain lines and always, on the other hand, inclusive of that great realm that is described by that little word conduct, the one word that we are most prone to forget in our march towards spiritual attainment and supremacy. And so I want to read these words of Abdul-Baha, which have been recently received by a friend in New York.

He says: "No doubt had the world of women wielded sufficient prestige, the conflagration of this war would not have set the world aflame. If the mass of women in Europe and of those in America had been enfranchised throughout all the state undoubtedly they would not agree to war. At present this war has made millions of children fatherless and millions of fathers and mothers destitute of sons; this war has snatched from pitiable sisters their brethren, this war has turned millions of women into widows and destitute of husbands, this war has made cities desolate, this war has made the very foundations of mankind quake and quiver. If in future, women, like unto men; are given the franchise, assuredly they shall prevent the occurrence of war; whereas, otherwise the matter will be difficult. Man is sanguinary and even worse than devouring beasts. Of what use is exhortation and to what amounts admonition? A mighty power is necessary in order to make an effective opposition, otherwise it will be exceedingly difficult. I pray God that the world of women may be assisted and confirmed for their purpose is universal peace."

You know how it is yourself in this new era in which we are living; how difficult we find our situation everywhere. For instance, here is the man of the old order who nevertheless has been endowed with new ideas and he has to have a little struggle with himself when instead of handing out to his wife the customary quarter for bread and tea, he is obliged to say, "My dear, my bank account is open to you," and then accept with humility the number of checks which pour in for cashing, as a result of the new and inexperienced liberty which this woman is enjoying. And on the other hand, you know, it seems a little queer to the new woman who has submitted always and whose grandmothers have submitted always, to begin suddenly to realize what it means to not only boss the household but boss the head of the household as well (laughter)—frequently realizing that unless she bosses the head of the household the household will go to the demnition bow-wows, so to speak (laughter). And you know what BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH says to us about the world of the past, about the world of the present; that it is a world of animalism, a world of cruelty, a world of self-indulgence, and that he says also this world of the past has been governed by force. That day has ended. The world of the future is to be governed by love. The world of the future is to be ruled by the spirit, not by the arm of law, even in the old sense, but by that new and wonderful knowledge of our nearness to that heavenly source of light which alone can give us wisdom and alone can carry us to the acme of our success and attainment in this world.

Look at it, this question of man and woman, from the point of view of the ideal which Abdul-Baha offers to us.

Man is the objective side of existence. Man is the objective actor in existence. He is the individual who does things outwardly. And what is woman? Woman is the subjective element in existence. While man is the fighting one, woman is the praying one. While man wields all the material forces of existence into the forms which he chooses, woman waits and listens for the pattern to be given through which those forces and into which those forces may be moulded. Always in the past the world has been dominated only by the objective side of its existent power. Is it any wonder we have had wars? Is it any wonder we have had inharmony after inharmony and injustice after injustice, and that again and again, in the eras of our history, we have had to confess that we have completely forgotten God?

And now suddenly what does Abdul-Baha say to us: That henceforth women are to be equal in franchise with the men, that women are to be equal in power with the men, that women are to sit in our council halls and women are to be recognized as our counselors. Why? They are the element of love. They are the element of creation, they are the medium through which God speaks to the world. And do you not stop in reverence and fold your hands in prayer as you gaze forward and

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! . Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

MRS. BROOKER

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Brooker, Akron, Ohio—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

The letter thou hadst written on January 22nd, 1919, was received. Praise thou the Lord, that thou hast been ushered into the divine Kingdom as one of the chosen people of God and the light of guidance hath been reflected upon thy pure heart like unto a light which is ignited in a lamp and a candle which bestows light to a gathering; thou hast organized a meeting and hast been engaged in the promulgation of divine teachings.

Rest thou assured that divine confirmations shall reach (thee) and heavenly cohorts shall assure (thee) the victory and that thyself and thy respected husband shall attain unto everlasting life and shall serve the oneness of the world of humanity, and shall bring together other souls under the shade of the pavilion of the Kingdom.

At present engage in service and you will have permission to present yourself.

Convey longing greeting to Mr. Russell Brooker and tell him: "Praise the Lord, for He hath flung open to thy face the doors of Solomon's wisdom, and pray God that He may bestow upon thee an everlasting sovereignty, for Solomon's kingship was ephemeral, it passed away and did not remain forever, while the sovereignty of the love of God is perpetual and endless. I hope that thou mayest sit on this throne and that is firmness and steadfastness in the love of God."

As to thy new business, the former trade. . . is the cause of thy comfort. The new business will engage greatly your mind. It is advisable for thee to engage in the previous trade and devote the rest of your time to spiritual matters.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

DR. OLIVE G. COUCH

To her honor, Dr. Olive G. Couch, New York City—Upon her be BAHĀ'Ō'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou attracted to the Kingdom of God!

Thy letter dated January 31st, 1919, was received. Although I am bodily far and remote, yet in spirit I associate and am intimate with you. Do not be grieved. Divine beatitude is thy possession and divine glad-tidings abide with thee. This bliss and gladness is not followed by grief and this illumination leaves no room for darkness.

At present engage in service to the Kingdom of God. Whenever the ways will be opened and the means will be fully provided by which thou mayest travel in perfect comfort and ease then thou hast permission to present thyself.

Convey my greeting to Mrs. Beede. It was a long time that the (holy) leaves were awaiting the receipt of her news, but so far no letter has been received from her. But now that you have informed us of her news the whole family has been made grateful.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

WILL LEVINGTON COMFORT.

To his honor Will Levington Comfort, through Shahnaz Waite—Upon him be Baha-El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou son of the Kingdom!

Praise be to God, that like unto a torch thou hast been ignited, and like unto a star thou hast shone. This light is the light of reality, which is divine guidance, and not a material one. It is a heavenly lamp and not an earthly one which, although it reveals objects, yet it does not discover and comprehend them, i. e., it is unaware of the world of things, and simply reveals them to the eye; while on the other hand, the light of Truth both reveals and discovers objects and does moreover comprehend them.

Praise be to God that thou hast attained to such a light.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

SHANAZ KHANUM.

To the maid-servant of God, Shanaz Khanum, Los Angeles, California—Upon her be BAHĀ'Ō'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou revered maid-servant of God!

Thy letter from Los Angeles was received. Thank divine Providence that thou hast been assisted in service and hast been the cause of the promulgation of the oneness of the world of humanity.

Not until the darkness of differences among men is dissipated with the pavilion of unity cast its shadow over all regions; otherwise rest and composure, peace and universal reconciliation are unachievable. This illumined age necessitates its fulfillment.

Every century has its own ideal which, in accord with that century, is confirmed. In this illumined era, that which is confirmed is the oneness of the world of humanity. Every soul who serves this oneness undoubtedly will be assisted.

I hope that in the Assemblies thou mayest sing praises with a sweet melody and become the cause of joy and gladness to all.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

To Live the Life

realize what that world may become when the objective side of existence has put its hands firmly into that of the subjective side of existence and both reverently and lovingly are looking to that divine Source from which alone our wisdom can arrive to us? That is what Abdul-Baha means when he says that women will prevent war. It is that woman knowing in the soul of her infinite patience, what is the divine ideal to which mankind may attain, waits patiently for its consummation and is never willing to hurry it by the crudity and the coarseness of force, and so in that world which is stretching before us through all its tumult, through all its anguish, through all its anger, there is coming this new presence of patience, this new presence of love which will wait, this new presence of kindness which will not criticize, and that is to make itself present in the world through this franchise which is given everywhere to womankind, through this council which is granted to womankind, through this freedom and this equality of comradeship which henceforth will guard and guide not only the fortunes of the world collectively, but, thank heaven, the individual fortunes of the individual man and woman who are united to consummate the life of this world. I know you have thought of the meaning of that wonderful little word, conduct, and how it applies to your life, how it applies to mine, of how it is the silver thread marking the path along which we finally reach the little haven of rest and of comfort whence we can look back and survey the anguish of the path which we have pursued because it is through conduct that we attain intuition, it is through conduct that we obtain self control, it is through conduct that we are enabled at last to stand off and look at ourselves and realize what beastly things we have been in the past which is so near us, because we may theorize and we may prophesy all that we can, and we may read holy books and we may commit them to memory, we may have every text at our tongue's end, and if we have not stopped to say, "What did I do yesterday? How did I hurt my friend? How did I forget that wonderful law which Abdul-Baha has given us as the Golden Rule of this day and the coming day?"—"Be not a cause of grief to anyone"—it is all in vain.

Be not a cause of grief to anyone. There is so much grief in this world. There is so much anguish that we cannot escape. There is so much sorrow that we cannot avoid that presently, after we have begun to realize it, and after our own heart perhaps has been burned to ashes, there is a spark left which says to us, "At least you can do this thing, you can live in your corner of the world so that no one in that corner of the world suffers from your act or word. You can do that." And what would become of us if all the world would do that? What would become of the universe if every one were doing that? Living in his corner of the world so that no other suffer through him; so that no other had a moment of grief or an added anguish because he stood there in that place?

I think often as I look forward to the future and the day when I lay my head down for its final sleep in this world and I hope its lovely awakening in the next world, I may be able to look back and say at least, in the last days of my life I remembered that I was careful not to grieve those who were next to me. I was careful to spread love as fully and as freely as possible in my passage of life. And you know that is concerned in this word conduct. That is concerned in this word service, in the word that is constantly on the lips of Abdul-Baha and which he is not willing to use just as service, but which he turns again and again into that more powerful word of servitude, which some of us come to know very well. Indeed, in these days of our existence that word servitude which imprisons us until the fleshly desire has fallen away from us, the desire for domination, the desire for supremacy, the desire to be the chief one in any place, is our salvation. And presently, when our servitude has been long and has been harsh and has been very severe, until our limbs are torn with the chains that bind us, what has happened to us? Why, a strange freedom has come, in which light blazes about us and fragrance is in our nostrils and a heavenly voice sounds through our ears, saying, "My beloved servant, thou hast done well." When you hear that voice, you know what happens to us, because it has happened to you many times. You know that you say to yourself, "Let the servitude be doubled, let it even never end, so that I may hear again those wonderful and lovely words that concern not my life here alone but all the everlasting life that stretches forever beyond us and is so different from this one, that when we have once had the tiniest glimpse of it everything in this life must necessarily fall into complete insignificance."

There is a beautiful story that Abdul-Baha tells us in his book The Mysterious Forces of Civilization. It is a wonderful story and an eloquent story, a universal story, as are all the stories which Abdul-Baha tells us, and he tells of how a king in Arabia was like many kings, given to satisfaction of his impulses and his appetites, and one day, satisfying his appetite, he fell desperately drunk, so not knowing what he did, suddenly commanded the execution of two men that he loved best in the world, and, because his word was law, his command was obeyed immediately, and the heads of his faithful servants were stricken off. In the morning when he realized how faithfully the commands of his obdurate and unobstructed will had been fulfilled, in that morning his soul could not contain the anguish that possessed him at his own wretched conduct, and so, out of ignorance and out of his stupidity, he issued another decree even worse than the first one. He said, "I will build me two houses and on the anniversary of the death of these two men whom I have slain I will sit between these two houses and whoever comes to me on one side shall be slain in memory of those whom I slew ignorantly, and whoever comes to me on the other side shall be granted the desire of his heart." So it happened that the king in traveling about the world had a most lovely and beautiful experience, because that is the grace of heaven to us, you know, that in the height of our foolishness, and of our self-indulgence, the refreshing draughts of divine ichor fall into our parched lips, and we know we are not forgotten of heaven. So he came hunting alone and forlorn, and having lost his companions, he arrived at the house of a poor sheik of the desert, who had little in his place to eat, but who received the king with the hospitality which was his habit, and seating him at his table he said to his wife, "See the little kid that we have, although it is the last one, kill it and prepare it and bring it to our guest, everything that we have." So they put it all before him on the simple table, and the king ate there with greater joy, with greater gladness, than he had ever known. Wishing to reward that kindness, as he left, he said to his host, "Come to me any time you are in trouble and I will grant you any wish that you make to me. I am at your command; my realm is at your service." So he went back to his home, but remembered that table, that hour; he could not forget it. Then by sad fate, there were a couple of years when the harvest failed, when poverty doubled, poverty struck this son of the desert, who was in reality a son of God, and his wife said to him, "What shall we do, we have nothing to eat," and he replied, "I will now go to the king, I will ask for the fulfillment of his promise and he will save us."

So, getting on the back of his horse, he flew across the desert, seeking the king, seeking salvation, and came upon the wrong side of the pathway just on the day when the king sat there to reward or to kill. The king, knowing nothing but his own obdurate material, animal, physical will, said to him, "Why have you come on this pathway and on this day. You whom I wished to reward with every blessing of my realm, and now I can only give you death?" Hanzalah, kneeling before him in dismay, said, "Only grant me one privilege, then, that I may have a year to arrange my affairs, and I will come back to you a year from today and suffer the penalty that is imposed upon me?" The king said, "I cannot grant you this without a surety; you know that well. I have you now in my hands, and how do I know what will happen if you get out of my hands?" He was accustomed to physical laws. He was accustomed to animal passion. He knew nothing about a spiritual law which over-rides all that. So the man, looking about among the courtiers, asked one and was refused, and then at last appealed to another so powerfully that his soul was quickened, and he said,

"I will be surety for him on his return." So the sheik rode away, not endowed with great earthly possession, but to prepare for the death which was to be his a year from that time. When that day came, they watched for him and watched for him and he did not come. The king, knowing only the material law of satisfaction and demand, having never heard of anything else, said: "We must slay his substitute, nothing will save him," but nevertheless waited until sunset was near, and then as the man was brought forth for execution, suddenly a warrior was descried, a horseman, on the horizon, and they waited, and he came nearer and nearer, and finally flung himself at the feet of the king, and the king, lost in astonishment, said to him: "But why are you such a fool, why have you come back to death when you had escaped, when you knew very well that justice would be satisfied by the sacrifice of your substitute." Then, lifting his head, Hanzalah said to the king, "But I could never have rested with such a conclusion as that. Does not honor hold a man, and is a physical life so precious that one would sacrifice his love of God and his love of his kind for the sake of such a miserable thing as the saving of physical existence? Why I would gladly give my life, I have arranged my affairs and I have no fear of death, it is sweet to me." The king looked at him with amazement. "You are not pale, you are not trembling, you are facing the executioner, and you are not afraid, how is this? What upholds you?" And he said, "I am the follower of my Lord, I have learned from him the secret of life, the joy of existence; long ago I heard the words of the Lord Christ, and they gave me eternal life. How could I fear when you give me the entrance into that eternal life? Is not this something to rejoice over?"

You know how it is with you in this world. You have gone on in your physical existence, you have satisfied all your desires, you have sat upon your throne, and you have slain your enemies, then suddenly the word of the Spirit falls into your heart, such a thing as you never experienced before, the word of the Spirit, the power of the Spirit, scales fall from your eyes, at last you know that you are not a physical being, that the loss of your physical life is nothing to you—instantly you stand before yourself, glorious, enfranchised, alive, living eternally, looking back with the eyes of wisdom at the paltry things for which you would have sacrificed that eternity.

And it was so with the king. "Oh," he said, "why did I not know this before? Why did I slay my friends first, and how, later, could I have built these houses and slain so many others? Oh," he cried, "tear them down quickly, and you, beloved one, you sit beside me and tell me all the secrets of this truth which has given you such power, which has given you such wisdom, which has brought you such happiness, which has taught you what nothing else can teach, what life actually is." That was what happened to the king. And Hanzalah sat sweetly beside him in his humility and talked to him; gave him noble writings; the houses were both torn down and the wicked paths were all made clear. Henceforth the king was known as the blessing and the father of all his people.

Do you think that story belongs to the past? Do you think it lies only in the fourth or fifth century in which its scene is laid, and in Arabia? It is for each one of us, because each one of us has to tear down his houses which he has built with the wrong feeling and each one of us has to take into his heart that wonderful knowledge, that message of the spirit which fills us with joy and makes us indifferent to all the voices of ambition and privilege. It brings to us the meaning of that other lovely thing that Abdul-Baha has said to us. You know we can never complete the repetition of all these wonderful words that he has said to us pointing the way of the future. He says this little word. "The divine nearness is unlimited both in this world and the next." The divine nearness is so many things, the divine nearness is the inspiring idea falling upon us from heaven, carrying with it its ideal, surrounding us so that we forget ourselves and those who are near to us, and know only the presence of that ideal and the power of that idea which consumes us until we have carried it out completely. The divine nearness is that consciousness of the word of the Spirit which sears us sometimes like a flame, and fills us sometimes like a fragrance, cutting us off again from all the meanness of the ambitions of this world and carrying us on into the mysteries of life that stretch into the other world and bring us a consciousness of God that we have never had before, a realization of His nearness, a knowledge of what the Holy Spirit is and what is the work of the Holy Spirit, so that presently we begin to see it is all that we want.

If I can have the divine nearness, if I can have the Holy Spirit, what do I care as to the texture of my gown, the height of the walls that cover me, my station, or the quality of the food that I eat? Because this divine nearness, this which must pervade the world, this which I begin to know, this which I can do my part in sharing with every one, this is the greatest blessing of existence and this is the foundation of the new world that is to be built out of the ashes of the past, and will construct everywhere again, and again those temples whose principles and gilded tops will catch the rays of the universal sun, so that they will be reflected upon all mankind and all mankind will know here on this earth what it is to live in heaven.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Declares Zionists Must Work with Other Races

Leader of Bahaim believes Neutral Government Like British Is Best for Palestine at Present—Says His Father Advocated League Half Century Ago.

BY MARION WEINSTEIN.

(From the Globe and Commercial Advertiser, New York, July 17, 1919).

WHILE the league of nations is hailed or attacked here as a Wilsonian project, out in Palestine is a religious leader who claims it first saw the light in the writings of his father, fifty years ago. He is Abdul-Baha, the son and successor of BAHHA'O'LLAH, founder of the modern cult, Bahaim.*

Abdul-Baha, or Abbas Effendi, as he is widely known in the Near East, counts hundreds of followers in America. He made a tour here in 1912, preaching his doctrine of universal love in churches and halls from coast to coast. Born in Persia in 1844, he went to Acca as a young man. He was imprisoned by the Turks for his teachings, but was released in 1908, the year of the new Ottoman constitution.

Interested in World League.

I met Abdul-Baha lately in his home in Haifa. He has many friends among the British, including General Ronald Storrs, military governor of Jerusalem, and it was a British officer who took me to him. His influence is considerable in

* Bahais understand the Word of God again was "made flesh and dwelt among us" in the appearance of BAHHA'O'LLAH. Miss Weinstein, not being acquainted with this fact, looks upon the Bahai Movement as a cult or "ism."—The Editors.

the Holy Land, but it is almost impossible to reduce it to actual numbers. I went to him curious as to his views of the future of Palestine, but he seemed more eager to talk of a matter of world importance—the league of nations.

He spoke in Persian, a well trained secretary interpreting his low, soft words in good English. Through the open windows of the large sunny salon of his modern house came the trill of songbirds in the Effendi's lovely garden. In white galabieh and turban, he fitted into the summery scene, his voice falling on the silence like a woodland echo. An ancient, venerable patriarch he seemed, with his snowy beard, a kindly patriarch, but with little of the Biblical fire.

Tells of Father's Plan.

"Fifty years ago," he began, "BAHHA'O'LLAH wrote that there must be a league of nations to establish universal peace. He worked his idea out on practical lines, too. He said every nation must choose representatives, approved by the senate, the cabinet and the ruler of the country. They were to meet to found a universal peace congress to be forever a world court of arbitration.

"BAHHA'O'LLAH saw even then, half a century ago, that unless universal peace is established, the world of humanity will continue in a state of barbarism. For it is a world of struggle for existence, of sensualism, a world of nature. Only when universal peace comes to stay will it become a world of spirit.

"I went to America myself on a mission of universal peace. I proclaimed seven years ago that Europe was an arsenal that needed but a spark to turn it into a volcano. The world leaders, I urged, must prevent this catastrophe. But they did not heed me. Now that they themselves are working for universal peace and we are soon to have a league of nations, there is no need for me to go to America again.

Message to His Followers.

"Tell my followers," Abdul-Baha continued, "that I am always asking heavenly help for them, and that my deepest desire is that they shall be the source of the enlightenment of humanity and the unity of all the races of mankind. The point of distinction among men, let them remember, is their deeds, not their beliefs or words. I charge my disciples, too, at this time to show love even toward their 'enemies.' They have no 'enemies.' The enemy of man is himself."

His religion, this leader explained, includes the highest principles of its forerunners, with this addition—it fuses them all in the pursuit of one goal, the unity of mankind in universal love. Unlike its Mohammedan neighbor, it teaches the equality of man and woman. "The world of humanity has two wings," is Abdul-Baha's view, "man and woman. If one wing is weak then the bird cannot fly."

He looks to the rebirth of religion as a result of the war. The Bolshevist movement, he believes, will prove an admonition to the religious world and send mankind back to the fold, convinced that religion is the sole source of order and peace. Bolshevism was inevitable, because religion was on the daily decline in Europe, particularly in Russia.

Has Hope for Palestine.

For Palestine Abdul-Baha has the brightest hopes. "It will develop day by day now," he declared, "in industry, in commerce, in agriculture, under an enlightened government. Up to the present the people of this country were like lost sheep. Now they have found their shepherd.

"If the Zionists will mingle with the other races and live in unity with them, they will succeed. If not, they will meet certain resistance. For the present I think a neutral government like the British administration would be best. A Jewish government might come later.

"There is too much talk today of what the Zionists are going to do here. There is no need of it. Let them come and do more and say less.

"The Zionists should make it clear that their principle is to elevate all the people here and to develop the country for all its inhabitants. This land must be developed, according to the promises of the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah and Zachariah. If they come in such a spirit they will not fail.

Must Be Open to All.

"They must not work to separate the Jews from the other Palestinians. Schools should be open to all nationalities here, business companies, etc. The Turks went down because they attempted to rule over foreign races. The British are always in power because they keep fair and promote harmony.

"This is the path to universal peace here as elsewhere—unity. We must prevent strife by all means. For 6,000 years man has been at war. It is time to try peace a little while. If it fails, we can always go back to war."

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Western States

Fourth talk by MIRZA AHMAD SOHRAB at the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress held in McAlpin Hotel, New York City, April 26-30th, 1919.

“ARISE thou amongst the people in the name of this incomparable Cause. Then summon the nations to God, the Most High, the Most Exalted!” “Conquer the cities of the hearts with this most great Name, and be thou a herald of this Call amongst all nations!” (Words of BAHÁ’O’LLÁH.)

The mission of every Bahai in this world is to promote to the extent of his ability the idea of God, the idea of beauty, the idea of right, the idea of justice and the idea of virtue. For the world of ideals is a world of reality. Once I begin to hold the idea of goodness within my mind, speak about it and banish all those tendencies which lead to evil, I create an atmosphere around myself that is bound to tell on my character. Now in this age and cycle the idea of God, the idea of divine morality, is almost forgotten. The advancing forces of material civilization have banished from the consciences of millions of men and women the idea of God. . . . Spirit, God, truth, love, have no meaning on our ears. We live a life of selfishness, we aspire after no higher realm, we are satisfied with water and clay, the appetites of the flesh satisfy us completely, we crave for no spiritual light, we yearn after no heavenly gift. Complacent and self-satisfied, we strut about as though we possessed the whole world, and yet spiritually we are poverty-stricken. We think of the rustic chatter of our village as the great wave that echoes round the world. We have banished God from our midst and cherish an illusion in our breasts.

Now the mission of the Revelation of BAHÁ’O’LLÁH is to recover for us this lost vision, to lead us back again into the Sanctuary of Holiness, to enkindle anew the fire of the love of God, to consume the veils of superstitions and imaginations, and to fill the hearts with the new ideals of God, love, beauty, constancy and happiness as portrayed in the writings of BAHÁ’O’LLÁH and Abdul-Baha.

This means that we are called upon to solve some of the most crucial problems of this age. In order to render this service, we must not lag behind, but be in the vanguard of the forces of this new ideal civilization. We must universalize our aims, spiritualize our thoughts, renew our beings, exalt our ambitions and dedicate ourselves to the service of humanity. We must become fully conscious that all past efforts and services in comparison to the efforts that we have to make after this Convention have been pastimes and child’s play. Abdul-Baha summons us to a brilliant height, the contemplation of which dazzles the mind and overpowers the heart. If we desire to put in execution his great plan, we must rise to his full stature, be imbued with his enthusiasm and drink from the chalice of his love. We must walk in his footsteps, live his life, be intoxicated with his wine and be filled with his spirit. We must be humble before his presence and obedient to his will. His kindness and forgiveness must teach us many valuable lessons, and his catholicity and simplicity inspire us to follow his example. . . .

Abdul-Baha teaches us that the Cause of the Blessed Perfection is the solution of all modern problems, and for this reason he calls upon us to arise and teach this wonderful Revelation to all men. Thus it was that on Saturday morning, April 1, 1916, while living in Bahjee, he revealed a beautiful Tablet to the friends of God in the eleven Western States, enjoining upon them to arise and teach the Cause in all those parts.

[Here followed the reading of the Tablet received in America before the doors of communication closed. It was published in the STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 7, No. 10 and Vol. 9, No. 14.]

When the believers in the Western States received the above instructions, they all arose to fulfill them, and I believe much preliminary teaching has been accomplished during the past three years. But now I bring to them another wonderful Tablet, another Magna Charta, embodying new pictures of the Kingdom and inciting them to continue their work with greater faith and hope. This second Tablet was revealed on Thursday night, February 15, 1917, in the room of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, in Acca. Many believers were present, and the rain was pouring down like a torrent. When he came to the end of the Tablet, he looked out of the window and then turned, saying: "I pray that the heavenly bounties may descend upon the Western States like this rain." And now let us for a few moments listen attentively to the translation of this Tablet:

TABLET

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Western States of the United States: New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona, Nevada, California, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Utah.—Upon them be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH EI-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful, the chosen ones of the Kingdom!

The blessed State of California bears the utmost similarity to the Holy Land—that is, the country of Palestine. The air is in the utmost temperance, the plain very spacious, and the fruits of Palestine are seen in that State in the utmost of freshness and delicacy. When Abdul-Baha was traveling and journeying through those States, he found himself in Palestine, for from every standpoint there was a perfect likeness between this region and that State. Even the shores of the Pacific ocean, in some instances, show perfect resemblance to the shores of the Holy Land—and even the flora of the Holy Land have grown on those shores—the study of which has led to much speculation and wonder.

Likewise in the State of California and other Western States, wonderful scenes of the world of nature, which bewilder the minds of men, are manifest. Lofty mountains, deep canyons, great and majestic waterfalls, and giant trees are witnessed on all sides, while its soil is in the utmost fertility and richness. That blessed State is similar to the Holy Land and that region and that country like unto a delectable paradise, in many ways identical with Palestine. Now just as there are natural resemblances, heavenly resemblances must also be acquired.

The lights of the divine traces are manifest in Palestine. The majority of the Israelitish Prophets raised the call of the Kingdom of God in this holy ground. Having spread the spiritual teachings, the nostrils of the spiritually-minded ones became fragrant, the eyes of the illumined souls become brightened, the ears were thrilled through this song, the hearts obtained eternal life from the soul-refreshing breeze of the Kingdom of God and gained supreme illumination from the splendor of the Sun of Reality. Then from this region the light was spread to Europe, America, Asia, Africa and Australia.

Now California and the other Western States must earn an ideal similarity with the Holy Land, and from that State and that region the breaths of the Holy Spirit be diffused to all parts of America and Europe, that the call of the Kingdom of God may exhilarate and rejoice all the ears, the divine principles bestow a new life, the different parties may become one party, the divergent ideas may disappear and revolve around one Unique Center, the East and the West of America may embrace each other, the anthem of the oneness of the world of humanity may confer a new life upon all the children of men, and the tabernacle of Universal Peace be pitched on the apex of America;—thus Europe and Africa may become vivified with the breaths of the Holy Spirit, this world may become another world, the body politic may attain to a new exhilaration, and just as in the State of California and other Western States the marvelous scenes of the world of nature are evident and manifest, the great signs of the Kingdom of God may also be unveiled;—so that the body may correspond with the spirit, the outward world may become a symbol of the inward world, and the mirror of the earth may become the mirror of the Kingdom, reflecting the ideal virtues of heaven.

During my journey and traveling in those parts, I beheld wonderful scenes and beautiful panoramas of nature, orchards and rivers; national parks and general conclaves; deserts, plains, meadows and prairies, and the grains and fruits of that region greatly attracted my attention; even to the present moment they are in my mind.

Particularly was I greatly pleased with the meetings in San Francisco and Oakland, the gatherings in Los Angeles, and the believers who came from the cities of other States. Whenever their faces cross my memory, immediately infinite happiness is realized.

Therefore I hope that the divine teachings like unto the rays of the sun may be diffused in all the Western States, and the blessed verse of the Koran: "It is a good city and the Lord is the Forgiver!" may become realized. Likewise, the significance of another Koranic verse: "Do ye not travel through the land and behold the traces of the Mercy of God?" become revealed in the utmost effulgence.

Praise be to God, that through the divine bounty and providence, in that region the field of service is vast, the minds are in the utmost degree of intelligence and progress, sciences and arts are being promoted, the hearts like unto mirrors are in the utmost state of purity and translucency, and the friends of God are in perfect attraction. Therefore it is hoped that meetings of teaching will be organized and instituted, and for the diffusion of the fragrances of God wise teachers may be sent to cities, even to villages.

The teachers of the Cause must be heavenly, lordly and radiant. They must be embodied spirit, personified intellect, and arise in service with the utmost firmness, steadfastness and self-sacrifice. In their journeys they must not be attached to food and clothing. They must concentrate their thoughts on the outpourings of the Kingdom of God and beg for the Confirmations of the Holy Spirit. With a divine power, with an attraction of consciousness, with heavenly glad-tidings and celestial holiness they must perfume the nostrils with the fragrances of the paradise of Abha.

COMMUNE

The following Commune is to be read by them every day:

O God! O God! This is a broken-winged bird and his flight is very slow—assist him so that he may fly toward the apex of prosperity and salvation, wing his way with the utmost joy and happiness throughout the illimitable space, raise his melody in Thy Supreme Name in all the regions, exhilarate the ears with this call, and brighten the eyes by beholding the signs of guidance!

O Lord! I am single, alone and lowly. For me there is no support save Thee, no helper except Thee and no sustainer beside Thee. Confirm me in Thy service, assist me with the cohorts of Thy angels, make me victorious in the promotion of Thy Word and suffer me to speak out Thy wisdom amongst Thy creatures. Verily, Thou art the custodian of the poor and the defender of the little ones, and verily Thou are the Powerful, the Mighty and the Unconstrained!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Ahmad Sohrab, April 1, 1919, Washington, D. C.)

When the original of the above Tablet was corrected the next morning by Abdul-Baha, he handed it to me and slapped me hard on both my cheeks, laughing heartily, saying: "It is very good. It sticks. This was thy wage for today in writing over that Tablet. Now let us go and take a walk in the streets of Acca." As he walked along the narrow lanes, he turned his face to me and said: "Speak!" The contents of the Western Tablet being fresh in my mind, I related to the Master how in 1848 gold was discovered in the stream gravels of California, and how when the news was spread, tens of thousands of persons in the Eastern States left farms, factories and homes in a mad rush for the gold fields, and how many thousands died on the way before reaching their goal.

The Beloved thought for awhile, and then said: "Consider how men, in order to gain wealth and honor, threw themselves in the midst of all kinds of danger! How cheerfully they accepted all these extraordinary hardships, left homes and factories and traveled thousands of miles through deserts and over mountains, in order to reach the gold mines! But now in this day the mines of the Kingdom of Abha are being discovered, and the precious jewels of the spirit are exposed. These mines are inexhaustible.

The more they dig the greater will be the output of the ideal precious gems, silver, gold and diamonds. The believers of the Western States must find their way from these earthly mines to the spiritual mines. They must realize how their forefathers, in order to obtain gold, underwent the most incredible adversities, exposed their lives to danger and accepted all the difficulties with a firm resolution. The friends also, in order to guide the souls, to promote the Word of God, to discover the unseen treasures of the Kingdom, and to prospect the invisible mines of the Realm of Might, must be willing to undergo any difficulty, so that they may achieve greater results and enrich the world with the boundless wealth of Truth.

“To the friends of the Western States, the self-sacrifice of the old pioneers and the patient gold-diggers must serve as a great example of perseverance. The mines of the Kingdom of Abha and their precious jewels are the praiseworthy attributes and characteristics. These divine perfections are hidden from the sight of men. The believers of God must by day and by night strive in their exposition;—so that their luster and brilliancy may increase. The material mines make man independent during his earthly life, but the mines of the Kingdom of Abha will enrich him throughout all eternity, and deliver him from crudeness, ignorance and poverty. The Western friends must become laborers in these great, spiritual mines, and fill the markets of the world with the gold and silver of the Kingdom of righteousness. For every head they must make a heavenly crown of self-sacrifice; for every neck a necklace studded with the scintillating jewels of humility; for every ear an earring of truth and obedience; for every hand a bracelet of universal service, and for every finger a ring of sympathy;—so that the wonders and beauty of the world of the Kingdom may encircle the globe.”

Another day I spoke to the Master, while he was coming out from the Tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, about the system of irrigation in Southern California, and how the waste and barren deserts are turned into a paradise of flowers, fruit trees and sweet homes. He quickly turned to me and said: “When thou travelst in those parts, tell the people: The Heavenly Irrigator appeared 70 years ago in Persia and taught His disciples how to flood the dry fields of the hearts. Through His knowledge and inspiration they were enabled to transform the waste deserts of the minds and souls into the luxuriant gardens in which the rivers of light are flowing from the inaccessible mountains of God.

“Now, O ye friends of the Western States, just as your Government is spending extraordinary effort and money in the matter of irrigation, building dams on the tablelands to save the winter rain, so that the valleys, the plains and the orchards may be flooded during the summer season,—you must also exert yourselves in the irrigation of the hearts of men. Learn ye perseverance from your universal teacher, BAHÁ'O'LLAH, who was not disheartened by any obstacle from irrigating the hearts of humanity. Kings and nations arose against Him, and banished Him to distant lands and countries. Nevertheless, whenever He entered a new place, fearlessly He occupied His time in the spiritual irrigation and the sowing of the seeds of knowledge and wisdom in the prepared fields of spirit. Through His tender care the wildernesses were changed into rose gardens, the sad hearts were made happy, the sleepy ones were awakened, and the weak ones strengthened. Irrigation! This is the real and permanent irrigation of the Lord! One drop from this water will allay the thirst of all mankind, suffering the fields of all hearts to become green and luxuriant throughout all eternity. If the ground of the spirit is flooded with this pure water, it will not be followed by any drought; its

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Allah'o'Abba!

Although Abdul-Baha's message to the Bahais of America is given indirectly through Marie Weinstein, a journalist (see reprint of article page 195), it is none the less direct and to the point. He said: "Tell my followers that I am always asking heavenly help for them, and that my deepest desire is that they shall be the source of enlightenment of humanity and the unity of all races of mankind. flowers will never fade and its freshness never pass away. I hope that the Western friends may become the spiritual irrigators of the Kingdom, allay the thirst of the thirsty ones and let the waters of divine knowledge, the ideal of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, flood the world of humanity."

. . . . Many days later, while I was following him through his garden in Haifa, he again asked me to speak. I talked about the wonderful natural scenes in the Western States. I dwelt on the hot geysers of Yellowstone Park, the wonderful waterfalls of the Yosemite Valley and the strangely formed cliffs of the Grand Canyons of Colorado. I spoke about the wooded valleys, the snow-capped mountains, the wonderful bursting springs, the shimmering lakes, the granite peaks, and the giant trees. The Master always made a big capital about my love for America, and laughed at my enthusiasm in half-earnest, half-joking manner. Then he said: "Why didst thou not tell me about these wonderful things when we were traveling in America? Now that we are living so far away, thou comest to me with such fairy tales, praising America to such an extent as though God has not created another country in the world!" Then he became serious, and said: "All these majestic scenes of nature, in reality, prove the greatness of the Creator and the antiquity of the world. This globe is indeed millions of years old, and its Creator has had no beginning and will have no ending. He has been, is and will be the Alpha and Omega. A creator presupposes creatures, just as light presupposes the existence of the sun.

"Now just as these wonderful scenes of the world of nature are witnessed in all the Western States, I hope the rare signs and traces of the Kingdom of Abha may also become incarnated and personified; such souls may appear from these States who will be considered the wonders of the age and the geniuses of the time; from their services infinite results may become manifest in the world of existence; their words be penetrative, the trees of their lives fruitful, each one a flag of the victory of the Cause of God and a column of light to guide the wanderers to the religion of God. Then the nether world will attract and in turn reflect the virtues of the world of the Kingdom. Within the short space of our lives or the lives of generations, very little changes will come over these natural scenes and no practical results are witnessed from their mineral lives. But the life and teachings of a single human wonder transforms the whole world. Columbus was a genius in his time. Consider what world-encircling results appeared from his voyage of discovery! Copernicus, Kepler, Laplace and Newton were all geniuses, and their contributions to the sciences have made them benefactors of humanity? The inventors and discoverers of telegraphy, telephony, electricity, wireless, etc., have all, through their distinguished labors and discoveries made man a monarch over the laws of nature, broadened his vision and freed him from the lower, miserable life of the savage, ever fighting with the beasts of the jungle in order to satisfy his bare wants. This is, of course, in the material world. But if we concentrate our attention on the spiritual world and the rich results issuing therefrom, we observe that through the teachings of Christ and the self-sacrifice of His disciples, Europe and America were adorned with the bright jewels of divine civilization, ferocious characters were refined and the love of humanity spread.

"In a similar manner in the Bahai Cause, there must appear extraordinary spiritual geniuses, wonders of the Kingdom of God, souls who in knowledge, sciences, sociability, tenderness, loving-kindness, universality, joyfulness, may be considered unique and peerless. Should such heavenly beings appear in the Western States, the power and the creative energy of the Kingdom of Abha will become manifest and apparent; souls who have discovered their ways to the mines of the Kingdom; souls who are the irrigators of the grounds of the hearts of humanity; souls who are the wonders of the realm of Truth. Then and not until then will the spiritual creation of the Almighty become perfected in those States; the miracles of the transforming power of the Spirit embodied, the mysteries of the Holy Books be revealed and the golden age of peace and brotherhood be established."

We all know that the Western States are thinly settled; that the population of these eleven states is only about seven million, while that of the Northeastern and Southern States together is over fifty million. Still, everyone realizes that the West is the seat of a mighty, virile civilization, that the possibilities of its development are unlimited under the wonderful promises of the Covenant of God regarding the future of that country.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'OLLAH.

The Oneness of the World of Humanity

Address by URBAIN LEDOUX* delivered at the Fifth Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Monday evening, April 28th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

GOD has given me the power of speaking to many people. It is rightly said that one may present to you the prelude of the organ, but the organ itself has been destined to chant the praise of One whose glory would extend to all parts of the universe, and that part of the universe that it took the longest to reach was the universe within. And as Ali has so beautifully and so inspiringly said, "Why worriest thou when in thee is being unfolded the universe?"

I traveled far and wide—as a pioneer I came from New France (Canada)—to all parts of the world of men and the world of earth, seeking, seeking ever seeking, for the glory of God expressed in justice and in loving service. In vain did I seek, for it was not to be found. Justice had fled from earth and loving service was expressed in inaction. And as a sunken trunk of a tree was I drifting upon the ocean of life, sinking, sinking and sinking continually into the condition manifest in certain periods of history—a dead primeval humanity. Justice, loving service, so expressive of the oneness of the world of humanity, was not there shining forth. . . .

Like a discoverer had I gone forth, possibly like Cartier, when he left St. Mahlo, to discover the new France. Like a child had he gone forth in a new world, to discover a new humanity. But the voyage was long, very long indeed, for what the child was seeking was the oneness of humanity within. There were two personalities struggling with each other, the material and the spiritual. And the material had as a motto, "Go there in the struggle of life, in the strenuous life of America; that nothing was impossible to him who willed." With that he had gone forth in material conquest, and for a certain time was spoiled that note so beautifully brought by the love of a mother, whose human tender feelings were great and whose oneness of love centered upon an only boy for whom she had waited ten years. Being absolutely material in his ambition he became part of that world of materiality that today is struggling against the true realities of life, and that we find manifested in these divisions of races, in these divisions of nations, and in these divisions of caste.

The oneness of the world of humanity can be found first of all in the conquest of the self within you! Selfishness, pride, vain-glory, social distinction, intellectual superiority, material acquirement. If you are able to sever yourself from these slaveries of pride, of selfishness, of greed, of vain-glory and of distinction of caste classifications, you will have the beginning of the assurance of oneness within yourself. It is the first and greatest struggle.

Then, if you are able to realize that there are neither Brahmans nor Pariahs in the world, and that there cannot be the distinction of classes, there cannot be any class struggle because of the fact that you shall reach up to the station of the poor, then you shall attain to the oneness of the world of humanity. But you can attain to that distinction only if you have conquered within yourself that other self which rebels against oneness; that other animated by pride, animated by selfishness and animated by greed, which divides this world today, not principally in that of an Asia, in that of a Europe, in that of an old or that of a new world; but divided into two great struggling classes of those who possess materiality and those who do not, those who possess spirituality and those who do not. These are the two great classes today, yet our eyes are continually cast upon regions, divisions geographical, racial, of nations and colors, and so forth, notwithstanding the fact that the barrier is greater in that of possession than that of non-possession, of materiality than of spirituality.

If you have conquered your materiality, then you can go forth and serve Almighty God in a manifestation of oneness with those who need to share your bounty, or rather God's bounty—for what are we but the servants of God upon earth to deliver what God has given—and yet we keep, we keep, we keep, and we rarely give but to ourselves and to those we call dear to us. As I speak to you tonight, how many homes in this city, how many homes in this state, how many homes in the world, are suffering while we in this great city are in the midst of luxury, where people are spending, spending thousands and thousands and millions of dollars in festivities of all kinds. Tonight two thousand men are assembled in the Bowery Mission, and there is a tax of one cent to each ticket they shall receive and most of them haven't got that penny to give; and we are the children of God here on the earth to deliver God's bounty, and yet thousands are here who suffer continually for the lack of the necessary things to enable them to exist. Oneness calls for your sharing all that you have with them. That is the first duty. The first duty is to share with your brother. Not simply to share what you have of money, not simply to share what you may have of garments, not simply to share what you may have of bread, but to share of yourself, of your companionship.

You say they haven't got the education; they haven't got the manners. Oh, they haven't got it, because you don't mix up with them! You haven't given them that, and God has given you talent, God has given you the possibility of elevating their life into a higher moral world, into a higher spiritual world, and you are here without putting into practice that spirit of oneness which brings the Pariah and the Brahman to each other.

This is the message of the Bahai Revelation. It is the grand message of the Bahai Revelation that Abdul-Baha and BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH have both so beautifully practiced in this world; they have shared their bounty not simply in principle but in person. They have nothing but of themselves to give in person and they gave all of that. They had only the period of life in themselves to give to humanity and they gave all of that, and the greatest message which was brought by Abdul-Baha to England and to the United States was brought in the Missions of the poor, in action, the oneness of the world of humanity. We see it is bringing together people of different color, in bringing together the Chinese and the Americans, in bringing together the South and the North. O my friends, it is in bringing together the child of the Ghetto and you, it is bringing together the Bowery man and you; it is to bring together the man who possesses and the other who possesses nothing. That is the grand work before us, brothers and sisters in the Bahai teaching. It is! It is! It is here for you to do and you have not far to travel. You have it in your midst. You have it in your midst. You have it in your midst!

And then that oneness of the world of humanity calls for you to be very tolerant of those who hold a different vision than you do as regards the economic and social questions that are agitating the world today. Christ said, "Call no one fool." Be careful of the expression that you may use whenever you designate any one that is struggling towards an equalization of the worldly and spiritual opportunities. Don't simply try to dominate them through your superior intellectuality. Rather go for a certain time and live the life with them. Share their tribulations. Share their sorrows. Share their trials and bring some joy into their life. Sometimes you may realize it is difficult for you to bring laughter upon the lips and that it may take time, if you come with silks and satins and pearls, to convince them that you are sharing with them all that you have of self and position, and you are one with them, that you are with them in a spirit of unity. Because they have eyes that see and penetrate, for they have gone through sorrows, they have gone through tribulations, and their eyes do not see simply the outward things, but they see the inward. And men, in order to be one with them, you must be in the spirit of severance, you must be the servant of the servants of God, and only in that way may you be at one with humanity—by being the servant of the servants of God, and that calls for severance.

And to be at one with the world of humanity you must then, after having given all of yourself to Almighty God and to His servants upon the earth, soar forth, delivering your material self to humanity, soar forth in the spirit of Almighty God, vibrating in harmony with His divine flow, and there, reaching out to Him, find that inspiration that will guide you on without thought of boundary, of social distinction, of racial distinction, of national distinction, unto the Kingdom of God which has been prepared for all of His children and which today is being illumined by the divine Tablets that are being revealed, being presented, to us.

Allaho'Abha!

The Seed Sowing of the Ages

Address by MRS. MAY MAXWELL of Montreal, Canada, delivered at the Fifth Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Monday evening, April 28th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

BELOVED friends: As we have gathered here day by day and night by night in this room in the heart of this great city, we must have all realized that we are in the presence of an extraordinary event, that as the torrents of living water have poured from these great creative Tablets over our souls, we have been submerged in a realm of light and beauty and love which leaves us in great amazement. It may be that the most difficult thing for the soul is to become conscious of the greatness of events with which we are contemporaneous. We look back over the history of the human race and we see how many thousand years ago God made covenant with mankind through Abraham, and in that covenant He promised that the day would come upon this dark world when the seed of Abraham should be as the stars of heaven and the sands of the sea. When Moses gave the great Tablets to the Israelitish people and they gathered on either side of the mountain and took an oath of allegiance and devotion and love and loyalty to that great covenant of steadfastness and servitude to the people, another great epoch in the seed-sowing was unfolded.

When we look back upon such periods in the world we realize their greatness. We understand their sublime significance, and yet we here gathered are living in a period so infinitely greater and more wonderful that we are dazzled by the brightness of the light so that we cannot see. Those Israelitish people fulfilled their covenant and were led away and found the Promised Land of God and then, after a period of time came the Beloved One, the Son of God, Jesus Christ, and gathered around him a little group of souls and illumined them, educated them, taught them and prepared them for the great seed-sowing of that Christian era. After their Beloved One had ascended to the supreme realm and they were left alone on earth without him they went to the mountain top and renounced all that they had in this world. They gave up their homes, their families, their possessions, all that was near and dear to them on this earthly plane of existence, and they dedicated themselves utterly to the servitude of Jesus Christ, to their Lord and their Master, to go forth and to be the torch bearers to the world of humanity. They were the seed of God in the world. Their seed and their children's seed spread and enveloped the world until today the great Christian dispensation that was sown by these early disciples has enveloped a great part of the world.

In what a day are we living, in what an age are we? We have the privilege today that those disciples had, but not after the departure of our Beloved, but while he is still in our midst. He is calling us to ascend to the mountain top, to sacrifice and renunciation, to give up all in life, because BAHÁ'O'LLAH has said in this day let no one come to me unless he have his head in his hand. Abdul-Baha is calling us again; he has for twenty years been calling this nation. We have been partially asleep and partially deaf and partially blind, but now we are awakened and because in his infinite bounty he has created a new spiritual springtime. God through the great laws of evolution has permitted the world to be harrowed and furrowed by war and sorrow and calamity until it is prepared; the soil of human hearts is prepared for the eternal seed of life, the seed of the love of the adored Beloved One. And now Abdul-Baha has sent this seed to us, the potentiality, the mystery of a seed which shall unfold throughout ages, and cycles and generations to millions and millions of human beings.

What is that seed to be? Are we not ourselves that seed? Must we not be of that pure essence that wherever we go and become implanted in that place even temporarily we impart the life of God, the life of the Covenant to the people of the world? This is the seed of life. See the whirlwind that the world has reaped in this day because they have sown their tares! Mankind has sown in selfishness, darkness, ignorance and greed, and now today it is reaping this terrible whirlwind of the flood of infinite calamities; but now Abdul-Baha is calling us to sow the seed of truth, of love, of light, of justice, of righteousness, and eternal unfathomable peace, that shall envelop all mankind for hundreds of thousands of years.

We must all realize that never from the beginning of the world until now was such a moment offered to any people. We are truly standing in that "eleventh hour," promised from the foundation of the world. You remember in the Book of Daniel it says that at the time of the end, "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they who turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." And this is that hour of consummation in which we are gathered. Everyone of us is blest beyond all the inhabitants of the earth because we have the privilege to be in the presence of the most sublime creative Word of God which is being poured upon our hearts and innate reality to create in us a new capacity and to send us forth to give life to the people of the world.

Jesus said, "Work while it is day, for soon the night cometh, when the way to the vineyard will not be so easy to find." And Abdul-Baha said, "Now while the Sun of Truth is still shining and the Son of God's Covenant is manifest, go forth and work, for soon the night time cometh and the way to the vineyard will not be so easy to find." Many years ago in Acca our Beloved Master said to us, "The time will come when the people will come here to Acca as you are coming now and they will weep and lament because they have not seen one of these days." He said, "They will tear down these gates and build gates of the most beautiful marble in the world and then the ages will roll by and new generations will come and they will bring bricks of solid gold and silver and build the gates." And then in the garden of Rizwan which sheltered BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH during his lifetime, he said, "You are privileged to enter this garden to drink of this Fountain of Light, to be in this presence during his appearance in the Temple of Man on this earth. There is no period that can be compared in this world to living in the day contemporaneous with the appearance of that Beloved One on the earth. It is different from any other time. It is life, it is joy, it is ecstasy, it is springtime, because his feet are treading this earth!"

We can hear his voice. We know that he is still guarding, and protecting and sheltering us in the midst of this dark world and never shall we have such a privilege to serve as while he is in our midst. There must be a great significance in his saying, "Soon the night time shall come and the way to the vineyard will not be so easy to find." What is this great mystery? Why is he calling on us now to go forth and sow the seed at this time, now? Because the ground is prepared, the way is made plain, the hearts are hungering and thirsting in every corner of the world, and this great capacity is created; also because the seed only germinates in the heat rays of the Sun of Truth. There is no period of love like the period when the Beloved is in our midst. He is the Beloved and we are his lovers, and while he is on the earth the heat of his love, the fire of his beauty, that love burning in the hearts of his servants is what will cause the seed which is sown to grow and germinate and expand and bring forth a great harvest. That is why he said one word spoken during the lifetime of the Beloved is worth volumes hereafter. One word spoken during this day while he is on the earth is worth volumes hereafter, and he has said, "One deed done in this day is worth the greatest deeds in the future generations."

He told us that even the words of the thieves upon the cross are known and remembered throughout all ages and throughout all nations and people because they were spoken in the lifetime of Christ while he was on the earth. They were spoken in the full blazing light of the Sun. Now we have this privilege to go forth and in the light of the Sun of Truth and the Sun of Reality and sow these seeds, and they will produce a wonderful harvest because the rays of his love are pouring upon the world. How can we do less than this for him? We have no other way of expressing our love for Abdul-Baha. This is the proof of love. It is this love that has drawn us together. He is the great magnet that has drawn us together from all parts and brought us here until we are fused and united in a love that makes us seem an absolute body, a temple. We are one people, one gathering, one congregation of the Lord in this day and he is pouring His Spirit upon us for a great purpose.

We must not leave these gatherings even for a moment, and we must not

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O ye apostles of BAHÁ'ÓLLÁH—May my life be a ransom to you!

Similarly, the Magazine, the STAR OF THE WEST, must be edited in the utmost regularity, but its contents must be the promulgator of the Cause of God—so that both in the East and the West they may become informed of the most important events.

Diary letters of Shoghi Rabbani

Written to Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.

Haifa, Palestine.

February 8, 1919.

Dear Ahmad:

The Tablet revealed yesterday to one of the tried and firm American friends disclosed general and important questions related to the future development of the Cause. I quote some of its leading passages:

“O thou firm in the Covenant! Your letter dated November 23rd, 1918, was received. Its contents indicated your being engaged in the service of the Mashrekol-Azcar, that this universal edifice may be erected. Indeed, you spare no effort in this respect and I entertain the hope that this endeavor may grow day by day. Deeds are like unto trees; for to plant a shrub is no difficult matter while the care necessary for its growth and yielding fruit is hard and difficult.

So far, effort was expended to lay the foundation of the Temple, but now its erection and completion is a difficult matter and my hope is that the friends of God may be therein assisted.

“The second question which is of vital importance is that the friends of God must strive with heart and soul to promulgate heavenly teachings and spread far and wide the light of the Kingdom. For the world of humanity has acquired, as a result of this great carnage, a great capacity for the propagation of universal peace. Ears are longing to hearken to the call of the oneness of the world of humanity, to universal reconciliation and to the rejection of ignorant prejudices.

“In fine, if all the friends of God engage in the promulgation of heavenly teachings, the establishment of universal peace shall be a foregone conclusion.

“Praise be to God, whatever has been explicitly recorded in the divine Tablets has been fully realized and all the warnings and appeals of Abdul-Baha in the temples and gatherings of America, have come to pass. At present, we hope that all will engage in the service of the Kingdom and will promulgate whatever is the will of God.

“The teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH are today the spirit of life, the means of peace and reconciliation, the cause of amity and union, and the promoter of the oneness of mankind. One should engage in such a service.”

This afternoon our Indian officer, Captain Agal Khan of Lahore, Punjab, who is a devout Moslem, keenly interested in the role that the Cause will play in the future—a traveler and observer in different regions of the West as well as the Far East, a tourist to Spain and a resident for many years in Peking, Tientsin, Tokyo and Yokohama, a scholar of the religious movements in the East—called on Abdul-Baha carrying with him the article of Abbas Ali of Rangoon, published in one of the local Indian papers of Punjab, which he had translated for Abdul-Baha into English. The article was a lucid and at the same time a striking account of the teachings of the Cause, of the early life, the declaration, the persecution and the martyrdom of the Bab and the rise of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH, his early trials, his exile, his declaration and his amazing power displayed in the distant fortress of Acca.

Abdul-Baha entertained for over an hour this diligent scholar, told him that under chains and fetters BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH propagated his teachings, the mutual arrangements of the rulers of Turkey and of Persia to quench his Light and the utter failure of their plans and intentions. Agal Khan was amazed to know that the remains of the Bab, who was shot in Tabriz, were transferred to this Holy Mount on the slopes of which, and not far distant, his tent was pitched and his camp was established. He resolutely decided to visit the shrine and if possible to visit the Holy Tomb in Acca. When he left he told Abdul-Baha that next time he would bring with him some of his Indian friends and colleagues who expressed their wish to meet the Beloved.

February 9, 1919.

Dear Ahmad:

This morning some Tablets were revealed to the friends in the United States of America. One of them, a devout and active soul has written these words to Abdul-Baha: “This humble maid-servant especially wishes to ask thee at this time, concerning the publication of two indexes which she has prepared, one to the first eight volumes of the STAR OF THE WEST, the other to the three volumes of the Tablets of Abdul-Baha. If this work does not interfere with carrying out thy instruction already given, this maid-servant would like very much to go on and work on a complete and scholarly index of all the writings. This would take years of time and the efforts of many individuals, but this maid-servant might be able to make a good beginning and she has been trained in science, mathematics and systematic arrangement, and has a steadfast longing to be engaged in this work.”

These are the efforts expended, such are the views that are being planned and so untiring are the services rendered. Although the answer to the supplication has not yet been revealed, yet one thing is sure, that Abdul-Baha will most deeply appreciate such services and will undoubtedly breathe into their life a new breath that will sustain them throughout their activities.

This afternoon being bright and warm, Abdul-Baha ascended the mountain and visited the Tomb of the Bab where the friends had assembled for their weekly Sunday gatherings, where he inquired regarding the spiritual activities of the S. P. C. students (Beirut) to which one of its members, Mr. Bahader, who is still here for a short visit to Abdul-Baha, replied that their weekly Sunday gatherings are uninterruptedly held within the college grounds. This leading to a certain statement made by the president of the college with respect to his Sunday morning Bible classes, Abdul-Baha referred to the relative standing of the Holy Books and their adaptation to their respective environment. The Old Testament, he said, is largely historical and partly states various commands and regulations. The Gospel, on the other hand, in addition to these two subjects, reveals a whole set of admonition and exhortation, of counsels and of advice. The Koran embodies all three of these and in addition reveals abstruse, scientific and mathematical problems. He then spoke in detail of the variety of the branches in mathematics and astronomy as expounded by the Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, Roman and Persian leaders and scientists. He then referred to the rise of Ptolemy, his compilation of the different theories of past mathematicians, his school in Alexandria, his book being the essence and gist of previous laws and theories and his founding the well-known Ptolemaic system. He told us how all astronomers and philosophers believed in his system and although Pythagoras and Plato revealed contradictory facts, that the Ptolemaic system was considered the immutable and correct law. Then arose that illiterate, young, inexperienced Arab leader in the Arabian peninsula, who revealed his Koran wherein the following words are incorporated: "The sun moves in a fixed place and each star moves in its own heaven." These boldly challenged the whole Ptolemaic system and shook it down to its very foundation. However, it was not until the 15th century, when the famous Copernicus discarded the baseless interpretation of the ulemas in their explanation of the two above-mentioned verses, overthrew the Ptolemaic system and asserted the truth of the statement of the illiterate Arab youth, who declared the movement of the earth and the immobility of the sun. The whole scientific world arose to the consciousness of this truth. What clearer and stronger proof may be stated for the establishment of the truth of the Mohammedan Revelation? The Koran itself abounds with similar conclusive evidences.

February 10, 1919.

Dear Ahmad:

The misery and need of the civil population of Haifa, at the time of British and allied occupation, has necessitated the formation of a Haifa Relief Fund composed of the heads of the different religious denominations and acting under the surveillance of the British authorities with a fund collected and deposited at the newly established branch of the Anglo-Egyptian Bank. The first meeting which was held at the Governorate where from the bishop to the Jewish rabbi, the religious heads had all assembled and where Abdul-Baha, through the announcement made by the military governor, contributed the noble donation of £50 and inserted his name at the head of the list of contributors, which will stand as a token of his generosity, his approval of the means undertaken to alleviate the burden of the poor and his setting the noble example to the rich and leaders of the city. This morning again I was sent to the Governor and offered him a further sum for the relief of the poor. Colonel Stanton was indeed touched and, moved by this further donation, hastened to write these lines to Abdul-Baha in token of his admiration and thanks, as follows:

"Your Eminence: I have today received from your grandson the sum of £50 as a further donation from yourself to the Haifa Relief Fund. Please accept on behalf of the committee of management, my very sincerest and most grateful thanks for this further proof of your well-known generosity and care of the poor, who will forever bless you for your liberality on their behalf. Please accept the sincerest assurance of my deepest regards and respect. (Signed) G. A. Stanton, Colonel, Military Governor."

This undoubtedly will be a stimulus for the indifferent rich men of the city who will be urged to put their hands very deeply in their pockets in order to allay the suffering and distress which in spite of all these activities is still prevalent.

The supplications that have come to-day abound with refreshing news. A letter from Bombay discloses the rise of newly attracted friends, particularly Youssef Aledollah who is one of the well known Khagetes of India. He, with Mirza Mahmood Zargkani, is yearning to visit the Beloved and will be delighted to hear of the granting of their permission. From Lausanne, Switzerland, Mr. Riaz Selim writes that the friends of God including Mr. Schwarz, Miss Knobloch, Mr. Herrigel are all, large and small, old and young, healthy and sick, at home and abroad, glad of the events that have recently transpired; they are all one soul in different bodies, united, agreed, serving and aiming to serve the oneness of the world of humanity. From southern Palestine, a letter from Sheik Amin Halabi who had drunk plentifully from the fountain of inspiration during his last stay with Abdul-Baha, indicates the attraction of two souls, deeply interested, eagerly seeking and wide awake to the new spirit of the present age. His stay in Jerusalem on his way to Beersheba had yielded good fruits and of this he was proud and for it grateful. A detailed supplication from Juanita Storch, exquisitely written, reveals the sentiments of love and of thankfulness. I have already quoted few of her characteristic lines and I cannot prevent myself from sharing with you some of its charming passages:

"How quickly these days of whirling activities are passing. History is being made in the twinkling of an eye. How storm-tortured the world is. When will it recover from the storms of hatred of mental crashing, of heart-torn agonies? Yea, and still the great Spirit hovers over us, daily waiting, patiently holding out its loving arms silently growing more and more passionate in its desire for the love of its people.

"An angel of hope walks through the Rizwan of Abha. Upon her shoulder is poised a vase filled with the rose petals of love and upheld by the right hand of wisdom. She walks through the olive groves of peace and by the beds of the sweet hyacinths of knowledge and over to the fountain of mercy. Here she kneels on the steps and sets her vase under the crystal spray of the fountain. The petals in the vase are soon covered with the water. Then this angel of hope sets this rose jar out in the brilliant Sun of Truth and leaves it there. After many days the essence of the roses gathers as oil on the surface of the water. O precious attar of the fragrances of God!

"A picture of the Master comes to me as he holds his rosary in hand outstretched to all who heed to this heavenly call. A picture of the Master comes to me as he holds his rosary, thinking of friends both far and near as pearls of his heart. A picture of the Master comes to me as he holds his rosary, chanting in a prayerful hour, 'Glory to the Most Great Power.'"

To this profusion of genuine sentiments and to this authoress of tender feelings, Abdul-Baha not only spends the days in revealing his words of appreciation, but even until late at night when everything is hushed in silence and every tongue is at rest, then does the wakeful Beloved reveal his soothing words and his precious lines. The experience of last night afforded a striking illustration and evidenced the close attachment the Beloved feels for his friends and his maid-servants. As I am writing these lines, I am again moved to present myself in his presence and take down his words in response to the recently arrived supplications.

February 11, 1919.

Dear Ahmad:

Another veil is lifted. News as contained in letters, the first so far since the outbreak of the war, have reached us from Persia as well as from India. Meager and insufficient as the news is at present, yet it assures us of the welfare of the friends. Although few have succumbed to the trials and calamities occasioned by the war, such as the reported death of Neyerre Lina, Bamandar and Mirza Naim of Teheran, three of the choicest friends in the Cause, yet consolation lies in the safety and well-being of the mass of the friends, their unanimous rise to herald the Kingdom, to tear asunder the veils of concealment and prudence and their unrestricted, unhampered activity in the Cause of God. Their meetings, notwithstanding famine, pestilence, rapine, internal war and isolation from the Holy Land, have been regularly conducted and elaborately organized. In Teheran, the most active center of Persia, the friends associate, deal and transact as Bahais, openly declaring their faith, emphatically and fearlessly delivering the message and gathering in their flood men of every class, of every denomination and of every sect—as Abdul-Baha has already repeatedly intimated in his blessed Tablets for Persia, Russia and Egypt, the only group and the one body which is able and wields the necessary power to assure for Persia her integrity, her weal and her prosperity. Factions and parties have failed in their aims and have met disappointment in the realization of their aspirations. The Nationalists, the Reactionaries, the Liberals and the Democrats have made Persia a desolate country, while these wanderers and strangers shall soon, God willing, render a distinguished service to Persia and to her sons, for we hold fast to effective means and are attached to powerful souls. Indeed, this wish of the Beloved is being realized and fulfilled, for at present amid the agitation and uproar that still prevails in Persia, the qualities of trustworthiness, truthfulness, obedience, frankness, conscientiousness and loyalty are exclusively embodied in the friends of God—so much so that a government that has persecuted, tortured, exiled, burned and devastated the homes of those who were related to this Cause, has now placed its full confidence and has elected a Bahai to be its representative at the great International Congress sitting at Paris.

Abdul-Baha spent the whole day indoors, with no outstanding event marking the activities of the day save a detailed telegram bearing your signature, dated February 10th, and reading as follows:

“With thy divine assistance leave now on Yahoshi Maru Japanese steamer direct for New York via Gilera. All things perfect, traveling first class. Am only passenger, fare 38 pounds. Mahmond Noushogadi, one of friends helped me in this. Beg thy favor and Tablet for him.”

Your sailing directly to New York was providential and just the will and desire of the Beloved. A good start. I wish you a comfortable and speedy voyage.

Shoghi Rabbani.

 —Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O my dear children!

Your letter was received. A degree of joy was attained that is beyond oral as well as written expression that, praise be to God, the power of the Kingdom of God has trained such children who from their early childhood eagerly wish to acquire a Bahai education that they may from the period of their childhood engage in service to the world of humanity.

My highest wish and desire is that ye who are my children may be educated according to the teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and may receive a Bahai training; that ye may each become an ignited candle of the world of humanity, may be devoted to the service of all mankind, may give up your rest and comfort, so that ye may become the cause of the tranquillity of the world of creation.

Such is my hope for you and I trust that ye may become the cause of my joy and gladness in the Kingdom of God.

I have sent your letter to Persia that from that country the Bahai children may write you an answer.

Upon ye be Baha-el-Abhá!

ELIZABETH HERLITZ

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Elizabeth Herlitz, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou who art enkindled with the fire of the love of God!

Thy letter was received. Thy gladness made me happy that, praise be to God, that torch has been lit and the chamber of thy heart and soul illumined and resplendent. Do not consider thy capacity and worth. Turn thy face to the Abhá Kingdom for that shower of perpetual bounty causes flowers and lilies to grow from stones, and that ray from the Sun of Truth breeds a shining diamond in a heart of stone.

Ever add to thy hope and endeavor that the supreme favor may be made manifest and the glorious bounty be made resplendent.

Convey my utmost love and kindness to thy dear and respected husband.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abhá!

JULIET THOMPSON

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Juliet Thompson—Upon her be Baha-el-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou beloved maid-servant of God!

. . . . Add as much as ye can to love and affinity and produce ye amongst yourselves unity and agreement. Put ye in practice the principles of consultation. . . .

Do ye not refer regarding any matter in these days to the President of the Republic.

Strive ye as far as ye can in the establishment of love and reconciliation amongst the religions and service to the oneness of the world of humanity; perchance, God willing, universal peace may be founded and all the communities and religions of the world may usher under the unicolor shade of the canopy of the Merciful,—that this dark cloud of hate and animosity amongst the religions and nations may be scattered from the horizon of the world and the light of love and fellowship may dawn and flood all the regions.

Convey on my behalf to the attracted maid-servant of God, Mrs. Maxwell, the greeting of heart. I beg of God that she may become confirmed and assisted in all affairs.

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

The Seed Sowing of the Ages

leave them when the final Tablet is given to us and we have heard its wonderful message. Then we must stay together, all whose hearts are touched and moved by this great force, we must come together and work to carry out this plan. We must grasp this wonderful opportunity and realize that the like of this has never been given to any people in any time from the beginning of the world until today.

Today, heralding the Kingdom is the magnetic force of the world of humanity because there is great richness in the souls. The divine teachings are the spirit of this age; they are the sun of this age. Every soul must endeavor in order that the veils may be torn away from the eyes, then instantly they see the Sun, and the heart and the eyes become illumined thereby.

Now, through the assistance and favor of God, this power of guidance and this merciful bestowal are found in thee! Therefore, with the utmost power go forward so that to the mouldering bones thou carriest life, to the blind eyes thou givest sight, quickening souls that are depressed—for every road will in the end become crooked except the road of the Kingdom, which day by day becomes straighter!

Unquestionably the heavenly melody cannot be measured by the melody of the earth, and the artificial lamps cannot be measured by the heavenly Sun. Therefore, one must strive for whatsoever is eternal and everlasting in order day by day to become more illumined, day by day to grow stronger and day by day find new life.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

“These are the Teachings which are the Spirit of this Century and the Light of this Age”

RECENT TABLET TO THE PARIS ASSEMBLY

To the friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful One, in Paris, France—Upon them be the Glory of God El-Abha!

He Is God!

O friends of God!

Your letter was received through Mrs. Stannard. Its contents gave me the utmost joy, for—Praise be to God!—the Spiritual Meeting has been organized also in Paris. Confirmed believers come together and engage in speaking of the Kingdom of God, in seeking the Truth, and in speaking the teachings which are the spirit of this age:

The unity of mankind.

The establishment of universal peace, right and justice.

Showing that religion must be conducive to harmony amongst men, and conforming to reason and science.

The equality of men and women.

Freedom and liberty for all.

The enlightenment of heavenly morals.

Love for all men and even for animals.

The universalization of general knowledge.

A profession, trade, agriculture, are worshipping God. A farmer who cultivates his land with the utmost application is like a worshiper who, with deepest reverence and humility, prays to God in a temple. When the laborer works honestly and sincerely it is as though he were praying.

These are the teachings which are the spirit of this century and the light of this age. Whoever inhales their fragrance is drawn to them, especially as they are confirmed by the Testament and the Covenant, the Covenant which is the cause of illuminating the world, which gives the Spirit of Life, makes souls enlightened, divine and celestial, causes them to shine like a light and transforms them into scintillating stars.

O friends of Paris! Know that no soul is quickened except through the spirit of the Covenant, no eye is illumined except by the light of the Covenant, no ear is thrilled except by the melody of the Covenant, and no heart shows forth the divine sentiments except by the bounty of the Covenant. The people of Paris are full of enthusiasm and become attracted with the utmost swiftness. Therefore, the fire of the love of God will burn intensely and spread everywhere.

Some of the regions of Europe are extremely enthusiastic. Day by day more souls enter the Cause. You have heard of this certainty. Now, make an effort, and with all your might enkindle the fire of love of the Covenant, so that Paris may surpass the other regions; and if the Covenant is made to shine forth as it should, in a short time wonderful results will become apparent; for, in this day, the moving power throughout the whole world is the power of the Covenant: it is the artery pulsating in the body of the phenomenal.

To sum up, I am greatly pleased with these few souls who are in Paris, and I love you very much. I hope that you will fill the meeting with enthusiasm, and be the cause of guidance to others. Convey greetings on my behalf to each one, and upon you be greetings and praises.

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Dominion of Canada

Tablet* of ABDUL-BAHA read at the Fifth Session of the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress, held in McAlphin Hotel, New York City, April 26-30, 1919.

TABLET

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Mackenzie, Keewateen, Ungava, Franklin Islands and Greenland—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye kind friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful!

In the great Koran, God says: "Thou shalt see no difference in the creatures of God." In other words, He says: From the ideal standpoint, there is no variation between the creatures of God, because they are all created by Him. From the above premise, a conclusion is drawn, that there is even no difference between the various countries; nevertheless the future of the Dominion of Canada is very great, and its historical events infinitely glorious. Thus it shall become the object of the Glance of Providence and the manifestation of the favors of the Supreme Lord.

Abdul-Baha during his journey and sojourn through that Dominion obtained the utmost joy. Before my departure, many souls warned me not to travel to Montreal, saying, the majority of the inhabitants are Catholics, and are in the utmost fanaticism, that they are submerged in the sea of imitations, that they have not the capability to hearken to the Call of the Kingdom of God, that the veil of bigotry has so covered the eyes that they have deprived themselves from beholding the signs of the Most Great Guidance, and that the dogmas have taken possession of the hearts entirely, leaving no trace of Reality. They asserted that should the Sun of Reality shine with perfect splendor, throughout that Dominion, the dark, impenetrable clouds of superstitions had so enveloped the horizon that it would be utterly impossible for anyone to behold its rays.

*NOTE—This second Tablet for the Canadian friends was revealed February 21, 1917, in the room of BAHA'O'LLAH at Acca. The first Tablet in the Divine Plan for the Dominion of Canada was revealed April 5, 1916, in the garden of the Blessed Tomb of BAHA'O'LLAH at Bahjee; it was published in the STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. 7, No. 10 and Vol. 9, No. 14.—The Editors.

But these stories did not have any effect on the resolution of Abdul-Baha. He, trusting in God, turned his face toward Montreal. When he entered that city he observed all the doors open, he found the hearts in the utmost receptivity and the ideal power of the Kingdom of God removing every obstacle and obstruction. In the churches and meetings of that Dominion he called men to the Kingdom of God with the utmost joy, and scattered such seeds which will be irrigated with the hand of divine power. Undoubtedly those seeds will grow, becoming green and verdant, and many rich harvests will be gathered. In the promotion of the divine principles he found no antagonist and no adversary. The believers he met in that city were in the utmost spirituality, and attracted by the fragrances of God. He found that through the effort of the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Maxwell, a number of the sons and daughters of the Kingdom in that Dominion were gathered together and associated with each other, increasing this joyous exhilaration day by day. The time of sojourn was limited to a number of days, but the results in the future are inexhaustible. When a farmer comes into the possession of a virgin soil, in a short time he will bring under cultivation a large field. Therefore, I hope that in the future Montreal may become so stirred, that the melody of the Kingdom may travel to all parts of the world from that Dominion and the breaths of the Holy Spirit may spread from that center to the east and the west of America.

O ye believers of God! Do ye not look upon the smallness of your number and the multitudes of the nations. Five grains of wheat will be endowed with heavenly blessing, whereas a thousand tons of tares will yield no results or effect. One fruitful tree will be conducive to the life of society, whereas a thousand forests of wild trees offer no fruits. The plain is covered with pebbles, but precious stones are rare. One pearl is better than a thousand wildernesses of sand; especially this pearl of great price, which is endowed with divine blessing. Ere long thousands of other pearls will be born from it. When that pearl associates and becomes the intimate of the pebbles, they also all change into pearls.

Therefore, I repeat, that the future of Canada, whether from the standpoint of civilization or from the viewpoint of the virtues of the Kingdom, is very great. Day by day civilization and freedom shall increase. Likewise the cloud of the Kingdom will water the seeds of guidance sown in that Dominion. Consequently, rest ye not, seek ye no composure, attach not yourselves to the luxuries of this ephemeral world, free yourselves from every attachment, and strive with heart and soul to become fully established in the Kingdom of God. Gain ye the heavenly treasures. Day by day become ye more illumined. Draw ye nearer and nearer unto the Threshold of Oneness. Become ye the manifestors of spiritual favors and the dawning-places of infinite lights! If it is possible, send ye teachers to other portions of Canada, likewise dispatch ye teachers to Greenland and the home of the Eskimos.

As regards the teachers, they must completely divest themselves from the old garments and be invested with a new garment. According to the statement of Christ, they must attain to the station of rebirth:—that is, whereas in the first instance they were born from the womb of the mother, this time they must be born from the womb of the world of nature. Just as they are now totally unaware of the experiences of the foetal world, they must also forget entirely the defects of the world of nature. They must be baptized with the water of Life, the fire of the love of God and the breaths of the Holy Spirit; be satisfied with little food, but take a large portion from the heavenly table. They must disengage themselves from temptation and covetousness, and be filled with the Spirit. Through the effect of their pure breath, they must change the stone into the brilliant ruby and the shell into pearl. Like unto the cloud of vernal shower, they must transform the black soil into the rose-garden and orchard. They must make the blind seeing, the deaf hearing, the extinguished one enkindled and set aglow, and the dead quickened.

Upon ye be BAHA'O'LLAH El-Abha!

The spreaders of the fragrances of God should peruse every morning the following supplication:

COMMUNE

Praise be to Thee, O God! Verily these are Thy servants, who are attracted by the fragrances of Thy mercifulness, enkindled by the ignited fire in the tree of Thy Singleness and their eyes are brightened by beholding the effulgences of the light in the Sinai of Thy Oneness!

O Lord! Loosen their tongues in Thy commemoration amongst Thy people; suffer them to speak Thy praise through Thy favor and grace, assist them with the cohorts of Thy angels, strengthen their loins in Thy service and make them the signs of Thy guidance amongst Thy creatures!

Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Exalted, the Pardoner and the Merciful!

O God! O God! Thou beholdest this weak one begging the strength of Thy Kingdom! This poor one supplicating the treasures of Thy heaven! This thirsty one longing for Thy fountain of the water of Eternal Life! This sick one invoking Thy perfect recovery through Thy boundless mercy, which Thou hast specialized for Thy chosen servants in Thy Supreme Kingdom!

O Lord! I have no other helper save Thee; no other comforter beside Thee, and no other sustainer except Thee! Assist me with Thy angels in the diffusion of Thy holy fragrances and the dissemination of Thy teachings amongst Thy elected people!

O Lord! Suffer me to sever myself from aught else save Thee, holding fast to the hem of Thy garment; make me sincere in Thy religion, firm in Thy love and living in accordance with that which Thou hast commanded me in Thy Book.

Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty and the Omnipotent!

Recent Tablets from Abdul-Baha to American Bahais

CORINNE TRUE

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Corinne True, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Your numerous letters have been received. The question of the Mashrekol-Azkar is of supreme importance and of great results. It is the first edifice to be placed in that country and—Praise be to the Almighty!—the friends of God, all, from all parts are contributing. Numerous designs for its erection have been drafted. One of these designs must be chosen in the Convention.

His honor, Mr. Albert Vail is prepared and has capacity for great services. From the favors of God I hope that he may enkindle in the globe of that land a light that shall illumine with its rays of guidance the vicinity and the surrounding regions.

The organization of joint assemblies for white and colored people shall manifest the oneness of the world of humanity; shall dissipate totally and eradicate ignorant racial fanaticism, and shall satisfy all from the fountain of the water of Life.

We have cabled Mr. Remy to postpone his tour, for his presence, in these days, in America is necessary. In reality, he has been and is engaged in the utmost power in service and I love him infinitely, and verily he merits this love of Abdul-Baha.

. Convey on my behalf the utmost love and kindness to Miss Jean Masson for she has expended the utmost effort in writing the article in the newspaper. She serves thereby the Kingdom of God and promulgates divine teachings. Deal ye with love and kindness with Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.

God wishes love, unity and harmony. Upon this exert ye all effort. This is the cause of the glory of God; this is the cause of drawing near to the court of the Almighty, and this is the cause of entrance into the Kingdom of God.

Convey on my behalf, to Dr. Zia (Bagdadi) the utmost love and kindness. In my estimation, he is very near, for he is the son of his honor Agha Muhammed Mustafa.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Haifa, Palestine, May 23rd, 1919.)

ROY C. WILHELM

To his honor Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, New York, N. Y.—Upon him be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant and the Testament!

Thy letters dated March 22nd and 29th, as well as thy card of April 11th, were received. The organization of the meeting representative of different denominations in New York, at which all religions and sects had affiliated together in the utmost love and harmony, was conducive to extreme joy.

My hope is that meetings of such nature may often be organized so that representatives of all the different races, religions, sects and countries of the world may in the utmost love embrace one another, that no trace of bigotry and of ignorant prejudice, of obstinacy and rancour may remain, and the pavilion and canopy of the oneness of the world of humanity may be raised upon the apex of the world. For all men are the sheep of God and divine providence the kind and loving Shepherd.

Similarly the meeting that had been called at Washington, my hope is that remarkable consequences may result therefrom. . . .

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Haifa, Palestine, May 25th, 1919.)

KOKAB MAC CUTCHEON

To the maid-servant of God, Kokab Mac-Cutcheon, Minneapolis, Minnesota—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou brilliant Kokab (Star)!

Praise be to God! Thou hast become resplendent with the light of guidance and from the bestowals of the Kingdom of God thou hast partaken a share and a portion. In tests thou hast remained firm and upright.

At present thy purpose is to organize a meeting and to guide the souls in the divine Kingdom. Excellent is thy intention. Found thou this assembly in thy own home and arise in the guidance of souls.

Be thou not grieved on account of the departure of thy father, mother and brother because they became delivered from the world which is full of sadness and sorrow and they have hastened to the realm of joy. They have become freed from the fetters of this prison and soared to the divine court.

Thou hast asked for permission to come. At present your presence there is necessary, so that the Cause may be established. After the establishment of the Cause thou hast permission to come.

Should it be possible for thee to establish a school for the Bahai children and teach, it will be exceedingly acceptable.

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHÁ ABBAS.

CORA DITMARS

To the maid-servant of God, Cora Ditmars, Spokane, Washington—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast exerted a great effort for that imprisoned person. Perhaps it may prove to be fruitful. Tell him, however, that the denizens of the world are confined in the prison of nature—a prison that is continuous and eternal. If thou art at present restrained within the limits of a temporary prison, be not grieved at this; my hope is that thou mayest be emancipated from the prison of nature and may attain unto the court of everlasting Life. Pray to God day and night and beg forgiveness and pardon. The omnipotence of God shall solve every difficulty.

O thou dear maid-servant of God! Praise be to God, thou art endowed with a pure heart and an exalted determination. Thou hast an eloquent tongue and givest to every person a share and portion of the teachings of God.

Abdul-Baha does not seek membership at the Peace Congress. He promulgates peace through the power of the Word of God. It is impossible to establish universal peace save through this power.

Convey on my behalf to those souls whose names thou hast mentioned in thy letter, greeting and kindness. I pray God that they may be confirmed in service to the Kingdom of God.

It is preferable that in the meetings, one of the attendants should read or chant the Tablets of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and the others listen to the reading.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHÁ ABBAS.

ANNIE L. PARMERTON

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Annie L. Parmerton, Cincinnati, Ohio—Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant and the Testament!

Your detailed letter dated April 30th, 1919, was received. It contained joy-

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

ful tidings that—Praise be to God!—thou hast been assisted to raise the call of the Kingdom and hast become the cause of the guidance of many a soul. In assemblies thou hast shed light like unto a candle, has eloquently spoken and hast promulgated the divine teachings. Today whosoever arises to serve the Kingdom, heavenly angels shall confirm him, spiritual forces shall be his help and support, the breaths of the Holy Spirit shall vivify his heart and all existent beings will be his assistants.

Consider how all the contingent beings have supported and served those blessed souls who have arisen in service to the Kingdom. A fisherman became the most great Peter; Mary Magdelene, only a peasant, gained a precedence of the queens of the world, for a hundred-thousand queens have come and gone and no trace and memory have they left behind, but Mary Magdelene to the present day, like unto a star, is shining from the horizon of the most Supreme Glory. This is what is meant by everlasting life, by baptism with the Holy Spirit and by being born again to which Christ refers.

Convey on behalf of Abdul-Baha the utmost love and longing to the friends in St. Louis, in Cincinnati and in Kansas City, and to the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Jones. From the bounties of God I hope that, through spiritual power and the remedy of the Spirit of God, thou mayest acquire physical health.

As to the questions thou hast asked: Concerning Malachi, chapter 3, verses 16, 17 and 18 refer to the friends of God, and in St. Matthew, chapter 25, the object of verses 31, 32 and 33 is the Blessed Beauty. As to Micah, chapter 5, the 4th verse refers to Christ. In Zephaniah, chapter 1, verses 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18, and in Zechariah, chapter 2, verses 10, 11, 12 and 13, and in St. Luke, chapter 21, verses 20 to the end—all these refer to the century of the Blessed Beauty.

Upon thee be Baha-EI-Abha!

HARLAN FOSTER OBER

To his honor, Mr. Harlan Foster Ober, Cambridge, Massachusetts—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Your detailed letter was received. Praise be to God, that in the utmost energy, the friends of God have arisen to promulgate heavenly teachings and are self-sacrificing from every standpoint. Verily, this is the sign of the confirmations of the divine Kingdom which, like unto the sun, are manifest and evident. The sending of teachers to different parts is highly acceptable and praiseworthy. Act in accordance with the instructions previously sent.

Today the stirring power that exhibits itself throughout all regions is the power of the Covenant which, like unto the artery, beats and pulsates in the body of the world. He who is firmer in the Covenant is more assisted, just as ye are manifestly witnessing how firm souls are enkindled, attracted and confirmed.

Strive, therefore, day and night that ye may cause the hearts to become firm and resolute. The journey of teachers to different parts is like unto the rays of the sun which radiate from a central point to the surrounding regions and undoubtedly great illumination will be obtained.

You had inquired concerning the financial question of the Mashrekol-Azkar and the expenses of the teachers. Appropriation of the Mashrekol-Azkar fund for purposes different from those that pertain to the Temple is not permissible and conversely the teaching fund is not to be used for Mashrekol-Azkar purposes. Both should be used in their own respective spheres. If it is not done accordingly matters will be completely upset. The future should be taken into consideration and not the present. I beg God that He may confirm you always in that which is the cause of the gladness of your heart.

Concerning the STAR OF THE WEST, the organ must be so promulgated in America and Persia that at least its necessary expenses may be provided. Upon this point a letter shall be written to Persia.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abhá!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

EXECUTIVE BOARD OF BAHAI
TEMPLE UNITY

To the members of the Executive Board of the Mashrekol-Azkar—Upon them
be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O ye blessed souls!

Praise be to God, that ye have been confirmed with such a supreme bounty and have arisen with all your power in the service of the Kingdom, which is no other than service to the oneness of the world of humanity.

The magnet attracts unto itself the iron, while this promulgation of divine teachings attracts heavenly confirmation. Soon ye shall consider what a profound effect it shall exert and what a manifest sign it shall display.

I am greatly pleased with you, for day and night ye concentrate your time upon the commemoration of God, that ye seek the divine good-pleasure, pray for heavenly bounty and are firm in the Covenant.

Upon ye be Baha-El-Abhá!

SARAH VAN WINKLE

To the maid-servant of God, Sarah Van Winkle, Boston, Massachusetts—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast written that in view of the questions of violation thou art perturbed. There is no occasion for perturbation for the Blessed Beauty has closed all doors of error and doubt and has entered with all the friends into a Covenant and a Testament, beginning first with the Aghsans, the Afnans and the relatives. Explicitly and in a way that shuts out all interpretation, he says that "after My ascension, turn your faces toward him who has branched from the Pre-Existent Root," and then he manifestly says that by him who is branched from the Pre-Existent such a person is meant. In fine, he has appointed the Center of the Covenant as the authority and the Expounder of the Book. Now it must be either said that the Blessed Beauty has done wrong and was ignorant of the fact that this person deserved this station, or obedience should be shown. In brief, it must be either said that the Blessed Beauty was wrong or right, there is no third alternative. And furthermore, through the assistance and the bounty of the Blessed Beauty, a power and might has been displayed by the Center of the Covenant that all the contemporary great men and philosophers are amazed, and bear witness to the fact. There should be no occasion therefore for agitation. If, God forbid, a weakness and inability is exhibited, how will Bahai unity be preserved and how will the teachings of the Blessed Beauty be promulgated? Will they be promulgated through the senseless words of those who pretend to be philosophers, or through the doubts of the people of violation and lust? In brief, strive thou to remain firm in the Covenant and under the guarding protection of His Highness the Merciful.

Convey on my behalf to the maid-servant of God, Miss Wilson, the utmost kindness.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

MARTHA ROOT

To the maid-servant of God, Martha Root, Cambridge Springs, Pennsylvania—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy detailed and brief letters have all been received, and have been attentively perused. Praise be to God, they imparted glad-tidings and joyful news. Thou art indeed serving in the path of God, art with all thy energy showing love to others, art raising the call of the Kingdom and art illumining the hearts of men. Rest thou assured that the confirmations of the Kingdom shall encompass thee and thou shalt become the recipient of the bounties of the Lord of Hosts. Strive as much as possible to be ever active, travel to the north and south of that land and summon all to the oneness of the world of humanity and to universal peace, saying: "O ye men! His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH has, fifty years ago, laid the foundation of universal peace. He even addressed epistles to the kings wherein he declared that war destroys the foundation of the world of humanity, that peace is the cause of everlasting life and that a great danger awaiteth the world of mankind. Likewise, Abdul-Baha, prior to this world war and three years before its outbreak traveled throughout Europe and America and raised his call at all gatherings, temples and churches saying: 'O ye who are present! The continent of Europe has become a huge arsenal abounding with combustible material and below which are stored inflammable materials which only a spark will set aflame and will shake the world to its very foundation. O ye who are wise! Strive perchance these inflammable materials will not be set aflame.' But the appeal was not heeded and therefore this great carnage has come to pass. At present all the peoples have realized what a great calamity war is, that war turns man into a rapacious animal, razes to the ground flourishing cities and towns and causes the foundation of mankind to totter. As all men have been awakened and are harkening to the call, it is time for the promulgation of universal peace—a peace which has for its basis right and justice; so that mankind will not be exposed to danger. At present it is the dawn of universal peace, we hope that its sun will soon shine and flood the East and the West with its light. The establishment of universal peace is not possible save through the power of the Word of God and hence one must endeavor to promote the Word of God and thereby establish universal peace. Strive at present as much as possible to raise the call of the divine Kingdom for this call bestows the Spirit of Life. Endeavor to raise the call of the Covenant and the Testament for the power of the Covenant, like unto arteries, pulsates in the body of the world!”

Thou hast mentioned a great number of souls in thy letter. Verily each one of them deserves a separate letter, particularly some who, with all their power, are serving the Kingdom of God, have no purpose save the common weal and no aim except the exercise of the utmost love and kindness to each and all the individuals of the world of humanity. These souls, although they pertain to the nether world, yet their souls belong to the world of spirit; i. e., they have been vivified by the breath of spiritual life. Their hearts are the mirrors of the Sun of Truth wherein this sun shines with the utmost splendor. Convey on my behalf to each of those souls the utmost love and kindness and tell them that day and night I entreat and supplicate to the Kingdom of Glory with the utmost humility and lowliness and beg for those souls heavenly confirmations.

Thou hadst written, concerning the friends of Pittsburgh, that misunderstanding has been caused among them. Misunderstanding cannot be eliminated by any power save that of the Covenant.

The power of the Covenant is all-inclusive and solves all difficulties, for explicitly and by the Supreme Pen it is declared that whatever misunderstanding takes place, ye must refer to the Center of the Covenant for he eliminates all difficulties. Therefore, no power will do away with misunderstanding among the friends except the Covenant and the Testament of God. Encourage and draw, therefore, all the friends to firmness in the Covenant and the Testament. His Holiness Christ said to Peter: “Thou art a rock and upon this rock I shall build my Temple.” This is not written by the Supreme Pen of Christ and does not manifestly command anyone to turn his face to him and has not been revealed and recorded in the book of His Holiness Christ. It is only a tradition transmitted by the Apostles. This tradition, however, has exacted obedience from all and has eliminated all misunderstanding among the Apostles and the Christians. At present this is the Book of the Covenant and not a tradition and is revealed by the Supreme Pen and not transmitted orally. He explicitly declares that “ye must turn after Me to the Center of the Covenant and whatever misunderstanding may happen he is its Expounder, and whatever he says it is right.” He made it all-exclusive and this Tablet is the last one which has been revealed by the Supreme Pen before ascension. All previous books are subordinate to this Book of the Covenant for it has been revealed subsequently to all the previous ones. He has named it the “Book of the Covenant” and, therefore, consider that if the friends remain firm in the Covenant, will there be any misunderstanding among them? No, by God! Except those souls who have an evil intention and are thinking of leadership and of forming a party; those souls, although they have written epistles with their own pen and have execrated the violators denouncing them as having destroyed the foundation of the monument erected by His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH and have written that he has written this Covenant with his own pen and that whoever deviated the least from the Center of the Covenant is of the people of treachery and well deserves the wrath of God—these souls are themselves at present among the pioneers of violation. This is because of their personal motives for they had thought of securing leadership and wealth, but when they considered that in remaining firm in the Covenant their purpose would not be realized, they deviated from it. Those souls must have been either at first truthful and now disloyal or at first disloyal and now truthful. At any rate their lie is manifest. Notwithstanding this, some souls who are not aware of this fact waver when those cast the seeds of suspicion. Awaken all the people and send a copy of this letter to Mr. Remey, Mrs. Goodall and Mrs. Cooper.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

AMY WILLIAMS

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Amy Williams; Cleveland, Ohio—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou living flame of the love of God!

Thy letter was received. It was indicative of the illumination of thy heart and the spirituality of thy soul. Praise be to God, thou hast attended the Convention and hast beheld the signs of the power of God, that in such a place He hath gathered together different people under the shadow of the pavilion of the oneness of mankind. This Convention shall expand in the future and shall gain preference over all the Conventions of the world for it is a Convention of the Kingdom divine, and its basis lays upon love, kindness, the promulgation of the oneness of the world of humanity, and non-interference in political matters. Undoubtedly divine confirmations shall be extended and the assistance of the Lord shall be secured.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

Celebration of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of the Bab

By JEAN MASSON

THE Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of the Bab, October 9th, 1919, was celebrated by the Chicago Bahai Assembly by a feast, given at the Stevens Grill Room. Present were one hundred-twenty of the friends to do honor to the memory of the great Herald of the Bahai Dispensation.

Mr. Albert R. Windust, who presided, spoke briefly and effectively upon the meaning of the occasion, the spiritual significance to the world of the appearance and mission of the Bab, as the precursor of the universal Teacher of men.

Mrs. William F. Slater read nine of the Hidden Words and closed with that proclamation and prophetic utterance of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH that thrills the heart of every Bahai the world over—words that will continue to thrill the heart to the end of all time: "We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations," etc.

Mrs. Mary D. Hall read a selection from Unveiling of the Divine Plan, in which Abdul-Baha indicates in no uncertain words the station of this day and the great work to be performed by the Bahai.

Mrs. Mary C. Byron Clarke read the address delivered by Abdul-Baha on Mt. Carmel, in 1910, at the annual celebration of the Bab's declaration in which the Covenant proclaimed that "the commemoration and celebration of this meeting shall remain and be duly observed forever throughout endless ages; it is under the merciful glances of the Blessed Beauty."

The Story of the Bab—his declaration, his teachings, his life and martyrdom, his burial—was eloquently presented by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, a participant in bringing the body of the great Herald of the Manifestation to Haifa in 1909, and delivering it into the safe keeping of Abdul-Baha. An impressive story, which never fails, and should be recorded with great accuracy of detail for reference by future generations.

A brief greeting by Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford and the singing of the Benediction closed the Chicago celebration of the centenary of the Bab.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

"You will find Bahai Centers in most parts of the World"

Talk by ABDUL-BAHA in Assembly Rooms, San Francisco, California,
October 5, 1912.

I HAVE the utmost joy to find in the distant West such an established Bahai center, where the friends of God have assembled associating with each other in the utmost love. This affords me great joy and I ask God that this revered assemblage may be made the cause of illumining the East and the West. This is my wish, and with the utmost of happiness I am grateful on account of the susceptibilities of your conscience.

Today the people in general are self-occupied. They are engaged either in warfare, or in commercial, political, industrial, or agricultural pursuits. Their interests are of a personal nature; they are thinking of self-aggrandizement, having no desire, no purpose save the acquisition of worldly possessions.

The assemblage in the world which today is thoughtful of God, the assemblage which is occupied with the thought of illumining the world of humanity, the assemblage which is occupied with the mentioning of the Kingdom of God, the assemblage which has as its chief motive the good pleasure of the Lord of Hosts, is verily the assemblage of Bahais, for they have no intention, aim, or purpose save the attainment of the good-pleasure of God, and entrance into the Kingdom of God, and of being the promulgators of the religion of God. They are the spreaders of the fragrances of God. These are the desires of the assemblage of the Bahais.

All the sects of the world are on the wane except the Bahai assemblages which day by day are achieving ideal progress, for they are confirmed by God's assistance.

I hope that many such assemblages may be founded in America, and that from all the centers of the world people may come to the Bahai assemblages and there manifest the oneness of the world of humanity.

The people in general are all asleep; they are all inadvertent; they are all slumbering, because their thoughts are confined to materialism; they are not at all thoughtful of God's thoughts except you, who are thinking of God. Verily, you are the spirit of the world! You are the cause of the light of the world! You are the salt of the earth!

Do not look at your limited numbers now. Ere long you will see that the divine Radiance has flooded all regions. The believers in the various sects are decreasing in numbers, whereas the people of God are constantly increasing, progressing, developing, day by day growing stronger and greater, day by day becoming more effective.

Consider how the assembly of His Holiness Christ was limited to eleven souls, but that assemblage has given birth to innumerable assemblies! How many denominations are sheltered beneath it! Its efficacy is evident, and it has become the dominant factor of all the civilized world.

Now, praise be to God, your assembly is a great one; you are about two hundred in number; judge thereby of the future.

The Bahais are not in one place only, but you will find Bahai centers in most parts of the world, and they are daily increasing and spreading. You must rest assured, knowing for a certainty that the confirmations of the Kingdom are yours, that the favors of BAHÁ'O'LLAH are with you, that the power heavenly is with you, that the assistance of God is with you. If all the inhabitants of the earth should gather they will fail to withstand you, for they are on the wane, whereas you are waxing stronger. They are retrogressing; you are progressing.

When they exiled us from Persia, from Teheran to Baghdad, the journey was made in thirty stages and in these thirty stages we did not find one Bahai. Now in every one of these places there are great numbers of Bahai friends.

Notwithstanding that the ruler of Persia and the Sultan of Turkey opposed the Cause so violently—exercising tyranny and oppression thinking to extinguish the Lamp of God—yet this Lamp day by day grew in radiance, its power increased and its illumination became greater, until it reached such a degree that now its lights are spread throughout the world—even as far as San Francisco, which is very far from Persia. See what this will mean in the future!

At the time His Holiness Jesus Christ was crucified, there were eleven disciples and even they were doubting—Peter heading them—until Mary the Magdalene, that lioness of God, strengthened them and was the cause of confirming them. Then consider how great were the results!

And now, His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH, when He ascended, had half a million souls who were self-sacrificing and all were perfectly firm and staunch! Consider what a marvelous potency this will exercise.

Rest assured in the favor of God, and know that God is your Assister. So with great power, with great confidence, strive that the lights of God may be spread and in this country from East to West the light may be shining.

Be confident! Have no doubt about it! This banner of BAHÁ'O'LLAH will be unfurled, waving toward all regions! The lights of the Kingdom of God will illumine all these climes, and the call of God will reach the hearing of all the American Republic!

Hence, you must in the utmost of love, in the utmost of sanctity strive night and day that you may be the cause of spreading the light. If we are not the instruments in spreading this Cause, others will be chosen. Then let us strive so that this crown may be placed upon our heads—that we may be the promulgators of the light, that we may be the resuscitators of souls, that we may be sight-givers to the blind, that we may be the remedies to the sick, that we may guide the people. Otherwise, God will raise up a people who will hoist the standard of God, who will ignite the Lamp of God, who will conquer the cities of the hearts, who will show forth the potency of the Word of God.

But for us the desire is that we may be the instruments and thus we may be crowned. Otherwise, God is able to create instruments whereby His Word shall be published broadcast. If this does not happen today, and if not on the morrow, then on the day after tomorrow. But the desire is that today the Word may be spread, that our activity shall be beneath this banner and standard, that we shall be the cause of giving forth the summons of God, that we may invite the souls to the Kingdom, that we may be their guides.

Thus, this will be the cause of illumining faces and will win the praise of all the Manifestations of God. This is our hope. This is the utmost of our desires, and I ask God that He may aid you all, that He may aid me, that together we may be occupied in the service of the Kingdom of God.

This is a very blessed gathering. It is a source of great joy. It is a source of great potency in the world. This very gathering has its effects. The assemblage here and the fellowship exercised are a magnet attracting the confirmations of God. Even now the confirmations of God are surrounding such a gathering as this. Ere long you will see its signs and your joy will reach the superlative degree.

Recent Tablets from Abdul-Baha to American Bahais

MOTHER BEECHER

To the maid-servant of God, Mother Beecher, care of his honor, Mr. Roy Wilhelm, New York City, N. Y.—
Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH El-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou green leaf of the Tree of Life!

Thy letter was received and from its contents it became known that in the past summer, in Green Acre, a remarkable Bahai movement took place, blessed souls gathered in that place such as Mr. Remy, Richard Mayer, Harry Randall, Howard Ives, Albert Vail, Harlan Ober, Saffa Kinney and Stanwood Cobb. These souls indeed are firm in the Covenant, are the heralds of the Kingdom of God, promulgating the divine teachings, are self-sacrificing in the path of the Kingdom, are ignited candles and twinkling stars. At present this is not known; in the future it shall be made evident.

The Pharisees, during the time of Christ, did not consider the Apostles as worth addressing and took them as the lowest of people, although they were the stars of guidance and the lamps of the Supreme Concourse. But at present consider what has happened!

I hope that this year in Green Acre the candles of supreme guidance will be better enkindled, the melody of the nightingales of Truth may reach the supreme heights and attain the ears of the denizens of the Abhá Kingdom, and this shall be to such an extent that all people may be amazed. This shall be attained if the friends of God will in the utmost union, love and harmony associate with one another, strive day and night to relieve one another's burden, promulgate the divine teachings and raise so high the call of the oneness of mankind and the melody of universal peace that the world of humanity may be stirred.

As to his highness, President Wilson, the fourteen principles which he has enunciated are mostly found in the teachings of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH and I therefore hope that he will be confirmed and assisted. At present it is the dawn of universal peace; my hope is that its morn will fully break, converting the gloom of war, of strife and of wrangling among men into the light of union, of harmony and of affection.

Convey on my behalf to Mrs. Champney the utmost love and kindness. From the bounties of God, I hope that she may become utterly attracted to the Kingdom and become wholly spiritual. Convey my love and kindness to Mrs. Watt. I beg for her from God assistance and bounty. Convey to thy grand-daughter, Dorothy Beecher, the utmost kindness on my behalf and extend to Mr. Hilgert my warm and heartfelt sentiments; I am greatly pleased with him.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abhá!

MARY MORRISON

To the maid-servant of God, Mary Morrison—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Ābha!

He Is God!

O thou dear maid-servant of God!

When I was in Denver I enjoyed greatly the climate, the beauty and the views of that city; and, therefore, I wished that therein the light of the love of God might spread, and hearts might be stirred by lordly sentiments, and the pavilion of the oneness of mankind might be pitched in that city. I, therefore, encouraged those friends who resided there, and urged them to acquire the perfections of the world of humanity.

At present, praise be to God, the signs of the attraction of hearts by the divine fragrances are manifest. I rest assured, therefore, that the perfections of mankind may be made resplendent in that city, and human souls may become heavenly angels, may acquire the characteristics of the Merciful; and that thou mayest become the sign of guidance and the cause of the illumination of the hearts of friends.

Upon thee be greetings and praise!

CORINNE TRUE

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. True, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Ābha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast expressed satisfaction with the Convention, that this gathering has been the means of the elevation of the Cause of God and the demonstration of the power of His Word. The greatness of the Cause will clear away these differences and may be compared to health in the body of man, which when established cures all diseases and weakness. Our hope is that no trace of opposition may remain, but some of the friends in America are restless in their fresh ambitions and strive and seek under the ground and in the air to discover anything that breeds dissension.

Praise be to God, all these doors are closed in the Cause of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH for a special authoritative Center has been appointed—a Center that solves all difficulties and clears up every problem. The Central House of Justice, likewise, disentangles every complication and whatever it prescribes must be accepted and he who transgresses is rejected; but this Universal House of Justice, which plays the role of an expounder, has not yet been instituted. Thus it is seen that no means for dissension has been left, but carnal desires are the cause of difference as it is the case with the violators. These do not doubt the validity of the Covenant, but selfish motives have dragged them to this condition. It is not that they ignore what they do—they are perfectly aware and still they exhibit opposition.

In short, the ocean of the Covenant is tumultuous and wide. It casts ashore the foam of violation and thus rest ye assured. Be engaged in the furtherance of the Mashrekol-Azkar and prepare the means for the diffusion of the divine fragrances. Be not engaged in anything but this, for it would dissipate the mind and the work would not advance.

Convey on my behalf the utmost kindness to thy respected daughters.

Upon thee and upon them be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

AGNES ALEXANDER

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Agnes Alexander, care of his honor, Mr. Joseph Hannen, Washington, D. C.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH EL-Ābha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letters were received. The journey to Japan was in the utmost necessity. Thou hast undoubtedly met the attracted maid-servant of God, Mrs. Maxwell, before sailing to Japan, for that maid-servant of God is ablaze with the fire of the love of God. Whosoever meets her feels from her association the susceptibilities of the Kingdom. Her company uplifts and develops the soul.

Thou didst well to travel to Japan, for the seed thou hast sown needs watering. Capable souls are found in Japan. The breath of the Merciful is necessary to stir and enliven them and to bestow a spiritual liveliness. A blind soul is there who is in the utmost enkindlement, and likewise a priest lives there who is endowed with great capacity. I hope that thou wilt find the doors flung open and become the cause of the guidance of souls.

Convey on my behalf the utmost love and kindness to the maid-servants of God, Elizabeth Stevens and Maud Gaudreaux. Through the bounties and blessings of God, I supplicate that Mr. Weirs may become attracted to the divine Kingdom and may be so enkindled with the love of God that he may illumine the surrounding regions.

By the death of Richard Potter we were made infinitely sad, but that night-gale of the Kingdom has flown to the rose-garden of the Kingdom, and that drop returned to the limitless ocean. That wanderer has ascended to his original abode. On his behalf I supplicate from the Threshold of Oneness pardon and forgiveness.

Convey on my behalf to the maid-servants of God, Miss Ragina Sunshine, Mrs. Louise Smith and Louise Bosch the wonderful Abha greeting. I have entreated and supplicated to the Abha Kingdom and have begged for those maid-servants of the Merciful unbounded blessings, that each may unloosen an eloquent tongue and engage in the commemoration of the Beloved of the world.

Convey to the friends of Geyserville the intensity of my love and my spiritual attachment. At dawn I entreat at the Threshold of the All-Knowing God and beg for them the exaltation of the Kingdom.

Remain for some days in Honolulu and then immediately hasten to Japan.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

BAHAIS OF THE CENTRAL STATES

The friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Central States of the United States of America, care of Mr. Carl Scheffler, Chicago, Illinois—Upon them be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye faithful friends and maid-servants of the Merciful!

Verily, ye are self-sacrificing in the path of the Kingdom and have no wish save the diffusion of Light throughout all regions. Ye are the real gardeners, are sowing the seeds of guidance in the soil of hearts and assuredly ye shall be confirmed and assisted. The expert gardener ever reaps rich and plentiful crops, obtains a pure and fertile soil, sows the seed, waters it and always secures heavenly blessings. Praise be to God, ye are expert gardeners, your soil is the heart, wherein ye sow the seed of the love of God, and water it from the fountain of knowledge. Ye depend upon the Sun of Truth that its light and heat may develop that blessed plantation, that the breeze of His bounty may waft and the dew of His blessing may fall, thus securing for it luxuriance, freshness and prolific results. The earthly gardener obtains but one fruitage while the heavenly One with one casting of the seed secures an everlasting result.

From the bounties of God, I supplicate that this Second Convention (for

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

GERTRUDE BUIKEMA

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Gertrude Buikema, Chicago, Illinois—

Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou dear maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received. From its contents it became known that thy eager wish is to serve the STAR OF THE WEST. This wish is due to the exaltation of thy nature and is highly praiseworthy, and in the divine Kingdom is accepted and praised. Verily, Mr. Windust has so far exerted a great effort for the arrangement of the STAR

OF THE WEST and I am greatly pleased with him.

At present both of you must, as ye have been doing in the past, endeavor for the arrangement and the publication of the STAR OF THE WEST. However, the means of subsistence are necessary for both of you and ye cannot concentrate your time in this matter. Serve, therefore, as much as it is possible, the STAR OF THE WEST, and in order to secure the means of livelihood, do not abandon your own occupations. When the STAR OF THE WEST will be so widely published as to insure your necessary expenses, then if we abandon your occupation and concentrate upon the STAR, it will be preferable. But at present ye are forced to engage in your occupation that the means of livelihood may be secured.

As I have no time, I have written thee in brief. Whatever question comes up, submit it to the Editorial Staff Committee for discussion and consideration and then hold to what ye deem advisable and suitable.

Convey, on my behalf, the utmost love and kindness to his honor Dr. Zia Bagdadi and his honor Mr. Windust.

The seven bound volumes of the STAR OF THE WEST have been received and your labor is indeed worthy of praise.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

ALBERT R. WINDUST

To his honor Mr. Albert R. Windust, Chicago, Illinois—Upon him be BAHHA-'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou servant of His Holiness BAHHA-'O'LLAH!

The letters thou hadst written on October 1st and November 23rd, 1918, were received. Their contents indicated thy joy at the victory secured by the just government, the safety of Abdul-Baha and the good tidings of thy health and safety of thy honorable wife and thy three respected daughters.

Thou hadst written that all throughout the days of severed communication ye were engaged in service, were printing and publishing books, while the STAR OF THE WEST was also published and regularly circulated. Verily, ye have labored hard and have not fallen short of your duty.

Indeed, the respected maid-servant of God, Miss Mary Lesch, has been directing affairs with the utmost loyalty, faithfulness, good wishes and endeavor.

Name the book * which Mr. MacNutt is compiling, "The Promulgation of Universal Peace." As to its introduction, it should be written by Mr. MacNutt himself when in heart he is turning toward the Abha Kingdom, so that he may leave a permanent trace behind him. Send a copy of it to the Holy Land.

The STAR OF THE WEST must, at present, be written both in English and Persian. Miss Gertrude Buikema is indeed serving the STAR. We hope that with his honor Dr. Zia Bagdadi—Upon him be the Baha-El-Abha!—ye may be both assisted in remarkable services. Your efforts are evident and well known in the sight of Abdul-Baha. I pray God that, under all conditions, ye may be assisted and confirmed. As to the editorship of the STAR OF THE WEST, whatever ye deem advisable is accepted by Abdul-Baha.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Bahjeh, Acca, Palestine, July 20th, 1919.)

DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

To his honor, Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Chicago, Illinois.—Upon him be BAHHA-'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou merciful youth who art the son of that glorious man!

Verily, thy letters have been received. They indicate thy great love to God, thy attraction to His fragrance, thy attachment to His Kingdom, the establishment of a meeting for the singing of the verses of God, the reading of the Holy Books, the study of the Tablets by the youths of that city, who have sincerely turned their faces to God and became enkindled with the fire of the love of God, abandoned all the conditions that prevent the acquiring of the merciful virtues and the good illumined morals, so that they may love one another and become united in the promulgation of the fragrances of God. The love of God kept them busy from ought else. This establishment is a blessed establishment. I ask God to make this meeting sanctified and holy above the human temperaments, illumined and adorned with the outpourings of severance to the Lord of mankind, so that they may become as one bouquet, spiritually and physically in the service of the Cause of God.

As to the matter of the Mashrekol-Azkar, it is of the most important affairs. Relaxation therein is not permissible. Verily, I shall write to the Easts of the earth and to its Wests and urge them to assist the Mashrekol-Azkar. Concentrate thou thy thought in the service of the Mashrekol-Azkar under all conditions so that thou mayest obtain confirmations and assistance under all conditions and circumstances. . . .

As to the translation of the Surat-el-Hykl, at present we do not find a translator who can give it its merit. God willing, in the future a committee shall be organized whose members are experts in Arabic, Persian and English. By that perfect committee, the Surat-el-Hykl will be translated, but one person cannot arise and give the translation that it deserves. God willing, this committee will be organized and thou shalt be an important member thereof.

Convey thou on my behalf the utmost mercy and tenderness to Bessie Digget, her mother and her sister. Convey my abundant greeting to Mr. Anderson and his wife. Verily, I ask God to make them manifestations of His merciful bounties. Convey my hearty sympathy to Julia Jordan, Emma Marky Appel, and Walter Bohanan. Verily, I pray God to make them the signs of guidance among the people and the banners of the Supreme Concourse. Convey my greeting and tenderness to Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. August Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bennings, Mr. and Mrs. Schend, Mrs. Hertel, Mr. and Mrs. Yeager, Mr. and Mrs. Lindstrom, Mrs. Redeen, Mrs. Tressa Jacobsen, Mr. William Redeen, Mr. George Steppy. Verily, I pray God to guide them in their affairs, to make them attracted to the Kingdom of Abha, sanctified above self and desire, seeking nothing for themselves save severance to God, delivered from the selfish suggestions in the Cause of their Lord, the Precious, the Exalted! For, verily, to God is the praise. They are lamps aflame with the fire of the love of God, majestic trees in the rose-gardens of the knowledge of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Dated July 24th, 1919, Haifa, Syria.)

Contributions collected for the teaching fund must be used for teaching. Likewise contributions collected for the Mashrekol-Azkar must be used for the Mashrekol-Azkar. These two must not be mixed.

Convey thou on my behalf the fatherly greeting to Katherine Ferguson and say: "I ask God to confirm and guide your brother and sister of whom you have written in your letter. Convey thou the utmost respect to Mr. Chapman. Appreciate thou him for he became the cause of thy everlasting life and thou hast become of the people of the Kingdom. This is thy real father."

Upon thee be El-Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

P. S.—The maid-servant of God, Zee-nat, is permitted to come. Be very kind to Hasheim Zadeh and give him the Message and Bahai literature.

(Dated at Haifa, September 20th, 1919.)

ELLA QUANT

To the maid-servant of God, Ella Quant, New York City, N. Y.—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. It was indicative of thy attendance at the Convention where thou hast witnessed the lights of the divine teachings resplendent and hast seen the souls vivified by the spirit of everlasting life. As thou wert endowed with the power of insight, thou hast in this manner discovered Truth. Whoever is firm in the Covenant and the Testament is today endowed with a seeing eye, and a responsive ear and daily advances in the divine realm until he becomes a heavenly angel.

Convey on my behalf to the two respected souls, Margaret LaGrange and Grace Vosburgh, heartfelt sentiments. I pray God that they may become the recipients of bounty and the manifestations of limitless favors.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

A Day in Kenosha

(See illustration in Persian Section.)

SUNDAY morning, August 24th, many of the friends from Racine, Chicago and Kenosha, assembled at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Bohanan near the city of Kenosha. The gentle summer breeze, the spirituality of the friends, and the quietness of the place, made the day ideal. At noon a feast was served on the lawn under the trees. During the afternoon there was a beautiful, spiritual meeting.

Mr. Bohanan, secretary of the Kenosha Assembly, opened the meeting. He spoke of the invincible power of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha, and the change that has come to the hearts of men. Hate, prejudice, and ignorance are giving place to love, unity, and harmony. Short talks were also given by A. P. Chapman, N. Peterson, and others. Zeenat Khanum chanted a beautiful prayer, and Dr. Bagdadi and Mirza Mahmoud Khan sang one of Abdul-Baha's favorite Persian poems. Then the children gave selections from Hidden Words and prayers which they had learned in the Sunday School. The first child's prayer was beautifully recited by little Roy Anderson of Kenosha. Dr. Bagdadi spoke of the importance of unity and harmony. In this day all must promulgate the divine teachings that the world may be freed from the darkness of ignorance, enmity, and discord. The teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha are the seeds that bring forth everlasting fruits. The meeting closed with a short prayer.

In the evening a public meeting was held in a hall in Kenosha. Many friends and strangers were present. Mr. Jacobsen of Kenosha was chairman and gave the Bahai history to the visiting friends. Dr. Bagdadi of Chicago was the speaker for the evening. He gave an excellent address that was much enjoyed by all. In his address the human body was compared with the body of the world. The normal health of the body depends upon the maintenance of the right proportion of the elements that compose the body. If certain elements are added or decreased abnormally, health becomes impaired and death may result. The divine Manifestations are the only spiritual physicians of the human world, and BAHÁ'O'LLAH and Abdul-Baha are the real physicians of this cycle. BAHÁ'O'LLAH found that the chronic ailments of the human family had been caused by the increase of such elements as selfishness; religious, racial, patriotic, and political prejudices; old imitations, misunderstandings; immorality; war preparations for conquest; ignorance; envy, etc. Therefore, He revealed teachings and laws in order to eliminate these deadly elements. The singing of the Benediction was a fitting close for the day that we shall ever recall with many happy memories.

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The "Center of the Covenant"

From The Bahai Proofs, by MIRZA ABUL FAZL.

In the Name of God, the Most Holy Beauty of El-Abha!

TO the people of Faith, the clear appointment of the Center of the Cause, after the departure [death] of the Manifestation [BAHA'O'LLAH], is considered the most important point in religious matters, as it is the greatest channel which connects the servants of God with holy divine truth. They are all sure and convinced that the Center of the Covenant is no other than His Holiness, ABDUL-BAHA; for, apart from the divine signs that were manifest in him, BAHA'O'LLAH clearly and implicitly, verbally and in writing, directed all of his servants to the blessed person of ABDUL-BAHA, and, under all circumstances, clearly showed that he was far distinguished above others, in order that all the servants should look unto him alone, and follow his commands. For it is only through his explanation and decision that all discord is removed. Consequently the Bahais appreciate the determining of the "Appointed Center" as the greatest of the divine providences and account his blessed being as an impregnable fortress which protects the divine Religion from the doubts of the skeptic and fanciful imaginations of men.

But notwithstanding all this, as BAHA'O'LLAH foresaw, that when his beauty of oneness was concealed under the veils of disappearance, the people of desire, through jealousy, would hold to groundless doubts and suspicions and disregard the prohibition to interpret the Book. He, therefore, prior to his departure, revealed the blessed Kitab-el-A'hd [Book of the Covenant, the Will of BAHA'O'LLAH]. This he wrote, and sealed it with his own blessed hand and seal, in order that the darkness of discord might not again obscure the brilliant horizon of the Cause of God, and the calamities and disasters which afflicted other religions might not overtake this Movement. In this Book (his Covenant) he clearly indicated that the purpose of the "Branch extended from the Ancient Root," revealed in the blessed verse of Ahdas, was the "Center of the Circle of Names," the exalted "Branch" of the Blessed Tree of Abha, His Holiness ABDUL-BAHA. Then he, for the second time, enjoined, through an unchangeable and irrefutable command, all his "branches," "twigs" (relatives), and the Bahais without exception, to look unto that dawning-place of divine light, and to know him as the source and origin of the commands and prohibitions of the heavenly religion. He desired, by this clear elucidation, to counteract the imaginations of the ignorant, extinguish the world-consuming flame of jealousy and hatred of the people of error, and guard the divine religion from divisions and sects which are, according to the judgment of common sense and the clear texts of holy Tablets of God, the most deplorable for religion and humanity. By this he sought to preserve the divine Word from human doubts, suspicions and artifices.

In Praise of the "Greatest Branch"

Written by MIRZA ABUL FAZL, November 24, and read in Washington, D. C., November 26, 1902, at the celebration of the anniversary of the Feast of the Appointment of The Center of the Covenant.

In the Name of God, the Most Holy, the Abha!

O YE beloved of God and His friends! Praise and glorification behoove the holy court of the True One, the Exalted, who has, in this great age and wonderful cycle, primarily caused the shining star of the Blessed Being of the First Point (The Bab) to appear like unto the beaming orb of the morn from the horizon of the world; has rejoiced and revived the creatures through the glad tidings of the advent of the new Day, and the Manifestation of the Glorious Lord. Praise be to God! who subsequently caused the Sun of the most holy Beauty of El-Abha (Exalted is His Supreme Name!) to dawn forth in the midst of the heaven of power and grandeur. After the disappearance of these two Lights a third Splendor became manifest from the Sinai of Epiphany, and the Orb of the Covenant shone forth from the firmament of beatitude, the apex of exaltation and glory, with the most marvelous effulgence. Through these three shining lights, the darkness of the nations, superstitions, will be dispelled, the dust of discord of the people will be subsided by the showers of mercy descending from the clouds of divine providence; the banner of peace will be hoisted; the mortal world will be clothed in the excellent robe of ideal humanity; the bond of perfect love will be strengthened among contradictory nations and repugnant peoples; and the world, east and west, will become the Paradise of El-Abha and as a garden bringing forth fruits of divine grace. We, therefore, praise Him in such glorification from which the lights of sincerity may gleam forth and scintillate throughout ages and epochs; and we thank Him in such sanctification from which the pure fragrances of meekness and humbleness will be diffused and exhaled with the duration of nights and days!

O ye beloved of God and His friends! This great Day has been assigned to the blessed name of the Lord of the world, the sign of pre-existence, the standard of divine victory among nations, the Light of the heaven and the earth, the point around which the Supreme Course revolves, in the kingdom of Names — His Holiness, ABDUL-BAHA (May the life of the creatures be a sacrifice to him)! Ye are all attracted to his love, united in his servitude, overshadowed under his banner, and are assembled together in this excellent meeting, with rejoiced hearts and shining faces, speaking the praise of the most holy beauty of El-Abha, and uttering the glorification of the Center of His Covenant, His Holiness, ABDUL-BAHA.

How can this servant duly praise and thank God, the Exalted, who hath enabled him to make his tongue fluent in glorifying the Center of the Covenant in this wonderful meeting, in the presence of His chosen ones and friends? Again I praise Him for this wondrous confirmation and glorious success. Verily, He is the Mighty, the Praise-worthy!

How can this weak one befittingly glorify and sanctify a most holy personage with whose name all the ancient and heavenly books are adorned and who has been announced and prophesied, by the tongue of the prophets and chosen ones, from the beginning to the end? Every prophetic page seems like unto a heaven, studded with the beaming stars and shining pearls of the praises of the Orb of the Universe; or like unto a rose-garden decked and embellished by the verdant leaves and fragrant flowers of the glorification of the Center of the Covenant. Again we praise Him with such words whereby hearts are cheered and breasts are dilated, and we thank Him in such hymns whereby the light of bliss and beatitude shine forth from the horizon of the hearts!

O ye beloved of God and His friends! Consider how in the second Psalm, David (Peace be upon him!) has announced the appearance of the Son of God in dominion and judgment, and how he hath warned the kings and judges of the earth to serve him! Consider in the fourth chapter of Isaiah how that great prophet has foretold the appearance of the Exalted "Branch" of the Lord in the utmost beauty and glory, and how God hath appointed him a place of refuge for the saved ones. Consider how Isaiah has spoken in the eleventh chapter of his book that the lofty "Branch" of the Blessed Tree shall appear from the root of David, and shall grow out of the Holy Land; how the spirit of supremacy and power, of counsel and divine wisdom shall rest upon him; the lights of glory and divine grandeur shall beam forth from his shining face; how he shall hoist the pavilion of universal peace and divine equity, and assemble all the various and contradictory nations, including weak and strong, high and low, under the shadow of union and harmony.

Reflect upon the 26th verse of the 30th chapter of the book of Isaiah, how God, the Almighty, has clearly spoken that in the day when Israel shall be saved, and the sins and errors of the heirs of Abraham effaced, the shining moon of the Center of the Covenant shall gleam forth in the utmost glory and splendor, and the beaming lights scintillating from the brilliant face of that dawning-place of supremacy and Lordship shall be like unto the Sun of Truth! Consider how, in the first few verses of the 42d chapter of Isaiah, it is clearly shown that in the last day, God, the Exalted, shall elect the bearer of the banner of His servitude, confer upon him the Holy Spirit of His divinity, unfurl the standard of the Supreme Covenant and Testament in His Name, and shall protect him, with His strong hand, from the deceit of the violators and the devices of the people of rancor; that Servant of the Lord shall become a banner for the people's salvation and a light for hearts and souls; shall restore the blind and deliver the captives; direct those who sit in darkness unto light; place all the creatures under the standard of universal peace, security and absolute emancipation, and make the tongues of all in the East and West fluent in new hymns and wonderful glorifications!

Likewise, consider the 7th chapter of Daniel. First, in the 9th and 10th verses, God hath announced the Manifestation of the Great Lord, the Ancient King, the Most Holy Beauty of Abha (Glorified is His Supreme Name!) and hath spoken of the founding of the sound religion and manifest law and of the rise of the hosts of chosen ones and holy ones.

Then He hath said in the 13th and 14th verses of the same chapter that the Excellent "Branch" shall be extended from that Ancient Root, and the Spirit of God descended from heaven shall shine forth from his beaming face and Glory and Kingdom shall be conferred upon him from God; his command shall influence all nations and multitudes, and his Kingdom shall continue forever.

Likewise, consider the 8th and 9th verses of the 3d chapter of Zechariah, where the great prophet has clearly prophesied that in the day of the Most Great Manifestation, the dawning of the Sun of the Ancient Beauty, God, the Exalted, shall bring about the removal of the nations' iniquity and the elimination of the people's calamities by the rise of that Excellent "Branch" extended from the Pre-existent Root; and He hath made the restoration of the Holy Land, the covenanted country of the prophets and chosen ones, dependent upon the power of that blessed being.

Likewise, in the 12th and 13th verses of the 6th chapter of the same book, God, the Exalted, hath explicitly promised Zechariah that in the Day of the Lord's Manifestation the Blessed "Branch" shall grow up out of the pure Tree of Divinity, shall bear the glory of the Lord, shall sit and rule upon His throne, and shall build the Temple of the divine worship; the banner of universal peace and eternal beatitude shall be hoisted among all mankind through the council of peace held between the "Branch" and the Lord.

Consider the New Testament; in every instant in which His Holiness, Christ (Glory be to him!) and his eminent disciples have announced the coming of the Kingdom of God, they have spoken of the rising of the Excellent "Branch" and of the dawning of the Orb of the Covenant. Especially his holiness, John, has adorned all the prophecies of his Book of Revelation with this glorious name, and has clearly stated the appearance of the Covenant of God in the Day of the Lord's Manifestation. He has explicitly said that in that great Day, the new Holy City shall be illuminated with lights shining from the face of the Lord and His appointed "Branch"; the rivers of wonderful enlightenments, which would impart life to the people of the world and save nations, shall flow forth from the throne of the Lord and that of the Center of His Covenant. Nay, rather, he hath elucidated that those written in the Book of Life of the Excellent "Branch" shall be saved, and those overshadowed under His Ancient Standard shall inherit everlasting glory.

To resume: The tongues of all the prophets sung the praise of his blessed name, and the hearts of the chosen ones rejoiced at the announcement of his coming, until that most holy being was born in the Day* of the Manifestation of the "First Point" (Exalted is his supreme name!). The birthday of the "Branch extended from the Ancient Root" coincided with the day of the appearance of the Lord's precursor, and the "Mystery of God" was realized by this coincidence. In his childhood he was nurtured under the favors of the most Holy Beauty of El-Abha, until, at the age of nine, he escorted the Ancient Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) from Teheran to Bagdad. He shared with the Beauty of El-Abha in every calamity and affliction during their exile from Bagdad to Constantinople, Adrianople, and finally to Acca (the prison), and endured unbearable sufferings. The Tongue of Grandeur was always uttering the greatness of his station, and appointed His Holiness, the Excellent "Branch," to the position of the "Center of the Covenant." In a Tablet revealed by the Beauty of El-Abha to Abdul-Baha, while the latter was in Beyrout, He said: "We have appointed thee a protection to all the creatures, a guardian to all in the heaven and the earth, and a fortress to those who believe in God, the One, the Omniscient!"

O ye beloved of God! How can I duly praise the Lord of mankind, the Center of the Covenant (May the life of all the creatures be a sacrifice to him!), and how can I explain the loftiness of his station! For he is the one whom all the divine Manifestations have praised and extolled.

Let us now offer our humble efforts in praising and glorifying God, the Exalted, who has honored us by serving the Center of His Covenant, hath made us know in his name, and hath placed us under the shadow of his glorious banner. We thank Him in such praises whereby the faces of the steadfast ones are illuminated!

Praise be to God, the King of the Heaven and the earth!

Recent Tablets from Abdul-Baha to American Bahais

ELLA G. COOPER

(Portion of Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Mrs. Ella G. Cooper, San Francisco, California.)

. . . . Four letters have been received from you, the last dated April 18th, 1919. All of them were indicative of firmness in the great Covenant. Praise be to God, the friends in California are holding fast to the helm of the Almighty and are attracted to the God of Elijah. Their movement is like unto the attraction of steel which is subjected to magnetic power; their aims are confined to the good pleasure of God and their highest wish centers around the unbounded blessing. They are engaged in service and are intimately connected with the Holy Spirit. . . .

Thou hast referred to the little assembly of Los Angeles. Although that assembly is small, yet it is kept under the protecting eye of God. If it prove to be firm and steadfast it shall resist all that is on earth.

Consider how many souls arose after His Holiness Christ and determined to extinguish the Lamp of God. Even the Roman emperor, who was a most eminent philosopher, exerted the utmost effort in order to resist the sweeping movement; he wrote a refutatory book against His Holiness Christ, published it throughout his empire, and caused a great many to turn away from His Holiness Christ. But, eventually, the power of the Word of God conquered and broke all imperial resistance. The resplendent light of the Covenant and Testament of God dissipated the darkness of doubt and suspicion that was entertained by those philosophers and potentates. It is evident, therefore, as to what will result from these important forces.

At most it is this: that some feeble and heedless souls will waver in the Cause of God, but ultimately this fire will be quenched.

Refer to the history of the Church and read the details of the activities of Arius, the Patriarch of Alexandria. Notwithstanding the fact that his followers numbered a million and a half, and the support of the mighty emperor was extended to him, eventually he was completely destroyed and no trace of him whatever remained, and so on and so forth. . . . Undoubtedly, wherever a carcass is to be found, a number of ravens and contemptible dogs gather around that putrefying body, but ere long they shall be scattered in great distress.

. . . . Read attentively the translations of his honor Mirza Abul Fazl's book, The Brilliant Proof; it is very necessary,—and send it then to the spiritual assembly of Los Angeles. . . .

MARY RABB

To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Mary Rabb, care of Mrs. Ella Goodall Cooper—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Your letter dated March 5th, 1919, was received. Its contents were conducive to gladness and they indicated firmness and steadfastness in the glorious Covenant.

Today the pulsating power in the arteries of the body of the world is the spirit of the Covenant—the spirit which is the cause of life. Whosoever is vivified with this spirit the freshness and beauty of life become manifest in him, he is baptized with the Holy Spirit, he is born again, is freed from oppression and tyranny, from heedlessness and inclemency which deaden the spirit, and attains unto everlasting life.

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

Praise thou God that thou art firm in the Covenant and the Testament and art turning thy face to the Luminary of the world, His Highness BAHÁ'O'LLAH. Thou hast illumined thy face with the light of guidance and perfumed thy nostrils with the fragrances of the Abha paradise. Strive therefore that thou mayest attract the souls and train them through the divine teachings that they may become the signs of guidance, may turn into blessed trees and may secure a large share from the day of Manifestation.

The teacher is like unto a farmer who sows a seed, the cloud of mercy pours out its showers and every seed multiplies a hundred fold, gives forth a luxuriant harvest and becomes the cause of heavenly benediction.

I hope that thou mayest be confirmed to acquire that heavenly benediction and may become my partner in this lucrative enterprise; that thou mayest grow to become a blessed tree, fruitful, green and rich in foliage and laden with sweet and delicious fruits.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

LOS ANGELES ASSEMBLY

To the members of the spiritual assembly of Los Angeles, California, care of the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Ella G. Cooper—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye blessed souls!

Although ye are undergoing crucial tests in view of the repeated and assiduous attempts of some people to shake the faith of the friends in Los Angeles, yet ye are under the guarding eye of the bounty of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and are assisted by legions of angels.

Walk, therefore, with a sure step and engage with the utmost assurance and confidence in the promulgation of the divine fragrances, the glorification of the Word of God and firmness in the Covenant. Rest ye assured that if a soul arises in the utmost perseverance and raises the Call of the Kingdom and resolutely promulgates the Covenant—be he an insignificant ant—he shall be enabled to drive away the formidable elephant from the arena, and if he be a feeble moth he shall cut to pieces the plumage of the rapacious vulture.

Endeavor, therefore, that ye may scatter and disperse the army of doubt and of error with the power of the Holy Utterances. This is my will and this is my counsel. Do not quarrel with anybody, and shun every form of dispute. Utter the Word of God. If he accepts it the desired purpose is attained, and if he turns away leave him to himself and trust to God.

Such is the attribute of those who are firm in the Covenant.

Upon ye be Baha-El-Abha!

BAHAIS OF CALIFORNIA

To the friends and maid-servants of the Merciful in Los Angeles and the other cities of California, care of Mr. and Mrs. Beckett—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye friends and maid-servants of the Merciful!

From the spiritual assembly of Los Angeles a letter has been received. It was indicative of the fact that the blessed souls in California, like unto an immovable mountain, are withstanding the gale of violation, have like unto blessed trees been implanted in the soil of the Covenant and are in the utmost firmness and steadfastness. The hope is entertained, therefore, that through the blessings of the Sun of Truth they may daily increase in their firmness and steadfastness. The tests of every dispensation are in direct proportion with the greatness of the Cause and as heretofore such a manifest Covenant, written by the Supreme Pen, has not been entered upon, the tests are proportionately severe. These trials cause the feeble souls to waver while those who are firm are not affected. These agitations of the violators are no more than the foam of the ocean, which is one of its inseparable features, but the ocean of the Covenant shall surge and shall cast ashore those dead bodies for it cannot contain them. Thus it is seen that the ocean of the Covenant has surged and surged until it has thrown out the dead bodies—the souls that are deprived of the Spirit of God and are lost in passion and self and are seeking leadership. In fine, this froth of the ocean shall not endure and shall soon disappear and vanish, while on the other hand the ocean of the Covenant shall eternally surge and roar.

Consider then that Christ, in order to preserve the unity of Christendom, said to Peter: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." This word has secured every one's submissiveness and allegiance and has preserved for a thousand years the unity of the Christian world. Notwithstanding the fact that this declaration was not a command to obey and to follow and was verbally delivered, yet it has proved to do away with any foam that might appear on the surface of the ocean of Christ and to cast ashore any dead body that sought the vanities of this world. At present His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH, through His Supreme Pen, has written the Book of the Covenant and has called it the "Book of the Covenant," and has entered with every one into a covenant and a testament. He first addresses the Aghsans, then the Afnans and then the relations bidding them to turn their faces to the Center of the Covenant and has then, in accordance with the explicit text of the Most Holy Book (the Book of Laws), made the 'Center of the Covenant the Expounder of the Book.

From the early days of creation down to the present time, throughout all the divine dispensations, such a firm and explicit Covenant has not been entered upon. In view of this fact is it possible for these foams to remain on the surface of the ocean of the Covenant? No, by God! The violators are trampling upon their own dignity, are uprooting their own foundation and are proud in that they are upheld by flatterers who exert a great effort to shake the faith of feeble souls. But this action of theirs is of no consequence; it is a mirage and not water, the foam and not the sea, the mist and not the cloud, illusion and not reality. All this you shall soon see.

In short, praise be to God, ye are firm and steadfast and be ye thankful that like unto blessed trees ye are firmly implanted in the soil of the Covenant. It is sure that every firm one will grow, will yield fresh fruits and will increase daily in freshness and grace. Reflect upon all the writings of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH, whether epistles or prayers, and ye shall surely come across a thousand passages wherein BAHÁ'O'LLÁH prays as follows: "O God! Exterminate the violators of the Covenant and defeat the oppressers of the Testament." "He who denies the Covenant and the Testament is rejected by God, and he who remains firm and steadfast therein is favored at the Threshold of Oneness." Such sayings and prayers abound, refer to them and ye shall know.

In short, never be depressed. The more ye are stirred by violation, the more deepen ye in firmness and steadfastness, and be assured that the divine hosts shall conquer for they are assured of the victory of the Abha Kingdom. Throughout all regions the standard of firmness and steadfastness is upraised and the flag of violation is debased for only a few weak souls have been led away by the flattery and the specious arguments of the violators who are outwardly with the greatest care exhibiting firmness but inwardly are engaged in stirring souls. Only a few who are the leaders of those who stir and agitate are outwardly known as violators while the rest, through subtle means deceive the souls, for outwardly they assert their firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant but when they come across responsive ears they secretly sow the seeds of suspicion. The case of all of them resembles the violation of the Covenant by Judas Iscariot and his followers. Consider: Has any result or trace remained after them? Not even a name has been left behind his followers and although a great number of Jews have sided with him it was as if he had no followers at all. This Judas Iscariot who was the leader of the apostles betrayed His Holiness Christ for thirty drachme.

Take heed, O ye people of perception!

At present these insignificant violators will surely give away the Center of the Covenant for the large sum which they have begged by every subtle means. It is now thirty years that His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH has ascended and these violators have meanwhile striven with the utmost effort. What have they done so far? Under all conditions those who have remained firm in the Covenant have conquered while the violators have met defeat, dejection and disappointment. After the ascension of Abdul-Baha, no trace of them shall remain. These souls ignore what will happen and are proud of their own fancies.

In short, O ye friends of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful! The hand of the divine bounty has placed upon your heads a bejeweled crown, the precious gems of which shall eternally shine over all regions. Appreciate this bounty and unloosen the tongue in praise and thanksgiving, and engage in the promulgation of the divine teachings for this is the Spirit of Life and the means of salvation.

Upon ye be Baha-El-Abha.

AGNES LEO

To the maid-servant of God, Agnes Leo, Spokane, Washington—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received. Thou wert complaining of your assembly that it has fallen into disgrace. Every ailing has its remedy, and every affliction its relief. The efficacious remedy of this disease with which the assembly has been afflicted lies in meditation and contemplation over the Covenant and Testament. It should be observed whether the Blessed Beauty has entered into this Covenant and Testament in order to exact obedience from all, or to bring about disobedience. If the latter is intended, then nothing is to be said, and if obedience and compliance are the objects aimed at, then wavering leads to utter loss, and disobedience and rejection are absolute error.

His Holiness Christ, with reference to Peter, hath uttered one word, and has not personally written anything, and that word is: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." Notwithstanding the fact that it was only one word, void of any great importance and has been orally communicated and not written, nor has it been put down by the pen of Christ, yet all the apostles submitted and complied.

Now, the Blessed Beauty has given explicitly through His own writing, and by the stroke of the supreme pen the absolute command of obedience, and of the turning of the face toward the Center. It must be either said that, God forbid, the Blessed Beauty was ignorant and has been wrong in commanding that all should obey the Center of the Covenant or, on the other hand, obedience should be shown, and the face should be turned towards him. Strange! What answer will they give to the Blessed Beauty in the divine Kingdom? This much consideration is enough if justice is considered; and if it is not, and injustice prevails throughout discussions, then it is another question.

In fine, these Covenant-breakers and their disobedience are like unto froth, which does not last, and which shall soon vanish, while the sea itself which is the cause of life, will remain and continue to exist. Reflect upon the time subsequent to the manifestation of Christ: How many souls have sown in the Cause of God the seeds of sedition and intrigue but eventually their efforts were doomed to disappointment and failure and Truth hoisted its banner. This breaking of the Covenant is likewise doomed to failure. Like unto a mirage, soon it shall vanish and disappear.

Upon thee be greetings and praise!

ERNEST WALTERS

His honor, Mr. Ernest Walters, Chicago, Illinois—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLÁH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou servant of God!

Two letters have been received from thee and from the contents of both the turning of thy face toward the Kingdom of God was noted. Divine bounty has been extended and the blessings of His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLÁH are complete. Rest thou assured that thyself and thy mother shall ever be encompassed by divine bounty, but thou must be so firm and steadfast in the Covenant and Testament that the violators who may be found at thy meeting may not even draw a breath.

Today the magnet of the confirmations of the divine Kingdom is firmness in the Covenant and the Testament and all else save that is useless talk for by what can Bahai unity be preserved? Can it be preserved through the absurd and useless words of some people? God forbid. His Holiness Christ, in order to preserve the unity of Christendom addressed one word to Peter: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." This word preserved the unity of Christendom for 800 years although it was communicated only orally. But on the other hand the Kitab-el-Ahd is not an oral communication; it is the mark of the Supreme Pen. It has been revealed in order to preserve Bahai unity, so that the souls may not become agitated and perturbed, may not every day set up for themselves an idol and establish a new center of authority and seditious men may not agitate.

Glory be unto God! Notwithstanding this some thoughtless and ambitious persons desire to turn away through their meek language and flattery the souls from the straight path and cause them to wander aimlessly in the wilderness of superstitions. They have their liberty. On us it is incumbent to state the truth. Whosoever desires may accept it, and he who refuses, "Verily, God is independent of all the world."

Upon thee be Baha-el-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

MR. AND MRS. SCHEFFLER

To their honors, Mr. and Mrs. Scheffler, Chicago, Illinois—Upon them be BAHHA'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye two firm ones in the Covenant!

Happy are ye that, like unto a blessed tree, ye have struck roots deeply in the soil of the Covenant, and are in the utmost firmness and steadfastness. If a thousand winds begin to blow, they shall not affect ye and such should be one's firmness and steadfastness. Otherwise, if by the diffusion of the offensive odor of violation, health is converted into sickness, of what use is existence? Death and life are alike in that respect.

In short, I pray on your behalf and beg from the divine Kingdom assistance and bounty. Rest ye assured that ye are confirmed souls. Convey to all the friends my greeting.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

MARY LESCH

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Mary Lesch, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHHA'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received and its contents indicated firmness in the Covenant. Therefore, the hope is entertained that thou wilt be assisted under all conditions, for today that which is most important is firmness in the Covenant and the Testament and otherwise Bahai unity will not be preserved. If Bahai unity could be preserved through something else, undoubtedly the Blessed Beauty would have commanded it.

In accordance with the Kitab-el-Akdas, which is the supreme authority and the Kitab-el-Ahd which is the last book of the Blessed Beauty written by His supreme pen, all are addressed in a clear and explicit manner.

First he addresses the Aghsans, then the Afnans and the relatives and finally the rest of the friends and bids them to turn their faces toward the Center of the Covenant. And the verses which have been revealed in the Kitab-el-Akdas ordering all to turn after His Ascension to "Him who is branched from the Pre-Existent Root" are explicitly recorded in the Kitab-el-Ah'd as having for their object the Center of the Covenant. And in another special Tablet the authenticity of which is admitted by every one, it is recorded that if the center of violation whose proper name he mentions, deviates the least from the shadow of the Cause, he at once loses the station of Branchhood. How could it be more explicit? Now it must be either said that the Blessed Beauty has done wrong and has led the people to error for he ordered them to obey a person who ought not to have been obeyed, or on the other hand it must be said that the least deviation from the Covenant and the Testament entails deprivation from the bounties of the Luminary of the world. One of the two alternatives must be true and there is no third one to it.

In fine, Bahai unity cannot be preserved save through the Covenant of God. Today the stirring power in the body of the world is the Covenant, and if this Covenant is made ineffective, what power will be able to stir it? The statement which was made orally by His Holiness Christ to Peter—that "thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church"—this declaration preserved for a thousand years Christian unity. After the lapse of a thousand years, due to political questions, dissensions happened. Now, if this Word of Christ has preserved the unity of Christendom for a thousand years, consider what will be done by the Kitab-el-Ahd which has been revealed by the Supreme Pen. But superficial, restless souls, who at first were firm in the Covenant and have written epistles with reference to their firmness and detachment from violators and have considered them as outcasts from the Threshold of the Almighty—and these epistles are still extant—these persons like unto Judas Iscariot, have for personal interests and financial motives, deviated from the Covenant. They followed the people of craft and stained their hands with the blood of Christ. Be admonished, O ye who possess intelligence!

If at all thou art firm and steadfast in the Covenant, strengthen and fortify thy relationships with the Convention, and from whomsoever thou inhalest the odor of violation, avoid his company and keep aloof, that thou mayest remain safe and protected under the protection of the Covenant, and, like unto a candle, be ignited with the light of steadfastness.

I am kind to all people and do not attack anyone. I pray on behalf of all that all may gather under His divine protection. This Covenant and Testament have been entered into by the Blessed Beauty and I have not taken any such part. Let them answer Him and I have no objection. My duty is to be kind to everyone; vengeance is reserved for the Blessed Beauty and not for myself. As I am kind to everyone, I mention only the good characteristics of a person and if a word is written, the intention is the setting forth of truth and the preservation of the religion of God, so that Bahai unity may be preserved. If any persons desire to upset this unity, they are free and let them present their answers to the Blessed Beauty in the Abha Kingdom, should He address them as follows:

"O ye, my friends! Have I, through My Supreme Pen and the explicit verses of the Kitab-el-Akdas commanded obedience or disobedience? Have I not ordered the center of violation to obey and to turn his face (towards Him)? Why have ye turned away from My manifest and irrefutable Center? I have given the command to turn your faces toward Him, how have ye turned away? Why have ye upset Bahai unity?"

What will they answer?

The friends must be very attentive and then whatever they deem advisable, they may perform. I have nothing to impose. In America, no doubt whatever call is proclaimed, ambitious and thoughtless souls will be found to support it for a time. Even at Green Acre it has been remarked that one of the inhabitants of Malta was summoning men to excessive hunger [fasting] and used to receive pay for it. Notwithstanding this, some souls gathered around him and from hunger they seemed dead yet would pay to that man.

Do not grieve for thy dear brother who has ascended from this mortal world to the eternal realm and do not feel depressed. That drop has hastened to the limitless ocean and that wandering bird has flown to the shelter and nest of the Supreme Concourse. Thou shalt find him at the effulgent gathering in the Kingdom of Mysteries.

As to the dream thou didst have that thy brother appeared fully dressed, clothing is the ornament of man and that is the bounty of the Merciful. As to the bundle he had in hand, it is his benevolent deeds, and his serious look denoted his purpose to make thee realize the following fact: "Consider to what bounty I have attained! Praise be to God, that I am safe and well and have on me the garment of piety and carry in my hand the bundle of my deeds. I am alive and not dead. Consider closely, I am living and have not passed away. Be thou attentive."

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

MARY HALL

To the maid-servant of God, Mary Hall, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou dear maid-servant of God!

Thy letters were received. God willing, this time that thou hast turned away from the Theosophists to the Bahai faith, thou mayest remain so firm and steadfast that if all the people that dwell on earth should gather to deviate thee a hair's breadth from the path of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, they would fail in their endeavor. Consider, that in the time of Christ, how much the Pharisees—and those souls who at first believed in Christ and then turned away from Him, such as Judas Iscariot and his companions—scattered the seeds of doubt in the Cause of Christ, in order to shake the faith of the believing souls. But these doubts and those who originated them are like unto the foam of the ocean, which has been cast ashore by the ever-surging ocean of Christ. This is because the foam does not last, while the ocean is eternal.

Praise be to God, thy eye has been again illumined, thy ear has responded, thou hast investigated the Truth and hast believed in the Cause of BAHÁ'O'LLAH. I hope that, day by day, the bounties of the Kingdom may constantly encircle thee, thou mayest daily increase in firmness and become the cause of the guidance of other souls.

As to thy presence in the Holy Land, these days it is very difficult, and here the conditions are not yet quite stable. God willing, when conditions are stabilized and travel is made easier, thou shalt present thyself.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

DR. PAULINE BARTON-PEEKE

To the maid-servant of God, Dr. Pauline Barton-Peeke, Cleveland, Ohio—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Praise be to God, it was indicative of the utmost firmness and steadfastness. It behooves thee to be the herald of the Covenant and the Testament and to be attracted by the fragrances of the Merciful. The meeting thou dost hold at thy house pertains to the Kingdom, for the Sun of Reality shines therein. At the meeting the memory of God is commemorated, the hearts are turned to the divine Kingdom and the eyes are opened to witness the signs of the Merciful. Continue to hold this meeting and strive daily to fortify its basis and to arrange its sessions. My hope is that meeting may become in that land the recipient of merciful susceptibilities and the cause of the manifestation of divine illumination and the training of human souls.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

ROY WILLIAMS

To his honor, Mr. Roy Williams, care of his honor Mr. Hannen, Washington, D. C.—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou firm in the Covenant!

Three consecutive letters have been received from thee. From their contents it became known that in Cleveland from the murky breaths of the Covenant-breakers the hearts are afflicted and among the friends harmony has decreased. Praise be to God! A hundred times it has been foretold that the violators are lying in ambush and by a certain means desire to cause dissension among the friends so that this dissension may end in violation of the Covenant. Notwithstanding this warning, how is it that the friends have neglected this explicit declaration?

The point at issue is firm, direct and in the utmost brevity. Either His Holiness BAHÁ'O'LLAH was wise, omniscient and aware of consequences or was ignorant and a sinner. He entered by His Supreme Pen into such a firm Covenant and Testament with all the Bahais, first with the Aghsans (branches), Afnans (twigs) and Muntasebeens (relations) and commanded them to obey and turn toward (him). By His supreme pen, He has explicitly declared that the object of the following verse of the Kitab-el-Akdas (the Book of Laws) is the Greatest Branch:

“When the ocean of My Presence has disappeared and the Book of Origin is achieved to the end, turn your faces toward him whom God hath purposed, who hath branched from this Pre-Existent Root.” Its meaning briefly is this: That after my ascension, it is incumbent upon the Aghsans, the Afnans and the Muntasebeens and all the friends of God to turn their faces to him who has branched from the Pre-Existent Root.

He also plainly says in the Kitab-el-Akdas (Book of Laws): “O ye people of the world! When the Dove flies away from the orchard of praise towards the Most Supreme and Invisible Station refer in whatever ye do not comprehend in the Book to him who has been branched from this Pre-Existent Root.” Addressing all the people of the world, He says: When the Dove of Holiness flies away from the orchard of praise to the Most Supreme and Invisible Station—that is, when the Blessed Beauty turns away from the contingent world towards the invisible Realm—whatever ye do not understand from the Book refer it to him who has branched from the Pre-Existent Root. That is, whatever he says that is the actual fact.

And in the Book of the Covenant, He explicitly says that the object of this verse, “Who has branched from the Pre-Existent Root,” is the Greatest Branch. And He commands all the Aghsans, Afnans, Muntasebeens and the Bahais to turn toward him. Now either one must say that the Blessed Beauty has made a mistake or He must be obeyed. Abdul-Baha has no command to call the people to its obedience save the diffusion of the fragrances of God, the exaltation of His Word, the promulgation of the oneness of the world of humanity, the establishment of universal peace, and so forth, from the Commands of God. These are divine commands and have nothing to do with Abdul-Baha. Whoever wishes may accept them and any one who rejects them may do as he pleases.

Now some of the mischief-makers, with many kinds of tricks are seeking leadership and in order to reach this position they instill some doubts among the friends that they may cause differences, and differences may result in drawing a party to themselves. But the friends of God must be awake and must know that the scattering of these doubts have as their motives personal intentions and the realization of leadership.

Do not break up Bahai unity, and this unity cannot be maintained save through faith in the Covenant of God.

In fine, thou hast the desire to travel about that thou mayest spread the fragrances of God. This is highly suitable. Assuredly divine confirmations will assist thee and the power of the Covenant and the Testament will secure thee triumph and victory.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

NORMA WILSON

To the maid-servant of God, Norma Wilson, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. It was like the melody of the divine nightingale, the twittering of which gladdens the hearts. This is because its contents indicated faith, assurance and firmness in the Covenant and the Testament. Today the stirring power of the world of existence is the power of the Covenant which like unto arteries pulsates in the body of the contingent world and protects Bahai unity.

The Bahais are ordered to establish the oneness of mankind; if they cannot unite around one point how will they be able to bring about the unity of mankind?

The purpose of the Blessed Beauty in entering into this Covenant and Testament was to gather all the existent beings around one point so that the thoughtless souls, who in every cycle and generation have been the cause of dissension, may not undermine the Movement. He has, therefore, commanded that whatever emanates from the Center of the Covenant is right and is under His protection and favor, while everything else is error.

Praise be to God, thou art firm in the Covenant and the Testament.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

SUPPLICATION REVEALED BY ABDUL-BAHA.

O God! Assist me with the hosts of the Supreme Concourse and make me firm and steadfast in the Covenant and Testament. I am weak in the Covenant and Testament; confer upon me strength. I am poor; bestow upon me wealth from the treasures of the Kingdom. I am ignorant; open before my face the doors of knowledge. I am dead; breathe into me the Breath of Life. I am dumb; grant me an eloquent tongue, so that with a fluent expression I may raise the call of Thy Kingdom and quicken all of them in firmness to the Covenant. Thou art the Generous, the Giver and the Mighty!

WORDS OF ABDUL-BAHA

"Great importance must be given to the development of the STAR OF THE WEST. The circle of its discussion must be widened; in its columns must be published the essential problems pertaining to the Bahai life in all its phases. Its contents must be so universal that even the strangers may subscribe to it. Articles must be published, dealing with the universal principles of the Cause, the writers proving that this Cause takes a vital interest in all the social and religious movements of the age and is conducive to the progress of the world and its inhabitants. In short, the STAR OF THE WEST must promote the aspirations and the ideals that will gather little by little around these general Tablets, bringing into the light of day all the historical, religious and racial knowledge which will be of the utmost value to the Bahai teachers all over the world."

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

The Collective Center

Address by HOOPER HARRIS of New York City, delivered at the Sixth Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Tuesday afternoon, April 29th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

THE subject assigned to me this afternoon is "The Collective Center." I did not choose the subject myself, I was asked to speak upon it.

In the great Tablet of Ishrakat, in the Persian meaning, shining forth; in the great Tablet of the shining forth, BAHÁ'O'LLAH says, beginning the Tablet with this expression—I am not quoting the words exactly but the substance—"When God purposes a new creation He first sends forth the luminous point, the point traverses the circle and passes through every sign, and there appears two great orbs."

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

The Word of God is that luminous point, the desire or the will or the Word of God. He, therefore, first sends forth His Word, His will, and that will traverses the circle and these two great orbs are produced. We read in the old Testament that the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the water and then the creation took place. In other words, creation is not out of nothing, as the theologians say. God has not spoken in our own scriptures or in any scriptures of creation ex nihilo, that is to say, creation out of nothing.

Creation is a process, is a forming, and the process of the forming is plainly told us if we have the eye to see it in these words of BAHÁ'O'LLAH in the great shining forth. There we have the point and the circle, the center and the circumference, and in the point and the circle the center and the circumference, we have the whole of all there is in the science of mathematics. In the point we have the symbol of the singleness of God; in the circle we have the symbol of the allness of God. Both the point and the circle are the symbols of eternity because you can extend the point forever and ever in either direction and never reach the end of it; you can subdivide it forever and ever and never reach the end of it. It is infinite in its minuteness; it is infinite in its greatness. The circle is the enclosure; it is the horizon, it is the circumference. You can go around it forever and ever and never get to the end of it.

The point is the symbol of the Occident, the singleness of God; the circle is the symbol of the Orient, the allness of God, and not until the point and the circle meet do you have the absolute oneness. So BAHÁ'O'LLAH has taught us the singleness and the oneness of God, and in the singleness and oneness of God we again have the point and the circle, the circle and the circumference.

In the West, every church spire pointing with its sharp point up into the heavens, represents a mathematical idea of God, the one God in heaven in singleness. In the East every religious temple has a dome, it has the half circle; it represents the eye of God, looking out in every direction and seeing His allness. The symbols, the point and the circle, the symbols of geometry and the symbols of arithmetic are concrete mathematics, yet nothing in themselves. The one can do nothing alone; the cipher can do nothing alone. But when you bring the two together, the one and the cipher you have the ten, and in the ten you have the decimal system and in the decimal system you have the principle of mathematics which builds everything; the principle of mathematics which builds your cities, which builds your great bridges, your great works of engineering, your great construction work because the Occident and the Orient have come together. They have clasped hands.

The point is the symbol of the objective being, the circle is the symbol of the subjective being. Now we see that even in the description given us in the creation, the earth was without form and void and the Spirit of God moved upon the surface of the waters and there commenced to be a forming, a creating, a drawing in toward a collective center. And then in the spiritual sense when God sent forth His prophet, His manifestation, His Word, for the purpose of a new spiritual creation in this universe, the same principle exactly was followed. He sent forth the luminous point—as in this great, new wonderful creation of our own day, the Bab—and eighteen others, making nineteen “letters of the living.”

I cannot talk long, but if you will study carefully you will find that Jesus the Christ had twelve disciples, men—and there were six women dear to his heart, his faithful servants who, because of the character of the times and the conditions were not outwardly known as disciples, but who were in a spiritual and inner sense just as truly disciples of the blessed Christ as were his twelve men disciples,—and so then there were eighteen “letters of the living,” and together with Christ, himself the point, made the nineteen; and the one and the nine, ten. The Bab, the luminous point, passes through these signs or letters. He has his eighteen “letters of the living,” the greatest of all of whom, thank God, was a woman, Kurat’l Ayn, who gave her life for this great Cause in such a manner that Dr. Pollock, a western physician present at the time and witnessing her execution, makes the statement, publishes it in writing, that that magnificent, that wonderful woman bore with infinite patience, without a murmur of complaint, with great gladness, a long and torturing death for the sake of the great freedom of woman and of the race. Eighteen “letters of the living,” himself the point, the luminous point, nineteen; one and nine, ten.

And then there were created these great two orbs, the great Manifestation of God, the orb of command, the orb of revelation, the orb of manifestation; and the other orb, the Center of the Covenant. Two great orbs. So we have in the outer, physical creation, according to the description, the great collective center as well as in the spiritual creation the great collective center. We have outwardly in this physical universe of ours, the great collective center the sun. Around it revolve the planets and everything in the circumference of that enclosure is pulling upon the sun, and the sun in its turn is pulling to it every particle, every smallest atom throughout the solar system. And so, through this great collective center, the sun, and through the great law of gravitation—which on the material and the outer plane is the expression of love, because that is the attraction of gravitation, the affinity of atom for atom, the love of atom for atom—through this great central orb, the sun and the physical expression of love, gravitation, the order of the universe is maintained.

And then, I think you will find in the great book, Seven Valleys, BAHÁ' O'LLAH—long before the scientists knew anything about it—said “Split the atom, and at its center you will find a radiance.” The scientists came along and have discovered that the atom could be split and they did split it, and at its center they found a form of electromagnetic energy which they named the electron. So even the little atom is a world complete in itself, the point and the circle and its point or center is the electron. Its circumference is all the rest of it and through the radiant energy at its center, its world is held together and the order of the integrity of even the little atom is maintained and preserved through this principle of the collective center.

The great organism we call the macrocosm; man as an individual has been called a microcosm. What is true of the macrocosm is also of the microcosm because man, as an individual, has also his own universe and at the center of that universe is a great collective center. And in the individual man what is that collective center? BAHÁ' O'LLAH says in his Hidden Words, “We have deposited in you the essence of our light, therefore depend upon it and upon nothing else.” So that the center of each individual human being, the center of the universe of the individual, he calls the essence of the light of God, radiance from God at the center of the individual human being. And where does that center exist? God has told us that there is a connection between the individual and the soul.

The soul is not in the body like something within a shell but each individual is connected with his soul and his soul is the carrier of the commands of God. Through the soul the individual receives the light of the inspiration and the knowledge God. Not merely by their circumferences meeting; they are connected by the meeting of their centers.

When center is connected with center then you have a real unity, a real joining. When only circumference is joined with circumference you merely have an outer contact, which is a very different thing. So the man or the woman who is truly joined to the great collective center, God, is joined at that point of connection where the two worlds meet, joined at the place where the soul connects the individual with the great, the eternal, and the universal.

We pass on to the collective center of the Kingdom of God upon the earth. You will remember how one day Jesus was walking with his disciples, and he passed the temple, the outer temple of stone, and he said, “You see this temple? Destroy it and in three days I will build it again,” and the writer, the reporter of the words of Jesus, notes that he did not refer to this temple of stone; he referred to the temple of his own body. Again Jesus said, “Know ye not that the Kingdom of Heaven is amongst you?” The words do admit of the meaning that the Kingdom of Heaven is “within” you, that is quite true, but that is not the primary meaning of the words. The primary meaning of the words was that the Kingdom of Heaven is amongst you, and he meant by that that the Word of God in the flesh, walking among men, was the organic law of men, in the midst of them; that He was their king, He was their charter; He was their law, He was the Kingdom of God amongst them. The commentators point out that he must have meant this because the words are addressed to the Pharisees and the commentators say that it is not likely that in addressing the Pharisees he would have said the Kingdom of Heaven is “within you.”

The body of the Manifestation of God upon the earth is the Kingdom of God amongst men, and He is the great collective center of the whole human race. In the Tablet which will be read to you after the speaking, Abdul-Baha gives illustrations of various collective centers. You will hear these things from his own pen and he says that the collective center, the real collective center among men, is the body of the teachings of the Kingdom of God. What does he mean? That the teachings of God are not something which are just scattered here and there and everywhere without any system and without any order, but that they have a body and a body means an organism. You can't have a body without an organism; a body must have its head, it must have its heart, it must have its lungs, it must have the things that constitute a body. Now, there are different ideas of what might be considered the body of the teachings of God, the body of the teachings of God on the earth today.

First and foremost, Abdul-Baha, the Center of the Covenant, is in himself, in his own personality, the body of the teachings of the Kingdom of God. Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney said to me when I was in Acca, "The Master does not pose, there is no posing about the Master." He is as simple as a little child, so simple that he fools people who do not know who and what he is. That dear, sweet, wonderful old man, in his own personality, in his own body walking this earth today is the body of the teachings of the Kingdom of God, is the law of the Kingdom of God, is everything that there is in the Kingdom of God embodied and shown forth in a human life, in a human personality.

Now, the Center of the Covenant of God upon this earth today, the body of the teachings of God upon the earth today, has himself told us that the Mashrekol-Azkar, the outward physical temple, will one day show forth the most marvelous spiritual results and that all of the activities of the Kingdom are to go forth from the Mashrekol-Azkar, the outer physical temple. He himself has named that outer physical temple as a collective center for the teachings of God. He has sent us a great and wonderful Tablet, a Tablet calling for action, a Tablet calling for us to do something, not merely to take his words and to say of them, Beautiful! Wonderful! Not merely to enjoy ourselves in a great spiritual feast in the delight of listening to that word and utterance, not merely in the sacred reverence we have for those writings and their embellishment as we have them here in these unveilings, Beautiful, beautiful! Wonderful, wonderful! But that is not what the Great Master is calling on us for. He is calling on us for action. He is calling on us to do the things that he is asking us to do, telling us how to do, in these great Tablets.

We should respond to the call, we should see the necessity of the collective center after he himself has told us about it, we should realize that here is the collective center whose radii extends from that center to the circumference and that from everywhere throughout that whole circumference every least and little ray, even at the outer edge of the circumference if it is turned toward the center, will come together in a great meeting and join and know each other in the center. It is inevitable, it cannot be avoided. But the minute you turn your back upon that center, the minute you say, "I am an individual, I am going to have my own individual way, I don't believe in any collective center, I think I can do this thing for myself," and you begin to look out toward the horizon, toward the outer rim of the circle and you have your own little way, talking—Oh, how beautifully people can talk, when they should do—talking in the most beautiful and wonderful way, all the time you are getting further and further apart from everyone of these little rays that start from that collective center. And we might go on for ever and ever and never come together, because the mathematical principle is contrary to our coming together if we follow that course. But the very minute that we turn in our tracks, each one of us gets rid of his desire to have his own little particular or individual way, or to exalt himself in any little way, or to think that he amounts to anything—Ah, how could he amount to anything if he only knew in comparison to the great heart of God how little he really is and how big he can become if he finds his reality there in Him, the bigger One!—if he only comes to know that, and to realize that and turns his back to the circumference and his face toward the great Center of the Covenant, then he is marching from the great outer rim—column after column, you can see them as they come, marching and marching from every point of that circle and from the circumference, each one intent upon his own business, each one doing his own duty, and yet every one of them from every point, gradually, persistently, inevitably, tending to the great union—where he and they are joined in the Center, and are not merely brought together by contact on the outer circumference.

If this great Congress and Convention does not succeed in bringing us to this realization, that we must obey the call of the Center of the Covenant, that we must listen with all our hearts and souls to what he has to say about the commands and about the collective center, then our session will have failed, and who are to do the work?

Thank God for ever and for ever, eternally thank Him, that you shall hear His words in these great Tablets, quoting first the words of Jesus the Christ, "Blessed are the poor for theirs is the Kingdom of God," and then He Himself saying, "Blessed are the nameless and the traceless poor, for they are the leaders of mankind!"

The Manifestation of Divinity through Inspiration

Address by SAFFA KINNEY of Boston, delivered at the Sixth Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Tuesday afternoon, April 29th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

MY beloved brother, Hooper Harris, has given you really the first phase, or the first conditions of my topic and in all that I have to say, I want you to consider that as the first part of my few words. The topic as given to me this afternoon is "The Manifestation of Divinity and Inspiration." I have taken the liberty of changing one word. Somehow or other I could not seem to quite understand the way it read, so I changed the word "and" to the word "through"—"The Manifestation of Divinity through Inspiration," and then I seemed to get some thoughts. However, be it as it may, I have taken for my text this afternoon the Lord's Prayer: "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and I wish to present the same thought that Brother Harris has presented from the standpoint of one who is trying.

Everything, everywhere, has a manifestation of some wonderful thought or idea behind it, or lying concealed, shall we say. If you wander through the fields, if you wander through the rose-gardens, if you pass into the midst of the great forest there you see nature in activity; there you see the wonderful flowers of the field, the daisies, growing, passing through their phases of development and then passing away, and you see the wonderful gardens coming to fruition and fullness, passing into the blossoms and then into the seed, and passing away, leaving the seed behind;

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O ye apostles of BAHÁ'O'LLAH—May my life be a ransom to you!

Similarly, the Magazine, the STAR OF THE WEST, must be edited in the utmost regularity, but its contents must be the promulgator of the Cause of God—so that both in the East and the West they may become informed of the most important events.

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Western World

Tablet* of ABDUL-BAHA read at the Sixth Session of the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention and Bahai Congress, held in Hotel McAlpin, New York City, April 26-30, 1919.

FIRST TABLET

To the Assemblies and Meetings of the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the United States and Canada—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye blessed souls!

I desire for you eternal success and prosperity and beg perfect confirmation for each one in the divine world. My hope for you is that each one may shine forth like unto the morning star from the horizon of the world and in this garden of God become a blessed tree, producing everlasting fruits and results.

Therefore I direct you that which is conducive to your heavenly confirmation and illumination in the Kingdom of God.

*NOTE.—The two Tablets presented herewith are addressed to the Bahai Assemblies of the United States and Canada, instructing them to spread the principles of BAHÁ'O'LLAH in Alaska, Mexico, Central America, South America and the West Indies. The first Tablet was revealed in the Garden of Bahjee, Saturday morning, April 8th, 1916; the second Tablet was revealed on Thursday afternoon, March 8th, 1917, at Haifa, Palestine.—The Editors.

It is this: Alaska is a vast country. Although one of the maid-servants of the Merciful has hastened to those parts, serving as a librarian in the public library, and according to her ability is not failing in teaching the Cause, yet the call of the Kingdom of God is not yet raised through that spacious territory.

His Holiness Christ says: Travel ye to the East and to the West of the world and summon the people to the Kingdom of God. Hence the mercy of God must encompass all humanity. Therefore, do ye not think it permissible to leave that region deprived of the breezes of the Morn of Guidance. Consequently, strive as far as ye are able to send to those parts fluent speakers, who are detached from aught else save God, attracted with the fragrances of God, and sanctified and purified from all desires and temptations. Their sustenance and food must consist of the teachings of God. First they must themselves live in accordance with those principles, then guide the people. Perchance, God willing, the lights of the Most Great Guidance may illumine that country and the breezes of the rose-garden of the love of God may perfume the nostrils of the inhabitants of Alaska. Should ye become confirmed in thus rendering such a service, rest ye assured that ye shall crown your heads with the diadem of everlasting sovereignty, and at the Threshold of Oneness you will become the favored and accepted servants.

Likewise the Republic of Mexico is very important. The majority of the inhabitants of that country are devoted Catholics. They are totally unaware of the reality of the Bible, the Gospel and the new divine Teachings. They do not know that the basis of the religions of God is one and that the Holy Manifestations are like unto the Sun of Truth, rising from the different dawning-places. Those souls are submerged in the sea of dogmas. If one breath of life be blown over them, great results will issue therefrom. But it is better for those who intend to go to Mexico to teach, to be familiar with the Spanish language.

Similarly, the six Central American Republics, situated south of Mexico—Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and the seventh country Belize or British Honduras. The teachers going to those parts must also be familiar with the Spanish language.

You must give great importance in teaching the Indians, i.e., the aborigines of America. For these souls are like the ancient inhabitants of Peninsular Arabia, who previous to the manifestation of His Holiness Mohammed were treated as savages. But when the Mohammedic light shone forth in their midst, they became so illumined that they brightened the world. Likewise, should these Indians and aborigines be educated and obtain guidance, there is no doubt that through the divine Teachings, they will become so enlightened as in turn to shed light to all regions.

All the above countries have importance, but especially the Republic of Panama, wherein the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans come together through the Panama Canal. It is a center for travel and passage from America to other continents of the world, and in the future it will gain most great importance.

Likewise, the islands of the West Indies, such as Cuba, Haiti, Porto Rico, Jamaica, the islands of the Lesser Antilles, Bahama Islands, even the small Watling island, have great importance; especially the two black Republics, Haïta and Santo Domingo, situated in the cluster of the Greater Antilles. Likewise, the cluster of the islands of Bermuda in the Atlantic Ocean have importance.

In a similar way, the Republics on the continent of South America,—Columbia, Ecuador, Peru, Brazil, British Guiana, Dutch Guiana, French Guiana, Bolivia, Chile, Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Venezuela; also the islands in the north east and west of South America, such as Falkland Island, Galapagos, Juan Fernandez, Tobago and Trinidad. Likewise, the city of Bahia, situated on the eastern shore of Brazil. Because it is some time that it has become known by this name, its efficacy will be most potent.

In short, O ye believers of God! Exalt your effort and magnify your aims. His Holiness Christ says: “Blessed are the poor, for theirs shall be the Kingdom of Heaven.” In other words: Blessed are the nameless and traceless poor, for they are the leaders of mankind. Likewise it is said in the Koran: “We desire to bestow our gifts upon those who have become weak on the face of the earth, and make them a nation and the heirs (of spiritual truth.)” Or, we wish to grant a favor to the impotent souls and suffer them to become the inheritors of the Messengers and Prophets.

Therefore, now is the time that you may divest yourselves of the garment of attachment to this phenomenal realm, be wholly severed from the physical world, become angels of heaven and travel and teach through all these regions.

I declare by Him, beside whom there is no one, that each one of you shall become the Israfel of Life, blowing the breath of Life in the souls of others.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

SUPPLICATION

O Thou incomparable God! O Thou Lord of the Kingdom! These souls are Thy heavenly army. Assist them and with the cohorts of the Supreme Course, make them victorious; so that each one of them may become like unto a regiment and conquer these countries through the love of God and the illumination of divine Teachings.

O God! Be Thou their supporter and their helper, and in the wilderness, the mountain, the valley, the forests, the prairies and the seas, be Thou their confidant—so that they may cry out through the power of the Kingdom and the breath of the Holy Spirit!

Verily, Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty and the Omnipotent, and Thou art the Wise, the Hearer and the Seer.

SECOND TABLET

To the Assemblies and Meetings of the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the United States and Canada—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye heavenly souls, sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

God says in the Koran: "Take ye hold of the Cord of God, all of you, and become ye not disunited."

In the contingent world there are many collective centers which are conducive to the association and unity between the children of men. For example, patriotism is a collective center, nationalism is a collective center, identity of interests is a collective center, political alliance is a collective center, the union of ideals is a collective center, and the prosperity of the world of humanity is dependent upon the organization and promotion of the collective centers. Nevertheless, all the above institutions are in reality the matter and not the substance, accidental and not eternal, temporary and not everlasting. With the appearance of great revolutions and upheavals, all these collective centers are swept away. But the Collective Center of the Kingdom, embodying the institutes and divine Teachings, is the eternal Collective Center. It establishes relationship between the East and the West, organizes the oneness of the world of humanity, and destroys the foundation of differences. It overcomes and includes all the other collective centers. Like unto the ray of the sun, it dispels entirely the darkness, encompassing all the regions, bestows ideal life, and causes the effulgence of divine illumination. Through the breaths of the Holy Spirit it performs miracles, the Orient and the Occident embrace each other, the North and South become intimates and associates, conflicting and contending opinions disappear, antagonistic aims are brushed aside, the law of the struggle for existence is abrogated, and the canopy of the oneness of the world of humanity is raised on the apex of the globe, casting its shade over all the races of men. Consequently, the real collective center is the body of the divine Teachings, which include all the degrees and embrace all the universal relations and necessary laws of humanity.

Consider: The people of the East and the West were in the utmost strangeness. Now to what a high degree they are acquainted with each other and united together! How far are the inhabitants of Persia from the remotest countries of America! And now observe how great has been the influence of the heavenly power, for the distance of thousands of miles has become identical with one step! How various nations that have had no relations or similarity with each other are now united and agreed through this divine potency! Indeed to God belongs power in the past and in the future! And, verily, God is powerful over all things!

Consider: When the rain, the heat, the sun and the gentle zephyrs co-operate with each other, what beautiful gardens are produced! How the various kinds of hyacinths, flowers, trees and plants associate with each other and are conducive to the adornment and charm of one another! Hence the oneness of the bounty of the sun, the oneness of rain and the oneness of the breeze, have, so overcome all other considerations that the variety of hues, fragrances and tastes have increased the adornment, the attraction and sweetness of the whole. In a similar manner, when the divine Collective Center and the outpouring of the Sun of Reality and the breaths of the Holy Spirit are brought together, the variety of races and the differences existing between countries will become the cause of the embellishment, decoration and elegance of the world of humanity.

Therefore, the believers of God throughout all the Republics of America, through the divine power, must become the cause of the promotion of heavenly Teachings and the establishment of the oneness of humanity. Every one of the important souls must arise, blowing over all parts of America the breath of life, conferring upon the people a new spirit, baptizing them with the fire of the love of God, the water of life, and the breaths of the Holy Spirit—so that the second birth may become realized. For it is written in the Gospel: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit."

Therefore, O ye believers of God in the United States and Canada! Select ye important personages, or that they go themselves, becoming severed from rest and composure of the world, may arise and travel throughout Alaska, the Republic of Mexico, and South of Mexico, in the Central American Republics, such as Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and Belize; and through the great South American Republics, such as Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, French Guiana, Dutch Guiana, British Guiana, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile; also in the group of the West Indies islands, such as Cuba, Haiti, Porto Rico, Jamaica and Santo Domingo, and the group of the islands of the Lesser Antilles, the islands of Bahama and the islands of Bermuda; likewise to the islands of the east, west and south of South America, such as Trinidad, Falkland Islands, Galapagos Islands, Juan Fernandez and Tobago. Visit ye especially the city of Bahia, on the eastern shore of Brazil. Because in the past years this city was christened with the name, "Bahia," there is no doubt that it has been through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

Consequently, the believers of God must display the utmost effort, upraise the divine melody throughout those regions, promulgate the heavenly Teachings and waft over all, the spirit of eternal life; so that those Republics may become so illumined with the splendors and the effulgences of the Sun of Reality that they may become the objects of the praise and commendation of all other countries. Likewise, ye must give great attention to the Republic of Panama, for in that point the Occident and the Orient find each other united through the Panama Canal, and it is also situated between the two great oceans. That place will become very important in the future. The Teachings once established there, they will unite the East and the West, the North and the South.

Hence the intention must be purified, the effort ennobled and exalted; so that ye may establish affinity between the hearts of the world of humanity. This glorious aim will not become realized save through the promotion of divine Teachings which are the foundations of the holy religions.

Consider how the religions of God served the world of humanity! How the religion of Torah became conducive to the glory and honor and progress of the Israelitish nation! How the breaths of the Holy Spirit of His Holiness Christ created affinity and unity between divergent communities and quarreling families! How the sacred power of His Holiness Mohammed became the means of uniting and harmonizing the contentious tribes and the different clans of Peninsular Arabia—to such an extent that one thousand tribes were welded into one tribe, strife and discord were done away with, all of them unitedly and with one accord strove in advancing the cause of culture and civilization, and thus were freed from the lowest degree of degradation, soaring toward the height of everlasting glory! Is it possible to find a greater Collective Center in the phenomenal world than this? In comparison to this divine Collective Center, the national collective center, the patriotic collective center, the political collective center and the cultural and intellectual collective center are like child's plays!

Now strive ye that the Collective Center of the sacred religions, for the inculcation of which all the prophets were manifested and which is no other than the Spirit of the divine Teachings,—be spread in all parts of America;—so that each one of you may shine forth from the horizon of Reality like unto the morning star, divine illumination may overcome the darkness of nature, and the world of humanity may become enlightened. This is the most great work! Should ye become confirmed therein, this world will become another world, the surface of the earth will become the delectable paradise, and eternal institutions be founded.

Let whosoever travels to different parts to teach, peruse over mountain, desert, land and sea, this supplication:

SUPPLICATION

O God! O God! Thou seest my weakness, lowliness and humility amongst Thy creatures; nevertheless I have trusted in Thee and have arisen in the promotion of Thy Teachings amongst Thy strong servants, relying on Thy power and might!

O Lord! I am a broken-winged bird and desire to soar in this, Thy space, to which there is no limit. How is it possible for me to do this save through Thy providence and grace, Thy confirmation and assistance!

O Lord! Have pity on my weakness and strengthen me with Thy power!

O Lord! Have pity on my impotency and assist me with Thy might and majesty!

O Lord! Should the breaths of the Holy Spirit confirm the weakest of creatures, he shall attain to the highest station of greatness and shall possess anything he desireth. Indeed, Thou hast assisted Thy servants in the past, and they were the weakest of Thy creatures, the lowliest of Thy servants and the most insignificant of those who lived upon the earth; but through Thy sanction and potency they took precedence over the most glorious of Thy people and the most noble of Thy mankind. Whereas formerly they were as moths, they became royal falcons and whereas before they were as bubbles they became seas. Through Thy bestowal, Thy mercy and Thy most great favor they became stars shining in the horizon of guidance, birds singing in the rose-gardens of immortality, lions roaring in the forest of knowledge and wisdom and whales swimming in the oceans of life.

Verily, Thou art the Clement, the Powerful, the Mighty, and the Most Merciful of the Merciful!

The Manifestation of Divinity through Inspiration

and if you go into the forest there you hear the rustling of the giant trees, and the wind blowing through their branches to a sighing tune, and you say to yourself, if you are a thoughtful man, "Why, I see all these things, I feel all these things, I smell the beautiful flowers and hear the whispering trees, and I may even break the branches, but whence came they?" Have you never thought of that? You must realize that they come from an invisible idea. In other words, that they are indeed manifestations of some perfection, laying hidden somewhere, and then if you pass away from the forest and away from the flowers and away from the fields, and into the cities, and come into the great cathedral and hear the organ playing and on all sides of you you see the mighty, massive columns and the vaulted roof, the beautiful statuary, you see another phase of the same thing. There you see things born of the idea and the brain of men, something more tangible, perhaps, than nature. You say to yourself, "Oh, how beautiful that statuary is! Why, it looks so much like someone I knew," as we might say in Boston, like Phillips Brooks, or like Lincoln or a great picture of Washington, or a great statue that resembles some great saint of the past ages in the church; and the mighty organ, which is the idea that embodies forth the mysteries of music, and you say to yourself, "There is the mind of man at work. What a wonderful idea that artist had, that genius had, that great creator, that great architect had, when he put them forth, and we have these wonderful results to turn to, all manifesting the idea lying hidden and concealed."

And after awhile perhaps we ask ourselves, "Now, which is most real of all these things: The manifestation of them in the concrete forms that we see before us, or the idea lying behind?" And in this wonderful age when so many things are transpiring every moment of the time, when you see giant planes flying through the air in such a marvelous way that seems to take you out of yourself, when you put your ear to a little instrument and you hear the voice of a friend you know is thousands of miles away, you are not satisfied with ordinary explanations. The logic of a simple explanation will not appeal to your soul. You say, "The mystery of nature is too great; the mystery of the mind is too great. Where may I go to look for the explanation for all these things?" And the only answer, is the divine prophet of God, a wonderful picture of whom has been portrayed by my beautiful brother, such a valiant warrior of God. In that collective center and from that divine point of energy, each of us realize that something may flow, that something may happen, that something may come to the earth, and the next question you will ask of yourself, "Well, when does he come? I myself, feel that I am a manifestation of myself. Am I a manifestation of this center?" And so we question ourselves. We go all about, and some people feeling their own importance do say they are this center and do feel that they are God, but I tell you after they come in contact with the real thing, they begin to forget all about it, because we have every evidence as Bahais that everyone of us, with no exception, fails at some point, except the One who is that collective center. In that collective center we do find perfection, we do find the infallible, but nowhere else. Praise God that it is so. How fortunate that we have some standard of knowledge that will give us a realization of the truth and the answer to our question.

But let us go on. Take that for granted then, that there is set up this eternal connection between the individual and the divine center. There must be then some further thought on the subject, and in studying over the history of the world which is the only answer to all these great questions, we find that just so often there comes into the world these divine ones, claiming to be that collective center, not so much by the very proposition, not so much by their saying, "I am this divine center," but from the result of their work, which is ever the proof. And so we find that just so often there has come into this world a manifestation from this hidden place, this concealed origin, this divine wisdom, this holocaust which in turn fires you and me, and this is ever the process. It has ever been so.

The other evening at the wonderful dinner we all attended our beautiful speaker, Dr. Guthrie said that there was nothing new in this Bahai Revelation, and he said "Praise be to God that this is so." Well, I praise God that there is something new in this divine Revelation, and I want to simply correct Dr. Guthrie and say that he hadn't found the point of contact. He was looking on the surface for the new things. Oh, no, the sunlight is always new. But we don't look for the sunlight to the sunlight, or in the sunlight for new things, but when the sun strikes the earth in spring we have the new flowers and so the Bahai Revelation is to give to the world the new things and the wonderful things that the people who have not become real intrinsic Bahais cannot find. They cannot find it yet because the sunlight is just glancing on the spiritual world. Sometimes there will come the divine blossoming of this flower which is coming now. Then we will have the new things. Then we will manifest forth the divinity of our inspiration, and that is the point I want to make.

Now, you and I are the strugglers toward the new and wonderful things that will manifest through inspiration. God gives us the grace and grants us the power to do it. How can we ever get there? Just through one magic word, "sacrifice," that is the absolute requirement. The first great sacrifice, we have been told, is to cut oneself loose from the tales of the past. Is the past all wrong? Are the tales of the past all wrong? No, thank God, they were not all wrong. They are not today all wrong, but those of us who are to manifest to the world through inspiration can never do it if we are tied to the old, and no matter how true the old may be, no matter how fitting it may be we have got to bare our souls until there is nothing left of self, until all the tales, all the knowledge and all that we have is gone, and then will God send to you and to me a new inspiration. Then will we manifest and then only, the new, through inspiration. Indeed, the mind must be fortified, the way must be made clear through the divine Word; there must be no mistake about it, because the mind is not in a condition to be truly inspired yet, but the time will come no doubt when we will not have to be so guarded about the words, in fact our beloved Master said to me one day when I was wandering in his garden and taking pictures, he said to me, in the most comical way—he caught me unawares; I had my coat off, and I was dreadfully ashamed, I didn't know why—"Ah," he said, "you take pictures and you steal my house and you steal my grounds and you steal my people, and you take them away with you to America in your camera. I will send my lawyer after you and I will put you in prison," and then he waited a moment, tapped me on the shoulder, and laughing, said, "All things will pass away, some day my words that I have written down will pass away; but the words that I have written on the tablet of the heart will never pass away." So you see that is the real meaning of the manifestation of divinity through inspiration, the blessed words written on the heart of a true believer by the finger of God.

Oh, the sacrifice that is needed! Oh, the cutting loose from all things! Oh, the self-abnegation that you and I must practice! Oh, the torture of the wounds that we must endure, laughing and joyfully! Oh, the prayers that we must pray that at the very moment of triumph we may not yield to the Satan and glory in self, to the awful serpent that is always in our garden presenting to us the wonderful feast of the flower of self-indulgence in some way or other! God grant that we may endure, and God grant that we may ask for calamities and sacrifice so that we may get away from that thing, because in that way alone can you and I manifest divinity through inspiration.

What is inspiration? What is the manifestation of divinity through inspiration? I tell you, the finger of God will not write a great story in the mirror that is dulled with the ashes of self. The light will not shine powerfully through that mirror. Inspired words are not born forth from such a mouth, and when in the mercy of God everything has been taken away, and we are only left the power to testify to His glory—and perhaps nothing else—then will our souls glory in that we have been given the power for His sake to endure, that this thing might happen.

Oh, brothers and sisters of the Cause, seek, seek, seek, for eternal happiness in that way! Don't rest a moment and don't forever be asking that your self-satisfaction may be gratified, that you may be put up or put down in some place you may like, but that you may endure, that you may receive. Because all sacrifices, the sacrifices that these blessed Ones, these glorious Ones, come and make are the greatest of all. What they have endured! Why? Let me mention one thing which is in keeping with our subject. You and I collectively have the power to make of Abdul-Baha the false Christ, we have that power when you and I do not let him write on our hearts and speak through our lips of his power and testify from whence he comes. But as you and I prove faithful to the truth, as we receive in our hearts the glory of this power, and as we, through faithfulness, on the mount of faithfulness dwell, so will we testify that he is no false Christ, but in our lives prove him to be the return of the Son of God upon earth, who is for you and for me that divine manifestation through inspiration. "How great, the greatest sacrifice that ere was made for man, when from the heavenly radiant throne the light descends to our dark world—God's perfect plan!"

Again and yet again hath shone
That ray divine, supreme,
God's lowly Messengers have come,
Have sacrificed and have proclaimed
The mighty theme.

It mirrored forth through our Lord
Christ
Who left for us this prayer
To pray, that God's blest day would come
When all would be fulfilled, and Love
Reign everywhere.

Now, is the sacrifice complete!
God doth His day enthrone!
The Lamb of God, Abdul-Baha,
Hath come! He is our King of Love
And we, his own.

Come forth! from every land appear!
In him are all things well.
Awake! and leave behind aught else
Ye sons of God; He's calling you
With him to dwell!

New glories on new glories dawn—
O do not hesitate!
The mystery of love is ours
And for our sake hath come this high,
This vast estate.

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Bahai Pilgrims

By MRS. J. S. STANNARD.

SOME thirty years ago there started from a small devastated village of Sisan, Persia, a group of travelers, poor and helpless, on a long, uncertain journey to the "land of desire," their "door of hope," the city of Acca, Palestine. They came on foot, two donkeys carrying their luggage, braving every danger and suffering every toil. They carried throughout the long distance an earthen pot containing a narcissus in flower as a present to BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. When near the end of their wearisome journey and the city of the verdant plains of Acca unfolded to their sight, all sufferings were in a twinkling forgotten as they viewed the mansion which marked the limit of their destination. Yet it was with swollen, blistered feet that they attained the gate, and finally prostrated at the feet of the Blessed Perfection, depositing their humble floral offering as they knelt. With what showers of blessing and favors were they not rewarded! Their gift accepted they knew that in His sight it meant more than untold gold or costly presents that kings might offer, for it was the expression of love and sacrifice. While BAHÁ'O'LLÁH testified His appreciation, the pilgrims pleaded in low tones for His blessing, continually repeating: "Make me to be Thy sacrifice, redeem and save my soul." Abdul-Baha alone could talk with them in their own native dialect, but they spoke eloquently in the deep language of the heart.

This impressive incident, related by Abdul-Baha to his followers, can find a parallel in the narrative of some recently arrived pilgrims from Persia, via Bushire and Bombay. Some had started on a long and trying journey four or five months previously. Many obstacles were continually met and dangers averted, delays and severe restrictions, exorbitant fees with wretched accommodation, and difficulties of transport they cheerfully endured. Not least among the miseries of their material conditions were those of sea journeys due to the monsoon season. Twenty days on tumultuous seas, many passed four days without food, drinking only a little water and vomiting blood. Having safely reached Egypt one unique disappointment was still in store for them. The steamer on which they had transshipped for Haifa from Port Said, reached Haifa bay and when in sight of Mt. Carmel, suddenly, to their stupefaction,

Editors of THE STAR OF THE WEST:

When visiting Abdul-Baha in Haifa, Nov. 2nd to 12th, 1919, Shoghi Rabbani gave us this group picture of the Master and the pilgrims who had spent six months journeying to reach the Holy Land where dwelt the one to whom their faces are turned, the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha.

Mrs. Stannard of England, now living in Cairo, gave me the enclosed article written by her for the readers of the STAR OF THE WEST. It was our blessed privilege to meet a number of these faithful friends and to see the fire of their intense love for the Bahai Cause.

changed its course and steamed ahead without stopping. As they passed Acca and viewed the stretch of trees behind the city, the roof of the holy and blessed Tomb became visible and when the pilgrims became aware of this, their long pent up emotions could no longer be restrained and, weeping and sighing convulsively, they gathered together and prayed for very joy!

A short quarantine stay in Beyrout was lived through, and when at length these weary faithful ones were finally ushered into the presence of Abdul-Baha, scenes of inexpressible joy were witnessed at the meeting, some of the younger members gazing on his face for the first time in their lives.

THE STORY OF LITTLE RAHBAR (The Guided)

A happening of special interest transpiring during the journey, through Persia, of these faithful souls, should not remain unrecorded, revealing as it does evidences of that unseen protection which they declare never failed them throughout these difficult times.

The little company included seven women, ladies of courage and refinement who, in some cases were near relatives of those great martyrs of the past when Babis and Bahais were considered legitimate objects for torture and death. The faces of these women shine with the spiritual joy of their convictions, and their bearing expresses the serenity of a noble faith. With them, as with all true Bahais, faith and knowledge are sure and inseparable factors in their lives.

One morning during busy household hours, I came upon them in an outer courtyard surrounding a low circular table on which heaps of corn lay piled. On this grain they worked, each on her separate share sifting and sorting out impurities and stones from the wheat. Typically oriental and cheery was the scene as, with heads draped in glistening white muslin that fell over the shoulders, they bent over their work conversing in low tones. As I seated myself nearby watching the play of deft hands, my eyes fell upon a young mother and her newly born babe. The wee chap was gaily swaddled in vivid silks of handwoven texture and sat on his mother's left arm as her right busied itself with the grain sorting.

Absorbed in watching them both I heard someone say, "He was born on the way." And I then heard the story of how little Rahbar, the "Guided," as he had been wonderfully named by Abdul-Baha, came and lived to make his first pilgrimage with his parents and visit the Holy Threshold.

Little "Guided" was compelled to make his entry into the world of men when conditions were none too promising; they were a day's march from beyond Shiraz, in a sparsely inhabited country. It had not been foreseen when the travelers started that the going would take months and not so many calculated weeks; so now little Rahbar's mother had to be carried in a special basket, a kajaveh, on the back of a mule till her hour should come. When this became evident our pilgrims halted the caravan and consulted how to settle this matter for the best. A small habitation being seen in the distance, some walked to make inquiry and found a woman at the door who after hearing their request opened it and offered accommodation. But on viewing the interior quarters it was decided that it was neither sufficiently clean nor convenient and hearing that something better might be procurable further on, they walked to a house of pleasing aspect, where again a woman seemed waiting for them, who to their amazed joy declared herself to be an expert midwife! The surroundings were suitable, a running stream passed close by, trees were near and all seemed providentially ready. Thankfully, they dismounted while an adjacent room of canvas was speedily rigged up for the reception of the coming guest. One remaining obstacle, however, had still to be overcome, namely, the head mule-owner of the caravan who, when he heard that a three days' halt was proposed, flew into a rage, declaring he could not consent and demanded extortionate terms for every hour of unnecessary delay. No arguments apparently prevailing, he left them to round up his animals while they debated in perplexity together. To their surprise he did not return soon and when at last a highly crest-fallen man appeared it was to say that his best mule had run away, how or when was a mystery! With apologies he begged to go and resume his search, for search he must till the beast be found! Our mother and her babe were left in grateful peace and gladly availed themselves of the repose both were so much in need; anxiety and fears were now greatly allayed as they thanked the Blessed One in their hearts who had sent such timely help in their distress. Pleasing, indeed, is it to relate that three full days elapsed during which our pilgrims rested ere the irate mule-teen returned with his missing animal expressing regrets and apologies. How neatly had tables been turned and the responsibility shifted onto rightful shoulders! Although by no means a robust woman, Rahbar's mother felt sufficiently recovered to resume the journey, and although forced once or twice to walk up steep inclines she arrived well at the next stage. Not until then was milk or other comforts procurable.

Consider then, ye western mothers, how great was the spirit of love and faith which upheld this young Persian woman to bear without fear or suffering a frail babe under such primitive conditions, through monsoon storms and on turbulent seas till they arrived at the gate of the Beloved's house and rested weary heads under the shadow of his roof! No wonder little "Guided," felt elated as he blinked sleepy eyes at me on that memorable morning, for had he not done his best, too, to make things easier all around. His mother had looked at him with quiet certainty. He and she understood one another for they knew that God had watched over their perilous way to "the door of hope" and to "His green pastures" in safety. All was well with the little flock.

The Meeting of the East and the West

Address by CHARLES MASON REMEY of Washington, D. C., delivered at the Seventh Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Tuesday evening, April 29th, 1919.

Stenographically reported.

DEAR Friends: In all of our meetings, the one great object of the Bahai Cause stands out above all other things, and that is the spiritual unity of the people, of all people, of all humanity, which this Cause plants in our hearts. It is a spiritual power emanating from the great heart and center of this movement, Abdul-Baha. There are many phases of unity in the Bahai Cause and the phase that we are to consider for a few moments is "The Meeting of the East and the West." It seems to be a very timely moment for us to consider this subject for a world federation of nations is uppermost in the minds of the thinking people. Up to the present time very little has been reported in the newspapers regarding the meeting of the East and the West as an important phase of the federation of nations now being discussed in Europe, yet we have known from the very first that the Bahai Cause lays great stress upon the meeting of the East and the West.

A very well known writer has written, "East is East and West is West and ne'er the twain shall meet." Yet we are seeing, in the light of this great Cause, that idea does not hold any longer. This is a new age. That which I have just quoted proceeds from the old order, and in this new and glorious age of which we are now upon the threshold, we are quitting the ideas of the old and giving way to a new age of oneness and unity, and perhaps the greatest phase of that is the unity of the East and the West, of the Orient and the Occident.

The Orient is the mother of the human race, so to speak. It was from the Orient that the first great religious movements and civilization moved out over the world westward. It was from the Orient that the Christ and the prophets gave their great messages of truth, and from her shores that their disciples embarked to carry these messages of glad tidings to all parts of the world. I sometimes think that we do not realize in the West that its religion, Christianity, came from the Orient; that the Savior Jesus Christ was an Oriental, and that we are indebted to the Orient for all the religion that has ever come into the world.

In some of Abdul-Baha's talks he has brought this out very beautifully, explaining how this fire of the love of God has always appeared first in the East and then has gone forth and wrought great civilizations, illuminating the world with advancement and culture. And now at this time, in this age, another great spiritual Messenger has appeared in the Orient, bringing a universal message to the whole world, bringing that light which has been promised to come in these latter days, promised in all the religions and in all the Holy Books. It is indeed a blessed privilege that we have been informed of this great Cause.

It has been my privilege to travel quite extensively in the Orient at various times. I will never forget my first experience in an Oriental country. It was in Port Said, Egypt. Port Said, as you know, is the northern entrance of the Suez Canal—that great thoroughfare of traffic between the East and the West. The canal is a channel through which ships of all nations pass going east and going west, and in the city of Port Said you meet a heterogeneous mass, an emulsion of humanity, Oriental and Occidental, speaking all languages, people of all religions, of all races; heterogeneous because they are not united. And it was there at Port Said I had the great privilege of first meeting some of the Oriental Bahai teachers, Mirza Abul Fazl and others well known to you. In the meetings which they were holding one found a perfect harmony and unity between these different elements of the East and West. All of the friends from the West who have gone to the East have been greatly impressed by this wonderful atmosphere and love which is generated by the Bahai Cause in the hearts of Orientals and Occidentals and which is uniting them in this very firm bond of brotherhood.

We know that for centuries there has been a certain mixing of the East and the West, but it has not been a spiritual mixing, it has not been a spiritual unity. The Western world, the nations of Europe, have gone into the East and controlled many governments of the East, yet up to the present time there has been no real fusion or unity. As Abdul-Baha once said, the East and West must meet like brothers [illustrating] and that is the particular function of this Bahai Movement.

There is a certain fire of religious zeal which we find in the Oriental which we need in the Occidental world. I sometimes marvel at the amount of good which is done here in the West in the name of religion with such a very small amount of real religious fire and enthusiasm behind it. When we go to the Orient, we find that the people there are ablaze with this spiritual fire, a fire which will move the world. That very element in the nature of the average Oriental which makes him a fanatic if he be not yet spiritually awakened, when his heart is once touched by the love of God, makes him the greatest friend to the people of other religions. That is one of the things which impresses one as he goes into the Bahai world of the Orient. He finds that those who were formerly Mohammedans and Zoroasterians or of other religions, who were formerly fanatical and disliked the people of the West, when they have been touched by the spiritual fire of the Bahai Movement, are ready and willing to sacrifice their lives for their brothers and sisters of the West; and really it has been through their great sacrifice in those Oriental countries, particularly in Persia, that we are now able to sit here at our ease and receive this great teaching. For you know the fires of persecution and opposition have burned so brightly in the East that at times in the early days of this Cause it seemed as if the very Cause itself would be exterminated; but as the blood of the martyrs has always been as seed to spread religion, so it has been in this day. It has been this type of the love of God born in the hearts of the Oriental Bahais that made them withstand all persecutions and trials. It was through such sacrifices that the Cause gained its great impetus in the East and was later brought here to the West, and that we are now able to receive it, as I say, seated at our ease; whereas, in those Oriental countries it was with the greatest difficulties, under the greatest privations and tribulations that the Cause first received its impetus.

Therefore, I think it would be well for us, as we go forth from this gathering, to realize and to take into our hearts the thought that before the great world civilization, the great unity of all nations, can come, this coming together of the East and the West must be realized. We must come together as one people. This of course can only come through the spiritual fusion of the East with the West, and that is the one great message which the Bahai Cause brings: The oneness of the world of humanity, the complete harmony, the complete oneness of all peoples, East and West.

Allaho'Abha!

The Solution of the Economic and Industrial Problem

Address by ALFRED E. LUNT of Boston, delivered at the Seventh Session of the Bahai Congress at Hotel McAlpin, New York City, Tuesday evening, April 29th, 1919. Stenographically reported.

TODAY from all parts of the world, from every corner and nativity, we hear the moans of the widows, the cries of the fatherless; the anguish of the suffering, the poor and the unfortunate, has arisen to such a degree that the flame of revolution in the social, the industrial and economic fields of humanity is well-high sweeping the whole globe. We should not dwell in a false security, ignorant of that which is in process. His Holiness Abdul-Baha, when in America in 1912, clearly stated these events. He stated, among other things, that except the great divine remedy which has been brought to humanity today for the purpose of quelling this revolutionary rage shall be exercised, the world will inevitably pass through a condition most perilous, most dangerous, most destructive. He said one other thing, and he has reiterated this saying so frequently that it seems to me to have a distinct bearing upon this great subject.

You all recall, or many of you recall, his statement concerning the human soul, that it is capable of two flights, one upward towards the very throne of the divine, one downward into the mire and clay of the contingent world. That mankind, the noblest of the creation, the royal falcon of the skies of heaven, has so besmeared himself with the mire and clay of disobedience to God, of selfish purpose, of acquisition of wealth, of isolation from his neighbor, of ignorance of God, that the bird of his soul has become ensnared in this mud of disobedience. This is the water and clay symbolically expressing the contingent world.

Have you ever thought of the meaning of that really dread term, the contingent world; the contingent world, the world of corruption and generation, the world of composition and decomposition? The very meaning of the word, contingent is that it is dependent upon something else. By itself it is non-existent; it is in a constant state of flux; it is the world of darkness and duality. In the contingent world the law of duality has its full sway. In the worlds of God, praise be to God, the law of contrast and duality is extinguished. In the great orb of the sun, if we imagine life there, there is no night, it is always day. But in this contingent world in which we dwell, duality and the requirements of duality exist; here are the great contrasts of darkness and light, selfishness and love, of life and death. The great tidal movements in the world are, themselves, dual and contrasted. How wonderfully Tennyson has expressed this in his poem "Crossing the Bar:"

"But such a tide that moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound or foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home."

That tide that drew from out the boundless deep, and thus returns from whence? From that remote place to which it has hastened in response to the great law of its being, the law of opposites in the world of mortality. In this world, the soul of man which is drawn from out the boundless deep, from the bosom of God, begins its return journey to Him, if perchance it heeds His call, but in the worlds of God there is only one movement, one return-flow; there is no longer involution as in this world and the lower kingdoms, but conscious evolution towards Him who is the origin and the return.

So the law of the contingent is the law of savagery; it is what has been called by Abdul-Baha the rapacious law of nature which holds in its clutch even humanity itself. Today nine-tenths of our beings, through disobedience to the divine law, have become ensnared in the claws of nature, and unless the divine power which has entered the world shall lift up this bird of humanity, shall cleanse its wings of the mire and clay so that it may fly in the high atmosphere of devotion and obedience, then only destruction can be looked for for the entire race. This is the beginning of a cycle when that great mystery of God is being accomplished. The appearance of BAHÁ'O'LLAH marked the entrance into this world of that divine power through which all mankind may be uplifted.

Coming now to the subject of the evening. Among the requirements of the contingent world is one which lies at the very seat of economic difficulties. It is called the law of the "survival of the fittest;" this law is inexorable, it is merciless, it overcomes everything which assumes to stand in its way, it is the car of the Juggernaut, and in its course mankind is as a pygmy. How well I recall that splendid old professor, N. S. Shaler of Harvard, when he said to us in one of his lectures, as a means of protest or amelioration of the inexorable character of this law of survival which was first mentioned by the great scientist Charles Darwin,—that there is another pre-eminent law in this world of creation, the esthetic law, the law of beauty, and he gave us this illustration. He referred to the Irish elk, an extinct animal which ages ago lived in what is now Ireland. This great animal developed through the natural law of esthetic beauty the most wonderful antlers. These antlers developed through the process of the ages until they were the most beautiful antlers of any animal in the world. They have been found in fossil condition, and it is known that they grew to that degree of beauty and size that the great elk in running through the forests caught his antlers in the high branches of the trees and tore them off. Thus he became extinct. The whole species perished by bleeding to death. This animal became extinct because in the contingent world he found himself in the clutches of the law of destruction, so that we see there is no escape in the animal realm from this; even the law of selective beauty did not save him. Although its traces appear in this world as a foreshadowing of the reality of the beauty of God, yet it also, encompassed by the dominating power of the natural law of survival of the fittest, became the agency of his destruction. Likewise there is no escape for mankind if he remain in these clutches.

There is another great law, a great intangible law, called by the economists the law of "supply and demand." This also is a law of duality, supply and demand, ebb and flow, and in the face of this law, mankind in the industrial sense has been helpless from the dawn of history. Man has tried for centuries by various measures of legislation and the enactment of statutes to overcome or modify this law, but without any measure of success.

Today, we witness various attempts in the legislatures of the world, especially in this country, to blunt the sharp instrument of that law,—old-age pensions, minimum wage laws, have been devised which it is believed will result in ameliorating the conditions occasioned by the application of this greater law, but they are not adapted to the seriousness of the disease. The old age pension law is only the faintest trace of the divine remedy which has been given us today for the solution of sociological needs. It attempts only to take care of persons who have passed, for instance, the age of sixty-five, and these are to be given a mere pittance which in turn is raised by various means from taxation, but it entirely ignores those under this age limit who are likewise subject to vicissitudes. Consider how often that men and women of thirty, forty, fifty and sixty years find themselves the victims of this pitiless economic law, through no fault of their own, and are deprived of the necessities of life, having to turn to charitable organizations or the almshouses for their food and their shelter. The widow and fatherless, left without means, find no relief under this law. The young or middle-aged, upon whom fortune has temporarily frowned, are left without remedy. How frequently it is that such souls, temporarily tided over the hard places, become sources of economic wealth to their communities and countries. Is it right that mankind should be subjected to such humiliation and pauperism as this? The old age pension plan will never care for these universal needs, it cannot be acceptable as a complete remedy.

Likewise the minimum wage law. Originally intended to assist the poorest paid women workers—a very high ideal brought it forth—it was found, in many typical cases, that the moment it was put into operation these needy ones became the victims of the law, wholesale unemployment resulting in factories and in stores. In my own state of Massachusetts, from the moment the minimum wage decrees went into effect in certain industries, hundreds of girls were discharged by their employers, who said, "If we must pay a high wage, we will see that we get the very most efficient service, and you to whom we have been paying a low wage are not able to earn this, therefore you must go out in the street,"—and when that condition was brought home to some of the advocates of the law, they said, it is true it is inevitable, but, they said "No wages is better than low wages." Does this sound reasonable? And yet these are the highest expressions and attempts of American and English legislation to meet this tremendous question which is on the tongues of every one, which is responsible for the risings in Russia, which is responsible for the famine in Europe, which is responsible for the breadlines in New York.

We as Bahais, nay the whole world, have been given a complete and detailed remedy by the heavenly law-giver. Why, then, do we reach out to the theories and imaginations or the disputes of theorists in Russia or anywhere else? Their protest is sound. They need the divine help. They need proper legislation. They need kindness. They need brotherhood and all the high elements of life, but the remedy they offer and the means they use is the remedy of force and violence, is the remedy, at times, of assassination, is the remedy of ignorance, is the remedy of a class system, simply substituting a class control by a certain part of the workers for the former class control by the Czar and his nobles. This limited remedy cannot surely be acceptable in this divine plan because Abdul-Baha has said, "Force is not acceptable, you cannot obtain these remedies by force," he says. It must be done through love, it must be done through justice, it must be done through the inclusion of every class, for, as he said to the Socialists, "There must always be the captain of industry, the general, as he called him, the captain, the private, and lieutenant in the body of humanity."

You cannot level mankind. You cannot equalize mankind in that sense because it is contrary to the inherent creative elements with which man has been endowed by God Himself, the law of variant capacities. These theories which we are hearing from all quarters are the theories of desperation and of imagination; they are theories which ignore absolutely the law of unity so wonderfully set forth in the Bahai teachings, which show that the body of humanity is even as the body of a man. Abdul-Baha says, in substance, "The body of humanity is stretched on the bed of severe disease, almost perishing, and only the divine physician can save it." That is, the diagnosis and prescription of that Holy One alone can raise this patient, desperately ill, into health.

Among the theories of the controlling Russian element today is one ignoring certain classes. For instance, they say, "We will not have the bourgeois have any part or share in government," yet the bourgeois, as we know them in this country, are frequently the eyes and the ears and the brain, we will say, or some other important function of the body politic, not more important, not more necessary than the other organs, but necessary. The truest and most divine government is that which co-relates, most closely to the divine type of the composite man, the various functions of that body as represented by the varying capacities of the individuals and groups making up its citizenship. Therefore until they produce a system, a method of adequately meeting the real evils, shall we run after their ideas when God Himself has given us the solution to these industrial and economic problems?

Only the emanations of the divinity, the love of God, can solve this problem. Until the hearts of humanity are instilled with that love, until they are transformed, until the bird of humanity is raised from the mud and clay of desire and passion and selfishness, and released from these chains, and from the prison of the contingent world, and flies in the air of the spirit, how can we apply the divine remedy? In other words, it is transformation, it is metamorphosis, it is resurrection, it is rebirth, which is needed. And that is the mission and the task of the great Manifestation of this age, and the Center of His Covenant who is amongst us; and unless we look to that divine plan we have no redress.

If we want to help the people of the world and ourselves and rise from this low, degraded station, let us find the sweet words of life which have flowed from the lips of the mighty Manifestation of God. He is the skillful physician whose finger is on your pulse and mine, on the pulse of those needy souls in the Bowery, on the pulse of the souls in the palaces. He is God, and He includes them all, and He has a provision for all, and His provision is this—and I must hurry this, perhaps more than it ought to be hurried, but it must be brought to a close—His provision contemplates an arrangement which will forever prevent pauperism, which will forever prevent the sufferings of the poor, such as we have known and know today, which will forever prevent the continued amassing of cumbersome fortunes on the scale we have witnessed by those who recognize no master but self, in respect to the use that they make of their possessions.

This provision will equalize to a certain degree society, without interfering with the inherent, creative, and individual initiative, which God has implanted at the roots of our beings. It is not going to be a Socialistic collectivism or communism. Abdul-Baha says this is impossible because it would interfere, or attempt to interfere, with the divine law itself, and when you attempt to interfere with the divine law you are overborne, defeated. Therefore, these remedies of equality, so-called, which do not take into consideration the varying capacities of men, do not succeed. The divine physician recognizes His handiwork and He calls for the administration of justice to every soul, and the inclusion of all.

Now this divine plan comprises several different aspects. First, the inheritance law. No longer shall a wealthy man be able to hand down his entire fortune to his oldest son, creating a family autocracy of enormous wealth, which through the years, or so long as the family resists the process of degeneracy, may constitute a menace to society. Instead of this, the Bahai law provides that every fortune, small and great, shall be distributed equally among the children, and others of kin and groups in certain definite proportions. In this, also, is contained another important provision which in turn must not be ignored because it relates to the very heart and soul, that of education—that is, for the establishment in every life, in every distribution of fortune, of a definite part to be given to the teachers of the world. How this will elevate the station of the teacher, which is so crippled today, ill-trained, poorly paid as many of them are, incompetent in many cases. Under the training of the divine institutes, illumined by the light of the new and wonderful sciences of this new age, the teachers of the world, endowed and protected by this fund, will become the mirrors of heavenly knowledge, and the moulders of character and wisdom. Then, you will see humanity leap forward into the arena of mental conquests previously undreamed of, under the guidance of teachers adequately prepared for this greatest of human services. Such teachers will be informed of the inner life of the child, the realities of the indwelling spirit which must be brought forth, fostered and made brilliant, inasmuch as these are the divine jewels of each soul.

Next, we have the encouragement of profit-sharing for the worker, i. e., the employee; this provision forms a part of the divine solution. Wages, as a means of satisfying labor, have proved inadequate. The wage system has led to strike upon strike, force upon force, violence upon violence. This is because wages alone, as a means of determining the value of labor, are peculiarly subject to the inexorable economic law of supply and demand, which is a requirement of nature, as we have seen. There must be an added determinant of value which will draw the worker nearer the center of common interest which the industry presents both to him and his employer. This common interest is the welfare and prosperity of the business itself. If this be done, the outer pressure upon the worker which ever seeks to array him against the employer, by force, if necessary, finds its influence diminished and the appeal to force will be substituted by that persuasion of unity which is the common interest of both. Until society properly and justly cares for the worker by making him a real partner in enterprise to a certain degree which is just and equitable, entitling him to a share, at the end of the year, of the profits according to the interest he holds, we will never find labor either quiescent, peaceful or contented.

It is certain that wages alone as a means of compensation has led to these constant strikes and lockouts, bitterness and great economic loss; whereas the matter should be dealt with at the fountain head. The meaning is not to abolish the wage system, but to supplement it. The bargaining power of enormous aggregations of workers, i. e., trade unions, is at present necessarily invoked to combat a stubborn employer, or one who is himself helpless in the grasp of the economic law of competition with its frequently sharply defined margin of profit. But this bargaining power of the labor union sometimes openly ignores the justice of the common interest. In its anxiety to demonstrate its power, unemployment, following the strike, hits hardest at the slender pocket-book of the worker, the unionist, himself. Its most serious failing, however, lies in its being an instrument of force and compulsion, setting up a similar psychology in the employer. Shutdowns, and lockouts result, with great financial loss to the ones who can least afford this, the workers themselves.

This mode of settling great industrial conflicts is rejected by the enlightened thought of this new age. "Not warfare, but perfect welfare," says Abdul-Baha, is the aim. The organs of this industrial body must co-relate and, in sympathetic co-operation, function in the utmost unity. The eye of man does not see because the liver arises with force to compel. Rather, under such conditions, the vision becomes impaired and the whole body poisoned. On the contrary, in the healthy body each assists the other, each draws necessary aid from the other, and each contributes harmoniously to the highest functioning of the other.

Therefore, force and violence are seen to be the handmaids of the contingent world, not the divine agencies of happiness. The rich and the powerful ones among us must voluntarily and through recognition of this great industrial truth, give a full measure of justice to the noble place of labor, freely consenting to a fundamental law which recognizes the industrial body of unity. For BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH has exalted labor, denoting it even a worship to God, and has said to the wealthy ones of earth, "The poor among ye are My trust. Therefore guard My trust and be not wholly occupied with your own ease."

Next, is the great law of the tithe or income tax. In this, a new and wonderful principle has been disclosed by BAHÁ'O'LLAH as interpreted by the Center of the Covenant. A trust principal, a great trust fund and a beneficiary of that fund has been created by him. For the first time in the history of the world, a Prophet of God has dealt in a comprehensive way with the economic question, and revealed a law for its solution. As he says:

"We have heard the midnight sighing of the poor."

His Holiness Christ said:

"Blessed are the poor for theirs shall be the Kingdom of Heaven."

And His Holiness Abdul-Baha, explaining this, says:

"Blessed are the nameless and traceless poor, for they are the leaders of mankind."

In the Koran it is written:

"We desire to bestow our gifts upon those who have become weak on the face of the earth, and make them a nation and the heirs (of spiritual truth)."

This is interpreted by Abdul-Baha to mean:

"We wish to grant a favor to the impotent souls and suffer them to become the inheritors of the Messengers and the Prophets."

Thus, it is seen that, in this day of restitution of all things, the divine promises respecting the poor are fulfilled. The divine justice establishes that which mankind in its selfish absorption, has forgotten. And this establishment, being inclusive of all classes, preserves the rights of the rich, as well. Under this law, a portion of the surplus income of every soul must be diverted to this trust fund which will be administered by the wise men of every community, to be put into effect first with the farmer. Agriculture will receive a great impetus and from this the plan will be extended into the other industrial fields. For the first time the poor are assured the right to the necessities of life. Let it be understood clearly that to be entitled to this right, one must not have failed in conscientious effort according to his ability.

"God has provided for all," Abdul-Baha tells us. "His rain showers upon all, His sun shines upon all." There is ample food for all, there is ample provision in this expanse of earth for everyone for their necessities. The principle underlying this trust is this,—that every child born into the world has a right to the necessities of life, and this is a Bahai principle, praise be to God!

Now, without going into the details of the tithe or income tax, it is sufficient to indicate that it is levied upon the surplus income in a progressive measure; according to the size of one's surplus, one must pay a certain increased proportion. It still leaves each soul an ample incentive, making his own the true balance of that surplus, to do with as he wishes, protecting his individual rights; it does not aim at private property as some socialist philosophy would advocate, converting the substantial part of all wealth into a collectivism governmentally controlled and owned; but it protects both extremes, protecting the individual even as it protects the common need. This will result in preventing so called swollen fortunes. It will be found to be the greatest means of raising up the poor to the place to which they are rightfully entitled, a position of self-respect. It does away forever with the humiliation of pauperism and assures necessities. It casts off the industrial shackles, opening the door to comfort and well being. Can the Kingdom of God find existence while industrial serfdom continues, while humanity made in the image of God dwells in constant fear of becoming the objects of almsgiving, destroying self-respect, extinguishing the light of hope, blunting the finer qualities of the soul?

Applying this trust principal, Abdul-Baha says that if a man who has not failed in endeavor fails to raise a crop,—we will say he is a farmer—because of the difficulties of the weather or pests, so that he and his family are without means of provision, then that man has a right to go to the storehouse, i. e., the trust fund, in that village and secure the necessities of life. This is a divine principle. It may be, of course, and frequently is the case, that through previous savings, accumulated property, or outside income, etc., one whose income in a given year falls below necessary outgo, is enabled to meet his annual deficit. My understanding is that the right to necessities from the common storehouse would not accrue to one in this position, since no need arises.

The principle of taxation must be here considered. If a man has only earned enough to supply the necessities of his family, then no tax shall be levied against him. Is it just that we levy a tax on a man who earns five hundred dollars a year who needs every cent for the actual necessities of life, and only levy the same degree of tax upon a man whose income is one hundred thousand dollars? Again, just what is the duty of such a needy one to the community in respect to taxation? Taxation, briefly, is the charge laid by the sovereign power upon the property of its subjects. By its essential nature it is an enforced contribution for the support of government and for all public needs. Under the common law, there was no liability of the public authorities to render aid to the unfortunate class commonly denominated as paupers. Up to recent times, and the enactment of the Poor Laws, these wretched ones had no recourse from their misery and destitution. Imprisonment for debt, precarious individual almsgiving, or downright beggary, were their sole guarantees of continued existence. But statutory enactments in most of the states now require assistance to be given such a man, when applied for and received with a full knowledge of the nature of the charity. A man may thus become a pauper in the legal sense if he accepts aid from his municipality, even though he is actually providing partial support for his family. Such a man in that event becomes a pauper. But the aid given him is not given him as a matter of right, and the price he pays is the pauper cognomen.

Applying this to the illustration. Our subject, A—, we will say, has earned just enough for the bare necessities of his family and himself. Had his income been any less, then he must subject his family to deprivation and consequent suffering, turn to friends for temporary relief, which is usually impossible, or apply to the public authorities. We have seen the consequences of this latter step. It is impossible to exaggerate the loss of self-respect, the intensity of anguish and utter humiliation which lays hold upon a human soul—we must consider the average type—obliged even to contemplate this step.

We have already seen that under such deplorable conditions a right is created, under the trust principal stated, which would encircle such a family with its protection. But these considerations are also important in analyzing the relation to taxation of the man who has broken even in income and necessary expenses. Suppose A—'s income was of that kind. He must necessarily deduct, under present conditions, the amount of his tax from his naked necessities. By this levy the state is not only theoretically but often actually forcing that family across the dead-line into the forsaken abode of pauperism. Unless new credits can be found, he has no alternative. Whether or not pauperism results, a deadly blow has been dealt and the psychology of that family has been rudely shaken. This is the industrial and social serfdom of the age, the cult of the blacksmith applied to the delicate mechanism of the human soul.

Now, it is proved that taxes are levied, among other objects, for "all public needs." Even at present, a portion of the tax levy in the town of B——, we will say, is used in the care of paupers. This, then, even under the existing laws, is one of the "public needs" for which the taxing power is exercised. It follows that A——, having been driven another step down the ladder by reason of the enforced contribution of the tax, and compelled thereby to apply for and accept public aid, has to a certain definite extent been proceeding in a circle. He has to the extent of the tax paid thrown the scales of income and outgo against him, and now to that extent again he restores the balance by receiving from the community, this time as a pauper, the amount necessary to complete his necessities, which, theoretically, is the exact sum he was taxed.

This, of course, is a technical example, but it illustrates the principle and to a greater or less degree may be found in operation among the masses of humanity. In this connection, one well known axiom of our English law is that nothing need be done which must, in the nature of things, be immediately reversed. Merely circuitous action is or should be as absurd and unnecessary in the case of taxation, as in other social adjustments. A fortiori, when, as a consequence, degraded status results.

So the divine justice, whose voice is now heard in the world, is rending asunder our so-called human justice, exposing its weakness, remedying its inequalities. Pauperism must succumb to the sanction of right. The beneficiary of a trust possesses something he can claim without humiliation or shame. That same self-respect, which he thereby retains and fosters, serves a two-fold purpose as his protector against his invoking that right without a sound reason. To apply this concretely is the crying need of the hour. The order of the world will be thus promoted, revolutionary and desperate demands set aside, force and violence seen to be a satanic instrumentality, and the great law of unity and co-operation enthroned in the hearts of rich and poor alike. The differentiation of capacities in individuals is preserved, fruitless attempts to level humanity to mean averages are rebuked, and the respective functions of the body politic are witnessed as divinely bestowed. Since it is the function of the eye to see, and any means of impairment of that vision is a menace to the welfare of the whole body, so it is understood that those men and women who, in the community, correspond to that function must be encouraged to fullest activity, not hampered and made ineffective by the jealousy and ignorance of the other branches of the body politic. Under this law, such men and women become in truth servants of the whole body. Under this law, they must, and gladly will, render their full measure of obligation to the needs of the needy. They are themselves equally bound with all others, by the necessities of the trust principal, as outlined.

Similarly, the function or capacity of these individuals corresponding to other organs and parts of the body of the race, must be unimpaired. There must be freedom also in this. What restraining force is necessary has been provided for, as has been seen. Because a given capacity is apparently less brilliant, less compelling than another does not make it inferior or less important. The skin and the nails, the bones and the joints of society are a part of the body, and without them health is impossible. Up to now, these and other important functions have been degraded, unjustly oppressed and diseased, whereas in reality they are of the noblest of capacities. Hence, the present outcry of labor, the anguished protests of the poor. We must consequently realize that the happiness of each depends upon its full cooperation and the recognition of its rights. The stomach, if called upon to see, would make a miserable failure. But can the eye perform the work of digestion? These are the teachings of unity.

In closing, meditate upon this paragraph from the utterances of His Holiness, Abdul-Baha, on this subject, a most significant utterance given in Montreal, September 3d, 1912:

“Although the body politic is one family, yet because of the lack of symmetry some members are comfortable and some are in the utmost misery; some members are satisfied and some are hungry; some are clothed with the most costly garments, while some members are in need of food and shelter. Why? Because this family has not the reciprocity and symmetry needed. This household is not well arranged. This household is not under a perfect law. All the laws made do not insure happiness; they do not afford comfort; therefore a law must be given forth for this family according to which each member of this family will enjoy equal comfort and happiness. Is it possible for a member of a family to be subjected to the utmost of misery and abject poverty, and for the rest of the family to be comfortable? It is impossible, unless the rest of the family be without feeling, having become spiritually atrophied, inhospitable, unkind. Then such would say, ‘Though these members are of our family, nevertheless let them alone, let us look after ourselves, let them die. So long as we are comfortable, we are honorable, we are enjoying bliss, it is enough. But this, our brother, let him die. If he is in misery let him remain in misery, provided we are comfortable. If he be hungry, let him remain so, we are full. If he is without clothes, provided we are clothed, let him remain as he is. If he is shelterless, homeless, so long as we have homes let him remain in the wilderness.’ Such a callous condition in the human family is due to a lack of control and a lack of the working of the law; to a failure of kindness among men. If kindness be shown to members of this family surely all will enjoy equal comfort and happiness. The purport is this: that we, all of us inhabiting the globe of the earth, in reality, are one family, and each of us is a member of that family. Accordingly, we must all be in the utmost of happiness and comfort, under a just rule and regulation agreeable to the good pleasure of God, causing us to be well pleased, for this life is fleeting and if a man looks after himself only, he is no more than the animal, for the animal alone is to that degree egoistic. Nay, rather, man should be willing to accept hardship for himself in order that others may be happy; he should prefer poverty for himself that others may enjoy wealth; he must welcome trouble for himself if by so acting others may enjoy happiness and well being. This is a characteristic of man; this is becoming to man, otherwise man is not man but worse than animal. Such a man is an honor to the world of humanity, such a man is the glory of the world of mankind, such a man is he who wins eternal bliss, such a man is nearer the threshold of God, such a man is the very manifestation of eternal happiness. We ask God that He may give to human souls, justice, whereby they shall be fair and try to provide for the poor their comforts, so that each member of the race shall pass his life in the utmost of comfort and well being. Then shall this material world be the very paradise of the Kingdom and this elemental earth a heavenly state and all the servants of God shall live in the utmost of joy, happiness and gladness. We must all strive and we must all concentrate all our thoughts on this in order that such happiness may be obtained by the world of humanity.”

MESSAGE OF ABDUL-BAHA TO THE AMERICAN BAHAIS
THROUGH MRS. CORINNE TRUE AND MISS EDNA TRUE ON THE EVE OF THEIR DEPARTURE
FROM HAIFA, NOV. 12, 1919.

My message to them is that they must be united, must remain firm and steadfast, must be always turning to the Kingdom and must be the manifestations of truthfulness, of faith, of harmony and of self-sacrifice. They must co-operate and serve one another with sincerity and goodwill, with devotion and with humility. They must be pure in heart, purer than this water at table. Their hearts must be always directed toward God and turned away from man. They must seek His divine good-pleasure and should be wholly detached from this ephemeral world, for attachment to it will plunge man into an intense darkness. The love of this world is the fountain head of every vice and sin. It is the first sin that a soul can commit. No sin is greater than this. Whoever is detached from this world is assuredly near unto God, is a real and sincere Bahai, and whoever is attached to it knows well that he is not a real Bahai, for a real Bahai cannot love this world and cannot be possibly attached to it. At most it is this that man may live a few days in this world, sleeps, eats, drinks and then passes away, is confined into a subterranean dungeon and goes to the lowest of the low, leaving no trace and no name behind him. But if, on the other hand, he turns during the days of his life to the divine Kingdom, acquires human perfections and the excellent attributes of the world of humanity, his life will be a fruitful one, he will pertain to the Kingdom and will become heavenly and illumined. He will never feel inclined to this world and if he at all occupies himself with it, it is simply to acquire the means of subsistence. The two most essential requisites are harmony and severance from this world. Attachment to this world is a hindrance to union. If attachment is decreased, union and harmony will be gradually realized.

Good tidings and refreshing news must be received from you when you reach the West—tidings which, when I become informed of them, I may be gladdened and rejoiced. I trust that when ye reach America ye may be in the utmost degree of enkindlement, that ye may stir and quicken the souls. I pray that ye may bestow such a joy and fragrance that when ye attend a gathering of friends and when ye address them ye may transform and stir and vivify the souls of your hearers.

Rest assured that the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty (BAHA'O'LLAH) will ever come to your assistance and will ever encompass you. On your behalf I pray at these Sacred Spots and beg for ye assistance and confirmation. Rest ye assured that ye are under His sheltering protection!

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

Unveiling of the Divine Plan for the Islands of the Sea

TABLET

To the believers and the maid-servants of the Merciful of the Bahai Assemblies and Meetings in the United States and Canada!

He is God!

O ye real Bahais of America!

Praise be to His Highness the desired One, that ye have become confirmed in the promotion of divine teachings in that vast continent, raised the call of the Kingdom of God in that region and announced the glad-tidings of the Manifestation of the Lord of Hosts and His Highness the promised One. Thanks be unto the Lord that ye have become assisted and confirmed in this aim. This is purely through the confirmations of the Lord of Hosts and the breaths of the Holy Spirit. At present your confirmation is not known and understood. Ere long ye shall observe that each one of you like unto a brilliant and shining star will diffuse the light of guidance from that horizon and that ye have become the cause of the eternal life to the inhabitants of America.

Consider: The station and the confirmation of the apostles in the time of Christ was not known, and no one looked on them with the feeling of importance—nay, rather, they persecuted and ridiculed them. Later on it became evident what crowns studded with the brilliant jewels of guidance were placed on the heads of the apostles, Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of John.

Likewise your confirmation is not known at the present time. I hope that ere long it may throw a mighty reverberation through the pillars of the earth. Therefore, it is the hope of Abdul-Baha that just as ye are confirmed and assisted on the continent of America, ye may also be confirmed and assisted on other continents of the globe:—that is, ye may carry the fame of the Cause of God to the East and to the West and spread the glad-tidings of the appearance of the Kingdom of the Lord of Hosts throughout the five continents of the world.

*NOTE—This Tablet to the Assemblies of the United States and Canada was revealed on Tuesday morning, April 11, 1916, in Bahjee, near the blessed Tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLAH.—The Editors.

When this divine call travels from the continent of America to Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and the islands of the Pacific, the American believers shall be established on the throne of everlasting glory, the fame of their illumination and guidance shall reach to all regions and the renown of their greatness become world-wide. Therefore, a party, speaking the languages, severed, holy, sanctified and filled with the love of God, must turn their faces to and travel through the three great island groups of the Pacific Ocean,—Polynesia, Micronesia and Mylanesia, and the islands attached to these groups, such as New Guinea, Borneo, Java, Sumatra, Philippine Islands, Solomon Islands, Fiji Islands, New Hebrides, Loyalty Islands, New Caledonia, Bismarck Archipelago, Ceram, Celebes, Friendly Islands, Samoa Islands, Society Islands, Caroline Islands, Low Archipelago, Marquesas, Hawaiian Islands, Gilbert Islands, Moluccas, Marshall Islands, Timor and the other islands. With hearts overflowing with the love of God, with tongues commemorating the mention of God, with eyes turned to the Kingdom of God, they must deliver the glad-tiding of the Manifestation of the Lord of Hosts to all the people. Know ye of a certainty that in whatever meeting ye may enter, in the apex of that meeting the Holy Spirit shall be waving and the heavenly confirmations of the Blessed Perfection will encompass all.

Consider ye, that Miss Agnes Alexander (of Honolulu), the daughter of the Kingdom, the beloved maid-servant of the Blessed Perfection, traveled alone in the Hawaiian Islands, and now she is gaining spiritual victories in Japan! Reflect ye how this daughter was confirmed in the Hawaiian Islands. She became the cause of the guidance of a gathering of people.

Likewise Miss Knobloch traveled alone to Germany. To what a great extent she became confirmed! Therefore, know ye of a certainty that whosoever arises in this day to diffuse the divine fragrances, the cohorts of the Kingdom of God shall confirm him and the bestowals and the favors of the Blessed Perfection shall encircle him.

O how I long that it would be made possible for me to travel through these parts, even if necessary on foot and with the utmost poverty, and while passing through the cities, villages, mountains, deserts and oceans, cry at the top of my voice: "Ya-Baha-El-Abha!" and promote the divine teachings. But now this is not feasible for me, therefore I live in great regret; perchance, God willing, ye may become assisted therein.

At this time, in the islands of Hawaii, through the efforts of Miss Alexander, a number of souls have reached the shore of the sea of faith! Consider ye, what happiness, what joy is this! I declare by the Lord of Hosts that had this respected daughter founded an empire, that empire would not have been so great! For this sovereignty is eternal sovereignty and this glory is everlasting glory.

Likewise, if some teachers go to other islands and other parts, such as the continent of Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, also to Japan, Asiatic Russia, Korea, French Indo-China, Siam, Straits Settlements, India, Ceylon and Afghanistan, most great results will be forthcoming. How good would it be were there any possibility of a commission composed of men and women, to travel together through China and Japan,—so that this bond of love may become strengthened, and through this going and coming they may establish the oneness of the world of humanity, summon the people to the Kingdom of God and spread the teachings.

Similarly, if possible, they should travel to the continent of Africa, Canary Islands, Cape Verde Islands, Madeira Islands, Reunion Islands, St. Helena, Zanzibar, Mauritius, etc., and in those countries summon the people to the Kingdom of God and raise the cry of: “Ya-Baha-El-Abha!” They must also upraise the flag of the oneness of the world of humanity in the island of Madagascar.

Books and pamphlets must be either translated or composed in the languages of these countries and islands, to be circulated in every part and in all directions.

It is said that in South Africa, a diamond mine has been discovered. Although this mine is most valuable, yet after all it is stone. Perchance, God willing, the mine of humanity may be discovered and the brilliant pearls of the Kingdom be found.

In brief, this world-consuming war has set such a conflagration to the hearts that no word can describe it. In all the countries of the world the longing for universal peace is taking possession of the consciousness of men. There is not a soul who does not yearn for concord and peace. A most wonderful state of receptivity is being realized. This is through the consummate wisdom of God, so that capacity may be created, the standard of the oneness of the world of humanity be upraised, and the fundamentals of universal peace and the divine principles be promoted in the East and the West.

Therefore, O ye believers of God! Show ye an effort and after this war spread ye the synopsis of the divine teachings in the British Isles, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Montenegro, Bulgaria, Greece, Andora, Liechtenstein, Luxemburg, Monaco, San Marino, Balearic Isles, Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Crete, Malta, Iceland, Faroe Islands, Shetland Islands, Hebrides and Orkney Islands.

In all these countries, like unto the morning stars shine ye from the horizon of guidance. Up to this time ye have displayed great magnanimity, but after this, ye must add a thousand times to your effort and throughout the above countries, capitals, islands, meetings and churches, invite mankind to the Kingdom of Abha! The circle of your exertion must become widened. The more it is broadened and extended, the greater will be your confirmation.

Ye have observed that while Abdul-Baha was in the utmost bodily weakness and feebleness, while he was indisposed, and had not the power to move—notwithstanding this physical state he traveled through many countries, in Europe and America, and in churches, meetings and conventions was occupied with the promotion of the divine principles and summoned the people to the manifestation of the Kingdom of Abha. Ye have also observed how the confirmations of the Blessed Perfection encompassed all. What result is forthcoming from material rest, tranquillity, luxury and attachment to this corporeal world! It is evident that the man who pursues these things will in the end become afflicted with regret and loss.

Consequently, one must close his eyes wholly to these thoughts, long for eternal life, the sublimity of the world of humanity, the celestial developments, the Holy Spirit, the promotion of the Word of God, the guidance of the inhabitants of the globe, the promulgation of universal peace and the proclamation of the oneness of the world of humanity! This is the work! Otherwise like unto other animals and birds one must occupy himself with the requirements of this physical life, the satisfaction of which is the highest aspiration of the animal kingdom, and one must stalk across the earth like unto the quadrupeds.

Consider ye! No matter how much man gains wealth, riches and opulence in this world, he will not become as independent as a cow. For these fattened cows roam freely over the vast tableland. All the prairies and meadows are theirs for grazing, and all the springs and rivers are theirs for drinking! No matter how much they graze, the fields will not be exhausted! It is evident that they have earned these material bounties with the utmost facility.

Still more ideal than this is the life of the bird. A bird, on the summit of a mountain, on the high, waving branches, has built for itself a nest more beautiful than the palaces of the kings! The air is in the utmost purity, the water cool and clear as crystal, the panorama charming and enchanting. In such glorious surroundings, he expends his numbered days. All the harvests of the plain are his possessions, having earned all this wealth without the least labor. Hence, no matter how much man may advance in this world, he shall not attain to the station of this bird! Thus it becomes evident that in the matters of his world, however much man may strive and work to the point of death, he will be unable to earn the abundance, the freedom and the independent life of a small bird. This proves and establishes the fact that man is not created for the life of this ephemeral world:—nay, rather, he is created for the acquirement of infinite perfections, for the attainment to the sublimity of the world of humanity, to be drawn nigh unto the divine threshold, and to sit on the throne of everlasting sovereignty!

Upon ye be Baha El-Abha!

Any soul starting on a trip of teaching to various parts, and while sojourning in strange countries, may peruse the following supplication, day and night:

SUPPLICATION

O God! O God! Thou seest me enamored and attracted toward Thy Kingdom the El-Abha, enkindled with the fire of Thy love amongst mankind, a herald of Thy Kingdom in these vast and spacious countries, severed from aught else save Thee, relying on Thee, abandoning rest and comfort, remote from my native home, a wanderer in these regions, a stranger fallen on the ground, humble before Thy exalted threshold, submissive toward Thy most high realm, supplicating Thee in the middle of nights and in the heart of evenings, entreating and invoking Thee in the morn and eve;—so that Thou mayst assist me in the service of Thy Cause, the promotion of Thy teachings and the exaltation of Thy Word in the Easts of the Earth and the Wests thereof.

O Lord! Strengthen my back and confirm me in Thy servitude with all my powers, and do not leave me alone and by myself in these countries.

O Lord! Associate with me in my loneliness and accompany me in my journeys through these foreign lands.

Verily, Thou art the confirmer of whomsoever Thou willest in that which Thou desirest, and verily Thou art the Powerful, the Omnipotent!

LETTER FROM AGNES ALEXANDER

Beloved friends:

Here again I am in this land after a wonderful voyage from Honolulu in teaching the Cause, as the doors opened as never before. When I went on the steamer in Honolulu, it was the twelfth time I had boarded a steamer without knowing beforehand anyone who was sailing. The first morning a letter was handed me from Mrs. Cooper, telling of a lovely French young lady, Mlle. Charlotte Comte, who was traveling on the same steamer, and who had become deeply interested in the teachings. Strange to say unconsciously as we were sailing from Honolulu, I was guided to her and we talkéd together, though not at that time of the Cause. She was on her way to Vladivostok to be married and had traveled from Paris alone through the United States. At Niagara Falls she met a Bahai and heard for the first time the teachings, then in Chicago she went to the Sunday meeting, meeting others who sent her to dear Mrs. Cooper in San Francisco. Her soul was fully prepared for the divine Message and we pray that in Vladivostok she may plant the divine seeds. Then Mlle. Charlotte Comte introduced me to Dr. and Mrs. Shastri who also were interested. Mrs. Shastri, as Miss Jensen of Omaha, had heard several Bahai speakers there and through Mr. Vail had some of the literature which she was taking to India, her new home which will be in Benares. She was eager to read everything, though she has not yet fully grasped the great Message. Another lady was a Mrs. Ernst whose home was in Chicago. She became deeply interested. She had lived among the Arabs in Tunis and her desire is that she might go to these people whom she loves and who love her and teach them some day. I gave her a copy of the Divine Plan to take to Manila where she is now going to her children. Others, a Filipino doctor and a Holland gentleman were interested, also a Japanese gentleman who had, through a friend, attended a meeting in Washington. He offered to do all in his power to help me here.

I am now staying in the Tokyo station

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long, thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

News from Haifa, Palestine

LETTER FROM MRS. CORINNE TRUE

Cairo, Egypt.
November 16, 1919.

To the Editors of the STAR OF THE WEST:

We spent eleven heavenly days in Haifa with Abdul-Baha. Two weeks ago this morning (November 2nd) we reached there after pushing through many difficulties. None of the countries have recovered from the war. Traveling is really filled with discomforts, and the innumerable official signatures necessary to enter or leave a country is most annoying. We were held up for three weeks in Paris getting our British visé to enter Egypt. Fugeta wrôte me from Naples that he was held up indefinitely there for the same reason. Of course we could not go to Abdul-Baha without first going to find out just how Fugeta was situated. This necessitated our sailing for Egypt via Italy. We had to leave him in Naples, greatly to our regret, but there was a service we could render him in Cairo by hastening the sending on of his British visé that the consul had cabled for. We had a beautiful steamer from Brindisi, Italy, to Alexandria, and the trip was lovely in every way.

Let me go back to tell you that in Paris, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan and his charming wife were adorable to us, and perfect lifesavers. They were the only two Bahais we could find at that time in Paris, Mr. and Mrs. Scott having gone to the country on a protracted stay. The afternoon we were leaving Paris for Italy, Mr. Randall and George Latimer came to our hotel to see us, and at six o'clock we had dinner with the five members of their party. It was so good to see them.

In Brindisi we found Dr. Esselmont at our hotel, waiting for his ship. He sailed in the afternoon and we in the morning of the same day, but our ship was the fastest ship we could get to Egypt, and then we proceeded to Haifa by rail. The railroad in Palestine was built and is run by the military, therefore we required a military permit to ride on it. Getting this permit required us to come to Cairo, military headquarters. This also took time, so Edna made good use of every moment for sightseeing, as we did not expect to return to Cairo. Finally arrangements were perfected for us to take the train Saturday evening at 6:15, and we reached Haifa Sunday morning about 11 o'clock. It was the most difficult part of the journey, no comforts whatever on the train, only a bunk to wrap oneself in a steamer rug and stretch out for the night. It was quite thrilling to find oneself riding through that territory which Moses led the children of Israel through in his journey from Egypt to the Promised Land.

Our struggles to attain the goal of reaching Haifa so soon after a world war, in which all the countries we passed through had been vital factors, were indeed great compared to the ease with which Arna and I had made the journey twelve years ago, but this very struggle made the joy of arrival so great that we were almost stunned to find ourselves actually in the presence of Abdul-Baha and in Haifa.

In one of his talks he has said that it will be impossible for us to realize his fatherhood for us while we are in the body. I think this is in Divine Philosophy. Upon reaching Haifa the first thing was an expression of his divine fatherhood for his spiritual children. He had prepared a pilgrim house for the American Bahais, even hiring a European housemaid (a deaf German woman from their colony). One must pass through the many struggles of travel through broken down war countries, still tied up with military red tape, to fully realize what the joy was first to actually be in his holy presence again and partake of his fatherly care awaiting our arrival. His welcome was all the heart needed to wipe away every trace of the struggle, and count every discomfort as the greatest comfort. Eleven days were spent in that Holy Spot. Beginning the morning by meeting with the holy family in Abdul-Baha's living room at 6:30, where chanting was done and those far-famed cups of tea were served, which seem like veritable draughts of life. Sometimes we asked Abdul-Baha questions and sometimes he talked to us without questions. Always was that marvelous flow of divine knowledge and wisdom. We usually went back to the American pilgrim house after chatting with the Greatest Holy Leaf or the Holy Mother or the daughter of Abdul-Baha.

One of the sweetest things happened early one morning that I must tell you about. The daughter, Tubah Khanum, her husband, Mirza Mohsen, and their little child, a boy of three years, were in Beirut when we arrived, but returned in a day or so. The first morning after their return, when the little three-year-old grandson came into the family gathering, he went to Abdul-Baha with the deepest sense of reverence, and picking up the hem of his garment, which was a white abba that morning, he kissed it and buried his little head in its folds. It was a picture never to be forgotten. The act of the child was clearly spontaneous, one could see. From the Orient the Occident must learn the real lesson of reverence. This is a spiritual quality she has to impart to us, while on the other hand the Occident has some qualities to reciprocate—it is give and take—the two embracing as two lovers.

A beautiful part of the day was after we had returned to the pilgrim house and been served a European breakfast, and some piece of work was taken up which we could do on the front balcony. Seeing us free the Oriental pilgrims would come on this balcony and visit with us, and from them we learned much of the early history of the Cause in Persia, and also the present methods by which it is being spread. I am bringing a photo containing the faces of all the dear pilgrims, and when I see you will talk to you for hours about them.

At 4 o'clock again we went to the holy family for tea and a visit. Then at 6:30 we American women were permitted to meet with the men believers, who gather every evening with Abdul-Baha for an hour. The evening dinner was one of the most wonderful times. Seated on his left was Edna, and on his right this servant, and at the table about a dozen of these wonderful Oriental pilgrims, who are mostly the great Bahai teachers. That is another long chapter, but I must close.

Lovingly in His Name,
Corinne True.

LETTER FROM DR. ZIA M. BAGDADI

Haifa, Palestine.
December 11, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:
My beloved co-workers:

On November 11th, the night of the blessed Birthday of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, we sailed from America; on the 26th of November, the Feast of the Center of God's Covenant, we sailed from Italy; and on the 9th of December we reached the holy presence of Abdul-Baha. He inquired about all the friends in America and he is pleased with all.

Oh! what a difference between now and twelve years ago. At present the light of justice is shining, in the past there was only injustice. Now, for the first time in the history of the Holy Land, religious freedom is given; people's lives, property and chastity are safeguarded.

The face of the Master is radiant as the sun, and the multitudes around him are as butterflies, and he is the luminous lamp. He says the people of the world will enjoy the blessings of the Most Great Peace only when they accept the Bahai Message. The Cause of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH is creative, but the creatures are the creatures, and all mankind cannot create a mosquito. I am thinking and praying for you and all the beloved friends in America. The Master said: "Khili khoob (Very good)," after he saw issue No. 8 of the radiant STAR OF THE WEST.

Faithfully,
Zia (Bagdadi).

LETTER FROM GEORGE LATIMER

On board S. S. Canopic.
December 19, 1919.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

After twelve wonderful days at Haifa, on the "Mountain of God" with Abdul-Baha, our boat arrived three days ahead of time to bring us back to America. At first the news of its sudden arrival saddened us, but we soon realized that our cup of capacity had already been filled to the brim and our greatest joy was to carry back the love and fragrances of that holy spot to the friends in America.

Now that all the doors of communication have been opened, Abdul-Baha is extremely busy welcoming the pilgrims from all parts of the world and sending out his teachings and instructions everywhere. Often he works many hours into the night correcting Tablets and answering letters. His power, energy and activity was an inspiration to us all, and his supreme joy is the news of unity and the progress of the Cause.

On November 19th, when he came to the Pilgrim House, prepared for Western friends, to have lunch with us, it was remarked that upon our return to America the first question the friends would ask is: "When will the Master return to America?" His face lighted up with a beaming smile as he said:

"We will see what God wants. If America becomes illumined, its illumination like a magnet, will draw me there. If America will become the America I want it to become, I will surely come and I will go to all parts, to every state."

These words were still ringing in our ears and hearts when on November 27th, the time of parting came. Before our departure, Abdul-Baha again expressed the greatest longing of his heart, saying:

"You must all do your best to increase love among the friends, that really and sincerely the friends may all love one another—so that faith in the Kingdom may give forth good results, because life in this world depends upon love. The illumination of the world of man depends upon love, the splendor of God depends upon love, tranquillity of heart and soul both depend upon love. Anything beside that is personified imagination. If a friend arrives from another city or state, friends must show him the utmost love so that he may be pleased with coming to the city and meeting the friends."

Will not this call of the Center of the Covenant, the call which pulsates through all the arteries of the world of humanity, awaken within us that love and unity of purpose which will become the torch of illumination that will once more attract him to our shores?

With Bahai love and greetings,

George Latimer.

NOTE:—Those returning from this pilgrimage are Mr. and Mrs. Randall, their daughter Bahiyeh, Albert Vail, Arthur Hathaway and myself.

"Universal peace is one of the principles of Baha'o'llah"

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA TO THE HON. WILLIAM SULZER

To the Honorable William Sulzer, Ex-Governor, New York—Greetings!

He Is God!

O thou who art the well-wisher of humanity—felicitations!

Your epistle concerning the League of Nations has been received and read with great joy. I am hopeful that the members of the League of Nations, especially President Woodrow Wilson, the well-wisher of the world, shall be confirmed in this, that in accordance with the teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH there shall soon be established a great tribunal, the members of which shall be composed of the best men and women from all the governments of the earth. This great tribunal must be the guarantor of universal peace.

The present is the beginning of the dawn of universal peace. The hope of the world is this: That the sun of universal peace may rise with a supremacy that shall entirely dispel the darkness of war and its infamous disgrace.

The question of universal peace is one of the principles of the teachings of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. These teachings have other principles that make them complete, such as: The oneness of humanity; the investigation of truth and reality and the abandonment of old superstitions; unity and religious amity; that religion must be the cause of concord; that all religions must conform with science and reason; that there must be no religious, racial or national prejudices; that there must be a oneness of language—that is, the adoption of a universal auxiliary language, so that every mind shall know two languages, one the national tongue and the other the universal language; that there must be a solution of social problems and economic questions based on justice to all; that there must be equality of the rights of women and men, that righteousness and justice must prevail, and that there must be education and freedom for all the sons and daughters of mother earth.

With the efforts of your President the matter of universal peace has come forth as expounded in the League of Nations.

Through the favor of the True One, and by the Word of God, I pray the League of Nations shall soon become a fact; that universal peace shall thenceforth be established; that then the brotherhood of man shall then be recognized, and that your honor and the people of your country, may continue a manifestation of their confirmation.

Praise be to God!
Love and benediction.

hotel where I was guided. All the trains of the Empire come and go from this point and I see and hear them from my window, but so long as I can follow only His guidance it must not matter where I am. I am only so thankful for the two wonderful years in America. My three Bahai children have gathered here to see me, and I feel now my work is to make the essence, which is planted in them, so strong that through them the divine torch will blaze in Japan.

Fuyo San is now writing for a newspaper and doing well. She wrote an article about the Bahai Cause, and my coming, for her paper and it is beautiful. So this little "shrub," as Abdul-Baha called her, is beginning to blossom, praise be to God!

Recent Tablets from Abdul-Baha to American Bahais

VIOLA KLUGE

To the maid-servant of God, Miss Viola Kluge, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH ÉL-Abhá!

He Is God!

O thou radiant child!

The letter thou hast written in the utmost sweetness has been perused. It evidenced and indicated thy brilliant capacity, thy wit and thy understanding. The epistle was clear and consummate and I therefore became hopeful of thee, as thou attainest maturity, thou mayest become a radiant, merciful and Godly maiden, freed and sanctified from the impurities of the world of nature, partaker and participator of the illumination of the divine reality and the cause of the glorification of the world of humanity.

Convey to thy father and thy mother my greetings and my kindness and likewise to thy acquaintances.

His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH has endured for your sake all these calamities and trials, that the light of guidance may illuminate your hearts. Abdul-Baha has passed his days in confinement, in exile and under a drawn sword; not for a single hour did he ever entertain the hope of deliverance until the present time when an equitable government has pitched its tent over these regions. Now the means of assurance have been provided. In fine, all my intentions center around this: that radiant children may be trained by divine education and become the blazing candles of the world of humanity.

Upon thee and upon thy father and mother be greetings and praise!

JESSIE REVELL

To the maid-servant of God, Jessie Revell, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Thy detailed letters were received. Although the pressure of occupation is extreme and excessive, leaving no time for a short letter and particularly for a detailed one, yet I am affectionately attached to thee. Notwithstanding the lack of time, I write thee this letter that thou mayest know how dear thou art to me. As thou art brilliant and pure and hast no wish but to serve the Cause of God and promulgate the divine teachings, I pray and entreat at the threshold of God and beg for thee limitless assistance and bounty.

Convey on my behalf greeting and kindness to Grace VanSeiver and Joline Ruestle. On their behalf, I pray that they may be reared in the arms of the kind father, His Holiness BAHĀ'O'LLĀH and may become the cause of illumination of mankind.

On behalf of Effie Dixon I beg pardon and forgiveness from the compassionate Lord that she may be immersed in the ocean of forgiveness and may become in the Divine Kingdom the recipient of favor and bounty.

Convey on my behalf respectful greeting to Mrs. Rorer and say: "If thou art the lover of mankind, strive to promote the teachings of BAHĀ'O'LLĀH for these teachings are the essence of love, of kindness and of the unity of mankind."

Convey on my behalf the utmost love and respect and favor to the favored and attracted maid-servants of God, Mrs. Brittingham and Mrs. Nourse. I beg for them eternal happiness and unbounded glory.

As to thy presence in these days at the Holy Land, it is not in accordance with wisdom. Thou must engage in those regions, day and night in service.

As to the marriage of the maid-servant of God, Badih, to Laurie Culver, it is a blessed one. I pray God that this marriage may be eternal, spiritual and merciful.

As to the new name thou hadst requested, let it be "Nareman."

The Assembly of Philadelphia is indeed worthy of praise. I supplicate from the bounties of God that that assembly may become a heavenly rose-garden and may receive everyday a share from the Lord's Supper.

Thyself and thy sister are striving to learn Spanish; this is highly acceptable, that, God willing, after its acquisition, thou mayest promote heavenly teachings.

As to the appearance of Christ after war and commotion, by this is meant the promulgation of divine teachings, that throughout all regions the teachings of God will be promoted and the result will be universal peace. For universal peace is unachievable save through the power of the Word of God.

Convey on my behalf to the maid-servant of God, Ruth Lerman, the utmost kindness and say: "How fortunate thou wert that this supreme glad-tiding hast attained thine ears and thou hast been awakened by the call of the divine Kingdom."

Convey to thy respected mother my greeting and say to her to strive with heart and mind in order to cause the colored group to enter the Kingdom, to illumine their hearts, to help them to acquire heavenly characteristics and to cause them to attain unto everlasting glory.

As to your residence in Philadelphia or Ohio, wherever the means of comfort are forthcoming therein reside.

Impart to the maid-servant of God, Ethel, the glad-tiding of the divine bestowals. I pray that Mr. Elliott, Miss Brooks, Miss Thompson, Mr. Ellwood and his wife may illumine their sight with the resplendent light that shines from the Kingdom of Abha.

The two gatherings which ye had held in Philadelphia wherein the friends of God have been present as well as newcomers to the Cause, these two meetings are highly acceptable in the divine Kingdom and have been praised and extolled. The hope is entertained that advantageous results may be derived, that is to say, whenever a favorable occasion presents itself, such meetings may be again held.

As to the children with whom thou art speaking, thy pure breath will undoubtedly exert its influence upon them.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

MARIA REBECCA ROBERTSON

To the maid-servant of God, Maria Rebecca Robertson, New York City—

Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Formerly I have met thee and have given thee certain admonitions with the utmost kindness. Undoubtedly thou bearest them in mind. At present, moreover, I am writing thee an answer. Consider how kind I am that I desire thee to become related to the Kingdom, lordly, merciful, illumined and one of the heavenly angels. Such are my admonitions.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

HELEN WHITNEY

To the maid-servant of God, Helen Whitney, Portland, Oregon—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast asked about fate, predestination and will. Fate and predestination are the necessary and indispensable relationships which exist in the realities of things. These relationships have been placed in the realities of existent beings through the power of creation and every incident is a consequence of the necessary relationships. For example, God has created a relation between the sun and the terrestrial globe, that the rays of the sun should shine and the soil should yield. These relationships are predestination, and its manifestation on the plane of existence is fate. Will is that active force which controls these relationships and these incidents. The epitome of the explanation of fate and predestination is this. I have no time for a detailed explanation. Ponder over this. The reality of fate, predestination and will will be made manifest.

As to thy presence in the Holy Land, at present travel is difficult. Postpone it until the time when it is made easy.

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Haifa, Palestine, July 18th, 1919.)

EDGAR WAITE

To his honor, Mr. Edgar Waite, Los Angeles, California—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art turning thy face to the divine Kingdom!

Thy respected wife has written a letter and has praised thy character and thy conduct; thou hast become lordly, illumined, attracted to the Kingdom, hast secured a share and portion from the breaths of the Holy Spirit, hast attained unto everlasting life, and hast been gladdened and filled with joy. She has also sent the poem which she composed in praise of the Convention. Verily, the verses were in the utmost eloquence and sweetness, and were the cause of the gladness of their hearers. I hope that through the bounties of God both of you may pass your days in the utmost joy and fragrance and become the cause of the promulgation of the divine teachings.

Convey on behalf of Abdul-Baha to thy respected wife my wonderful Abha greetings, and say: "The kindness, the training and the education extended to prisoners is an exceedingly important matter. As thou hast therefore exerted an effort along that line and hast awakened some of them, and hast been the cause of the turning of their faces to the divine Kingdom, this praise-worthy deed is highly acceptable. Persevere assuredly along this line. Convey on my behalf to the two prisoners at San Quentin the utmost kindness, and tell them, "That prison in the sight of the wise souls is the school of training and development. Ye must strive with heart and soul that ye may become famous in character and knowledge."

Upon thee and upon them be greeting and praise!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

OLLIE JAMES WATTS
J. E. GILLIGAN

To their honors, Messrs. Ollie James Watts and J. E. Gilligan, through Mrs. Louise R. Waite, Los Angeles, California—Upon them be greeting and praise!

He Is God!

O ye two servants of the Kingdom!

Your letter was received. It was conducive evidence that, praise be to God, ye have been freed from the darkness of superstitions, have attained to the center of Truth, have been emancipated from the old imitations that indicate antiquity of the world, and are investigating Truth. This undoubtedly is due to the bounty of God and is indicative of the lordly bestowals.

Consider how the people of the world are immersed in a sea of imitations, they lack perception and hold fast to what they hear. Although they have been immersed for thousands of years in the ocean of superstitions and have acquired no results, yet they are still sleeping.

Praise be to God, therefore, that your inner sight has been opened, that ye have discovered the Truth, and have attained unto that which is the cause of heavenly glory and everlasting life.

Upon you be greeting and praise!

RUTH KLOS

To the maid-servant of God, Ruth Klos, Atchison, Kansas—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou seeker of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast written that "I am not worthy." Who is worthier than thee? Hadst thou not been worthy, thou wouldst not have turned to God and wouldst not have wished to enter the Kingdom.

Thy worthiness has guided thee until this blessing and bounty have encompassed thee.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

PETER MAUS

To his honor, Mr. Peter Maus, Helena, Montana—Upon him be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou faithful servant of God!

Thy letter diffused a musk-scented perfume—the perfume of the flowers and fragrant herbs of the love of God. The nostrils were perfumed and the heart was gladdened, that, praise be to God, that firm and steadfast soul has become the cause of the illumination of two other ones and has led them to the fountain of life, that each of them may, in the divine orchard, become a fruitful tree, may cast an extensive shade and may extend their branches and leaves to the divine Kingdom. I pray God that both may be illumined, assisted and confirmed.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Bahjeh, Acca, Palestine, July 22, 1919.)

EMILY OLSEN

To the maid-servant of God, Emily Olsen, Chicago, Illinois—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou pure leaf of the Blessed Tree!

Thy letter was received. Thou hast written thou hadst translated some epistles and Tablets into Danish and sent them to Europe during the war. So far nothing has been heard of them. As war was going on, answer from Europe was delayed. But now as war has given way to peace it is hoped that the translation of these Tablets and epistles may be disseminated throughout Denmark.

As to the teachings thou hast arranged for children, God willing, they will be enforced.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Bahjeh, Acca, Palestine, July 22, 1919.)

JAMES MORTON

To his honor, Mr. James Morton, New York City, N. Y.—Upon him be Baha-El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou dignified personage!

Thy letter was received. Its terms were most eloquent and its significances in the utmost perfection. Praise be to God, thou hast hearkened to the call of the Kingdom, hast secured a share and portion of the divine teachings, hast been freed from the world of imitations, hast investigated Truth and hast comprehended the mysteries of heavenly books. At present thy wish is to become the cause of the illumination of the world of mankind, to promulgate the principle of universal peace, to awake the slumbering and to cause the heedless to become heedful; so that they may be freed from ignorant prejudices, may secure rest and comfort under the shade of the pavilion of the oneness of mankind, may partake of divine bestowals and may become the center of merciful susceptibilities. There is no purpose higher than this. My hope is that thou mayest be confirmed therein.

Thou art thinking of traveling to Persia. The project is a blessed one. I hope that after visiting the Holy Land thou mayest be confirmed in that voyage.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, Bahjeh, Acca, Palestine, July 22, 1919.)

RACINE ASSEMBLY

The members of the Bahai Assembly, Racine, Wisconsin, care of his honor, Mr. Andrew Nelson—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O illumined Assemblage!

Praise be to God, that ye have been confirmed in establishing that Assembly and that your aim centers around the promulgation of universal peace, the establishment of the oneness of mankind and the investigation of Truth.

I pray to God that heavenly assistance may encompass that Assembly, that it may daily progress so that it may become the center of merciful susceptibilities and radiate all around the rays of supreme guidance.

Upon ye be BAHÁ-EL-Abha!

The Resurrection of Christ after "three days"

Instructions from a letter written many years ago by MIRZA ABUL FAZL on the meaning of the "three days" Christ is said to have lain in the grave before His resurrection. Selected and condensed by Marie A. Watson.

CONCERNING the resurrection of His Holiness Christ after three days and nights: The term "day" is applied to many meanings; the first is the ordinary one of twenty-four hours. According to this meaning Abdul-Baha explains the "three days" before Christ's resurrection thus:

After the ascension, departure of Christ, on account of the tyranny of the Jews, for three days and nights His blessed Name was not mentioned among the disciples. The wicked Jews were sure that they had uprooted that blessed tree, and the disciples of His Holiness repaired to solitude and seclusion through fear. Thus the Sun of Truth was outwardly concealed in the darkness of disappearance, and Peter, the apostle, who was the shining moon in the heaven of divine Religion, was veiled, depressed.

After three days and nights Mary Magdalen, whose valor, courage, perseverance and efforts caused her name to be written in the book of perpetual honor, for she gave her utmost energy, called each one of the disciples from the places of concealment and led them into the presence of Peter. She called forth a new spirit within them through the heat of her encouragement and explanation. Then again they arose to assist and serve the Cause of Christ, revived and spread the name of His Holiness in the world, which name was considered by the Jews to be concealed in the grave of disappearance.

According to this explanation the meaning is in the utmost exaltation and in the highest simplicity and plainness, and it is true to say that His Holiness Christ arose from the grave after three days, for the purpose of His manifestation was the spread of His holy Name and penetration of His Word throughout the world, and this point was realized three days after His departure, for by the rising of His noble disciples the lights of His brilliant Cause shone forth through the East and the West, and His blessed Name was promulgated in the extensive parts of Europe, Asia and Africa.

The second application of the word "day" denotes the duration of a spiritual leadership, or individual reign; as it is said, the "day" of the reign of David, the "day" of the reign of Solomon. This duration is determined by the term "day," though it lasted forty years; or, as is said in America, the "day" of the presidency of Washington or McKinley, and the like, although the presidency of each lasted some years.

According to this standard, the "day" of each one of the Manifestations of God signifies the interval of the time between His rise and the appearance of a subsequent Manifestation—a second coming, or rising of the Sun of Truth. During this interval the laws, regulations and ordinances of that Manifestation continue effective and lead to the development and salvation of men. According to the terminology of the prophets this day has a daytime and a night-time. Its daytime signifies the days during which the Sun of Truth is manifest among people and with whose meeting is identical with the meeting of God, and can be attained while in the body of flesh. Its night-time means the duration of the time in which the Sun of Truth is hidden in the veils of concealment, and the Manifestation of God in human form is absent from among nations, and has ascended to the supreme horizon.

According to this meaning, if it be said that the "day" of Moses was the interval of the time between His rise in Egypt and the appearance of His Holiness Christ in the Holy Land, it is true. During this time the laws enacted in the Pentateuch were effective in securing the glory and felicity of the Jews, providing they complied with those laws. But after the appearance of Christ, nay, even after the arising of John the Baptist, this manifest efficacy was removed from the Mosaic laws, which led to the effacement of the felicity of the Jews.

Consider the 16th and 17th verses of the 9th chapter of Matthew, and the 11th, 12th and 13th verses of the 11th chapter of the same book for further elucidation of this subtle point and you will realize how the mysteries of the seals of the book are opened in this Manifestation of the Lord of Lords.

According to the standard of the term "day," the time between the appearance of Christ and the rising of the ideal Sun from the horizon of the East was 622 years; consequently, this number denotes the real "day" of His Holiness Christ, during which the laws revealed in the Gospels continued effective. In multiplying the 622 by three the result is 1,866. This shows clearly the mystery of the hidden point concerning the meaning of the three days. For in the year 1866 A. D., which corresponds to 1283 A. H., the mention of the declaration of the most holy Beauty of Abha in the city of Adrianople, was spread through different lands; the divine call was raised, and then the real meaning of the second descending of the Spirit of God from the heaven of divine command became manifest and realized. In those very days of the blessed person of the orb of the horizons, the Center of the Covenant, His Holiness Abdul-Baha—May the life of all the creatures be a sacrifice to Him!—was in His verdancy of age, and in the prime of youth, and His blessed Name was spread in the world with the titles, "The most great Branch" and "The most excellent and perfect Mystery of God." Then the meanings of the words in the 8th and 9th verses of the 3rd chapter of Zechariah and the 12th and 13th verses of the 6th chapter became fulfilled and evident.

Accordingly, the essence of the meaning of the resurrection after "three days" is this: that after the lapse of three periods of 622 years, which was the time of the manifestations of the lights of Christianity, the most great Spirit of God resurrected in the Name of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH from among the slumbering nations and the dead of the world, and the beauty of the Branch extended from that Ancient Root dawned forth and appeared in that day. By this "resurrection" the prophecies of the prophets and saints were all fulfilled.

As to the third meaning of "day," in the terminology of the Israelitish doctors, each "day" is applied to a year. This application is termed by the Jewish learned men Youm Leshan in Hebrew, that is, "a day for a year." Most of the Christian scholars have also relied upon this application in their commentaries on the Old and New Testaments. They have derived this point from the 34th verse of the 14th chapter of Numbers and 6th verse of the 4th chapter of Ezekiel. Most of the Christian scholars and all the Jewish learned men have based their interpretations of the symbolical dates in the 8th and 12th chapter in Daniel and the 11th and 12th chapter in Revelation upon this point, that is, have taken each day for a year. But this meaning has nothing to do with the "resurrection after three days" spoken of by His Holiness Christ.

As the fourth meaning of the word "day," it is applied to one thousand years, and is called the "Lordly Day." This point is alluded to in the 8th verse of the 3rd chapter of the Second Epistle of Peter the Apostle.

It is clearly revealed in some of the holy books thus: "Verily, one day with the Lord is as a thousand years of those which ye compute." To this application the Millennium of Christ spoken of in Revelation has reference; for the spiritually minded believe that in every one thousand years the world is renewed and the Sun of Truth dawns. The laws, cycles and conditions, even languages, undergo a manifest change. This application of the word "day" has likewise no connection with the resurrection of Christ after "three days."

Minutes of the Eleventh Annual Mashrekol-Azkar Convention

Held in New York City at the Hotel McAlpin, April 28-30, 1919.

FIRST SESSION—April 28th, 10 A. M.

DR. F. W. D'EVELYN, Temporary Chairman; ALFRED E. LUNT, Permanent Chairman.

CHARLES Mason Remy, President of the Executive Board of the Bahai Temple Unity, opened the meeting with prayer.

He then said: "After having gathered here during the last few days at this Congress, I think we all feel the coming confirmation in these gatherings as we come together in our so-called business session, and as we put into practice these commands which have come from Abdul-Baha, we will then receive the greatest victory and confirmation, because we know that there are different kinds of confirmation—when we take a mental stand, or when we turn our hearts to Abdul-Baha, there is a certain confirmation which comes, and when we begin to obey and to speak the holy Words, there comes a still greater confirmation, and then when, in addition to that, we begin to put into action the things he is telling us to do, there comes the greatest confirmation of all, and I think we feel and realize that the responsibilities of this moment are very great, because we are in the 'eleventh hour' of the Covenant, and surely now we are going to work to realize these things under his guidance and under his inspiration.

"I believe the first order of business in the Convention is the election of a temporary chairman, so nominations for the temporary chairmanship of the Convention are now in order."

Dr. Frederick W. D'Evelyn of San Francisco, was nominated temporary Chairman. There being no other nomination, on motion duly made and seconded, Dr. D'Evelyn was unanimously elected temporary Chairman.

Dr. D'Evelyn assumed the chair, and said:

"Friends, this is perhaps the most critical moment in our Bahai matters that we have yet reached and it will be very desirable that each one of us recognize our personal privilege and our personal responsibility during this conference. There are great things expected of us, for unto us a Charter has been given, and when the session closes let us go back to our respective homes bearing great fruits with us.

"There must be no uncertainty, there must be no false chords struck, and by no means is it an exaggeration to say that not merely the eyes of the United States, but the eyes of the civilized world, are concentrated today upon this Bahai assemblage as it meets in New York City.

“Now don't forget these things: those that are for us will be with us, and those who are against us—go home.” (Laughter.)

On motion duly made and seconded, and unanimously carried, Harlan Foster Ober of Cambridge, Mass., was elected temporary Secretary of the Convention.

On motion duly made and seconded it was voted to authorize the Chairman to appoint a committee of three on Credentials, also a committee of three on Permanent Organization.

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O ye apostles of BAHÁ'O'LLAH—May my life be a ransom to you!

Similarly, the Magazine, the STAR OF THE WEST, must be edited in the utmost regularity, but its contents must be the promulgator of the Cause of God—so that both in the East and the West they may become informed of the most important events.

News from Egypt

LETTER FROM MOHAMED SAID ADHAM

Alexandria, Egypt,
December 6, 1919.

Dear Bahai friends in America:

We feel inclined to express to you our great pleasure at having seen some of the American Bahais on their way from and to Acca. Really it is a privilege to see pure souls steadfast in the Covenant, ready to teach the Cause, having no higher aims other than the enlightenment of the leaves of humanity. Praise be to God, that the door of communication with our beloved Master is again opened after five years. Certainly it is of the highest importance to see Abdul-Baha, equally important to teach the Cause and travel for this purpose, and last but not least, is to meet and associate with pure and blessed souls. "If thou willest to associate with God, associate with his friends."

Now, as we are not pilgrims nor teachers traveling for that purpose, we were favored in seeing quite a good number of American friends whose faces were gleaming with lights and whose tongues had no other mention but the love of the Cause. It was our good luck to be where we had the chance of meeting and conversing with friends from the Occident who were thousands of miles away from their homes. We ascertained, that the brotherhood of humanity is fulfilled and the East and the West embrace each other as two longing lovers. Let those who deny this, present themselves in such Bahai meetings, and they shall behold with their own eyes what they do not conceive in their own minds. This is from the favor and bounty of BAHÁ'O'LLAH to his friends. This is the spirit of the Bahai society for all are brothers no matter what they were before.

It happened that while Mr. and Mrs. Randall and daughter, Mr. Vail, Mr. Arthur Hathaway and Mr. George Latimer were in Alexandria on their way back to America from their trip to Haifa, the group was enlarged with the accidental presence of Dr. Zia Bagdadi and his honored wife who added to the beauty of the occasion. These two groups met in Alexandria in the port, and expressed their desire to see the friends, and the friends here responded eagerly to that desire. Also it happened that Dr. Basheer, who was studying medicine formerly in Chicago, and who now practices his profession in Port Said, happened to be in Alexandria. These were all the guests of Alexandria on the night of December 3d, 1919, and the Alexandrian friends hastened from different quarters to welcome the American friends. They have not seen such friends for a long period of time. We had a splendid and memorable meeting with them—a meeting that reminded us of the days when Abdul-Baha was in Ramleh and we used to have similar meetings. The thing that affected us most and left a vivid impression on our minds, was the spirit with which they were returning from Haifa. We noticed that they had become new creatures, full of spirit, life and love, charming and attractive, affecting, with their burning soul, every one who came in contact with them.

Thus, because of their presence, our meeting was most spiritual, full of Bahai love and every face radiantly happy. Each one of the friends gave us a short talk of what they saw and heard in Haifa, which was translated immediately. A new Egyptian beginner in the Cause was amazed at seeing the American friends associating with us with love and harmony, as if we were intimate friends who had known each other and met often before. After the chanting of Tablets in Arabic and Persian by Zeenat Khanum as well as the reading of a supplication in English by Mrs. Randall, supper was served.

The next day I went to the boat to bid them farewell. I saw two young Egyptian students who were on their way to Germany to study medicine and introduced them to our American friends who received them with Bahai cordiality. The students, seeing my friendliness with the Americans, expressed their wonder to me in Arabic saying, "How did you come to know such sincere Occidentals?" Really, this is one of the good results of the visits of the Bahai friends to the Orient. Not because the Orientals have not seen Occidentals, but because they are not accustomed to witness such love as is manifested between Western and Eastern Bahais.

I conclude with the Bahai love and greeting to all,

Faithfully yours in the Center of the Covenant,

Mohamed Said Adham.

Recent Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Alfred E. Lunt

To his honor, Mr. Alfred Lunt, Boston, Massachusetts—Upon him be BAHÁ-'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

Rest thou assured in the bounty of the Merciful, and be hopeful for the blessings of the Abha Kingdom, for thou dost exert the utmost effort in service for Truth and this magnet attracts assistance and confirmation. The addresses thou hast delivered with reference to economic problems are highly suitable. The essence of the Bahai economic teachings is this, that immense riches far beyond what is necessary should not be accumulated. For instance, the well-known Morgan, who possessed a sum of three hundred millions, and was day and night restless and agitated, did not partake of the divine bestowals save a little broth. This wealth was for him a vicissitude and not the cause of comfort.

He invited me to his library and to his home, that I might visit the former and have dinner at his house. I went to the library in order to look at the Oriental books, but did not go to his house, and did not accept his invitation. In short, he eagerly desired that I should visit him in the library but meanwhile important financial problems arose which prevented him from being present, and thus he was deprived of this bounty. Now, had he not such an excessive amount of wealth, he might have been able to present himself.

As to the events that had been predicted—Praise be to God!—all of them have come to pass, and all that had been the explicit and irrefutable declarations of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH, and had been incorporated in the addresses of Abdul-Baha in America and Europe, all of them, word by word, have been fulfilled. These explicit declarations of His Holiness BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH were revealed fifty years ago by the Supreme Pen, and at present they have been made evident and manifest.

At present, thou hast a lofty aspiration, and hast the desire to engage in every service. My hope is, that through a heavenly power, and a Lordly influence, and by the assistance of the Holy Spirit thou mayst be confirmed in distinguished services—a service which thou dost think advisable and its success assured.

Thou hadst inquired that if a person owned a piece of land and is not able to develop it, and his revenues are less than his expenditures, is it permissible that he sell a portion of that land and mortgage it? Undoubtedly, it is permissible. Concerning the case of profit-sharing by the employers among the workers, which thou hadst written about, undoubtedly the workers must secure their daily salary, and in addition, must have shares with the employers so that they may engage with the utmost effort in that work. For example, a capitalist has a thousand employees, he must give them a moderate salary every day, that they may not remain hungry and naked, and also assign a definite share of the profit to the workers so that at the beginning of each year it may be distributed among them, that this may cause the workers to exert the utmost care and effort in their job.

Embrace on my behalf thy sweet children, and name the son Hossein, for it is a portion of the name of the Blessed Beauty, and call the daughter Zahrah. The letter thou hast written to the Boston paper is highly pleasing and favorable.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

To the STAR OF THE WEST:

Should the STAR reproduce the photograph of Abdul-Baha with the group that Edna and I are in, I very much wish it might be stated that a feast to about eighty-five Bahais from India, Persia, Russia, Turkey, Egypt, England and America, was given by Hossein Rouhi of Cairo, Egypt, on Sunday, November 9, 1919, on Mt. Carmel. The long table was spread in front of the Tomb of the Bab and this picture was taken at the side of the Tomb. Each guest was presented with a photograph by our most generous host, whom many Americans will recall was in America nineteen years ago with Hadji Hassan Khorissani of Cairo, Egypt (now deceased).

Spiritual Communication

A TALK WITH ABDUL-BAHA BY MRS. STANNARD

Notes sent by Mrs. J. Stannard to Mrs. Louise R. Waite

I ASKED Abdul-Baha concerning the state of all those young men souls who have fallen so suddenly and tragically during our world war. Could they affect our present living conditions in any way?

His reply ran as follows: "God treats these people with His mercy, not with His justice, since God is against war. But as many did not will the war, but were obliged to go to the battle field by force of circumstances, therefore God has mercy for they suffered much and they lost their lives. These deserve the forgiveness of God. As they suffered in the world and were afflicted by great calamities and their blood was shed and in reality they were treated unjustly and thus died unwillingly, therefore God will have mercy and forgive their shortcomings and will reward them. He will compensate them for loss. Is it just to be so afflicted and killed and suffer and have no reward? This is contrary to the Kingdom of God. We supplicate God that these murdered ones will become and stay alive in His Kingdom and be submerged in the sea of His mercy and be happy."

I then asked whether such a great collective soul consciousness could in any way affect the world of men. Could any get into communication?

To the first part of the question he answered: "No. They have no power to influence the world of men and only those who in life had been among the spiritually regenerated ones, those who had been re-born or baptized of the Holy Spirit, only such souls could consciously communicate or have knowledge of things in this world."

When I asked about the station of the very wicked, he said:

"They are in a state of dark consciousness, deprived of the mercy of God, but were not annihilated."

From Shoghi's Diary, on the same subject, we may read as follows:

"June 6th. Yesterday afternoon, at 3 P. M., two enlightened officers, one British and the other Irish, Col. Cash and Major Fitzgerald, called on the Master. They were hurrying back on their way to Egypt and were leaving by the evening train for Kantarah. They managed to spare two hours in order to secure an interview with Abdul-Baha, and among the questions was the following:

"Is it at all possible for those who have sacrificed their lives so freely on the battle field to communicate with their relatives and kindred from the world beyond?"

The epitome of Abdul-Baha's reply was as follows:

This spiritual communication and mutual exchange of thoughts is conditioned upon certain facts that prepare the person in this world to communicate with the spirit of his departed ones. A clear mind, a pure heart and a concentrated attention are the requisites for that spiritual inter-communication. Like unto a mirror, man's heart and mind must be purified, clarified and polished. Any dust or rust that may be on it such as attachment to this nether world, the turning of man's face away from God, sin or lust, animosity and rancour—all these must be removed that the rays of the Sun of Truth may shine upon it in full splendor and may be reflected therefrom with full effulgence. If such state or condition is attained, communication with the world above will be made possible. Purity of purpose and concentration with prayer are the essential requisites.

STAR OF THE WEST

"We desire but the good of the world and the happiness of the nations; that all nations shall become one in faith and all men as brothers; that the bonds of affection and unity between the sons of men shall be strengthened, that diversity of religion shall cease and differences of race be annulled. So it shall be; these fruitless strifes; these ruinous wars shall pass away, and the 'Most Great Peace' shall come."—BAHA'O'LLAH.

MR. AND MRS. BECKETT

To their honors, Mr. and Mrs. Beckett, Glendale, California—Upon them be BAHA'O'LLAH EL-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye two faithful and assured souls!

The letter was received. Praise be to God, it imparted good tidings. California is ready for the promulgation of the teachings of God. My hope is that ye may strive with heart and soul that the sweet scent may perfume the nostrils.

Miss Anna Greig, Mrs. Alice Blackman, Mrs. Katherine Tizzard and Dr. Ruth Newland were blessed souls and, praise be to God, they passed away firm and steadfast. They flew away from a narrow and gloomy world to a spacious and illumined realm. They have been freed from every pain and affliction and have attained unto everlasting joy and gladness.

Convey on my behalf to Mrs. Chase respectful greeting and say: "Mr. Chase is in the horizon of Truth a twinkling star, but at present it is still behind the clouds; soon shall these be dissipated and the radiance of that star shall illumine the state of California. Appreciate thou this bounty that thou hast been his wife and companion in life." In short, every year on the anniversary of the ascension* of that blessed soul the friends must visit his tomb on behalf of Abdul-Baha and in the utmost lowliness and humility should with all respect lay on his grave wreaths of flowers and spend all the day in quiet prayer, while turning the face toward the Kingdom of Signs and mentioning and praising the attributes of that illustrious person.

Those souls who during the war have served the poor and have been in the

MRS. RASMUSSEN

Through the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Ella G. Cooper—Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH-El-Abha!—To the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Rasmussen—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH-El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou beloved maid-servant of God!

Although the loss of a son is indeed heart-breaking and beyond the limits of human edurance, yet the heedful and observing person is assured that the son has not been lost but, instead, has stepped from this world into another, and he will find him in the Divine Realm. That meeting shall be eternal, whereas in this world separation is inevitable, and this in its turn entails its consuming fire.

Praise be unto God, thou hast faith, are turning thy face toward the everlasting Kingdom and believing in the existence of a heavenly world. Therefore, be thou not disconsolate, do not languish, do not sigh, and refrain from wailing and bemoaning; for agitation and moaning deeply affect his soul in the divine realm. That beloved child addresses thee from the hidden world, thus: "O thou kind mother! Thank divine Providence that I have been freed from the narrow and gloomy cage and, like unto the birds of the meadows, have soared to the divine world:—a world spacious, illumined, and ever gay and jubilant. Therefore, lament not, O mother, and be not grieved; I am not of the lost ones and have not been exterminated and destroyed. I have shaken off the mortal form and have raised the banner in this spiritual world. Following this separation is everlasting association. Thou shalt find me in the heaven of the Lord, immersed in an ocean of light."

Upon thee be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

MR. AND MRS. RICHTER

To Mr. and Mrs. Charles Richter, Grand Haven, Michigan—Upon them be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye two patient souls!

Your letter was received. From the death of that beloved youth and due to his separation from you, the utmost sorrow and grief have been occasioned; for he flew away in the flower of his age and the bloom of his youth to the heavenly nest. But as he has been freed from this sorrow-stricken shelter and has turned his face toward the everlasting nest of the Kingdom and has been delivered from a dark and narrow world and has hastened to the sanctified realm of light therein lies the consolation of our hearts.

The inscrutable divine wisdom underlies such heart-rending occurrences. It is as if a kind gardener transfers a fresh and tender shrub from a narrow place to a vast region. This transference is not the cause of the withering, the waning or the destruction of that shrub; nay rather, it makes it grow and thrive, acquire freshness and delicacy and attain verdure and fruition. This hidden secret is well-known to the gardener while those souls who are unaware of this bounty suppose that the gardener in his anger and wrath has uprooted the shrub. But to those who are aware, this concealed fact is manifest and this predestined decree is considered a favor.

Do not feel grieved and disconsolate, therefore, because of the ascension of that bird of faithfulness; nay, under all circumstances, pray and beg for that youth forgiveness and elevation of station.

I hope that you will attain to the utmost patience, composure and resignation, and I supplicate and entreat at the Threshold of Oneness and beg pardon and forgiveness. My hope from the infinite bounties of God is that He may shelter and cause this dove of the garden of faith to abide on the branch of the Supreme Concourse, that it may sing in the best of melodies the praises and the excellencies of the Lord of names and attributes.

Upon ye be Baha-El-Abha!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Shoghi Rabbani, house of Abdul-Baha, Haifa Palestine, April 11, 1919.)

EDNA BELLORA BELMONT

Through the maid-servant of God, Mrs. Parsons, Washington, D. C.—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!—to the maid-servant of God, Edna Bellora (Belmont)—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art tested with calamities and ordeals!

Verily, I became exceedingly saddened for thy sadness, because of the affliction with a calamity which thou art unable to bear. This is the condition of the world. Therefore, be thou not distressed, neither be in despair of the mercy of God, because in this suffering there is a great wisdom concealed from thee. Thou shalt learn of this wisdom when thou wilt look at their faces (the departed children) in the everlasting Kingdom. Then rest thou assured that, verily, thou hast not lost them and their death was only the departure from the restrictions of the nether world to the Supreme Heights. Thou shalt see their faces in the sublime heavens, for the Merciful Gardener, if He loves a young tree, takes it out from among the others and carries it from the restrictions of narrowness to a large farm and a beautiful, flourishing garden, in order that the young tree may develop, its branches grow high, its flowers open, its fruits appear and its shadow expand. But the rest of the trees do not know this, because this is a hidden mystery which becomes unfolded to us in the eternal Kingdom.

O thou maid-servant of God! Grieve not and do not lament, consolation will come to thee from God. Have thou serene patience for therein is an abundant recompense. Think not that the girls have waded in the waters of death, nay, rather, they have flown from the mortal world to the realm immortal. Thou shalt behold their faces in the Supreme Aviary.

In regard to thy particular question: Whereas, the revered Mrs. Parsons desires that thou remainest with her as her companion, therefore, this is easier for thee than to be a nurse enduring great hardships. Nevertheless, the good is in that which thou chooseth for thyself; should the revered lady come to these regions thou mayest accompany her on the journey, so that thou mayest be honored by visiting the blessed and white spot and we see thee patient in calamity and thankful in difficulties and sufferings. It behooveth one like unto thee to thank thy Lord while thou art submerged in the seas of anguish. This is the quality of every maid-servant who is meek and humble before God, and is desirous of the eternal life in the Kingdom of God.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

MR. AND MRS. GIFT

To their honor, Mr. and Mrs. Gift, Peoria, Illinois—Upon them be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O ye two guiding souls!

Your letter was received. It was indicative of your being devoted in the path of the Kingdom and of your detachment and self-effacement. Ye have no wish save the good pleasure of God, and entertain no hope except in divine Providence. Ye strive for the guidance of souls and become the cause of the illumination of hearts. This is a supreme bounty. Arise in gratitude to it for its consequences and advantages are innumerable. From among these is the establishment of one's remembrance and the attainment unto supreme bounty in the Abha Kingdom.

Convey on my behalf to the souls that have been attracted by the divine teachings, Mrs. ——— Miss ——— Mr. ——— and Mrs. ———, greeting, love and kindness.

Extend my greeting to Mrs. ——— and say: "Be not grieved, be not disconsolate, be not depressed and do not lament, for this world is a mortal abode and we shall all be transferred from this world to another. Thy dear daughter is accepted at the Threshold of the Almighty, is immersed in the ocean of pardon and forgiveness and is drowned in a sea of light in the world of mysteries."

MRS. ANNA EULER

On November 11, 1918, dear devoted Mrs. Anna Euler of Muskegon, Mich., passed away to a higher and happier life after a few days illness of influenza. She was a very faithful and humble servant to the Center of the Covenant, Abdul-Baha, and was always attracting souls to the Kingdom of Abha by her

FLORA CLARK

To the maid-servant of God, Flora Clark, care of the maid-servant of God, Mrs. True—Upon her be BAHĀ'O'LLĀH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou dear maid-servant of God!

Thy letter was received. From its contents prayer and supplication to the Kingdom of God were noted. No matter how strenuously man may strive in this world, ultimately no result will be attained. Naked has he stepped into this world and naked shall he get out of it—except if he turns unto God, suppliates to His Kingdom, strives in His path, serves the Almighty and acquires a pure heart, a seeing eye, a responsive ear and a spirit that is gladdened by the glad tidings of God. This has a result and gives forth good fruit.

Otherwise man shall not gather any advantage from life.

Praise thou God, that thou hast been confirmed by such a bounty and hast attained unto heavenly illumination.

Upon thee be Baha-El-Abha!

CAROLINE KRUGER

Caroline Kruger of Trenton, N. J., passed from this dark world to the world of light, December 6, 1918, at the age of 71. She accepted this blessed Message without a doubt in 1913, and since that time she has nourished her soul by the prayers from the Hidden Words. During the last days of her illness she asked that the prayers be read to her, as she was too weak to read.

She firmly believed that Abdul-Baha was her Lord; his name was the healing of her soul and the Mashrekol-Azkar was the Door of Hope. Three days before she passed on she asked that a contribution be sent to the Temple in her name, as the time was getting very short and she wanted it to get there before she passed out. On the morning of the third day she was very happy, saying, "I guess they have the money now." She relaxed and rested and that night the spirit left her body. The family held the Bahai burial service on Sunday evening, December 8 and the next day she was laid away. Mrs. Kruger was the mother of Mrs. J. N. Ayers, of Trenton, N. J.

J. Newell Ayres.

MRS. A. M. BRYANT

The passing of the maid-servant of God, Mrs. A. M. Bryant, removed one of the early servants of the Cause in America from faithful service on this mortal plane to the Paradise of El-Abha. On April 18, 1919, at midnight, at her home in Denver, Colorado, she was released from physical distress and weakness of several months duration, and we who had received spiritual instruction from her rejoiced at her precious freedom even while the pang of separation caused the tears to flow.

Mrs. Bryant received the Message in 1900 from that brave herald of the Cause, Thornton Chase, and later received instruction from Mirza Abul Fazl and other Persian teachers sent to this country by Abdul-Baha. From that time, with an attracted heart, she ever served the Covenant. Mrs. Bryant received ten Tablets from Abdul-Baha, one received in 1903 making it incumbent upon her to establish a spiritual assembly in Denver, which she did, and afterward constantly served in this city as long as health permitted.

Her son, Mr. Leo C. Bryant, of Washington, D. C., who had been with his mother for several weeks prior to her passing, requested the friends to conduct a purely Bahai service, and a brief and impressive service was read by the friends.

The Center of the Covenant placed upon her head a glorious crown in the following short Tablet received by her in 1901:

To the maid-servant of God Mrs. A. M. Bryant—Upon her be BAHÁ'O'LLAH El-Abha!

He Is God!

O thou who art attracted by the fragrance of God!

Beloved art thou, for thou hast lighted the lamp of the love of God in the glass of America, called out in His Name among the people, and guided them to the Kingdom of El-Abha.

O maid-servant of God! Fly away with joy, for God hath strengthened thee in this great gift, which is a glorious crown, the gems of which are scintillating with the light of guidance. Blessed is thy head, for it is decorated with this crown. Verily, this is better for thee than the dominion of the world.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

THAD BUTLER

During the past year, Thad Butler, aged fifteen, was accidentally killed at Huntington, Ind. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Butler and the grandson of Col. Fiske, one of the oldest Bahais in America. When Abdul-Baha was in Chicago, Mrs. Butler, with great difficulty, took all of the children to see him.

STAR OF THE WEST

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O thou STAR OF THE WEST!

Be thou happy! Be thou happy! Shouldst thou continue to remain firm and eternal, ere long thou shalt become the Star of the East and shalt spread in every country and clime. Thou art the first paper of the Bahais which is organized in the country of America. Although for the present thy subscribers are limited, thy form is small and thy voice weak, yet shouldst thou stand unshakable, become the object of the attention of the friends and the center of the generosity of the leaders of the faith who are firm in the Covenant, in the future thy subscribers will become hosts after hosts like unto the waves of the sea; thy volume will increase, thy arena will become vast and spacious and thy voice and fame will be raised and become world-wide—and at last thou shalt become the first paper of the world of humanity. Yet all these depend upon firmness firmness, firmness!

TABLET FROM ABDUL-BAHA

O ye apostles of BAHÁ'Ó'LLAH—May my life be a ransom to you!

Similarly, the Magazine, the STAR OF THE WEST, must be edited in the utmost regularity, but its contents must be the promulgator of the Cause of God—so that both in the East and the West they may become informed of the most important events.

HOW ARE FRIENDS? CONVEY MY GREETINGS

(Received February 27, 1920)

ABBAS.

Editorial—Psychic Forces

I have met so many people who are interested in the psychic and have been taught, along with the Revelation, that Abdul-Baha sanctioned it, that I have kept a copy of his words which are in direct opposition to the whole thing. I really felt inspired to write you and ask for this privilege. The STAR OF THE WEST has such a wide circulation that I am sure it would be of inestimable value. I am a believer in spirituality and believe that many things will be shown us as we grow along those lines, but I am not a sympathizer with those who are trying to look beyond. If God had intended that, we should not be shut away from it, as no one is able to tell one thing that has any significance or value relative to the other side of the veil.

The following is a copy of a Tablet written by Abdul-Baha on "Psychic Forces":

"To tamper with the psychic forces while in this world interferes with the condition of the soul in the world to come. These forces are real, but are not be active upon this plane."

"The child in the womb has its eyes, ears, hands, feet, etc., but these powers are not in activity. The whole purpose of the womb life is the coming forth into this world. So the whole purpose of this matrix world life is the coming forth into the world of Reality, where all these forces will be active. They belong to that world."

I don't think anything could be clearer than that. I trust this will meet with your approval. I should love to know that those words were being driven home into the hearts of the people who are in doubt as to their attitude toward this Movement.

Anna Mason Hoar.

Obituary

JOSEPH H. HANNEN

A great calamity has befallen the Washington (D. C.) friends, or to better express it has befallen the Cause in general, through the sudden departure from this world of our good spiritual brother, Joseph Hannen, on January 27th, 1920. We are quite heart-broken over our loss, and we are so shocked and stunned over the abruptness of it all that we scarcely realize that he is no longer with us in this material realm.

In crossing a street he was struck by an auto car which knocked him down and passed over his body. He was hurried in an ambulance to a hospital and later taken to his home. The best possible medical advice was obtained and the friends supplicated and prayed unceasingly upon his behalf. He seemed quite unconcerned over his condition, and those who conversed with him could not discern that he realized he was dying. A few minutes after 9 o'clock in the morning of the fifth day after the accident his spirit took flight from this phenomenal world and ascended to the realm of the eternal reality beyond.

Upon the third day after Brother Joseph's departure the friends gathered at the Hannen home for the reading of the burial service. Both colored and white were there. They brought flowers until not only was the bier hidden from view by these floral offerings, but the chimney piece and various articles of furniture in the room were likewise smothered with blossoms, while the entire house was filled with fragrance thereof. The ceremony was quite simple. It consisted of the reading of a commune followed by the Bahai burial service with its choral responsive prayers and was concluded by the reading of several selections from the Words of BAHÁ'Ó'LLÁH and Abdul-Baha upon this subject of the immortality of the soul and of its continuance and perpetuity in the worlds beyond.

At the conclusion of the reading seven of the men Bahais bore the body from the house. The interment was in the family burial plot in Prospect Hill Cemetery within the city, not very far distant from the Hannen home. Mrs. Knobloch's mortal remains also rest in this plot. At the grave nine utterances from the Hidden Words from the Arabic were read, the friends then chanted in the Persian language in chorus three times the prayer, "The Remover of Difficulties" and a short commune was read, after which the family cast sprays of roses into the open grave and we all returned to our respective homes saddened by this distressing tragedy.

It was during the time of Mirza Abul Fazl's Bahai ministrations in Washington that Mr. and Mrs. Hannen and the Knobloch family (Mrs. Hannen's mother and sisters) came into the knowledge of the Covenant. Since then up until the very moment when Brother Joseph was stricken he was ever active and serving in the Cause. The last material service which he did for the friends was to go to the postoffice to get the mail to be forwarded to our traveling Bahai teachers, Messrs. Gregory, Roy Williams and Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. After the fatal accident the family gave me the letters which he had had upon his person to be forwarded to these friends. Upon examining the envelopes I found them to be stained and bespattered with Brother Joseph's blood, which was a symbolic testimony of his last service to the friends.

During these years of Mr. Hannen's labors he carried many burdens of service to the Cause. He was the standby in the Washington assembly—the one upon whom every one depended. He was always in the meetings and gatherings of the friends, and when anyone wanted anything done quickly and without delay he was the one to whom they turned, knowing that on him they could depend with certainty. Moreover, Brother Joseph was always cheerful and happy in his service, and his firmness in the Covenant was a fortress and protection to all who knew him. He made great sacrifices in the path of Abdul-Baha, the fruits of which many of the friends have already witnessed, while those who knew him are convinced that in time the far-reaching effects of his Bahai work will become more generally and widely recognized and acknowledged than it is at present.

Joseph Hannen served alike the white and the colored friends. At the request of his family both colored and white united in carrying his remains to the grave. He was ever striving to create unity and good fellowship between the two races.

The friends in all parts of America have telegraphed and written beautiful messages of sympathy and love to the Hannen family. While Mr. Hannen's mother, wife, sons and other relatives are suffering most intensely because of this separation, they are, however, completely resigned to the Will of God and are happy and tranquil in their souls because of God's bounty bestowed upon them and upon their departed loved one in his accepted services to the Center of the Covenant of God.

MRS. ELIZABETH DIGGETT

Mother was born and reared in South Carolina. She received the message in August, 1904, and ever since that time had been a devoted believer and worker in the Cause. She taught from Coast to Coast and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes. She was especially gifted in attracting new believers. Mother personally served Abdul-Baha at the table during his sojourn in Chicago. He rewarded her with several roses. She died May 7th, 1919, saying the Greatest Name, age 51 years. She was buried in Oakwoods Cemetery, Chicago.

I have brought her Bahai books and literature in anticipation of opening a memorial room to her in Atlanta, (Georgia). We are looking for the proper location now.

Madie Minge.

WILLIAM LUDWIG

William Ludwig died at Chicago, in August, 1919. The family requested Bahai services.

FRANCIS C. NEWTON

On May 29th, 1919, at Brooklyn, N. Y., Francis C. Newton passed on at the age of 34 years. He met Abdul-Baha in 1912. His last words were, "Ya-Bahael-Abha!"

CHARLES F. HANEY

On the morning of July 22nd, 1919, with spiritual armor burnished and bright, there soared from the prison of this earthly world—this world which is "the shadow of a shade"—into the realm of light and spiritual victory, a loyal servant of the holy threshold and of the Center of the Covenant, our dear brother Charles F. Haney.

For many years his bodily existence had been one of unending martyrdom, but this offering in an ever unfolding flame of evanescence was laid in love and service at the feet of his Beloved. Out of this school of wonderful preparation came the crown of triumph be-gemmed with "death in God." Thus, unencumbered, his conquering spirit has been promoted to a larger arena of service in that bright home and its atmosphere of the fire of the love of God, which now he comprehends to a degree impossible for those yet limited to this finite world to comprehend and remain longer here, however glorifying are our many spiritual experiences in partaking of this table from which we derive our heavenly sustenance for each day.

If I might be permitted to add a brief personal word, I would love to refer to the last three, of many beautiful, contacts throughout the years with our brother when, in 1917, I unexpectedly met him in Los Angeles, Calif., Portland, Ore., and Salt Lake City during a business trip which he was making through the far western states. In the last mentioned city, where his engagements detained him for a week after my arrival, we found ourselves located at the same hotel and in the wonderful occasional spiritual hours which we enjoyed together, reading and communing upon the holy utterances of God, there was unveiled in this dear brother a spirit so rarely matured, so replete with realization of the heights of consecration, of the deeds which alone count, so clear a vision of divine happiness and great peace under constant physical pain, that the actual remembrance of those hours is like that of a full-blown rose of the Abha Kingdom!

The key to all of this summit of attainment was steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament of God, which the beloved of our hearts has defined as "love and obedience to the commands of Abdul-Baha."

The extent of his devoted services to the Cause, and especially to that divine edifice, the Mashrekol-Azkar, are only known to God. But his place is empty!

A close spiritual tie, covering a number of years, between this spiritual brother, his blessed wife and myself, has vouchsafed to me the privilege of expressing this imperfect tribute. Well may we smile with that dear wife and child, knowing how well he had recognized "the caress of favor in the dart of tests." Concerning him, among other precious words, Abdul-Baha said, that "he was one of those nearest to God, not one of those far from Him."

In the holy name of BAHÁ'O'LLAH and His glorious Center,

Isabella D. Brittingham.

Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Charles F. Haney, May, 1911:

Thou art not and shalt never be forgotten. Be thou strong and firm. Be thou resolute and steadfast. When the tree is firmly rooted, it will bear fruit. Therefore, it is not permitted to be agitated by any test. Be thou not disheartened. Be thou not discouraged. The trials of God are many, but if man remains firm and steadfast, test itself is a stepping stone for the progress of humanity.

I hope that thou mayest show such firmness in the Cause of the Kingdom that all may remain astonished.

ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

(Translated by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab.)

MRS. SOPHIE SCHEFFLER

On July 29, 1919, one of the pioneers of the Bahai Cause in America, who was much loved by believers in all parts of the country, was called to the Kingdom. The passing of Mrs. Sophie Scheffler of Chicago, the mother of Mrs. Loeding and Carl Scheffler has filled all hearts with grief. The vacancy she leaves in the assembly will be felt by those who are ill and in need, as she found opportunity for service even in her advanced years through visiting the sick and needy. She was born in Germany in 1843 and came to this country at the age of 13. She became a believer more than twenty-one years ago and has been constant in her devotion to Abdul-Baha. Her spare moments were spent in reading and studying the Holy Utterances and translating them into the German language. To give the Message was her greatest joy, and the end of a life that saw many hardships, struggles and deprivations was blessed at its close with the greatest bounty, the knowledge of the Blessed Perfection and devotion to the Glorious Cause.

MRS. SHERMAN

Mrs. Sarah A. Sherman of Menasha, Wis., passed away August 20, 1919.

THOMAS MACMECHAN

Thomas MacMechan, a devoted Bahai and beloved follower of the Center of the Covenant, was summoned to the Kingdom of eternal service November 7th, 1919. He was born April 6th, 1862, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, and had lived thirty-six years in the United States. For twenty years previous to his acceptance of the Bahai message of glad tidings, he was a Christadelphian. The pure heart of this beloved brother reflected the Abha glory and his face shone with winsome and unmistakable light of the holy spirit of sanctity. Throughout his Bahai life he manifested invincible steadfastness in the Cause of God, spoke the heavenly message to many souls, and ascended to the Supreme Concourse in the ineffable beauty of the glory of God. The theme of his words and teachings often set forth the divine responsibility and priceless privilege of living in this day of days and ultimate cycle to which prophets, seers and saints have looked forward in prayer and vision. He spoke continually and with confident certainty of the life beyond, manifested the reality of love for all mankind, and after a long illness joyfully ascended to the station prepared for those who serve the Cause of the most high God in words and works.

Often he told of Abdul-Baha's love for him—how in June, 1912, during the stay of the Center of the Covenant in New York, that wonderful being took him in his arms, saying: "You are my friend! You are my friend! You are my friend and will ever be my friend!"

Over his devoted head we read the verses of joy and exaltation, "Blessed are they who die in the Lord!" "Blessed are those who understand!" "Peace be upon those who follow guidance."

Howard MacNutt.

MRS. IDA BRUSH AND MRS.
FRANCES ROE

Word of the passing away of two maid-servants well-known to the early Bahais of Chicago has been received. Mrs. Ida Brush died November 22, 1919, at Sturgeon Bay, Wis., and Mrs. Francis M. Roe died November 23rd, at Chicago.

MRS. BOETTLE

A very dear Bahai sister, Mrs. Fanny Boettle of Philadelphia, ascended to her heavenly home in February of this year. Mother was her last visitor and her last words to mother were "Allaho'Abha."

Jessie Revell.

SANFORD KINNEY

While I was in Boston a great sorrow befell the friends of that entire assembly in the departure from this mortal world of Sanford Kinney. The Kinneys are most dearly beloved by all of the Bahais. Their firmness in the Covenant and their assurance in the Kingdom is so strong and fragrant as to bring joy and happiness to many souls. In whatsoever condition they may be or wherever they dwell their home is always a center where the breezes of the Covenant of God blow and where the Message of the Kingdom is voiced.

When I first knew this family they were living in affluence in New York City. Their door was always open and every one was received and large meetings were held for the glory of El-Baha. Then trials and tribulations visited them and they moved to New England and while there various other tests and trials came to them. At one time they were very poor and lived in a very small cabin at Green Acre. Nevertheless, under these conditions the same spiritual fragrance surrounded them. Their hospitality was the same and their home was a center of spiritual activities—thus the people all love them very much.

On my arrival in Boston I learned that "Sandy" was very ill, so I went to their home in the suburbs of the city. There I found a number of the friends gathered in service and in prayer. So strong was the union between these friends that everyone felt as if it were his own blood brother who was ill. Doctors and nurses were in attendance and every physical help was at hand, while the friends offered their prayers in behalf of the sick one. The family was in the greatest state of resignation and not once did the sick boy desire for anything save that the will of God should be accomplished. Thus several days and nights passed.

The night that Sandy passed out of this realm several of us, including Mr. and Mrs. Ober and two nurses, remained almost the entire night at his bedside in prayer. It was a spiritual experience that moved me very deeply, for above and beyond all the physical distress and pain of the illness, there was a spirit of acquiescence and sacrifice of personal desire which made a deep impression upon one's soul.

Upon the third day after the departure, almost the entire assembly from Boston, with representatives from New York, gathered at the Kinney home at Wollaston, Massachusetts. Prayers and Tablets were read and the holy Words chanted. During the ceremony a short bit of candle burned in the room. This had been brought many years before from the Holy Tomb of BAHÁ'O'LLÁH. It had illuminated the room nineteen years before at the time of Sandy's birth. There was just enough wax left to burn during the ceremony. At the close of the prayers, when the burial ring had been placed upon the boy's finger, the candle burned up high, then flickered and went out.

The interment was in the village cemetery at Quincy, a short distance from the Kinney home. There, more Tablets and Holy Words were read and, as the body was lowered into the ground, the friends chanted in the Persian tongue the prayer for the "removal of difficulties." Many flowers were cast into the grave by loving hands and, when the earth had been filled in, there was yet a quantity of flowers sufficient to entirely cover the mound. It was a perfect morning—not a cloud in the sky. All of the hearts were pained and distressed from the human standpoint, yet all realized that a spiritual benediction was present as each wended his way to his respective home.

Charles Mason Remey.

Extract from recent Tablet from Abdul-Baha to Charles Mason Remey:

"I have been greatly affected by the death of Mr. Sandy Kinney. What a lovely child he was. On my behalf tell Mr. and Mrs. Kinney: 'Do not grieve and do not lament. That tender and lovely shrub has been transferred from this world to the rose garden of the Kingdom, and that longing dove has flown to the divine nest. That candle has been extinguished in this nether world that it may be rekindled in the Supreme Concourse. Ye shall assuredly meet him face to face in the world of mysteries at the Assemblage of Light.' "

Recent Tablet revealed by Abdul-Baha for Abdul-Ali Sanford Kinney after his departure:

For Abdul-Ali Sanford Kinney—Upon him be Baha-el-Abba!

He Is God!

O Thou divine Providence!

Sanford was a child of the Kingdom and, like unto a tender shrub, was in the utmost freshness and grace in the Abha Paradise. He has ascended to the world of the Kingdom, that in the everlasting rose-garden he may grow and thrive on the banks of the river of Everlasting Life and may blossom and attain fruition.

O Thou divine Providence! Rear him by the outpouring of the cloud of mercy and nourish him through the heat of the sun of pardon and of forgiveness. Stir him by the breeze of bounty and bestow patience and forbearance upon his kind father and mother, that they may not deplore his separation, and may rest assured in meeting their son in the everlasting kingdom. Thou art the Forgiver and the Compassionate!

(Signed) ABDUL-BAHA ABBAS.

PHILIP BURNETT

At the request of his wife, we are sending you news of the passing away of Philip Burnett, December 26th, 1919, at Philadelphia. Jessie Revell.

MIRZA HAJI NIAZ

This servant of God and of Abdul-Baha passed peacefully into the Kingdom of the Supreme One, Dec. 5, 1919, at Cairo, Egypt, after a brief illness. Born in Persia, an early follower of BAHÁ'O'LLAH, to whom his whole life was devoted in loyal service. In his younger days he traveled quite extensively. His great love and devotion to the Center of the Covenant made him a joyful servant in this Glorious Cause. Though he lived to be a very old man, so old that no one knew his exact age, yet he kept strong and vigorous in body. This state of health, with his wonderful faith and love for the Bahai Movement and its followers, kept him young in spirit, always cheerful and smiling, that it was ever a great pleasure for the friends to meet him, and the younger Bahais were much attracted to him. He had lived in Cairo many years, and always he was in his accustomed place at the weekly Bahai Assembly. It was ever such a joy for me to meet him there, with his kindly grasp of the hand, and cheery words of welcome. He had seen all of the American believers who had ever been to Cairo, and he always remembered them all most affectionately, frequently inquiring of me of the different ones by name whom he had seen, and wishing me to send them his loving greetings whenever I wrote. You will all remember him who have seen him, as he was the oldest Bahai here, with a long white beard, and wearing a white turban, so that he approached in appearance the nearest of anyone to Abdul-Baha. We all shall greatly miss him. But we have loving memories of him, still feel his spiritual presence here with us, and rejoice with him upon his joyful entrance into the glorious Kingdom of God.

Elinor Hiscox.
